After the reading of the minutes, the treasurer gave a satisfactory report of a concert held in the Community Hall, May 5.

It was decided, provided enough of the members would join, to organize a class to study the St. John's Ambulance course, and Miss Elizabeth Ruddy was named as leader.

The W. I. was pleased to accept an invitation from Mrs. Gray, of 41 Pine street, Cornwall, to hold a meeting at her home, and the members will meet with Mrs. Gray on June 9.

Police Make Second Arrest Morrisburg Explosion-Fire

Isidore Hutt to Appear With Lloyd Barkley Before Magistrate McCormick Tomorrow.

Second arrest in connection with the explosions which wrecked part of the Merkley Building at Morrisburg on May 9, Isidore Hutt, young Morrisburg labourer, was taken into custody Wednesday morning by Constable Claire Biccum, charged with arson.

Lloyd Barkley, young butcher whose store and residence were in the building, was taken into custody a week ago in connection with the fire. Police declined to say what discoveries led to the arrest of Hutt, but it followed investigations by Fire Inspector Edward Desjardin, of Ottawa; Provincial Constable Frank Rose and Constable Biccum.

Hutt was taken to Cornwall and was lodged in the counties' jail. He will appear before Magistrate McCormick tomorrow, but police said he would probably be remanded, along with Barkley.

Hallville Pastor Chairman Dundas-Grenville Presbytery

Rev. Donald Morrison Succeeds Rev. E. Lacey, Brinston.—Session Held At Heckston.

Rev. Donald Morrison, of Hallville United church, was chosen chairman of the Dundas-Grenville Presbytery at the meeting of ministers and laymen held in St. Andrew's United church at Heckston. Mr. Morrison succeeds Rev. E. Lacey, of Brinston, chairman for the past two years. Rev. George Smith, Morrisburg, was re-appointed secretary-treasurer, and an address by Rev. Dr. W. M. Munro, secretary of the Montreal and Ottawa Conference with election of delegates to the General Council of the church at Toronto and the naming of lay delegates to the conference at Montreal were among the main items of the agenda for the day.

The morning session was opened with devotions led by Rev. L. M. Somerville, minister of Heckston church. Rev. E. Lacey had charge of the preliminary business and Rev. R. Douglas Smith, of Morrisburg, was appointed secretary pro-tem in the absence of Rev. Geoge Smith, who is ill. A letter was read from Rev. W. A. Dempsey, of Maynard, who asked advice regarding a change in pastorates. A request from the Morewood congregation, signed by A. B. Allison and Enest McConnell, asked permission of Presbytery to place a mortgage on the church property amounting to more than $10,000 in order to pay of notes and other accumulated indebtedness.

Before retiring from the chair, Mr. Lacey thanked the members for their loyal support during his term of office with particular reference to the kindness of W. L. Merrill, of Morrisburg, at whose residence executive meetings had been held.

Chairman-elect Morrison thanked the court for the honour bestowed as he assumed his new duties as head of the Presbytery. Dicussion on the selection of commissioners to the General Council was participated in by Rev. R. S. Smith, of Elma, who said: "I think we need new blood in the Council," and by Rev. W R. Johnston, of South Mountain, who was of the opinion that the changing of commissioners left the business of the church in standing committees and said, "we are being governed by these committees who bring their reports to the General Council where they are adopted." Rev. E. Lacey, of Brinston, was chosen ministerial commissioner to the General Council, and from the laymen, W. L. Merrill, of Morrisburg, was selected.

Alternates were Mr. Morrison and C. E. Mills, of Iroquois.

Crysler Man Suffers Injuries As Car Collides With Bridge

Carl Burd Taken to Ottawa For X-ray Examination.—On Highway 31 South of Winchester Springs.

When his automobile crashed into the cement abutment of a bridge on Highway 31, two miles south of Winchester Springs, at 1.30 a.m., Sunday, Carl Burd, of Crysler, suffered injuries to his hip and right knee.

He was taken to the home of J. E. Henderson by Albert Johnston passing motorist, and received attention from Dr. Clair J. Locke. Later he was taken to Ottawa for an X-ray examination and brought back to Winchester.

The car, badly damaged, turned on its side in the road, Provincial Constable Eugene Rose, of Morrisburg, reported, and before it could be moved was struck by an automobile driven north on the highway by Charles Shaver, of Inkerman. Mr. Shaver was not injured but his car was damaged, the officer reported.

Mr. Burd was proceeding south when he struck the cement bridge. He told the officer something went wrong with the steering gear.

Oxford Farmer's Absence Causes Widespread Search

Police and neighbours joined last night in a widespread search for Fred Gregory, 60-year-old farmer of Oxford Mills, who is missing from his farm and for whose safety there is considerable anxiety. No trace of the farmer, who was last seen at five o'clock Tuesday afternoon, has been found when the search was abandoned at a late hour.

Mr. Gregory had driven to the farm of Henry Newans, a mile from his home, to pay a visit during the afternoon. He returned home, stabled his horse and set out to bring in the cows for milking. Anxiety was first aroused when he failed to come in for supper.

Authorities at Kemptville were notified, and provincial police were asked to search for Mr. Gregory. He had been in poor health for some time and it is feared he collapsed some. where on his own pastures.

RATS' IT'S A SECRET.

Andrew Hutchinson, Ayton (Berwickshire, England) who in 16 months has caught 60,000 rats in Yorkshire, is a man with a secret—for he does not mesmerize them, neither does he use dogs, ferrets, poison nor traps —and he guarantees extermination.

