Bad Weather Affects Receipts Fair Directors Hope Break Even

Chesterville Fair struck bad weather again this year but officials are optimistic they will be able to pay prize money 100 per cent. A fair-sized crowd was in attendance although the day was quite cool, and the showing of live stock was very creditable.

Following the hot weather of the week previous, rain broke over the grounds late Monday afternoon as children's day was coming to a close, and rain poured in torrents all night. Although Tuesday morning was fair, the temperature had dropped considerably and with a strong northwest wind the afternoon was quite cool. The track was very muddy but by the time the races got under way the outer side was in fair shape. The grounds were dry enough, excepting for the area around home plate in the baseball diamond where Chesterville defeated Morewood 9-7 in a five inning game.

Entries in the harness races were small, as horsemen did not expect the trials to come off following the heavy rain, but the events were interesting to the small crowd that braved the chilly wind on the grandstand.

The highlight of Tuesday was the parade of the prize winning stock from the stalls at the north end of the grounds, past the grandstand and then back by the stand again to the stalls. This climaxed the showing of all classes that could plainly be seen from the stand as the cattle and horses were led into their respective rings.

Many of the prizes went to the large herds of pure bred stock from Finch, Moose Creek, Newington and Kemptville, but it was noticeable the increased number taken by local breeders this year. This is encouraging to the board, as the object of the Fair is "to aid in promoting the views of the Legislature and Improvement of the Township."

A merry-go-round for children was included in the amusement section and was a big attraction for the youngsters. Chesterville Citizens' Band gave an excellent programme from the grandstand during the afternoon, confining the programme largely to peppy marches to keep up the spirits of the crowd in the chilly wind.

Wm. Servage, of Chesterville, gave the crowd a really fine treat when he again showed his team of black horses in their stunts. Mr. Servage and his son handled the animals well and demonstrated what patience and training can do. They stood one behind the other on benches. walked up a teeter, laid flat on the ground playing dead, and then each horse raised its head to kiss its master.

It is reported Mr. Servage has been offered a substantial sum to exhibit his team at Ogendsburg Fair.

King George VI Tells Peoples of Empire Issue of Conflict is For Justice and Liberty

THE KING broadcast Sunday to the Empire an appeal to stand fast in the war with Germany, appealing to his subjects in all parts of the world as follows:

"In this grave hour, perhaps the most fateful in our history, I send to every household of my peoples, both at home and overseas, this message, spoken with the same depth of feeling for each one of you as if I were able to cross your threshold and speak to you myself.

"For the second time in the lives of most of us, we are at war.

"Over and over again, we have tried to find a peaceful way out of the differences between ourselves and those who are now our enemies; but it has been in vain.

"We have been forced into a conflict, for we are called, with our allies, to meet the challenge of a principle which, if it were to prevail, would be fatal to any civilized order in the world.

"It is a principle which permits a state in the selfish pursuit of power to disregard its treaties and its solemn pledges, which sanctions the use of force or threat of force against sovereignty and independence of other states.

"Such a principle, stripped of all disguise, is surely the mere primitive doctrine that might is right. And if this principle were established through the world, the freedom of our own country and of the whole British Commonwealth of Nations would be in danger.

"But far more than this, the peoples of the world would be kept in the bondage of fear, and all hopes of settled peace and of security, of justice and liberty, among nations, would be ended.

"This is the ultimate issue which confronts us. For the sake of all that we ourselves hold dear, and of the world order and peace, it is unthinkable that we should refuse to meet the challenge.

"It is to this high purpose that I now call my people at home and my peoples across the seas who will make our cause their own.

"I ask them to stand calm and firm, and united in this time of trial.

"The task will be hard. There may be dark days ahead and war can no longer be confined to the battlefield, but we can only do the right as we see the right, and reverently commit our cause to God. If one and all we keep resolutely faithful to it, ready for whatever service or sacrifice it may demand, then with God's help, we shall prevail.

"May He bless and keep us all."

10 P.C. REBATE BY HYDRO

THE local Hydro Commission was notified this morning by the Ontario office in Toronto of a rebate of 10 per cent of the past year's net bills to local Hydro customers A reduction in cost power to the local Commission is also announced, the rate now be- $33 per horsepower instead of $34.

Heavy Electrical Storm Does Damage In District

Monday afternoon, following an oppressively hot morning, a heavy electrical storm passed over this district leaving much damage in its wake, striking here about 5.30. The lightning was very vivid and the thunder crashed while the rain fell in torrents. The storm, coming from the west, seemed to increase in intensity. Two miles northwest of Inkerman, Wesley Crowder's barn was struck and destroyed by fire with an estimated loss of more than $2,000. At Winchester, the aerial on the home of Geo. Wilson was struck and his radio wrecked. Hydro services were disrupted in the village when transformers were burned out.

