Abandoned Car Creates Puzzle For Police Force

Occupant Slips Away Into Bush Leaving Arsenal Behind in Car Proved Stolen from Bouchette, Que.—Found Thursday Last.

Last Thursday afternoon an abandoned car on the eighth concession of the Township of Winchester attracted considerable attention and gave the police a problem to solve. The car remaining in the one place for a considerable time attracted the notice of farmers in the vicinity and when it was still there on into the afternoon Winchester police were notified and learned on investigation that a party had been seen asleep in the car during the morning, but when the car was approached in the afternoon this party slipped into the adjacent woods and disappeared, leaving in the car a revolver, gun and flashlights.

As the car was found to have been stolen from J. B. Marleau of Bouchette, Que., between Wednesday night and Thursday morning, it looked as if some one was attempting a hide-out after pulling a job or was getting in shape for one in this district. The car was taken to Winchester and impounded.

With the ground covered with snow one morning this week things began to look like a repeater of the early winter of last year. With the scarcity of water in wells now generally complained of throughout this district the freeze-up at the present time would be a very serious matter.

Aged Grantley Resident Mourned by Many Friends

James J. McMillan Was 87 Years Old Came to Canada From Ireland as a Child.

Death called a highly respected resident of Grantley, Mr. James J. McMillan, at the advanced age of 87 years on October 21st. Born in Ireland, a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. David McMillan, he came to this country as a small child and lived in the community until his death.

In 1873 he married Miss Sarah Adams of Osnabruck and to this union nine of a family were born: John and James of Grantley; Mary (Mrs. Miniere) deceased; Edith (Mrs. S. McMillan) Edmonton; Maggie, deceased; William of California; Heber, Lethbridge; Nellie (Mrs. J. Munro) and Ethel (Mrs. G. H. Barkley) of Chesterville.

The funeral was held from the family residence to the Grantley United church where service was conducted by Rev. G. N. Maxwell and burial was made in the family plot.

The grandsons: Donald, Glenn, Grant, and Earle McMillan and Dwain Munro, and Brooks McMillan, a nephew, were the bearers.

The floral offerings were a double spray from the family, wreath from Heber, spray from St. Andrew's choir, Chesterville, wreath from Edith; cut flowers, Miss V. Haggerty.

Fine Lot of Food Given For Western Relief Car

Community Car Over Half Filled at Chesterville Station on Monday.—District's Reputation Maintained by Generosity Shown.

Chesterville and district's community car sent off Monday to the Commissioner of Welfare at Fertile, Sask, fully kept up the good name this district has established for its generosity, well earned in the Red Cross days of the war and the Northern Ontario fire sufferers a few years ago. The car Monday was more than half filled at this station with food for every day requirements and delicacies for those who have not been able to supply such for themselves for the past three years. No doubt, as in other years, many letters will be received here after the distribution is made in the west from those participating, expressing their thankfulness and appreciation for the food forwarded. The balance of the car was completed at Winchester, Mountain, Inkerman, and Bedell.

Winchester Accountant Sentenced to 4 Years

Carl Rice, Winchester, Was Accountant For M. F. Beach Co. 17 Years—Had Taken Approximately $20,000.—Pleaded Guilty.

Pleading guilty to five charges involving theft of approximately $20,000 from his employers, Carl Rice, 40, was Friday sentenced by Magistrate John McCormick in police court at Morrisburg to four years at Portsmouth penitentiary. Four-year terms were imposed on each charge, to run concurrently. Rice was 17 years accountant at the M F. Beach Mfg. Company at Winchester.

In court he entered pleas of guilty to four charges of theft of money and one charge of falsifying the books of the company. He was not represented by counsel, but J. G. Harkness, K.C, appeared for the Crown.

Coroner's Jury Places No Blame For Fatality

Resumed Inquest on Friday Found No One in Fault in Accident in Which Ottawa Resident Killed as Truck Upest on R.R. Crossing.

At the resumed inquest into the death of "Paddy" Moran, of Ottawa, who was killed in an automobile accident at the railway crossing a mile and a half west of Chesterville on September 28th, Coroner McLaughlin's jury could find no blame attaching to anyone for the death, and rendered a verdict to that effect Friday afternoon. The approaches to the crossing where the fatality occurred were described as particularly dangerous and more protective signs were suggested.

Since the accident, the crossing has been very well marked with a "checker board" by day and red reflectors by night. The other danger point on the same road at the turn at the north end of Main street remains as dangerous as ever and it is hoped that it will not require a fatality at that point before adequate protection will be installed.

Counties Asking Power Recall Old Debentures

Reeve W. H. Casselman Leads in Discussion for Amendment of Municipal Franchise Act.—Several Memorials to be Presented Hepburn.

Amendment of existing provincial legislation to permit municipal refinancing was urged in a memorial passed at the closing meeting of the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Counties Council at Cornwall on Saturday. The memorial, which is to be presented to Premier Hepburn by a delegation from the counties council, asks for legislation to permit municipalities to call in debentures issued at a high rate of interest and issue new debentures at a new interest rate in keeping with the present interest value of money.

The memorial was prepared after a special committe of council had found the high rate of interest upon outstanding debentures constitutes one of the major tax burdens in most municipalities of the province.

Council also decided to memorialize the Provincial Government in connection with the mounting cost of maintenance of indigent patients in hospitals, the incosistency of the prevailing system of taxation, the need for revision of the Municipal Franchise Act, the restoration of certain lost powers of county councils, the desirability of legislation to prevent fixed exemptions granted by local municipalities applying to the county levy and the desirability of extending the time in which debts may be outlawed.

Many of those questions were debated at length in council. It was pointed out that the counties' share for the maintenance of indigent hospital patients had mounted from $3,000 in 1927, to an estimated peak of $61,000, in 1934. Councillors felt the present system of taxation based upon taxation of land and buildings alone, placed the burden of taxation upon those least able to pay. It was recommended that the new basis should provide for taxation of vast sums on deposit in savings banks.

In discussing the weaknesses of the Municipal Franchise Act, W. H. Casselman, reeve of Chesterville, told of a property in his municipalitiy valued at $600, which gives six persons the right to vote in municipal elections. The property is owned by four persons outside the municipality and is tenanted by two persons who have been on relief for some months. Councillors complained that county councils had lost some of their usefulness because much of their authority had been gradually stripped from them in recent years.

J. D. McDonald, warden; Arthur Flynn, revee of Morrisburg; W. H. Casselman, reeve of Chesterville, and A. K. MacMillan counties clerk, will form the delegation to present the petitions to the Government.

Despite strenuous opposition from representatives of all urban and several rural municipalities, council passed a bylaw to add 11 roads, approximately 80 miles, to the counties road system, which already includes 198 miles of paved highway and 132 miles of gravel roads. The system will now take in more than 410 miles. Vote on adoption of the roads committee report, covering this addition, resulted in a tie at 16 to 16 and Warden J. D. McDonald, reeve of Lancaster township, cast the deciding ballot to carry the measure.

Delightful Hallowe'en Party Held by Trinity Y.P.S.

Games and Sing-Songs Enjoyed by Members. — Many Exceptional Costumes Were Worn.

The Young People's Society of Trinity United church met on Monday evening in the form of a Hallowe'en party. First a sing-song was enjoyed and for the first game the members were lined up in four rows. Miss Riddell read a story about a certain man who had died, but parts of his body remained on earth. These were passed around and created much laughter and spookiness.

