PROLIFIC CORN

Tuesday morning there arrived at this office with the Morewood mail carrier, George Flegg, a stalk of corn from the farm of Mr. Harry Hutchinson, west of Morewood, which carried seven silks and four of these on one branch together with a finely developed ear of corn about a foot long, which is said to be quite unusual.

Cornwall Man Admits Shooting To Scare Boys

Cornwall. — Shooting three shots from his 12-guage shot-gun to scare boys whom he thought were stealing apples in his orchard, has turned out to be a serious matter for Earl Rawline, 30, of 237 Marlborough street. Two boys are in the Hotel Dieu Hospital suffering from being hit by the number four shot with which the gun was loaded.

Rawlins was charged with shooting with intent to maim and in police court Wednesday night was allowed bail of $1.000. The boys struck by the shot are Albert Patrois, 12, of 62 William street, and Gerald Lanctot, 18, of 28 McConnell street north.

Patrois stopped three of the shots, one in his left arm, one in his right thigh, while the third chipped the lobe of his ear. Lanctot was hit by two pieces of shot, one lodging in the left side of his neck and the other in his arm.

Provincial police investigated and Rawlins admitted shooting the gun but explained that it was only to scare the boys whom he believed were stealing his apples. He said that the orchard had been robbed often lately and he was endeavouring to put a stop to it. The boys denied stealing from the orchard and told police that they were going by the orchard so as to be able to sneak into the Athletic grounds to see the box lacrosse match free.

Morewood United W.A. Prepares For Presbyterial

The ladies of the Woman's Association of the United Church were delightfully entertained at their regular meeting on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. A. E. Glasgow, of Cannamore. Plans were made to serve meals at the meeting of the Dundas-Grenville Presbytery which meets in Morewood in October.

A play will also be presented in October under the auspices of the Association. After the business session, a dainty lunch was served by the following ladies: Mrs. A. E. Glasgow, Mrs. A. W. Reveler, Mrs. Thos. Reveler, Mrs. Hudson Reveler, Mrs. Geo. McGregor and Mrs. Hector Carruthers.

Chesterville's Softballers Were Winners At Dunbar

The annual field day and programme of sporting events sponsored by the young people of Dunbar, held there on Saturday afternoon was a decided success with nearly 400 citizens and young folks of the community in attendance.

Softball was the main attraction of the afternoon sports card, with Chesterville boys carrying away the honours of the day. The Chesterville girls were also victorious when they defeated the Dunbar ladies' team 19 to 3. In the first game of the afternoon bill, Chesterville boys triumphed over Gallingertown 10-4, with Limerick taking down a close 6-4 win over the Colquhoun squad in the second match. Chesterville added another easy victory in the final tussle when they swamped Limerick to the tune of 11-1. The tug-of-war was won by the married men over the single men of Dunbar. Track and field events that were keenly contested comprised the balance of the lengthy programme.

Dick Merkley Has Many Friends

Monday evening the Music Hall was comfortably filled by an audience which enjoyed a splendid concert by local artists whom Dick Merkley had gathered around him in an endeavour to raise sufficient funds for Dick to take the Normal School course this term, and that the response was so good shows that at least a great many of our citizens wish him well and would like to see him attain his ambition. Mr. P. S. Boyd, as chairman, eulogized Dick's earnestness and abilities as he passed through Public School and High School as well as referring to his athletic ability which is proved in the possession of several cups and medals obtained in open competition. Over and above his successes in his studies he is no mean entertainer, getting a fine reception from the large audience Monday evening in the several numbers he presented. He was assisted by Miss Marion Casselman, Miss Madge Campderros, Mrs. Geo. Merkley, Miss Addie Campderros, Mr. Pat Flynn, Miss Ella Harrison, Mrs. Arthur Strader, Misses Rose and Jean Colquhoun, Miss Lillian Riddell, Master Francis Foley, Misses Marion Barkley and Mildred Merkley, Miss Marjorie Boyd, Mrs. P. Friday last, Mr. Robert Valley of town, brought to the Record Office a branch from a raspberry bush in his garden which carried a very heavy crop of fruit, there being eight fairly well ripened berries and fifty-two others in varying stages of ripeness. Paving Half Completed On Morrisburg Highway

Construction of the western half of King's Highway No. 31, between Morrisburg and Williamsburg, reached completion and work is now being done in Morrisburg. As foundation work was done for the whole width, the eastern half will be built in less than three weeks, allowing traffic to use the new pavement by the middle of October. So far the work has been done without an accident of any kind.

Former Chesterville Family In Automobile Accident

Mrs. M. B. Stewart and her young son Mack, well-known in Chesterville, and two women passengers, of Maxville, had a narrow escape from injury on Friday last when the heavy sedan, driven by Mrs. Stewart, skidded on a gravel road, a mile east of Maxville, and turned over in a deep ditch. Although the car was badly damaged, the occupants escaped with a few minor bruises.

Teacher's Death Accidental Coroner's Jury Declares

Casselman, Ont.—A coroner's jury under Dr. Martin Powers of Rockland inquiring into the circumstances of the drowning of Miss Margaret Landry, 21-year-old school teacher, when her car plunged off the municipal ferry at Martel's Corners, near Lemieux, on Tuesday last, returned a verdict of accidental death Saturday afternoon with recommendations that the municipality of Cambridge provide greater protection on the ferry.

Evidence was somewhat contradictory on the question of whether the brakes on Miss Landry's car were defective or not. Albert Mercier and Claude St. Louis ,appearing as witnesses for the municipality, testified the brakes were defective, while Ernest David, who had a short while previously examined the automobile, testified the brakes had held when descending an incline into his garage.

The general concensus of the evidence was that Miss Landry found herself unable to stop the car when she had run on to the ferry from a steep incline in the road at this point and that the machine had gone through the single protection of one railing at the end of the ferry and had plunged into the Nation river, trapping the young woman inside as she sat at the driving wheel. From the top of the hill to the ferry, the road was 87 feet long and marked a drop of 33 feet.

Miss Landry, who had been teaching at Lemieux, was returning to her home at Clarence Creek following the close of afternoon classes. She was accompanied by Anita Bray, 10, one of her pupils, and Mrs. M. Dube. At the top of the hill approaching the Nation river ferry at Martel's Corners, she had stopped and let Mrs. Dube and the young girl out. Continuing down the hill she had run her car on to the ferry but was unable to stop before it plunged through the single guard rail.

