COOLIDGE ON CO-OPERATION.

One of the greatest handicaps of Agriculture is temporary over-production, remarked President Coolidge of the United States, in an address to the National Grange recently. The world is hungry to consume all that the farmer ever raises His difficulty arises from attempting to sell and buy at the wrong time or wrong place. The most successful method of meeting this difficulty has been through Co-operative Associations and Farmers' Clubs.

Consult your own Farmers' Club as to your problems in buying and selling.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

Dominion Parliament is called to meet on Feb. 7th.

Now that 1929 is under way, see that you keep going until 1930.

Only eleven more months till Christmas. Do your shopping early and do it at home.

Winchester has the very best of material for a Council Board. See that they are nominated.

Emerson truly said that "the only reward of virtue; the only way to have a friend is to be one."

Sam H. Guest, for many years clerk of the village of Kemptville, and a much respected citizen, died last week in his 67th year.

An hotel and several small buildings were destroyed by fire at Crysler last week. Loss about $23,000, with about $8000 insurance.

The icy roadway is pie for Frank Parker and his speedy black, and Main Street has enjoyed a pretty sight of horsemanship during the past days.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you.

If you are not interested in the Nomination Meeting. go to the rink to-morrow night and see the double header, 'Speed Boys vs Thistles' and 'Rovers vs Royals.' It sounds like some real live hockey playing.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Johnston and sons Mervin and Alvin, of Depot Harbour, have been spending the past few days, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. Rennick, and other relatives and friends in Winchester.

The largest steel casting ever made in the world is to be made at Kingston Locomotive works this year in connection with the construction of a new locomotive for the C. N. R. 1500 lbs of cast steel will be used.

M. B. Holmes, Athens, Ont served 25 years continuously as Reeve of that village. There are men it pays to keep in office, and there are some men who are well qualified to fill such ofice. A man who has served a village for 25 years as Reeve deserves, not thanks, but a monument.

The Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal, holds a record for subscribers renewing voluntary and continuously year after year. After all it not surprising when one considers the quantity and quality feast the readers are given each week and at a pricr ridiculously low—$1 a year or three years for $2.

On Tuesday, while going down cellar Mrs. Wm Rennick had the misfortune to lose her balance and fall down the cellar steps, resulting in some very painful bruises. She is confined to her bed and is believed to have three cracked ribs besides several other bruises. She had been suffering to a great extent, but at time of writing is on the road to recovery.

Cattle, a horse and poultry were destroyed in a fire, which swept the outbuildings on Mrs. Fred Latimer's farm, at Pana, about six miles north of Metcalfe, last Thursday. Breaking out from a cause unknown in the barn the fire spread rapidly though the buildings which were connected. It was with difficulty that the house was saved.

A Slippery Time

If our churches were not filled with the usual congregation on Sunday morning last, the state of the roads and walks was to blame. Everything, everywhere hereabouts was covered with a glare of ice. It had rained, then it froze, and you may know the result. We do not remember a time when the walks and roads were so covered with smooth ice. It was with difficulty that one was able to walk anywhere, and many a person suffered a tumble on the road. Conditions were not much better on Monday morning, and although it was slightly below freezing, the bright sun and clear air made it appear like a day in March. There were not not many automobils on the road, but Dave Bellinger brought the bus out from Morrisburg on Monday morning, and went through to Ottawa During the day the roads became cut up some, and wheeling was comparatively safe.

Small Vote Polled

There was a small vote polled in the townships on Monday. The reason was the almost impossible state of the roads for any kind of vehicles. The ice service and stormy cold wind made even walking very difficult. At some of the polls in Mountain Township, not half the usual vote was polled.

The death occurred at an Ottawa hospital on Monday of last week, of Charles Frost, 51 Stirling avenue, employe of the Beach Foundry Limited. Meeting To-morrow Night

It should not be necessary to urge citizens to attend the nomination meeting at the Town Hall to-morrow night. Nominations will be received from 7.30 to 8.30, after which candidates will be heard. The old council have stated definitely that they will not again be candidates. It is up to the people to choose a new council, and there is plenty of good material if they will only come and show themselves.

1930 Calanders

Very likely our business firms will be called upon shortly by agents soliciting order for 1930 Calanders. We want to assure you that the Winchester Press can supply your needs in this particular, to your better satisfaction than by giving your order to out of town agents. We expect new ones shortly. The prices we quote are better than any agent can quote, for they have to provide for their travelling expenses. Anyway, why not let the Press supply your needs. The out of town agents don't patronize you.

May Lose Sight of Eye

Douglas, three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Sandy Hitsman, may lose the sight of one eye through a very simple accident, Douglas is a very active boy, and loves to be doing something. He was in the yard with a small fire shovel in his hand when he saw an electric bulb on the ground. He smashed the bulb with the shovel, and a piece of the fine glass lodged in his eye. His father heard his cry, and learning the trouble called Dr. Muriel Fetterly. The piece of glass was removed, but the eye was badly injured, and little Douglas was taken to the Civic Hospital at Ottawa for treatment. The latest news is that the eye will not have to be removed, but whether the little lad will have the sight of it time only will tell.

The Flu Epidemic

While the flu epidemic seems to be abating in this section, throughout the province the number of cases are rather on the increase, and the death list is growing. Medical authorities state that the new cases are decidedly more serious and the results more fatal than they were a month ago. Men in middle life especially seem to be easy victims. The health officers urge the people to take every precaution and to seek medical assistance at the very first indication of illness.

The United Church

The ranks of the local congregations were pretty well-thinned on Sunday last, owing to the very icy condition of streets and roads. There were only ninety-eight present at the morning service in the United Church and eighty-one in the evening. Two appropriate New Year messages however were brought to those present by the pastor. His subject in the morning being "The need of Divine reinforcements" basing his remarks on Joshua 1:5. The evening message was from the words of the Psalmist "It is good for me to draw near unto God." Both services were of a very helpful and fitting character for the opening year.

Cow Ate Money Bid

Cable despatch to Montreal Gazette from Berlin—While two South German farmers were dickering about the price for a cow, one wanted to sell to other, the impatient bovine ate the money which the prospective purchaser. laid on a post to impress the owner. When the negotiations had been concluded they discovered only a few shreds of the paper money in bossie's mouth.

