Couple Escape Injury When Plane Falters in Take-Off

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Fawcett, Dunbar, Crack Up in Own Plane Sunday.—Damage Not Great.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Fawcett, of Dunbar, escaped without injury when their plane crashed during an attempted take off at North Lunenburg, Sunday afternoon. One wing of the plane was damaged as it struck a wire fence and the propellor was smashed, but the damage was not extensive.

The plane, piloted by "Dick" Fawcett, had been on a flight five minutes previously, and when Mr. and Mrs. Fawcett attempted to take-off on a trip to Avonmore before returning home, engine trouble developed when the plane was but 20 feet from the ground. In order to miss some trees, the plane was swung into a ploughed field but did not have altitude enough to clear the fence.

Township Teachers Meet At Local School Last Night

Instructive Talks Given to 22 Members Of Teaching Profession. — Open Discussion on Entertainment.

With 22 teachers of Winchester township present, the first regular meeting of teachers was held in the local Public school last evening, as very instructive talks were given by Chas. McConnell, principal of Morewood Public school, and Miss Marion Casselman, of the staff of the local school. The former chose as his subject, "The Use of Humour, Sincerity, Sarcasm, Patience, Right of Child in the Classroom." The address was highly stimulating and presented many points which should prove beneficial to the profession throughout the township.

Miss Casselman chose the teaching of Current Events to Grades II, III and IV as her contribution to the meeting, coupled with a discussion of books on the subject, which showed a very broad and intimate knowledge of modern literature.

The president, Mr. Lynch, demonstrated the methods he employed in teaching the subject of "Current Events" in his school.

An open discussion on Christmas entertainments was indulged in and a list of books which had been found good was put on the blackboard.

R. C. Dillabough, J. L. Cross, Miss Strader and Miss McMillan were named as the committee to provide the programme for the next meeting which will be held at the call of the president.

C. F. McArthur Dies at Russell During Agricultural Meeting

Charles F. McArthur, prominent resident of Russell and well known in the district, died of a heart attack on Friday night at Russell while attending a meeting of District No. 1 Agricultural Society. He was 74.

Mr. McArthur collapsed shortly after he received a certificate from the Fairs' Association for Promotion, presented by A. C. Gamble, of Richmond, president of District No. 1 Agricultural Society.

Intensely interested in community welfare and politics all his life, Mr. McArthur was highly respected through Russell County for his work in improving conditions for the farmers.

On October 2 of this year, Mr. and Mrs. McArthur celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. At that time they were the recipients of congratulations from all over the country. Among them was one from Prime Minister King.

WHO IS LAUGHING AT WHAT?

Did Premier Hepburn by any chance make a mistake whom Americans were laughing at when he said in his St. Thomas speech that "Americans are laughing at Canada's war efforts"? We wonder.

Funeral Services Yesterday Of Late C. Lee Casselman

Passes Within Two Months of Son and Brother. — Death Occurred Monday in His 75th Year.

Following within two months of the death of his brother and son, the late C. W. Casselman and Dr. H. H. Casselman, of Chesterville, the death occurred Monday of this week at his home in Winchester of Casey Lee Casselman, in his 75th year. He was a son of the late C. T. Casselman whose wife was Salome Smith.

After spending some 40 years as a drug traveller for a Montreal wholesale house, he settled in Winchester 26 years ago, opening a shoe store and a ladies' wear business, which was discontinued about 12 years ago when with Mrs. Casselman he spent a year in Ottawa, later going back to Winchester where they have since resided.

The deceased was a member of the Masonic order in the Chesterville lodge and was a member of the United church. He was highly respected by a wide circle of the business communities of Eastern Ontario and his many friends throughout this district. He is survived by his wife, the former Mary Christie Beckstead, whom he married 52 years ago; one son, Murray of Montreal, and his sister, Mrs. John Carter of Ottawa.

The funeral service was held in Winchester United church on Wednesday afternoon, conducted by Rev. W. S. Atchison with interment following in Maple Ridge cemetery.

Activities Are Wound Up Local Girl Guide Company

Funds of Organization Donated to Red Cross and Lady Tweedsmuir's Funn.—Knitting Also is Donated.

The First Chesterville Company of Girl Guides wound up its activities yesterday afternoon at a meeting of the officers and members of the Group Committee at the home of Mrs. Mary Hughes. The funds on hand were turned over to Red Cross work.

When it was decided to discontinue the Company, because of lack of parental co-operation and of lack of time by the officers, members of the Company agreed that the funds should be turned over to charitable work. At yesterday afternoon's meeting, it was decided to give $20 to the special war appeal of the Red Cross, $15 to the local society, and $10 to the fund being raised by Lady Tweedsmuir, Chief Guide of Canada, for the relief of English evacuee and Polish children.

The Guides have turned in 10 pairs of socks and six sweaters to the local Red Cross made from yarn purchased from the Company's funds.

Present at the meeting were Mrs. Geo. Merkley, Mrs. J. A. Morris, Mrs. T. A. Smirle, Mrs. Chas. McMillan and Mrs. M. Hughes.

REMOVAL OF MUNICIPAL POLLS MAY CAUSE A LIBERAL REVOLT

WITH the announcement that the Ontario Legislature will be convened on January 10, the big question in Ontario political circles this week concerns Premier Hepburn and his plan to close municipal polling booths for the duration of the war. Close observers realize more and more as time goes on, that the proposal is one of the most unpopular steps Mr. Hepburn has taken to date. Opposition throughout the Province is being consolidated in such a big way, individual members in the government ranks are already wearing an anxious expression in anticipation of the decision they will have to make in the House if their leader insists on carrying through to the bitter end.

As one prominent executive of the Liberal party pointed out, Mr. Hepburn apparently felt so sure of his ground that he neglected to keep a bridge open for a retreat. With the assistance of his lieutenant, Eric Cross, the Premier made a flat, uncompromising statement that elections would be abolished. There was no "if" worked into the announcement. To back down now would require a great deal of courage on the part of the Government leader. Nor has Mr. Cross made it any easier as a result of his antagonism to those municipalities who are seeking to have a local plebiscite on the question in the forthcoming municipal elections. He unhesitatingly declared that such plebiscites would be a waste of money because the Ontario government was determined to force the necessary legislation through the House.

The effect of Mr. Cross' statement has served only to fan the flame of general resentment higher and higher.

At this date, it appears likely that the fate of the proposed provincial legislation may be settled at a party caucus just before or immediately after the opening of the Legislature. In spite of Mr. Hepburn's firm grip on the individual members on his side of the House, he may find for the first time that he has a minor revolt on his hands. That is, if the temper of the electorate remains as it is now, members have already been hearing from their constituents, and they may not dare to act the part of rubber stamps when they go into caucus.

NO PUBLIC WORK IN WARTIME, SUGGESTS ATTORNEY-GENERAL

ATTORNEY - GENERAL CONANT has intimated that there will be drastic curtailment in the direction of public works. He holds that it would be criminal folly to undertake works desirable in peacetime, if by so doing war efforts were impaired. In this connection, several Toronto aldermen have come forward with new ideas for taxation, but Mr. Conant's lead may find favour with Toronto taxpayers who like the city government to adopt a similar policy of cutting down on expenditures.

