Entrance Again Attempted Allison and Gillard Store

Thieves again broke into Allison and Gillard's store Tuesday evening, entrance being made from the roof through a ventilator to the office,but there the door to the store could not be forced open. Papers in the vault were pawed over but a supply of cash was overlooked. A revolver owned by Mr. D. Allison was taken, and exit was made by removing the shutter from a window.

Entrance was again attempted through M. Durant and Son's feed store at the rear of the building, but the door pried open on the attempt of a few weeks ago held this time and the entry was blocked.

It is believed by marks shown on the front door of P. J. Gilroy's jewellery store that entrance there was attempted and also at the rear door of the R. A. Beamish Co. store, the same night.

Provincial police are investigating.

Mrs. Robt. Suffel, Winchester, Died Following Stroke

The large attendance of relatives and friends present at the funeral of the late Mrs. Robert Suffel in Winchester United church, Sunday afternoon, showed how widely she was known and how dearly beloved she was.

The pastor, Rev. W. S. Atchison, preached a very touching sermon on the words of St. Paul, "He oft refreshed me," making reference to the cheerful, optimistic spirit of the deceased. Mesdames E. Steele and P. Durant sang: "The City Four Square," with Mr. F. Johnson at the organ.

Mrs. Suffel was in her 74th year and had not been in her usual health for a few months, but was able to attend to her household duties and to attend the services of the church and other meetings until she suffered a stroke last Wednesday morning which terminated in her death on Friday afternoon.

She was a life member of the W.M.S., an officer of the W.A., and the Women's Institute. The members of the W.M.S. sat with the mourners and lined up outside the church for the procession to pass through. There were many beautiful floral tributes.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Suffel is survived by an only child, Mrs. Wm. Lannin, of Winchester, two sisters, Mrs. Render, of Montreal, and another in California; also a brother, Charles Barkley, of Mountain township.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. T. O. Keyes, Ernest Merkley, Wm. Leslie, W. M. Cass, Ernie Gilroy and Peter Poole.

Constable McLean Reports On Hallowe'en Troubles

Aside from the problem of dealing with the two petitions asking for the ban of slot machines in the village, the Council Board did not have much to discuss Tuesday evening. Constable Garnet McLean reported on Hallowe'en disorders, stating that he had the names of 17 youths responsible for the turning of street lights on the south side of the river and the damage ensuing, but council did not feel like pressing the matter. However, the constable said he intended bringing the youth whom he considered the ring leader before the magistrate for using abusive language against an officer.

The street committee, Councillors Barkley and Hummel, were instructed to visit John Wardell's property on John street when the owner requested council to supply tile for across the front of his property to drain into the John street sewer. Mr. Wardell had given the town a supply of steel pipe some time ago and as a result he was lacking in tile now. Council is to supply a few lengths of field drains and Mr. Wardell is to have the work done himself.

The members of the same committee were to see about the repairing of the plank sidewalk torn up on Joseph street on Hallowe'en.

MR AND MRS. H .S. CARKNER CELEBRATE 40TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Carkner, well known residents of Maple Ridge, for the past 19 years, quietly celebrated the fortieth anniversary of their wedding Tuesday at the home of their daughter, Mrs. George Parish, of Rosedale, Ont. Only the immediate family and Mr and Mrs. Thomas Edgerton, of the Melvin Settlement, were present at the celebration, owing to Mrs. Carkner's health.

Members of the family presented a beautiful set of crystal sherbet glasses and Mr. Carkner expressed his appreciation for the gift.

"Slot" Machine License Boosted To $250 Per Year

Contentious Question Occupies Council Two Evenings.—Action Taken After Legal Adivce Sought. Licenses Expire Nov. 10.

TO BE TRIED FOR REST OF YEAR

In an effort to rid Chesterville of the "slot machine nuisance," the Village Council boosted the license rate of such machines to $250 at the November session this week, on the advice of the solicitor, W. B. Lawson, K.C. The question was perhaps the most contentious before the board for some years and required sessions on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings before a settlement was arrived at. The previous fee was $100 a machine.

Two petitions were received by the council Tuesday, one from the Women's Institute and the other signed by 158 citizens, setting forth the alleged vice and asking that the machines be banned from the village. The problem of banning slot machines has been confronting Ontario municipalities ever since an Ontario Supreme Court judge stated that under section 259 of the Municipal statutes "automatic candy vending machines" could be licensed by municipalities. The muddle was thickened by a Federal and a Provincial Supreme Court judge each giving judgment that such machines were legal.

It was alleged that although most of the machines in town were classed as "automatic candy vending machines," they were not used as such, with the operators said to be paying cash for the slugs whenever a player was lucky enough to receive them from the machine.

A year ago when the machines were introduced locally a license fee of $100 was set which it was thought would be sufficient to ban their use, but now there are six machines operating in the village, thus giving the town a revenue of $600 a year.

At Tuesday's session, Reeve Casselman and Councillor R. J. Barrie were appointed to interview W. B. Lawson, K.C., the village solicitor, and get his advice. This was done Wednesday afternoon, and the legal advice, in letter form, was read to last night's session.

Mr Lawson stated a village by-law could be enacted banning slot machines, and setting a maximum penalty of $50, but this would be difficult to enforce. A second course, was to obtain evidence of gambling against the operator and secure a conviction under section 226. This would carry a sentence of one year in jail against the convicted person. The third and most practical method, in his opinion, was to set an exorbitant license fee so that the operating of the machines would not be profitable. Mr. Lawson cited the cases of two neighbouring municipalities that had been approached for licenses, and after a fee of $250 had been set, no machines were installed.

A long discussion and study of Mr. Lawson's letter followed. Each of the three methods was canvassed thoroughly, and finally the high license fee was decided upon, but amount of the fee was a sticker.