The controversy was started anew and a judge was asked to decide the case. The owner of the cow was obliged to recompense the prospective purchaser for the money eaten, the court ruled.

Belgium Described As Fast Becoming Exporting Country

Percentage of Manufactured Goods Exported Rises From 38 to 58

Brussels—While Belgium imported nearly three times as much as she exported before the war, the little kingdom is fast becoming an exporting country these days and reconquering her seventh place on the list of exporting countries, despite years of ination troubles and a resulting economic crisis. This was affirmed at a recent press banquet by J. Franck, Governor of the Belgian National Bank, who strongly favors exportation and a "gold policy".

"Before the war Belgium had no debts abroad," Grovernor Franck explained. "But to-day the country has among others one debt representing $45,000,000 of annual payments. Every year we have to earn this much first and pay it back to aforeign country (the United States) before we can think of ourselves."

Exportation has become more difficult these days, the banker added, but is the only means to replenish the national fortune.. Statistics prove that 69 per cent. of Belgium's exports went to Belgium's immediate neighbors,France, Germany, Holland and England, before the war; since the war only 57 per cent. are cold to those four countries, and for the rest a market must be found in more distant countries.

Another change is the fact that Belgium exports more manufactured goods than before. Around 38 per cent. of pre-war exportations were finished goods, while now more than 58 per cent. are finished goods, rather than raw materials. "We must live on this sort of exportation," emphasized Governor Franck, and pointed out that Belgium is able to do so if her manufacturing rates remain reasonable.

The "gold policy" of the Belgian National Bank is credited with much of Belgium's economic recovery and her improved exports. The National Bank owns twice the gold reserve it used to have before the war, and since the stabilization two years ago the Belgian monetary unit, the belga, enjoys an unshaken credit abroad. Prices within the little kingdom, on the other hand, have not yet reached world market prices, so that the cost of living remains lower in Belgium than elsewhere—which was able also true before the war.

Economic Lessons from France

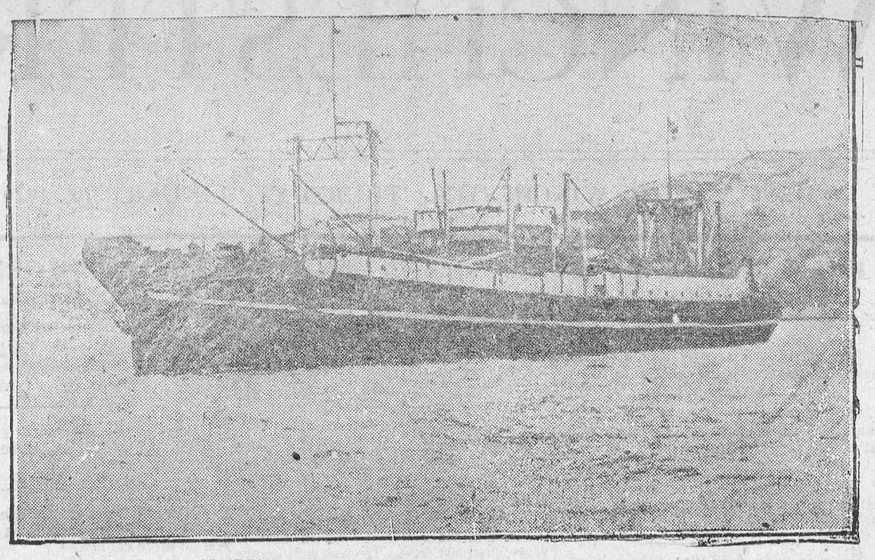

London Times Trade Supplement: (The present remarkable prosperity of France is interesting economists.) The experience of France warns us very clearly that this country should without delay adopt measures to encourage production and it shows us the value of a prosperous peasantry engaged in agriculture. This country cannot afford to let a large section of its inhabitants remain in idleness while it purchases from foreign nations the commodities its idle hands would gladly produce.

HENRY'S SHORTHAND SCHOOL
Ottawa, Ontario
No school in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa Schools to come to it.
Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Cold Frames And Hot Beds

Were the simple ideas involved in the construction and manipulation of cold frames and hotbeds generally known, flower lovers and vegetable enthusiasts would more fully develop the possibilities of pleasure offered by an ordinary glass-covered frame.

The function of a cold frame is to prevent cold winds, frost and snow from coming in contact with the plants and the soil in which they grow, keeping them all snug and warm so that the growing period is greatly lengthened; moreover, these frames are invaluable for carrying many tender plants through the witner.

A hotbed, on the other hand, is intended only for hastening plant growth in spring. It is a cold frame holding a quantity of fermenting manure or placed upon such manure, and covered with glass to retain the heat incident to the fermentation. A cold frame, in contradistinction, has sash but no other means of heating.

Construction

Any home person who can wield a hammer and saw a board can build the framework, or a local carpenter can be called. A frame for either cold frame or hotbed can be 6 feet wide and any length desired. The height of the back board is generally 12 inches and the front one 8 inches. The connecting or side boards are tapered from 12 inches at one end to 8 inches at the opposite, and the 4 boards are nailed together to form the frame.

Provision must be made whereby the glazed sash can be held in place ove rthe frames. Any 1x1½-inch stripes can be nailed to the inside of the back and front boards ½ inch from the upper edges on which to rest the sash. Standard commercial sash are 3x6 feet, and with this method a box of 6x8-inch glass will be required for glazing.

A recent method of glazing incorporates the use of wire glass, a lightweight, opaque, flexible glass substitute used extensively for windows in poultry houses. Ultra violet rays penetrate its substance. It is procurable in several different widths and is sold by the yard, rendering its use highly convenient for an amateur making his own sashes. It is cut to the desired width and lengths with heavy shears, and light frames of lath are tacked in place around all four edges.

Preparation of Soil

The cold frame should be prepared for planting before the soil has received more than a slight frozen crust, earlier if fall plantings are made, and placed in a well-drained position near some building, where water will not stand and where the building will afford some protection.

Fill the frame with good garden soil finely pulverized, 6 inches deep in front and 8 or 9 inches at the back. A gentle slope from rear to front ensues. Make the earth perfectly smooth and pat it down firmly with a board or the hands. Do not pack. Plantings can be made in the fall or early spring. Make across the face of the soil straight shallow drills 3 or 4 inches apart and in these sow the seeds, cover them thinly, not deeper than 3 or 4 times the diameter of the respective seeds; tamp gently and water moderately with a fine spray.