DAILIES MUST BE CHECKED UP IF BOOKMAKERS TO BE STOPPED

THE CANKER of bookmaking has become very deeply imbedded in Ontario, and the sporadic attempts to unseat it have not been crowned with success. It will take a more drastic surgical operation than any hitherto attempted to eradicate the disease. In the 98 days of racing on tracks in this province during 1939, more than $13,000,000 were wagered, while the gate receipts reached a grand total of $400,000. This wagering at tracks, however, is only a drop in the bucket compared with the amounts placed with bookmakers throughout the year. A heavy blow at this undercover betting has been struck by the United States and Canadian authorities by shutting down on the turf information bureau conducted by M. L. Annenburg who is reputed to have made millions by furnishing bookmakers in the two countries with wired reports from the various tracks. He has been denied the use of the telegraph companies' wires and his clients have to look elsewhere for their daily information on racing events.

But in spite of the prohibition placed on this big organization, bookmakers in Ontario are still carrying on. Money flows into their hands in staggering sums. This is due, of course, to the fact that they still have the help of the daily newspapers, which publish odds and prices, full entry lists and probable winners. If the authorities are really determined to choke the illegal gambling traffic, it appears likely that they will have to turn their attention to those daily papers which serve the industry.

QUIET OF THIS NEW WAR HINDERS PUBLIC ENTHUSIASM

WITH so much to be done when a country is at war, the human mind is slow to adapt itself to the new tempo. To most citizens it seems that months and months have passed since war was declared; they are taken back by the realization that a mere period of twelve weeks has elapsed since Hitler invaded Poland.

In the light of this, it is not surprising that criticism of the Government's progress along the war road has been mounting in the past few days. Everybody expects everything to be done immediately. Many, who do not stop to think, raise an eyebrow skeptically at the picture painted showing Canada humming with industrial activity, shorthanded in its effort to meet war demands. They raise a second eyebrow when they read that there are still half a million people receiving relief in the country.

But here is food for reflection: That half million is a big reduction from previous totals; and despite the number of workmen available from the ranks of that half million, even now plans are under consideration by which unemployed workmen in Great Britain would be brought over to Canada to take up the slack.

DOCTORS ON POSTAGE STAMPS.

TWO internationally-known doctors are being honoured by the U. S. Post Office Department in a famous American series of postage stamps shortly to be issued. They are Major Walter Reed of the U.S. Army Medical Corps and Dr. Crawford W. Long of Georgia.

Dr. Reed is honoured because of his discover that yellow fever is transmitted by the bites of mosquitoes. Yellow fever had been present in the Western Hemisphere for three centuries and in devastating epidemics had caused tens of thousands of deaths. Dr. Reed and his associates conducted experiments in Cuba and in 1900 made their famous discovery, following which yellow fever soon disappeared from North America and has never returned.

Dr. Crawford Long, the general practitioner of medicine memorialized by the post office department of the United States, is known for having been the first person to use sulphuric ether as an anesthetic during the performance of a surgical operation. That was in March 30, 1842, when Dr. Long operated on a man in Jefferson, a small town in Georgia, then many miles from a railroad.

THE SAVOUR OF SALT.

Skilful Cooks Never Neglect The Dash of Salt That Tones Up Taste of Foods.

FOOD WITHOUT SALT is pretty flat. The U. S. Department of Agriculture, as well as that of Canada, publishes standard directions for cooking vegetables. The water should be salted at the beginning. When boiling or frying meat, on the other hand, salt should be added after or at the end of cooking. Salt tends to draw out the juices of meat. This applies more to meat in small sections such as chops or steaks. So, because it is more convenient, salt the roast before it is cooked.

Foods such as cornstarch puddings, cooked cereals and breads need a bit of salt to bring out the bland flavour of the starch. In a tested recipe for bread, this is enough to accent the wheaty taste of the flour, but not enough to give a salty taste or to slow the growth of the yeast.

Skilful cooks never neglect to add a dash of salt to cooked fruits and fruit drinks. Cocoa, milkshakes and other beverages are improved by the addition of a few grains of salt.

Salt seems to make "sweet things sweeter," or a trifle of salt should always be included in candies, cakes, ice creams and sweet desserts.

In dishes that call for the beaten whites of eggs, it is a good practice to put a pinch of salt into the whites before beating. The salt stiffens the whites, makes them beat up faster, to a slightly greater volume and makes the foam less likely to become watery on standing. Add a little salt to the water in which eggs are poached. This will make them "set" more quickly.

Health Unit For Dundas County Proposed to Counties' Council

AT THE opening meeting of the October Session of the Council of the United Counties, resolutions from Women's Institutes and Welfare Organizations in the County of Dundas were read by the Counties' Clerk.

These resolutions asked Counties' Council to establish a Health Unit in the County. A sub-committee was appointed to gather data and report its findings to each member of Counties' Council.

Following is a summary of the committee's report:

There is in Ontario only one Health Unit, begun as an experiment in 1935, supported jointly by the Rockefeller Foundation and by the Province and comprising the Counties of Stormont, Glengarry, Prescott and Russell. This unit will cease to exist on December 31, because the funds from the Rockefeller Foundation are exhausted, but the Counties' Council of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry have gone on record as desiring to establish a county Health Unit to serve the three united counties provided the Provincial Government would contribute 50 per cent of the maintenance.

The question will be decided by the Counties' Council of 1940 at the January session.

The proposed unit, if established, would furnish Public Health Service under at least five departments:

1. Tuberculosis—The unit would co-operate with Sanatorium officials, arranging for attendance at clinics of suspected cases.

2. Infant Care — Clinics would be be held to which, free of charge, mothers may bring their babies for advice on feeding and training problems.

3. School Work — Nurses regularly visit the schools and inspect all the children. This inspection includes a test of the child's vision and hearing, inspection of teeth, tonsils and breathing.

4. Immunization—Nurses assist the medical officers when diphtheria toxoid is being administered and vaccinations are being made.

5. Maternal Welfare—Nurses visit expectant mothers and advise them on pre-natal care.

Cost of the Unit.

What would be the cost of the proposed unit as compared with what the United Counties' are now spending on public health services? The amount now spent is roughly $11,000, made up as follows: Dundas, $1,000; Stormont, $8,000; Glengarry, $2000. The estimated cost of the unit is about $30,000 annually. The suggested Government grant of at least $10,000 would make the cost of the proposed unit not so very much greater than the present cost of health service and it is the firm belief of the committee that the benefit to be obtained would be very worth while.

Fine Record.

The record of the existing unit has been most creditable. The annual report for 1938 shows that not one death has occurred from communicable diseases in the whole area served. Infant mortality for the area in 1938 was the lowest ever recorded in the district. In short, the record of the unit has been one of valuable co-operation with all municipalities in the building up of a healthier population, which surely is a valuabe contribution to the welfare of any community.

It is certain that the establishment of a Health Unit would substantially reduce the cost of indigent hospitalization in the counties served.

FATS FROM FISHES.

Fat Fishes Supply Abundance of Vitamin A as Well as Many Essences Replacing Those of Butter

THE FAT FISHES supply not only an abundance of Vitamin A which is the most valuable ingredient of animal fats, especially in the dark period of the year, but many essences which can replace those of butter. The fat fishes are herrings, pilchards, sprats, salmon, mackerel and eels. The sprat, during its short season, is especially valuable for it supplies large quantities of available lime salts in addition to its meat and fat.