Two circles were then made and the young people marched around, holding hands, until the music stopped, then they found their partners. There was certainly a wild scramble wheny they played this game. The costumes were excellent and worth mentioning but would take up too much space. Miss Kitching and Miss Gardner won the prize for the couple. The Misses Lois Boyd and Mary David won the prize for the younger members. Lunch was served in the basement of the church.

The society will meet again on Monday evening at eight o'clock.

Former Finch Resident 32 Years With N.Y.C.

W. S. Hutt Began Railway Career at 18.—Became Passenger Conductor.—Lately Employed at the Central Experimental Farm.

The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon in Ottawa of William Stirling Hutt, former Finch resident who was for years a New York Central Railway conductor and of late on the staff of the Central Experimental Farm. Interment was made in Maple Ridge cemetery.

Mr. Hutt's death, which occurred at his home, 84 Russell avenue, came as a sh ock to his relatives and friends. He had not been in good health for some time, but was expected to recover.

He was born at Finch, on February 22nd, 1879, son of the late Lawrence Hutt and his wife, formerly Georgina Darling. Starting in at the age of 18 years with the N.Y.C. at Finch, Mr. Hutt was in the employ of the railway company for more than 32 years. He rose to the position of freight conductor in January, 1903, and in 1920 waos promoted to passenger conductor. Many travellers on the Ottawa-Tupper Lake line of a decade ago will remember him, as he was popular with patrons as well as employees of the country.

In 1928, Mr. Hutt left the railway service to become a member of the staff of the horticultural division of the Experimental Farm. For a time he lived in Northern New York State and many friends there will join relatives in mourning his death.

In 1902, Mr. Hutt was married at Berwick to Miss Annie MacKillop, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs Alexander MacKillop, and for a time they resided at Santa Clara, N.Y., before making their home in Ottawa.

Thieves Loot Morrisburg Store For Fifth Time

Shannett's Men's Furnishing Store Has Unenviable 10-Year Record. Safe Taken With Valuables.

The men's furnishing store operated by Walter Shannett in Morrisburg experienced its fifth robbery in 10 years on Saturday night. The thieves did not disturb the large stock of clothing, tobaccos and candy in taking the store safe containing more than $55 in cash, valuable insurance papers and all store books and accounts. The intruders gained entrance by breaking two strong locks on the store's Main street entrance. No trace of the thieves or the stolen goods from any of the five robberies have ever been discovered.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Richest Farm Manure.

Poultry manure is undoubtedly the richest produced on the farm. Poultry manure, however, ferments very quickly, losing, if left exposed a large proportion of its nitrogen as ammonia. This fact emphasizes the desirability of systematically and frequently cleaning off the boards beneath the roosts, a plan that also conduces to the general good health and thrift of the fowl. In summer the manure, previously mixed with loam to destroy the stickiness and facilitate distribution, may be applied directly to the land and worked with the surface soil—its best preservative. In winter (and in other seasons when the manure cannot be used directly) it should be mixed with a fair proportion of loam, dried peat, muck, sawdust, together with a little land plaster or superphosphate to fix the nitrogen. It should then be packed tightly in barrels or boxes and stored protected from rain until required in the spring. Lime and wood ashes should not be used for this purpose as they set free nitrogen. Poultry manure being essentially nitrogenous is particularly valuable for garden and leafy crops generally, and the majority of poultry keepers will no doubt do well to reserve it for this use. However, if the amount available permits, it can be profitably employed for the cereals, grasses, roots and corn.

Improvement of Sheep.

At this season of the year when farmers are marketing their lambs and making preparations to cull out their ewe flock and place a pure bred ram at the head of the flock, many will be interested to know that ram grading is now nearing completion A list of officially graded rams of the various breeds is available for each county at the office of the Agricultural Representative. Through the assistance of the Federal Department of Agriculture, purchasers of graded pure bred rams are entitled to the following premiums if they comply with the rules and regulations for Ram Bonus Policy.

XX Lamb $2.00.
XX Yearling, $3.00.
XXX Lamb, $3.00.
XXX Yearling, $5.00.

The Province of Ontario has made substantial progress in the improvement of its sheep industry. This is evidenced by the winnings of pure bred breeders at national exhibitions such as the Royal Winter Fair at Toronto and the International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago.

The quality of lambs marketed in Ontario is due largely to the use of pure bred sires. Toronto is now the largest lamb consuming market in Canada and provides a market outlet for good quality ,well finished lambs at all seasons of the year. Graded pure bred rams are available at very reasonable prices from the various breeders of purebred sheep and no farmer who keeps a flock of breeding ewes should be without the services of a pure bred ram.

Straw For Winter Feed.

While straw is not generally considered as a nutritious feed for livestock, yet in times of fodder scarcity it is very valuable. Horses and dry cows may be wintered entirely on straw, if supplemented by one-half to three-quarters of a pound of linseed oil a day, or other simliar protein feed. A ration of half straw and half legume hay will carry such stock through the winter in excellent con dition. Little straw should be used for bedding this year when it is needed for feed. Good oat straw contains a considerable amount of total nutrients, though practically no protein. This is why straw alone makes a poor showing as an exclusive feed for live stock, but when supplemented with a little high protein feed, its carbohydrate content can be utilized to excellent advantage. When feeding straw, always provide plenty of mineral matter in addition. Give cattle, horses and sheep free access to a mixture of 28 pounds of bone meal, 50 pounds of finely ground limestone, 20 pounds of salt, 2 pounds of iron oxide, one-half ounce of copper sulphate and one ounce of potassium iodide.

In feeding value, oat straw leads, with barley, wheat and rye straw following in the order named. Corn fodder, when harvested before the leaves dry up and blow away, is considerably more value than the straw of the small grains. Sweet clover straw, after threshing out the seed is especially valuable in a year like this.

An Interesting Experiment.

Because of the extreme shortage of hay and high prices this year, a small field of excellent feed owned by Wm. Couse of Streetsville is of unusual interest to Ontario farmers. Mr. Couse has demonstrated that it is possible to get an excellent yield of the best quality hay from seed sown in the same season. Moreover, his crop is not of the emergency character, like green oats or millet something that requires special knowledge and special care, but is largely alfalfa with a little red clover and timothy, and unlike the emergency crops, the field will be good for further yields of hay next year.

The field was sown about the first of May last spring with a mixture of 15 pounds of alfalfa, five pounds of red clover and one pound of timothy. No nurse crop was used and the field had not been previously in alfalfa for 15 years. No inoculation was used but an excellent catch resulted. Owing to dry weather, the stand was on the thin side when the first cutting was made about the first of July. At that time the plants averaged 30 inches in height and a crop of close to a ton per acre of cured hay was taken off. Had there been the usual amount of rain, Mr. Couse believes that twice this yield would have been secured. The hay was of excellent quality with plenty of valuable leaves.

Aided by timely rains, the second growth was much finer and thicker with much of the original seed, apparently, not germinating until after the first cutting had been removed While the first crop was almost entirely alfalfa, by the middle of the summer both the red clover and the timothy began to appear. This crop was cut in early October and averaged three tons of green feed an acre or between a ton and a half and two tons of cured hay. Mr. Couse estimated that one acre would provide pasture for a good milk cow for 140 days, if it was decided that hay was not needed.