Then put on the sash and leave it until the seedlings appear. After this, lift it up during the day, wipe away any dripping moisture and admit the fresh air freely, otherwise the plants will become disproportionately tall and slender and there will be no sturdy growth. On fine warm days the sash can be removed both day and night to harden and strengthen the plants, but against wet, muggy, cold weather a careful guarding should be maintained.

In the northern and central states, fall-sown plants of the more tender varieties should be carried over in the frame all winter long, while the hardy ones can be transplanted into the open ground and given mulch protection. Spring-sown plants can be set into the garden after the frosting period is past.

The hotbed frame should be built before extremely cold weather, located, and a foot of soil dug out inside the frame in which to pack the fermenting manure and top dressing of soil. In February or March in temperate climates.

But Plan How

Take manure from a horse stable and make it into a compact heap, watering it if dry. Active fermentation will take place in a few days, when the heap should be turned and shaken with a fork to induce a fermentation of the etnire mass. Fill this into the dugout space to a depth of 4 or 5 inches and tamp down hard. Cover the surface with 3 or 4 inches of soil. Bank up the outside of boards with soil to help retain the heat. Put the sash in place and keep tightly closed for 3 or 4 days.

Planting

Test the temperature daily with a thermometer and when it falls to 70 degrees Fahrenheit, seed may be sown. The temperature should not be allowed to rise above 70 degrees during the day, nor below 50 degrees Fahrenheit at night. Follow the same method of sowing as described for cold frames. When weed seeds, which are invariably in the soil, begin to come up all over the bed, it is time to plant the seeds of vegetables or flowers.

Allow the accumulating steam or ammonia to escape through a chink of ventilation to prevent mold and deterioration of the seedlings.

Harden off and transplant the same as cold frame seedlings. In cold weather protect the frames with top coverings of straw or burlap, at night, being sure to remove it in the daytime.

By sowing flower seeds and vegetables in the hotbed along in March, in the New England and central states, nice stocky plants will be ready to set out as soon as the weather conditions are favorable.

For Ontario allow from two to three weeks on Northern States dating and prepare as outlined.

Free Trade and Socialism

Leeds Mercury (Cons.): There is a case, and a very good case, for Free Trade. It is the ideal condition of trade—if we could get it. But Socialists are of all people the last who can logically maintain the Free Trade case. Their whole theory of government is founded on interference with economic forces. And one interference involves the necessity for another or many others.

I am thoroughly convicned that short hair is conducive to greatness. —Ralph M. Murphy.

American Penetration

Boston Globe: It is now announced that the British Ford Company has decided to allocate shares representing 40 per cent. of the capital to small British investors. The result is a species of relief to the feelings of John Bull, who feared that he would find the Yankees owning too much in England. Some of the English branches of American concerns are entirely controlled from this side of the Atlantic. How satisfactory will be the working out of this arrangement must depend on how tightly British hands are able to hold the shares they buy. Intangible property has a way of passing from weaker to stronger hands. It is extremely difficult under the monetary system to avoid essential domination by those whose resources are greatest.

Pan-America and the League

New York Herald-Tribune: It was desirable from the Pan-American point of view that the conciliation and arbitration conference, itself an agency of the Pan-American Union should be the mediator chosen in this case, rather than the League of Nations, to which Bolivia and Paraguay also belong. The League's strength is in its functions as an arbiter of European disputes—in its uses as a European balance wheel It would be embarrassed venturing into American controversies. America might also be embarrassed. The Western world has its own solidarity and its own cooperative organization. It is the sound policy of the Western nations to utilize and develop this and to give it the preference in meeting American crises and smoothing out American quarrels.

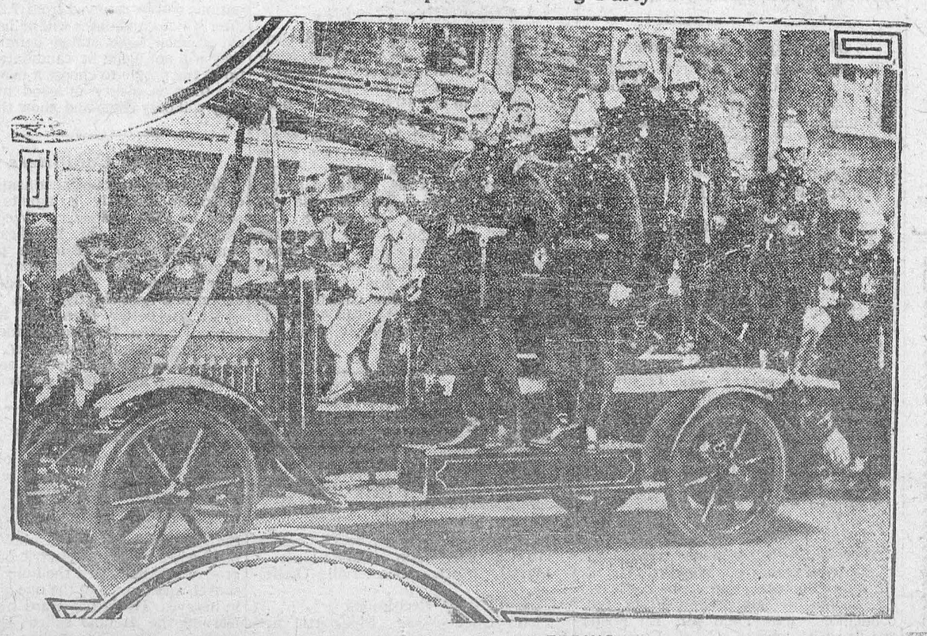

Old and Young

Alec Waugh in the London Sunday Times: Like so many other things, the antagonism between the generations is no more than a fiction of the fictionists. It supplies a useful contrast for the psychological novel. It affords the distracted author a theme certain to interest—for everyone in these days is ready to argue about upstart youth. The fact remains that it is a fiction. December and May are not, possibly, the best of mates; there is nothing against their becoming the best of friends. The younger generation is not all boisterous self sufficiency; and the old—well, after all, they are not so old that they have forgotten to be interested in the aspirations, the gracious enthusiasms of youth.

