Two Paid $10 and Costs

Two young men from the country were making one of the main streets a race track a week ago last Sunday and came up as far as the post-office, lickety-split, and yelling like Indians on the war-path. Constable Helmer was near and hearing the racket soon had the young men under investigation. They, last Friday, appeared before Magistrate McCormick. The magistrate exchanged some good advice and a warning with the young men, who each contributed $10 and costs for their foolishness.

The Late Dr. Keyes

Dr. Samuel John Keyes, principal of Ottawa Normal Model School, died very suddenly on Thursday at Ottawa, while driving his auto on Metcalfe Road. The passing of Dr. Keyes will be deeply regretted in educational circles all over the province, and particularly in Eastern Ontario, where many years of his life have been spent. For six years he was principal of the Cornwall Public School from February, 1902, to July, 1908, and the model School, which was held in connection. His many friends will mourn his death.

The late Dr. Keyes was a son of the late John Keyes and Mrs. Keyes, and he was born 58 years ago at Inkerman, Ont. After attending the public school in his native village, he went to the high school at Iroquois. He concluded his high school education at Morrisburg, and then entered the Morrisburg model school. The Ottawa Normal School concluded his preliminary training for the profession His zeal and passion for his chosen lifework was demonstrated from that fact that he took his B A. from Queen's University extra-murally. He won the degree of Bachelor of Pedagogy from Queens in 1908, and in 1922 his alma matter bestowed on him the degree of Doctor of Pedagoy.

He commenced his career in the profession in the public school at Cass Bridge and early showed that promise which was to bring him into teaching prominence. He subsequently taught at Gore Bay, Manitoulin Island; was principal at Vankleek Hill Model School and at Cornwall Model School. Then he launched into teaching at normal schools, first at Peterboro, then at Toronto in 1916 and went to Ottawa Normal in 1922 as principal. He was always in demand as a lecturer at various conventions of the teachers profession, but his work occupied practically his whole time.

Attended by a host of friends both in the city and outside points, the funeral of Dr. Samuel J Keyes, late principal of the Ottawa Normal School and eminent educationist which was held Sunday afternoon from his late residence, 188 Holmwood avenue, reflected the tribute of the Capital and district to the memory of a man whose lofty influence and practical idealism have exemplified the true meaning of citizenship and Christian service.

The teaching staffs of the city and the Ontario Department of Education were represented at the funeral by the presence of associates, who had known intimately the high personal merit of the man and his brilliant talents devoted so unselfishly to his profession. In addition, there were citizens from all walks of life, who had known the deceased as a friend. Among the wealth of floral tributes from a wide acquaintanceship, there were floral messages of esteem from the Ontario Department of Education. Prince of Wales Lodge, No. 371 A. F. & A. M., the principals of the Ottawa Public Schools, the staff of the Normal and Model schools and the Temple Softball League.

In addition to his wife and mother, Mrs. John Keyes, of Winchester, the chief mourners were his five sisters, Mrs. J. W. Ault, Winchester; Mrs. T. Haggerty, Foyes Hill; Mrs. A. B. Allison, Morewood; Mrs. H. P. Allison, Smiths Falls; Mrs. W. Moad, Toronto; and two brothers, T. O. Keyes of Winchester, and W. R. Keyes of Matheson.

Rev. Dr. George G. D. Kilpatrick, of Chalmers United Church of which the deceased was an elder, conducted the service at the residence, and in moving words of sincerity and beauty thanked the Almighty for the influence of such a life as expressed in the deceased's love of young people and his eager desire to lead them in tne Way Everlasting; for a life of honor without stain and brilliant in attainment; and for a life of outstanding devotion to duty.

Duncan Walker, director of professional training, Toronto, personally represented the Department of Education, and was one of the honorary pall-bearers, the other honorary pall-bearers being Dr. A. H. U. Colquhoun, deputy minister of education; Dr. F. W. Merchant, superintendent of education; Dr. S. J. Radcliffe, principal of Toronto Normal School; V. K. Greer, chief inspector of Ontario; S. J. Stubbs, editor of text books, Department of Education.

The active pall-bearers were, Dr. F. A. Jones, Dr. W. C. McCartney, H. B. Fetterly, G. A. Miller, H. W. Kerfoot, and W. J. Neale.

Interment was in the Maple Ridge cemetery at Winchester, with Rev. Dr. Kilpatrick officiating at the grave-side. There was a very large attendance of the citizens of Winchester.

Big Discoveries

Prof. Rolo Earl, of Queen's University, speaking at the Monday luncheon of the Kiwanis Club of Kingston, is reported in the Kingston paper as saying "We are on the threshold of great progress in biology, and I believe that great discoveries will be made in the field of radium which will be of great benefit to mankind" The Kingston paper states that Prof. Earl's address was out of the ordinary and he spoke of the research work which is being carried on, and assured his hearers that great discoveries would be made.

A Fine Family

Robert McCormick, who lives near Morewood, is one of Canada's best assets. He has a fine looking wife and a bunch of youngsters that any father and mother should be proud of. There are six or perhaps seven, fine looking, strong, healthy, happy youngsters, ranging in age from four to fourteen years. They were all in town on Monday. Drove up in their motor car, and while the mother and father were shopping the editor had a chat with the youngsters. A hundred families like that in this section would be the finest asset in the country.

Who Would Believe It

Who would believe that there are 423 pawnbrakers in the Dominion of Canada or that 202 coachmen continued to exist in this age of the almost universe adoption of motor cars? There are, it appears, not less than 627 bootblacks in Canada, 67 private detectives, 1,207 undertakers, 648 grave diggers, 262 actresses, 528 professional baseball and hockey playey, 220 individuals are engaged in the manufacture of brushes and brooms. There are still 3,008 blacksmiths in the Dominion, while physicians and surgeons number 8,554; dentists, 3,126; engineers, 12,814; professional painters, 108; teachers, 11,402; judges, 337; lawyers and notaries. 7,145; clergymen, 11,654; and editors and reporters, 1,666.—Simcoe Reformer.

The United Church

Mr. Sheen of Toronto spoke at both services on Sunday on behalf of the Ontario Prohibition Union. He took up the economic side of the liquor traffic saving that over sixty million dollars were spent on the liquor traffic the past year. He laid before us facts as they are and showed the purchasing power in bread, potatoes, etc. of this money. He said the greatest asset of our country is our boys and girls, and our greatest institution is the Home. Is it wise to let anything come into the home that will destroy its sanctity? Then rise up and protect the youth of our home. 443000 permits were sold last year. Appetite is being created in our Province, and only the grace of God can kill appetite. The liquor traffic is a strong and mighty power and we have to stand as one man to put it out of power.

Very Sad Accident

A very sad accident occurred at Kenmore on Sunday morning when Mrs. A. D. MacDonald met with injuries from which she died a few hours later. It appears that Mr. MacDonald had just purchased a new car and he and his wife intended taking their first ride in it. Mr. MacDonald got into the car in the garage to back it out, and Mrs MacDonald was standing in front of the car. Mr. MacDonald evidently got confused with the gear shift, for, when he opened the clutch the car shot rhead, and knocking Mrs. MacDonald down ran over her. Dr. Byers of Metcalfe was called and he had an ambulance called to take the injured lady to the Civic hospital at Ottawa, but she died a few hours after she received her injury.

The late Mrs. MacDonald was born at Osgoode 64 years ago, being the daughter of the late John McCormick of Kenmore. For the past nine years, she had lived at Kenmore and for the seven years previous had resided at Vars.

Boy Commits Suicide at Berwick Farm

Believed to have been despondent at his failure to secure employment at Prescott, where he went two weeks ago in the hope of finding a position on a construction gang, Leonard Swertzfigure, 19, committed suicide in a barn on the farm of Georgd Pollock, Berwick, Thursday evening.