About a mile and a half east of Grantley, Alfred Winters' new barn was struck and together with an older barn, silo, hen house and another log building, was destroyed. The season's grain and hay, some implements and the stanchions for the new cattle stable were destroyed. The loss is estimated at around $4,000 partly covered by insurance.

John Bogart, of Berwick, standing in his barn door during the storm, said he was stunned when lightning struck near but not on the buildings. Frank Hogoboam, of Cass Bridge, reported the same experience when he was thrown to the ground as he was close to the buildings.

RETURN FROM OVERSEAS.

Anxiety was relieved here at the week-end for the safety of two Chesterville men, Rev. P. J. Keaney and W. H. Fairbrass who sailed from Ireland and England respectively just before the outbreak of war. Mr. Fairbrass arrived home at midnight, Saturday, having crossed on the Empress of Australia, and Father Keaney arrived in town at noon, Monday.

Rev. Father Keaney was saved by fate from embarking on the fatal voyage of the Athenia, sunk by a German submarine. He applied for passage on the ill-fated liner but her list was complete.

Moving Pictures of Village Prove Rather Disappointing

If what the citizens of this place saw of their home town Monday night in the movie shown by the Carlton Productions in the Community Hall, is what others see of what we are pleased to call our attractions, it is just too bad. Pictures of Morrisburg and Winchester were also thrown on the screen and gave what we know to be rather good shots, but with most of the Chesterville shots taken on the south side of the river, with a rear view of our Community Hall and not a glimpse of the Nation river, those who may chance to see the picture will hardly carry away a favourable impression of this up-to-date community. The business section of the north side was not shown, nor its residential streets, its churches nor the activities of the daily milk delivery at the Nestlé's plant. A copy of the film was presented to the village by the producer for historical purposes, but it has little value.

End of Trail is Reached By Local Baseball Club

The end of the trail to local baseball aspirations came rather suddenly at the week-end when the Smiths Falls Beavers' heavy artillery sent Chesterville down two games, the first here Saturday 14-1, and then in Smiths Falls, Monday, 16-1. When rain put a halt to the Labour Day double-header the series was called off.

In fairness to the local club, a victory in this series was not expected as it was known the greater experience of the St. Lawrence League champions would be too much for the home boys who are playing their first year in baseball after several seasons in softball.

The first game of the playdown for which Chesterville has been waiting one month since winning the Dundas league, was tight for five innings, the score standing one-all, Smiths Falls scoring in the third and Chesterville tying it in the fifth. The visitors slapped in five in the sixth, three in the eighth and wound up with five in the ninth.

Pro Alford and Dob Plantz were the battery for Chesterville with Hastie and McCrum for Smiths Falls.

Umpires were Carroll Boucher of Ottawa, and Red Collins of Carleton Place.

CANADA CRACKS DOWN ON SUBVERSIVE ELEMENTS

THERE ARE already indications that all the leniency and tolerance which Canada has extended to subversive elements in the country is coming to a sharp stop with the Dominion's entrance into Great Britain's effort to halt Hitler and his ideas.

First definite sign of this cropped up in Toronto where Alderman Stewart Smith, avowed Communist, is the target for bitter criticism following his attack on Chamberlain and his policies. Attorney-General Conant is investigating Smith's remarks, hinting that he may consult Ottawa to determine whether or not the alderman has violated the Criminal Code. Members of Toronto's City Council in emergency session sought to force Smith's resignation.

There seems little doubt of the intentions of the authorities at Ottawa to stamp out from the first disloyal radical groups. One can be sure that no Social Credit group, for example, will get away with the repetition of their recent action in the Quebec convention when they resolved against the manufacture of arms in Canada for Great Britain and declared themselves against Canada's participation in any war "within or without."

It will be interesting to see now whether Aberhart in Alberta follows Mitchell Hepburn's example and decides to cease his pinpricking against central federal authority — to throw himself into the co-operative task of carrying out Canada's duty.

WARS TAKE TIME.

IN the Great War, many optimistically jumped to the conclusion that the fighting would be over in a short time. Experts solemnly declared the bonfire was bigger than the woodpile. But the carnage went on for four years, the woodpile being augmented by fresh drafts of human lives. A visit to Christie Street Hospital in Toronto will show that for many the Great War is not over yet. This by way of emphasizing that the great factor in any new struggle we may enter is patience and preparedness.

FINANCING IS DIFFERENT THAN IN GREAT WAR

A PASSING reference to the comparative soundness of Canada's financial structure, made in these columns last week in connection with the threat of war, has prompted an extremely interesting letter from a Canadian economist who draws attention to an entirely new phase of modern warfare.

