Newsbriefs

Public budget

CORNWALL — Public school supporters in SD&G will only have to wait until next Wednesday to find out the good (or bad) news about their 1990 education taxes. The budget will be released to the media at a press conference at the board office next Tuesday morning and will be passed at the board's meeting that night. A publication ban on budget information will be in effect until after the May 7 board meeting. Full budget details will be carried in next Wednesday's Record.

Reconstruction

CHESTERVILLE — Reconstruction of the two bridges on the stretch of Highway 43 between Chesterville and just east of Finch should be completed within three weeks, according to a spokesman for the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and work on the removal of 100mm of asphalt from the highway between Winchester and Chesterville should start within the next 10 days. Thirty millimetres of asphalt will be removed from the road surface between Chesterville and Finch. Two lifts of asphalt will be replaced on the Chesterville-Winchester stretch and a single lift will be replaced on the Chesterville-Finch stretch. This should be completed by mid-July.

Diabetes meeting

ALEXANDRIA — The general meeting of the Canadian Diabetes Association will be held at Glengarry District High School in Alexandria May 9 at 7 p.m. Guest speaker is Dr. McKendry of Ottawa, who will speak on current trends on diabetes and in particular how they are related to senior citizens.

Care & assistance

MORRISBURG — The Morrisburg and District Branch of the Arthritis Society will sponsor a free public forum May 15, 7:30 p.m. at the Royal Canadian Legion in Morrisburg on care and assistance for people with rheumatism. A rheumatologist and therapists will discuss care and assistance for people with the illness. The discussion will be followed by a question and answer period. Coffee will be served at the event.

Environment

As a follow up to Earth Day 1990 celebrations which enjoyed enormous success throughout the world recently The Record has featured the first portion of two part-series on waste management and recycling in the area on Page 10 of this week's paper. The story looks at the feasibility of recycling in small rural communities, and also looks at the problem of waste reduction in the home. The second portion of the feature will be published in next week's issue of The Record.

Deal reached

Osnabruck to take over operation of Farran Park

Greg Kielec
Record Staff

INGLESIDE — Osnabruck Township has agreed to takeover operation of Farran Park, one of five parks closed by the St. Lawrence Parks Commission this year.

Osnabruck Township and parks commission officials reached an agreement at 1 p.m. Friday to keep the 88-acre, 118 campsite park open. The park will open May 18 and remain open until Sept. 3.

The parks commission announced in February the closure of five area parks which it said were determined the least profitable of the commission's operations. Closed were Farran Park, Morrison-Nairne Campground, Charlottenburgh Park, Grenville Park and Brown's Bay Campground.

Osnabruck Township is expected to lose as much as $30,000 in Farran Park's first year of operation. Deputy Reeve Carson Elliott was originally skeptical of township plans to take over the park. But he said Monday the benefits of keeping the park open will outweigh the negatives.

"I think we have to keep it open," he said. If the township waited one year to open it, a large number of the 14,000 tourists who attend the site would be alienated and the park would run an even larger deficit.

Township officials were also concerned that if the park remained closed, it would be sold for development. Government land has been offered for sale in Northern Ontario and it has been rumored the same thing could happen here, he said.

The positive economic impact of tourists coming to the village of Ingleside, just north of the park, is another reason to keep the park open, he said.

Paul McAllister, township recreation director met with the village Rotary Club a few weeks prior to reaching the park agreement and many members were concerned of the economic impact the park closing would have.

Club members, many of them businessmen in the community, asked the township to keep the park open this year and review its operations at the end of the year. If the township decides it will continue to lose money in the venture, it can refuse to take over the park for the following year.

The township has set new rates for the park and expects to begin turning a profit after three years of operation. Day passes for the park and beach will cost $4 a vehicle and season passes will cost $25.

Rentals of campsites without electricity from Monday to Thursday will cost $8 a day and $10 a day from Friday to Sunday. Campsites with electricity will cost $10 daily from Monday to Thursday and $13 from Friday to Sunday.

McAllister will be in charge of the park's operation and said a number of programs may be adopted to encourage families to the campground. A number of programs are being considered aimed at taking children on trips or getting them involved in different events to allow parents free time while they're camping.

The township may also be forced to deal with a problem of pollution, which kept Farran beach closed for most of the camping season last year. If pollution is still a problem, the township may install a swimming pool at the beach. The concept has been used extensively in Western Ontario where many rivers and lakes suffer from pollution McAllister said.

A pool installed right in the river would cost only one-third of what a normal in-ground pool would cost, he said. The pool would be placed in the water in the spring and removed each fall.

The township won't invest any money into the park until it acquires a long-term lease from the commission to ensure it recoups any money it invests. The township will negotiate a new agreement at the end of the year. The shortest lease the township will likely accept is 20 years, McAllister said.

The park will be leased to the township for free this year and the park commission will help the township start up and close down operations this year.

Preliminary indications are that the park will be used well. Elliott and McAllister said they have both received calls from people wanting to reserve a site at the campgrounds. No reservations will be taken until May 18, McAllister said.

Elliott said the township doesn't have the expertise in park operations that the commission has, "but I feel we'll come through with flying colors", if the public supports the venture.