Shortly after six o'clock, Milton Pollock, 14, visited the barn and noticed a figure hanging from the end of a trip-rope on a hay fork. He called a farmhand but the latter, believing that the figure was merely a dummy put in the barn to frighten the young lad, did not investigate until the boy became insistent. When he did so, he fonnd Swertzfigure's body quite cold, hanging from the rope. He immediately notified his employer, George Pollock, reeve of Finch towhship, who called Dr. Gormley of Crysler.

Upon the arrival of Dr. Gormley, the body was cut down and the young man was pronounced dead. Dr. J. M Pollock Avonmore, visited the scene and decided that an inquest would be unnecessary. He believed that the young man had been hanging for about two hours prior to discovery.

Swertzfigure was a son of Eli Swertz figure of Goldfield, two miles from Finch and had been employed at the Pollock, farm from early spring.

The Winchester Fair

We're going to have a fair, boys, we're going to have a fair;
And all the folks that love to meet their neighbors will be there.
It's going to be bigger -bigger far than all the rest;
Of all the fairs we've ever had it's going to be the best.
It's going to be your fair—its going to be mine,
And every one for miles around is falling into line—
Fathers', mothers', babies, boys and girls will be there—
We're going to have a fair, boys—a rip-tail snorter fair.

We're going to have a fair, boys—a rip-tail-snorter fair;
Get out the old-top buggy and hitch up the sorrel mare.
Or get your new six-cylinder—invite the hired man—
Come in your glittering new coupe, or in last year's sedan;
Or use a three-deck wagon—you'll get here just the same—
Or if you would rather, step on board the puff puff train,
And if all else should fail you, get a plane and ride the air—
We're going to have a fair, boys—a rip-tail-snorter fair.

We're going to have a fair, boys—a bang-up, sizzler fair,
Come and see the biggest cows that ever switched a tail—
Come and leave your worries, forget all carking care;
Cows that give the richest milk that ever filled a pail.
Come and see the fattest hog that ever gave a grunt—
Pure-bred hogs of royal birth—not a single runt;
The wooly sheep—the horses, with sleek and polished hair.
We're going to have a fair, boys—a rip-tail-snorter fair.

We're going to have a fair, boys, a rare old, jolly fair—
Bring the "kids" to see the fun, and ride up in the air;
Try your luck at winning things; forget you're growing old;
Taste the weiners—roasting not; or "pop" that's icy cold.
Climb into the grandstand—hear the music—see the fun;
Watch the classy races, as around the track they run.
Put on your go-to-meeting suit and grease your curly hair—
We're going to have a fair, boys—a rip-tail-snorter fair.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Winchester Press would like to publish something about a "Prohibition" candidate in Dundas, but in view of the coming meeting and expected pronouncement of the Prohibition Convention, we thing it better to delay any comments we have in view. This we will say, however, that the cause of temperance and Prohibition is too often set back by the unwise actions of those who have the cause most at heart. It is lack of judgment and knowledge of local politicial conditions, and not of earnest and well-intentioned efforts. In driving a car one has to watch the side roads as well as main highway to avoid mishaps. It is so with the present Prohibition movement.

There are enough vacancies in the Canadian Seante to make one believe that Canada could well do without a Senate. There are over half a dozen vacancies, and about two hundred applicants for them. The Government had a hard time in determining who are "fit and worthy" and have the necessary wealth to qualify, because a man who is not worth several thousand is not eligible. Dr. McIntosh of Spencerville is now mentioned as a possible successor to the late Senator Reid. Some present members of parliament are likely to catch the coveted plums that are ready to drop from the Government tree. Its a great game this political wire pulling and criss-crossing. But one thing you can bank on, and that is that Premier King is bound to Reform the Senate with good Reformers.

Billie Wilson, Mayor of Gananoque, is emphatic in his claim that there is no town along the St. Lawrence as pretty and attractive as Gananoque. The editor of the Brockville Recorder-Times claims that Brockville is beyond dispute the most attractive town along the highway of the St. Lawrence. Kingston, the ancient and staid, does not make any claims to scenic beauty or attractive surroundings, but it has attractions in the way of an ancient fort, the military headquarters, a harbor filled with uguly sailing and steam craft, and a street railway that can make more noise and carry less passengers than any street railway in Canada. Cornwall makes no claims whatever. But Cornwall is saying nothing, but growing rapidly. and will outstrip any city along the St. Lawrence between Kingston and Montreal. There is a wise saying that "If you can't say something good about a person don't say anything" so we refrain from comments on Prescott, Iroquois, Morrisburg and other little places along the St. Lawrence higway No. 2. Personally, the Press is inclined to stand for Gananoque for summer attractions, but Brockville comes a close second. Perhaps it is because Brockville is more familiar and more easily reached that one feel as we do.

The rumor persists that we are to have a provincial election this fall. The rumor is probably well founded. Premier Ferguson loves to keep the people guessing. He thinks it is the part of an astute and clever politician to give evasive replies to the question: "Is there any truth in the rumor that we are to have an election this fall?" His close, and office seeking, political friends think it a very clever move to keep the people guessing. But a great many thoughtful citizens are doing some independent thinking, and this thinking is not always complimentary to the Present Administration. The best evidence of possibility of an early election are the promises that are being made by Premier Ferguson. The rural section are to have better roads; the school system is to be improved; new territory in the north is to be opened up; the farmers are to be made prosperous and happy, in some way not known, but that is the promise. Of course the G. C. Act is to be improved. Bootlegging has increased, drunkeness has increased, the brewers and rum dealers are being made wealthy, and the revenue from the liquor traffic has been so great that the Government is able to show a good balance sheet. But let us ask who is paying for it all? Where does the money come from? Out of the pockets of the people. You can't get over that. And if the people are paying the huge sums that an extravagant Government is spending right and left, then it is time for the people to do some sound thinking. Ferguson is very confident of victory at the next election. We have many instances of such confidence before an election being rudly shattered.

The editor of the Toronto Globe must have smiled with amusement when he received a letter, signed by six clergymen, protesting against the "religious" editorial published once a week in that great newspaper, and the request to "Cancel their subscription." It is the experience of most newspaper editors, and the result is always the same. It is a matter of great stisfaction to an editor to know that his editorals have started something. even a protest. It proves beyond a doubt that he has diverted, or detoured, from the main highway of every day opinion. The editor of the Press recalls a similiar incident, when, after a heated election, in which the Press championed the cause of prohibition, five subscribers came together to the office to "Stop the Press." It was amusing, but we are pleased to state that all but one are again on our subscription list. Their common sense got the better of their heated political prejudice, and they realized that a newspaper is not the altogether one-sided, and narrow exponent of any one cause. We know of one subscriber who, when he read an editoral in the Press, threw the paper on the floor and jumped on it with both feet. He used violent languagd at the time and vowed that the "dirty rag" would never again enter his home. It goes there regularly every week now, and sometimes the same man has something good to say of it. And so it goes. A newspaper without an opinion is never found fault with, and the editor is never called a fool, an idiot, a bigot, a no-nothing. He is simply a small bump on a log, that attracts no attention, and is perfectly useless so far as a public service is concerned. We would not care to listen Sunday after Sunday to the sermons those six clergymen who protested against the editorials in the Toronto Globe, have to preach to their congregation. We would sooner remain at home and read the Globe.

A TRIP THROUGH THE MARITIMES

To the Editor of the Press :—

In describing our trip to the Maritimes, I shall try to give only those details which may prove of general interest or be of use to any who may wish to take a similar trip.

We followed Highway No. 2 as far as Coteau du lac where we ferried across the St. Lawrence to Valleyfield. The ferry makes a round trip every hour leaving Valleyfield on the hour and Coteau each half hour. It is a delightful sail and the charge is $1. From Valleyfield we followed Quebec Highway No. 3 and No. 2 all the way to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It is right along the river for the greater part of the way and gives one a fine view of the Greatest river in the world. The highway is partly paved and the rest gravel but is all in excellent condition. There are three ferries—one at Sorel, one at Yamaska and one at Piperville, each crossing a tributary of the St. Lawrence. Opposite Montreal we got a fine view of the city—the Victoria bridge and the new bridge, nearing completion which will connect Montreal East with Montreal South. At Sorel, the mouth of the Richelieu River forms an excellent harbour and basin for ship-building. There is a fine camp ground just a few miles west of Sorel Here a sandy beach stretches for several miles and during the evening we were entertained by parties on the river singing their French chansons and habitant songs.