In the jury's verdict, it was recommended that the municipality of Cambridge, which operates the ferry, should provide further protection whether it be in the nature of blocks, on the floor, heavy cross chains or stronger poles at either end of the ferry. It was stated that there were no blocks and the only protection at the time of the fatality was a single bar which easily gave way.

Valuable University Scholarship Won By Perth Girl Student

Miss Bessie Carr, of Perth, who secured honours in all 11 upper school subjects last term, has been awarded the scholarship given by the late Dr. Moses Henry Tytkens, graduate of the University of Toronto, according to an announcement made by Principal John H. Hardy, of the Perth Colliage Institute, of which school Miss Carr was honour student.

The scholarship is valued at $500, of which $100 is payable in cash, the balance to be applied to fees at the university for four years. It is awarded annually for the highest average in eight upper school subjects and its terms stipulate acceptance of the option of Latin and Greek.

This year's winner secured first-class honours in eight subjects, including Latin and Greek, and second-class honours in the rest.

Miss Carr has enrolled for the classical course at Victoria College of the university.

Stern Parent: "Tommy, you are not to play with young Smith any more; I think he's a bad little boy."

Tommy: "Oh, daddy, he isn't—he's a good little boy! He's been in a reformatory school twice, and each time he's been let out for good conduct!"

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

The new "Domestic" grade of pears is defined in the Order-in-Council as "pears which are handpacked, sound and not less than 90 per cent free from worm holes, but may be slightly affected with scab and other minor defects, no culls and properly packed."

Minimum Car Weights.

Canadian railways have recently lowered the minimum car weight from 80,000 to 50,000 pounds for dry beans in bags, canned goods and powdered milk products. The reduction will be of benefit in promoting increased exports in these lines.

Dressed Poultry.

The demand for dressed poultry, according to T. A. Benson, Dominion Poultry Branch, has been a little more active during the past week, and while storage holdings are still somewhat heavy, the market holds fairly firm. Heavy fowl are scarce, as receipts in this class of poultry are less, probably owing to the better outlook for egg prices.

High Turnip Prices.

Owing to exceptionally dry weather, according to J. H. Purvis, general manager, Blackwater Turnip Growers Association, the turnip crop made an indifferent start. The crop is, on the average, about thirty days later than it would be under normal conditions.

He said that inspection of early sown turnips gives no indication of watercore or worm injury and, with sixty days of growing weather still available, fifty per cent of a normal yield may be expected. He estimates that prices for turnips will be higher owing to short feed and grain yields, and lowered vegetable production, with a probable maximum of twenty-five cents a bushel to the grower.

Ontario Bean Crop.

Prospects throughout the Ontario bean belt, according to Ontario Marketing Board advices, indicate a short crop.

Kent and Elgin counties, representing over eighty per cent of the bean acreage, were particularly hard hit by dry weather. Conditions in Huron County, however, have been more favourable. Some crops have benefited by recent rains, but these are throwing the beans into second growth. This condition will render the crop late in maturing, and open great danger from frost. The carrying over of beans from the 1932 crop is less than that of a year ago, and July has been the best month in the bean business since March.

Eggs for market should never be exposed to direct sunlight, rain, or to extreme heat. It is a good plan always to keep eggs covered with a cloth or other means to prevent fading or evaporation. In marketing, or at any other time, eggs should not be placed near kerosene, onions, fish or other strong smelling substances, because the eggs readily absorb odours.

The Bumble Flower-Beetle on Fruit.

At the present time a considerable number of inquiries are being received from fruit growers about a beetle the Bumble Flower-Beetle—which is attacking ripening fruit. This insect is a yellow-brown beetle, one-half inch or more in length, with its wing covers sprinkled all over with small irregular black spots. In late summer it is found every year, in greater or less numbers, on ripe fruit—peaches, pears, grapes and apples—and also on corn, but it is rarely responsible for serious damage. In fact, declared W. A. Ross, Dominion Entomologist at Vineland, we have never seen this insect cause commercial injury in Ontario, and consequently we have never had occasion to advise the adoption of any control measures.

Richest Farm Manure.

Poultry manure is undoubtedly the richest produced on the farm. Poultry manure, however, ferments very quickly, losing, if left exposed, a large proportion of its nitrogen as ammonia. This fact emphasizes the desirability of systematically and frequently cleaning off the boards beneath the roosts, a plan that also conduces to the general good health and thrift of the fowl. In summer the manure, previously mixed with loam to destroy stickiness and facilitate distribution, may be applied directly to the land and worked with the surface soil—its best preservative. In winter (and at other seasons when the manure cannot be used directly) it should be mixed with a fair proportion of loam, dried peat, muck or sawdust, together with a little land plaster or superphospate to fix the nitrogen. It should then be packed tightly in barrels or boxes and stored protected from rain until required in the spring. Lime and wood ashes should not be used for this purpose as they set free nitrogen. Poultry manure being essentially nitrogenous is particularly valuable for garden and leafy crops generally, and the majority of poultry keepers will no doubt do well to reserve it for this use. However, if the amount available permits, it can be profitably employed for the cereals, grasses, roots and corn.

Field Crop Classes.

A greater number of entries than in 1932 was received in the Field Crop Competition Class at the C. N. E. and the quality of some of the classes was particularly outstanding. These classes are open to exhibitors who had competed in the Field Crop Competitions during the years 1929 to 1933 inclusive. Some wonderful wheat sheaves were entered from Western Ontario and the barley class had some remarkable samples from Eastern Ontario. In fact with the exception of a few entries from new exhibitors, quality prevailed throughout.

The Racket of Robber Bees.

Although honey stealing by bees is likely to be most troublesome in late summer, the bee-keeper has to keep in mind that robber bees may start their racket at any time. In warm weather when there is little or no honey to be got from flowers, the bees will easily yield to any temptation to obtain it anyhow. After more or less fighting they will overpower any very weak colonies, and carry the honey to their own hives. Old robber bees have a shiny appearance the hair having become worn off with entering so many different hives. No colony should be allowed to grow weak, says the Dominion Apiarist, and no honey or syrup should be exposed in the apiary.

Weekily Crop Report.