This experiment seems to prove that it is possible even in the face of dry weather to produce over two tons an acre of cured hay from the first year's seeding. If applied on a general scale it would indicate that winter killing of meadows on a scale like last year need not be so serious as is the case to-day with the hay acreage very seriously reduced From every standpoint the experiment appears practical and indicates that year-old meadows, killed out in early spring, may be made to produce normal hay returns by moderately heavy sowings without nurse crops. Furthermore, as a mixture rather than straight alfalfa, is advised by Mr. Couse, the cost of the seed is very low, such mixtures as he used selling for less than straight alfalfa, or red clover. Fortunately for any farmer who may wish to follow Mr. Couse's example next spring, ample supplies of home-grown alfalfa seed are in sight for next spring, though red clover is going to be scarce.

Hockey Mentor Speaks From Pulpit in Winnipeg

Lester Patrick Tells Youngsters and Parents Smoking "Not a Sin," But Harmful to the Youth.

Stepping to the pulpit of Crescent United church in Winnipeg, Sunday night, Lester Patrick, mentor of New York Rangers of the National Hockey League handed to lads and their parents a few bits of advice.

"Smoking in the 'teen age is harmful and detrimental to athletic success," said Patrick, and then speaking directly to parents, he said:

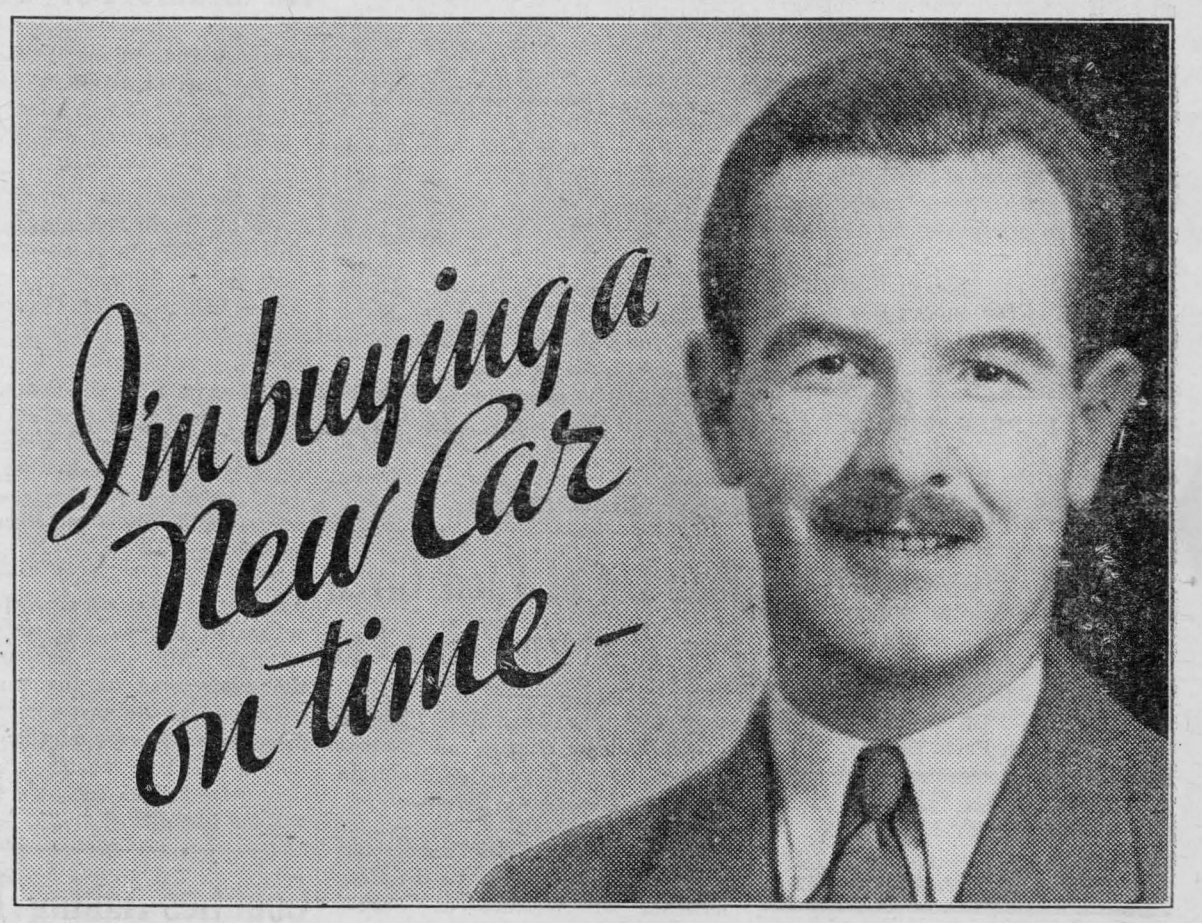

"It isn't a sin to smoke. Don't tell your boy not to smoke because it is a sin. It isn't. Tell him not to smoke because of the harm it will do him."

Of the 22 amateurs who attended the Ranger hockey school in Winnipeg, 19 of them were non-smokers, he said. Each of them realized there was no royal road to stardom. It was achieved only through hard work and development of skill. Athletics aided boys and girls physically, mentally, and morally.

Moral.

Teacher: "Had the lamb been obedient and not strayed away from the fold, it would not have been devoured by the wolf, would it?"

Pupil: "No, Miss Smith, we would have eaten it."

AND SAVING MONEY!

FULLY ENCLOSED KNEE-ACTION
CABLE-CONTROLLED BRAKES
BLUE-FLAME CYLINDER HEAD
BODY BY FISHER
SHOCK-PROOF STEERING

I'M in the habit of buying a car "on time", like most other people. I'm buying a Chevrolet—and saving money! Here is why:

Comparing cash prices, I found that you can buy a Chevrolet Standard Series Six for less than any other car in Canada. And that the Master Series Chevrolet, with all its extra features, costs no more than the others in its class.

Naturally, low cash prices mean that the cost of buying on monthly payments is going to be low, too. So I investigated the GMAC plan, on which Chevrolet cars are sold.

I found that GMAC is General Motors' own time payment plan. The manufacturers of Chevrolet stand squarely behind every time-payment sale.

I found that the GMAC financing rates have been recently reduced—making it cheaper than ever to buy on this plan.

I found that every Chevrolet sold under the GMAC plan is fully protected by insurance—Fire, Theft, Accidental Physical Damage and $50 Deductible Collision Insurance.

And I found that one of the biggest reasons why the GMAC plan costs less and gives more is because more people buy on this plan than on any other.

I'm buying a Chevrolet on the GMAC plan, because I've found that there's a lot of difference in time payments—and that you save when you get the facts.

Beer Profits Will Help With Local Tax Rates

Provincial Government Will Give Municipalities 20 Per Cent From Beer Licenses and Profits.—Relieves Them of Highway Upkeep.

Toronto.—Municipalities will share by 20 per cent in proceeds from authorities granted hotels and in profits derived from the sale of beer and wines in Ontario, Premier Mitchell Hepburn announced this week. The Premier also announced the municipalities would be relieved of their contribution of 20 per cent to the upkeep of highways.

The changes will become effective November 1st, said the Premier, along with the new regulations governing sale of beer and wines in hotels on November 1st, the Premier said, along with the new regulations governing sale of beer and wines in hotels on November 1st. Sales in hotels, he said, would be stopped at 11 p.m. (Standard Time) while clubs and dining-rooms would be permitted to continue sales to midnight. Under present provisions, beer parlours may remain open until midnight.

The municipalities, which Premier Hepburn said he always had contended should share in their own sources of revenue, will receive their share of the profits in the way of cash.

Previous administrations, said Mr. Hepburn, had encroached on the only sources of revenue open to municipalities and he thought this had been "most unfair."