Fewer Marriages

Brooklyn Eagle: The decline in the number of marriages is not necessarily in itself a bad thing. It results partly from the fact that the number of young people in the country has not increased as rapidly as has the population as a whole. In many States the number of men of military age, for example, was lower in 1920 than in 1910, even though the population as a whole increased. Presumably the same thing happened in the case of women of the same age group. . . Keeping up the total of the population is furthermore not an absolute necessity if with some decrease comes an improvement in quality. The present figures may cause uneasiness but need not arouse pessimism.

British Start Production of New Cotton Fiber

3,500,000 Pounds of Material Expected for Lancashire Mills Next Summer

London.—The thin bark of a herbaceous plant from British Guiana growing to the height of six to nine feet provides the material from which a new British company hopes to provide from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 pounds of fiber as a substitute for cotton for the Lancashire mills next summer. The bark, immediately it is stripped from its stem, is heated for about a couple of hours, and after drying is said to be immediately ready for spinning.

A representative of the press called to see the directors of the firm handling this new product, and was shown the numerous stages in the treatment of the fiber. First the raw bark, consisting of a number of coarse strands, like those of the cocoanut, then various samples of the treated fiber of about the same length and tensile strength as cotton in a similar stage. Both plain and dyed samples had a bright luster closely resembling that of artificial silk, with which, it is stated, the new fiber can be mixed, as also with wool and real silk.

Extensive Tests

Letters from two well-known Lancashire firms stated that they had made extensive tests with the "artificial cotton," as its introducers call it, and that there should be an excellent market for it round about 9d. a pound, provided regularity of supply could be assured.

The company controlling the output, the English Artificial Cotton Production & Marketing Corporation, Ltd., claims to have 650 acres under the new crop in Essex and Sussex, from which there should be a yield of 800 to 900 pounds an acre, or a total of 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 pounds next June ready for delivery early in July. They intend to sell it at a fixed price of 6d. a pound to all purchasers without discrimination. This represents a saving of some 4d. a pound to spinners at current prices of American cotton of equivalent quality. The low price is stated to be due to the fact the plant has several by-products, including paper from the leaves and belladonna from the roots.

Plant Will Grow Anywhere

C. J. Hedley-Thornton, who claims credit for the discovery of the plant, says that it can only be grown from division of the roots, and if an attempt were made to reproduce it from seed, only a coarse fiber of no commercial value would result. He also claims that the roots will flourish in places with such widely different climates as Florida, England, Norway and South Australia, as well as British Guiana, where the plant was discovered. In England only one crop can be harvested in a year, but in tropical and subtropical countries, two.

Details have already been published of the romanic story of the discovery of the plant in question, and the press representative was shown the original nest which it is said led after eight years' research to the present developments. According to the published version of the story, the bird, with unusual acument, flew with the fiber to a near-by pool, into which it dipped the rough bark stripped from the stem of the plant before it used the material for making its nest. Mr. Walters, one of the directors of the company, explained that this pool was found to be impregnated with iron sulphate, which softened the bark and turned it into the silky strands seen woven into the structure of the nest.

A young man visited a Western city to secure an important position, for which he had been recommended by influential friends. Arriving after business hours, he determined to get points as to the best place to locate when the position which he thought as good as secured was actually his. The car in which he found a seat was soon crowded with people going home from business, most of them women from stores and offices. Immediately in front of him stood a woman old nough to be his grandmother, who, could not reach the straps, and so had difficulty in keeping her balance. She bumped against him once or twice, to his evident annoyance. Then an old gentleman, old enough to be his grandfather, got up and beckoned her to take his seat. This ended the first chapter.

The next morning the young man called at his hoped-for new place of business. The president of the company turned to meet him with a smile when his name was announced, but the smile faded and the face which greeted him was stern. "Yes," they had "had letters," they "had thought favorably" of him, but—and the interview ended.

One of his friends called on the president for an explanation, and was told the story of the old lady in the car. "But," he said, "I do not see that this firm has the right to dictate to its employees that they must give their seats to women in public conveyances." "It does not dictate," said the president, "but the man for this place must be courteous and considerate and helpful and patient and cheerful. A young man of twenty-five who can let a woman of seventy stand or let a man of my years give her his seat and stand while he sits, has not the disposition necessary to fill this position."

Courteousness, not the form, but the spirit, is a valuable business asset.

About Carols

Carols are songs with a religious impulse that are simple, hilarious, popular, and modern. They are generally spontaneous and direct in expression, and their simplicity of form causes them sometimes to ramble like a ballad. Carol literature and music are rich in folk-poetry and remain fresh and buoyant even when the subject is a grave one. But they vary a good deal; some are narrative, some dramatic, some personal, a few are secular; and there are some which do not possess all the typical characteristics. Simplicity, for instance, was often lost in the conceits of Jacobean poets, who yet wrote some charming carols.

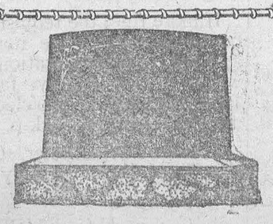

Hilarity also has been sometimes forgotten, or obscured in the texts. The word "Carol" has a dancing origin, an donce meant to dance in a ring; it may go back, through the Old French "caroler" and the Latin "Choraula," to the Greek "Choraules," a flute-player for chorus dancing, and ultimately to the "Choros" which was originally a circling dance and the origin of the Attic drama. The carol, in fact, by forsaking the timeless contemplative melodies of the Church, began the era of modern music, which has throughout been based upon the dance. But, none the less, joyfulness in the words has been sometimes discarded by those who are professionally afraid of gaiety. Some French carols were rewritten by well-meaning clergymen into frigid expositions of edifying theology; some of the English tunes were used by excellent Methodists of the eighteenth century to preach their favorite doctrines. . .

The typical carol gives voice to the common emotions of healthy people in language that can be understood and music than can be shared by all. Because it is popular it is therefore geial as well as simple; it dances because it is so Christian, echoing St. Paul's conception of the fruits of the Spirit in its challenge to be merry—"Love and joy come to you."

