Council is Petitioned For Early Closing By-Law

Draft of By-law Being Prepared to Close Stores and Shops at 7 p.m., Excepting Saturdays. — Holidays to be Observed.

A petition, signed by the majority of owners of shops and employees, was received by the Village Council at the meeting Tuesday evening, requesting the passing of a by-law necessitating all stores to close at 7 p.m. on week days with Saturday's hours set at 11 p.m., and observance of all public holidays. The council is having the by-law drafted and it is expected to be passed shortly. All members of the council were present and several items of business were passed.

Two salesmen were present at the meeting with samples of fire hose but council has deferred purchase until the present supply at the fire hall has been checked over.

A new dump has been secured on the premises of Dan. A. McDonald on the south shore of the river for the disposal of all tins, scrap, etc. Mr. McDonald is building a retaining wall along his property and is allowing the village the dumping privilege in order to fill in behind the cement work.

Clean-up day for Chesterville was set for next Wednesday, May 15th, and the citizens are asked to co-operate in the cleaning of the village by gathering up all unnecessary cans, etc., but not vegetable matter, and placing it at the street side in front of their properties. The corporation has arranged for the picking up and transfer of this material to the dump.

When the items of bills came up, considerable discussion took place over certain hospital bills for indigent patients. Fire Chief A. Morris was present to report on certain matters in his department.

Work will be undertaken shortly on the repairing of the fire hydrant in front of the Masonic hall on Main street North which was badly damaged last winter when struck by an unknown auto.

After an illness of many months, Mrs. Russell Miller, formerly Hazel Saucier, daughter of Mrs. Saucier and the late W. M. Saucier of this place, passed away at her home in Toronto, burial taking place at Kingston yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Miller was very well known and highly popular in Chesterville where she spent her girlhood, where for some time she was organist of the Presbyterian church. In her city home, with her husband, she was pleased to extend a most cordial hospitality to students and other young people from her old home town. Her husband survives as well as her mother and sister, Mrs. Leblanc, to whom the sympathy of this community is extended.

He worked at the blacksmithing trade in Berwick, Alexandria, Montreal and Cornwall, being well-known to many in this district. His widow, the former Miss Agnes Fisher, of Chesterville, survives, in addition to one daughter, Margaret of Toronto, and one brother, Patrick of Chicago, Ill.

Following the service at Cornwall, the body was brought to Chesterville where the cortege was met by friends with Maurice Servage, John Heveran, Mack Curran, Edward Dwyer, George Sevage and E. Warren acting as pallbearers Interment was made in the Upper cemetery, with Rev. Father Foley of Cornwall, and Rev. Father Keaney of St. Mary's church, Chesterville, conducting the service at the graveside.

Fire Chief's Shop Takes Fire

Even if you are a fire chief, it does not mean that you can drop your fire insurance; your property is not thereby made immune to the flames. Fire Chief A. Morris learned so on Friday afternoon.

He had been setting tires out-of-doors at his blacksmith shop on Albert street and had placed some rubbish on the fire after the tires were disposed of. Mrs R. Fyke, happening to glance toward the blacksmith shop a few minutes later from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Plantz, saw the roof of the building ablaze. She gave the alarm, and, with the help of a ladder from a neighbour, a pail of water, and some helping hands, the blaze was put out in short order.

A few minutes more, however, and it would have been a serious matter. As it was, a hole about five feet in diameter was burned in the roof.

LADY'S WRIST IS BROKEN IN HOME ACCIDENT

Yesterday, Mrs. Ingram Cross, who lives a mile north of town, had the misfortune of breaking her right wrist. In her home is a pipeless furnace with the register situated in the hall. Mrs. Cross had removed a portion of the register for the purpose of painting it and accidentally stepped into the opening with the fractured wrist resulting from the fall. Between two and three years ago Mrs. Cross was also unfortunate in having her hip broken in a fall about the home.

No news of the funeral arrangements has been received but it is expected burial will take place in the west. Death was due to heart trouble, from which Mr. McMillan has suffered for some time.