Plans for earlier closing, said Mr. Hepburn, were not made because of propaganda campaigns being carried on in certain portions of the province. He said the original regulations providing for the later closing had been only experimental as well as the other provisions.

He reiterated his suggestion that any municipality could decide its own liquor-selling policy through the local option provision, and denied a suggestion that the profit-sharing plan was evolved to "bribe" municipalities against holding a referendum.

About 39 per cent of municipalities in the province are bankrupt, the Premier said, and elimination of the highway contribution and granting of part of the beer sale profits should be of great financial benefit to them.

At present there are no other changes contemplated in the regulations, Mr. Hepburn added. There was no possibility "at present" of restaurants being granted selling authorities, he said.

The changes were made after a special meeting of the Cabinet with E. G. Odette, Ontario Liquor Commissioner.

New Type of Roadway Will Be Tried in Ontario

Simcoe County Will Experiment With "Salt Road," Said to Have Given Satisfaction in Michigan.

A "salt road," a new type of cheap roadway said to have given good results in Michigan, will be tried out in Simcoe county, according to Herbert J. Crawford, chairman of the Simcoe county roads commission. At first an experiment will be made on a stretch of about a mile.

Describing this new type of road, Mr. Crawford said that first a chemical analysis is taken of the existing road to determine the gravel and clay content. The required amount of salt is mixed in and consolidated after the surface has been scarified about three times. In point of hardness and durability, the result is said to be similar to concrete. Winter frosts do not harm it, it is said.

It is pointed out that one advantage of such a road is that repairs are easily made, a mixture of salt and gravel being applied to any places where repairs are needed.

King's Son May Be Appointed Canada's Next Governor-General

London, Oct. 28th—The Sunday Referee said to-day it had discovered there was a "strong movement to secure His Majesty's permission to appoint the Duke of Kent as next Governor-General of Canada." Youngest son of Their Majesties, the Duke of Kent is being married next month to Princess Marina of Greece.

The Referee said further there was "steady pressure in influential quarters to send the popular 'young marrieds' to succeed the Earl of Bessborough."

The Referee, in an editorial on the subject, says further that Canada's political leaders believe "nothing could be more popular than the sending of the Duke of Kent and his lovely wife-to-be to the vice-regal lodge in Ottawa.

"Their youth would appeal to the spirit of youth in the Dominion, and it would be equally popular in the United States where the British Royal family is regarded with peculiar admiration and affection," the Referee says.

Clarified Milk

I HAVE ADDED a new machine to my Dairy—a Clarifier,—to take the ground, and thicks or solids out of the milk. Only the city dairies have these machines. The milk is placed under several hundred pounds pressure and the thick milk is taken away from the pure milk. Jersey milk has more of this thick milk than that from any other cows. Doctors claim it is because the Jerseys are not as rugged as larger cows, and are affected easier by cold, wet weather, and they then throw this heavy milk out, which is nothing but dirt or poison—not an ounce of fat in it I have the machine that can take it out—it's built for it. Nestlé's plant has one for the baby food manufacture. Ask the men who operate it, or visit the Dairy from 5.30 to 6 and see the milk clarified and see what you once had to eat, but no more. I am buying Jersey milk from the biggest Jersey herd in this district, and the bottles show it. I also make a little butter.

Buttermilk is for sale at 5c per quart, 15c per gallon; skim milk 15c per can.

ON BEING SUCCESSFUL.

WHEN is a man a success? Not so very long ago, a man who accumulated great wealth, no matter how, would have been considered successful. Since the depression, however, new standards have arisen, and the average person is not so eager to judge a man by what he has but by what he does. Even at that the real standard of success is often misunderstood. Success should not be judged solely by the amount of money a man possesses, the vastness of the business interests he controls, his political power or his social position, but should be judged by the manner in which he uses his power, his wealth or his position. A man without riches, without power ,without social position may be a great success in his own particular field of endeavour, for true success depends not on what one has, but on what one does with his own life. If a man makes of his life an example for others to follow, if he has found contentment, then that man is a success. For none of these things can be attained by selfishness, greed, dishonesty and idleness, but only by forgetting self, serving others, upright living and industry.

As an example of a truly successful man consider the story of an unnamed butler which comes from London, England. This particular butler is ninety-four. For seventy years he has been with the family of Lady Edward Spencer-Churchill, and recently was awarded the Daily Express prize for being the "ideal butler." Every morning he rises at eight o'clock (he is ninety-four, remember) and retires about 11 o'clock at night.

"If you had to begin live over again, would you still be a butler?" he was asked. He reflected a moment and then replied: "If I could serve a family such as this—yes."

That man is a success. He has done his job and done it well for seventy years, he is happy and contented, if he had his life to live over again he would choose no other. How many men to-day feel like that about their own jobs? He was successful because he understood the dignity of labour and elevated his menial tasks to a higher plane, and his reward is the love and affection of the family with which he lives. About two months ago, when he was taken seriously ill, Lady Edward called in a specialist and a trained nurse to look after him. One of his nieces is the wife of a clergyman and two others are tutors. He is respected by all who know him, he is happy, he is content and he is a success.—Cobourg Sentinel-Star.

HEALTH

by

Dr. Alan Brown

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

VOLUNTARY ISOLATION.

TO spread or not to spread, is the question to which isolation offers a partial answer. Isolation is not so well thought of as formerly; this is not due to any fault on the part of isolation, but rather to the fact that isolation cannot accomplish as much as was hoped for it at one time.

Isolation, the separation of the sick from the well, has been practised for many centures. Those who are familiar with the Old Testament will recall the description given of how, in ancient times, those who suffered from leprosy were made to live apart, isolated, from their fellow-men.

Isolation is of real value provided there is a reasonable understanding of what is aimed to be accomplished through isolation; otherwise, it will be largely a waste effort. Isolation is not for the good of the sick person on whom it is practised, but for the protection of those who are well.

Frequently we have repeated the advice that when a child has a cold or a sick stomach, or when he is otherwise unwell, he should be isolated as these are the symptoms of the common communicable diseases. This might be called voluntary isolation. It is very simple; the child remains in bed and no one goes into his room excepting his mother or the one other person who is looking after the child.

There is no danger in merely going into the room, but if others are allowed in, they will likely want to play with and fondle or kiss the sick child, who probably does not feel particularly ill and who would, therefore, be only too glad to play. The whole danger lies in the patient's secretions, and usually this is limited to the secretions from the mouth, nose and throat. These are dangerous, because it is in them that the germs of the common communicable diseases leave the body.

Practically, the danger can be avoided if the person who is looking after the child keeps away from his face; by this is meant, that she does not kiss the child or come in the line of fire of his coughs and sneezes. Also, she should keep her hands away from her own face, scrub her hands with soap and water and a nail-brush every time she leaves the patient's room, and boils all cups and dishes used by the patient. These measures will prevent the spread of disease in the home. At the same time, keeping the child in bed is the best form of treatment if he has a cold or a sick stomach, or if he is coming down with some communicable disease.

Questions corncerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Justice.

Visitor in County Jail: "What crime has this man committed?"

Warden: "He hasn't committed any crime. He was going down the street a few days ago and saw a crime—and he is held as a witness."

Visitor: "And where is the man who committed the crime?"

Warden: "Oh, he's out on bail."

Starch.

Being asked after a physics lecture to mention three things containing starch, a bright boy committed the following "howler": "A potato and—two collars."

Just Moderately Thirsty.

Frosh: "Ginger ale."
Waiter: "Pale?"
Frosh: "No, just a glass."

The Real Thing..