"Following the last war," the economist writes, "the radical soap-box orator had a grand time pointing his finger at international financiers and bankers and accusing them of encouraging the slaughter for their own profit. While that was a lot of poppycock, it remains true that before the last war all banking was in private hands. That tended to give at least some colour to the vapourings of the man on the soap-box.

"But I'd like to point out to you the fact that since the last war, the situation has changed. Most governments have central banks. The private banks even if profit were possible out of destruction, could not make any profit out of war financing simply because war financing is now in the hands of governments through their central banks.

"Governments — the representatives of the peoples of the world—control monetary systems. Like Hitler they have learned that the only authority that can make money out of nothing is a government. The thing that has deterred people from wars in the past at times has been the fear of expense and the burden of debt that would have to be borne afterwards. As I say, governments now control the expansion and contraction of money in any country and the banks have nothing to do with it. If we can have money for nothing, we can have interest free and debt free wars and hang the expense! But it is the governments that have that decision in their hands and not commercial banks. Commercial banks through the deposits of their depositors are able to finance the movements of goods and services, they can supply the life blood demanded by the commercial fabric, but only as demaned. They cannot force people to accept credit if they don't want it."

NO SIDESHOWS THIS TIME

Ottawa Journal.

IN THE 1914-1918 WAR Britain fought on a score of fronts. There were long and arduous campaigns against the Turks, at the Dardanelles, in Palestine, on the Euphrates. There were campaigns in Africa. The English shared with the French against the Salonika adventure, and they had to bolster up the Italian armies against Austria. Every German colony had to be taken, because each was a seat of active or potential trouble, and with few exceptions wherever the clash of arms came from any part of the world there were British troops engaged, or British ships.

Today the situation is very different. Turkey is on the British side. There are no German colonies to be taken. Italy, it seems, is to be neutral. As it looks now there will be a merciful absence of the "sideshows" which used up much of the British—and French—strength and energy a quarter of a century ago.

This is a fact of extreme importance. The concentration of the power of the two great democracies against a single enemy on his home grounds, with no costly distractions to divide the strength, will simplify the plan of campaign and, let us hope, shorten the period of hostilities.

GAIN MORE KNOWLEDGE ABOUT PLOUGHING

EXPERIMENTS conducted by the Field Husbandry Division of the Dominion Experimental Farms, have shown that shallow ploughing produces as high yields as deep ploughing at a considerable saving in power requirements. Furthermore, tillage beyond that required for weed control and reasonably good seed bed preparation has no beneficial effect on yields.

In many districts of the Prairie Provinces, ploughing for summerfallow has been largely dispensed with in favour of the "ploughless fallow" by surface cultivation. In Eastern Canada, ploughing sod land in the summer with after-harvest cultivation where weeds are troublesome, and ploughing in late fall on less weedy land, have both proved superior to spring ploughing, especially on heavy soils. One advantage of summer or fall ploughing is that it facilitates the early seeding of cereal crops which experiments have clearly shown to be very desirable.

STARTING SCHOOL.

Anne Sutherland.

GOD BLESS a little boy who goes to school, his shiny Primer hugged against his breast.

With cheeks scrubbed clean and in his rounded eyes a baby wonder of the strange new quest!

September, take him gently; he is small, whose sturdy form must battle with the blow of morning.

Make the red-gold leaves a carpet where such little feet may go in safety.

Sun, shine tenderly upon the forehead where his mother laid her kiss; it was a consecration; see that books may never rob her little son of this.

Birds, sing to him softly; he has only known a lullaby; and, little brook, run clear when he is watching; never let him know a stagnant secret; he is young and dear.

Pray that he find within the strange four walls an understanding heart, a mind grown wise in love of simple things, a hand that shields, and laughter, laughter in the waiting eyes!

He was a baby yesterday. He lived by just simple rote and easy rule;

There—he is gone around the curve of road—oh, God, bless little boys who go to school!

A Good Promiser.

Farmer: "Do you guarantee this clover seed?"

Merchant: "I should say so. If this seed doesn't come up, you bring it back and we'll refund your money."

Well Worn.

The new vicar was surprised as he entered the vestry to see the verger, who was counting th collection, take half a crown from the plate and put it in his pocket.

The remonstrance which seemed imminent was checked by the ready explanation. "That's the half-crown, sir, that I've led off with these thirty-years and more."

Come to think of it, he's right. For where will you find anything comparable in value—so much—for so very little?

Every minute, day or night, the telephone is ready to serve your social, business or emergency needs. You may have grown accustomed to this service—you may think nothing of talking across continents and oceans!

But when you do think it over, you realize that the modern telephone represents the greatest value in terms of service that money can buy!