He was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Jas. J. McMillan of Grantley, and surviving him are: his widow and three children, two sons and a daughter, all at home; three brothers, James O. and John E, McMillan of Grantley, and William B. McMillan of Santa Monica, Calif.; three sisters: Mrs. Sime McMillan of Edmonton, Alta.; Mrs. John A. Munro of Nation Valley and Mrs. Geo. H Barkley of Chesterville.

Pretty May Wedding at Holy Trinity

Miss Amy Dorothy Fairbrass, R.N., Becomes Bride of Mr. Rossie Preston Rupert of Northfield Station.

HOLY TRINITY church was the scene of a pretty Spring wedding Saturday, 3 p.m., when Amy Dorothy Fairbrass, R.N., younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Harry Fairbrass, of Queen street, became the bride of Rossie Preston Rupert, younger son of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Rupert, Northfield Station, Rev. G. Oliver Davies officiating.

Mr. Fairbrass gave his daughter in marriage, who wore a blue suit, with accessories to match, and the gift of the groom, a black fox fur, and carried a bouquet of roses and sweet peas. The couple were unattended, the witnesses being Miss Clara Rupert of Cornwall, and Mrs. W. A. McElroy of Chesterville. The church was prettily decorated with ferns and potted plants, the altar being adorned with spring flowers. During the signing of the register in the vestry, the hymn, "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden," was sung. The music was in charge of the organist, Mr. J. A. Morris, and the wedding march was from Wagner's "Lohengrin." The decorating of the church was carried out by the ladies of the Guild.

The gift of the bride to the groom was a travelling club bag.

Immediately after the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, a buffet lunch being served o the contracting parties, their parents, Miss Clara Rupert of Cornwall, Mrs. Orton Rombough of Farran's Point, Rev. and Mrs. G. Oliver Davies, and Mrs. W. A. McElroy.

Mr. and Mrs. Rupert left later on a motor trip to Syracuse, Watertown and other points in the State of New York. They are expected home at the week end and will take up residence at Northfield Station.

RECEIVE QUEEN'S DEGREES.

Among those receiving degrees at Queen's University this week were Mary Theresa Clement, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Clement, who received the Bachelor of Arts degree in the honour class, and Howard Foster Fulton, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Howard Fulton, who received the degree B.Sc., in chemical engineering, to whom we extend our congratulations.

MORE AMUSEMENT TAXES.

PREMIER HEPBURN looking around for more sources of revenue has raided the kindergarten with a tax on all amusement tickets up to the 25-cent class, which heretofore have been exempt. It is to be hoped his next look does not fall on the cradle or else a tax on all-day suckers might look profitable.

Y.P.S. Banquet Closes Season For Popular Local Society

Toasts Ably Proposed and Rsponded to by Young People at Monday Evening's Function.

The Young People of Trinity United met for the concluding session of this season which took the form of a banquet. Everyone had a delightful time during the sing-song led by Miss Lillian Riddell. About 100 members enjoyed this occasion. Rodney Hummel was acting as Toastmaster and in his speech he said that the pastor, Rev. Mr. Tait, was indeed more than a friend to the members.

The first toast was proposed by Junior Hamlen to "The King," which was responded to by the whole Y.P. singing the National Anthem. Jack Cross gave a toast to Canada, and Miss Helen McMillan replied very aptly. Mr. W. N. Fulton brought greetings from the Sunday School and urged on the work of the Y.P. "Trinity United Church" was toasted by Harry Allison who said "The church is not merely standing still, but forging ahead." Rev. Mr. Tait, who responded, said that the church is not the building itself but the people who attend it and assist in the various duties of it. An instrumental duet was given by Gordon Hummel and Lloyd Smith. Jean Houlehan proposed a toast to "The Young People's Societies of Canada." Her speech dealt with the work of the Y.P. as a whole; where and how to find material for programmes. Much is able to be gleaned from conventions and summer camps. She urged the society to try to make the next series of programmes more interesting and beneficial. Allison Graham gave an excellent reply and encouraged the members by saying the local society has not only quantity but quality. He said that since he has been president Rev. Mr. Tait has assisted him a great deal but in a quiet way. At the close of his remarks he persuaded the Hummel boys to play and sing, which was exceedingly appreciated. The ladies were toasted by Hubert Lloyd and, strange as it may seem, many of the ladies drank to their health, wealth and happiness. Olive Casselman responded on behalf of the ladies and said that she felt sure that Mr. Tait's sermon last Sunday evening did not fall on deaf ears. The singing of Auld Lang Syne concluded the banquet.