Carols, moreover, were always modern, expressng the manner in which the ordinary man at his best understood the iedas of his age, and bringing traditional conservative religion up to date; the carol did this for the fifteenth century after the collapse of the old feudal order, and should do the same for the twentieth. The charm of an old carol lies precisely in its having been true to the period in which it was written, and those which are alive today retain their vitality because of this sincerity. . . . A genuine carol may have faults of grammar, logic, and prosody; but one fault it never has—that of sham antiquity. —From the Preface to "The Oxford Book of Carols," by Percy Dearmer, R. Vaughan Williams and Martin Shaw.

SEEKING A REASON

Thoughtful and interested clergymen, editors of religious publications, fathers of families, business men who are interested in the future moral well being of the coming generation, are concerned and anxious because of the all too evident falling off in Church attendance on the Sabbath day by our young people and by too many of those who may be said to have passed the "youngster" age. Many reasons have been put forward to account for this seeming indifference to things religious on the part of the young people, but no solution or remedy has as yet been offered that meets with general acceptance. Some attribute this deplorable state of affairs to "after the war" condition. One reason we think, for this indifference to things religious, on the part of the younger generation, is the growing lack of parental authority and discipline. "Bring up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it" and "As the twig is inclined so shall the tree grow," are axioms that are as true today as when they were first uttered. Parental discipline and authority does not mean severity, harshness, chastisement or austerity. But it does mean firm and careful guidance and sound example. No son will refuse to accompany his father to Church on a Sunday morning if asked in a kindly and friendly spirit. No daughter will refuse to accompany a Mother who loves her daughter well enough to make her a companion. The subject is one that needs thoughtful study and the parents are as much in need of instruction and guidance as are the younger people.

WE APPRECIATE THIS

The editor of the Press is human enough to appreciate a compliment, or a word of encouragement. The following letter received last week from a Clergyman in Northern Ontario came, not only as a surprise, but as a word of encouragement to greater effort. It is surprising what a stimulus a few words of encouragement and of appreciation have, and the wonder is that they are so grudgingly given when they cost so little. The letter is as follows:—

New Liskeard, Jan. 3, 1929

The Winchester Press

Dear Sir:—

I write to express to you my hearty appreciation of an editorial I chanced to see in your paper of Dec. 13th, "The Church and the Liquor Business." It deserves a place in all the Church papers. My wife will be reading it at the next W. C. T. U. meeting in our district.

I am not a temperance crank, and I never complimented an editor before, but that pleases me greatly. Oh that the Churches would wake up on the mighty evil in our fair land!

P. S.—"Life's Viewpoint" is good also.

STOP MY PAPER

"I don't like everything you print, and sometimes I feel like sending your paper back" said a subscriber to the editor a few days ago when he was paying his subscription. That subscriber, we have no doubt, but voiced the feelings of many other readers of the Press. After many years experience in publishing a newspaper we have never heard of a paper that met with general approval. A paper that has opinions to express is bound to conflict with some of its readers. But surely, because your neighbour has black hair instead of brown, the color you like, you are not going to refuse to be a neighbour and speak to your neighbour. Doctors and clergymen come in contact with most phases of human nature, but an editor runs against the specialties that are not evident to doctors and clergymen. An editor could relate some very interesting and singular stories in connection with the "stop my paper" class if he wanted to.

LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT

A load of sand sprinkled along the sidewalks on Sunday morning, or even on Monday morning, would have saved many a fall, many a bad word spoken, many an ugly thought, and at the same time would have brought forth many an expression of commendation and appreciation. It was up to the municipal authorities to see that it was done. In fact it was their duty to see that it was done. Had a member of the Council, or some near relative of any member of the Council slipped on the icy sidewalks and broken a limb, or fractured their skull and died, they would have their neglect brought home to them in a way that none would like. It is the thoughtful, considerate authority that is appreciated, and the people have a right to expect.

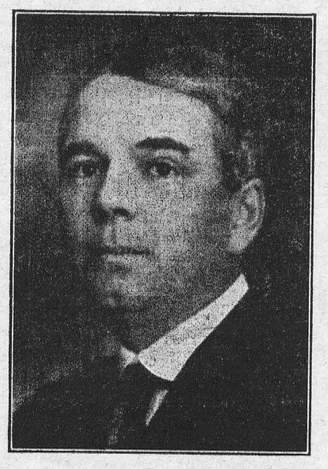

UNIQUE MUNICIPAL RECORD

Last week the Press made reference to the part played by Mayor Wilson in advertising the town of Gananoque, and what it meant to a community to have a real live wire at the head of affairs. A copy of the Press was sent to Mayor Wilson and we have had—just what would be expected—a prompt and appreciative reply from that gentleman. As an evidence of the kind of man he is, we quote in part his letter. He says:

"Many thanks for the copy of your paper which was received yesterday. It was certainly very kind of you to write such a complimentary editorial regarding my work in the interests of the town of Gananoque. It is difficult to express to you in words how much the same has been appreciated. I regret it has never been my privilege to meet you personally, or to have visited Winchester, though I hope to do both during 1929. I have on more than one occasion read in the Toronto papers editorials that have been copied from your paper, which were very interesting. x x x x I do not know whether you have ever visited Gananoque, but I certainly hope you will do so this year. I would like to give you a complimentary trip among the 1000 Islands for you and any friends you bring with you. x x x x Again may I express he wish that I will have the pleasure of meeting you personally sometime in the near future. Wishing you, your paper and the village of Winchester every success duriug 1929. I remain, Yours sincerely, W. J. Wilson.

The letter quoted in part is characteristic of the man who is always alive to the best interests of his community. Some say it is a gift. But that gift may be acquired, or it may be cultivated. Anyway it is the right spirit, the spirit that makes all the difference between a friendly, sociable progressive town, and a half dead and alive town.

Mayor Wilson is 51 years of age. He has been 27 years a member of the Municipal Council of Gananoque, and this year is his eleventh year as Mayor of that town. He has had the cooperation of the best citizens, not their unkind criticism, and his efforts to benefit the town have been cheerfully supported. As he says in his letter "I am always endeavoring to do everything within reason to procure publicly for Gananoque." We do not wonder that the people of Gananoque keep Mayor Wilson in office.

MAYOR W. J. WILSON, Gananoque, aged 51 years, served 27 years on the Municipal Council Board. Served eleven years as Mayor.