Telephone service is widely used because it is courteous, efficient, yet surprisingly inexpensive. Nothing else yields so much for what it costs!

BOWLING SHOTS

By F. I. DuWobble.

The Chesterville club finished up its games in the St. Lawrence schedule last Friday night when Kemptville was entertained. The locals took a trimming, losing three games and winning one, but although there is no official standing available as yet, it is believed the local club is out in front by a small margin.

Casselman won his game against Dr. Patterson handily, but Lacey went down to Bustard who lead all the way. Dixon fared little better against Graham although winning nine ends of the 18. Barney Haskins took the lead against Clayton in the first end and had no trouble maintaining it throughout the game.

The score:

Chesterville		Kemptville
Casselman	20	Patterson	10
Lacey	8	Bustard	19
Dixon	12	Graham	19
Clayton	12	Haskins	24

Russell Barn Razed by Fire Being Struck by Lightning

Russell.—Struck by lightning during an electrical storm which passed over here about 7.30 p.m., Monday, a large frame barn owned by John Buchanan, about half a mile south of the village, was destroyed by fire along with most of its contents. The latter included hay, grain and oats, and 10 young pigs which it was found impossible to remove owing to the rapid spread of the fire. A henhouse adjoining was also destroyed.

The loss was estimated at $4,000, partly covered by insurance.

Cattle being milked when the barn was struck were all removed in time. The local fire brigade under T. A. Carson worked to keep the flames from spreading to adjoining buildings. The blaze attracted a large crowd of spectators, despite heavy rain.

ALFRED WINTERS' BARNS BURN

Monday afternoon about four o'clock an electric storm passed through here and destroyed a new barn erected this summer on the farm of Alfred Winters. It was a frame structure. Also a silo, hen house and a log building were burned. Mr. Winters and his son George were drawing stone to make a foundation as the barn was struck. Two wagons and a buggy were also burned. Neighbours were summoned, but nothing could be done to save the building or contents. The owner's estimate of his loss is between $2500 and $3000 which is partly covered by insurance. All the season's crop was destroyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Gillard and family spent Saturday with Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Beckstead, Grantley.

School re-opened on Tuesday with the same teacher in charge, Miss Lena Winters.

Much sympathy is extended to Mr. Alfred Winters who lost his barn and other buildings by fire.

MARCELLUS MEAT MARKET

Lunching At Home

By:

KATHARINE BAKER

LUNCH at home does not need to be a makeshift affair with yesterday's left-overs. A dainty, tasty lunch which the family are pleased to be home for, can be worked into a busy morning just as easily as a slapdash meal. Take this menu for instance. Casserole of Salmon, hot biscuits, a simple green salad and fruit —it gives a new meaning to the old refrain "There's no place like home."

CASSEROLE OF SALMON.

2 tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca
1 cup canned salmon, flaked
1 tablespoon onion, chopped
1 cup milk
6 to 8 unbaked baking powder biscuits, rolled ¼ inch thick
¼ teaspoon salt
dash of pepper
1 cup celery, diced
1 tablespoon melted butter

Combine ingredients in order given. Turn into greased casserole; bake in hot oven (425 deg. F.) 25 minutes, stirring mixture twice during first 10 minutes of baking. Place biscuits on top of salmon mixture after it has baked 10 minutes; return to oven, bake 12 to 15 minutes longer to bake biscuits. Serves 4.

BAKING POWDER BISCUITS

2 cups sifted flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
4 tablespoons butter or other shortening
½ teaspoon salt
2-3 cup milk (about)

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening; add milk gradually until soft dough is formed. Roll ½-inch thick on slightly floured board. Cut with floured biscuit cutter. Bake in hot oven (450 deg. F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Makes 12 biscuits.

Western Dancers Prefer Romantic Music Says Poll

The dance tunes ranked as "hits" by dancers and followers of popular music in Western Canada are in the romantic mood, according to Harry Pryce, maestro of the CBC programme "Stag Party." He has just completed a 13-week survey of hit songs.

Canvassing dance orchestra conductors, record and sheet music agencies and radio requests for his weekly "Hit of the Week" presented on his Tuesday night show, Pryce has found that Western Canada is discriminating in its choice of popular melodies.

Outstanding hits since the conductor began his poll have been "This Is No Dream," "Blue Evening," "To Yop," "I Poured My Heart into a Song," "Moon Love" (currently the No. 1 United States' hit), "Strange Enchantment" and "Stairway to the Stars." There has been a notable absence of "swing" and novelty numbers.

Studying weekly results of hit parades in the United States, Pryce has discovered that dancers in Western Canada transfer their affections from one song to another with great rapidity and in many cases have been ahead of the American poll in selecting the top hits.