Save Parks group accuses SLPC of operating dumping site on island

Greg Kielec

LONG SAULT — A committee formed to protest the closing five area parks has accused the St. Lawrence Parks Commission of operating an illegal dump site.

Members of Help Save Our Parks Committee made the accusations at a press conference Friday held at what appeared to be a covered-over garbage dump on Milles Roche Island. The island is part of a parkway operated by the commission stretching through the St. Lawrence River from Long Sault to Ingleside.

Committee members said the site was discovered by a fisherman, who tipped off Save Our Parks committee members. The committee then contacted the Ontario Ministry of the Environment. The MOE is still investigating the case.

Photographs were taken by committee members of the site as it was discovered. But members said the area had been cleaned up extensively prior to the press conference.

Parks commission officials at the site denied any illegal dumping had been carried out at the site by it. It instead blamed area residents for cutting a cable which had prohibited entrance to the site and used the area as a landfill site.

In a prepared statement, handed out by a parks commission official at the press conference, the tourism body acknowledged the site had been used to bury construction debris during the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway. But they disputed claims the commission itself has used the former gravel pit, created in the 1950s, as a dump site.

Members of the Help Save Our Parks Committee insist the site has been used at least until early this month and say a fresh covering of earth, removed from the side of the pit and placed in some areas indicates an attempt to cover up the extent of the dumping.

"They (commission employees) have been using it," Elliott said Friday. He pointed out a pile of debris cleaned out from campfires as one example of use by the commission.

"Of course the dump site has been open. They've been bringing the stuff (garbage) in."

As well as old appliances and household debris, broken asphalt has been found piled at the back of the site. Committee member Ross Walker said the dumping of asphalt at the site contravenes government rules which only allows asphalt to be dumped at an approved site.

SLPC spokesperson Pat Forrest said commission records have been checked but no evidence has been found indicating the commission had used the site as a garbage dump. Park commission waste barrels are scattered along the slope of the dump nearest the water but Forrest did not know when they were deposited there or by whom.

Marc Robert of the Ontario Ministry of Environment, said Monday the park commission's claims of innocence are difficult to swallow.

He said he believes the park commission was using the site to deposit waste and he believes it was used by the commission and area residents up until the ministry began investigating the site.

He believes the site didn't have an adequate barrier at its entrance or 'no dumping' signs was because it being used by the commission itself. "I'm guessing they didn't have a sign up because they didn't want people to know it was a waste disposal site," he said.

Even if the commission didn't use the site to deposit waste, it has a responsibility to ensure waste isn't deposited there by other people, he said. If area residents used the site to dump their garbage, it is the fault of the parks commission.

"If you drove by there and noticed the site and if you didn't know the difference you would say it is a legal waste disposal site, there's nothing to say the contrary."

"People who knew of the site's existence and were dumping waste there probably thought they weren't doing anything technically wrong because they thought they were dumping waste at a waste disposal site."

If the site had been properly signed and closed off, there would have been no problem with dumping there, he explained.

"The onus is on the owners of the land to...tell the people this isn't a waste disposal site, especially when it looks like one...this place looks like a waste disposal site, and in fact it is.

"I don't think really the blame is on the people. I think the blame is more on the St. Lawrence Parks Commission."

Steve Gourlay of the parks commission, who was also at the site during the press conference, conceded it is the SLPC's responsibility to ensure waste isn't dumped at the site. "It's our land. It's our

Third study needed for Morewood wells

Yves Cossette and Greg Kielec
Record Staff

MOREWOOD — A third, more in-depth, survey is needed to establish the cause of water contamination in Morewood wells.

A third survey will follow a recently completed second survey which confirmed a bacteria problem still exists in Morewood.

Consultants based in Ottawa, who conducted the second survey from April 10 to 12, have found survey results "very similar" to an initial test conducted by the Ontario Ministry of Environment last summer, said consultant Steve Simmering on Thursday.

Last year's test showed one-third of Morewood's wells to have water unsafe for drinking.

Simmering, who is the senior project engineer with Oliver Mangione McCalla and Associates, said the consulting firm will recommend Winchester Township council apply for an MOE grant to help get rid of the contamination. But to get such a grant a third study must be done to determine the source of the problem and how to solve it, he said.

The two previous tests only determined the extent of the contamination. In the latest study, consultants tested 93 wells out of 138 in Morewood.

Simmering said the most likely remedy would be to have the MOE help pay individual homeowners to deal with contamination in their wells.

"The only reason to get into a communal (water) system is if the problems couldn't be corrected on an individual basis," he said.

Simmering didn't know what the source of contamination is, but Winchester Township Reeve Claude Cousineau has blamed septic tanks, which do not meet health standards, as the source of contamination.

An in-depth study would include door-to-door interviews with residents and detailed investigations on water quality. The report would be more specific than the two previous studies. "The in-depth study defines the corrective works necessary," Simmering said.

The problem of contamination first surfaced a year ago when residents in Morewood's southwest corner complained of poor water quality. The MOE conducted an extensive survey last July, but a report on the survey was held up for eight months because of MOE staffing shortages.

The MOE was to conduct the second study, but they were unable to do it until this summer. Council decided not to wait and hired consultants to do the job.