Councillor Geo. H. Barkley said the machines were here now and some would stay no matter how high the license fee was, and he believed the village should get some revneue out of them. The Dominion Government collects 40 per cent of the cost of the machines in duty, and the village was already benefiting by $600 a year which had been included in this year's estimated revenue. He suggested licensing five machines at $800.

Council could not agree to this suggestion. Councillor H. C. Hummel thought it better to follow Mr. Lawson's suggestion for a $250 fee. But when put as a motion, this went without a seconder.

Councillor Barkley then sponsored a motion to set a fee of $200 each with a limit of five machines for town, to include three nickel machines and two quarter ones. This motion also went without a seconder.

Councillor Barkley then moved that David Yee be given the option to instal as many machines as he wished at $225 each, and again a seconder failed to show.

Reeve Casselman then seconded Councillor Hummel's original motion, setting the fee at $250. Councillor Barkley offered his last motion as an amendment but lost out as it was not seconded, and on the vote the Hummel-Casselman motion was sustained as Councillor Barrie voted with them. Councillor W. H. Fairbrass went on record as being absolutely against the allowance of slot machines in the village.

The gist of the motion was—that the license fee for slot machines in the village of Chesterville be placed at $250, in accordance with the advice of the solicitor, and that W. B. Lawson' K.C., prepare a bylaw accordingly: all fees to be payable in advance. This was to be given a trial until the end of the year.

The present licenses expire on November 10th.

New Agricultural Minister Feels Farmer Should Study Economics to be Successful

Heavy Buying in Boom Years Proved Disastrous to Many Ontario Families When Prices of Produce Took Landslide Few Years Ago.

"Farming is 'big business,' in fact a bigger business than any of the other basic industries in Canada today," said Hon. P. M. Dewan, newly appointed Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, in an interview at Toronto early this week.

In a special interview for the weekly press of Ontario, Mr. Dewan took time off from the many important duties and addresses which are filling his busy days to give an exclusive interview for the agriculturists of the province who are particularly interested in the portfolio of Agriculture, since its holder is so closely linked with the welfare and interests of the farmer.

"The old-time popular idea of the farmer as a lowly 'tiller of the soil' is disappearing," he said, "and the farmer is now recognized as a business man and a definite factor in the economic structure."

"All farmers are coming to realize the importance of a broader outlook as it affects their own business," Mr. Dewan continued, "and it is my belief that the Department of Agriculture can contribute greatly in assisting the farmer with the many problems that confront him in his complex business. Not only must we grow the best crops and raise the best live stock within our power, but we must be in a position to market them to the best advantage, and be able to look far ahead with a view to producing the right farm products at the right time.

Economics in Farming.

"In other words, we must be students of economics, or, make full use of the common sense that we have. Application of economics is definitely needed in farming and the department will see to it that more attention is paid to the broader application of this principle.

"Practical application o f my considered opinion of the value of improved farm aids to agriculture will be given in the encouragement of progressive work in education and economic principles. I am strongly in favour of the short courses for young farmers and will advocate further extension throughout the province of additional courses along such lines, and for club work and projects for boys and girls. Parents have given much encouragement and support to their children in the promotion of this work, and I feel that when facilities are provided, we shall find an ever-increasing interest throughout the province in the study of agricultural problems.

"A large part of self-help on the farmers' side can be achieved by a proper study and application of the principles of soil fertility and well-timed production of live stock. Crop producton and stock raising are very closely related, as we all know, but they must be co-ordinated for the best results. Linked up with proper methods of production comes the problem of marketing, and the farmer having improved his immediate problems of production, can justifiably look to the governmental authorities for aid in broadening and improving his market possibilities."

Raised on a Farm.

Of Irish-Canadian stock, Mr. Dewan was born and brought up on a farm in Carleton County, where he remained until he was 21 years old. On an "honest-to-goodness' farm, Mr. Dewan had every opportunity to get a thorough grounding in farm life and all its problems. After attending the Kemptville High school, he went on to university to obtain his B.A. degree. He taught school for a year and went on to the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, where he graduated in 1922. Joining the staff of the Kemptville Agricultural School, he specialized in the teaching of of poultry, animal husbandry and economics.

Later he went to Woodstock, where he has efficiently managed the Oxford Farmers' Co-operative Produce Company since that time. Taking a keen interest in the agricultural problems of the farmers, he has been able, by reason of his position as part banker and part agricultural consultant to keep in constant touch with all the branches of farming through his business contacts.

Interests and Hobbies.

Based on the activity of his youthful days, Mr. Dewan still believes in letting his legs serve as a useful means of locomotion, and during the sessions in Toronto usually walks several miles a day where the majority of people would be tempted to hop a street-car or take a taxi. His interest in walking might be traced back to the fact that in his college days he was a gold-medallist sprinter.

The Dewan home in Woodstock's outskirts, as might be expected, reflects Mr. Dewan's agricultural interests. His property covers several acres, and includes a small orchard, a cow and an extensive garden.

Presiding in the two-storey red-brick house, high on a hill overlooking the city, s charming and capable Mrs. Dewan, proud mother of seven healthy, lively boys and girls, all of whom live at home and attend school in Woodstock.

"CANADA 1937" RETURNING ON FRIDAY EVENINGS

It was announced today that the radio series "Canada 1937" which scored such success last season is to be renewed starting November 5th. This season, this most spectacular of Canadian broadcasts will be heard on Friday evenings at 10 o'clock.

Outstanding commentators under the guidance of Vernon Bartlett will again speak from Europe—an interviewer in Canada probing for answers to the questions of the "man in the street."

Lionel Shapiro, Canadian correspondent in New York, will speak from NBC studios, relaying such latest happenings of the Gay White Way as are of interest to Canadian listeners.

A new technique will be introduced in the talks on Canada to make the pulse of the nation audible to listeners throughout the country. Mr. Walter Bowles will broadcast from a different locality each week, telling of that district's contribution to Canada's progress and interviewing "nation builders" who make that progress possible.