Andrew comes from a rat-catching family, and his secret method—well, he calls it enticement.

He puts something on a glove he wears on his right hand and places it near the holes, then kills the rats as they get up to come out. He has destroyed 182 in one-and-a-quarter hours.

Nightmare for Alberta Investors

An Explanation of the Recently-Encated Laws of the Social-Credit Province Which Really Allow Repudiation of Mortgages or Debts.

BY A COMBINATION of new enactments, the provisions of which are closely inter-related, the Alberta Government, at its latest session, in reality provided for debt-cancellation upon a grand scale; it effectually deprived creditors of their rights in the courts; it arbitrarily provided for the total cancellation of certain mortgages, undermined the ecurity upon which thousands of life insurance policies is based, and endangered the invested savings of people in Canada and elsewhere.

The legislation is embodied mainly in three statutes, with other lesser enactments of similar character. The three main measures are:

The Securities Tax Act, 1938.

The Home Owners Security Act.

The Limitations of Actions Act 1935; Amendment Act 1938.

The Securities Tax Act imposes a tax of two per cent on the principal sum owing on mortgages, even including those owned by the Canadian Farm Loan Board which is operated by the Dominion Government. The effect is to place the tax upon the lenders—and, surprisingly, it is indicated in returns published in the Canada Year Book that individuals, rather than corporations, own the largest number of mortgages on Alberta property.

Notwithstanding any provision in any mortgage to the contrary, the tax cannot be passed on to the mortgagor.

The tax is payable June 1st, 1938.

Failing payment by that date, a penalty is provided, of five per cent per month—60 per cent per annum.

In addition, all owners of mortgages touching land in Alberta—even though the Alberta holdings may be but an insignificant part of the whole covered by the mortgage, must file returns by June 1, 1938, in elaborate and detailed form, giving particulars of all mortgages touching Alberta land—under penalty of a fine of $10 a day in respect of each mortgage.

If any mortgagee omits to file a return, the penalty he thus incurs amounts to $10 a day, or $3,650 a year, in the case of each mortgage so omitted.

More than 20,000 Alberta mortgages are owned by corporations and according to Canada Year Book returns, more than that number are owned by individuals. Failure to make these elaborately-detailed returns by June 1, 1938—which is a physical impossibility — renders the holders of the 20,000 mortgages aforesaid, liable to penalties (at the rate of $10 a day per mortgage) aggregating the preposterous figure of $73,000,000 a year.

This is intended to operate — and does operate—as an effective barrier against the lender's testing his rights in the courts. To make such a test, it would be necessary to refuse to pay the tax or make the return, whereupon the Provincial Treasurer would sue to collect, and the mortgagee would resist the Provincial Treasurer's claim in the courts. That would take time — with the penalties steadily mounting.

To get a final decision from the Privy Council would take at least one year. No lender can lightly face such fantastic and unconscionable penalties as an adverse court decision under such circumstances would entail.

These harsh and arbitrary provisions, and the short time allowed for their fulfilment, effectively shut mortgagees out of the courts and deprive them of their legal rights as citizens.

Much of the money lent on mortgages in Alberta represents investments held by Life Insurance companies to secure the payment of life insurance policies all over the Dominion. Other sums represent the savings of individuals here and in Great Britain. Still other sums represent investments of estates funds by Trust companies.

The Home Owners Security Act.—Under this act, no mortgage creditor may foreclose on an urban home, in town or village, without making a present of $2,000 to the person whose home is foreclosed, regardless of the value of the property involved. An instance follows: If a man has purchased, say, a property worth $1,000, on which he has paid perhaps $100 and declines to pay any more, the mortgage cannot be foreclosed for the $900 except by paying $2,000 into court — to be paid over by the court to the debtor, if the foreclosure is granted.

This act also exempts what is known as the "home quarter-section" of any farm from foreclosure—virtually carves it out of the mortgage. Thus, if one man farms a quarter-section only (160 acres), which he bought for $3,000, paying $300 and giving a mortgage for the $2,700—the act, in effect, makes him the outright owner of the 160 acres without paying another cent. If another man farms a whole section or more, the 160 acres on which his farm buildings stand is exempt from foreclosure. The best and most valuable part of the mortgagee's security is removed arbitrarily from the mortgage, and action permanently barred.

The Limitations of Actions Act 1935 Amendment Act 1938—In the operation of this act, action to realize on any debt incurred prior to 1936 must be taken before July 1, 1940. Thus, if a loan were made, or any debt incurred, secured or otherwise, prior to 1936, not maturing until say 1946 (or any time after mid-1940) the debt would be statute-barred and extinguished by July 1, 1940.

The effect of the statute is to force creditors to seek renewals before 1940 arrives; and if the debtor is wise enough to sit tight and refuse to make a renewal agreement, the creditor has no recourse except to go to the Debt Adjustment Board of Alberta — a government creature—for a permit to commence proceedings prior to July 1, 1940. No such proceedings may be initiated without such permit from said Board. Experience indicates that unless the creditor reduced the debt to a point that will be satisfactory to the Alberta Government, such permit would not be granted.

Even the Canadian Farm Loans Boards — operated by the Dominion Government, is not excepted from this act.