Claude Cousineau, reeve of Winchester Township, said hiring private consultants to do the second study saved 6 to 8 months waiting time the township would have spent for an MOE study.

The township is now in position to lobby the ministry for funding for a more in-depth study to determine the cause and extent of the well contamination and how it can be remedied, he said.

He had just received the consultants report Monday and was unable to say what the source of contamination is or how widespread it is.

Simmering would not say what areas have been contaminated in the hamlet. But he said the problem is not confined to one area.

"Typically it's just a matter of well contamination and proximity to septic systems." But while it is suspected, it is premature to blame faulty wells and faulty septic systems as the cause of the problem.

He said the levels of contamination are not excessive, but he added, "it does have to be dealt with."

Separate school bills up 11.7 per cent

Yves Cossette
Record Staff

CORNWALL — Separate school supporters in Chesterville will see their tax bill go up 11.7 per cent this year.

Supporters in Chesterville face the highest increase in Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, because of the assessment rate set by the Ontario Ministry of Revenue. By contrast, separate school supporters in Iroquois had the lowest increase at 2.5 per cent.

On average taxes will go up 8.8 per cent for SD&G Roman Catholic School supporters. For average ratepayers with a home assessed at $5,000, that means an increase of $71 to the $810 paid last year.

The tax increase will help finance this year's operating budget set by trustees last week at $65 million. Last year the budget totalled $56 million.

Trustee Charles Adams said the increases were necessary. Teachers wages made up 80 per cent of the budget leaving only a small portion of the budget to cover other areas.

"There is very little (in the budget) that you can work with unless you want to all of a sudden affect programming in the school system and you don't want to ever do that," he said.

The tax increase was in part due to the Catholic school board's take-over of two French language schools from the public board this year. Altogether, 1,600 students from Le Citadel High School in Cornwall, and Glengarry District High School in Alexandria, were transferred to the Catholic school board, said Adams.

Taking over the two schools accounted for the bulk of the $5.5 million increase in high school operating costs, he said.

Adams said the Catholic school board was able to keep the tax increase down because provincial grants to Catholic schools went up this year. The province increased grants to Catholic elementary schools by 8.2 per cent and secondary schools by 7.5 per cent.

Last year supporters faced a tax hike of 15 per cent. "Keeping in mind the changes that have taken place last year, 8.8 per cent on average (this year) across the counties is a fair adjustment," Adams said.

But Chesterville's Deputy Reeve Roger Cole believes the school board should have kept its tax increase to around five per cent.

"You wonder how all other levels of municipal government can keep things down, yet the school board year in and year out seem to be coming in with these double digit figures," he said.

Municipalities are responsible for collecting school taxes. Cole said if municipal governments and county governments can keep budget increases to the rate of inflation so can the school boards.

"I'm not so sure the school boards take a hard enough look at ways to cut back. That's what bothers me," he said.

Cole rejects Adams argument that the school board's take-over of two schools and increased enrollment was responsible for increases.

"We all have excuses why we should spend more...there's lots of things we (council) would like to do. We would like to probably do (repave) three streets in the village of Chesterville this year, but sometimes we have to look at ways to cut back," he said.

Michelle Gallery plays host to an exhibition by local artists

Greg Kielec
Record Staff

CHESTERVILLE — Local artists hope to make residents aware of artistic talent in the area with an art show featuring paintings by McCormick's Art Studio.

It will be the first show put on by Jean McCormick and her students in Chesterville and will serve as a coming out party for Michelle Gallery on King Street which just opened its doors in August last year.

The art gallery and custom framing shop has enjoyed good business from residents in the surrounding area. But it hasn't enjoyed large patronage from residents in the immediate area.

McCormick hopes the art show will encourage residents of Chesterville and of the immediate area to see what the studio offers. "If we can break the ice like this, it would be a good start," she said Thursday.

She has painted for 30 years, first starting her craft while living in Niagara Falls, and has continued her craft over the past 17 years in the local area. The key goal of the show is to get area residents acquainted with local artists and their work.

She, and other artists, hope to give those attending the show some knowledge of art-work, like what the difference is between an original work and a print. Surprisingly, many people don't know what the difference is between the two, she said.

She said people should have a little background knowledge on art before they buy a work. If a person doesn't know anything about art, they don't know if their purchase is a good buy or not.

McCormick and store owner Cecil Dillabough hope to create a "small-town gallery stmosphere" at the two-day show, with a "welcoming, warm feeling," she said.

The idea of having the artists themselves at the show is to let people see the person behind the painting, what that person was thinking of when the painting was created, and how it was translated onto canvas, she said.

"I think if you're buying a piece of work and you know the artist, it would make a big difference to have that piece hanging in your home," she said.

"People want a piece of the artist when they're buying a picture. They want to know what you were thinking, when you had seen that scene, and what you were thinking, when you had seen that scene, and what inspired you to do it."

McCormick was first inspired by reproductions of Norman Rockwell pictures that used to appear on the Saturday Evening Post in the Niagara Falls area. That was her first real contact with the art of painting.

When she was a young adult, she began painting with oils. She immediately fell in love with the painting method and has painted with oils ever since. "I've never lost my passion for oils, I love every bit of it," she said.