Most livestock is reported somewhat on the thin side owing to general shortage of pasture. Straw will be at a premium this winter, says a report from Simcoe. In Waterloo extremely bad weather has practically ruined the turnip crop and turnip aphids are also doing much damage. Local canning factories in Brant are buying tomatoes on grade for the first time and this appears to be very satisfactory. The planting of fall wheat has been held up by lack of rain in most district. Lincoln County reports a tremendous wastage of peaches from brown rot. Corn in Middlesex is ripening prematurely on account of dry weather and some fields have borer infestation. The apple crop looks promisiong in Prince Edward. Acreage of fall wheat, as in other districts, will be greatly increased over last year. Optimistic reports come from Dundas County where livestock conditions have improved with recent rains to freshen the pastures, where good yields of various grain crops have been obtained and where apples are very promising. Rains have also helped late potatoes, new seeding, corn, buckwheat and pastures in Leeds County. Completion of the initial T. B. test in Leeds showed 3.92 per cent of reactors, a figure considered extremely low for an initial test. A very large acreage of fall wheat will be sown in Lennox and Addington. A report from Temiskaming states that this has been one of the finest seasons in a number of years for carrying on farm operations. Potatoes will be a very fair crop there and a considerable quantity of fall wheat has been sown.

The very enjoyable evening was brought to a close at midnight by joining hands with the bride and groom in the centre and singing, "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows," and "Auld Lang Syne."

Mr. Johnston, on behalf of his wife thanked all for coming to help them celebrate their wedding day and hoped they all had a pleasant evening, and a safe drive home.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston are members and active workers in Knox Presbyterian Church, Mrs. Johnston being a member of the choir and ex-president of the W. M. S. Mr. Johnston is an up-to-date progressive farmer and has on his farm an accredited, registered herd of cattle.

Father was giving some parental advice to his grown-up son.

"When you're married, my boy," he said, "you should try to make the same arrangement with your wife as your mother and I made."

"What was that?" asked the boy, puzzled.

"Well, we agreed that she was to have the deciding word in all small matters, and that anything of importance was left to me."

"Sounds all right," said the boy. "How did it work out?"

Father looked thoughtful.

"Perfectly," he replied, "although now I come to think of it I don't remember anything of importance ever cropping up."

World's Fair Flashes

By Tom McKenna.

Chicago, Ill. — Phil Friedlander, radio announcer known as the "Voice of the Air," told me this one last night:—At the Twenty-third street gate of the Fair grounds one of our traffic police officers blew his whistle to halt the North and South traffic. When one of the machines failed to heed the signal the copper tooted his whistle several times and finally succeeded in stopping the Fair-gazing driver. After the customary polite bawling-out the officer asked, "Where are you from?" To which the driver replied "Albany. "Oh, yeah?" blustered the limb of the law. "Well, what are you doing with a New York license on your car?"

Faith Bacon, the Fair's newest Fan Dancer, has the public all agog with her several presentations. She is putting in her turns at the Hollywood-At-The-Fair and has made many of the "old timers" forget about dear old (?) Sally Rand. Dav Scholtz, the Governor of Florida, saw a special performance of Faith's number and said it was much improved over the Follies twist that she did several years ago. Admiral S. Haydon also stamped his approval of the entertainment.

Officials of "Wings of a Century" pageant of transportation at the Century of Progress are keeping an extra-watchful eye these days on the "Old General," veteran locomotive used for a ballyhoo out in front of a show. Reason: Joseph W. Parrott of Kent, Ohio, and his mother, Mrs. Gertrude Parrott, visited the pageant the other day and may be still in town. Back in the Civil War Days, when the "General" was the crack engine of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad, Mr. Parrott's grandfathers were two of the Union soldiers who stole the locomotive. His mother is the daughter of W. W. Brown, engineer, who piloted the "General" after it was captured.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has offered special round trip tickets from Montreal, Cornwall and Morrisburg, Ont., as well as many other points in Eastern Canada. The entire programme will be in French with the exception of the singing of the Star Spangled Banner. A group of French folk songs will be sung by a chorus of 150 mixed voices.

Thousands of Odd Fellows will gather at the Century of Progress to celebrate Odd Fellows' Day on Friday, September 15th. The gang is estimated to run in the neighbourhood of 45,000.

To Combat Hay Fever.

By consuming fresh yeast and cod-liver oil, K. Kitsuta of the Ohio Agricultural Experimental Station at Wooster, Ohio, has found an effective means of combatting hay fever.

Mr. Kitsuta recommends four teaspoons of cod-liver oil three times daily and also one cake of fresh yeast daily.

Scientific research has shown that hay fever is partly due to the lack of certain vitamins in the diet and this is corrected by the consumption of yeast and cod-liver oil.

Scores of hay fever sufferers have tried this remedy and found it effective in getting quick relief. One sufferer recently tried it and said it was the first time he was free of hay fever in 37 years. In most cases the symptoms of hay fever disappear within two days after this treatment is started.

"Are you sure you love me?" said a pretty girl to her admirer.

"Love you?" echoed the smitten one. "Why, darling, while I was bidding you goodbye on the porch last night your dog bit a piece out of the calf of my leg and I never noticed it till I got home."

Gleanings From The Greens

Culled by Arthur Ogilvie.

Last Thursday looked like a gala night on the greens when six rinks turned out for prize night. Before play began plans were discussed for Labour Day. Then the fight began and lasted way into the night, in fact, until past midnight before a winner was declared when Dr. Hutt and his hearties took the pipes. The score was as follows:-

Flynn, Slosser, Hamlin and Hutt, skip 26
Brownlee, King, Hess and Dixon, skip 22
Peake, Harper, Casselman and Hanna skip 18
Senn, Wales, Doering and Cass skip 18
Merkley, Olsen, Wood and Lawson skip 17
Lacey, Lloyd, Robertson and Clayton skip 16

At the last minute and after Hanna had arranged to take Hess, Merkley and Hutt to the Jamboree in Ottawa the local boys decided it was too nice a day to let go by, so a local tourney was arranged with doubles in the afternoon and night. In the afternoon event ten pairs entered and Senn and Doering took down 24 points to capture the bed lamps while Flynn and Lawson got 23 points to win the consolation, pickle trays.

The evening rink competition with five men to a side went to:-

Slosser, Peake, Senn, Robertson and Cass—skip 18
Elliott, Doering, Brownlee, Clayton and Hamlin—skip 17
Lloyd, King, Olsen, Lawson and Dixons—kip 16
Wood, Flynn, Alguire, Durant and Casselman—skip 15

The play was close at all time and it was only after the last end had been played that Cass was the victor when he beat Ham by one shot although Dubbie led the pack by five points at the end of the second game. He was lucky to win at that as he got a few bad breaks in the last few ends, but that only made the Pyrex pie plates look all the better.