This indivates the startling character of the legislation which, really, constitutes a wholesale cancellation or repudiation of debts. Its effect upo individual, corporate, provincial and national credit cannot but be profound. If such legislation can be permitted in Alberta and is copied by other provinces, all debt-morality goes by the board and the national credit must inevitably be impaired.

MASTS AND SAILS.

Interesting Facts About Our Dominion of Canada.

THE DAYS are gone when ships which had crossed the Atlantic and rounded the Horn took away with them to Europe from the Pacific Coast of North America, tall masts and spars of Oregon Pine lashed to the bulwarks for safe keeping on the long and stormy passage. These were treasures from the troves for the fighting navies and the peaceful merchant fleets.

Yet there are still sailors who can run their easting and westing down. And so masts and spars are still required, probably always will be needed so long as winds blow and men go to sea. In 1933 the factory value of those which were peeled and trimmed to shape in Canada was only $1,600 but in 1934 it had risen to over $5,000. Of course masts are a commodity with which factory production bears a very small relation. The fisherman who builds his own boat usually gets out his masts and spars himself.

Probably not to such an extent, yet the same applies to the manufacture of sails. Many fishermen fashion their sail from the cloth got from the factory. There is no record of these, but the factory production of sails in 1933 was $21,00, and has since increased to $23,000. We imported sails in 1935 to the value of $5,000.

The automobile is a "soda-water plant"! Two of the exhaust products —water and carbon dioxide— f cooled and mixed would make excellent soda water.

Cornwall Police Determine Jail Governor a Suicide

Acid Treatment Reveals Trade Name On Rifle and Purchase Traced.—Missing Money is Found.

Cornwall.—Ten days of intensive investigation have convinced authorities Ralph A. Cook, former governor of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry jail, took his own life, Police Chief Fred Seymour said today.

Cook was found dead on the floor of his garage May 8 with two bullet wounds in his chest. A small-calibre rifle, unidentified by Cook's famliy, was lying near the body.

The rifle was traced to a Toronto department store where it was listed as sold to "R. A. Cook, Manistee Mich.", Chief Seymour revealed. Although identifying marks had been filed from the rifle, its trade name was brought out by acid treatment.

Dr. E. R. Frankish, Ontario pathologist, reported metallic filings similar to those scraped from the rifle were found in Cook's trouser cuffs. He also found unburned powder on Cook's vest, indicating the bullets were fired from short range.

Cook was known to have purchased a file in a store here the day before his death.

At the time of the mysterious shooting, Cook was believed by his family to have been carrying about $200 in cash. A similar amount was found in the house after a long search, Chief Seymour said. Cook's wallet was found in a garden about 100 feet from the garage.

Hon. T. B. McQuesten Makes Plea For Holiday Safety

"Safe and Sane 24th" Applies to Steering Wheels as Well as Pinwheels.—Rules Few and Easy.

Toronto, May 18.—An urgent appeal for a "safe and sane" holiday week-end was issued here today by Hon. T. B. McQuesten, Ontario minister of highways, when he announced that his department would once more conduct a summer-time advertising and publicity campaign with the object of cutting down the appalling number of deaths and injuries which put all Ontario in mourning last May 24th week-end.

"It's not very many years ago," said Mr. McQuesten, "that the only important worry we had over the '24th' was whether our children would come through with nothing more serious than a scorched finger. Strong public opinion and the determination to make the Queen's Birthday 'safe and sane' has practically eliminated the horrors we used to witness each year from dangerous fireworks displays. If we can make children act with safety and caution when they have a firecracker in their hands, it seems logical to assume we can do the same with grown-ups when they have a steering-wheel in their hands."

Most people, Mr. McQuesten pointed out, have little difficulty in keeping the Ten Commandments. They are few, easy to remember, and any violations are quickly recognized, at least by the violator.

"Why, then," he queried, "should it be any more difficult to observe the few, simple rules that are designed to save our own lives and the lives of others who use our streets and highways. There are fewer than ten, and at least as easy to understand. And there can never be any doubt in a driver's mind whether or not he has violated a traffic rule."

He quickly outlined the eight safe-driving "canons" which are incorporated in the advertisement currently appearing in the Ontario press: drive at a safe speed, keep to the right, never pass on a hill or curve or when the view is obstructed, don't park on the highway, signal in plenty of time before you turn, observe all road signs and signals, be sure your car is in safe driving condition, and most emphatically, if you drink, don't drive.

"There is nothing vague or difficult to understand about any of these rules," Mr. McQuesten insisted. "Anyone who has been given a license to drive is capable of following these principles. The only thing that is needed to make our highways safe is a determination on the part of every driver that he will carry out every rule of safety all the time. It sounds simple—and it's just as simple as it sounds. If we can teach our children to handle Roman candles and pinwheels safely, we should be able to teach ourselves to handle steering-wheels safely."

Old Home Week Association

Chesterville, Ont., May 6th, 1938

DEAR FRIEND,—

In a recent letter we announced that an "Old Home Week" celebration would be held in Chesterville from Saturday, July 30, to Wednesday, August 3, and we invited you to be our visitor and meet with your old friends and acquaintances.

Chesterville people are whole-heartedly preparing to welcome and entertain all visitors. We will be disappointed if you are not among them.

The old town will be in gala attire and no effort is being spared to make our celebration a worthy and happy event.

We are having a Memorial Souvenir book printed which will contain a history of the Village, biographies of the outstanding people who have been identified with the making of Chesterville and references to all the principal events, institutions, occurrences, etc., of the past years.