The herring, which is available all the year around, is, or should be, our chief supplier of animal fat. We will admit that the herring seems to have more bones than are really necessary, but if you split it down the back and peel off the fillets carefully most of the awkward bones will be left behind. There are many ways of cooking herrings, each giving a distinctive flavour and all equally nutritious.

Salmon, especailly tinned, is inferior to herring in fat value, but it has a superior meatiness which is one reason for its popularity. The white fish—plaice, soles, cod, hake, etc., are very poor in fat. These fish absorb the fat in which they are fried, but as this fat is rarely first class, and is usually overheated its value is small. Fry in deep fat so that the fish is submerged and cooked rapidly.

THINGS THAT NEVER HAPPEN IN CHURCH

The Churchman.

USHERS CALLING for help in carrying the offering. Ministers insisting that the people attend only one service each Sunday in order to make room for others. A dozen people asking the minister for some really definite work to do during the week. A dozen families asking the ushers to place them on the front seats. Every one in the audience reaching for a hymn book when the number is announced and then singing heartily. Every head bowed reverently during prayer. No whispering or reading of papers during the service. The minister saying, "I have rushed from one thing to another all week. I have spent less than three hours in revising this old sermon which is rather out of date but I will endeavour to make it fit the occasion. The Ladies' Aid Society hoping that the preacher's wife will bring to the next meeting a long list of things that ought to be done in the parsonage at once. The "old-timers" graciously giving way to newcomers, confident that the newcomers will be able to do much better work than they have done. No one getting up or moving about or leaving during the service. The middle of the pews filled first. Each one speaking to the person next to him at the close of the service and inviting him to come again. The names and addresses of all strangers handed to the minister at the close of the service.

Sure Enough.

Mother: "With food prices so high, don't you think it a bit ertravagant, Tommy, to eat both butter and jelly on your bread at the same time?"

Tommy: "Why, so, mother? I think it's economy. You see, the same piece of bread serves for both."

—Facts About Canada—

THE TREMBLING ASPEN.

THE INDIANS were in despair. A strange animal seemed to be destroying their crops and drowning their children. The Chief called the young braves from far and near and offered as a reward for the dead body of the loathsome creature, the hand of one of his daughters in marriage. He had two daughters, one as fair as the day and the other as dark as the night.

One of the young braves killed the animal and there was great rejoicing all over the land, feasting and dancing in honour of the hero. But he wasn't happy. He could not make up his mind which of the maids he liked the better. So he decided to test their kindliness of heart.

He disguised himself as a beggar and came around the tepee. The fair maiden drove him away with harsh words, but the dark one called him back ,fed him well and gave him moccasins for his weary feet. The fair one scolded her sister for doing so.

Finally the young brave stood up and revealed himself, offering his love and allegiance to the dark maiden and turning to the fair one he said: "Thou shalt be turned into a poplar tree, the quivering of its leaves shall remind our race of the useless chatter of women."

That is the legend of the quivering aspen. Every Canadian is familiar with its shimmering flutter in the breeze. No other tree does it quite the same with its leaves when the wind blows. In spring the slender drooping cottons are pleasing to the eye. The fruit ripens in the latter part of May.

Canadian manufacturers find it a very useful wood in making paper. It is found in districts where other trees are scarce and because it is easily obtained, it is often cut into lumber. The average height of the tree is about 40 feet and sometimes reaches 90 feet. It is valuable as firewood on the Prairies. As lumber, it is very difficult to season and very perishable, but it makes excellent excelsior, boxes and barrels for foodstuffs. In Europe it makes match splints.

Going the Limit.

The convicted man had just received sentence and was being led out. "You poor man," said a sympathetic woman near the dor. "Is there anything I can do for you?"

"No, mum," replied the prisoner, "unless yer'd like to do this three years."

Perhaps.

"What are the duties of a Knight of the Garter?" asked a correspondent.

We don't know; but we imagine they are fairly elastic.

Unspecified.

Bix: "See here, what do you mean by going around telling people I am a first-class idiot?"

Dix: "I didn't say first-class."

Help Wanted.

Irate Parent: "I'll teach you to make love to my daughter, young man."

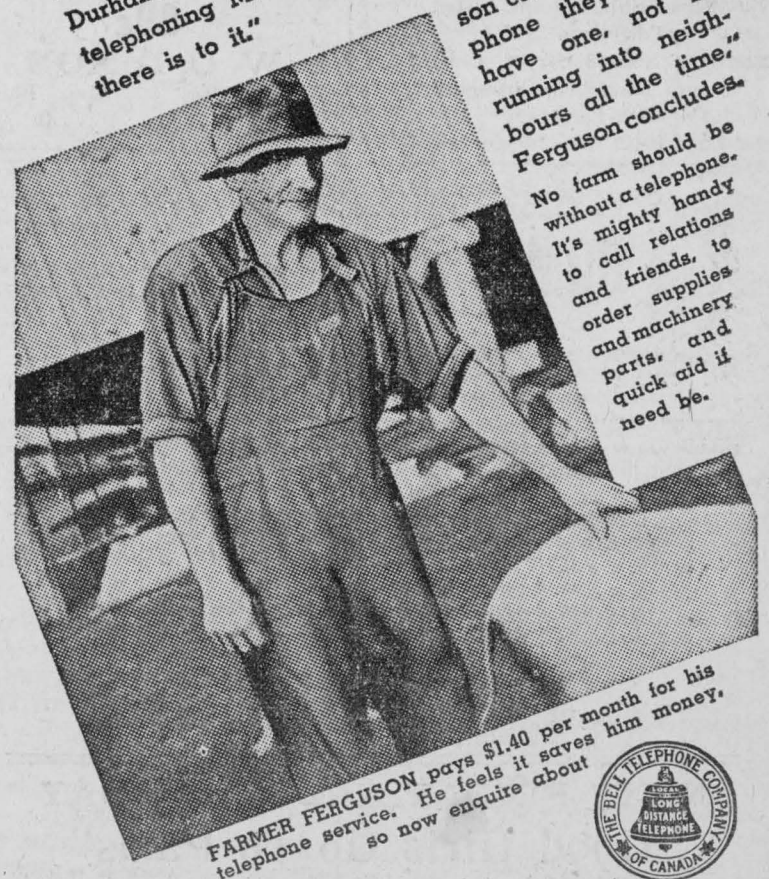

Suitor: "I wish you would, sir. I'm not making much headway."

"SAVES ME $3.00

every time I call Durham for feed," says Walter Ferguson about his telephone installed in his home last year. "If I had to hitch up a team of horses, go get my feed at Durham and back I would lose half a day's work. By telephoning Mr. Ewen, he sends it out and that's all there is to it."

"Anyway, if a person can have a telephone they should have one, not be running into neighbours all the time," Ferguson concludes.

No farm should be without a telephone. It's mighty handy to call relations and friends, to order supplies and machinery parts, and quick aid if need be.

Occupants of the automobile were: W. A. McDowell, the driver, his wife, and Mrs. W. A. McCooeye and her seven-year old daughter, Phyllis.

Sheers Off Engine.

Mr. McDowell stalled the car on the tracks as he was attempting to put the gears in reverse to back it clear of the oncoming train. The locomotive sheered off the front of the car back to the dashboard, but all occupants had leaped clear after Mr. McDowell had shouted to "jump."

Mrs. McDowell, who was sitting in the front seat with her husband, jumped out and ran across the tracks in front of the engine. A projection on the cow-catcher of the locomotive caught the tail of her coat, tearing it as she flung herself off the right-of-way. The narrow escape left her speechless but she was otherwise unharmed.