The society is invited to Cornwall on Monday, the 13th, so everyone desiring to go should be at the church at 5.30 sharp.

A Musical Treat.

The 1st Chesterville Troop of Boy Scouts has arranged for a treat for all music lovers with the announcement of a concert locally by the 38th Ottawa Troop of Boy Scouts, Thursday, May 23rd. This troop has won national fame with their singing under the leadership of Scoutmaster J. Beaulieu.

Enthusiastic write-ups of their work have appeared in many city dailies and His Excellency the Governor General has been quite outspoken in his praise. The Ottawa Citizen says "The boys' choir is known as one of the finest in Canada."

The programme will be a most interesting and amusing one, comprising four-part harmony, solos, duets, folk songs and ending with a brilliant camp-fire scene.

SUCCESSFUL LOCAL STUDENTS.

Messrs. Hubert Dixon and Clarence Cross, Chesterville, first-year students at Queen's University, Kingston, have each been successful in their first-year exams. in Arts, the latter being the winner of a substantial sum as a result of his high standing.

Overflow Crowd Last Night To Meet Galilean Shepherd

Stephen A. Haboush Delights Large Audience with His Travelogue in Story and Picture.

Last night an overflow audience filled the auditorium of Trinity United church and part of the Sunday School hall, when a travelogue was presented in story and picture of the land of Galilee by Stephen A. Haboush, a native Galilean shepherd, who appeared in native costume. His interpretation of Bible stories with his local knowledge of the setting gave quite a different and more satisfying explanation of some well-known stories of the Bible. The scenes depicted were very interesting as showing the topography of the country with which most people are only familiar from the printed word of the scriptures. Views of the historic cathedrals were perhaps the most interesting which showed the interior decoration as well as the outside.

King Kneels in St. Paul's To Give Thanks to God

Sovereign Deeply Moved by Tumultous Acclaim From Hundreds of Thousands Lining Route of State Processions.

London.—King George knelt with the reverence of an humble pilgrim in ancient St. Paul's cathedral to give thanks to God for completion of 25 years on the throne, while all his vast Empire celebrated his Jubilee with mingled prayers and merrymaking.

So tempestuous was the shouted acclaim that rolled along with him as his state procession proceeded from Buckingham Palace to the Cathedral and back that the King was obviously stirred deeply.

Queen Mary was as deeply affected by the thunderous ovations. Observers along the route thought they detected tears of happiness in her eyes.

The day's most touching moment came in the Cathedral when the King-Emperor, his right hand over his brow, knelt while the Archbishop of Canterbury pronounced his blessing and at its conclusion, oblivious to the others rising about him, remained on bended knee as if offering some final touch of personal prayer.

After the prayer the King—like any other grandfather—put on his glasses and fanned through the programme to refresh his memory on the order of the service.

In the clock-like movement of the day's programme there were only minor mishaps.

Hospitals handled 37 cases resulting from the crush of the many hundreds of thousands jamming the routes of the state processions,, while an ambulance corps composed of 50 doctors, 1,000 nurses and 3,000 orderlies, treated 2,000 persons who fainted, sprained their ankles or otherwise were injured.

At Newcastle some 60 persons were injured in the collapse of a stand overloaded with spectators watching a military parade.

Communists, who had boasted loudly of the counter-demonstrations they were planning, managed to break out one banner almost over the King's laundau bearing the slogan: "Workers of our land, unite against capitalism."

Evidencing the temper of the vast throng gathered to cheer the sovereign, however, was a swift, angry mass movement to rip the flag down, tear it into tatters and trample the pieces underfoot.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

PROGRESSIVE SOCIETY.

The shortage of horse power in all parts of Ontario has promoted active interest in breeding. Good stallions are scarce.

Directors of the Moore Agricultural Society in Lambton County are meeting the problem by the purchase of the prize winning stallion "Foot Saep" from Brandon Bros., of Forest. This splendid sire should enable members of the Society at Brigden to increase the supply of horses of proper type.