CANCER.

THE British Medical Journal says: "It is admitted on all hands that with modern methods of treatment properly applied, many if not all cases of cancer are curable if treated in a sufficiently early stage."

Cancer is originally very small—a single cell so small that it can be seen only by a powerful micrscope. This single cell divides and multipies in an uncontrolled manner. The initial process is purely local and it is only at a later date, usually not long, that lymphatic channels and reach the the cells begin to spread along the nearest glands. In the case of breast cancer the cancer cells first spread to the glands in the armpit. Most cancers of the breast should be discovered before this happens. Later on, if not treated, the cancer cells spread through the blood stream and may reach any part of the body.

The early signs of cancer are important. These are roughly: "lumps, irregular bleedings, sores that do not heal, chronic hoarseness and changes in the ordinary habits of digestion and evacuation of the bowels.

Who Helps Herself

SHE STARED at the green dress lying across the bed and a prayer rose in her. "Oh, please, please have him like me! For once!" She closed her eyes, praying it.

Her sister had come to the door, looking in. Kate's eyes opened quickly. She bent to straighten a stocking seam.

"What are you going to wear tonight?" Margery's voice was falsely casual, falsely vivacious.

Kate's was as falsely casual in reply. "Oh, this green thing."

As if it mattered what she wore, she thought passionately. She was the sort of girl who, when she wore blue, evoked the wonder that she hadn't worn green; and when she wore green you wondered why on earth she hadn't put on black or blue or white or anything else. There wasn't a colour in the rainbow that could work a miracle for her. Didn't she know?

Margery drifted over to the bed, considering the green, then gave a covert glance at Kate. "Um — how about the white?" she suggested with that same bright negligence.

"Poor Margery," Kate thought. It was hard, having all this wished on her. Margery was a married sister, living in Chicago; the much older sister whose gay young departure to parties Kate had hung over the banisters to watch in admiration; the pretty, popular sister who had never given her family a worry, except as to her ultimate choice.

Kate knew just what her mother had written to Margery. She wouldn't speak openly; mother had her pride. She would say that Kate was too intellectual, too discriminating for the Beveridge set; besides, there were but few men left there now for a girl of twenty-six—didn't Margery and John know some nice, suitable young men in the city?

SO KATE had come for a long visit with a much larger cheque for clothes than father ought to have written, and Margery had taken her to a dance at John's country club and it had been terrible. And Margery had given a dinner for her at the apartment and that had been terrible too. Not openingly, like the dance: Kate had seemed very occupied and animated all evening, talking to that nice Mrs. Bainter and young Mrs. Gaynes and very interested in Mr. Bainter's accounts of relief work, but Teddy Farles had devoted himself to the red-headed Mrs. Mirton and Jimmy Sims had talked politics steadfastly with Tom Mirton and Margery's husband.

So now Margery was excluding competition. Just a quiet home dinner—the Gayneses to make a table of bridge for John and herself, and an extra man for Kate, who didn't like bridge. That nice young Martin Taylor in John's office.

Margery was conceding that the white was a little elaborate. "The green will be lovely," she declared, with bright insincerity. "I'll lend you my jade earrings."

"I look like hell in earrings," Kate told her.

She wanted to say that she looked like hell in anything. No, not hell. Hell was colourful, luminous.

She was just drab. Sallow, with dark hair and eyes. And no trick of hair arrangement, no addition of long jade earrings could turn her into a Spanish beauty either.

Margery was fingering the dress as pretext for lingering; she had something on her mind she didn't know how to get over. Poor, bothered Margery, so pretty herself at thirty-six, so distressedly anxious, so considerately careful not to betray there was any cause for anxiety. She murmured, finally, "John doesn't know him very well, but he believes he's fond of art. There's such a nice exhibition now at Roulliers, and if he hasn't seen that ——"

Hinting for her to date him up! Kate wanted to scream!

"For heaven's sake, let me alone!" but she smiled with careless receptiveness as if she'd bear it in mind if the unknown proved interesting enough and said, "It's such fun, Margy dear, being with you," and Margery said, "It's such fun having you."

THEN, mercifully, she was gone. Kate went on with her dressing. She knew exactly how it was going to be. She'd doll up and go down. She'd try to be bright and she'd be stiff and savagely shy. She'd try to make talk. She never had any trouble talking to older people, but she was agonizingly conscious that she had no line with young men.

Life would be all right, she supposed, once you got over being young. Once you quit struggling. And your family quit struggling for you. . . . It was only youth that hurt. This trying to be enchanting, to be glamorous, to get yourself a man. . . . They did these things better in France. Her father could have afforded a good dot.