We hope that this beautifully prepared, profusely illustrated volume will be a source of pleasure and pride to those fortunate enough to secure one.

Every person who becomes a member of our Old Home Week Association will be provided with a Souvenir Badge bearing his or her name and address, thus avoiding the necessity of an introduction.

Membership tickets, including badge and book, will be provided for One Dollar and Fifty Cents. This entitles the holder to a draw for a Seventy-five Dollar Prize. Membership and badge, without the book, will be provided for One Dollar.

The Committee in charge urge that you reply at an early date as to whether or not you wish badge and book or badge only. It is important that we should know this so that we can estimate the number of books and badges to provide.

Even if, unfortunately, you cannot be with us during OLD HOME WEEK we know you will want either badge or book or both.

Be assured that the various committees are sparing no time, thought or expense in preparations for your home coming and to assure you a good time during Old Home Week while in your old home town, Chesterville.

You will have no cause for regret at this great home coming as one of our visitors from July 30 to August 3.

Please write the Secretary today. We will be glad to hear from you.

Most sincerely yours,

W. H. CASSELMAN,
Secretary.

Pride in One's Vocation Great Asset to Happiness

W. Abra, Prominent Ottawa Architect, Gives Vocational Talk Before Chesterville Rotary Club.

Pride in one's vocation is one of the main foundation stones of Rotary said W. J. Abra, prominent Ottawa architect, who spoke before the Chesterville Rotary club at its Tuesday evening luncheon. "It's a great thing to have pride in your job—both for you and your vocation," he said in his talk on his own classification, architecture. "Some of the finest addresses I have ever heard have been given by members speaking before their club on their vocations," he said. Mr. Abra gave a very clear explanation of the duties and responsibilies of the architect whom he termed "the unknown builder."

Careful planning and supervision of construction are the important points in building. Quotations were given from the Book of Genesis of specifications for building. This vocation holds a unique position among the arts. One can live without music, without the works of the great painters, poetry, and even the press, radio or the movie—but it is impossible to exist in modern civilization without encountering the result of the architect's plans.

An architect's office is not a storeroom of blueprints where the prospective builder may obtain any plan he desires, but rather the architect must know what is required and the limitation of spending. Each set of plans is an individual task and has to receive careful consideration. When the sum to be expended on building is determined, the architect must keep his specifications within that limit and also provide a structure that will please his client.

Points to be carefully considered after an architect has been chosen, if the best results are to obtained, were given a, first, Trust your architect. Many a job has been spoiled by ill-timed suggestions and by friends who may have meant well.

2. Make your needs clear to the architect. He must have an accurate knowledge of your needs and limitations in order to serve properly.

3. Have the preliminary plans correct. It is easy to change the first pencil sketches, but not so with the plans after they have been advanced and the specifications made.

4. Secure a good contractor. The lowest bidder is not always the best bargain. The architect is supposed to get a full 100 cents out of the dollar for the owner, but don't expect $1.10. With a good contractor he will protect you and give 100 per cent value in the finished product.

5. His office is not a plan factory or warehouse. He gives his full services, supplies working drawings to the builder as well as the blueprints and specifications.

The architect assists in the choosing of the contractor, gives detailed working drawings to him, and supervises the building issues orders for payments as the work progresses and again protects the owner.

There is a good future for the young man wishing to take up the study of architecture if he is willing to devote himself steadfastly for a number of years, serve his probation in a good architect's office until he can successfully try the requirements of the Ontario registration board.

Mr. Abra is chairman of the Ottawa chapter and was a double prize winner in the recent competitions conducted by the Dominion and Provincial Goverments for low-cost housing plans.

Harry Binks, president-elect of the Ottawa Rotary Club, spoke of plans for the charter night set for Wednesday, June 1. It is expected the Community Hall will be filled to capacity with visiting Rotarians and that the night will be the big event in the history of the local club. He also spoke of the wonderful entertainment given at the conference of district 171 at Elmira, N.Y.

Also present were W. Beatty, also of Ottawa, who is in charge of the plans for the addition to Chesterville High school; and Rev. Jno. Macaskill, of Morewood, and Mr. Geo. Barbara, of Alexandria, guests respectively of Rev. R. C. Tait and L. E. David.

The three Ottawa Rotarians are now considered old-timers as they have been with their club since it was organized in 1916.

The local club will not meet next Tuesday as the meeting falls on Victoria Day, and the next meeting will be charter night, Wednesday, June 1. The speaker for this event will be E. Leslie Pidgeon, of Montreal.

The Record gives another of the songs that were the hits when Dad and Mom were gay young things —to bring back fond memories.

When You And I Were Young, Maggie

I wandered today to the hill, Maggie,
To watch the scene below,
The creek and the old rusty mill, Maggie,
Where we sat in the long, long, ago.
The green grove is gone from the hill, Maggie,
Where first the daisies sprung;
The old rusty mill is still, Maggie,
Since you and I were young.

Chorus:

And now we are aged and gray, Maggie,
The trials of life nearly done,
Let us sing of the days that are gone, Maggie
When you and I were young.

A city so silent and lone, Maggie,
Where the young and the gay and the best,
In polished white mansions of stone, Maggie,
Have each found a place of rest,
Is built where the birds used to play, Maggie,
And join in the songs that were sung,
For we sang just as gay as they, Maggie,
When you and I were young.