An artist, in order to paint well, must be in love with his or her work, she said, and such is the case with her. "I don't think you can do it if it isn't a real love affair," she said.

If a person isn't truly in love with painting, they would never put the time and effort into it to become a talented artist, she said. It is the love of the work that draws an artist back to the canvas day after day.

She considers herself lucky that she has been able to turn the thing she loves the most into a career. "Very few people get to do exactly what they want to do in their life."

Through her teaching at her studio near Avonmore, she has been able to indulge in her art every day and pass on a bit of herself and her talents to each of her students. "I give them a new vision," a new way of looking at things, she said.

What makes painting such an interesting art is that it's a form of expression for the artist. "When you paint, you put you on canvas," she said. Painting often brings a person in closer contact with their self and their feelings, which are often brought out in their work, she explained.

McCormick expects more than 100 paintings will be exhibited at the show and sale by area artists. She hopes the King Street studio will be packed with area residents during the Saturday and Sunday.

"I would like the place crammed full," she said. "We're hoping for a real good turnout."

Dillabough said the show will feature mostly area rural scenes, usually quite popular with area art enthusiasts. "This is what the big attraction is."

He said his art gallery, opened in August last year, has been well accepted by the community and business is steadily increasing.

Kilger to back Chretien in Calgary

OTTAWA — Stormont-Dundas MP Bob Kilger has fallen into line with the rest of the riding's delegates for next month's Liberal leadership convention as he announced Monday that he will support former cabinet minister Jean Chretien.

All 12 of the riding's delegates, chosen at a meeting in Cornwall in March, will back Chretien in Calgary.

In a press release issued Monday, the first-term MP announced he is backing Chretien because of his "keen understanding of the major issues that are before the country and of the operations of government."

Chretien is also adept at realizing the future direction Canada should take and what is at stake for our country in order for it to remain united and to strengthen its competitiveness while increasing our collective prosperity."

In a telephone interview from his Parliament Hill office, Kilger said he had been leaning in Chretien's direction since the March delegate meeting and finally made up his mind following a leadership forum in late April.

Up to that time he had "kept an open mind" and had considered either Montreal MP Paul Martin or Hamilton MP Sheila Copps as good leadership material.

Chretien's stand on regional economic expansion and his popularity across the country finally swung Kilger in favor of the former MP from Chicoutimi, who lost the 1984 leadership race to John Turner.

The broad base of support he has built among Liberals across the country can be translated into a victory at the polls, Kilger believes.

"In conversations I've had with Canadians from across the country Chretien's appeal is broad-based. He is seen and heard to be bringing the same message on Canadian unity no matter where or when he is speaking."

The acknowledged front-runner in the leadership race, Chretien "cuts very critically to the central issues facing the country," Kilger said.

The Stormont-Dundas MP also likes Chretien's ideas on redressing regional economic disparities.

Rather than "just throwing money at the problems" besetting regions like Atlantic Canada, Chretien wants to bring "long-term economic stability" through such plans as decentralizing industry.

Kilger said modern technology will allow this decentralization to less-developed areas without an accompanying loss of competitiveness.

Only two of the delegates accompanying Kilger to Calgary are from Dundas. They are Glen Bradbury of Morewood and Morrisburg's Dr. Gerry Rosenquist.

The other 10 are all from Cornwall. They are Bernard Rozon, Anne Marie Poirier, Heather Leger, Renie Binette, Diane Fraser and Brian Snyder.

Alternate delegates are Cheryl Lumley, Jody Lalonde, Louis Tremblay and Elise Cole.

Riding association president Sheila Tremblay and former MP Ed Lumley will also vote at the June leadership convention.

Singers raise over $1,500

FINCH — The Stormont Men's Choir and Singing Farmers of Vankleek Hill hit a high note for the Winchester District Memorial Hospital here Sunday night as they raised over $1,500 for the hospital's building fund.

An audience of more than 500 packed every available seat and spilled into the Sunday School hall at St. Luke's Presbyterian Church to listen as the 30 voices of the two choirs joined to perform Will Your Anchor Hold, Circuit Riding Preacher, Guide Me O Thou Great Jehovah and I Saw the Light.

The two choirs also performed individual selections.

Concert organizer Edwin Waldroff of Newington, a member of the Stormont Men's Choir, said Monday he was "floored" when the ushers presented him with an envelope containing $1,518.

"I thought if we raised $1,000 we would be doing exceptionally well. I was floored for a while when I saw the number written on the envelope from the offering."

The event attracted concert-goers from across SD&G, the city of Cornwall and from as far away as Ottawa, he noted.

The concert was publicized in newspapers and on radio across the United Counties and was included in bulletins in churches across the three counties, Waldroff said.

Sunday night's concern marked the first time the two choirs had performed together but it definitely won't be the last, especially given its success, Waldroff said.

The two will again join forces later in 1990 as the Stormont Choir return the favor and travel to the Vankleek Hill area.

Eastern Ontario ignored in province's 'political' budget

CHESTERVILLE — Local municipal leaders are unanimous in their assessment of Ontario Treasurer Robert Nixon's $44.5 billion budget as mainly a document focused on winning votes.