Tuesday night was prize night. The boys are sure getting enough of bowling this week and four rinks entered, and Robertson made Hanna a present of the socks when Jim placed the jack back on the mat.

The teams line up as follows:-

Senn, Wales, Clayton and Hanna—skip 21
Flynn, Slosser, Wood and Lacey—skip 13
Harper, Doering, Gilroy and Dixon—skip 13
Hess, Olsen, Casselman and Robertson—skip 11

Gord Senn clicked three times in two days; if this keeps up he will have to borrow one of J.W.'s box cars to hold it all. Everyone enjoyed the Labour Day bowling and certainly had fine weather for it.

Most of the new members entered the Doubles and got a lot of fun and experience out of it.

Our good secretary, J. W., blew in last night from his annual vacation looking hale and hearty. Nice time, J. W.?

Last Thursday, the 8th, brought out four teams for the sherbet glasses and plates. The draw was as follows:

Flynn, Senn, Durant and Clayton skip 22
Lloyd, Wales, Hess and Hutt skip 17
Lacey, Merkley, Robertson and Hamlin skip 12
Campbell, Olsen, Wood and Hanna skip 9

The two Docs went into the last game tied up but Clayton was unbeatable with Durant playing the game he was that night.

Mr. Campbell of the Huntsville Club was a visitor that night playing for Hanna. He found our greens much keener than he had been used to in fact the best he had seen this year as their greens suffered some winter kill. Gord Senn was in the money for four straight.

* * * *

Tuesday, the twelfth, saw only the hard boiled members out and they played doubles as it was too cold for the fair weather boys. Hutt and Olsen took home two of the sherbet glasses each when they ran a neck and neck finish with Hamlin and Harper at 21 to 19.

Hanna and Flynn fought it out with Robertson and Clayton to see which was the worst for 11 - 9.

The greens were in fair shape but a little rolling would have helped.

The fair bowlers seem to be getting all the breaks from Ken.

* * * *

The boys can well afford to pat themselves on the back as the street dance was an unqualified success and the club will realize about $70.00 to make much needed improvements on the greens. The various committees are to be congratulated on their efforts and our sincere thanks goes to the Band and all those who so generously gave their time and assistance in making things run smoothly. We hope this may be an annual event as everyone enjoyed the evening, even to the boys in the Bingo booth until they lost their voices. Wasn't it hard to keep the feet still when Sparky got things tuned up? There must have been about 350 dancing and about a thousand looking on. The crowd was very orderly considering the size.

Rubbing Hub Caps.

A wise driver gives the cars he meets as much room as he reasonably can. He does not rub hub-caps with people whose driving experience he knows nothing about. The authorities governing the highways might profitably gather information about so-called head-on collisions and ascertain how many of them were side-swiped or mere miscalculations of a few inches on the part of one car or the other. And the length of experience of the different drivers could be recorded. The object would not be to put the blame on the green drivers, but, perhaps, to build up a body of statistics which might teach experienced drivers the danger of assuming that when they are hitting 60 miles an hour every car they meet is able to share the road with them to a margin of a few inches. Just a little panic in the other car may cause a sudden in-swerve of a few inches—another head - on collision makes news on the front pages.

Premier George S. Henry Is Now "Putting On Dog"

Hon. George S. Henry will be "putting on dog" in real earnest this season, and prize dog at that!

He, as Premier of Ontario, is to be made the recipient of what is probably the first scarf made of dog's hair in the world. Certainly it is the first ever made in Ontario, and it has the added distinction of being made from the hair of "Smokey," the first prize sheepdog at the Canadian National Exhibition. The "wool" was combed from the prize dog at the C. N. E., carded, spun and woven there.

Curiosity—or perhaps it was just intuition displayed by Mrs. Inglis, wife of the president of the C. N. E., prompted the creation of this novel scarf. As Mrs. Inglis watched Miss Cluff, owner of "Smokey," combing his hair, she wondered—as his hair was so like the wool of the sheep which was being spun at the Pioneer's Exhibit under the direction of the Guild of All Arts—if "Smokey would not weave."

She wondered out loud and Mrs. Forbes Marden, the spinner, and Mrs. Heartwell, the carder, "believed perhaps he would."

Miss Cliff volunteerd -to -collect the "combings." That was several days ago. Monday Mrs. Henry accepted on behalf of the Premier of Ontario a scarf of two shades of grey made from the "pearl blue white" combings of Smokey, the prize-winning sheepdog of the C.N.E. It has been spun and woven by Mrs. Marsden, and Mrs. Heartwell carded the hair which Miss Cluff gathered as she groomed her prize purp for the big show It was an interesting group of folk who were present at four o'clock on Monday afternoon to see the scarf which Hon. George S. Henry will wear when he "puts on dog," handed over to his charming wife "in trust" and with pride.

Contests Will Encourage Children To Protect Teeth

Health is normal. Nature gives most people a fair start in life in repect to their physical well being. They become sick because of lack of knowledge, lack of care or inability for some reason to get the things needed to maintain health. Health care must start in early life; children must be informed in respect to natures laws and encouraged to form habits which will be helpful in the development of a sound body. The encouragement to be given to the boys and girls may take one or more of many forms and one of the most useful methods is a friendly contest.

The Ontario Department of Health has arranged one of these contests in connection with the school fairs at Williamsburg, Brinston, South Mountain, Maple Ridge and Morewood. A competent and impartial dentist will examine the mouths of the boys and girls who enter this dental health contest and prizes will be given to those who excel. A number of things will be taken into consideration such as the efficiency of the mouth as a chewing machine, the condition of the teeth and gums and the effort the child has made to maintain dental health.

Some people claim that girls take better care of their teeth than boys and so, in order to avoid the least appearance of unfairness, separate contests have been arranged. Young children will have an opportunity to show how well they can use their first or deciduous teeth, girls and boys who are gradually losing their first and getting their second set and older children who have nearly all their permanent teeth will have separate contests suitable to the age group. The contests will all be of the most friendly nature and the examining dentist when making the awards will give the children valuable advice in respect to the proper care of their mouths.