"I thought my end had come," Mr. McDowell later said. "I wasn't worried so much about myself, it was the three others in the car I was worried about.

"I didn't see the train until I was practically at the tracks. I put on the brakes but by the time the car came to a stop, the front of it was over the tracks. When I put the gear shift into reverse the motor conked and there we were. It was terrible. But I didn't become excited until I saw my wife run across the tracks directly in front of the engine.

"I realized later it was the best thing she could have done because if she hadn't, my car would have been dragged on top of her when the train struck it."

According to police, Mr. McDowell was proceeding towards Metcalfe. Mrs. W. A. McCooeye and her seven-year-old daughter, Phyllis, were in the rear seat of the 1929 sedan.

At the point where the accident occurred, there are two level crossings 184 feet apart. Mr. McDowell crossed the first set of tracks and was a few feet away from the second crossing when his wife shouted: "Here comes a train."

Motor Stalled.

As the nose of the car projected over the tracks, Mr. McDowell jammed on the brakes and then tried to put the gears in reverse. The motor stalled. The train was bearing down from the right side of the car and Mr. McDowell shouted "Jump!"

It was then Mrs. McDowell leaped from her side of the car and ran over the tracks. Mr. McDowell escaped without a scratch. Mrs. McCooeye and her daughter jumped from the rear door, the former suffering a slight bump on the head and bruises. She did not require medical attention.

The engine carried the car 29 feet down the tracks, sheering off the motor and entire front, leaving it a twisted mass of iron.

THE LAST BOWL ON THE GREEN.

IT MAY BE only sentiment,
When sear autumn spreads its wings
And you feel the chilling air is getting keen,
But there somehow comes a sadness
When the bowling season ends,
And you've put your last bowl down upon the green.

There's a friendship in lawn bowling
And a comradeship as well,
Go and ask the novice player or the "dean,"
But from somewhere comes a feeling
And it pulsates through your breast
When you put your last bowl down upon the green.

When we meet in summer evenings
And the play is at its height,
And twilight sheds its mantle o'er the scene,
Deep regrets are always with us
When the play is at an end,
And we've put our last bowl down upon the green.

When the game of life is ended,
And our scores are written down
By the hand of One who ne'er has yet been seen;
Have we won or lost life's contest,
Have we played at best life's games,
When we've put our last bowl down upon the green.

BARN AND STABLE BURN NEAR IROQUOIS VILLAGE

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the barns and stable of Richard Thompson, Iroquois, about 1 o'clock, Sunday morning. Mr. Thompson resides about one mile from where the buildings were located. Edward Foster, farmer and neighbour, was the first to discover the blaze, but it had then such a start nothing could be done. The barns were filled with hay and straw. The loss is estimated at $1,500, partly covered by insurance.

Job of Sweeping For Mines Like Deep Sea "Fishihg"

Aboard a French Mine-sweeper in The English Channel.—The devices by which mine-sweepers root death-dealing explosives from their lurking places under the ocean surface were revealed today.

Vessels probing the waters no longer are forced to travel in pairs, linked by a heavy cable. Mine-sweeping has been modernized so that one boat with a 24-man crew can do what used to require two. All in all, it is much like deep sea fishing — but a much more dangerous "sport."

Cover 200 Yards.

As the first step, two wooden, steel-lined fins are released from the stern, one falling to the starboard and the other to the port side of the boat. These, acting as outriggers, hold the drag in proper position. When the fins have submerged, they are followed by two torpedo-shaped floats weighing 600 pounds, which bob to the surface 150 to 200 yards apart. The area between them is the drag's field of action.

When the drag catches a mine, the float bobs as if a fish had struck the line. The mine's achorage slides along the cable to a pair of strong pincers, which cut it in two, sending the explosive portion to the surface, where it is then destroyed from a respectful distance.

By night the floats carry a light. The light disappears when the float is drawn under water and the man on watch knows he has a "bite." A searchlight then picks out the drifting mine. Often less than 20 minutes pass between the netting of a mine and its annihilation by a mine-sweeper of any type. Small vessels, perhaps converted trawlers or tugs, carry on the hunt day and night, neglecting their own security to eliminate the U-boat's "eggs" that may hatch at any moment into terrible destruction.

Three Deaths at Winchester Take Place Over Week-End

Three citizens of Winchester passed away during the past week. On Friday, Nov. 17, Edna Brown, wife of James McCaslin, aged 63 years, a woman who was loved and respected by a large circle of friends, died. Her funeral service was conducted at her late home on Sunday at 2.30 p.m., by Rev. W. S. Atchison, with the message being given by a close friend of the family, Rev. D. W. Summers. There were two special contributions in song by members of the Wesleyan Methodist choir of Winchester. Interment was made near Iroquois. There is no family.

Monday morning, C. Lee Casselman, who had been in poor health for some months, passed away in his 75th year. His funeral was conducted Wednesday at 2 p.m. in Winchester United church by his pastor, Rev. W. S. Atchison, assisted by Rev. R. F. Wilson of the Baptist church.

Death came unexpectedly to Joseph Gemeroy on Monday afternoon. He had been on the street on Friday and was taken ill only Saturday. He was in his 75th year and had lived in Winchester 42 years, having spent 40 years in the employ of A. Sweet, and continued in the Big Store with Hy Bessin until last May.

He is survived by his wife and a large family of sons and daughters. The late Mr. Gemeroy was noted for his integrity in business and for his willingness to co-operate in whatever was for the welfare of the community. He held office in many of the town's organizations. In religion he was an ardent Baptist and in politics a Liberal. His funeral service was held this (Thursday) afternoon from his late home on Gladstone street to the Baptist church where his pastor, Rev. R. F. Wilson was in charge.

Work of the Years.

Mrs. Brown: "How children's tastes do change."

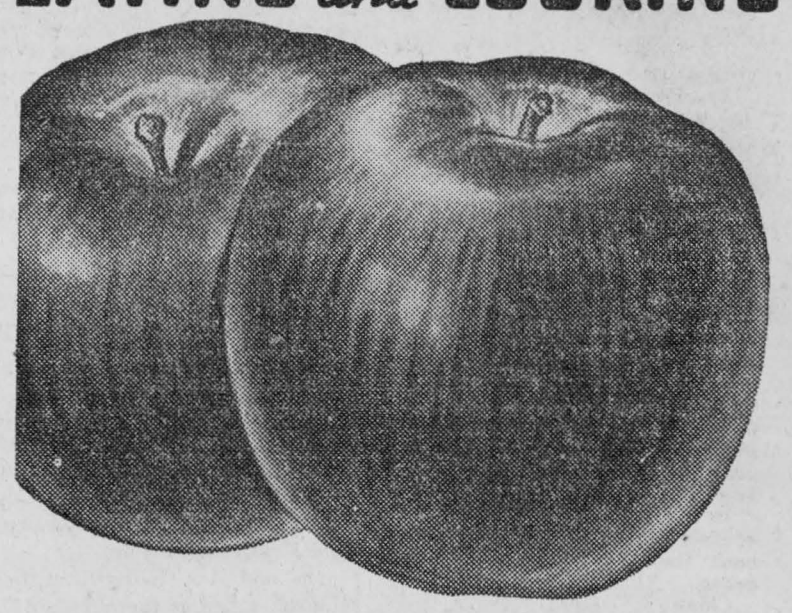

Mrs. White: "Yes, when my two were small, Johnny just loved soldiers and Mary was crazy for brightly painted dolls. Now Mary is crazy about soldiers and John runs after every painted doll he sees."