Yet another outstanding feature of the programme will be the music—every selection will be specially arranged for the large orchestra and choir that is now in rehearsal.

In sponsoring these broadcasts—to be again produced by Victor George—Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada, Limited, is bringing a new experience to Canadian listeners. These Friday evening programmes are live demonstration of the fact that the Canadian broadcasting is equal to the challange for something new and spectacular.

Working as usual on our 120th Birthday

One hundred and twenty years ago there were only seven of us working on the staff of the Bank—a cashier, an accountant, a paying teller, a second teller, a discount clerk, a second bookkeeper, and a porter—that was the entire staff. Today we are more than 6000, in more than 500 Branches, all working to render modern, experienced banking service.

Our Bank's career has been inseparably woven into the career of the nation and every part of it. Founded in 1817, the Bank at once became a financial pathfinder for Canada's pioneers. Through all the intervening, eventful, growing years of Canadian life, our Bank has kept strong and efficient—by pursuing a policy of safety for depositors and by keeping our services always abreast of modern conditions.

In times of expansion and depression, in the best and the worst of economic conditions; through peace and wars, panics and political upheavals, Canadians have learned to rely upon the unwavering safety and banking assistance of the Bank of Montreal. Older than the Dominion itself, yet young as the latest sound business enterprise of Canada, we are working as usual on our 120th Birthday.

SPECIAL ARMISTICE DAY DRAMATIZATION

Hour-by-hour succession of events that culminated 11.00 o'clock, August 4, 1914, in the declaration of war, will be broadcast in dramatic form in "August 4, 1914," a special programme to be presented over the national network of the CBC from 11.00 p.m. to 12.00 o'clock midnight EST, on Remembrance Day. The programme, prepared by Professor Temberley of Cambridge University and based on authentic documents of the British and other Foreign Offices, will be produced by Laurence Gilliam, of the British Broadcasting Corporation, who is month period.

now working with the CBC for a six-

"August 4, 1914," which was broadcast first by the BBC in 1934 under the title "Twenty Years Ago," will originate in the Toronto studios. In this sixty minute production will be heard the hidden motives and forces that dominated the statesmen of Europe and the world in those days that followed the assassination of the Archduke Ferdinand, at Serajevo. on June 28, 1914. While no imaginative writer could hope to catch the drama of these once secret dispatches, pencilled jottings, diplomatic telegrams, and secret diary entries which were shaping the fate of the world at that time, they nevertheless will be reenacted in an exciting fashion. The actual assasssination of the Archduke will be described in the words of an eye-witness and the European reaction will be re-captured from the telegrams which passed between the chancellries of Europe. The aged Emperor of Austria, Franz Josef, will be heard deploring to the Kaiser and the voices of the Austro-Hungarian ministers, Count Berchtold and Count Tisza, will be heard as they formulated the terms of the ultimatum to Siberia. The dramatically calm voice of Sir Edward Grey, British Foreign Minister, will be heard pleading for peace, and the tones of the German emperor will re-echo as he scribbled marginal notes in the heat of the moment on his ambassador's despatches. As the climax approached and the momentum of Europe on the "slippery slope" increased. the voices of the Czar, Bethman-Hollweg, Asquith, King George V, Lichnowsky, Pourtales and Goschen will be heard in final despair.

"HELLO, CANADA — and hockey fans in Newfoundland and the United States!..." Once more, on Saturday, November 6th. Foster Hewitt's familiar greeting will sweep over a chain of stations from Coast to Coast. Fans in Canada — the United States — and even in more distant countries — will rally round their radios to hear the opening Imperial Oil Hockey Broadcast of the game between Toronto Maple Leafs and New York Americans, at the Maple Leaf Gardens.

That this programme is the world's biggest and most popular weekly sports broadcast, is borne out by a letter received from an enthusiastic woman hockey fan, formerly of Nova Scotia, but who writes to say she is going to "listen in" from her far-away new home in Cristobal, Canal Zone, where, she claims, reception is crystal clear.

The Imperial Oil Hockey Broadcasts will expand this coming winter, practically "blanketing" every province in Canada wth the broadcasts of games played either in Toronto or in Montreal.

Last winter, broadcasting of Montreal games was not permitted during the regular season schedule, leaving province of Quebec listeners without hockey until the play-offs. This winter, however, Imperial Oil Limited has secured a franchise for all Saturday night games in Montreal.

With the province of Quebec thus provided for, the hockey network will now cover the entire Dominion with games played either in Toronto or in Montreal, and Saturday night will very definitely become Hockey Night In Canada.

Imperial Oil's Montreal staff of English announcers is already familiar to listeners through Canada, due to its handling of the Montreal play-off games last winter. But, in addition to the English broadcasts of games at the Forum, there will be a companion broadcast, entirely in French, and featuring Roland Beaudry as the play announcer. This will go out over a Quebec provincial network of five stations—believed to be the largest French-language network ever used on a weekly sports feature.

Thus, the Imperial Oil Hockey Broadcasts during the coming winter will actually consist of three separate and distinct broadcasts every Saturday night. One of these will be the regular broadcast of the Maple Leaf home games from the Maple Leaf Gardens, in Toronto. A second will be the English broadcast of either the Maroons or Canadiens home games at The Forum in Montreal—which may occasionally be heard over the national network, particularly during play-offs. The third will be the all-French broadcast of the Montreal games, sent out over a Quebec provincial network.

It is believed that this dual broadcast from Montreal is the only weekly two-language feature of its sort in the entire world!

First Voter: "Don't you think it would be a good thing if our legislators were limited to one term?"

Second Voter: "It would depend altogether on where the term was to be served."

PLACING THE BLAME WHERE IT BELONGS

A JURY down in Cape Breton Island has struck a stout blow for the public safety.