The annual Fair at Brigden is one of the best in Ontario but apparently the officers believe the responsibilities of an Agricultural Society to go beyond this in the improvement of Agriculture.

Garden Hints.

(By John F. Clark)

When ground can be worked, spread fertilizer among the perennials in the border and dig in with a narrow fork. Do not disturb late bulbs and perennials while doing this work.

Never plant Dahlias by the clump. Select easily removed tubers with a piece of crown, containing an eye. Wipe cuts with sulphur. Plant six inches deep, laying tuber flat on side. Plant about May 24th.

Gladiolus are planted four inches deep, when danger of frost is past. They stand a fairly rich soil, dug deeply, and thoroughly cultivated during the growing season. When buds appear, cultivate only two inches deep, giving copious waterings.

Gladiolus thrips is the most serious pest and must be controlled. Dissolve one ounce of corrosive sublimate in 6 gallons of water, in a wooden container. Peel the corms and soak for hree hours, the liquid being kept at 70 degrees F. The corms may be planted directly after dipping.

Buy Feeds on Guarantee.

Do not find yourself with a "goldbrick" feed, money spent and no value in return. Oat feeds analysed in the laboratories of the Dominion Experimental Farms have had a range from 4 to 14 per cent of protein and from 10 to 30 per cent of fibre, meat meals of from 40 to 65 per cent protein and phosphoric acid from 10 to 20 per cent. Therefore do not buy your feed blindly but study the guaranteed analyses, as printed on bags or other containers so that you know of what value the feeds are for your specific purpose, and also as compared with other feeds of the same class.

Proposed Ontario Cattle Export Scheme.

A scheme has been submitted to the Dominion Marketing Board to regulate the marketing for export of beef and dairy cattle from the Province of Ontario to Great Britain or other European countries. The scheme has been reviewed by the Board but is still subject to amendment.

Copies of the proposed scheme are available for distribution and may be obtained from the Secretary, Dominion Marketing Board, Ottawa.

Any representations and requests for appointments must be received by the Secretary before May 11th next. Notice of the exact date of hearings will be given to those who have signified their wish to appear before the Board.

Early Marketing Means Better Prices.

Now is the time to start the long season crops of vegetables required for the early market. At the Central Experimental Farm the following varieties are recommended:

Cabbage: Golden Acre, Copenhagen Market, Early Jersey Wakefield.

Cauliflower: Early Dwarf Erfurt and Snowball.

Celery: Paris Golden Yellow, Golden Plume and Phenomenal.

Onion: Sweet Spanish, Prizetaker, (Denia); Southport White, Yellow and Red Globe for growing transplants.

Pepper: Harris Earliest, California Wonder.

Potato: Irish Cobbler, which should be sprouted for four to six weeks prior to field planting.

Tomato: Abel, Alacrity, Canadian, Earliana, Bestal, Bonny Best or John Baer. The two latter are used for the main crop.

Simple Insect Control.

The control of most vegetable insects is not a very difficult or complicated matter if the grower will bear in mind one or two simple facts which can be quickly learned by watching the habits of the pests causing the damage. Insects, according to the type of injury they do, can be divided into two general classes: those known as biting insects, which in feeding actually bite a piece out of the plant attacked, and those known as sucking insects, which suck the juices out of the leaves or stems without noticeably changing their outline. For biting insects (caterpillars, cutworms, etcs.) three poisons are commonly recommended, arsenate of lead, arsenate of lime, and Paris Green. Sucking insects (aphids, plant bugs, leafhoppers etc.) are customarily controlled by nicotine sulphate, either in liquid or dust form.

Grain Feeding.

In all grain feeding it must be kept in mind that the product being used is an expensive one and can under no circumstances be used in the feeding or finishing of low grade or indifferently bred animals. Not only must the animals be of approved types but experience has clearly shown that certain types of farm animals greatly excel others in their abilities to utilize the feeds provided. Especially is this true in connection with the feeding of grains. Poultry would probably head the list in this regard, with the pig standing a close second in its ability to manufacture feed grains into meat economically. The dairy cow, because of her ability to give off from her body immense quantities of milk during a long lactation period, would rank third, followed by beef cattle and sheep.