This activity is part of a general public health effort now being conducted in the Five Eastern counties of Ontario by the Provincial Department of Health with the active co-operation of the Ontario Dental Association, the Canadian Dentay Hygiene Council, the Ontario Medical Association and the Canadian Public Health Association.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By . . . ETTA BITTA PYE.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR USING OUR DELICIOUS PEACH CROP.

HOW LONG is it since you bought peaches, so early in their period of good quality, as cheaply as you did this season? Like a lot of other garden produce that has come so easily to our tables, these peaches have made us more than a little regretful at our own good luck—for such a low price means that the grower must have little indeed for his crop.

However, let us be good to ourselves and helpful to him, by making the broadest possible use of this incomparable fruit that grows to such perfection in the Niagara Peninsula and the orchards that radiate from it.

Easy Peach Pudding.

Two cups thinly sliced, fresh, ripe peaches or pears, quinces or any seasonable fruit; 1 cup bread crumbs, 6 tablespoons butter, 6 tablespoons sugar ½ cup finely chopped almonds or pecans.

Rub a glass baking dish with butter put in a layer of the peaches, then bread crumbs, sprinkle with cinnamon, dot with small dabs of butter, and add chopped nuts. Repeat until the dish is full. Bake in a warm (300) degrees) oven until the peaches are soft. Serve cold with rich cream. This is delicious with apples, too.

Peach Chips.

This unusual conserve is superb with hot biscuits in the winter and as a breakfast tables conserve.

8 pounds ripe peaches, sliced thin
6 pounds sugar,
3 lemons, sliced very thin, (with the peel on)
1 small jar (about a cup) of prepared ginger ,sliced thin

Cook all together slowly, in an enamelled or agate kettle for two hours. Place in freshly - sterilized jelly glasses, let cool, and cover with paraffin.

Peach Shortcake.

Always there is a shortcake! And while strawberries are the usual fruit with this recipe, there is nothing to prevent a clever housewife from using her shortcake recipes with other berries, and especially at this season with peaches.

The shortcake recipe is repeated here for the benefit of any readers who missed it on earlier pages:

2 cups flour
3 teaspoons of baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
¼ cup shortening
¾ cup milk

Sift the dry ingredients twice, then work in the shortening with two spatulas, or the pastry blender, or two knives, until smoothly mixed. Add the milk gradually, mix quickly, turn on to a lightly floured board, and roll to the shape of a round baking pan.

Rub the baking pan with shortening, lift the dough into it, shape with the fingers to fit the pan, and bake fifteen minutes in a hot (400 degrees) oven. Split, fill with the peach mixture, and serve with cream.

To prepare the peaches, select very ripe ones, peel, cut in thin slices and sprinkle with sugar. Let stand until juicy. Use some of the juice to flavour whipped cream for the top of the dessert.

Tapioca and Peaches.

Slice very ripe, peeled peaches, thin and sprinkle with sugar. Arrange in a glass dessert dish, and cover with hot, freshly-made tapioca custard. Dot with whipped cream, or serve with cream mixed with peach juice. To make the tapioca custard, simply cook one-half cup tapioca in two cups of milk slowly for 15 minutes, then remove from the heat and add the beaten yolks of two eggs and three-fourths cup of sugar. Mix thoroughly, cook a few minutes; add beaten egg whites when the custard is cool.

"Borrowing money, lady," replied the prisoner.

"Borrowing money?" she echoed. "But surely they don't put people in prison for borrowing money?"

The prisoner shrugged his shoulders unhappily.

"I know," he replied; "but I had to knock the man down three or four times before he would lend it to me!"

HEALTH

by

Dr. Richard Hemming M.D.

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

"GOING—GOING—!"

"TOP OFF, half gone, all gone" of the fairy tale about the cat and the bowl of cream might be used to describe what is occurring with regard to diphtheria, at least in most enlightened communities.

A few years ago, it was proclaimed that diphtheria could be prevented; to-day we can say that diphtheria is being prevented and that, in a number of places, it has actually been banished.

This is one of the most remarkable achievements of our age. For centuries diphtheria was a menac to child life, taking a heavy toll year after year. Then came diphtheria antitoxin, one of the great discoveries of the latter part of the past century. Antitoxin saves life; when it is given at the onset of the disease its use has preserved many thousands of lives.

In spite of the benefits of antitoxin deaths continue to occur because, for one reason or another, there was delay in its use. Furthermore, antitoxin could control the spread of diphtheria.

Then came the great discovery that through the use of a new substance, diphtheria toxoid, diphtheria could actually be prevented. This meant that children could actually be protected and that parents need no longer fear that their little ones would contract diphtheria.

This prevention is not a theory. It is a well-tried, practical method. Thousands of Canadian children have been immunized against diphtheria. They have received the necessary injections of toxoid and, as a result, their bodies are capable of overcoming any diphtheria germs with which they may come in contact.

For parents, the important points to know are, first, that it is only the children who have been immunized who are protected. Unless your child is one of these, then your child is still being exposed to all the dangers of diphtheria.

The second point is that diphtheria occurs most commonly and is most fatal during the earliest years of life. This means that children should be immunized before they are one year old, as otherwise they may contract the disease. To delay means taking a chance for which there is no justification. To act promptly gives your child the protection to which he has a right, and ensures that he will pass through his early childhood unharmed by diphtheria. Do not delay; lose no time; act now!

FEET ON THE EARTH

THE RURAL CARRIER had put the daily mail into the box by the front gate, but Barbara Cline had not run down the path to see what he had left. Her correspondence had dwindled to occasional letters from her nearest of kin; the clank of the mail-box lid meant little except the daily paper and the monthly magazines.

The morning had been full to overflowing. She had hurried with the family washing, hurried to the garden to get the vegetables for dinner, hurried from cellar to kitchen and from kitchen to porch in the effort to have dinner on time when the men-folks came from the field.

Twelve-year-old Barbara helped with the vegetables, seven-year-old Rita was setting the table, and five-year-old Benton was fetching water in a quart pail from the pump out in the yard. Fifteen-year-old Jasper, or Jap Junior, as he was called, was out in the field at work—almost making a full hand, his father boasted proudly. Dinner was on the table when the men came to the house.

"Any mail?" Jap Senior inquired, puffing and blowing and shaking the water from his hair as he came to the towel hanging on the roller beside the kitchen door.

"I haven't gone to the box," Barbara answered. "I never find time for the daily paper until after dinner."