As it was, she'd be glad to sink back into the niche she was making for herself in Beveridge—Judge Barrett's nice, efficient, unmarried daughter. Beveridge had got over expecting her to get married. Nobody even tried any more to pair her off with Horace Stoner—about the only eligible left. There had been a time when Beveridge rather looked for clever Kate Barrett to carry off some of the visiting celebrities whom her mother always entertained when they came to lecture at the clubs, but the celebrities ate her mother's dinners, made polite conversation with Kate, and hung about the younger set. . . . And the cruise had been one continuous association with the widows, the daughters and the elderly married couples that make up a cruise.

Well, the first hundred years were the hardest she told herself, airily. She ought to be used to it by now. Only sometimes there came as tonight that aghast astonishment that life, her life, was going by, ignoring her youth, her expectation, excluding her from its deep experiences, turning her into an emotional bystander. Giving no chance for all that was in her, all that she knew was in her. She had more to give, she thought rebelliously, than Margery, pretty, petted Margery — she had more understanding, more feeling, more intelligence, more humour. . . . But Margery had a skin of cream and soft, irresolute lips, made for kissing, and a witching trickery of line.

No use letting herself go like this. She'd better get on with the Roman holiday. The sooner it was over the better. But no matter how mocking her mood, how excoriating her pride, there was, never quite exorcised, a demon of hope whispering that perhaps, this time ——

The moment she saw Martin Taylor she knew there was no use. She felt an honest astonishment that John should have thought she rated so high a chance. Taylor was too good looking, to begin with; one of those long, lean, clean-cut young men that women fall for, with a headful of close-cropped brown curls, a tapeline of parting running through, and a very chaffing gayety in his blue eyes. He was from the South, she soon found out—a South that had given good breeding and good manners toward women, but there was experience, as well as humour, in his glance, and he looked as if he could take politely good care of himself.

AND he looked, immediately, as if he had decided to do it that evening. As if he had divined what this quiet home dinner with his chief was all about.

It was a dreadful dinner. Oh, very pleasant outwardly, very full of talk about what a nice time she was having in the city, and all they had seen and done; but inwardly she was on fire. She saw herself there, with darkly burning cheeks, now too stiff in her attempt not to be overeager, now too vivaciously playing at animation. . . .

It was worse after dinner. The bridge table was set up in another room and she and Martin Taylor were left to devise ways of amusing themselves. "There's the radio," Margery said, with her parting smile. "Or the piano."

Kate had a horrid vision of her cold fingers sliding over the keys. Desperately she made talk. She dragged in art. What did he think of the moderns? That depended, he said. It was like asking what one thought of people. They varied. Were there any good examples to be seen in Chicago now? He supposed, politely, that there might be. He didn't sound passionate about art. Once or twice she saw him looking surreptitiously at his wrist watch. Had he been less courteous he might have gone before the bridge table broke up, for it was unmercifully prolonged, but he stuck it out.

Going up stairs, slipping her bare, white arm through Kate's darker one, Margery questioned, "Well, did you have a nice long visit? Was he interesting?"

"Not too damnably so," Kate said. She didn't swear in Beveridge, but she felt like swearing now—she felt like experimenting with words. Then her heart smote her for Margery. "He really was awfully nice," she declared turning on the girlish enthusiasm.

"Did you—did he ——"

Kate wanted to mock. "Did I nail him for a date," but pride flew too high a banner. She said, "Oh, he said something about a new exhibition—he's going to call me up, I think," and then wondered why she had said that. Now she'd have to pretend that he had called.

SHE hoped Margery would forget. But she asked about him the next day, when she came in from a walk with the children. "Well, did your young man call up?" In Margery's world men called up the day after they met you, and marriage had not dimmed her memories.

Kate smiled. "I'm not as instantaneous as you were."

Margery said, a little sharply, "But he ought to do something ——" and the younger girl knew a panic fear that John might be goaded to hinting to him.

She said quickly, confidently, "Oh, he will—he said so."

Her voice rang so convincingly that she began to hope might, and she found herself listening alertly that next day while Margery was out at her bridge club. No call came and at the end of the afternoon, hating her silly hope, she hurried on her coat and hat for a brisk walk along the lake to clear her mind of fantasies. Coming out of the apartment building she met her sister, returning.

"Where are you going?" Margary wanted to know and the instant expectation in her was so obvious, so unbearable, that Kate was stung to a defiant lie. She was going to meet Martin Taylor, she said: he had asked her to see a gallery and have tea.

Margery, with a lightning glance, looked her over. "Take my silver fox," she said, but Kate, smiling, shook her head and ran toward a taxi.