About three miles west of Levis the highway passed through the C.N.R. subway just at the south end of the famous Quebec bridge. This is one of the largest and most massive bridges in the world and cost about $20,000,000. It is double-tracked with a four-foot concrete sidewalk on each side. In between the double tracks is a space of about 15 feet. This is now being fitted up for an automobile road to connect the north and south side of the St. Lawrence. It is expected that the official opening will take place early in September.

Proceeding eastward from Levis which is directly opposite Quebec city the highway skirts the river for miles and the view is magnificent. There are a great many French villages each with its massive Roman Catholic church and all along the route there are shrines to mark the devotion of the habitant to his religion. There are also many schools along the way, but very few of the people can speak any English. At Rivere du Loup, 120 miles east of Quebec, the Trans-Canada highway which is numbered 2 from Windsor, Ont., to Montreal, Quebec and Levis, turns southward to Fredericton, St. Johns and Halifax. The other branch continues along the coast and may be followed all the way around the Gaspe peninsula to Metapedia.

About 190 miles east of Quebec we came to Rimouski and Father Point where the ocean liners call and receive their last mail on the outward trip or transfer their mail on the inward trip. There is an aviation field here where the planes transfer the mails to the ships. At Father Point too, is a tablet in memory of the disaster to the Empress of Ireland some years ago.

A short distance east of Rimouski the highway branches south through the Metapedia Valley, one of the most picturesque landscapes on the continent and only those who have seen it can realize the beauty of the hills and valleys as they alternate with each other and turn toward the Metapaedia river. Several small French towns and villages nestle among the hills and along the river side.

For some 25 miles the highway is cut out of the rocky hills which skirt the river and. as there are no guard posts it is necessary to drive with extreme caution to avoid going over the bank in to the river.

Metapaedia is a small lumber town on the Restigouche River and just across the river is the Province of New Brunswick. The highway follows along the south side of the Restigouche River and the Bay of Chaleur to the town of Bathurst which has a population of about 8,000 people and appears to be a thriving lumber centre. Just after passing through the town, the highway turns south through some forty miles of dense forest to the towns of Newcastle and Chatham and on through Richibucto and Buctouche the centres of the fishing industry. The open season for lobster began on August 16th and we had the privilege of watching the small boats by the dozens, loaded with the lobster pots putting out into the Strait of Northumberland where they were set for the catch. The pots are made of lath about three feet long which are supported by round boards about the size of the top of a candy pail, except that one side is straight. One of these rounded boards is used for one end, and a second is used for a support about a foot from the same end. The other end of the pot is funnel shaped. The fishermen tie several small cured fish which they had caught in the spring to the central support by means of a wire. The lobsters make their way in through the funnel-shaped end and of course are trapped.

The fishermen are very much dissatisfied over the results of this industry as they claim they receive only 14c to 16c a pound while the lobsters are sold in Boston and New York for 90c a pound. They also claim that similar conditions prevail in other branches of the industry and that it is impossible for them to exist unless conditions are improved materially.

From Buctouche the highway leads to Moncton, a thriving city and railway divisional point. It is also on the Trans-Canada Highway from St. Johns, N.B. to Halifax, N.S.

From Moncton we travelled to Cape Tormentine where the C.N.R. ferry their trains on a large boat across Northumberland Strait to Point Borden, P.E.I. This ferry makes three trips a day—at 9.50, 2.35 and 7.35 and the fare is $4.00 for the car and 45c each passenger.

Prince Edward Island is a beautiful rolling country with fine, well-kept homes. There is a good highway around the island with many cross roads. The distance from Charlottetown to Cavendish (the home of 'Anne of Green Gables') is only 25 miles. The soil is a deep red sandy loam and on the north coast the red rocks and the long red sandy beach form one of the atrractions of the island. The Island is called the "Garden of the Gulf" and it well deserves its name.

From Charlottetown—the capital where the Fathers of Confederation held their first Conference in 1866, there is a large ferry boat to Pictou, N.S., a distance of 50 miles—a beautiful trip across the Strait of Northumberland, which takes 4 fours, from 4.00 p.m. to 8 p.m.

From Pictou, eastward through to the end of Cape Breton Island, the land is very hilly and the highway is a succession of curves up-hill and down through a land of beautiful scenery. At Stellarton there is a large coal mine and a large monument reminds travellers of the disaster when an explosion cost the lives of nearly 200 miners.

Through Cape Breton the highway skirts the beautiful arm of the sea known as the Bras-d-or (the Arm of Gold) Lakes and leads to the thriving town of Sydney—the home of the British Empire Steel plant. The streets of Sydney are very wide and it has a fine harbour. 13 Miles eastward on the Atlantic is Glace Bay where several shafts reach down into the bowels of the earth in search of coal. One of these, No. 1B descends to a depth of over a mile and then goes out under the floor of the ocean a distance of 3 miles.

The coal from these mines and the iron ore from the Island of Newfoundland furnish the raw materials for the

GET READY FOR SCHOOL

School Days are here again and we are well stocked with all the necessary text books, stationery, etc., for all grades in both high and public schools.

A. H. DUNCAN, Winchester

IT takes three to complete a telephone call: the operator, the person calling and the person called. If any one of the three is at fault, the call fails.

Uncompleted telephone calls are a serious public problem. We call attention to it because we want you to have the best possible service at lowest possible cost.*

Every day in Ontario and Quebec there are over one million local telephone calls which are blocked — a waste of two million minutes a day — a congestion of traffic — a source of irritation — a handicap to perfect service.

Some of these uncompleted calls cannot be helped and some are due to our own errors, which we are constantly reducing. Many of the failures — "Line's Busy" — "They don't Answer" — "No one on the Line now" — "Wrong Number" — originate with the other two parties to the call.

We plan now to give publicity to common faults in telephone usage in the hope that there may be a mutual effort to maintain high efficiency of telephone service.

*It is costing more than $27,000,000 this year to extend and improve telephone service in Ontario and Quebec.

Ottawa, Ontario

No school in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa Schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers should specially soy, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

MODERN FIRE PROTECTION.

Captain of Ship Can Tell at a Glance What Part of Ship Fire Is In.

The captain on a modern liner can look into a cabinet and tell at a glance whether fire has broken out, and also in what part of the vessel. Go into the hold of any properly-equipped ship and light a cigar; in less than five minutes the captain on the bridge can tell where you are smoking. In the captain's cabinet is a series of glass-fronted tubes, one for each hold, through which air is constantly flowing. Ordinarily you can see nothing—all is black; but with the faintest trace of smoke from the hold there suddenly appears against this black background a thin, quivering thread of blue. For within the tube is a shielded bulk of brilliant light. As long as the air current is pure there is nothing to illuminate; but the moment a wisp of smoke flows through, the light rays make it show up against the black background like a meteor.

There are other fire-detecting devices also—devices that betray a fire at the slightest change in temperature. It is after they have performed their part that the modern fire extinguishers are brought into play. These are pipes which by the simple turning of a valve, without opening the hatch or the hold in which the fire has started, can fill that hold with live steam, in which no fire can live. Or one can flood the hold through the same pipes with carbon dioxide, and again the fire is out, with neglible damage to most classes of cargo. Or the hold can be flooded with a substance that flows over the flames like a blanket of thin foam and smothers them.

SEAL HERD INCREASES.

There are Approximately 900,000 on the Pribilof Islands.

The United States Government-owned seal herd of the Pribilof Islands is said to contain a large proportion of the fur seals of the world. When Alaska became the property of the United States in 1867 the herd was variously estimated at between 2,000,000 and 5,000,000 animals, but it later greatly diminished.