But the leaders are also unanimous in their criticism of the government's neglect of Eastern Ontario in the document and also critical of the proposal creation of two new crown corporations, one to deal with property assessments, the other to deal with water and sewage treatment.

"Obviously it's an election budget," said Chesterville Reeve Jim Cook. "From what I saw, my initial reaction was 'when is the election'."

He didn't know of anything lacking in the budget, but more funding for Eastern Ontario would have been appreciated. "We're always looking for funding."

His main concern is the province's proposal to form a new crown agency to deal with property assessments. Property assessments are crucial to provincial governments because they determine the amount of tax the municipality can charge individual ratepayers.

He is concerned that the cost of services provided by the agency will be passed on to municipalities and he is also concerned that if municipalities have to pay for their assessments, the impartiality of the assessor may be jeopardized.

When the province handled municipal assessments, it was independent of the municipality. With the new corporation, that independence may be lost, he said.

And if municipalities are forced to pay for their assessments, they will likely update their assessments less often, meaning they will lose money they could earn through increased assessment.

He said Chesterville just recently finished a long-overdue overhaul of its assessment system to market value. If it has to pay for new assessments, chances are they won't be done as often and property values will be out of sync with taxes, he said. "There's all sorts of ramifications."

In terms of fiscal responsibility, Cook said he thinks the budget is a good one. "I like budgets that don't raise taxes."

But while it gets high marks for money management, it gets poor marks in the area of new programs and initiatives, Cook said. "Providing additional services, it probably doesn't do a thing."

Carson Elliott, deputy reeve for Osnabruck Township, said it is obvious the government has announced what is a pre-election budget. But from what he has seen, there isn't much in it to get excited about. "Basically it's a bland budget," he said.

One thing municipalities may get excited about is the fact it looks like even more financial burdens will be passed onto the first tier of government. And in terms of funding, Eastern Ontario once again was left in the cold, he said.

"I feel really strongly that Eastern Ontario was neglected." A large portion of funding dollars went to the Toronto area, but none went to Eastern Ontario, he said.

Like Cook, he expressed concern over plans to create a provincial agency to handle municipal property assessments. He said there are already too many crown corporations for municipalities to deal with. And he also expressed concern over how independent the new assessment agency will be from municipalities.

On the positive side, he said at least there were no tax increases. There was an increase in the price of cigarettes, but he said he is a non-smoker so the tax doesn't bother him.

Claude Cousineau, reeve for Winchester Township, said there wasn't much in the annual budget for Ontario residents. "Election goodies, that's about all," he said.

He was pleased that funding for the environment was increased. But the government is still lacking in its funding for roads, he said.

In terms of funding for roads, "there's not a hell of a lot to cheer about," he said Tuesday. "They still don't know where Eastern Ontario is," he explained as the reason for lack of funding to the area.

He also expressed some concern over the new provincial agency for municipal property assessments. "That kind of worries me."

Donald Cumming, Roxborough Township reeve, said there are a number of positive things in the 1990 budget. It was a balanced budget, taxes weren't raised, and funding for health care was increased, he listed as the positive aspects of the document.

On the negative side, he expressed concern municipalities may have to pay for supplementary assessments provided by a new crown corporation to look after property assessments.

If the new agency receives the same budget and operates the same way as government has operated its assessment branch, he has no complaints. But he isn't in favor of the new agency if it costs municipalities more money.

And although there wasn't much in the way of funding for Eastern Ontario in the budget, the area has gotten its share of goodies over the last while, he said. He pointed out two recent instances in which the government has given large amounts of funding to Eastern Ontario. One instance was the supplementary road grants awarded to area municipalities, the other instance is the agreement by the province to give $2 million to renovations at Winchester District Memorial Hospital.

Parks commission dumping illegally?

property that we're managing," he said.

Ross Walker, member of the Help Save Our Parks Committee, said waste from the parks should have been brought to a dumpsite in Osnabruck or Williamsburg Township or else it should have been dumped in an approved commission site north of Upper Canada airstrip near Upper Canada Village.

Members of the Help Save Our Parks Committee said the discovery of the site lends even more weight to their request to have a public inquiry conducted into parks commission operations. Until an inquiry is conducted there will be "a shroud of mystery" around the commission and its opertions, Elliott said.

Carol Ann Ross, committee member and Charlottenburg Township reeve, said more concerns about the operation of the parks commission will be brought out shortly. The concerns come from former workers of the commission.

The committee will continue to air concerns about the commission until the government orders an inquiry into the body. She hopes the government doesn't have to be embarrassed into taking action, but if it is necessary, that is what the committee will do.

Robert said the investigation into the dump site is still in its preliminary stages. He was unable to predict when the investigation will be completed and when action will be taken.

The parks commission will be told shortly what it is required to do to remedy the situation. The MOE will likely require the parks commission hire a consultant to see if the site is polluting the St. Lawrence River, and if it is, how it should be cleaned up, Robert said. If a clean-up is required, the parks commission will be forced to pick up the tab, not the MOE.

The ministry will also investigate dumping at the site to determine if any laws were broken. If laws were broken, charges will be laid, he said. Officials still don't know what effect the site has had on the neighboring river or even if leachate from the site has entered the river.