They say I am feeble with age, Maggie,
My steps are less sprightly than then;
My face is a well written page, Maggie,
But time alone was the pen.
They say we are aged and gray, Maggie,
As spray by the white breakers flung,
But to me you're as fair as you were, Maggie,
When you and I were young.

NUTS IN MAY.

"HERE WE GO gathering nuts in May!" Of course you remember the game you used to play at school and the song that goes with it. How about gathering a few cocoanut recipes while we are at it just to prove there really are nuts in May.

COCOANUT CREAM PIE.

This is always a great favourite, especially with the men.

2 cups hot milk
3 tablespoons cornstarch
½ teaspoon salt
1-3 cup sugar
¼ cup cold milk
2 eggs
2 teaspoons butter
¾ teaspoon vanilla
½ cup cocoanut

Mix cornstarch, sugar and salt with cold milk. Add gradually to the hot milk in a double boiler. Stir until thick; cover and cook 20 minutes. Add egg yolks well beaten; cook three minutes longer. Remove from heat, add butter, vanilla and cocoanut. Pour into a baked pie shell. Top with meringue made from the egg whites. Brown in a slow oven.

COCOANUT COOKIES.

½ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs

SURGERY PROVIDES REST FOR TUBERCULAR LUNG.

A PIMPLE on the skin is a good example of inflammation due to a germ. Pain, redness and swelling are the typical symptoms of inflammation, to be followed, in some cases, by the formation of pus.

Inside the body, the various disease germs set up inflammations, which have much in common, but with distinctive characteristics depending on which germ is responsible.

The inflammation of the lungs, which we know as tuberculosis, is caused by the action of the tubercle bacillus; it tends to break down the lung structure so that cavities, small or large, are formed.

We recover from an inflammation, tuberculosis or other, when healing takes place. It may be said that all treatment of the tuberculous is planned to place the diseased or inflamed part at rest. Why? Because rest is one of the trinity of the healing graces. Without sufficient rest, healing is impossible.

A broken leg can be splinted in a plaster cast, and so placed at rest until the bones heal. But the lungs must move in order that we may live and breathe. Rest in bed may so limit the demands made on the lungs as to enable them to rest enough to ensure breath. This is what has happened in those thousands of cases who have in years past, come out of sanatorium with their disease arrested.

Unfortunately, this form of rest is not sufficient to allow for healing in all cases. It was for the cases who did not improve under bed rest that surgical therapy was first suggested. Surgery is now widely used to collapse the diseased lung, for when it is collapsed, it is given complete rest with the best chance for healing.

Today collapse therapy, or surgical treatment of one kind or another, is recognized as one of the great advances of our age in the treatment of tuberculosis No longer is surgery the last resort, but rather an early choice. Its value depends upon a proper selection of cases suitable for such treatment. It is not a cure-all The earlier cases are recognized, the better the opportunity to use collapse therapy at the time when it can do the most good.

The forces that fight against tuberculosis have been greatly reinforced these past few years by the development of such a powerful weapon as collapse therapy.

Misunderstood.

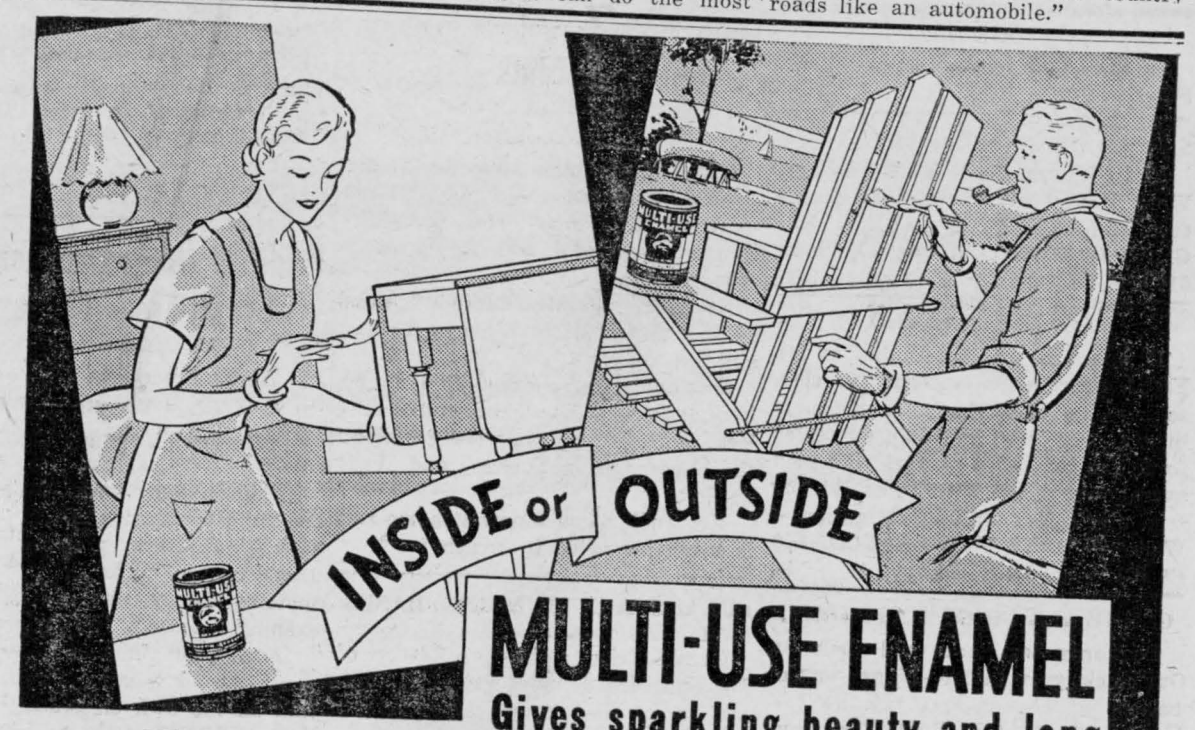

At the conclusion of the Sunday morning service, the affable visiting clergyman shook hands with a stranger and said: "Are you a regular communicant?"