Just in Time.

"This is my car," exploded the irate tourist to the garage man, "and what I say about it, goes—see?"

Just then a dirty-faced machinist crawled out from under the dead machine and said, pleadingly, "Say 'engine,' mister!"

OSNABRUCK TOWNSHIP FARMER PASSES AWAY IN SLEEP

This community lost a much respected resident by the death of Walter Gallinger, which occurred at his home here, at noon, Wednesday. Mr. Gallinger had not been in the best of health for a year, being troubled with his heart, but only for the past two weeks had his condition been serious. Members of the family, thinking he was resting comfortably, did not disturb him but at noon it was found he had passed away in his sleep.

Mr. Gallinger was born at Gallingertown, Nov. 5, 1864, a son of the late James Gallinger and his wife Ann McMillan, a native of Glengarry. On Jan. 29, 1890, he married Miss Janet Bush of this community and had resided here on the farm.

He leaves to mourn his passing, his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Wm. Moak, of Newington, and two sons, Charles and Clifton, at home; seven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. He was the last member of his own family; one sister, Mrs. Wm. Hawn, having died 31 years ago.

The funeral was held on Friday from the residence to North Valley United church, with interment in the family plot at Pleasant Valley cemetery. Rev. W. H. LeGrow, the pastor, conducted the service. Favourite hymns of the deceased were sung by the choir, and a solo "The Old Rugged Cross," by Mr. Willis Waldroff, Newington.

The pall-bearers were close neighbours of the deceased—Messrs. Willis Warner, John Alguire, John Shaver, Robert Waldroff, Isaac Otto and F. Brownell.

The large numbers of friends who gathered to extend their sympathy showed the esteem in which Mr. Gallinger was held. Many beautiful floral offerings were received.

Friends and relatives from a distance who attended the funeral were Roy Hawn, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hawn, of Ottawa; Oliver Gallinger, of Colquhoun; Mr. and Mrs. Mason Robinson, Mrs. Arthur Beckstead, Mrs. Bert Weegar, of Grantley; Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Clacher and Miss Lila Moak, of Cornwall; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Shaver, Miss Evelyn Shaver, Mrs. Floyd Shaver, Mr. and Mrs. C. Problem of Good Reception Depends Greatly on Radio Set LISTENERS are at times inclined to forget the very important part which the receiving set itself, and the aerials which are provided for it, play in securing satisfactory radio reception.

A letter from a CBC listener in Danville, Quebec, offers an interesting commentary on this aspect of the problem of getting clear reception. "I venture the observation," he writes, "that many listeners' complaints (on coverage, etc.,) might be obviated if they would provide themselves with more adequate receiving sets—to say nothing of more competent aerials. I realize that circumstances, situations and financial ability may all enter into consideration in the matter, but it is astonishing how many people are discontented through causes whose remedies they could easily have supplied. I am purely amateur in the matter, with no technical knowedge, and perhaps I am fortunate in owning a good set (it is a 14-tube 1938 model, but I could get just as much satisfaction out of an 8-tube set!) but when I say that there is no CBC station that I have not heard direct, it will be clear that much depends upon the set. I presume it is a feat only possible under most favourable conditions, but I am now getting (occasionally, because I have to wait until 1 a.m. EST for a clear channel on 1100 K.C.) CBR at Vancouver quite clearly. CBK at Watrous I have received as early as 6.45 EST. CBA and CBL are daytime stations to me here—as I write at 3 p.m. CBA is coming in as well as any local, which I should judge to be good reception of a station roughly 500 miles away. So I repeat the point, that I do not think that there is any deficiency about your transmission, but that much may be wrong at the receiving end."

CANADIAN PERSONALITIES SPOTLIGHTED WEDNESDAYS

"Canadian Snapshots" the CBC feature designed to highlight interesting facts about Canada, actuality broadcasts from unusual places, and personalities in the news, is currently featuring outstanding compositions by Canadian musicians. Each week, Samuel Hersenhoren, the musical director, presents one or more works by a representative Canadian composer. Percy Faith's "Ode to a Transmitter" which had its world premiere on the "Canadian Fantasy" programme presented to BBC listeners two years ago will be heard on Wednesday, Nov. 29 8.00 to 8.30 p.m. Mr. Faith has promised to write original music for a poem to be selected by producer Frank Willis, which will be played on the same programme.

It is presented every Saturday on the National Network, 12.30 to 1.00 p.m.

CANADA'S NAVY AND ITS HARD TASK

For Friday, Dec. 1, 9.00 to 10.00 p.m., the Special Events Department will illustrate to listeners of the National Network the details of the impressive organization behind the all-important task now being handled quietly and efficiently by the Royal Canadian Navy.

Ship-to-shore transmitters will give the listener a picture of how the Navy works. From the bridge of a destroyer on patrol, with R.C.A.F. planes droning overhead; from the little patrol boats that go out to examine ships being piloted into port; from mine sweepers, and from ships carrying torpedoes and depth charges in ceaseless conflict against U-boats, comes this vivid portrayal of Canada's own "Hearts of Oak."

WHITE MAN PUZZLED BY INDIAN MESSAGES

Expressions of appreciation in English, French, Spanish and other European tongues, are fresuently received by the CBC. But telegraph messages from Indian chiefs are a rare honour. So it is understandable that a Sudbury telegraph operator thought he was the victim of a practical joke after the CBC's recent "Deer Hunting" broadcast, when he received a series of mysterious texts signed by important representatives of the Mic?mac, Blackfeet and Stoney tribes. In fact, it took a long-distance telephone communication with another operator to straighten the matter out. The messages were courteous expressions of appreciation about the broadcast in which two Indian guides almost "stole the show."

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS WILL DISCUSS PROBLEMS

In war time, as in peace time, youth faces the problem of adjusting itself to a world that is preoccupied with its own worries — and just now it has plenty of them. What modern Canadian youth, the boys and girls in their last years at high school, or who have just left high school, think about it all will be the subject of a series of discussions that will be featured by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, starting Saturday, Dec. 2, 5.45 to 6.00 p.m.

Talks in the series will be quite extemporaneous, without script, but the producers have found by experience that the young people cannot start "cold." Half an hour of more or less furious argument before broadcast time is necessary to get them warmed up.

HEALTH DISCUSSIONS INTEREST EVERYONE

If there's one thing that interests everyone, it's health. Leading Canadian physicians will discuss a variety of health problems in an important series of talks on "Educational Health." Dr. T. C. Routley, general secretary of the Canadian Medical Association, will give the second in the series, on Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 7.45 p.m., over the National Network of the CBC.

VISITS EVERY PROVINCE TO LEARN MORE OF CANADA

After vising every Province in the Dominion, just to get fresh, first-hand impressions of our vast country, Arthur Phelphs has prepared a series of unusually interesting talks for "This Canada" series which will start Wed., Nov. 29, 9.00 to 9.15 p.m. from CBL. Mr. Phelps (who is professor of English at the University of Manitoba) made the trip by car, and covered 14,000 miles. His talks promise to be lively and amusing as well as informative, and should be welcomed by Canadians who wish to have a fuller knowledge of their own country.