Recycling: Ecological or economic survival?

Earth Day 1990, held a week and a half ago, marked a new turning point in the environmental consciousness of the average Canadian. But despite increasing concern about the environment and waste management, most area municipalities have taken little action to reduce the amount of waste generated by residents, and subsequently sent to local landfill sites. The following feature is the first of a two-part series on recycling and waste management in small communities. The feature looks at why recycling hasn't been established yet by most small Eastern Ontario municipalities, how important recycling is to waste management, and outlines some of the initiatives taken by local groups to get recycling started. The second portion of the report addressing the recycling issue and local recycling efforts will be featured in next week's Record.

Yves Cossette
Record Staff

CHESTERVILLE — In most of Ontario, the blue box has become a symbol of hope, one positive step in saving the world from ecological abuse.

The blue box program recycles used materials: paper, metals, glass, and in some centres synthetic products and plastics.

But curb side collection of recyclables, is so far, an urban phenomenon. Attemps to start recycling in the Chesterville-Winchester area three years ago have floundered. Some say lack of awareness is one reason, economic viability the other.

Today, area politicians admit awareness has grown, but say a glut in the market for most recyclable materials makes the blue box program economically unattractive. The arguments anger environmentalists, recycling groups, and provincial government officials, who say that recycling shouldn't be viewed in terms of economic feasibility, but rather as an environmental necessity.

Recycling advocates argue municipalities must provide recycling as an additional waste-management service. If recycling gains ground, there will be less waste to ship to landfill sites, which will last longer, and municipalities will save money. Closing old sites and the complicated process of selecting new sites is making landfilling too expensive, they say.

Still others insist recycling itself is not the key to reducing landfill. They feel emphasis should be placed on a comprehensive waste-management plan, of which recycling is just a part.

This emphasis was evident in a pilot project conducted in Kenyon Township and in the village of Maxville in late March and early April. The project involved 25 families who attended a workshop organized by a local committee where they learned waste-management techniques. The techniques emphasized a process of waste-reduction that begins with consumers buying environmentally-friendly products and ends with recycling, the last step in waste-reduction before shipping waste to a landfill site or dump.

Public pressure to start recycling is growing. Last month the villages of Morrisburg and Iroquois joined the town of Brockville to become the first municipalities to start a blue box collection program in the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry.

They are the first of 19 SD&G municipalities to adopt some form of recycling. The remaining 17 are still in the preliminary stages of planning recycling and are reluctant to adopt the blue box until consumers start buying more recycled products.

Winchester Reeve Larry Gray defends that reluctance. "My biggest concern would be to make certain that there is a greater demand for recyclable material. Unless we develop uses for these materials...there's not much need to collect," he says.

A blue box program was started in Winchester, including parts of Chesterville, in early 1987. The Ministry of Environment (MOE) provided 50 per cent of the start-up cost. The contractor, who paid the remaining cost, picked up the blue boxes by following the garbage truck around on its pick up, Gray says.

The response by residents was overwhelming. "It was very successful in so far that we had what we considered 80 to 90 per cent participation," he says.

The collection included paper, soft drink cans, glass, and plastic bottles. But the prices for most of the materials tumbled, making it unprofitable for the collector. Since the village didn't have a contract with him, the blue box service was ended a year after it began.

An attempt to start a program with Osgoode Township, in the Ottawa-Carleton Region, and with Russell Township, in Russell County was made in late 1988. That attempt also failed because firms accepting recyclables ran out of storage space, Gray says. Osgoode Township has since joined a blue box collection, which is similar to services provided in Ottawa, Nepean and Gloucester.

To make recycling work, Gray says, incentives are needed to get people to buy recycled products. He isn't sure what the incentive should be, but the price for recycled paper should be lower. "If you order recycled paper, it costs you more than what new paper would cost you. That, to me, is wrong," he says.

Winchester Council hasn't given up on recycling. "We are still working on some kind of effort here, but not very diligently," he says.

Gray's views are similar to those of Chesterville Reeve Jim Cook. Cook feels recycling has more potential now than when the blue box program was first attempted three years ago. The media has done a lot to publicize the causes of protecting the environment and of recycling.

"Four years ago nobody cared," he says. "I'm not faulting them (the public). Their job was to put it (the garbage) on the curb and...the garbage truck took it some place. But they're becoming aware and they now want us to do something and they are also telling us they are prepared to pay for it," he said.

Demand for recycling in the northern Dundas County area is growing. And its need has been promoted largely through the efforts of some private entrepreneurs and the Women's Institute. Ironically, it is the Women's Institute, not politicians, which have been the area main force behind recycling. Last June, area members of the Women's Institute held a day-long recycling workshop at North Dundas District High School near Chesterville. Guest speakers briefed members on the benefits of household waste-management. Local service clubs, such as the Lions Club, and schools have also started recycling projects, demonstrating that the desire to recycle is growing.

But the cost, as local politicians see it, is still too high. They are reluctant to spend money without knowing if the investment will be returned. "It's got to become economical somehow. I'd very much like to see the private sector get involved in this," Cook says.

The biggest obstacle is the glut of recyclable materials, newsprint in particular. "The frustrating thing with these recycling programs is that, yes, you remove it from the waste-management cycle...but it tends to get blocked up because there is such a volume," he says.