She went to a gallery; she went to a tea place and memorized its appearance so she could talk about it. Fortunately, they were dining out that night with the Bainters, so there was little chance for questioning; and fortunately, too, she thought, there was no single man for her to meet. Mrs. Bainter produced only a temporary bachelor whose wife was in Italy, and Kate got on very well with him. She always did, she told herself, when there was no point in it.

But Margery's satisfaction in the gallery-and-tea episode frightened her. She saw her own stupidity. Taylor might really telephone, or he might even come to call, as Southerners did, or John might mention the matter casually at the office. . . . She saw the pit she had dug. She'd have to do something about it, she thought desperately.

The next afternoon she rang him up. In a voice that tried hard for unconsciousness she recalled herself to him. He remembered very well, he said pleasantly, and waited.

"I've done something dreadful," she told him. "Something I just have to explain to you about. Would you be free to meet me for a moment late this afternoon — at the Arts Club? Just for a moment?"

He was sorry, he told her, but he had an early dinner that night. There really wouldn't be time.

She said she was sorry too. And with another burst of urgency, "Another day, then? I do have to explain. I haven't been forging your name, but it's almost as bad!"

Politely, he asked her to lunch with him the next day. He was probably thinking, she felt, that he'd have to do something sooner or later, and he might as well get it over. But no matter how it was wrung from him, she waved the invitation shamelessly before Margery. This time she borrowed the silver fox. She had a new hat, too, not too rakishly tilted, but rather chic—she looked quite nice, she told herself. Her clothes did, anyway.

She wasn't any more than a lot of others, she insisted vehemently to herself, looking about in the ladies' lounge of the University Club where they were to meet. The women around her weren't any beauties, young and old, yet every one of them seemed to have got herself someone. It wasn't always looks that did it. She'd seen that in Beveridge. She'd seen a girl, homely as sin, go right out after a man and get him. Persistency. Propinquity. A flare-up of temperament.

But she had been too proud, too shy. And she had been so surrounded, so watched upon. Judge Barrett's daughter—poor, dear Kate Barrett, who did not seem to catch on. . . . "Do dance, Sam, with poor Kate." . . . "Henry, please show a little attention to that nice Miss Barrett."

She saw a little girl with stiff, lank, dark curls, waiting, at dancing school, to dance with the left-overs. She saw an older girl, going to high-school parties with a succession of indifferent boys egged on by their mothers. Her own mother gave parties—they couldn't leave her out. But she had learned early to pretend not to care for boys. She had overdone her pride, she thought. She was overdoing it now—with Margery. What did it matter if John and Margery knew that she was hopeless? A flop. A droop. What did it matter?

It mattered horribly. So horribly that she was determined to save herself from their knowledge if she could possibly do it. And to save herself, too, from Taylor's feeling of her eager expectancy. Two birds with one stone. If she could throw the stone.

Tavlor was standing at the door and there was an interchange of greetings then they moved up the stairs. He had reserved a table for two, and as they made their way to it, among the lifted eyes, she felt the delightful importance of being the girl this good-looking young man took out to lunch. The table was a little oasis of privacy; they were alone in it when the waiter had withdrawn with their order, and in the courage that had come to her need she smiled across it.

†Facts About Canada†

MACKENZIE RIVER TRIBES.

EIGHT INDIAN TRIBES shared the basin of the Mackenzie River: Chipewyan, Beaver, Eekani, Slave, Yellowknife, Dogrib, Hare and Nahani. The population even in pre-European times was very sparse, hardly exceeding 10,000. Today it is only about 4,000, excluding some Crees of Algonkian stock who have migrated into the territory. Dense forests of coniferous trees clothe the valleys of the Mackenzie and its tributaries. Outside these valleys lie stretches of grassland in the south and, in the north, treeless tundra or rocky wastes dotted with innumerable lakes. The birch tree gradually yields to the spruce; the moose, the deer and the beaver fade away before the caribou and the musk-ox. On the whole the fish and game are less plentiful and the climate much harsher than in Eastern Canada.

The eight Mackenzie River tribes spoke a single language, Athapaskan, also spoken in Alaska and down the western face of the Rockies as far as California. Some scholars connect it with the Sinitic languages of China, Tibet and Siam, and believe that the Mackenzie River Indians and their kinsmen were the last people to migrate from Asia into America, arriving here not many centuries before the Christian era. However, in physical appearance the present-day Indians seem to resemble the natives of Eastern Canada more than they do any Asiatic people.

They subsisted on fish and game, with the addition of wild fruit. Caribou, sheep and goats roamed the western mountains and in the Peace River Valley herds of buffalo. Along the lower Mackenzie the Indians snared so many hares that one derived its name from the animal. Bears were fairly common everywhere. Nearly every lake abounded with fish, especially whitefish.