"I had a grand dream last night,' he began. "I dreamed I was walking beside a babbling brook with a wonderful girl by my side. She had eyes which rivalled the violets which grew on the mossy bank; her hair was like the gold of the sunbeams; her face was—"

"And did she have a job?" interrupted the girl.

The Wrong One.

Man-About-Town (to valet): "Did you cancel all my engagements as I told you to, James?"

"Yes, sir, but Lady Violet didn't take it very well. She said you were going to marry her next week."

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

MUST HAVE CAKE.

IT IS HARD TO BELIEVE, but it is time to make your Christmas cake. The grocery stores already have their fresh supplies of dates, figs and candied fruits just waiting to be mixed into your cakes.

RICH FRUIT CAKE.

The following recipe will make four medium-sized cakes.

1¼ lbs. butter
1¼ lbs. light brown sugar
13 eggs
1¼ lbs. flour
2 teaspoons cinnamon
1 teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon mace
2 lbs. currants
3 lbs. raisins
½ lb. dates
½ lb. almonds
1 lb. citron peel
½ cup grape juice
½ cup strong coffee

In making a large fruit cake, it is best to prepare the fruit one day and bake the cake the following day. To do this, pick over, wash and dry the currants; wash, seed and cut the raisins; wash, dry and stone the dates; cut the peel into very thin pieces; blanche the almonds and cut in small pieces. Mix the fruit and nuts and dredge with 1-3 cup of the flour. Also dredge the citron peel with flour. If you neglect to dredge the fruit and nuts with flour they will stick together in lumps and it will be almost impossible to mix them thoroughly with the other ingredients.

In mixing the cake use the following method. Cream the butter thoroughly. Add sifted sugar slowly, beat until very light. Add one-quarter of the flour and spices mixed and sifted together. Add yolks of eggs, well beaten, then whites, beaten stiff; beat the mixture until very light. Add fruit juice and coffee alternately with remaining flour; beat well. Add fruit, one-third at a time. Pour mixture into pans which have been carefully lined with three thicknesses of paper, of which the top layer has been buttered. The pans should not be more than two-thirds full. Bake in a very slow oven 3 to 4 hours. If steamed for 2½ hours and baked for 1 hour the cake will be more moist.

LIGHT FRUIT CAKE.

3 eggs
2 cups white sugar
1 cup butter
3 cups flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 lb. seeded raisins
1 cup cocoanut
½ lb. figs (cut finely)
½ lb. mixed peel
1 small bottle red cherries
1 small bottle green cherries
½ cup milk

Cream the butter, add sugar slowly and beaten eggs. Beat together until light. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together and to this add the raisins, cut in pieces; the shredded cocoanut, the peel cut in thin slices, the cherries drained and dried slightly in the oven and cut in small pieces. Add flour and fruit mixture alternately with the milk to the first mixture. Blend thoroughly. This recipe will make two loaves. Bake in a moderate oven for one hour.

ALMOND ICING.

1 lb. shelled almonds
3 egg yolks
1 lb. icing sugar
1 teaspoon rosewater
½ teaspoon bitter almond flavouring

Blanch almonds; put through the food chopper or roll with a rolling pin. Work to a paste; add unbeaten yolks, flavouring and sugar gradually. Work until very smooth, adding more sugar if necessary. Sprinkle board with icing sugar, place almond paste on it and roll to required shape. Moisten the top of cake with cold water, press icing on it, allow to stand 24 hours before frosting.

FROSTING FOR FRUIT CAKE.

1¾ cups icing sugar
½ cup condensed milk
1½ teaspoon vanilla

Stir sifted icing sugar into the condensed milk. Add vanilla. Beat until smooth and creamy. This frosting has the advantage that it does not get too hard.

CANDIED ORANGE, LEMON OR GRAPEFRUIT PEEL

Save your orange, lemon and grapefruit peel, candy it and use it in your fruit cake.

Syrup For Candied Fruits.

2 cups sugar 1 cup water
1-3 cup light corn syrup

Boil together until the syrup spins a thread when dropped from a spoon. Cut the peel into halves or quarters. Let stand over night in salted water (one tablespoon salt to a quart of water). Drain and wash thoroughly. Simmer in clear water, changing the water until there is no bitter taste. When the peel is tender, drain, cut in strips or add whole to the syrup and simmer until it is transparent. Drain, roll in granulated sugar and dry well before using.

This candied peel is very nice to mix with Christmas candies of all kinds.

Fruits as pears, peaches, plums and cherries may be candied by adding to the syrup and simmering until clear. Remove from syrup and dry until no longer sticky.

1 lb. flour equals about 4 cups
1 lb. butter equals about 2 cups
1 lb. brown sugar equals 2½ to 2¾ cups, depending on the moisture
1 lb. dates equals 50 to 60 dates

Woman Bobs Her Hair Then Calls on Police Force

Belleville Matron Invents Ingenious Ruse to Obtain Her Heart's Desire.

Belleville.—Police were excited today when Mrs. Albert Hammond, white-haired matron of nearby Stirling, reported an unidentified dark man with a foreign accent had robbed her of $1 70 and been so enraged at the diminutive loot that he had cut off her hair. She said she had fainted when the man pressed a pistol against her back and revived to find her hair gone.

Officials recovered from their excitement later, however, when Inspector Hamor Gardner of the Ontario police said: "She wanted to get her hair bobbed and her ingenuity caused us a lot of unnecessary trouble. We suspected there was something wrong with her story but we had to be cautious at first."

Mrs. Hammond told officers the hair-cutting took place during the absence of her husband.

A rather stout school teacher was instructing her young pupils about birds and their habits.

"Now," she said, "at home I have a canary and it can do something I cannot do. I wonder if any of you know just what that thing is?"

Little Tommy quickly jumped up. "I know, teacher," he said. "Take a bath in a saucer."

"Youll bake it better with Five Roses"

Heritage

HER NAME was Hermione Hyatt—alliterative and arresting. She was always exquisitely arrayed She was rich in her own right, being the sole beneficiary from the will of a great-aunt who had never seen her, or ever evinced the slightest interest in her existence. In addition to the golden gifts of fortune, she had a distinguished ancestry. All the women of the name had been beautiful and charming, all the men, rich and brave. Such was Hermione Hyatt—heroine and moving spirit of the entrancing tale—The Hyatt Heritage.

What wonder that Sarah Griffeth, the insignificant young person who had followed Hermione through some three hundred pages of engrossing print, found herself vaguely dispirited. Through those all too short. intimate hours Sarah had identified herself with grandeur and a high and noble station, only the more poignantly to realize at their conclusion the sordid realities of existence.

The grand green domain that was part of the Hyatt heritage gave place as if in a horrid, Cinderella-like dream, to a small, box-like room with a railing of scantling to mark the open stairway that ran up like a narrow chute. The floor, painted gray, had one of Gram's famous hooked rugs in front of the bed. The bed—Hermione's had had a blue silken canopy, with a lining of fawn colour—was enameled white like a hospital bed and was spread with an old blue-and-white woven coverlet that had been Gram's. There was a yellow chest of drawers, which she had to share with Edie, her younger sister. There was one straight chair and one rocker. In the narrow little closet could be seen a flowered lawn ruffle and a fold of plain tucked muslin—Sarah's humble best. Hermione had worn paduasoy; and her simplest gown had been embroidered muslin.

"Supper!"

The call shrilled through the lower room and echoed in the narrow, inclosed stairway. Edie added a sisterly warnin:

"There's biscuits—an you know the boys!"