Conference Discusses Means of Preventing Billboard Disfigurement—A Matter of Vital Interest to Canada

PUBLIC EDUCATION

Leicester, Eng.—As an outcome of the "Countryside Conference" held here recently it is hoped a bill may be introduced in Parliament this session with a view of saving the countryside from disfigurement by offensive billboard advertising, ugly buildings and oil pump stations. The campaign begun at this conference, held at University College and attended by 150 delegates, presided over by Col. R. E. Martin, chairman of the Leicester County Council, is being extended throughout the country with the resultant rousing of the public to action. In connection with the movement is a "Chamber of Horrors," in Leicester, a collection of photographs made by the conference, H. H. Peach, and this is proving effective "advertising" in its way.

The agitation against blatant billboards and other objectionable features of the main travelled roads in these days of motor cars and much travel has been going on for some time, but it was not until the conference here that definite mass action was begun to preserve the amenities of the countryside. The conference was national in its character and was attended by men prominent in various walks of life. Features of the gathering were letters from Premier Stanley Baldwin and former Premier Ramsay MacDonald, in sympathy with the movement.

Baldwin Sympathetic

Mr. Baldwin wrote: "The countryside is the heart of England. It is for all those who care for it to do their utmost to preserve it clean and undefiled. While something can be done by regulation and control, a real solution lies only in the education of public opinion, and in the development of habit and practice which will save the countryside from atrocities which are now too often committed."

Ramsay MacDonald was more vigorous: "Every day that goes past some offensive bungalow, or some abomination of a building scheme, or some horror of a wayside oil pump station, or some blatant vulgarity of an advertisement, destroys not only the immediate spot where it is placed, but the whole sweep of the countryside," he said. "Something really must be done to stop it, and nothing can be done until public opinion is shocked by these atrocities and roused to action."

A report of the conference, effectively illustrated showing how the country is being disfigured by unsuitable buildings and advertisements, is being widely circulated and every possible step is being taken to rouse public opinion. The Home Secretary's Office has written asking for a copy of the report and this is taken as a sign of official sympathy with the movement, in addition to the Premier's letter to the conference.

At a public meeting held in connection wit hthe conference a resolution which was moved by Dr. Vaughan Cornish, president of the Geographical Association, and carried unanimously urged the Government to "stimulate the employment by local authorities of the powers already conferred upon them by Parliament for the preservation of scenic amenity in town and country."

Professor Patrick Abercombie, professor of architecture at Liverpool University, suggests the formation of a National League made up of people who would undertake not to buy goods blatantly advertised throughout the countryside, and it is understood the suggestion will be acted upon.

Ford's Maxims

New York Sun: What Henry Ford said at Washington about the value of work naturally got less attention than his remark that "no successful boy ever saved any money." The improvident will not notice what he added: that money not saved should be spent on things that improve a boy. Even with this qualification the remark sounded more like Ford the historian than Ford the manufacturer. As a dispenser of general advice he is not conspicuously successful. It is not to be supposed that he would advise an ambitious young man to wait until he was 40 before starting his life work; nor that he would suggest a quixotic venture on a peace ship as a peace ship as a suitable break in a busy man's life. Selden's preachers said, "Do as I say, not as I do." It is pretty hard to imagine even a clever young man being able to copy Henry Ford in either word or deer. The truth is that he is one of a limited company licenced to speak nonsense without penalty.

"Gastro-Camera" Tested in Prison

Experiment Made Before 100 Physicians at Sing Sing

STOMACH PICTURES

Expected to be of Great Aid in Treatment of Cancer

Ossining — Demonstration of a "gastro-camera," which takes pictures of the stomach from the inside, was made before 100 physicians and surgeons at Sing Sing Prison with a convict as the laboratory.

One of the doctors who arranged the demonstration said that the invention was expected to be of great aid in the study and treatment of cancer and stomach disorders.

The camera is the invention of Franz Gerard, of Vienna, Austria, Dr. Lawrence Cremin, a specialist of Ossining, was in charge of the demonstration. Alexander Vollero, 40-year-old prisoner, from Brooklyn serving a sentence of 20 years to life, swallowed the camera. He was selected because he had recently been operated on for a gastric ulcer, and the doctors wished to see how the wounds had healed.

The apparatus used consists of a rubber tube, about 25 inches long and about five-eights of an inch in diameter. About two inches from the end of the hollow tube, which is shoved down the throat, is a small cylinder-shaped camera, two inches long and about half an inch in diameter, equipped with tiny lens and tiny films. Just above the camera a short section of the tube is perforated, and through it at this point inclosed in quartz glass, runs a fine wire. This wire, when the camera is operated, lights up like the wire in an ordinary electric lamp, only more brilliantly. Just above the perforated part of the rubber tube is another camera of the same type and size as the bottom one. When the plunger is pressed the wire flares, a flood light illuminates the stomach, and the picture is snapped The tube is then withdrawn through the throat.

Eight Films

There are eight films in each camera which, combined, would not be larger than a postage stamp. With the one "shot" sixteen different sections of the stomach are photographed on the sectional films. The films are enlarged manifold for inspection. The cameras are so constructed, it is said, that if they ever got loose, which was considered unlkely, they would pass through the body without difficulty.

The operation, the doctors said, is only a little more difficult than swallowing a stomach pump, and it was believed would have no ill effect on the patient.

"This invention is expected to be of great aid to medical science," one of the doctors aiding in the demonstraton said. "It will, by photography, disclose a cancer in its very earliest stages. A hundred thousand persons die yearly from cancers, which, in many cases, if found in their earliest stages, could be cut out or cured. It will show corrosion, growths and other unnatural conditions."

Air Transport Not Rival for Ship and Rail

High Cost and Limited Capacity Restricts Its Uses, Says Expert

London—The interests of air transport and the older means of communication are closely allied, declared Major Mayo, in a lecture before the Institute of Marine Engineers. Competition there may be to a limited extent, he said, but in the long run the development of air transport should prove to be of benefit to the transport industry as a whole.

The cost of air transport was always likely to remain high, but speed had always to be paid for heavily. It was this point of speed that had to be kept in focus to get a clear perception of how air transport was going to fit in with the general scheme in the future.

New Passengers for Old Services

Major Mayo said that where competition existed it was of a stimulating, rather than damaging, nature. The London Continental Air Lines were an example. There was little doubt that theair services brought new passengers to the older transport services, for many traveled by air who would not otherwise have gone at all. Others went by air and returned by rail, and boat and railway companies had been stimulated to improve their services and attractions.