In 1870 a sealing company was formed to operate under the supervision of the U. S. Government. Under the terms of the agreement the company had to furnish stipulated amounts of food to the inhabitants free of charge, maintain a school, pay 40 cents for each skin taken, furnish provisions and merchandise at prices no higher than the prevailing retail prices in San Francisco, and institute many reforms.

In 1911 a treaty was entered into by the United States, Great Britain, Japan and Russia which prohibited pelagic sealing in the North Pacific Ocean and in the Behring Sea. The second contract with a U. S. firm, which differed materially from the first, had expired in 1910 and the Government took over the entire management of the sealing. The herd at that time was estimated at a little more than 200,000 animals. Comparatively few skins were taken the first few years thereafter, in order to give the herd a chance to grow in numbers, and since then only males have been killed. The herd now approximates 900,000.

NOT ROMANTIC.

Arab Sheik Does Not Live Up to His Reputation.

The Arab sheik does not by any means live up to his romantic reputation. Instead of being a stalwart, burning-eyed lover who has his way with the girls, he is found to be selfish, cruel, and very smelly, keeping his wives under his iron rule, uncivilized, still wearing the clothes of centuries ago.

Documentary evidence as to this illusion-shattering truth is found in reports prepared by the assistant curator of the Field Museum, who led the Capt. Marshall Field expedition into north Arabia in 1927 and 1928. His findings show that the Arabian sheik is anything but an ideal lover; that his wives are as slaves, about as ignorant of life and culture as they were centuries ago; that whatever romance enters into an Arabian courtship is about as heart-warming as any over-the-counter bargain.

True, the Arab youth will woo a girl with such charming phrases as "Thou art the slumber of mine eyes, thou art my food and drink." But true, too, alas, is the fact that the girl's parents invariably hold a discussion, weigh her health, physique and beauty, and then sell her for a price usually about 500 rupees (more than $200). Then again, the Arab bridegroom sometimes does not see the face of his bride-to-be until after the marriage—and then it is too late.

"Hey! Meester!! Meester!!!" shouted a very excited Hollander as he rushed up to Bill McIntyre, District lineman for the Bell Telephone Company who had halted his car on the highway near..... in response to the man's frantic handwaving.

As the man continued gesticulating alternately towards the Red Cross sticker on the windshield and the road ahead Bill gathered that an accident had occurred and that the man seeing the Red Cross sign, an ear mark of all Bell Telephone cars whose drivers are qualified first aiders, wanted his help. Telling the man to jump in Bill headed down the road to the house indicated. Here he found a plucky little lad, not a tear or a whimper, with his upper lip torn open and a deep gash in his right cheek.

Thanks to Bill's knowledge of first aid and his emergency kit the boy was soon given skillful attention pending the arrival of the doctor. Having done all he could Bill departed with all the blessings the parents could bestow showering upon him.

Bill McIntyre, after all, is only one example. The practical knowledge of first aid which is now the qualification of 90% of the big army of Bell telephone plant employees, is proving an invaluable public safeguard.

Heart to Heart Talk

By Dr. John Joseph Gaines

THE POWER

I am a firm believer in anything my reasoning power tells me is absolute truth. Once my belief is established, my faith lays hold in earnest.

All bodies set in motion by outside influence, and left to themselves, tend to become still—in other words, they come to rest. If I drop a pebble in a still pond, ripples start very quickly. When the impact of the pebble is gone, the little waves gradually become placid again. That's because the force is not continuous.

The great planets floating in space are in constant motion. Some wonderful power must have set them to work. And, unless that power is perpetual, the large bodies would in time cease to move.

Our earth is rolling now—a thousand miles per hour—swifter than the most powerful airplane! It is also rolling around the sun in an almost incomprehensible orbit, every 365 days. Some stupendous power set the pace. It is still causing the big spheriod to move exactly on time, and with the same unerring precision. The power is at work right now, as it was "in the beginning."

I don't need any book to tell me that this power is still at work. Eclipses can be figured thousands of years ahead, far more accurately than any man-made chronometer can register. The past proves this.

Call the power God, or any other name—I know there is a supreme power. Since great good comes from the exercise of this power that makes universal life possible, I know it is a good power, for which "God" is by all earthly reason the best name.

Theorists and doubters may tell me with all emphasis that there is no God; I know better. And, I am willing to put my faith, and all that I am and have, in the power that gives me my life, and the lives of those I hold most dear. Men may believe as they please—I do the same.

And she is fair . . . her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece.
—SHAKESPEARE.

The Care of Blonde Hair

Have you ever realized how many different kinds of hair there are—and that all need different care?

Basically, of course, the care of all hair is the same. The proper care is health care, and the health of the hair depends largely upon the general health of the body. It requires good circulation—which means massage and brushing. And it requires cleanliness—which means proper shampooing and more brushing.

Heads of different colors need different types of shampoos and rinses. Blonde hair, especially, must be carefully washed and rinsed to preserve its natural color and beauty.

Of all hair, I think naturally blonde hair can be the loveliest. Whether it is a pale, silver yellow or tawny gold, or a soft, ash blonde, fair hair has about it something rare and lovely which sets it apart from the browns, reds and blacks of the dark-haired world, and makes us think of fairy tales and princesses.

Really golden hair is something to live up to, because it is the rarest of all. Children often have it, but often, too, it darkens as they grow older. The golden-haired woman who stays golden-haired until she is gray or silver, usually takes wise care of her hair.

Here are some of the rules she follows, in company with all her blonde-haired sisters:

She never washes her hair with tar soap or uses sage tea or an oily, dark hair tonic, since these are bound to be darkening. Instead she shampoos with a light, liquid shampoo. You may make one at home by dissolving a cake of pure Castile soap, sliced fine, in a quart of boiling water. Let it simmer until the soap is thoroughly dissolved, then put the jelly in a jar and use a little for each shampoo.

If the blonde-haired girl's scalp is dry and she needs a pomade or tonic to use as a massage, she uses a pure white cream, or a little mineral or castor oil mixed with cologne water.

To keep her hair light and fluffy she may use occasionally a teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in the liquid shampoo; or at the end of the shampoo, a rinse made by mixing one teaspoonful of salts of tartar and two teaspoonfuls of strained lemon juice with three pints of water.

Camomile tea also makes a good rinse, especially for the Titian blonde. To make it, use ten cents worth of the tea boiled in a pint of water. Strain and apply evenly to the hair, leave on a few minutes, then rinse in tepid water.

For some time I have been planning this sale and remodelled the annex to the big store so that we will be able to serve you better and show the merchandise to better advantage. WE WANT 500 NEW CUSTOMERS! WE MUST KEEP ON GROWING. We have enlarged our store for that special purpose. Through our eager efforts to supply our customers with up-to-date merchandise early in the season plus the backward Spring, we find ourselves very much overloaded, so we have decided to put on a ROUSING SENSATIONAL STORE-WIDE SELLING EVENT. It is going to be a whirlwhind affair. A sweeping current that contains some of the most outstanding savings in the history of this entire Province. Radically Slashed prices, such as are shown on this circular, speak for themselves. NO MATTER where you live it will pay you to come. Our stock is ALL ON SALE, all reduced and, remember, folks, this is NO FAKE! or NO BLOW! this store does not sell cheap merchandise. The same high standard will be maintained during this sale. BARGAINS! such as illustrated in this advertisement cannot last forever. NO STORE IN THE WORLD could afford to sell good quality merchandise at such low prices every day and stay in business; it means that you must act NOW. WE GUARANTEE that the offerings and prices shall be of standard quality, that the quantities be sufficient to supply every reasonable demand, and the values are as represented. Signed C. A. COONS.

I HAVE A VITAL MESSAGE FOR YOU!