They were skilful in the use of nets, snares and traps. The nets were made of willow bark or babiche (thongs of caribou hide.) They often speared caribou in the water from their canoes but shot down the musk-ox with arrows. Their beautiful hunting dog, white with black splotches on head and rump, is almost extinct.

The summer dwelling was a conical framework of poles covered with caribou hides, spruce bark or simply brush. This served the Chipewyan for winter also, but the others preferred rectangular huts, roped with spruce bark and chinked with moss.

Like other Indians who lived by the chase, the Mackenzie River tribes owned few tools and practically no furniture. In most of their knives the blade was a beaver tooth; only a few had blades of stone or native copper. Embroidery in porcupine quills obtained amongst them its highest development and the mesh bags of babiche were very attractive. Bark canoes in summer and toboggans and snowshoes in winter were characteristic.

No government was recognized, only common needs and ties of blood. Men wrestled for each other's wives, who meekly followed the victors. Dancing was the favourite pastime. They lacked faith in a Supreme Being or even in mighty deities to whom the native could turn in time of trouble. Life was precarious but death faced with indifference because of belief in a vague after-life.

Probably.

Miss Perch, "Yes, but how the nasty man will lie about me."

The Wrong Bent.

There was a dear little baby on the train, and a gentleman opposite said: "A fine child, madam. I trust he will grow into an upright and honourable man."

"Yes," smiled the mother, "but it will be rather difficult."

"As the twig is bent, so the tree's inclined," the gentleman said encouragingly.

"But the trouble is," replied the mother, "the twig is bent on being a girl."

Echoes of District Assembly Heard by Rotary Members

One of the finest opportunities for service Rotary has ever had in Canada will possibly come as a result of the war between Britain and Germany, James Smith told the Rotary club on Tuesday evening as he spoke briefly at the luncheon of which he was chairman. He felt citizens of the British Empire felt no particular ill-will for the German people, but for their government headed by Hitler and his Nazism.

The addresses of the evening were given by three local members, L. H. Doering, O. L. King and Dr. S. H. Hutt who gave their impressions of the Club Assembly held recently at Kemptville. They were introduced by Mr. Smith, and thanked by Rev. R. C. Tait.

Rev. R. C. Tait, in thanking the speakers of the evening, told the club it was of interest that war could not come to Germany until that country, along with Italy and Russia, had struck Rotary and other international service clubs from its map. Striving for world peace, Rotary had no place in the campaign of greed and hate being pursued by the country's leaders.

A. E. Bolster brought before the club the case of a young crippled boy of the district and the committee is now investigating. J. Howard Fulton was thanked by President Dr. S. H. Hutt for transporting two children to the Civic hospital clinic last week, and G. J. Hunt offered his car to take a young girl from Russell to the clinic this week.

Herbert Brown, recently transferred to Chesterville as manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, was formally welcomed to Rotary by President Hutt and presented with a book "Welcome to Rotary." Replying, Mr. Brown said he was pleased to become a member of the club and hoped he would show he was able to hold up his end of the plank.

Guests included Dr. F. J. Buckley and Hubert Dixon, both of town.

L. H. Doering gave an outline of the programme at the Kemptville session up to the closing session on Tuesday evening when 50 per cent of Chesterville's membership were present. He was impressed by the great show of enthusiasm displayed by the visiting Rotarians at all sessions, and he gave points of interest in several of the addresses.

O. L. King told of the talks by Adrien Newans, past District Governor who visited Chesterville last year, and of the talk on "Club Service" by "Bill" Allen," a past president of the Montreal club and also a past District Governor. W. Emery, also of Montreal spoke on the work of the club in its community.

Dr. S. H. Hutt told the club of the lay-out of the convention. The district was represented 100 per cent and he gained much useful information on the operations of Rotary. He was impressed by the round table conference of in-coming presidents where problems and work of the clubs were discussed freely. Jas. Thomas, who was a guest speaker of the local club last year, spoke to the assembly, and G. Howard Ferguson, a former Kemptville boy, was also heard.

Plan Holding "Open House" To Show Off High School

The High School Board, meeting at the school building last evening, asked Principal W. P. Markle to assist in arranging an "open house" at the school about the middle of October when parents of pupils and others interested will have an opportunity to visit the school and inspect the work of the students, changes in the building, the new rooms, and equipment. Mr. Markle promised the full co-operation of the staff.

While discussion was lengthy at the meeting, little actual business was done besides the passing of accounts. Included in the accounts was the purchase of three tables for the science room which, with the three installed last year, give the school a really up-to-date room for the teaching of this work.

ROBERTSON-GRISDALE.

Miss Florence Caroline Grisdale, younger daughter of the late Dr. J. H. Grisdale, was united in marriage to Donald Henry Robertson, elder son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest H.