Sarah knew the boys. She gave a passing glance into the square old mirror that hung above the yellow chest. The glass was marred; its surface was like a roiled pool. Sarah's great braid, of blondeness almost shivery, showed in it like a tarnished chain.

James was extending a covetous hand toward the freshly heaped bread tray. "I saved you some biscuits, Sarah," said her mother under cover of a noisy altercation between Edie and James, relative to a fair division of the spoils of the honey pot. William was demanding tersely:

"Bread."

Her mother laid two crusty beauties beside Sarah's plate James made a feint of confiscating one of them, but Sarah disdained to recognize the pleasantry.

"Sade hadn't ought to have hot biscuits kept for her," remonstrated William.

"What's a good hot supper to Sade when she can play make-believe lady in a book?" scoffed James.

They would have given their right hands for Sarah; but it irked them to see her munching with dainty deliberation the last two biscuits. Edie, who was of an impulsive temperament, sprang into the breach, casting up the accounts of her two brothers. The controversy waxed hotter as the dishes cooled. Throughout it all they continued to eat methodically.

"That'll do," said their father.

Everything was at once agreeable and orderly. James, passing out, gave Sarah's silver a mollifying jerk. The girls began to gather up the dishes; when they came to Aunt Leah's place they found her plate with its exactly crossed knife and fork not discernibly used.

Aunt Leah had lately come to live at the Griffeth's. She was an exquisite little elderly lady. Her years clothed her like a sort of faded youth. When the brother with whom she used to live had died, she had come to be with her niece, Sarah's mother. She was flutteringly eager to be of service. She did beautiful handwork, which she was obliged to dispose of, if at all, at a song. To-day she had been mending a bit of point lace for Adelia Ramsey; but when Sarah went upstairs to put on her ruffled lawn for the evening, she found the forgotten rent in the flounce almost invisibly mended.

The roiled old mirror gave back her reflection—flowered lawn and silver braid. Sarah had wished to put her hair up this summer. She had practised before the dispiriting mirror. Sarah privately thought it a great improvement. It made her sixteen years look twenty at least. Curiously enough, the folks had accepted the transformation with only lukewarm praise. The great braid, unplaited and coiled upon her head, gave her, with the childish fashion of her dress, a top-heavy look. James had extended a cautious, balancing hand. Her father had observed behind his paper, "Anyone seen Sade lately?" Only Aunt Leah had patted furtively the massy silver crown.

Sarah thought resentfully that what the family lacked most was appreciation Their adverse decision restrained her from adopting the new hairdressing. Her crisp lawn ruffles swished against the narrow, steep little stairs. In the dusky inclosed passage her silver-blonde head had a pale radiance like a vague little moon.

James sang out, as she came into the porch:

"Ain't we pretty, ain't we sweet—"

"Take care you don't crush those ruffles, or you'll have to press them," said her mother.

Edie remarked critically, "Your petticoat shows."

"Sarah's long braid fell across Aunt Leah's shoulder. The adorable secret of the mended flounce lay between them.

"Why are you two getting so chummy all of a sudden?" demanded Edie jealously. "She is my Aunt Leah as well as yours!"

"She all our Aunt Leah!" boomed Mr. Griffeth.

Aunt Leah's faded garment of youth seemed of a sudden restored to colour. She had at first dreaded coming to live with the Griffeths.. She was afraid—so many in the family—in such modest circumstances There might not really be room for her. But the Griffeths had been glad enough to have Aunt Leah come. They had swept and garnished a room for her. Like all the other rooms, it was small and box-like, meagrely furnished and little adorned, except with one of Gram's cherished hooked rugs. And, like the other rooms, it was home.

Adelia Ramsey came over at early dusk for her lappet of mended point lace. She was going to Broughton to visit her wealthy cousins, the Atwaters, and the point-lace was to be a concession to their wealth and station. Mrs. Ramsey had come with an astounding proposal. She wanted to take Sarah with her to Broughton to look after little Almena Ramsey.

"It's this way," explained Mrs. Ramsey, panting between eagerness and exertion "My cousins live like company every day, and one extra wouldn't mind in the least. So I wrote and asked,—about bringing some one—and Cousin Leila Atwater said it would be perfectly all right." The phrase fell trippingly from Adelia's eager tongue.

"And they're very dressy; and they go a lot. And of course they would want me to go with them. And of course I couldn't drag Almena everywhere I went, and I thought if Sarah went along—Sarah being so good with children—Almena would feel more contented. I'd pay all the travelling expenses, and it would give Sarah an outing, too. What do you say?"

"It's like a book," Edie said in awe.

Mrs. Griffeth was reflecting.

"You got your tucked muslin" she said slowly, "and this flowered lawn for best. Mebbe one more dress—I'd want her to go in style."

Mr. Griffeth tossed a flat and shabby bill book into his wife's lap. "I guess maybe you can find a few fripperies tucked away in that," he said.

"There's only a week!" Mrs. Ramsey warned them.

Aunt Leah and Mrs. Griffeth exchanged glances. "Better tell her," Mrs. Griffeth said; and Aunt Leah slipped indoors.

"We meant it for your birthday," Aunt Leah confided to Sarah on her return. She unfolded sheer lengths of muslin embroidered in a fine, frail design of leaf and flower.

Sarah gasped with delight. The embroidered muslin of her dreams. Hermione's could not have been half so fine. Aunt Leah's stitches were so minute as to rival the finest veining

"You can have my hair ribbons if you want to; I've never worn 'em," Edie said casually.

All the next week Sarah never glanced at a book. What need to read—she felt herself a heroine. The Hyatt heritage dimmed before a more glorious reality. Instead of the frame house with its shabby drab paint—a city mansion. Instead of the boxlike room with its humble rag rug and its dingy mirror—spacious chamber furnished with a magnificence fit to put even Hermione's to the blush. To wear her best slippers every day—her muslin and her lawn; and on special occasions the emboidered muslin.

The boys pooled their resources and presented Sarah, as a birthday gift, a new and shiny suit case. This suit case with its dainty burden was to Sarah a veritable volume that contained the bright imaginings of her little future. James and William could not forbear indulging themselves in favourite chanteys celebrating the alleged adventures of one "Sadie in the City." But when the eventful morning dawned they bore, by turns, the suit case, in which they took a certain proprietary pride, to the station. And although they would not for worlds have admitted it, they took an even greater pride in Sarah's appearance. Each of them gave Sarah's great silver braid a brotherly twist by way of farewell. Trim skirt, trim blouse, trim shoes, jaunty hat; the fine, frazzled tendrils escaping from her rope-like braid like silver filaments merely accentuated by their dainty disorder a certain delicate primness in Sarah's appearance.

Cousin Alvin Atwater met them with the limousine. Sarah felt that Cinderella's pumpkin coach could have been nothing beside this shining noiseless, tapestried and glass-enclosed magnificence. Sarah sat upon the tufted upholstery of the corner seat, facing the others, and looked grandly out of the lowered pane. A single flower swayed in a crystal vase.

Cousin Alvin kept putting polite questions about their journey and repeating after each answer, "Ah, yes. Just so—just so." Sarah thought his eyes looked very tired

The house had not the castle-like magnificence that Sarah had imputed to it. It was a careful, modern house of colonial architecture. The grounds were somewhat disappointing—the beautiful slope of terrace, dotted with shrubbery, served neither as grounds, nor even as modest yard, but only as a setting for the beautiful house.