Facing mounting pressure from both the public and the province, Chesterville, together with Winchester and Winchester Township, plan to start recycling soft drink cans as the first step toward full scale recycling.

Recycled aluminum cans are the only commodity that is still in demand. Although prices fluctuate greatly, recycled aluminum now fetches $1,300 per tonne.

The economic factor is spurring the three municipalities to start recycling with aluminum cans. The architect of this plan, Winchester Township Deputy Reeve Wyman Barton, says recycled products have to be consistently in demand. "We know that it was tried in Winchester and the major problem seems to be that there's not a consistent market at the end for the products. You might find somebody that's interested in buying the products for a while but then that falls."

Barton predicts recycling will become more accepted when most consumers realize that recycling is beneficial to the environment.

But should recycling be done because it is an environmental necessity or because it is profitable? Barton feels recycling must become profitable if private business is to become involved. "There's no question, saving the environment is what people are wanting, but it certainly will be much more effective if we can get the dollar figure helping us out."

Winchester Township doesn't even have a regular garbage pick-up, but recycling is being considered seriously by township leaders. Council has already authorized the purchase of land adjacent to the township's landfill site east of Winchester to develop a recycling sorting and storage station and a new landfill. The development of the recycling depot hinges on the Dundas-Grenville Waste-Management Study, which is looking at sites in the two counties. All are subject to stringent Ministry of Environment criteria.

Most municipalities in SD&G are behind other Ontario municipalities with their cautious and business-oriented approach to recycling. The Ontario Multi-Material Recycling Incorporated (OMMRI), a non-profit group sponsored by Ontario's soft drink industry, projects that 2.1 million Ontarian homes will take part in the blue box curb-side collection program this spring.

The collection effort involves 57 per cet of Ontario households, an increase of 300,000 homes from October 1989. But the projections do not illustrate the extent of curb-side blue box collection in small towns and municipalities.

According to OMMRI figures between 70,000 to 80,000 rural households participate in depot recycling. This form of recycling usually occurs where there is no curb-side collection. Residents in rural townships take recyclables to a depot to be stored and processed.

According to MOE records 16 municipalities and three counties outside urban areas in Ontario's southeast region, have received funding for the blue box program.

But the list is already outdated. At least two of the municipalities listed, Winchester and West Hawkesbury Township, do not have blue box collection, nor does the County of Prescott and Russell. SD&G municipalities are behind other Ontario municipalities doing recycling, but their lack of progress isn't due to a lack of initiative. While programs have been started in the area, municipalities have simply been unable to keep them going.

Bobbi Robinson, executive assistant to the president of OMMRI, says it is only a matter of time before small town and rural leaders realize that recycling is an integral part of waste-management. "I think if you compare it to the real cost of landfill, and by the real costs, I mean building and just the collection and...taking materials to the landfills, the costs of siting a new landfill (are) millions and millions of dollars, recycling is a very viable form of waste-management," she said.

The municipalities of Chesterville, Winchester, and Winchester Township, are taking part in a waste-management study that is to choose two, possibly three, new landfill sites in the counties of Dundas and Grenville. The study, which is in its fourth year has an accumulated cost of $228,000. The study's consultants, A.J. Robinson and Associates of Nepean, have projected the cost of opening and operating one landfill site for a 20-year period at $27 million. Each additional landsite would cost $5 million.

A similar waste-management study is being conducted for the counties of Stormont and Glengarry. The high cost of landfilling has prompted at least one area politician to call for an immediate start to recycling. Osnabruck Township Deputy Reeve Carson Elliott predicts the township's dump has ten years before it reaches capacity. "We're in a crisis situation now. If we don't find ways to recycle and use this garbage, we're going to smother in our own waste," he says.

Osnabruck Township is involved in the waste-management study for Stormont and Glengarry counties. But he doesn't want to wait for the completion of the study, still a year away, to start recycling. Delaying recycling will only shorten the lifespan of the existing dump, he says.

Like other area politicians, Elliott cites poor market conditions as an obstacle to recycling. The success of recycling in other parts of Ontario have contributed to a glut. The only material he foresees recycling in Osnabruck Township in the near future is aluminum, he says.

Aluminum fetches a high return. The going rate per tonne is $1,300. Recycling glass earns $60 per tonne, plastics anywhere between $150 and $250, and newsprint brings in between $5 and $15 per ton. Robinson says waiting for favorable economic factors to start recycling is futile. "You're never going to get rich recycling. You're dealing with commodities. So there are never guaranteed prices. There is always price fluctuation."

She also disputes claims that there is no market for recyclables other than glass. "There are markets for all of it. The news (print) market...is the most troubled right now. (But) there is a market, offshore (overseas). So you're not getting the same revenues, but there is no problem getting rid of any of the materials right now," she says.

The price for newsprint is low largely because only one plant in Canada, at Thorold, Ont. is able to reprocess it into newsprint. It cannot handle the volume of newsprint available, creating a glut which has depressed prices. But a plant is being built in Whitby by Atlantic Packaging Products Ltd., which will make newsprint of 100 per cent recycled fibre. Two more plants are proposed, one in Gatineau, Que., the other in Thunder Bay, so to handle the glut of paper. In February, the Ottawa Citizen announced it would join a growing number of Canada's major daily newspapers and start using recycled newsprint by mid-1991.