"I'll go, mother." And young Jap was off down the walk.

"Look at that!" His father chuckled. "After a hard morning's work, too. There'll be some track medals in this family when that boy gets to college."

"A letter for father," Jap Junior shouted from the front door. "Looks as if it had been all over the state."

"Then it can wait a while longer while we get dinner out of the way," his mother suggested.

But a letter was enough of a novelty to make Jasper Cline pause before eating dessert to look at the postmark and the various statements that it had been sent out on various rural routes from Bowerton before the post-office people had discovered that it was intended for the town of Burroughs.

"Looks like Tom Padden's writing, or near-writing," he grumbled. "No wonder they couldn't make it out. Wonder he ever got my name so they could read it." He opened the envelope. "It is from Tom Padden. It has been on the road for ten days, and he writes to inform us that we are to attend our class re-union to-morrow night."

"I hadn't thought of this as being commencement week. How queer that I should forget it! Well, maybe we can be ready to go next year," Barbara sighedd.

"You'll be ready to go to-morrow night," Jasper announced. "Wait until I read this to you: 'We must all get together this time, because Jack and Eda are home on furlough and have requested it. They are hungry to see the old bunch, and we can't fail them, after all they have done to bring honour to the class. I have the promise of everyone I could reach by telephone, and I feel sure of the rest of you.'"

Tears had rushed to Barbara Cline's eyes. "Jack and Eda, bless their hearts!" she exclaimed softly. "I don't see how I can go, but I will!"

She had not mentioned the matter of clothes, but Jasper knew what she was thinking.

"We will have time to get some things in the city," he said quickly. "I need some shoes, and I'll give you any amount you say you need. It isn't like the last time, when there wasn't an money for things."

He got up quickly from the table and pushed back his chair, forgetting his dessert.

"I must hurry, for I have to plan the work ahead for to-morrow besides finishing what I planned for to-day. Don't work too hard this afternoon for we shall have to get up early to catch the train over at Burroughs, and you will lie awake all night to see that the alarm clock does its duty."

Not work hard? Barbara laughed as she hurried through the dishwashing. She must bring in the clothes on the line and iron at least a part of them. She must go across the fields and get Grandma Brown to come and stay with the children; then she must bake a lot of things for to-morrow, so that the work should not be too hard for grandmamma and Barbara After she came back from her trip across the fields to Grandma Brown's she washed her hair and then began her ironing before her hair was dry, for the afternoon was going fast. A damp wisp of hair drifted in the breeze across her perspiring forehead and she said half fretfully to Barbara:

"It will just look old-fashioned and horried, as it did the last time we went to a re-union. That's where a farmer has the advantage over a farmer's wife. He can walk into a barbar shop and be shaved and have all the tired lines massaged out of his face, get a hair cut and look just as well as his city brother; but a farm woman can't keep up with all the hairdressing fads. And a farmer has the advantage in clothes, too. If he has a good serge suit, he can get a new collar and tie and a pair of shoes and be at least inconspicuous; but his wife—O dear! I stopped attending even my own class banquets because I could never have a dress that was in style. I didn't need new party frocks out here every year, and when I wore a fluffy one all the others appeared in plain, straight affairs; and if I finally acquired elbow sleeves the others wore sleeves down to their knuckles. I just gave it up because I couldn't look like the other girls."

"But, mother," protested Barbara, "you look prettier than anybody in your navy blue dress. It's so soft and silky, and you never get mussy-looking, no matter where you wear it, and you look so—well, you look like your own self and not as if you were all fixed up trying to look like other folks."

Barbara Cline stopped ironing long enough to give her thoughtful little daughter a loving hug.

"You blessed comforter," she said. "I'll find time to make a new white collar for the navy blue dress, and I'll try to forget my worries and be content to look just like myself and have a perfectly glorious day to make up for all the hard work before and afterwards."

But as she ironed she was thinking of the last re-union they had attended, and she sighed, remembering not so much the pleasant greetings of old friends as how dowdy she had felt in her old-fashioned dress, and how cool and fresh and smart all the other women had looked.

As a whole the class had strongly disapproved of her and Jasper's chossing to live in the country. But in spite of many discouragements and years of hard work they had finally won their battle with the soil. They were beginning to feel well repaid for all their sacrifices, for they had assured a future for their children. But the better times had not yet affected the family clothing. Barbara thought a trifle resentfully of Jasper's generous offer of money for the morrow. It would have meant so much to her to have known a few weeks earlier that she could have some money. After the last re-union she had resolved that she would not go again until she could go as well clad as any of the other girls of the class. But Jack and Eda Burton—she could not refuse their request.

It was late at night when she finally blew out the light and crept quietly into the bedroom without waking Jasper. When the alarm clock wakened her she dressed hastily and set a hurried breakfast for the two of them. She kissed the sleeping children and gave a few last directions to Grandma Brown. Then she and Jasper drove the seven miles to the station, where they arrived just in time to turn the horse and buggy over to the liveryman before the early train made its stop.

tThey arrived at the city half an hour before the stores opened.

"Well, I know just what I'll do," Jasper said. "I'll go straight to a barber shop and get a shave and a hair cut; then I'll get my shoes and see about some business, then go to a clothier's and get into a new collar and tie. And I want you to take this money and get whatever you need. It doesn't make any dicerence what it costs. We've had our prosperous time since we've seen the old bunch, and I want you to look like the other girls."

Barbara's face flushed. Had Jasper also noticed how dowdy the farmer's wife had looked among the wives of his professional brothers?

"If you get through before I do," he continued, "you can rest a while somewhere and then meet me in time for the two-o'clock car. That will get us there in time to see all the buildings and have a walk through the old Campus. You know that Tom said we were to meet in Chilmers Hall before the banquet; so we want plenty of time. Don't forget to eat a lunch somewhere. I'm hungry now, and you didn't eat a bit of breakfast. Goodbye." And Jasper went on down the street.

Barbara leaned back in one of the rocking-chairs in the waiting room and closed her eyes. She was tired. Her head seemed to beat against the back of the chair in time with her heartbeats. She was almost sorry she had come. When the clock assured her that it was time for the shops to be open she went to one of the best ones. The clerks were busy uncovering counters and show cases; she went up to the rest room to give them time to look a trifle more cordial and also to collect her thoughts and decide what to buy. A young girl, hurrying down the hall to the clerks' lockers, glanced in at the rest room and then rushed forward.