I have something important to tell those of you who want to make your dollars do double duty. I am a hunter of BARGAINS—not men. "COME" said Mr. Coons, "help us put on a sale that will be the one big, startling sensation of the season. A sale so full of human interest that it will be the talk of the thrifty for days and weeks to come. Take charge of our stock—hunt high and low—from attic to basement—delve into boxes—into shelves—here, there, everywhere—find goods that the people want. Then slash and slaughter the prices, forgetting the cost, for we want to make this EXPANSION SALE a record breaker—So, if cutting the heart out of prices will bring the results, we are back of you, no matter what the cost may be." AND FOLKS! You can bet your last thin dime, I have taken him at his word. If you will READ CAREFULLY every word of this large circular, you will see what wonderful bargains I have discovered and how unmercifully I have cut the price with ne'er a thought of the cost. I have smashed prices as they have never been smashed before in these parts, and I'll save you more good Canadian dollars than you ever thought possible. COME! See how far you can stretch the purchasing power of your dollar. Every article in this great stock has been reduced and it would take volumes to list the thousands of money saving opportunities that await you here. Come early to this powerful Merchandise Movement, compare prices, and when you have figured the savings on your purchases, you sure will be glad that I came here bargain hunting for you good folks of this part of Ontario.

Yours for savings, JOS. COLLINGS, The Bargain Wizard.

ENGLISH IN FOUR MONTHS.

New York Chinatown School Turns Out 800 Graduates.

In New York's Chinatown is a school which teaches a 200-word vocabulary and how to speak English in four months. The school has now turned out about 800 graduates. No one of them could claim familiarity with the language on the basis of the learning it has given him because the course lasts only four months and the total English vocabulary each student has at the end of it, according to Mr. Lum, is about 200 words. Still, he has learned the alphabet, has made an acquaintance with English parts of speech, has at least a rudimentary knowledge of the grammar and has acquired sufficient facility in conversation so that he can inquire his way about the city and, what is more important, take orders and make change as a waiter, clerk or extra hand in a laundry.

Most of the students, according to Mr. Lum, are workers in the small Chinese establishments of the city, the restaurants, laundries and stores; some are merchants in their own right. They have come to America as the land of fantastic possibilities for growing rich and hope to return to China within a few years with fortunes — variously estimated at from $5,000 up—upon which to retire and lead lives of ease. Many of them, with that end in view, work as much as sixteen hours a day, year in and year out, seven days a week and with no holidays except at Chinese New Year, and are content with four hours sleep a night. The school rooms themselves serve as introductions to American life, for they show hardly a trace of anything Chinese.

AUSTRIA'S IRON MOUNTAIN.

Situated In Heart of Central Europe, 5,000 Feet Above Sea Level.

The importance of the Styrian iron mountain in Austria to the Austrian iron and steel industry may best be compared with the significance of the Lake Superior district in this country. The mountain, the summit of which rises to about 5,000 feet above sea level, is situated in the heart of Central Europe, approximately 150 miles by train from Vienna.

It has been believed that the Romans worked this mountain for their iron supply, which was called "Norican" iron; but while it is true that the Province of Noricum at that time included Styria and Carinthia, it is now held that the Romans received the Norican iron from Carinthia rather than from Styria. It is said that the Slavic Wends, after the great migration, were the first to settle in the valley below this mountain. Judging from the names of some sections of the mountain, it seems probable that it was first worked from the top. Small transferable smelting furnaces with bellows were used, and for centuries the pure siderite was dumped as waste, because the primitive furnaces were unable to handle it.

Styrian iron was shipped as early as the fourteenth century along the Danube to foreign countries, thus establishing its fame. Expansion of the industry was generally supported by the Austrian rulers, and Duke Ernest was called the "Iron Duke" on account of his support to the Austrian iron trade.

MIOCENE-AGE TURTLE.

Chicago's Natural History Museum Obtains Fossil.

The anthropological department of Chicago's Natural History Museum has acquired a fossilized turtle about a foot long. It was found in China, and on its back are six Chinese inscriptions, believed to have been carved on the shell almost 4,000 years ago. Dr. Berthold Laufer, Curator of Anthropology and noted Orientalist, is engaged in deciphering the archaic script. The turtle was regarded by the Chinese as a sacred animal with the magical power of accurately predicting the future, according to Dr. Laufer.

Paleontologists in the Department of Geology are interested because their study of the turtle indicates that it lived in the Miocene Age, some 19,000,000 years ago. Like the zoologists, paleontologists have no previous record of a fossil of a turtle of it species.

Apparently, millions of years after the turtle's death its fossil turned up to attract the attention of some Chinese mystic, who carved the inscriptions on its back, says Dr. Laufer. The turtle was found in Shen-si Province, and was brought to the United States by C. F. Yau. The inscriptions, delicately traced, are in the earliest stage of Chinese script, identical with that on the famous oracle bones of Ho-nan.

Racial Amenities In the Balkans.

While their Governments may squabble between themselves the youth of the Balkan lands are becoming more and more friendly over their games, remarks the Central European Observer. Football is becoming rapidly more and more popular and international games excite keen interest. A Bulgarian team recently toured Jugoslavia, and met everywhere with a truly sporting reception. In Belgrade they defeated the Jugoslav Sports Club team but were defeated by the Belgrade Sports Club. A Czech team played a Hungarian team about the same time.

Turks Against Foreign Religions.

A furious campaign against foreign schools teaching religion is now proceeding in the Turkish newspapers, and an association has been formed which aims at obtaining Government support for a movement to expel all Christian missionaries. The Turks welcome foreign technical schools, however.

A Squirrel's Young.

The female squirrel carries her young from tree to tree with its body and tail curled up around her neck.

THE MOTILONE INDIANS

FACE EXTERMINATION BY BIG BUSINESS.

Have Fought a Valiant Fight for Over 300 Years, But are Being Gradually Reduced In Numbers—Oil In Their Hills.

For 331 years the Motilones have been fighting against extermination and to keep strangers out of their mountain forests, which stretch from Maracaibo Lake across into Colombia. It has been a valiant but losing fight, warriors reduced from 50,000 to 1,400. The end is in sight and another nation is passing into history, for oil is in their hills, and the slow penetration of big business is more effective than sporadic punitive expeditions in establishing civilization. Few have seen a Motilone, though many have dodged their long deadly arrows, and legend says they are "white Indians," like other fables of the jungle which have followed Raleigh's mythical El Dorado.

A camp is attacked in the night and its tools rolled down the mountainside, a long arrow wings from behind tree or rock and strikes down a prospector and his crew scatters under a deadly shower. The Venezuelan village of El Pilar and its plantations of coffee after 100 years struggle against raids gave up the fight. When an army attempted to avenge the bloody raid it could not find a single Motilone, but their arrows found the ambuscaded soldiers.

This time it is different. The gasoline launches keep coming up the Catatumbo and Santa Ana and their branches, the supply of pipe and tools to replace what is destroyed is inexhaustible, a dozen new engineers come for every one that is killed, the airplanes fly over the forests, photographing the crudely fortified clearings with the big, four-storey huts of bamboo and thatch, winged messengers of doom.

"The rule of the Caribs in the mountains which separate the republics of Venezuela and Colombia touches its end," says Dr. Alfredo Jahn, who has written a book on the Motilones, but has never seen one of the warlike Mapes tribe — nor has anybody forewarning, ruthlessly and suddenly, the crowning exhibition of civilization is presented to the startled gaze of a few unfortunates, doomed to either succumb or to accept the burdens of a false culture and of religions as tainted with conventionalisms and superstitions as their own, based on fear and ignorance."

Dr. Jahn characterized as "barbarous and unjustified" the oil men's suggestion, after one ambuscade, that 'planes wipe out the settlements with poison gas, insisting that such attacks were the natural medium to preserve their territory and their independence. "We must take into account that the existence of these unfortunate Indians depends on their ability to save their forests and rivers, which furnish them their daily sustenance, and we must not forget that experience has taught them that contact with the white race, far from bringing any benefits, brings unending calamities, not the least of which is drunkenness, disease and slavery."