Adelia's Cousin Leila was young and slim of figure, not matronly like Sarah's mother; but her face lacked the freshness and middle-aged bloom of Mr. Griffeth's. Her manner was simple and cordial. She at once sent a trim maid to request Marie's and Marjorie's immediate presence. Presently the two girls came into the room. Marie was slightly older than Sarah. Marjorie and Almena proved to be contemporaries. Marjorie wore a little thin pink slip; Marie, simple belted linen. Sarah had expected embroidered white at the very least.

"I'm sorry John's not here. He got work for the summer, although Alvin and I both thought he ought to rest He has only one more year of college. Perhaps he can run down while you are here."

It lacked only half an hour to dinner. Cousin Leila herself accompanied her guests to their room. It was a big, open, airy apartment, darkly shining as a pool. The bed was uncanopied. Sarah noticed in that first appraising glance that the room had a certain austere quality like the bare little room at home.

"I thought Sarah would wish to be near you," Cousin Leila said and pushed open a door into a small, shining chamber as compact and orderly as a neat workbox. Remembering the little pink slip and the belted linen, Sarah laid out the tucked muslin; for the first time in her life she felt resigned to tucks. Edie's ribbons, which were of a thin ice-blue, tied, loop on generous loop, the braided silver of her hair.

The girls had dinner in the schoolroom, for Almena declined firmly to be separated from her mentor, Sarah. and Marjorie was not as yet promoted to the state diningroom.

"It's more fun, really," said Marie carelessly. "John and I used to have the best times together! How we did use to fuss and squabble over the jam and cakes, and smear the pages of our old Grimm! Don't reach, Marjorie; it isn't nice."

"It isn't nice for you to keep the jam on your side!" countered Marjorie.

"In the evening they talked on the deep porch. Cousin Leila confided to Adelia her fears that Alvin was working too hard.

"He's so ambitious for the children. He wants them to have a better chance than he had when was young. In a little while John will be able to relieve him. I want you to see John, Adelia. He's got such an old head, and he's so thoughtful of his father A family is a great responsibility, Adelia."

Adelia regarded her little Almena and sighed. "I often tell Alvin I'd be willing to give up this house and go into a smaller one. But Marie's coming on. And then there'll be Marjorie. You want to give your children the best. There'll not be a great deal of money. It takes so much to live."

"I dunno as they'd be any happier for it, really," said Adelia. "There's one man back home—he says his ambition is to make his daughter the richest girl in the country. Somehow I don't feel that way about Almena. A good honest name, a fair education—that'll have to do for Almena's legacy."

Sarah quickly fell asleep in the austere little chamber with the door open into the larger guest room beyond. She had spread out the tucked muslin with dainty precision. Not the whole of Hermione's wardrobs could have furnished just the right frock for to-morrow morning; but the natal suit case had included it—blue-and-white gingham with a faint black hair line, and a smart leather belt for finish Before she slept Sarah surveyed blissfully all the meagre, perfect appointments of the little workbox chamber. "How plain fine things are!" she said to her astonished inner self. A faint little doubt of Hermione, the canopy and the paduasoy stole into her mind.

Adelia's visit was limited to a week. Every morning Cousin Alvin Atwater went into the city and returned only in time for dinner at night. Sarah had expected every hour of the Broughton cousins to be taken up with jaunts and festivities. Instead the days passed methodically and quietly. One morning Sarah accompanied Marie to the great studio building where she had her music lesson.

"I haven't much talent for it, really," Marie confided to her; "Marjorie is much cleverer. But dad likes to hear me play and sing a little in the evenings."

Every day Marie conscientiously withdrew to the music room for an hour of practise. She even essayed some preliminary instruction of the clever Marjorie. "It costs dad such a lot, I feel as if I ought to make it up to him," she told Sarah anxiously.

They went about on little sightseeing expeditions Girl friends of Marie's dropped in. Sarah's modest lawn and gingham, her jaunty skirts and blouses fellowshiped quite comfortably and happily with the similar attire of those surprising city girls. On Sunday Sarah donned the embroidered muslin.

"Very pretty and simple," said Cousin Leila approvingly. "Did some one at home do it for you, Sarah?"

"Aunt Leah," Sarah said.

"You don't know how fortunate you are! Such work demands almost a prohibitive price here in the city."

Prohibitive! Sarah had paid with a pat and a kiss.

"We must have some of the young folks in for Sarah," Cousin Leila said a little later. "I've been waiting, hoping, John would come; but I guess we'll have to give him up."

A party! In the city! Sarah felt that her cup was full. How generous Cousin Alvin and Cousin Leila (for so it seemed natural to call them) had been to her! For, fine as everything was, Sarah had already perceived a curious fact: Cousin Alvin worked as hard as her own father and seemed even more tired. And Cousin Leila's house, even with its careful machinery of service, exacted more supervision than the little drab house at home.

A little timidly she proffered her help; but it appeared that there was to be no upheaval in the kitchen. Things were to be "ordered up" "You do help, every minute," Cousin Leila said cordially. "I don't know when Marjorie's been so little trouble."

"Almena, too," said Adelia.

But on the night of the party Almena and Marjorie basely betrayed the trust of their parents. A tantalizing something in the air aroused a deep and suspicious distrust in their childish bosoms. A scene seemed immient. Adelia privately thought that what Marjorie needed was a sound spanking; and it is not unlikely that Cousin Leila entertained sentiments of like nature in regard to Almena.

In consideration of Sarah's remaining upstairs as a sort of hostage for such time as would suffice her to relate a lengthy installment of a story,—for Sarah proved herself a reconteuse of parts,—the disaffected ones agreed to waive their desire to stay downstairs.

Before she had gone, merry greetings marked the arrival of the earlier guests. Sarah stole softly down. The great room was full of light and laughter. She drew back a little into a recess of the hall. Marie would come presently to summon her.

In a great panel-like mirror were reflected Aunt Leah's embroidered muslin and Edie's ribbons and the great silver braid of her hair fallen chain-wise across her shoulder. Sarah looked at herself—half in wonder, half in distrust. She was not stylish, any more than a flower is stylish. Still she felt vaguely satisfied.

"Rapunzel, Rapunzel,
Let down thine hair!"

Sarah could not even be sure that she had heard the words. They seemed unreal, like the mirror. And then she saw him.

She had not heard him enter. He had somehow an air of "belonging." Something about him made her think of James and William—an air of comradery.

"It is Rapunzel, isn't it? I couldn't be quite sure at first. Came near mistaking you for Snow-White." He peered, anxiously apologetic.

Sarah recognized the allusion. She knew her Grimm.

"Sorry not to be the Prince," he assured her. "Title abolished along with other out-worn institutions. I hope you don't mind?"

Sarah was about to respond politely that she did not mind in the least. And then somehow she knew that a polite disclaimer was the last thing this pleasant boy wanted. He wanted to be friends with her. She did not know just how Hermione would have met this social exigency, but she resolved to be quite frank and natural as if he had been only William or James. "I was telling bedtime stories—that's why I'm down late. You see, I'm visiting here. And I thought I'd wait till Marie came along to introduce me properly."

"And now I've gone and done it improperly!" deplored the pleasant boy.

It was not according to the book; but then nothing of this magical week had been. She said, as she might have said to Edie or William or James, "How funny things turn out!" He instantly agreed. His eyes beamed appreciatively.

"And now for specific examples—" he suggested.

Sarah had been all the week tabulating just such examples. She mentioned one: "Broughton is exactly like Griggs Centre."

He waited for her to elaborate that.

"People work just the same in the city." she explained, "no matter what they're worth."

"If they're worth anything, they work," agreed the friendly boy.

"And folks," continued Sarah, "are the same. Families, I mean."