"Aunt Bab, you darling!" She threw her arms around Barbara. "Don't you remember Wanda, Wanda Myers?"

"Why, Wanda, you—"

"Yes, of course I've changed. It's been ages since you saw me. I've had time to grow to be a working woman. Bob is working here too. He is down in the basement where they uncrate things. You wouldn't know him, I'm sure. He is so tall and thin, and he was so fat that time when we had the glorious two weeks out on your farm. Bob talks about it all even yet—the wonderful cream and all the fried chicken we could eat. He still loves to eat, but it doesn't seem to fatten him up any more."

"Bob, little Bob, working?" Barbara exclaimed.

"Yes," Wanda answered almost resentfully. "Why shouldn't we both be working? Poor father has been so sick we'd be ashamed just to sit round through vacation time and let him worry about the rent and the clothes and our books for next -year and everything. Half the boys and girls we know are working in store and factories this summer. But here I am, doing all the talking when I want to just look and look at you."

Barbara Cline shrank from the big window. "Oh, my dear, I know how mussed and frousy and tanned I am; so don't come very close—please!"

"You look perfectly beautiful," said the girl warmly. "So strong and capable and—so like yourself."

Barbara laughed. "You and little Barbara use the same expression in describing me. Whom could I look like, pray, if not myself?"

"You know what I mean!" Wanda exclaimed. "You're just you, and you are not trying to look like everybody else. And your beautiful hair! How lucky you are to have so much of it, with your permanent put in by nature instead of by machinery! But I think the best thing of all is that you look so perfectly healthy and comfortable. I'd give all I hope to earn this summer to see mother look like that. I'm so glad mother will see you at the class re-union. It will do her so much good, for she has always loved you best of all the girls. I had hard work to persuade mother and dad that they ought to go to-night, but there! I'm taking it for granted that you are on your way out to the college re-union. You are, aren't you?"

"Yes; and I want you and Bob to be my guests at lunch," Barbara said quickly. "I know you must hurry now to your work, but I want to see you both and have a real visit with you."

"Oh, Auntie Bab, how kind of you! And Bob happens to have the same lunch hour as I have this week. But we ought to have invited—t"

"No, indeed! I've had my orders to eat a big lunch, and I don't know what to eat! so I'm overjoyed to find two youngsters who understand city food."

After luncheon Wanda helped adjust the clean white collar, and with that and the new shoes she declared that Aunt Bab looked well enough to go anywhere and as sweet as a June rose.

Jasper Cline was waiting at the interurban station. "You look great!" he said after looking her over. "What did you buy?"

Barbara's eyes were dancing, and her face was flushed with happiness. "I bought a pair of shoes and a handkerchief; and one big bill out of the roll you gave me went for a luncheon with two invited guests. O Jap, I found Wanda and Bob Myers working in a department store—all their vacation. Bob is down in the basement and looks as white as a winter potato sprout. I just wanted to gather them both up and run away with them out to the farm, where they could live in the fresh air and sunshine until time to start to school again. They'd love it so! They talk of that little visit out on our farm as if it were one of the brightest spots in their lives."

"A handkerchief, shoes and a big lunch for the kids of our old friends," said Jasper whisically, "and yet she looks all right to me."

Just then an excited woman rushed across the platform toward them, fairly dragging a man after her and calling, "It's Jap and Bab. What luck! Just the two we wanted most besides Jack and Eda!"

Nellie and Jim Vance took possession of the Clines; several others bound for the old college joined the two couples, and it seemed only a little time before they were all on the old campus, gathered round Jack and Eda and all talking at once. Jack and Eda were easily the centre of things as they had been in the old days before their years of service in a heathen land. Their clothing looked as if it were the last thing in their thoughts and of little importance to them except as a covering for the body. But no one thought of Jack's end Eda's clothes.

Barbara noticed that she and Jasper did not look shabby in comparison with the others. There seemed to be a marked difference in the clothing of many of those who hitherto had spent much time and money on dress. She also observed with a pang of pity that many of her old friends appeared faded and worn, and she found herself wondering whether she seemed changed.

The banquet was informal. There was no set programme and no toastmaster; but toward the close Jack Burton stood up at the head of the table.

"You are to do us a favour now," he said. "Eda and I want to know all about you. Through the frantic efforts of some freshman writer to find material for the alumni column of the college monthly you've been kept well informed about us and our affairs each year. We are on furlough now and are surely entitled to this short time to fix our thoughts on the homeland and our old friends. For our own diversion I'm going to call on you, each one of you, each one by the name I knew best, and you're to stand up and tell us your present name, address, occupation, the number in family, names of members of the family and any other facts I may wish to inquire into; and if I forget any facts that the rest of you want to inquire about, I'll allow a few questions besides my own."

A storm of protest arose, but Jack silenced it by saying, "You'd better obey orders, or I'll add that each one shall tell his age. First we'll hear from Old Sport, our once famous orator."

"Sporter — Sporter Myers!" the crowd called.

Joseph Myers had been the best-dressed man, the best impromptu speaker, the gayest, wealthiest member of the old class. Now he started well with witty speeches that brought forth gales of laughter; but Barbara Cline, remembering Wanda's expression, "poor father," noticed how thin his face had grown and the lines about his eyes and the graying hair about his temples She noticed also that his suit had evidently seen service for more than one season.

One by one Jack called them out by their old nicknames, and the crowd leaned eagerly forward to hear all the droll replies to his quick questions.

"And now we will hear from our one king of the soil, Jap Cline," Jack said, adding mischievously, "Perhaps he can be induced to tell us how to get the latest hair cut—with a white line about the face and neck. Anyway, we'd like to ask what has changed him from a thin, stoop-shouldered bookworm to the broad-shouldered, pompous individual we see before us to-night."

"That's not fair—to poke fun at a man when you're introducing him," Jasper said solemnly; "so I'm going to leave him guessing about the new style white halo that all prosperous farmers are now wearing. You know I can't make a speech,—never could,—but I can tell you a prescription for getting rid of stooped shoulders, you fellows with the white-collared jobs, and your feet under desks, or on top of 'em. I'll tell you just how many acres of underbrush and green brier you need to grub, turning the said wilderness into a paying cornfield, and how many acres you will need to plough and mow in order to acquire a complexion like mine—up to the halo."

There was applause as he sat down, but his wife's proud glance was his best reward.