Three men were riding in a motor car. The owner of the car was a passenger, and a friend was driving. The car hit a pole and the third man was killed. Driver and owner were prosecuted, and both were found guilty of manslaughter. The owner, it was charged, had permitted an unlicensed operator to take the wheel and thus was equally responsible with the driver for the consequences.

Presumably this is sound law, and certainly it is common sense. If a man legally in possession of a revolver lends it to a friend who has no license to carry such a weapon, and the friend uses the gun in the commission of a crime, the owner is an accessory and subject to severe punishment. The owner of an automobile similarly must accept full responsibility for the use made of his car if he lends it to some one not licensed to drive.

DON'T TRY THIS ONE

CHARLIE MARLATT, of Danville, Ill., is a retired railroader of 75. A reporter asked him the other day to relate some of his experiences. Charlie did not have any big accidents to tell about. But he did tell one thing which he apparently considers the highlight of his railroading career. Here it is:

He had just taken his engine out of the roundhouse when a tooth started aching. Now, Charlie had been to dentists before. His teeth were very hard to extract. The dentists had all but yanked him out of the chair. No more dentists for him. He tied a stout piece of string around the aching tooth, attached the other end to the locomotive, lay down on an adjacent track and grasped a rail.

The engineer clambered into the cabin, the engine gave a toot and started forward. When it caught up the slack, out came the tooth!

CINCHONA BARK.

QUININE is a medicinal product obtained from the bark of the cinchona tree. It is so highly prized as a remedy for certain fevers and malaria that the British Government orders it to be kept on sale at every post office in India.

The tree is a native of South America where it grew wild and unattended until the Dutch cultivated it in Java less than one hundred years ago. The leaves are similar to those of the laurel and the fragrant blossoms are pink and white. The bark is not used until the trees are six years old. The early method followed by the South American Indians was to cut down the tree. Had this procedure gone on the danger of extinction was imminent, but the present way is to remove the bark in strips, covering the denuded part with moss until the wound heals.

The Indians of Peru called the trees "Kina" and the name cinchona originated after the Countess of Chinchon, wife of the viceroy to Peru, brought it to Europe in 1639. The lady had been cured of an obstinate fever while in Peru, and she brought the remedy back with her. The bark was also called Jesuits Bark because later the Jesuit missionaries brought it to Rome and distributed it.

Then it fell into practical disuse in Europe until again brought to public attention by an English apothecary, Robert Talbot, who cured Charles II of a fever in 1678. After other eminent persons on the Continent, including the Dauphin, had benefited from the drug, Louis XIV purchased the secret. Thus the adoption of quinine as a medicine was assured.

The plantations of cinchona trees under cultivation today in India and Ceylon owe their origin to Clements Markham, an Englishman who introduced the trees into India in 1860 and through one man's perseverance in growing this precious bark, the price is now only one-thirtieth of that which prevailed in 1870.

Over 100,000 ounces of quinine salts were imported into Canada last year, according to the External Branch of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Department of Trade and Commerce.

REACTION TIME.

PERSONS wishing to be aviators are subjected to a most thorough medical examination, and rightly so, as flying requires both physical fitness and mental alertness of a high order. One of the main tests to which the candidate is subjected is called the "reaction time" to determine fitness for the exacting responsibility of controlling an aeroplane.

Scientific instruments are used to measure accurately just how long it takes the individual under test to do certain things under varying conditions. In other words these instruments indicate clearly to what degree mental alertness and physical action are in harmony. In any group of persons so tested it is observed that some are slow, others are jumpy, while others again are on the hair trigger of precision and accuracy of control.

Normal reaction time, like normal pulse or normal temperature is desirable.

But unfortunately there are a great many persons whose reaction time is not normal. And in this fast moving age of motor traffic when split second decisions are often called for, serious accidents occur because at least one of the individuals concerned was not capable of responding quickly enough to the demands. His reaction time was too slow.

To all motorists, mechanics and to everybody who handles movable objects which if out of control can injure or destroy life, we would issue a word of caution.

Take stock of your reaction time. Try and be perfectly honest about it, too. By doing a little thinking on the subject you can likely determine whether or not your recation time is normal. Then when you are faced with the responsibility of putting your reaction time to the test—play safe—by leaving yourself a wide margin beyond your normal.

This year in Canada 20,000 people will be injured in automobile accidents many of which will be due to the fact that drivers were not equal to the exigencies of the moment. They could not do the right thing quickly enough. Their reaction time was faulty. Put an honest rating upon your own reaction time and play safe.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

MISS HELEN LACEY, B.H.Sc.

HAVE YOU MADE YOUR FRUIT CAKE?

AS FRUIT CAKES keep so well, and in fact taste better after standing a few weeks, it is a good plan to make them well in advance of the Christmas season. It gives a very comfortable feeling, too, to have the Christmas cakes all baked and ready and ready for the holiday. There are always so many little last-minute things to think of when Christmas is nearer that it is nice to have at least one thing done—long before.

LIGHT FRUIT CAKE.

4 eggs
2 cups white sugar
1 cup butter
3 cups flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 lb. seeded raisins
1 cup cocoanut
½ lb. finely cut figs
½ lb. mixed peel
1 small bottle red cherries
1 small bottle green cherries
½ cup milk

Cream the butter and add sugar slowly and beaten eggs. Beat together until light. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together and to this add the chopped raisins, the shredded cocoanut, the peel cut in thin slices, and the cherries drained and dried slightly in the oven and cut in small pieces. Add flour and fruit mixture alternately with the milk to the first mixture. Blend thoroughly. Bake in two loaf tins in a moderate oven for one hour.

RIBBON FRUIT CAKE.

Black Part.