NORFOLK SEA SCOUTS RENDER VALUABLE WARTIME SERVICE

As signallers at the famous Cromer coastguard station at Trimingham, Norfolk Sea Scouts have been rendering valuable wartime service. They regularly assist in patrolling the shore, and signal the police word of washed-up mines.

EVACUATED ENGLISH BOYS WANT TO BE BOY SCOUTS

One of the unanticipated results of the moving of English children from the large cities to rural areas has been the application of evacuated boys to join Scout troops. In North Wales one new troop of forty members has been started. Two large boys' schools with an enrollment of nearly 1,200 have launched into Scouting as a major activity. One of the reasons has been observation of the numerous acts of wartime public service rendered by Boy Scouts.

Killing of Pig in Germany Entails 7 Points of Red Tape

Berne, Switzerland.—Formalities in seven acts must be carried out by the German farmers before they can use meat from their own pigs, German newspapers have revealed.

1. The farmer must prove that the animal was fed and raised on his farm for at least three months.

2. He must apply in writing to the local mayor for a permit to kill the pig.

3. A slaughter - house inspector must then examine the pig.

4. If all is in order, the farmer must pay a slaughtering tax in advance.

5. After the animal is killed, the owner must send his permit back to the mayor.

6. An inspector will then appear and weigh the meat.

7. The farmer may now use the meat and fat from his pig, but must turn over to the authorities ration card coupons for meat and fat representing 90 per cent of the weight.

SAY IT WITH WORDS

MARTHA HOLINSHED
OPPORTUNIST

WHEN I PUT UP the sign in front of our house, Martha Holinshed, Opportunist, everybody in Portbridge laughed, and someone threw an overripe vegetable, so that I had to climb up with soap and water and a rag and wipe it off. Marilla would not even hold the ladder.

"If you fall off the top," she said, "what good will it do for me to be holding on to the bottom."

There is no point in arguing with Marilla when she has one of those reasonable spells.

At first no one came, or just a few; and those only to be objectionable; and I must say that I was discouraged.

"This idea of yours may be all right as an idea," I said; "but the way things are now, it won't put any butter on our bread."

The minute the words were out of my mouth I regretted them, for butter is always a slippery subject between us. Marilla is forever harping on my weight and my diet, as if I weighed five hundred pounds instead of what I do weigh; and as if everyone did not know there is a thin type like Marilla and a plumper type like me, and that what you eat has nothing to do with the type you are born with.

There was no use in arguing with Marilla about the sign, because when she has an idea she believes in it and nothing shakes her belief. She sat there every day in the gray tweed suit she always wears, with the white tailored shirt waist and black tie and flat black shoes, and read books on psychology and astronomy and business administration, and metaphysics as calmly as if she did not know the state of our finances as well as I did.

Marilla is not a woman who changes. She has changed in no way since I first knew her. Her hair is just as dark and neat, and her eyes just as bright and deep behind her bone-rimmed glasses; and there are no wrinkles in her face, only those three straight lines beside her mouth that are the marks of character and determination and, if I must say it, bossiness. I don't know how old Marilla is. She never said. Personally, I am thirty-nine—and have been for years. I hate the thought of getting into my forties.

She was sitting there just the same the afternoon that Jeremy Smythe came. Of course, I went to the door.

"No," I said, without waiting for him to speak, "Miss Holinshed isn't a piano tuner. She isn't a religion or a cult or a cure. She is an opportunist. She practices applied common sense."

I stopped then, because Smythe was just looking at me gravely and holding out his card.

"How do you do." said Marilla when I had taken him upstairs. "Sit down."

And Mr. Smythe bowed and sat. Marilla eyed him quizzically. He was a thin, dark man, with a high forehead emphasized by a hair line peaked above the temples, and self-controlled lips and chin, betrayed by a curious little twitching of one eyebrow. He kept his hands locked on one knee as if afraid of what they might do if he let them have their own way.

"Are you any relation to Alexander Smythe." Marilla asked him.

Alexander Smythe was a synonym for the Peerless Pen and Penpoint Company, which was Portbridge's largest industry.

"Nephew," said Jeremy Smythe briefly.

"And you want to see me professionally?"

"Yes."

"A love affair?" I marvelled at Marilla's boldness.

"No."

"Money then? Debts? Some kind of scrape?"

"No—and yes."

Marilla has never been a patient woman.

"For heaven's sake." she burst out, "are you dumb?"

"Yes," Smythe said. "That's it — dumb."

Jeremy Smyth, it appeared, had never been a talker. Shy, maybe; tongue-tied; damn clam, his Uncle Alexander called him. Uncle Alexander brought him up. No, not here—school—college—Europe. He had come back expecting to go into the pen business. Uncle Alexander was disappointed in him. Uncle Alexander said the pen business was a place for a man with a tongue in his head, not a damn clam. Kicked him out. He wanted to get back—prove he was fit for the business. Pride, maybe; maybe rather fond of Uncle Alexander after all.

Marilla pulled these facts out of him one at a time, and I must say that every one was like pulling a parsnip out of a two-year-old bed. She sat there soundlessly drumming on the table in a way she has when thinking. She spoke at last abruptly. Marilla was always an abrupt woman.

"Do you know," she asked Smythe, "how many words there were in the Gettysburg Address, or in Collidge's speech to the Massachusetts Senate in 1915?"

Jeremy Smythe was startled. I should have been startled, too, if I had not known Marilla. When Marilla has an idea she never walks right up to the front door of it; she creeps upon it from the rear. When she spoke again it was with deliberation. Marilla never hurried.

"You're certainly not much of a talker," she said. "But you have two good points. You don't stutter and you don't blush." And then—

"I never believed in trying to do what you can't do. I believe in looking for a chance to do what you can do. That's why I call myself an opportunist. Do you see my idea?"

"By Jove," said Smythe, "I believe I do!"

It was more than I did, and I began to say so.

"Angeline," said Marilla, "don't trouble to wait."

"It's no trouble.'

"Angeline ——" said Marilla.

And so pretty soon I went. That was how it happened that I did not hear what financial arrangements were made, nor how a sensible young man like Smythe ever happened to come there, nor exactly what the plan was anyway.

It was at supper that night that Marilla looked at me in a way she has across the top of her cup.

"Angeline," she said, "I have a thought."

I took another muffin. I knew I should need it, for when Marilla says that, in just that way, it always means trouble ahead for me.

"Tomorrow morning," said Marilla, "you'd better go down to the Peerless Pen and Penpoint Company and get a job."

"A job!" I cried. "I! A Tredernick work in a factory!"

"You will be my source of information."

"But a Tredernick work in a factory?"

"Your wages, too, will come in nicely."

"But a Tredenick work in a factory!"

Marilla shrugged her shoulders in a way she has.

"Angeline," she said, "be reasonable."

There is no point in arguing with Marilla when she begins to talk about reason.

II

THE next morning I applied for a position at the Peerless Pen and Penpoint Company, and of all the undignified situations in which I was ever involved, that one had the least dignity. If you'll believe it, there were mental tests.

"Slow," the examiner whispered to the employment manager when he had finished. "But accurate. Dependable, but no originality. Would not do for piecework. Would not do for the offices."

"We need a timekeeper."

"The very thing," said the examiner.

And so I became a timekeeper. The timekeeper's office was at the right of the employee's entrance, and after the big iron gates had closed, promptly on the stroke of eight and one, late comers had to enter through and have their time taken by me for the docking office. People going in and out of the factory during hours also had to pass that way, so that first and last everybody came there.