"Oh, yes," answered the young man, "I take the 9.35 every morning into town."

Dignity Acknowledged.

"So you don't share the general indignation toward the railways?"

"No," answered Farmer Corntossel, "I have always felt that a locomotive was entitled to a great deal of credit for sticking to the track instead of snorting up and down the country roads like an automobile."

MAY 24TH DRIVE SAFELY!

Last year the holiday traffic on our streets and highways ran up a terrible toll of seven killed and 215 injured in 145 accidents! We must not have a repetition this year.

One thoughtless move on your part may bring tragedy into your own or somebody else's home. Before you take the wheel, therefore, resolve to use the utmost care on the highway, and to observe every traffic rule.

—Drive at a safe speed at all times.

—Keep to the right hand side of the road.

—Never pass another vehicle on a hill or curve, or any point where the view is obstructed.

—Do not park on the highway.

—Signal the car behind you in plenty of time before you turn.

—Observe all road signs and signals.

—See that your car is in safe driving condition.

In the name of humanity drive safely on this, the first holiday of summer. Help make the highways safe for yourself and others.

If you drink, don't drive

The hand of the law is dealing severely with drunken drivers. The maximum penalty for driving while drunk is three months' imprisonment. If you have taken even one drink, don't drive.

ONTARIO DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS

LUCY AMES HOSTESS

AS MISS LUELLA AMES rocked thoughtfully in the bright morning sunlight, she re-read the note in her hand.

"Now, why shouldn't Rhoda come?" she murmured to herself. "It's way past housecleaning, and there isn't a thing to keep her at home. And I should think she'd be tired out, and lonesome, too, after all the fuss of having Annie married and going away. I thought I was doin' her a favour, askin' her here to stay—not but what I'd be glad enough to have her, for I do like company, even if it is a lot of bother trying to hurry up the work so's to stay with 'em. I never was very great at hurrying, but I don't neglect company, if I do say it myself."

Her glance fell again on her cousin's note.

"And she wants me to make her a visit. Well, if she can refuse my invitation, I —"

Miss Ames stopped suddenly and rose from her chair.

"I will go! That's just what I'll do! I'm just going to have it settled right up. If I haven't been treating company right, I want to know it; I guess I'm not too old to learn. And, come to think of it, Rhoda Barstow isn't the first one I've invited here that did not seem especially anxious to stay longer, though she is the first one who ever said no, right up and down. There were the Barnard girls and the Ryders and"—Miss Luella sighed—"even Tom and Evelyn. I'm just going to find out what's the trouble."

All the forenoon Miss Luella moved briskly around the sunny, old-fashioned kitchen, preparing for her "visit." Since her father's death a year and a half ago she had lived alone with Malachi, the big cat, in the homestead. She was a splendidly-resolute woman, was Luella, with humourous gray eyes and a large, generous mouth.

Early that afternoon Miss Ames drove her mare Cherry down the long, windy road that did double duty as the principal street of the town and the dividing line between Marshall and West Marshall, where Rhoda lived. Cherry was hitched into a very modern little cart, with rubber tires; Cherry herself was a haughty, high-spirited little creature, and Miss Ames drove her with a sense of secret joy. The cart and the mare constituted her greatest—in fact, her only—extravagance.

Rhoda was sitting by the window, sewing, when Miss Ames drove up, and before Cherry was fairly hitched she was at the door.

"Luella Ames! I declare, I am glad to see you'" she exclaimed heartily. "I was telling Mrs. Parker yesterday, I don't know when I've wanted to see anybody so, and have a good visit —" She stopped with a little gasp of dismay. Luella was eyeing her grimly.

"You didn't exactly jump at the chance to make one," Miss Ames Ames remarked.

"I—I couldn't very well come, Luella, with Annie just gone, and so much cleaning—"

Luella's gaze wandered incredulously around the shining little house, and then her humourous gray eyes fastened themselves on Mrs. Barstow's blushing face.

"Don't you bother to tell me all that, Rhoda Barstow," she said. "I'm not a child, and I guess I can stand to be told the truth. I've been thinking it all over, and I've decided there must be something wrong, and I ought to know what it is."

The blushes faded slowly from Rhoda's cheeks. What on earth was Luella going to suggest?

Miss Ames went on: "You're not the only one, Rhoda, that doesn't scream with joy to get an invitation to spent a few days with Malachi and me. There was my nephew Tom, and Evelyn. They were just married, and they lived in a flat,—Tom isn't getting a big salary yet,—so I invited 'em up to spend Tom's vacation with me, but they stayed only half of their week. I've forgotten what Tom said. It was some flimsy excuse, about like yours."

Mrs. Barstow's guilty blush deepened, and she stirred nervously.