But it was on the long range air routes that air transport would really come into its own. Air travel to the Continent meant a saving of hours, but on long range imperial routes it means a saving of days. The first of these great British air routes would be opened next April from London to Karachi, saving 10 days to India. This would later be extended to Calcutta and then to Australia. There would also be a service from Cairo to the Cape. These means of rapid transport would bring about a general increase in passenger and freight traffic to different parts of the Empire, and shipping interests would be bound to benefit.

Only Handles Special Freight

Air transport would not deal with ordinary freight and passenger traffic, but only with mails, light express freight and passengers who preferred to pay the higher rates involved by air transport. As regards the size of future aircraft it was possible that with existing materials it would not be feasible to increase much beyond a total over all weight of about 50 tons. Speed, too, was not likely to increase substantially for commercial aircraft. There was thus no prospect of air transport becoming a serious rival to shipping as the general transporter of traffic. It would remain a specialized form of high speed transport which would be beneficial rather than antagonistic to the established means of transport.

Warm Water and Lots of It

Tests at college experiment stations show that a dairy cow drinks about four gallons of water to each gallon of milk produced, or about 20 gallons per day for a cow producing five gallons of milk. These figures are also borne out by the experience of practical dairymen with high producing herds.

It has also been found that cows condemned to drink at unheated outdoor tanks in cold weather do not drink as much water as they should for normal milk production, and that such cows after the outdoor exposure and drinking the cold water are apparently cold and uncomfortable for some time after returning to the stable. Tests show that the installation of automatic drinking cups in barns often increases the milk production ten per cent. and that this and the saving in labor will repay the entire cost in two or three years.

Permit Trotzky To Go To South Russia

Berlin—The Communist organ Volkswille said that it had been learned from Moscow that Joseph Stalin had allowed Leon Trotzky to go to a health resort in South Russia to recover from malaria from which he had been suffering for some time. Stalin's action was interpreted in Russion communist circles as an attempt at reconciliation with Trotzky who hitherto had rejected all overtures.

Trotzky, who has been in exile in Siberia and Volkeswille, late in November printed a letter which it stated was written by Karl Radek pleading that Trotzky be allowed to a milder climate.

Are Rumors Idle?

Can We Look for a Collapse of the Soviet Government of Russia?

An epidemic of reports that the collapse of the Bolshevik regime in Soviet Russia is imminent has prevailed in the anti-Bolshevik press in Western Europe, and we are told the event is hopefully expected by all enemies of the Bolshevik party. On the other hand, there are anti-Bolshevik journals which admit that on this occasion the prophets have more than mere hope on which to base their predictions, but they contend that the Soviet regime still has a long life before it. Such an opinion is voiced by a London weekly, The New Statesman, which says:

"The Soviet press itself does not conceal the facts that the internal party struggle has not been ended by the banishment of Trotzky, that there have been grave difficulties in the collection of grain, and that in various parts of the country there have been more or less serious outbreaks of anti-Semitism. These admissions have been made the most of by the pro-Czarist press in France and in this country. But they should be read with caution. Soviet admissions of economic and political difficulties reach this country in a highly colored form. Other accounts of risings and upheavals in Russia are always exaggerated and frequently invented. As his treatment of Trotzky obviously shows, Stalin is a high-handed dictator who, like all his kind, has numerous enemies.

"But a Bolshevik dictator is not the same as a European dictator, and not even Lenin possest the autocratic power of a Mussolini. In Soviet Russia the supreme power is in the hands of the Bolshevik party. Lenin's death did not upset the party, and Stalin's disappearance would affect it still less. There is little evidence to show that the worker and the peasant are worse off than they were under the Czars, and none to show that they desire any return to Czarism. There is strong evidence that the situation in Russia is not nearly so bad as it has been described in the foreign press. Life there is difficult, and for the intellectual singularly unpleasant; but conditions which would not be tolerated in Western Europe have been much the same for the vast majority of the Russian people for the last fifty years."

What Use Bird Havens

Hunters Have Good Goose Shooting in Essex County, Ontario, This Fall

Credit given to Jack Miner who owns and maintains the Jack Miner Sanctuary in that county, which has attracted geese to that vicinity.

Hunters who at one time were Jack Miner's enemies in Essex County because he wouldn't allow them to shoot on his property are now his best friends, because this fall very few hunters haven't killed a wild goose in Essex County outside of the Sanctuary—and have proven that Jack Miner's argument that sanctuaries for game birds throughout the continent only increase the hunters' chances, because they attract the birds to that locality and allow the hunters good shooting around the outside. Whereas, if it weren't for the Jack Miner Sanctuary in Essex County there wouldn't be any geese to be seen there, let alone shot.

Also the Sanctuary keeps birds from becoming exterminated because no game hogs can kill them all as they fly to Jack Miner's home for safety when shot at too much outside of the Sanctuary.

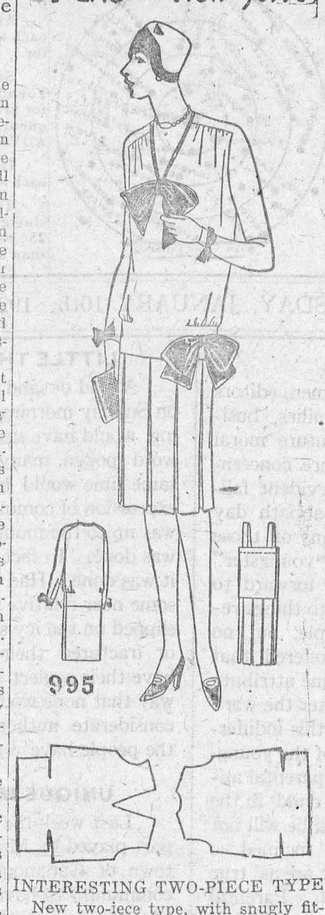

Thus enemies and friends of Jack Miner's who have tasted wild geese in Essex County this year owe their thanks to Jack Miner because there wouldn't be any geese there if it weren't for him.

The United States Government, seeing the success of the Miner Sanctuary and many of their representatives haying visited there, that Congress has passed what is known as the "Norbeck Bill," which lays aside one million dollars to establish sanctuaries in each state of the United States, run on the same principle and copying the well-known Kingsville Sanctuary.