It was not a bad job, either, once you were used to it. People gave me candy and fruit every day, so that I always had something by me, and after their time had been taken they would stop a while and talk. First and last I found out a good deal. I am not naturally curious, but anyone likes to know what is going on.

The queer part of it was the very day I got my job Jeremy Smythe got one, too—right there, if you'll believe it, in his own uncle's factory. Of course he was not recognized, because no one had ever met him except his uncle; and if you saw the layers of ceremony that old Alexander Smythe kept wrapped round himself up in the front office, you'd realize that he would be the last to know anything about it. I heard Jeremy when he gave his name to the employment clerk.

"Smith." he said.

"What first name?"

"J." And the man wrote it down: Jay.

After a great deal of discussion they made him a janitor.

Jeremy spent the first week in a cloud of dust. He swept the whole of the first floor of the plant, which covered several acres, and he swept it fast and well, and touched his cap in silence when people spoke to him, instead of stopping to talk over the election.

Toward the end of the week, when the second floor janitor began to be ailing, Jeremy helped him; and when he was taken suddenly worse, Jeremy did all the second floor in addition to his own. When it was known that he was doing two janitors' work, they gave him two janitors' pay, and sent a man up to see him from the efficiency department.

"How do you get so much done?" he asked.

"I sweep while others talk," said Jeremy, and went right on sweeping.

They transferred him to the box department.

It was at about that time that Jeremy Smythe made the first remark I had heard from him except in answer to a question. He was with Marilla in her study one night when I went in after the Ship of Love that I had left there, and he turned round to me with a face like a perfectly wonderful-looking wooden Indian's for expression except for that little flicker of the eyebrow.

"What do you know about Ann Devon?" he asked. I told him.

"Ann Devon," I said, "is a sweet, pretty, nice young lady, and Bailey Bridges will be lucky if he gets her; and if you want my advice, you'd better look out for Lawrence Amidown. I don't see how she happens to be in a factory anyway. She isn't like the others. You can't imagine her sticking a wad of gum under her typewriter or chewing up her hair in a permanent wave. She's too much of a lady, if you want my opinion, with that slow, soft voice and that quiet way she has."

"Tell me something I don't know."

I took a breath and did so. "She is Bailey Bridges' secretary. Bailey Bridges is the sales manager. I guess he's done a lot for her in the way of salary, and so forth. I understood at first that she was engaged to him, but I asked her one day and she said 'Not yet'; so then I asked her if she was engaged to Lawrence Armidown—he's the general manager and he got her the position in the first place—and she said 'Not yet' again, so I can't tell really. But I can see that she likes them both. They're both wild over her, and I don't wonder, what with those eyes of hers like two purple pansies and that braid of hair she wears round her head like a gold crown.

"Angelina," said Marilla, "you've been reading love stories again."

I don't care if I had. I am not ashamed to say that I like love stories whether in books or real life, and that was why I had taken a particular interest in Ann Devon and her two suitors.

Bailey Bridges and Lawrence Amidown were rivals in more ways than one. They were both favourites with old Alexander Smythe and it was rumoured that some day there would be a partnership looking for one of them. You would have thought that there were reasons enough for jealousy between them, but Bridges used to say that all was fair in love and business, and they seemed to accept things on that basis; they worked together in many ways and were good friends.

Alexander Smythe had discovered them both himself; and he was proud of them. He told his secretary that either could wag a wicked tongue.

If Bridges and Amidown were rather pleased with themselves, they had every reason to be. Bailey Bridges was as sleek a blonde young man as you could find in a day's travel, with a little fair moustache perched on his upper lip, and eyes as bright and blue as two glass marbles. He could have told you—and often did—that he had run away from an unsympathetic home when he was twelve and had fought his way upward one step at a time against tremendous odds. Now he wore silk shirts to work and drove his own car; and the gesture with which he handed Ann Devon into it could not have been surpassed by Raleigh, flinging his coat in the mud for the queen.

Lawrence Amidown was as smooth and dark as Bridges was smooth and blonde. His hair was black and shiny above a shining forehead, and his eyes shone too—rather piercingly—as if in anticipation of more good things to follow. He, too, had made himself what he was today, and he was not dissatisfied either. He, too, drove his own car, and it was a better car than Bailey Bridges'. He told me that if he took a girl out to dinner he would be ashamed to spend less than ten dollars. His acquaintance with Ann Devon had cost him a fortune. I thought Ann Davon was a lucky girl.

"I don't see how they do it on their salary," Marilla said when I told her about them.

"Perhaps they get more than I do."

"Very possibly," said Marilla. She need not have been sarcastic, for I had been in the business less than a month.

Jeremy's work in the box department consisted in pasting together the corners of the Christmas gift boxes. On the second day he pasted more corners than anyone in the department. The work was monotonous; nevertheless, it was considered not undesirable, for since it required no thought, employees were free to talk and even to sing in time to the slow clacking of machinery. Jeremy took no part in the hilarity, and finally the girl at the machine next to his spoke of it.

"Why doncha sing?" she asked.

"I can't sing," said Jeremy.

"Cancha talk neither?"

"I don't talk," said Jeremy, "while I work."

There was a great deal of laughter.

"Whatser matter? Somethin' the matter withya jaw?"

Jeremy pasted a whole box before he answered.

"I think it's better," he said then, "to use the upper part of my head instead of the lower."

They laughed then louder than ever.

"Fat chance you got to use ya head here."

"Whatya thinkya goin' to discover —a fifth corner?"

Jeremy pasted another box.

"If you pick up one box," he remarked mildly, "while you're laying down the one you've finished, you get more done. Then you get more pay."

"Ya know," said the girl beside him after a little, snapping her gum reflectively—"ya know there might be somethin' in what the guy says, at that."

At the end of the second week production in the box department was increased 15 per cent, and they sent a man up from the efficiency department to find out about it. They transferred Jay Smith to the inspection room.

It was that very day that Jeremy walked in unannounced and spoke to Ann Devon. He had already met Ann; I introduced them one day in my office. Ann had come in first, and she looked so cool and sweet in her straight green linen dress, with its little girl's round collar under her soft chin, that I just couldn't resist stopping her to ask if she had decided to marry Mr. Amidown or Mr. Bridges.

"When I am engaged," said she, as sweet and cool as ever, "you'll certainly be the first to know it."

Just then Jeremy came by.

"Oh, Mr. —Smyth," I called to him. "This is the young lady you were asking about. Miss Devon, may I introduce Mr. Smith, the janitor?"

But Jeremy never said a word; just bowed and held the door open for Ann to go out.

This time, though, it was different. I heard about it from one of the mail boys. Jeremy marched into her cubbyhole next to Bailey Bridge's office as bold as if he had some business there. He stopped in front of her desk.

"You ought not to be here?" he said.

Ann Devon lifted a little pointed face full of surprise and disapproval.

"Why?"

"Because I say so," said Jeremy, and out he marched again.

"The boy's getting uppish," Marilla said when I told her about it.

He was, too. Only the other night, when I happened to be stopping outside the study door where Marilla and Jeremy were, I heard him say quite loudly and distinctly, "You're wrong. This is the way to manage it." It takes a brave man any day to tell Marilla that she is mistaken.