"Then there were the two Barnard girls," Luella continued relentlessly. "After old Mrs. Barnard died I invited 'em over to stay as long as they could—all winter, if they would, for I always liked those girls, and I thought they liked me. And how long do you suppose they stayed?" She paused tragically. "Three days! Said they had to put away their winter flannels. It was just about the same way with the Ryder twins. And the funniest part of it is, these people are all just as anxious to have me come and see them as if they had stayed a year, and enjoyed it, too."

Miss Ames straightened her tall figure and surveyed her cousin sternly. "Now, Rhoda Barstow, I ought to know what's the trouble, and I'm depending on you to tell me."

Mrs. Barstow eyed Luella for a moment; then her good-natured mouth straightened into a line of resolve.

"I will tell you!" she cried. "I always thought if you only had a hint you'd understand." She hesitated for a moment. "You're sure it isn't going to hurt your feelings?"

Miss Ames smiled grimly. "No more than it does to have people go home before their visit's half over. But I may as well tell you, Rhoda, I have a kind of suspicion what it is. I've always tried to let my work go, so's to sit with 'em if I could, but I've always been pretty busy, and I'm afraid—Rhoda Barstow!" Miss Ames' voice sank to a horrified whisper. "Rhoda Barstow, does my company go home because I neglect them?"

"Neglect them!" Cousin Rhoda's answer came so quickly it sounded like a small explosion. "Neglect them! That's just it! You don't neglect them half enough."

There was a dead silence.

"There now, Rhoda," said Luella kindly, after a moment, "don't be afraid to tell. It ain't going to hurt me much, I guess. You go right on."

Mrs. Barstow was half laughing, half crying. "But I have told you. That's it. You don't neglect them enough. It's just as hard work for folks to be trying to seem entertained and amused, when they're all tired out and want to be doing something else, as it is for to try to entertain them."

Slowly the bewilderment faded from Luella's gray eyes, and she burst into a laugh so contagious, so full of humour, that her cousin joined her.

"To think Ive been to so much trouble just making a nuisance of myself!" Luella gasped helplessly, as she put on her rubbers. "No, I can't stay, thank you, Rhoda. I've got to go home and get Malachi some supper — and write my invitations — " She trailed off into another burst of laughter. "I shan't ask you to visit me, Rhoda, till I've practiced a while. I'm not going to begin on my teacher. But I'm going to have some company if I can get it."

A few days later young Mrs. Thos. Ames received a letter that puzzled her. It read:

Dear Niece Evelyn: I've been planning for a number of weeks to make you and Tom a little visit, but there are so many changes to make to get there, at the Junction, and all, that I dont feel as if I could go alone. But if you and Tom could manage to come up and stay over Sunday with me, I think I could go back with you.

Your loving aunt,.
Luella Ames.

"They can't very well refuse to come for me," Miss Luella had reasoned. "Especially since I've grown so feeble that I can't travel fifty miles alone!"

The letter puzzled Evelyn and Tom. What had happened to energetic, independent Aunt Luella?

"But there's no question of our not going," Tom declared. "My, it will be nice to have Aunt Luella around"

"Wont it?" agreed Evelyn enthusiastically. "She's so dear. And just over Sunday she can't entertain us so very much, can she, Tom?"

There was a wistful note in little Mrs. Ames' voice that moved her husband to tender mirth.

"No, my dear," he anwsered gravely, "she won't have time to show you more than one hundred of her two hundred views of the Yosemite Valley and there will be only one night on which she will march you off to bed at eight o'clock. Of course it isn't good for a young thing like you to sit up later. I'm your natural protector, and eight o'clock it shall be."

"Oh, very well," replied Evelyn, with a smile. "I'm not the only one. 'Thomas Ames, certainly you're not going to have no everyday food like griddlecakes when you are visiting me!'"

They burst into laughter.

It snowed steadily all the day of the journey, and when Tom and Evelyn alighted from the train at the little station at Marshall it was still storming blindly and the wind was blowing a gale.

"Poor auntie," said Evelyn, as they ploughed through the drifts on the platform, "to come out in all this storm for us! But I suppose she just wouldn't let anyone else drive Cherry."

Tom's face grew grim. "I suppose not. I've suggested it once or twice."

There was no one in sight, and so they hurried into the waiting room to look for Aunt Luella, but only the station agent was there. He looked up as they entered.

"If you're Mr. Ames," he said, "and I guess you are, for there doesn't seem to be anyone else—oh, you are? —well, there's a team here for you. Luelly, she sent down the team by my son; he went off on the same train you came in on. She says it's too stormy for her to come out—though it's the first time I ever knew Luelly Ames to be scared of a storm—and she says you know the way and can drive up yourselves, and she'll have some good, hot fires for you to get warm by when you get there."

Young Mr. Ames stifled a gasp. "Do you mean," he asked incredulously, "that Aunt Luella wants me to drive Cherry?"

The station agent grinned. "It is queer, ain't it? But that's what she said. I guess maybe she's sick or something. You come out and I'll show you the team."

As he tucked the big robe around them, the station agent remarked, "Luelly didn't send any word about it, but I s'pose she'll expect you to drive careful."

Tom and Evelyn were still laughing in a subdued fashion when Cherry dashed up to the broad piazza. It was reckless driving, but Aunt Luella, in the doorway, set her teeth. She did not do things by halves.

"You dear children! Are you frozen, Evelyn? Tom, you run along and put up Cherry, and, Evelyn, you come right in and get warm."

She took the little wife into her two strong arms and kissed her heartily. . .

"O Aunt Luella," Evelyn exclaimed, "we were afraid you were ill!"