Soft Bacon

The further expansion of our bacon trade with Great Britain depends to a large extent upon quality improvement. Recent advices from the British market criticize our supplies on the score of underfinish in a large percentage of bacon sides, as indicated by softness and flabbiness. This soft flabby bacon is most likely the product of underfinished hogs, of which there are considerable numbers being marketed at yards and plants in Canada at the present time. The remedy lies with the producer in holding back unfinished hogs. In most cases, another week or so on feed would put on the finish so necessary for the making of firm bacon. All hogs of bacon and select weights should be properly finished at their weights. Underfinish is as detrimental as over finish and in this case a very serious obstacle to efforts being made to popularize Canadian bacon with the British consumer. Every hog raiser is asked to co-operate to the best of his ability.

Almost Curtains For 19-Year-Old Jackie Coogan

Only Survivor of Auto Crash in Which Four Meet Death, Including His Father.

San Diego, Calif.—Jackie Coogan, "The Kid" of Screendom 15 years ago lay injured here to-day the only survivor of a motor car crash that killed four persons, including his father, John Coogan, on Sunday.

The others dead in the highway tragedy were Junior Durkin, 19, freckled juvenile actor, and boyhood friend of young Coogan; Robert Horner, 25, Los Angeles broadcasting performer and writer, and Charles Jones, 24, foreman of the Coogan ranch, near Pine Valley in the hills east of here.

Jackie, who escaped with comparatively minor injuries, could remember only hazy details of the hurtling wreck which occurred late Saturday while the party of five was returning from a dove hunt across the border in Mexico.

The elder Coogan, 49, himself a former vaudeville headliner, who had built Jackie's film earnings of more than $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 by real estate investments before the depression, was at the wheel of Jackie's new coupe. As they rounded a curve the coupe, with Jackie and Durkin in the rumble seat, was forced from the highway by an approaching car.

"The next thing I remember," said Jackie, "is that we were going over an embankment. The car went end over end, spiralling at the same time."

The coupe crashed into a rocky abutment. Durkin, Horner and Jones were killed instantly. The elder Coogan lived for half an hour.

Jackie escaped with two broken ribs and bruises. A passing motorist took him to a Pine Valley store, where he was given first aid. He was later brought to an hotel here and his mother, the former Lillian Dolliver, of the vaudeville stage, flew to him from Hollywood.

The King's Message to His People

THE KING, speaking by wireless, to his far flung Empire, Monday evening on the occasion of his Silver Jubilee celebration, "rededicated" himself to the service of the Empire.

The text of the address follows:

At the close of this memorable day I must speak to my people everywhere. Yet how can I express what is in my heart.

As I passed this morning through cheering multitudes to and from St. Paul's Cathedral, as I thought there of all that these 25 years had brought to me and my country and my Empire, how could I fail to be most deeply moved?

Words cannot express my thoughts and feelings. I can only say to you, my dear people, that the Queen and I thank you from the depths of our hearts for all the loyalty and, may I say, the love with which this day and always you have surrounded us.

I dedicate myself anew to your service for the years that may still be given to me. I look back on the past with thankfulness to God. My people and I have come through great trials and difficulties together. They are not over. In the midst of these days of rejoicing I grieve to think of the numbers of my people who still are without work.

We owe to them and not least to those suffering from any form of disablement all the sympathy and help we can give to them. I hope that during this Jubilee year all who can will do their utmost to find them work and bring them hope.

Other anxieties may be in store but I am persuaded that with God's help they may all be overcome if we meet them with confidence, courage and unity, so I look forward to the future with faith and hope.

It is to the young that the future belongs. I trust that through the fund inaugurated through my dear son, the Prince of Wales, to commemorate this year, many of them through this country may be helped in body, mind and character to become useful citizens.

To the children I would like to send a special message. Let me say this to each of those whom my words reach. The King is speaking to you. I ask you to remember that in days to come you will be citizens of a great Empire. As you grow up keep this thought before you, and when the time comes be ready and proud to give to your country the service of your work, your mind and your heart.

I have been greatly touched by all the greetings which have come to me to-day from my Dominions and colonies, from India and from this home country.