Kidnapping their women and girls and ferocious reprisals, slaughtering everything caught alive, whenever occasion permitted, have embittered the Motilones against other tribes and negroes. Their reign as conquerors was short as nations go. Ethnologists say the Caribs fought their way across from Brazil, searching for water and big game to which they were accustomed, only eighty years before the Spaniards arrived. They chased the sedentary Guajiro tribe of Aruaco Indians north to the sandy peninsula which bears their name and took their cultivated fields, forests and mountains. They hailed the Spaniards as allies and encouraged them to wage continuous war on the Caribs. They fought back valiantly and still are fighting, other peoples, other ages.

Scientists have a theory that their blood hatred is only against dark-complexioned persons and that they would be friendly with blonds. No blond scientist has risked his skin to test the theory. Nor is there any basis to believe they are "white Indians," except the capture of two Albinoes who, because of their defective sight, could not escape with others of the tribe. Friendlier tribes say the Mapes are light brown in color, short and sturdy, and as they usually go entirely nude and make bathing a daily rite, the color is easy to see and not tinted by dirt.

When Guzan Blanco was president, he tried for years to soften the suspicions of the Motilones. An oil man for months tried presents—salt, sugar, colored cloth, knives — to the bushes. They vanished without any one being seen, all except the salt, for they do not use it, not potatoes, tables, dogs, drums or signs as other Indians. The men weave mats and the women cloth.

Explorers do not tarry long when a Motilone house is discovered, fearing the owners may return, but these tropic skyscrapers are usually 100 by 35 feet in area and 40 feet high with living quarters and storerooms on the different floors. They are in cleared spaces, ingeniously selected so they can be defended, with corn, cotton, sugar cane, yuca, pineapples and bananas cultivated. And just about the time they have been lulled into friendship, other Indians or negroes who have been civilized and Christianized find one of these cabins when the men are out hunting alligator eggs, their favorite food, and carry away the women and girls and destroy the fruit and vegetables.

After the village of El Pilar, which had been founded on the bank of the Catatumbo in 1793, was abandoned in 1894, the Mapes were undisturbed until the quest for oil became hot. Venezuela is large, their land is not needed, and in Colombia they have practically an autonomous state.

What Happened Before

Remember Steddon comes West to avoid revealing the result of an unfortunate love affair to her father.

The Rev. Dr. Steddon, a clergyman of kind heart but narrow mind who attributes much of the evil of the world to the "movies" and constantly inveighs against them. Mem, her lover Elwood Farnaby having died in an accident, at the advice of Dr. Bretherick, gives her bad cough as an excuse to get to Arizona and from there writes home that she has met and married "Mr. Woodville," a wholly imaginary person. Later she writes again to say that her "husband" has died in the desert. She takes a job as a domestic to avoid being a burden on her parents. A fall prevents her becoming a mother. In Arizona she had met

Tom Holby, a leading man in a motion picture company, and through him gets the opportunity to play a part in a desert drama. With the company is

Robina Teele, a Star, fond of Holby and Leva Lemaire, an extra woman. After her accident, Mem becomes friendly with

Mrs. Dack, a poor woman of Palm Springs, Arizona, and takes an interest in her bright little son, Terry Dack, who has a great gift of mimicry. Inspired by a letter from Leva, Mem plans to go to Los Angeles to take a job in a film laboratory.

Now Go On With the Story

She told Mrs. Dack and Mrs. Reddick that she had received a call to go to Los Angeles at once. Terry was out of danger, but his arms around Mem's neck were withes she could hardly break. The soft hands, the dewy cheeks, the lonely eyes of the child were fetters cruelly tyrannous, but a few days later a taxi deposited her before a tiny place of four or five rooms. This was Leva's home. A servant who opened the door said that "she would not git back from the studio befo' six or happast." She was glad to relieve Mem's loneliness with chatter. She explained that Miss Lemaire lived there with three other ladies, all of them in the movies, but none of them getting their pictures took.

They lived here with no more thought of chaperonage than a crowd of bachelors.

When Leva and her friends came in at dinner time they came like young business men home from offices, tired of shop, yet full of its talk; eager for amusement, knowing no law except their own self-respect for health or reputation or efficiency.

* * * *

The next morning Mem acquired or tick the brief trousseau of a little business bride. Then she went to the studio with Leva and was assigned to the laboratory projection room at twenty-five dollars a week.

A hundred pretty actresses got no jobs at all, for they were seeking glory and wealth.

All day she sat in a dark room and ran a little projecting machine that poured forth moving pictures before her on a little private screen. She must watch out for typographical errors, a "to" for a "too," a slip of grammar, a mistake in an actor's or a character's name.

Her common-school education was good enough for this, though it was by no means so marvelous as Leva had told her employers it was.

The artistic beauties of the pictures made her inarticulately happy. For a time she was in a heaven of tumultuous ecstasies. But gradually the delight turned to torture, the torture of envy.

She was young and she had been told that she was beautiful. If God made her pretty it was because He delighted in beauty and wanted it known. He did not grow flowers in cellars. He was not afraid to squander sunshine.

If the art of mimicry was a God-given gift, it must be meant for use. She had acted once before a camera, there in the desert. She had brought tears to the eyes of strangers. She was an actress by divine intention.

She sat in a dark room and watched other people's pictures flow by. It seemed wrong, wicked, cruel. She was mad to act.

* * * *

On the lot Mem saw children, and they were always happy. The mothers were with the little ones. Going to work was going to play. They lived an eternal fairy story.

She was told that five-year-old Jackie Coogan had made his mother a present of a big touring car costing seven thousand dollars; that he had a salary of seventeen hundred and fifty dollars a week!

She thought of little Terry Dack and his second-hand express wagon, helping his mother to pack her bundled wash home to bitter toil. She wrote Terry's mother, urging her to come to Los Angeles without delay; to beg, borrow or steal the necessary funds; to seize the chance to rescue the divine child from poverty and oblivion, and to earn luxury by giving the world the sunshine of his irresistible charm.

And the day after she mailed the letter she lost her job.

The tide of hard times had engulfed the studio where she was engaged. All but two or three companies were laid off. The laboratory force was reduced to a skeleton.

And now the dark room that had come to be a prison cell was as dear a home as the shut cage of a canary that cannot get in again.

Pay day came around no more. She had debts to absolve for clothes no longer fresh. She had tomorrow's and next week's hunger dread. The girls at her house were equally idle and their hospitality lost its warmth for lack of fuel.

They tried to make the best of idleness. They wore the records to shreds and danced together all day long to pass the time away.

"Well, as I live and breathe, if it ain't Miss Stedd . . ."

Young men who had no money to spend on excursions came to the house of evenings and helped to dance away the tedium.

It became a commonplace for Mem to jig about in young men's arms. She learned to dance. She learned to play a little golf, a little tennis. She went on her first beach picnic. And a little later Mem might have been seen in a bathing suit of popular brevity, substituting a general coat of tan for the forty blushpower she had abandoned.

Her soul and her body were her own now. No, they had gone beyond even that. Her soul and body were the public's. Beauty was community property. She was committed to their fullest development into such joyous acrobatic agility and power that they should give joy and a delightful sorrow to the public. For which the grateful public would pay with gratitude and fame and much money.

One day in Westlake Park she sat down on a bench and by and by was hailed by a sturdy mid-Western voice.

"Well, as I live and breathe! If it ain't Miss Steddon!"

"Why, how do you do, Mrs. Sturgs!"

It was a mid-aged woman who had been a member of her father's church and had come West because of her husband's lungs.

Mem's first impulse was to welcome anyone from home. Her second was to fear anyone from home. Mrs. Sturgs' life in this Babylon had not changed her small-town soul, body, or prejudices.