"Ill? No ,indeed! But I didn't see much sense in my driving down after you in such weather. You didn't think I wasn't glad to have you come, did you, Evelyn?"

The expression of amazement that had partly faded from Tom's face reappeared as he sat down to Aunt Luella's hospitable table. Hot biscuits and griddle-cakes! But Aunt Luella seemed determined to upset traditions tonight. When she had finished supper, she pushed back her chair and smiled at Tom, who was still paying close attention to the griddlecakes.

"Children, I don't know as you'll forgive me, but Mrs. Parker is dreadful sick, and they've sent for me to come over and stay all night with her. I thought at first I couldn't go and leave you, but they can't get a regular nurse from the city till tomorrow, and I felt as if I almost ought to go."

Aunt Luella's plain face was very sweet; it was easy to see why she was the best nurse in Marshall.

"I thought perhaps you wouldn't mind one night, seeing as you're right at home—I want you should feel so, too." She smiled at Evelyn over her spectacles. "You can have a fire in the big fireplace, and you and Tom can crack nuts and make some molasses candy. And you can go to bed when you want to, and get up when you want to, and be as reckless as you like. Now, you don't mind, do you, and you'll make yourself right at home?"

She looked at Evelyn, Evelyn, always transparent, was dimpling irresistibly.

"Of course we'll miss you, dear Aunt Luella,"—indeed, she did love Aunt Luella at that moment better than ever; she had so often longed to play at old-fashioned housekeeping in that dear, old-fashioned house!—"but we'll do very well."

Anyone could see through Evelyn—the childishly eager Evelyn who would never quite grow up, and who loved to doze until unseasonable hours before a glowing open fire.

Tom choked suddenly over his ninth hot biscuit.

"Oh, yes, we'll do," he said, smiling at Aunt Luella. "but you get back in the morning in time to make some more griddlecakes."

Tom and Evelyn lived in a flat. It was a very pretty flat, but every bit of space in it counted, and it was heated by gilt registers, and you could hear the people in the next apartment wrangling over the baby's diet. Evelyn fairly reveled in the long wainscoted rooms at Aunt Luella's, and in the absolute stillness of the house.

Laughing joyously, she and Tom washed and put away the lovely old china; then Tom brought in an armful of pine knots and threw them one at a time on the blazing fire. He dropped contently into Uncle Henry's big deep old armchair, and Evelyn curled up on the rug before the wide fireplace and lay watching the red embers.

She loved the sound of the snapping, spitting pine; she loved the feeling that she was there, safe, with Tom and the fire, and that she might stay there as long as she liked.

All through that long winter evening they sat before the fire, without words, but with a sense of well-being and comfort and companionship that brought them near together.

So, for the first time, it came to pass in Luella Ames' house that two guests were "truly at home."

Late Sunday afternoon, while Evelyn was helping Aunt Luella to pack her little trunk,—she and Tom had just come in from a swift scurry with the wind over the snowy fields,—she went up to the older woman impulsively and kissed her.

"Oh, Aunt Luella, I have had the best time! If you weren't going home with us. I don't believe I'd ever go back. May we come again?"

"You've had a better time than you had last summer?" asked her aunt with a smile.

"Oh—" Evelyn began involuntarily, and then suddenly hesitated and coloured.

"Child, I was an old fool."

Aunt Luella laughed at Evelyn's shocked expression.

"Well, I was, and I never should have found out if it hadn't been for Rhoda Barstow; but there, that's another story. I was just as bad with my ideas of hospitality as Susie Clayson is about giving Christmas presents. She goes to work and picks out what she'd like to have folks give her, and then she gives it to them, no matter whether it is anything they want or not. She'd like it, and so she thinks they ought to. Well, I was just like that about entertaining folks. I thought because I like to look at pictures of the Yosemite Valley—I always did like those views, Evelyn — that everyone else would; and because I have to go to bed at eight o'clock to get a good night's rest, I thought everyone else had to. And I thought I'd got to let all my work go when I had company, and just tend right to them. But I've found out different, thank goodness! When you ask folks to come and see you, Evelyn, it's because you love them, and want them around making themselves at home. Real company, Evelyn," and here Aunt Luella's voice grew very sweet and earnest, "is folks round with books and workbaskets and everything, doing just what they'd rather do most, and being right at home. That's what I've found out, and I'm going to have a good bit of that kind of company yet."

HOW TO RUIN A RADIO.

The common practice of many motorists of starting their engine while the car radio is operating is fraught with definite danger to the delicate mechanism of the receiving set.

It is not generally known, according to radio engineers, that the sudden diverting of battery current from the radio to the starting motor may cause fusing of the delicate points of the vibrator, with consequent permanent damage to the set. Many mechanics make a practice of warning all their customers against this common and dangerous error of "starting the car to music."

Too Expensive.

Recently Aberdeen citizens met to organize a league for the abolition of tips. Sandy McTavish was present but passive.

Chairman: "Surely, McTavish, you are going to join. The subscription is only a shilling a year."

McTavish: "A shlling? At that rate I might as well keep on tipping."

"Haitches."

"What a large family you have, Mrs. Jones," said an American woman to an old English lady.

"Yes'm, and the funniest thing is that all the names begin with a haitch. There's 'Orace, 'Arriet, 'Erbert, 'Enry, 'Ugh, 'Ubert, 'Arold, 'Arriet and 'Etty—all except the last one, and we had her named Halice."