1½ cups sugar
1 cup butter
6 egg yolks
2 cups flour
1½ lbs. raisins
1 lb. currants
½ lb. citron
¼ lb. nut meats
2-3 cup vinegar
1 teaspoon soda
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon allspice

Cream the sugar, add the butter and cream together until well blended. Add eggs and beat well. Use a little of the flour to dredge the fruit and nuts. Sift together the remainder of the flour, spices and soda. Add flour mixture and vinegar alternately. Blend well, add fruit and nuts.

White Part.

6 egg whites
1 cup white sugar
½ cup butter
½ cup milk or cream
2½ cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
1 lb. finely chopped almonds
½ lb. citron
½ lb. cocoanut
1 teaspoon rose water
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Small slice of orange peel

Cream the butter and add sugar gradually. Add milk or cream. Sift dry ingredients and mix with nuts and fruit. Add to first mixture. Mix well, add flavouring and lastly fold in stiffly beaten egg whites.

Bake in a greased tin, putting in first a layer of black, then a layer of white, and so on until all is used. Bake in a slow oven.

RICH FRUIT CAKE.

1¼ lbs. light brown sugar
13 eggs
2 teaspoons cinnamon
1 teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon mace

ess now. It's Simon. That last buck

2 lb. currants
3 lbs. raisins
½ lb. dates
½ lb. almonds
1 lb. citron peel
½ cup grape juice
½ cup strong coffee

Prepare the fruit the day before you plan to bake your cake. Pick over, wash and dry the currants; wash, seed and cut the raisins; wash, dry and stone the dates; cut peel into very thin slices; blanch and chop almonds. Mix fruit and nuts and dredge with one- third of the measured flour.

In mixing the cake, first cream the butter thoroughly. Add sifted sugar slowly; beat until very light. Add ¼ of flour and spices mixed and sifted together. Add egg yolks, well beaten, then stiffly beaten whites. Beat the mixture until very light. Add fruit juice and coffee alternately with the remaining flour; beat well. Add fruit 1-3 at a time. Pour mixture into pans which have been carefully lined with three thicknesses of paper, of which the top layer has been buttered. Do not fill the pans more than 2-3 full. Bake in a very slow oven three to four hours or steam 2½ hours and bake for 1 hour.

This recipe will make four medium-sized cakes.

BADEN-POWELL AT HOME.

Stories of Lord Baden-Powell as a host at his Hampshire home, Pax Hill, picture the World Chief Scout as still full of the play spirit of boyhood. "At dinner one night," related a recent Canadian visitor, "he gave us his idea of a Caledonia market—a jumble of people, shacks, booths and noise; and wound up with a lively portrayal of a coster selling 'Barmalade.'"

A story told with great zest described a military reception when B.-P. was a young officer in India. As a prank, he and another youngster went as newspaper correspondents, the one "for a French paper" the other "for a London daily." Chuckling as though the affair had happened but yesterday, B.-P. recounted the chats he had with various people present, including one elderly lady who was pleased to recall having met him in London the previous season, — when he was in India.

The Chief Scout was described as remarkably active, and "at 81 as fine a specimen of a well preserved elderly man as one would find anywhere." He sleeps in a corner room which has no walls on two sides—practically in the open air; rises regularly at 6 a.m. and goes for a walk with his dogs. On his return he goes through his mountain of morning mail, and has it ready for his secretary before breakfast.

The visitor marvelled at the amount of work done by the entire family. "Sometimes there were three typewriters going—Lady B.-P. at her machine on Guide affairs, the Hon. Heather B.-P. on news matter for the press, and the Chief's secretary on his correspondence. A regular workshop!"

"Is that man rich?"

"Is he? He's so rich he doesn't know his son's in college."

Mistress: "Did you water the rubber plant?"

Maid: "Why, ma'am, I thought it was waterproof."

Fritz and His "Yager"

A REGIMENT of Illinois Volunteers under the command of Col. Newby, which were making the journey from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to Santa Fe, New Mexico, to take part in the Mexican War, were encamped on the South Canadian River in the panhandle of Texas. At the end of a hard day's march through deep, dry sand, the tired command had halted on the north bank of the stream. The guide had earnestly advised the commanding officer to cross that night, since the river might rise very quickly. The officer had not believed that such extreme caution was necessary, for the Canadian had appeared a mere bed of dry white sand half a mile wide but at daylight the next morning the treacherous river had been fifteen feet deep with a current as swift as a mountain stream.

Now, after a week of very monotonous camp life, the soldiers were beginning to grumble at the delay; they were eager to get on into Mexico before the war was over. However, they knew that it would be foolhardy to attempt to cross the river in its present condition, and they probably would not have become impatient if they had been allowed to hunt. They wanted the excitement, and they also wanted a supply of fresh meat. Day after day for the last three weeks hardly an hour had passed when some kind of game had not been in sight. Prairie chickens had boomed up from beside the trail, the keouk! and gobble of wild turkeys had wakened the sleepers at daybreak, deer had drifted out of the wooden canyons in droves, antelopes had gazed curiously at the slow-moving train from a thousand ridges, and on the Little Arkansas they had had to halt for half a day to let a herd of migrating buffaloes pass.

From the beginning, orders had been strict that no gun was to be fired either in camp or on the march without permission from the commanding officer; and, with the exception of a few scouts who skirted the train in order to guard against surprise attacks from the Indians, no detached parties were allowed to leave the main body. The dangerous activity of the plains Indians made such strict discipline necessary. Not a command had yet travelled the Santa Fe trail without a brush or two with Indians, and here and there little mounds of stone showed where white men had been buried—buried deep so that the wolves could not dig them up. Although Col. Newby's regiment had seen no Indians,—except the friendly Osages,—the commander well knew that the red men were constantly dogging the train.

When, after a week in camp by the Canadian, a scout came in with word that a great herd of buffaloes were grazing in a valley a few miles to the north, Lieut. Lucky of Company H succeeded in getting permission for a dozen of his men to go buffalo hunting under command of Sergt. Houston. The gray-haired lieutenant smiled as he saw his men stepping briskly away, musket on shoulder, with high anticipation of the number of bison they would kill.