Mem's wits scurried in vain to bring up protecting lies. Mrs. Sturgs was too full of her own opinions and adventures to ask any embarrassing questions beyond a hasty take-off for her own biography: "And how's your father and your mother and your whole family? Well, as I was sayin' yest'day, everybody on earth gets to Los Angeles sooner or later. It's a nice city, too, full of good, honest, plain —o' course those awful moving-picture people have given the town a—

"Such stories as they do tell about their— Why, that Hollywood is just a plague spot on the earth! And the women—little pink ninnies that don't know enough to come in when it—they get fortunes for just making eyes at the camera, and they rent nice respectablomes and hold—well, orgies is the only word —orgies is just what they are.

"It's a sin and a shame, and if something isn't done about it— Why, young girls flock there in droves, and sell their souls for— It's simply terrible. Every one of them has to pay the Price to get there at all.

"I declare it makes my blood run cold just to— Don't it yours?"

"I don't believe it," said Mem.

She had heard a vast amount of gossip, but she had not heard of anybody paying such an initiation fee. She had seen no vice at all.

Mrs. Sturgs flared up. There is nothing one defends more zealously than one's pet horrors.

"Don't believe it? Why, it's true as gospel! They sell their souls for bread. Any girl that's too honest to pay the Price don't get engaged—that's all—she just don't get engaged. Oh dear! that's my car."

* * * *

Next day the mail brought her a shock in a letter from Mrs. Dack. It said:

Dear Mrs. Woodville: I was awful glad to get your letter. Been meaning to answer it but trying to fix up my afairs sos I and Terry could come up to your city. Yesday I was to Mrs. Reddicks and she said she had a tellagram for you but had no adress and so could not forward it. It said your mother was so worrit not having had no anser to her letters she was comeing out on the first train and would reache Palm Springs day after tomorrow. Hopping to see you soon ether there or here, Mrs. P. Dack.

P. S. Both I and Terry send you lots of love.

Mem was petrified. Nothing could stop her mother from coming. The first blaze of joy at the thought of the reunion was quenched in the flood of impossible situations her presence would create!

Old Steddon had raised a family and been habited to a mother's slumber, light and broken with frequent dashes to bedsides troubled by bad dreams or imagined burglars or mere thirst or a cough. If her hasty feet found both her slippers or one or neither, she hastened as she was. She would not have paused for a wolf, an Indian, a murderer, a fire or an earthquake.

Mem was still her baby in the dark, and it did not matter whether she lay needful and terrified in the next room or beyond the deserts or the seven seas. The mother's one business was to get to her. Her telegram was her old night cry: "I'm coming, honey. Don't worry. Mamma's coming to her baby." She shot this cry across the continent and called Mem "baby," although Mem felt as old as night.

When Remember learned that her mother was already on the train, she could devise no plan for turning her back. Somehow she had to be met and provided for.

Every one of the women of Mem's Hollywood household was out of work. She who had savings was lending them to her who had not.

And now her mother!

With a few dollars from Leva's waning resources Mem took the train to Palm Springs.

With Mrs. Dack and her boy she stood on the platform of the little desert town waiting for the up train, and when Mrs. Steddon dropped off the steps Mem put her right back on again!

Mrs. Steddon had been prepared to find a scared and sickly child in a shack in Palm Springs. She had come as a rescuing angel. She found that her wings and halo were old-fashioned!

When they reached Los Angeles they left Mrs. Dack and Terry at the home of a cousin, then sped on to the bungalow, where Leva made Mrs. Steddon welcome.

* * * *

And now Mem recalled Mrs. Sturgs and her statement (so glibly did she substitute faith facts) that "every one of them has to pay the Price!"

Mem grew grim as she meditated. "The Price"—it was only a vague phrase. But she was ready to pay it, whatever it was! The question was, to whom?

She brooded a long while before she thought of a shop to visit. She smiled sardonically as she remembered The Woman's Exchange at home where women sold what they made — painted china, hammered brass, knit goods, cakes and candies.

large smelters which pour out the finished products in the form of rails, billets, wire and nails, which are sent to all parts of the globe. Nearly three thousand men are employed here and at wages from $8 to $11 per day.

Our next visit was to Louisburg—25 miles southward from Sydney. Nothing is left but bits of old walls, remains of bastious, a monument erected by the "Society of Colonial Wars" to commemorate the siege of 1745 and two cairns as memorials of other sieges. The Dominion Government have recently bought the site and propose to restore the forts as a memorial of the Ancient History of the Country.

From Sydney there is a good highway northward and around the north shore of the lakes and through the valley of the Margaree river where the fishing is said to be the "best in the world." Time did not permit us to linger so we travelled rapidly back to Truro which is on No. 2 Highway again, and thence directly to Halifax. The roads in central and western Nova Scotia are comparatively straight so that it is not necessary to watch them so closely.

Halifax is a beautiful city which gives one the appearance of just waking up to modern ideals. The harbor extends back from the sea for several miles giving ample room for a whole fleet of ocean liners. Then the famous North West Arm furnishes a beautiful beach in the opposite direction and is the beauty spot of the city.

Leaving Halifax, we motored northwesterly through the Annapolis valley—through miles of orchards laden with apples—the land of Evangeline, a name much in evidence—a distance of 150 miles to Digby on Annapolis basin. From Digby we were transported on the C.P.R. ferry boat, a distance of 45 miles across the Bay of Fundy to St. Johns, N.B. St. Johns is the commercial metropolis of New Brunswick and the eastern terminus of the C.P.R. It boast of one of the natural wonders of the world—a reversing falls. The falls are a short distance from the mouth of the river. When the tide is out in the Bay of Fundy, there is a falls over a ledge of rock of several feet, but when the tide comes in, the water rises several feet higher than this ledge of rock and forms a falls in the opposite direction.

Highway No. 2 follows along the St. John river to Frederickton through rolling country and around the hills—a distance of about 70 miles. Frederickton is a pretty town—the capital of the province and has a number of beautiful schools, residences and churches. Proceeding onward the road follows the river all the way to Edmunston near the Quebec boundary. At Grand Falls there is a precipitous drop in the St. John river of 200 feet between perpendicular cliffs which rivals Niagara Falls. A power company has developed considerable power but there is still much more to develop. On certain nights the falls are illuminated much the same as is done at Niagara.

Edmunston is a flourishing town just on the Maine border and only ten miles from the Province of Quebec. It has pulp, paper and lumber mills and there is evidence of considerable business activity.

We followed the trans-Canada highway back to Levis where we ferried to Quebec city and thence along the north shore of the St. Lawrence to Montreal, a distance of 190 miles along a paved highway and through many towns and villages. Our speedometer registered 2550 miles, which added to the distance travelled by ferry made a journey of 2,700 miles.

The roads in the maritimes are constructed of gravel, kept in excellent condition by dragging or grading but are very dusty and in most places very winding. The rolling nature of the country makes a very picturesque landscape but must add to the difficulties of farming.

As we passed through three capitals with all their administrative buildings and government officials we could not help wondering why all three were not united under one government and in one capital. The interests of all three are identical and if ever there was a case where union would bring strength it is in these provinces.

The tourist traffic is quite heavy—we met cars from nearly all the states of the Union and the Provinces of Canada. The accommodations for tourists, however, are not so far advanced as in Ontario but the people are realizing the necessity and it is safe to say that very soon this condition will be remedied. In many places large hotels are under construction and private homes are being opened for the acommodation of tourists.

Altogether the trip is a very enjoyable one and for anyone who has three or more weeks to spend, I know of no better or more profitable outing than a motor trip to the Maritimes.

Sunday Visitors

(By Alma in Canadian Countryman)

How many farm women, I wonder, really enjoy Sunday company in the summer time? Frankly I believe the most of us do not. And that is not as inhospitable as it sounds. I do enjoy having my friends come to see me if only they will come on any of the other six days of the week, so in case there may be some who have thoughtlessly acquired this Sunday visiting habit, let us see why this should be true.

Like a great many other farm women I do all the work for a family, which includes small children, board a hired man through the week, help with the milking year round, and in the summertime have garden and chickens to take up time and energy. So as the week passes and Sunday comes, it is thankfully welcomed as a day of rest.