"Folks are folks," said the boy.

"And fine things are mostly plain things," went on Sarah, who could hardly get over this fact, so alien to the teachings of The Hyatt Heritage.

"Plain things go," declared her new friend.

"I was reading The Hyatt Heritage just before I came here. Perhaps you have heard of it?" she looked hopefully at him.

He nodded. He had only just heard of it.

"The heritage was a vast fortune and a grand house. And Hermione—she was the heroine—wore satin and brocade. And the hangings and upholsteries were of satin and brocade. And the beds were canopied."

"Stuffy, I should say."

"Well," admitted Sarah, "that's what I expected to find here"

"What did you find?" asked the boy.

"It wasn't like it at all. It was like home — even to the make-believe fusses at the table—Marie's told me—about her and her brother John—and the jam and cakes. And Cousin Alvin at the office all day. And Cousin Leila planning same as father and mother."

"What for — working and planning?"

"Oh, for us, you know. Us children. I guess your folks do the same."

"Some little old heritage, all right!" declared Sarah's friend.

"Heritage!" said Sarah.

"An uncommon fine heritage, and the commonest one going, at that! Hermione's simply isn't in it. Do you know, I think Hermione must have been a snippy young person—not your sort at all Hello, sis!"

"John! You here! And Sarah, too!"

"Sure! Wasn't I invited? Just managed to make it, though. I've been rather monopolizing the guest of honour—I mistook her for some one I used to know in our nursery days."

Sarah could never remember in detail the rest of that magical evening. The girls in their fine and simple dresses, the pleasant, mannerly boys, the lilting dancing games, the lights, the favours, the smiling elders looking on, the flower-moulded ices and cunningly devised cakes, the last strain of music, the last farewell, the drifting ruffles through the door—and on the stairway, just before she went to her room, the half courtly, half comradely, good night of John!

"You can never tell. you know. After all, it might be the Prince in disguise!"

The next day Sarah and Adelia and her little Almena went home As the train drew in to the little red station. Sarah caught sight of James and William, eagerly scanning the windows. Edie was there, too; her thin, little freckled face was keenly happy. It was the hour for her father to leave the office. They would probably catch up with him, strolling home. Sarah knew her mother would have chicken and biscuits. They always had chicken and biscuits on gala occasions The table would be spread with Aunt Leah's cloth. All those material things meant something—something plain and fine—loyalty, honest affection and endeavour. A great surge of happiness rose deep within her. It translated itself into a gulping cry of their names:

"O Edie! James! William!

Sarah had come fully to realize the value of the Griffeth heritage.

"Is your young man popular with your people?"

"I should say so. Dad comes down stairs every night at twelve o'clock to see him off."

PALE, PEPLESS GIRL BECAME PRETTY —AND WASN'T SHE PLEASED!

It all happened in 30 days! In November the girl was pale, run-down and lacked vitality. Weight subnormal; only 91½ lbs. Her blood, when tested, was found to be low in red corpuscles and lower still in haemoglobin, the red substance in the red corpuscles. She was given a 30-day treatment. And what a happy change took place!

She gained nine pounds and her complexion glowed with rosy health. Her face rounded out and she became positively pretty. The treatment—as shown by a second blood test—had greatly increased the red corpuscles and haemoglobin in her blood, consequently she felt and looked radiantly well. The preparation that worked these wonders was Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

This famous old remedy restores health in a most constructive way. We know that the blood carries nourishment and vitality to every part of the body. But unless the blood has a sufficient number of red corpuscles and red colouring substance called haemoglobin, it cannot carry on its vital work. It is here that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills produce constructive benefits. This remedy increases, in most cases, both the red corpuscles and the haemoglobin. Blood tests prove it!

Good looks and good health are too precious to neglect or experiment with. If your feelings and your mirror tell you that you are under-weight, nervous, sallow, easily tired out—take this tested remedy, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for 30 days, as the girl mentioned above did. Then check up on beauty and health you have gained. Full size box is priced 50c.

Mainly About People

Mr. and Mrs. Samworth, Mrs. Small and Mrs Barker of Ottawa were week end guests of Mrs. Garrow.

Mr. Cecil McElheran of Ottawa spent a couple of days this week with his mother in town.

Mr. Ed. Perrault and son John of Carmel, N.Y., were guests of the former's brother, Frank, and Mrs. Perrault the first of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Whittaker announce the engagement of their second daughter, Margaret Lillian, to Herman G Strader, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Strader of Winchester, the marriage to take place shortly.

Rev. C G. Hepburn, rector of All Saints, Ottawa, spoke on the subject of Diocesan Missions at Holy Trinity Sunday morning. The service was a celebration of Holy Communion with the rector, Rev. G. O. Davies, as celebrant.

Mrs. John Fyke, Mrs. Garland Sharkey, Mr Lawrence Moles, Miss L. McArthur, Mr. George McAarthur and Mr. W. Pemberton attended the funeral of Mrs. Sam Pemberton at Waddington, N Y., on Monday, whose death occurred on Saturday.

Mr and Mrs. O. D. Casselman left Monday night for their winter sojourn in Pasadena, Calif. Mr. Casselman during the past summer gave considerable of his time to the affairs of the Chesterville and District Agricultural Society as its secretary-treasurer, with the satisfaction of showing a nice balance on the right side of the ledger at the annual meeting last week.

Grandmothers Entertained By Wo's. Institute Members

Pleasant Afternoon Spent in Library Hall—Demonstration by Miss H. Lacey, B.H.Sc., Very Interesting.

A very enjoyable afternoon was spent last Friday by a large number of the women of the community when the Women's Institute had as guests the grandmothers of the community.

After the business routine, Miss Helen Lacey, B.H Sc., gave a demonstration on Salads, delighting her audience with the deft and capable manner in which she prepared many lovely salads.

A vocal solo by Mrs. Chas. McMillan added to the pleasure of the afternoon. Prizes were won by Mrs. A. E. Bolster and Mrs. Chas. McMillan and each grandmother received a small favour.

Afternoon tea was served by Mrs. L. Marcellus, Mrs. D. Allison, Mrs. A. E. Bolster, Mrs. J. Slosser, Mrs. W. H. Lloyd and Mrs. John Sutherland.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem.

Member of "McMillan Family" Visits Scenes of Her Youth

Mrs. Lucy McMillan Nicoll, Assisted With Her Vocal Talent at Several Gatherings While on Visit Here.

Mrs. Lucy McMillan Nicoll left on Tuesday for her home in Calgary, Alta, after a six weeks' vacation in her old home vicinity.

Snce her arrival, Mrs. Nicoll has been, as she terms it, "royally entertained by her old friends both in the town and the country," but we who have known "Lucy" realize that she herself always goes far toward helping to make the good time.

She has been fortunate, in that her singing voice is still clear and sweet, and during her stay she assisted at many and varied entertainments, including harvest home church socials, banquets and private dinners. The outstanding affairs were the crystal wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. McAvoy of Chesterville and the diamond wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Shaw of Elma, all of whom are among her oldest friends.

While in Chesterville, Mrs. Nicoll was the guest of Mrs. Frank McCloskey and family, while in the country at the home of her cousin, Mrs. Andy Barkley, of Elma.

We wish Mrs. Nicoll a pleasant journey back to her home in the city of the foothills and would hope that she might return to her old homeland again in the near future.

One year instead of Three Years

Farmers insuring in our companies have now the option of insuring for one year instead of three years, owing to low prices of farm produce, and consequent scarcity of money. This may be to your advantage until conditions improve.