The old relics of the War of 1812 that the volunteers carried were not precisely the weapons that experienced buffalo hunters would have chosen. They were flintlocks, smooth-bored like a shot-gun, and the charge consisted of a round ball and three buckshot; a bullet fired from such a gun would fall a foot in a hundred yards. The soldiers to a man knew how to handle a rifle, but with one of these war muskets the most expert shot could hardly have been sure of hitting his mark at a distance more than a thousand yards. Even if the hunter got close enough to a buffalo, it was doubtless whether one shot from the ancient weapon would kill.

One man of the detail had a different sort of gun, Fritz Wagner, the wagon master, who had been ordered to accompany the hunters on his saddle mule, Wilhelm, to help carry in the meat. Fritz had a gun the like of which few of the soldiers had ever seen before. It was a German "yager;" compared with a Kentucky rifle, it was short in the barrel, but it had a bore that looked an inch across, and it took a bullet as heavy as three musket balls. The gun, which weighed perhaps fourteen pounds, was much too heavy for military purposes; but it was well rifled, correctly sighted, had a set, or hair, trigger, and a nipple for percussion caps instead of a flintlock. Fritz declared that with his gun he could kill a man at a range of half a mile or more; but his comrades, never having seen him perform the feat, were skeptical. They admitted, however, that the "Dutch blunderbuss" made a noise like a cannon and might carry as far.

Although the men considered Fritz as a "furriner," and hence not entitled to the same consideration that a free-born American deserved, they regarded him as a capable train master and a general good fellow. His one enemy was Private Simons, a quarrelsome, refractory man, who had once made the mistake that he would ride in one of the "Dutchman's" wagons, whether or no. Officers had interfered in the interest of peace and discipline, but Red Simons still bore his grude against Fritz, although he did not try again to ride in one of his wagons without permission.

Fritz's best friend was the Scotch sergeant, Neal Houston. The bond between the two men was, perhaps, the fact that the German had served five years in the Prussian army, and that Neil had for double that length of time belonged to the Gordon Highlanders. Neal himself was not a volunteer, but a regular of the United States Army, who had been assigned to duty to whip the raw recruits into shape. Fritz, too, was a veteran of many trips across the plains, with a wide experience in Indian warfare. Both despaired of ever being able to make real soldiers out of the skylarking volunteers, although Neal declared that the rascals would fight if it came to a pinch.

An hour after leaving camp the detail of hunters were lying on top of a high hill, surveying a great herd of buffaloes in the valley below. The grazing ground, a mile or more wide and as level as a floor, was entirely hemmed in by high hills.

The hunters had come upon the buffaloes from the south, but since the wind was from that direction, Neal had ordered the men to make a detour to the west, in order to approach the wary animals against the wind. Although the hunters had proceeded very cautiously, something made the buffaloes suspicious, for when the men reached the edge of the westerly hills the herd had moved well out into the valley toward the opposite side. They were not feeding as contentedly as they had been; a number of bulls had drawn together and with raised heads were staring steadily to the west. Doubtless while the hunters were winding their way through the canyons some treacherous, eddying current of air had carried a warning to the buffaloes.

Sergt. Houston's lean face wore a puzzled frown. The bison were quite out of musket range, and it seemed impossible to stalk a yard closer to them. As leader of the party, it rested upon him to devise a plan of action and he could recollect no military tactics that exactly covered the case. Of all the party, Fritz was the only one who had ever killed a buffalo, and he had been left well behind in a depression with his mule. While the sergeant pondered the matter, his poorly disciplined force was ready with all kinds of suggestions.

"Let's fire a volley, sergeant, all of us at once—we're jist bound to splatter 'em up some."

"Too far," Tim Ables declared. "Thar's no force left in a musket ball after sich a flight; must be six hundred yards—bullets be like so many peas drappin' on a buffler's back—switch his tail and off he'd go."

"It wouldn't s'prise me any if we couldn't overtake them clumsy critters in a straight race," ventured Long John Talbot, who considered himself as something of a runner.

"I crep' up on many a flock of geese like that," remarked Uncle Bobby Russell. "I 'spect if we got down on our stomachs and kep' our heads down and crawled mighty slow, we mgiht git to 'em."

"Silence in the ranks," order Sergt. Houston. "I misdoobt the campaign is goin' to be a failure. The trouble is we hae nae cavalary, neither artil'ry. A twelve-poonder, now, would create havoc amang 'em, or a coomp'ny of mounted men might detain 'em until the infantry could come up."

"Why not use the Dutch artil'ry and the Prussian cavalry back there?" asked Red Simon. "Accordin' to Fritz he can hit a bull's-eye every time at half a mile, and his mule can run to close a mile a minute."

"Some sense in what ye say, Simon, though I doobt if it was so meant. I hae no authority to order Fritz into a buffalo chase; it might mean the death of his mule this hot day. I must consult him. Go back and send him up here. Stay there and keep the beast quiet."

"Fritz can't be cavalry and artil'ery both at once . I'm goin' to mount the mule and get a runnin' shot at close quarters. He can't hit the broadside of a church from here, and we need one buffalo anyhow."

"Obey orders or I'll report ye to the colonel—if I don't take matters into my own hands. Av coorse ye should hae been a major general, Simon, but ye are only a private now, and I am your commanding officer. Send up Fritz."

With a defiant look on his face, Red Simon shouldered his musket and disappeared over the ridge. Presently Fritz came up with his "yager."

"Take a look at the animals, Fritz. They must hae winded us, and we can come no closer without stampeding the herd. The distance is six hundred yards, more or less. Think your big piece will carry over that range?"