In our local church the service is held at 2:30 p m. This leaves us ample time after the necessary work of the morning is done for rest, reading, music, a walk through the fields or whatever form of recreation we fancy. Often it is the best opportunity in the week to have a heart to heart visit with one's own family. It is the one part of the week which we feel is really our own to spend as fancy dictates. Needless to say then, I do not spend all Sunday morning in preparing a big dinner. A kettle of soup on a cool day or sandwiches, cookies and some kind of cold drink on a hot one, served out under the trees, often is the solution of our Sunday dinner. It is the best day in the week and how we enjoy it!

As has sometimes happened, however our happy day en famille is interrupted. A car load, or perhaps two, whirls up the driveway. No doubt they are are people we know and like, and under other circumstances would be glad to see. At the same time, can the housewife's welcome be joyous and sincere when at once there rushes through her mind thoughts of the sandwich luncheon which will now have to be pushed aside and a hot dinner hurriedly prepared in its place, and the badly needed rest given up for at least another week?

No good housekeeper ever allows the cupboard to become entirely bare so in the end, of course, a very good dinner is set before the guests, but it is not the kind of meal one can serve with pride as is the case when one has had time to plan and prepare properly. Besides the hostess is rushed, hot and tired and has no time to visit with her friends until the late dinner is over and the dishes washed. This usually means that all thought of church going must be given up for that day. Before one realizes it, the early supper-time is here again, and the cows are waiting to be milked; Sunday is over once more, but instead of a refreshed body and spirit with which to meet the tasks of the week, one is more fatigued than ever, with very likely a headaehe as well.

All this can be avoided by a little thoughtfulness on the part of the visitor by merely a 'phone call or a post card to find out when the visit will be most convenient. If the visitor is not so considerate then it is the place of the hostess herself to put things right.

I have found the best way to do this is to say to our country friends, when giving an invitation: "Come some rainy day when the men cannot work in the fields and we will have time for a good visit;" or to our town friends, "Come out some holiday"—the 24th of May, the 3rd of June, Dominion Day, Civic Holiday, Labor Day, etc., or the usual weekly half holiday.

If they invite us to their homes for Sunday we tell them that we usually rest and attend church on Sunday, and would rather go some other day if it would be as convenient. It can be done tactfully, in such a way as to leave no wounded feelings. A kind person never hurts a friend needlessly.

If unexpected company comes through the week it never bothers me in the least. I am a firm believer in the "six days shalt thou labor" part of the commandments, as well as the later part, so there is always a good nourishing dinner ready whether we are expecting visitors or not.

Let us then consider the feelings of our friends in this matter and not impose ourselves on their one workfree day. The thoughtfulness will be appreciated. It is often just such things as these that strengthen or undermine friendships.

Dropped Dead in Race

At the close of the last heat in the 2.20 class harness race at Napanee Fair on Wednesday of last week Fred Patch, a horse owned by Tom McNaught, of Tweed, dropped dead. Dr. Kain, of Saskatoon, who had been campaigning the horse, was the reinsman and he was fortunate to escape injury. The horse just got inside the distance flag the heat previous and in the last heat was well up the first half mile. Turning into the stretch at the close of the mile the horse was seen to swerve and wobble. The driver kept him going straight and pulled clear to allow the other horses to get through on the rail. When in front of the grandstand the horse went over on his toes and rolled on its side. On examination the animal was found to be dead.

NEHEMIAH REBUILDS THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM

Nehemiah 4:6, 15-21

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

The cup-bearer to the king was not supposed to reflect any personal sorrows in his countenance. One day it was otherwise with Nehemiah as he appeared before Artaxerxes in one of the Babylonia palaces. "Why are you sad?" brought out a serious situation of the returned pilgrims who went forth on two expeditions to Jerusalem. It seems that Hanani, a relative of Nehemaih, had recently come from Judea and related how poorly affairs were going with the Jews in the rebuilding project. One serious fact was that the walls of the city were still broken down and there could be no seclusion for reconstruction or safety against the enemy as long as this was so.

The second question was a genuine surprise. "For what does thou request?" said the king. Nehemiah had his own eager desire but he had not framed it for presentation, but with quick uplift in prayer unto Jehovah he expressed his patriotic longing. He would be glad to be commissioned by Artaxerxes to lead a third expedition back to the land whence they had been taken captive.

After quietly meeting leaders for three days Nehemiah planned a night ride about Jerusalem that he might make a thorough survey of the needs. Then he organized a real building program. The walls were divided into 44 sections and a designated group was appointed to build each part. Read Nehemiah 1-7 for the full context, and plenty of thrills will be found in the plots and the counter plots.

Three men are named who tried to frustrate every project of Nehemiah. Behind them were the Samaritans and seven other peoples, all of whom made a coalition against the Jews. The opposition became still more aggressive when the walls were half up, possibly to a height of 100 feet. All sorts of arguments were presented to delay the building. One weapon was ridicule, as the enemy would come close to the walls and scoff at the workmen, declaring the walls could not keep out even a fox. Open letters were sent, charging Nehemiah with various plots against Babylon. They tried to get him to attend a conference and his reply was "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down." When they threatened his life friends advised that he seek refuge in the Temple. Nehemiah boldly answered "Should such a man as I flee?"

Hints for the Home

by Nancy Hart

Did you know that fruits and tomatoes may be canned by the water-bath method, but all non-acid vegetables should be processed under steam pressure at a temperature higher than 212 degrees Fahrenheit, to make sure that all dangerous organisms or bacteria are destroyed. Also, canning is more uniformly successful when food is packed into jars or cans while boiling hot. Under this method the material at the center of the can reaches the necessary high temperature for safe canning much more quickly than when packed cold or uncooked. Shortening the time of processing generally gives better texture, flavor and appearance in the finished product.

Sunday Night Supper

Honey Dew
Club Sandwiches Cottage Cheese
Sliced Peaches with Ice Cream
Iced Coffee

Ham-Tomato Toast

1 tbl. chopped onion, 1 tbl. chopped green pepper, 2 tbl. butter, 1½ cups stewed tomatoes, ½ cup ground ham, 1 egg. Cook onion and pepper in butter until soft, add tomato, simmer ten minutes. Add ham and egg slightly beaten. Cook until egg has thickened the mixture and pour over crisp buttered toast.

Lettuce Rolls

Mix thoroughly ½ cup raisins, 1 cup cottage cheese and ½ cup chopped nut meats. Cream into this ½ cup mayonnaise until mixture is smooth. Season to taste. Spread crisp lettuce leaves thickly with the paste, roll up like a jelly-roll and bind with strips of pimento.

Old-fashioned Vinegar Pie

Beat 1 egg until light, add 1 teacup sugar and 1 heaping tsp. flour, beating hard. Then add 1 cup of cold water, 1 tbls. vinegar, nutmet or cinnamon to taste. Bake in an open crust until firm. Cover with meringue and brown.

Good Summer Candy

Cook 1 lb. light brown sugar with ½ cup honey until it becomes brittle in cold water. Line candy pan with cocoanut, candied cherries, nut meats, cut in small pieces. Add 1 tbl. lemon juice to the candy just before removing from stove, and pour over the nuts and fruits. When cold, cut in squares.

Use for Strainer Lid

When cooking a food that scorches easily, try placing it in a strainer lid which will hold it off the bottom of the kettle and still permit the food to boil naturally.

Reviving Velvet

With a soft brush dust off the velvet, velveteen or plush to be renewed. Then sponge with a weak solution of borax or benzine. If badly soiled, immerse in benzine and shake until dry.

Prevents Rings when Cleaning

If you will add a little salt to benzine or gasoline used for cleaning fabrics, this will prevent rings or the formation of circles.

A Laundry Hint

When washing silk handkerchiefs the best results are obtained by using salt water and ironing the handkerchiefs while still wet.