Jay Smith began his work in the inspection room on a Monday. At first he did barrel inspection, but he did it so fast and accurately that a week later he was promoted to point inspection, which is a more demanding matter. On Thursday he inspected more points than Timothy Peebles, who had worked at the same bench for forty years and might be heard at any hour bragging that no one ever matched him. There was a great uproar over it; they had all Jeremy's points reinspected to see if he had missed anything, and he had not.

Light, Dark and Ribbon Christmas Cake

By:
KATHARINE BAKER

AS FRUIT CAKES keep so well, and in fact taste better after standing a few weeks, it is a good plan to make them well in advance of the Christmas season. It gives a very comfortable feeling, too, to have the Christmas cakes all baked and ready for the holiday. There are always so many little last-minute things to think of when Christmas is nearer that it is nice to have at least one thing done—long before.

LIGHT FRUIT CAKE.

4 eggs
2 cups white sugar
1 cup butter
3 cups flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 lb. seeded raisins
1 cup cocoanut
½ lb. finely cut figs
½ lb. mixed peel
1 small bottle red cherries
1 small bottle green cherries
½ cup milk

Cream the butter and add sugar slowly and beaten eggs. Beat together until light. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together and to this add the chopped raisins, the shredded cocoanut, the peel cut in thin slices, and the cherries drained and dried slightly in the oven and cut in small pieces. Add flour and fruit mixture alternately with the milk to the first mixture. Blend thoroughly. Bake in two loaf tins in a moderate oven for one hour.

RIBBON FRUIT CAKE.

Black Part.

1½ cups sugar
1 cup butter
6 egg yolks
2 cups flour
1½ lbs. raisins
1 lb. currants
½ lb. citron
¼ cup nut meats
2-3 cup vinegar
1 teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon allspice

Cream the sugar, add the butter and cream together until well blended. Add eggs and beat well. Use a little of the flour to dredge the fruit and nuts. Sift together the remainder of the flour, spices and soda. Add flour mixture and vinegar alternately. Blend well, add fruit and nuts.

White Part.

6 egg whites
1 cup white sugar
½ cup butter
½ cup milk or cream
2½ cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 lb. finely chopped almonds
½ lb. citron
½ lb. cocoanut
1 teaspoon rose water
1 teaspoon lemon juice
small slice of orange peel

Cream the butter and add sugar gradually. Add milk or cream. Sift dry ingredients and mix with nuts and fruit. Add to first mixture. Mix well, add flavouring and lastly fold in stiffly beaten egg whites.

Bake in a greased tin, putting in first a layer of black, then a layer of white, and so on until all is used. Bake in a slow oven.

RICH FRUIT CAKE.

1¼ lb. butter
1¼ lbs. light brown sugar
13 eggs
2 teaspoons cinnamon
1 teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon mace
2 lbs. currants
3 lbs. raisins
½ lb. dates
½ lb. almonds
1 lb. citron peel
½ cup grape juice
½ cup strong coffee

Prepare the fruit the day before you plan to bake your cake. Pick over, wash and dry the currants; wash, seed and cut the raisins; wash, dry and stone the dates; cut peel into very thin slices; blanch and chop almonds. Mix fruit and nuts and dredge with one-third of the measured flour.

In mixing the cake, first cream the butter thoroughly. Add sifted sugar slowly; beat until very light. Add ¼ of flour and spices mixed and sifted together. Add egg yolks, well beaten, then stiffly beaten whites. Beat the mixture until very light. Add fruit juice and coffee alternately with the remaining flour; beat well. Add fruit 1-3 at a time. Pour mixture into pans which have been carefully lined with three thicknesses of paper, of which the top layer has been buttered. Do not fill the pans more than 2-3 full. Bake in a very slow oven three to four hours or steam 2½ hours and bake one hour.

Winchester 100 Club Guests At Rotary Club's Ladies' Night

Fine Gathering in Community Hall Hears Address by J. Owen Herity, Rotary Governor of Belleville.

Ladies' Night of Chesterville Rotary Club was attended by 88 persons when members of the 100 Club of Winchester and Rotarians of Ottawa, Belleville and Hull met with their ladies' in the Community Hall, Tuesday evening with J. Owen Herity, Belleville, Governor of Rotary District 168, as the guest speaker. One of the features of the meeting was the welcoming into Rotary by Mr. Herity of three local men, Dr. A. B. Clayton, John Fleming and Bernard Allen.

Following the toast to The King by the President, Dr. S .H. Hutt, Norman Foster, secretary of the Ottawa club, proposed the toast to the ladies, and at the conclusion of his humourous remarks, "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" was sung by the assembly. Mrs. R. C. Tait, in her reply, urged husband and wives to continue their sweethearting through the years, for thus are the divorce courts robbed. The ladies then sang the old sweetheart song as they faced their husbands.

Brief reports were given of local Rotary activities by O. L. King, P. S. and Rev. R. C. Tait, and members of the local club were given their Red Cross membership cards and buttons.

Miss Rody Brown, of Ottawa, sang two solos and gave two humourous monologues that were very well received. Mrs. H. Brown played the piano accompaniments.

Community singing was led by O. L. King with Jack Morris at the piano.

Mr. Herity, who has spent many years of tireless effort in Rotary, was introduced by Rev. Dr. James Semple of Belleville, who stated Mr. Herity was born in Hastings county, taught school in that county and graduated from Toronto University. Since then he has been engaged in newspaper work, being for some time editor of The Belleville Ontario.

Both men praised Rev. R. C. Tait for his example of community service they had known for years back. It was through Mr. Tait's efforts that Mr. Herity was able to organize Campbellford Rotary club 11 years ago, and which is now one of the finest of the small town clubs.

Mr. Herity congratulated Chesterville and Winchester on their fine villages which he inspected during the afternoon, and on their service clubs. He liked the idea of the two places coming together for such a meeting. Small towns were the subject of his recent address to the Toronto Rotary club which is the finest large centre club in the world. Cities have their advantages, the speaker said, but such growth brings its evils. He cited the instance of Toronto where, as its population increased 108 per cent, crime grew also—by 643 per cent—in spite of one of the finest police systems.

Samll towns need a spirit of enterprise, of civic pride, similar to that experienced in western centres where the welfare of the community is of vital concern and there are few kickers.

Mr. Herity is inclined to the poetics, and many of his points and humourous stories were sent home in rhyme.

Referring to the present Great War, the visiting governor reaffirmed that Rotary is pacifist, but only in the same manner as Great Britain. Rotary does not wish to wage war, but neither does it want peace at any price. "War is hell, but there are evils greater than war, and one of these is slavery. And if we lose this war, we will be slaves to a most ruthless power," was the conviction of the speaker.

The speaker told of the funeral in Hamilton of 10-year-old Margaret Haywood, the first Canadian casualty of this war, who died from wounds sustained when the Athenia was torpedoed without warning on Sept. 3, as he declared the governments of democracy have had to choose between war or slavery. Then he closed a very interesting talk with a poem read on July 1, 1900, by Joseph Chamberlain, father of Britain's present Prime Minister, that told of the valour of Britain's sons across the seas and their willingness to serve the Empire.

James Smith thank Mr. Herity on behalf of the local club and guests. J. D. Stewart expressed the appreciation of the Winchester 100 Club, stating they always enjoyed coming to Chesterville for any function and complimented the village on its Community Hall. Mr. Gail, of the Hull club, spoke briefly, and D. Sims, president of Ottawa Rotary, declared that while he had visited the local club on several occasions, he thought this meeting was the most enjoyable.