"It is not so certain, sergeant, without a sighting shot to give me the range. Maybe I can kill. I will try for the bull nearest. If the bullet goes over his back, some other of the boonch should be in the way. At sefen hoondred yards I set the sight. Ha! What happens to Wilhelm?"

The clump! clump! clump! of the mule's hoofs came to them distinctly from the north.

"He's making off with your mule, Fritz! The villain! For this he'll get a lesson to remember his lifetime. Shoot, Fritz, before the herd sees him."

Fritz took from beneath his jacket a pair of sticks a few inches long, rivetted together like shears. These he stuck into the ground so that they formed as a rest for his heavy gun. Now the keen-eyed German adjusted his sight, placed the muzzle of his "yager" in the rest, and lay down prone. The group of buffaloes had quieted, and some of them were beginning to graze, but the bull that Fritz had selected seemed to be on guard.

The great rifle roared like a cannon; a cloud of smoke obscured everything in front, and the heavy report, rolling across the valley, rebounded in many an echo from the high hills on the far side. The frightened buffaloes started to flee, then, unable to find the source of danger, stopped and milled about. Throughout the length of the valley the herd had stopped grazing; they were waiting for a leader to start the stampede.

The buffalo bull at which Fritz had fired stood for half a minute without moving; then he turned and trotted swiftly away up the valley.

"You hit him!" Sergt. Neal declared. "I heard the ball strike. Watch him!"

The bull trotted slowly until he came to what appeared to be a buffalo wallow; there he either lay down or fell. The other bison had started to retreat with the stricken bull, but they now halted, and some of the bulls began to bellow loudly.

"Dead as a mack'rel!;" shouted young Bill Drew. "Load up, Fritz, and down another before they get away. Too late! There comes Simon and the mule!"

It was true. Red Simon and his mount appeared from behind the shoulder of a ridge that jutted out into the valley; and he was heading for the buffaloes at full speed.

The sight of Red Simon charging was too much for the soldiers, and they went whooping down the hill, followed by Sergt. Houston, with Fritz, who had been reloading his "yager," bringing up the rear.

Wilhelm was surprisingly fast for a mule, and before the men had covered fifty rods he and his rider were among the buffaloes. Red Simon fired at a bull; but the creature, instead of falling to the ground, wheeled and charged. With his gun empty, Simon could only whip his mule into a hasty retreat. At last Wilhelm began to draw away from his pursuer; the bull stopped, shook his head angrily and, turning, followed after his mates. Red Simon again took up the chase, and fired one of Fritz's cavalry pistols at the beast; but the only effect was to cause the bull to charge again.

By this time the men were coming within range, but because of the danger of hitting Simon or the mule they could not fire.

"Pull out, Simon!" shouted Sergt. Houston. "Give the boys a chance!"

If Simon heard the order he paid no attention to it, for he was presently after the bull again, still directly between the men and the mark. He discharged the other pistol at the buffalo's very flank, and this time the hunter did not escape so easily. As he wheeled and swung in a circle to avoid the lowered horns of the enraged beast, the mule, breaking through into a badger hole, went down and tossed his rider far over his head. A rattling volley from the infantry did not check the bull's charge; but when the creature was almost on top of the man, the "yager" boomed, and the animal went down. Red Simon rose, picked up his gun, and, grasping Wilhelm's rein, kicked the mule until the poor beast got to its feet; then he climbed into the saddle and, pounding Wilhelm to great effort with the butt of his gun, rode off after the fleeing herd. The man seemed in a frenzy, for he paid not the slightest heed to Sergt. Houston's emphatic orders to halt.

The men now gathered around the fallen bull, each of them certain that his bullet must have produced a fatal wound but they all acknowledged that the broken neck had been caused by the big bullet of the "yager."

Sergt. Houston stood watching the obstreperous trooper until man and mule, still in full chase of the buffaloes, passed out of sight over a ridge to the north.

"My good mule," said Fritz sorrowfully, as he came up. "Simon'll run poor old Welhelm to death. It's a pity that feller didn't break his neck, now."

"A hundred such men would ruin an army," declared the sergeant indignantly. "The only cure for a man like that is a fight where the bullets are flying thick enough to scare him stiff. Never mind, men; skin out them buffaloes and get the meat ready. We must be ready to start back to camp within an hour."

Skilled hands quickly skinned the game and cut up the meat ready for carrying to camp. There was more than a thousand pounds of good buffalo beef—far more than they could take into camp even if the mule, when it got back, was in good enough shape to take a load. Capt. Cunningham of the commissary department had partly promised to send a wagon if he heard any shooting, and the men were now on the lookout for the team as well as for Simon, who had been gone three quarters of an hour.

"The scoundrel!" muttered Neal uneasily. "The next thing I'll be hauled up before the 'old man' for not taking care of him."

"Look, sergeant, there he comes! No! It's a horse!"

To the north, nearly half a mile away, a single horseman had ridden to the top of the ridge, and there, outlined against the evening sky, had halted; sitting his mount motionless, he looked down upon the detail of soldiers.

Fritz took a small telescope from its case, glanced through it and handed it to Sergt. Houston. After examining the lone horseman for an instant, the officer turned to his men.

"That's a Indian. I think he's a Cheyenne, but he is not in war paint—most likely one of a hoonting party out after buffalo. See him signal! Look to your guns, men! More Indians there!"

One by one the Indians ranged themselves alongside the first horseman, thirty, all told, sitting as stiffly erect as United States cavalrymen, with their ponies in perfect alignment.

"Get into that buffalo waller!" Neal ordered sharply. "Take your bayonets and dig a trinch all the way round the rim of it. Pile this meat in front of you for a breastwork. Dig yourselves in. They've coonted us and may charge, but they have only bows and arrows, and we can stand 'em off."