"I suspect in a year, year and a half, it's going to be seller's market for news (print). Because once the new de-inking facilities are up and running, they are going to need incredible volumes of used news to keep them going."

Robinson admits the increased demand for newsprint could spur holdout municipalities into recycling because the cost would be offset by higher revenues from the waste paper. But municipalities still have the responsibility to maintain a recycling service whether revenues are high or low, she says.

"(Recycling) is going to another municipally-provided service. It's something municipalities have always have had the responsibility for -- getting rid of waste. This recycling is just an alternative form of doing it in order to divert from landfill (of) which we don't have a whole lot left," Robinson says.

Diverting waste from landfill sites is the main reason the villages of Morrisburg and Iroquois are joining Brockville in a blue box program starting this month. The two smaller municipalities are starting the program regardless of the marketability of recyclables. "It's just a service to decrease the amount of refuse that has to be landfilled. But we won't be actually marketing any of those materials," says Morrisburg Clerk-Treasurer Cheryl Tynski.

Any revenue made from the sale of the recyclables will go to a private contractor, based in Brockville, who has been hired to collect the blue boxes. The contractor will take the materials to a processing centre in Brockville and be responsible for processing fees, says Tynski.

Every home in Morrisburg is expected to get a blue box and residents will be asked to recycle newspapers, glass bottles and jars, plastics, and soft drink cans. Municipal leaders don't anticipate the cost of recycling will cause taxes to go up significantly. "There may be a small increase, maybe $5,000," she says.

Tynski predicts the recycling costs will be offset by a reduction in the cost of dumping garbage at a nearby landfill where the village pays a dumping fee.

The municipalities expect the grant money for the initial operating costs to be provided by the MOE. After five years the villages will be on their own and the only economic incentive offered is to the recycler, who will get paid to carry out a municipal service.

Joe Petoia, supervisor of municipal funding programs, at the MOE, agrees that it is up to municipal governments to seize the initiative. "The ministry identifies waste-management and waste-disposal as a municipal responsibility. Recycling and any other waste-management activity is as much a municipal responsibility as landfilling."

Together with OMMRI, the MOE funds municipalities starting a blue box recycling program. The MOE provides one-third of the start-up costs, OMMRI provides another third, while the municipalities have to kick in the remaining third. The province provides a five-year operating subsidy, starting at 50 per cent of the net cost, decreasing to zero over the five years.

"We give those subsidies to get them going. The ministry does not subsidize waste-management responsibilities...such as the cost to landfill, and the cost to collect all your garbage," he said.

Guitarist doesn't fret over finances

MAPLE RIDGE — Love of music rather than a lust for money must be the driving force for students considering a career as a classical guitarist.

Following his performance, during a hurried interview on the bleachers of the school's football field, Candelaria noted his approach is to use a broad range of music to educate his audience.

Candelaria develops different topics and combines popular styles, ranging from ragtime to classical, in his attempt to create an interest and better understanding of music.

"The challenge is there to capture their interest," he said. "I don't get into a heavy sale."

Students often ask Candelaria what a career in music is really like.

"You like what you are doing," said Candelaria. "Not everybody's job is their life. The up side is fantastic."

The down side?

"Every musician is not going to have a financially successful career," he noted.

For Candelaria, making a living as a classical guitarist means incorporating his skill into several areas including touring, recording, teaching and conducting workshops.

His contemporary recording, on the prestigious Centrediscs label, was heralded by Robert Markow of High Fidelity Magazine, who wrote: "Candelaria's performance is totally committed, even distinguished." The record sold 1,000 copies, which is "considered quite good" for a heavy classical recording, noted Candelaria.

The success of the record led to a live concert taping of his special light-classical program called Spanish Passion, which Candelaria anticipates will easily outsell his first record. Production is now scheduled for another recording of more serious works from a variety of musical periods.

Candelaria says pacing is the key to holding students' attention during any one of his presentations. Each concert includes commentary, demonstration excerpts, performance of complete selections followed by a question period.

Candelaria has three educational concerts which he offers:

- World-wide musical rhythms -- selections demonstrated and performed to reflect world-wide styles such as bossa-nova of South America, dances of Europe, ragtime and blues of North America.

- Time travel -- all the main historical musical periods are reviewed through excerpts with selections performed. Periods discussed are Renaissance, Baroque, Classical, Romantic and 20th Century.

Candelaria started on his road to music in hig school. Following that, seven years of intensive musical training led to his Master's in Guitar Performance at the Peabody Conservatory of John Hopkins University. He has been honored with numerous scholarships and performance awards, among them the B.C. Cultural Fund's highest award to an individual artist.

The classical guitarist enjoys international concert tours and frequently conducts master-classes for universities and guitar societies in Canada and the U.S. Orchestras request him as a soloist because of his impeccable credentials and broad range of repertoire.

A regular performer on CBC radio, Candelaria's informative guitar serial program has been aired repeatedly, and his recitals have been heard internationally.

Classroom classic