In some cases ,where both husband and wife were members of the class, Jack Burton had excused the woman from speaking; Barbara had been sure that she could beg off when her turn came. She had found her place card beside that of Ben Stanton and had hoped that none of the others would remember how often in the old days her place had been beside Ben, until Jasper had suddenly monopolized all of her time. Bob had never married and this was the first reunion he had ever attended. He had climbed to the top of his profession in the big city, and the others had said with a good-natured shrug that old Ben was too busy getting rich to pay any attention to old friends. He had talked freely to Barbara to-night about his own life and about her life on the farm.

"It certainly has been the life for you,' 'he had said, looking into her eyes. "You have developed in so many ways. Look at my sister Jen across there; anyone not knowing you two would guess that you were ten years her junior, but I happen to know that you are a year older. If the country gives to women that capable, efficient, youthful appearance, then I'd surely recommend it to all the other women of our class."

Barbara's face had flushed under the direct honest compliment, and the flush still lingered when some one called from the other end of the table:

"Bab, Bab Benton. Make Bab tell us how to stay young and beautiful though wedded to a farmer."

"Give them your receipt, Bab," Jack said. "They're all envious. Is it the old one of early to bed and early to rise, making you pretty, witty and wise? Tell these women how you manage to pass away your time, buried alive on that far-away farm—" And he drew his voice into the exact imitation of the Jen Stanton of other days, bewailing the fate of her beloved roommate.

Barbara stood up. There was a timid, startled look in her big eyes until she met her husband's glance. Jap was proud of her. She looked like the other girls, only a great deal younger. The old spirit of mischief crept into her eyes.

"Perhaps the best way to give you an idea of trifling tasks that make up the days of my idle, aimless existence would be to use the popular plan of comparison, taking distances and heights with which you are all familiar. If all the plump loaves of good bread I've baked since I last saw you were stacked up in a pyramid, they would be as high as the college belfry, including the old senior flagstaff which Sporter risked his life to put in the highest spot about the campus. The jars of jams, jellies, preserves and pickles I've made would fill all the shelves in the old laboratory, set solidly all over its floor and halfway down the long hall. If all the lovely chickens and turkeys I have raised, fried, roasted and stewed were placed in a row, they would reach round the campus and all the way down Main Street; and if all the freezers of real, sure-enough ice cream that we have frozen and eaten out at the farm were set side by side, they would reach from Chalmers Hall to the farther rend of Lover's Lane—"

"Stop her, call her down!" Nell Vance cried. "If you let her keep on at that rate she will start such a back-to-the-soil movement that here will be no farms left for our returned soldier boys. Every husband at this banquet will be trying his best to be taken in either as a hired man or as a summer boarder at her farm."

In the social hour that followed the women flocked around Barbara with confidences about the awful increase in prices of eatables in the city and about the impossibility of getting good fruit even at the advanced prices. The men were quizzing Jasper about farming.

Finally, after refusing many invitations to remain overnight in the old college town and in the city the Clines fairly tore themselves away from the crowd ,for they still had before them the ride by trolley to the city, the midnight trip on the train to Burroughs and the seven-mile drive to the farm. And the wheat harvest would begin on the morrow!

It was a long, tiresome trip, but there were so many things to talk about that the Clines were still talking when they reached the farmhouse. The house was quiet when Barbara went in, leaving Jasper to put the horse into the stall. She lighted a lamp and, going to the mirror in the bedroom, stood looking at herself. Her cheeks weres still flushed, and her eyes were as bright as stars. Suddenly she sat down on the foot of the bed and began sobbing, and Jasper, coming in from the barn, asked, "Why, Babsy, what's the matter?"

"I've — I've — had such — a good time."

Then Jasper laughed in a relieved yet wondering way.

"What a funny piece you are!" he exclaimed. "You have never cried over any of your hard times, and now you cry when you are happy! Well, thank goodness, our hardest times are over. And, Bab ,dear, I wonder if you feel that we made a mistake in coming out here and fighting for a foothold all these years."

"No no!" she cried. "Why the other girls are all so tired of the struggle with high costs in the city that they were green with envy."

"And the fellows—well, if they had been able to save anything from their white-collar jobs and there were any farms for sale round here, we'd have a colony made up of our old class. And, honey, I made Sport Myers take a little loan until he can get on his feet again. He made some investments that turned out badly, and then his sickness floored him for a while. Old Sport used to be mighty good to me when he had plenty and I was skimping my way through college. And now let me tell you part of my business in the city. I went to see a good architect, and as soon as the harvest rush is over he is coming out to help you plan a modern farmhouse with every labour-saving device that can be studied up for your working hours. I told thef ellows to-night that we would observe the next anniversary at our home. Many of them have automobiles and can run out here without even getting tired, and we shall have our own before that time, so that we can meet those who come by train. We'll give them a real country dinner instead of a radish rose, a wafer and a thimbleful of watery fruit ice. We'll show them what it means to be buried alive on a farm."

And with a glad, contented song in her heart Barbara Cline put away her navy blue dress and lay down for a few hours before the dawn, with no dread of the harvest. As she drifted off to sleep her thoughts seemed to keep time with the tune of the car wheels, and the words that repeated themselves were:

It's good to be buried —a—live—
Out on a farm of—your—own—

Meighen Explains Success Of Ontario's Hydro System

Owen Sound. — "Hydro is clean from garret to cellar. There is no skeleton in any closet," declared Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, member of the Ontario Hydro Commission, in an address at the annual meeting of the Georgian Bay Municipal Electric Association, here Wednesday.

"The success of Hydro is not due to the fact that a public body can conduct a business better than a private body, for generally the reverse is true," asserted Senator Meighen. "Hydro's success rests on the fact that it has avoided a multiplication of interest charges, which would have resulted if power development had been left in the hands of private companies, with duplication of services and huge investments on which to pay interest," he said.

In addition to Senator Meighen, Hon. J. R. Cooke, chairman of the Hydro Commission, and C. A. Maguire, third member of the Commission and president of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, spoke to the delegates, who numbered more than 100 and came from all parts of the Georgian Bay district.

In reply to the suggestion that a flat rate for power should be charged to all municipalities, Senator Meighen pointed out that the various municipalities had entered Hydro on the understanding power would be supplied at cost. To change this system would be to break the contracts of the 700 participating municipalities and would be equivalent to confiscation, he contended.