Hardly had the hunters got well to work when the Indians gave a long whoop and came charging down helter skelter. They did not swerve until they were within three or four hundred yards from the soldiers; then they turned and circled around and around them, well out of musket range. They had strung out in single file, with perhaps thirty or forty yards between warriors; although riding at full speed every red man sat boldly upright in his saddle. The soldiers dropped their bayonets and seized their muskets.

"Niver mind grabbing your guns!" snapped the sergeant. "They can't touch us with an arrow at that distance. I'll tell you when to shoot. Dig yourselves in—every man in his own hole."

Three times the red riders encircled the soldiers, gradually drawing in closer. When they were within two hundred yards, the bucks swung to the far sides of their ponies, and sent an occasional arrow at the white men. Most of the arrows flew wild, but one or two landed in the buffalo hole. One arrow stuck upright in a piece of beef directly in front of Ables, and its feathered end beat slowly back and forth for a few seconds. John Talbot thrust up his foot and shook it derisively at the Indians as an arrow passed close over him.

"Better keep your long shanks under ye, John," Ables said. " 'Fore ye know it one of them spikes will pin 'em to the ground."

"Get down, all of you!" came the crisp command from the sergeant. "Remember, not a shot until I gie the word! I will call the name of the man who is to fire. On your lives, now, not a man pulls trigger until his name is called. If they can induce us to empty all our guns at once, they'll charge and finish us. No shooting is to be done until they are within a hundred yards, except by Fritz. When you do shoot, aim at the horse's neck, and don't miss."

Neal had guessed right; the Indians, trying to tempt the soldiers to waste their shots, soon began to taunt them. Some of the bucks sat upright and, waving their arms, reviled their foes; now and then one of the red men stood erect on the back of his pony. The sharp Indian yelp came continually from all sides. The circle suddenly narrowed; the red riders swung to the far side of their ponies, and the arrows came thicker and were more accurately aimed.

Fritz and Neal lay side by side. "Getting too hot, Fritz. Won't do to let this go too far. Some one will get hit, and the boys will all cut loose in a volley, in spite of me. We don't want to kill any of 'em, Fritz, unless we have to, for they'll try hard to get even then. See that big black divil sitting up! Shoot for the pony's shoulder, lad, and maybe it will be a lesson to the gang."

At the tremendous boom of the big gun the pony went rolling heels over head like a stricken rabbit. After a wild tumble, the buck sprang to his feet, caught the horse of a passing comrade and swung up behind. A startled yell in which there was a note of fright came from a score of red riders. Either from hearsay or experience all of them knew something of the white man's cannon, and they must have thought that this thunder gun, with its instantaneously fatal missile, was nothing short of a piece of field artillery. At some signal from their leader they broke away in the direction of the ridge on which they had first appeared. When they reached it they halted and held a consultation.

It was now the soldier's turn to cheer, and they did so vigourously, springing to their feet and waving their caps.

"I only wish Sergt. Houston had let me fire jist one shot!" exclaimed young Bill Drew. "I bet there'd 'a' been one Indian less."

"Huh!" commented Uncle Bobby Russell dryly. "You had your head tucked down so low you couldn't have aimed at nothing but the moon."

"Good shot, Fritz!" cried the sergeant. "That big piece put more fear into the scamps than killing half a dozen of them with a musket would have done. Now, if the wagon from camp don't coome up without an escort, or if they don't run afoul of that fool Simon, we're done with 'em. Hello! What's that? Give me the glass!"

Two riders had come up from behind the ridge and had joined the Indians, and one of them was surely mounted on a mule.

"Poor lad! He'll pay for his foolishness now. It's Simon. That last buck is leading your mule by the rein, Fritz, and Simon is tied fast to the saddle. Our best regiment of cavalry couldna save him. Now, watch the beggars parade."

With Simon and his captor standing in the centre of the ring, the warriors galloped and pranced about in a short circle.

A dismayed silence fell on the men who had cheered exuitantly a few minutes before. Any of them would cheerfully have faced a soldier's death but torture at the hands of a savage was a different thing.

"I take a shot, Neal, if I may—at the buck holding my mule. I might hit him. Wilhelm gets loose, he come straight to the sound of my gun—he always does that when he's loose. Maybe I miss—it's a chance."

"Yes, yes! Aim your straightest, Fritz. It may mean Simon's death instantly, but that be better than torture."

The Cheyennes had once more halted and lined up behind their captive. The pony of the Indian who held Wilhelm stood broadside. Coolly but quickly Fritz settled the muzzle of his great gun on the earth piled in front of him. The men held their breath while he cocked the "yager" and set the hair trigger with a click that rang loud in the stillness. He took a short, steady aim, and then the big gun belched forth fire that could be seen in the waning light. A shade of a second, and the Indian's horse at which Fritz had aimed dropped to its knees and rolled on its side.

At once there was a confused movement among the Indians. One animal separated itself from the others and galloped straight for the buffalo hunters. Whilhelm it was, coming at his best pace to his master gun. Superstitious fear must have settled on the Indians—the great gun was "bad medicine," aimed by the evil spirit. They sent a few arrows after the helpless rider; then, plying the quirt, they turned, passed over the ridge, and were never seen again.

The mule charged up to the buffalo hunters and stood panting from his race. An arrow stuck from his hip, a second was embedded in the saddle, and a third had been driven clear through Simon's lower leg. When his comrades had cut the rawhide thongs that bound him and had bandaged his bleeding leg, Simon turned to Neal.

"Sergt. Houston, I'll mind you next time," he said. "I've learned a lesson, and I'm terrible glad to be back. Give me your hand, Fritz. You're a better shot and a better comrade than I can ever hope to be."

"Ya, ya, but vait till I git the stick out of Wilhelm. He ain't hurt mooch, but he might keeck me if I tickle him."

"Here comes the big, four-mule-wagon and about forty of the boys!" called Uncle Bobby Russell. "Now, let's hustle into camp and cook a buffalo hump. I'm hungry."