The Kingsville Board of Trade and merchants of the little town give Jack Miner full support as the birds have made Kingsville known all over the world and attract thousands of people to the town, which never would come there were it not that Jack Miner's home and sanctuary are located in its suburbs.

Not In His Line

A distinguished musician was waited upon one day in his study by a rather seedy-looking stranger, who said to him, with what seemed to be genuine emotion:

"May a humble brother musician claim your sympathy for one moment? I don't ask you to give me anything, but will you lend me a dollar, or two? You can command ten dollars a lesson, or as much as you choose to ask, while I think myself fortunate if I can get a pupil now and then at a half-dollar a sitting."

"My friend," said the other, touched by this appeal, "perhaps I can help you better than by lending you money. What is your branch of music?"

"I give lessons on the violin."

"Well, we will see what you can do. Here is a violin. I will sit down to the piano, and we will play a duett."

He whipped a fine violin out of its case, handed it to the stranger, seated himself at the piano, and placed a sheet of music before him.

The caller raised the bow across the strings, leaned forward, looked at the composition, and shook his head.

"Sharps?" he said. "Sharps? I never play in sharps!"

The distinguished musician took the violin from him, replaced it in its case, and coldly remarked:

"My friend, what you need is a job as night-watchman in a soap-factory."

"Will you get it for me?" eargerly asked the caller.

The Cruiser Question

New York Times: The technical merits of the debate over cruisers, their number, their tonnage, their guns, are too much for the ordinary citizen. He simply feels that something must be amiss when public men in the United States and in England talk so much about the subject with so much heat. If Lady Astor's proposal that the talkers pass a self-denying ordinance not to say anything at all about ships and navies for a fixed period were adopted, it might relieve the tension sensibly. Certainly it would be a welcome change.

Hot Dishes For Winter Dinners

These chilly Winter days and nights sharpen the appetite for flavorsome puddings. The following recipes demand nothing that it not likely to be on the average pantry-shelf. Despite their somewhat unusual combinations of ingredients and flavors, they are inexpensive and simple to make:

Almond Pudding

1 pound powdered sugar.
2 tablespoonfuls flour.
½ cupful cold water.
1 ½ cupful shortening.
2 whole eggs.
4 egg yolks.
1 pound blanched almonds.
½ cupful sugar.
6 apples.
Cream.

"Cream the shortening with the powdered sugar. Beat in the whole eggs. Then work in, one at a time, the egg yolks. Mix in the flour. When well worked add the pulverized almonds. Knead together with the hands for at least 15 minutes. Grease a glass baking-dish and spread the bottom and sides with the almond mixture, leaving enough to cover the top. Peel and slice the cooking apples. Boil until tender in the water and ½ cupful of sugar. Mash slightly and pour into the centre of the lined baking-dish. Cover the top with a sheet of almond paste. Bake in a moderate oven for 1 hour. Serve with heavy cream. This pudding can be served twice, once hot and once cold. Therefore the recipe is for 8 rather than for 4 servings."

Date Nut Bread Puddings

1 loaf stale bread.
Salt.
2 tablespoonfuls butter.
½ cupful sugar.
½ cupful chopped dates.
4 cupfuls milk.
3 eggs.
¼ cupful chopped nut meats.

"Cut the bread into small cubes and combine with the dates and nut-meats. Mix together the sugar, salt, milk, and well-beaten eggs. Pour over the bread mixture and then turn into a greased baking-dish. Dot with the butter and bake uncovered in a moderate oven for about 45 minutes or until nicely browned. Serve hot.

Marmalade Pudding

2 eggs.
¼ cupful milk.
½ teaspoonful baking powder.
¼ cupful chopped suet.
½cupful powdered sugar.
¼ cupful butter.
½ teaspoonful vanilla.
¾ cupful orange marmalade.
1¼ cupful bread crums.

"Beat 1 egg. Add the milk, baking powder dissolved in 2 teaspoonfuls of hot water, suet, orange marmalade, and bread crums. Mix thoroughly. Turn into a greased mold. Cover and steam for 2 hours. Makes 4 servings. To make the sauce, cream the powdered suga rand butter; place in a saucepan in hot water. Add the well-beaten yolk of the other egg. Stir until the mixture thickens. Just before serving fold in the stiffly beaten egg white and vanilla."

Ginger Pudding

¼ cupful shortening.
1 egg.
¾ cupful milk.
¼ cupful granulated sugar.
1 teaspoonful baking powder.
¾ cupful flour.
Salt.
½ teaspoonful ground ginger.

"Cream the shortening and sugar. Add the beaten egg and milk. Mix well and sift in together the flour, baking powder, pinch of salt and milk. Mix well and thoroughly. Turn into a greased mold. Cover and steam for 2½ hours. This makes 4 portions. Serve with hard sauce flavored with vanilla."

Two Women

Now happy go the rich fair-weather days
When on the roadside folks stare in amaze
At such a honeycomb of fruit and flowers
As mellows round their threshold; what long hours
They gloat upon their steepling hollyhocks,
Bee's balsams, feathery southernwood, and stocks,
Fiery dragon's-mouth . . .
and lemon plants in bushy sheaves,
Shagged Esau's-hands with fine green finger-tips,
Such old sweet names are ever on their lips.
As pleased as little children where these grow,
In cobbled pattens and worn gowns they go,
Proud of their wisdom where on gooseberry shoots
They stuck eggshells to fright from coming fruits
The brisk-billed rascals; pausing still to see
Their neighbor owls saunter from tree to tree,
Or in the hushing half-light mouse the lane
Long winged and lordly.

—Edmund Blunden, Poems.

The Growing Cities

London Evening Standard (Ind Cons.): Scholars dispute upon the areas occupied by Rome, Alexandria, Antioch and Constantinople under the Caesars, but we know this at least, that they had no motor buses, no electric trams, no railways. There was, that is to say, a definite radius beyond which the working inhabitants could not disperse every day to their homes. This radius has, within the present generation, been astonishingly expanded. The desire for fresh air, for more space and for lower rents has driven the race of city workers further and further out from their centres of employment in a degree curbed only by lack of transport facilities. And these facilities are increasing; what we see is only the beginning of a profoundly important period.