My heart goes out to all who may be listening to me now, wherever you may be, either here at home, in town or village, or in some far off corner of the Empire, or may be on the high seas.

Let me end these words to you with those that Queen Victoria used after Diamond Jubilee 38 years ago. No words could more truly express my own deep feelings: "From my heart I thank my beloved people. May God bless them."

Of 100 people who were asked "If you could have one wish granted for the rest of your life, what would you wish for?" 92 answered "Health".

Guard the health of your family against flies and mosquitoes. Flies are notorious disease carriers. The sting of many mosquitoes is poisonous.

ONTARIO SAFETY LEAGUE

CARELESSNESS is TOO COSTLY!

PASSING on a hill is just one form of haste . . . that craving to drive too fast . . . which is altogether too prevalent in Ontario.

The appalling number of motor accidents in this province means a drastic check-up on reckless drivers. Public sentiment, speaking through the courts, will be increasingly severe towards unreasonable, thoughtless motorists.

You know what you should do. How you should drive. So, for your own safety and that of others, drive carefully!

IT IS BETTER TO BE SAFE . . . THAN SORRY

THIS MUST STOP!

In Ontario, during 1934, there were nearly 10,000 automobile accidents.

512 people were killed

Dionnes Seeking to Adopt Their Own Quintuplets

Write Hon. David Croll For Permission in "Adopt-a-Baby-Week" Sponsored by Department.

Callander, Ont., May 8th—A request that they be allowed to adopt their own quintuplet daughters during the "Adopt-a-Child-Week" has been sent by Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne to Hon. D. A. Croll, Ontario Minister of Public Welfare.

Mr. Croll announced last week that in honour of the first birthday of the Dionne quintuplets, the week of May 28th was designated as "Adopt-a-Child-Week." The five baby sisters now are special wards of the King under legislation passed by the Ontario Legislature.

In their letter to Mr. Croll, the parents cite their qualifications and quote the Minister's words as an argument in their favour.

The father's letter said:

"Hon. D. Croll, Toronto.

"Dear Sir:

"I see by the press of May 3, that you plan an 'Adopt-a-Child-Week.'

"May we be permitted to beg to be allowed to adopt our own quintuplets?

"You said, 'Make them not wards, but sons and daughters.' We are qualified to take care of them. We have experience. In our marriage we received the necessary graces to bring them up in the fear and love of God. Therefore we are the only ones who can give them the necessary love, sympathy and understanding that they 'need more than everything else in the world.'

"Please grant us that 'deep joy which a child brings.'

"Very respectfully yours,

"OLIVA DIONNE."

EXECUTIVES DO HELP.

A Toronto man tells us an interesting story about a plant employing some 50 men. Early one morning he went into the shop and found the workmen all standing around. They were talking volubly, but making no effort to do any work.

When he asked them what the trouble was, one spokesman said: "The formean's wife has just telephoned to say he took sick suddenly and cannot come to work. We are just waiting for the boss to come in and tell us what to do."

And what do you think the men were talking about while they were waiting? They had been declaring that there is no need for executives who get more pay than the average worker.

YOU NEED
IN
CHICKS

MAY AND JUNE hatched chicks are not too late to make laying pullets before the good Winter egg prices fall off. It's true that chicks must have a super-abundance of vigour and growthiness bred into them before they will make early layers. But that's why Bray's "Xtra-Profit" chicks hatched from BIG eggs fill the need so well for rapid growing chicks at this time of year.

Our BIG hatching eggs (25 oz. up to 30 and 32 oz. per dozen) generally come from the bigger, more productive hens in our breeding flocks—and, in turn, the chicks from BIG eggs inherit the unusual vigour and growthiness of their mothers. It's true that buying GOOD chicks in itself is not enough to ensure you of an early laying flock. But with ordinary good management and good feeding, Bray's "Xtra-Profit" pullets will begin laying at 4½ to 5 months old. We know of many Bray flocks that were laying 50 per cent at 6 months.

You'll be in on winter egg money in December and January if you buy "Xtra-Profit" chicks, feed them well and give them ordinary good management this summer.

Our prices on May and June hatched chicks are particularly attractive. And you can save $1.00 per hundred by placing your order 30 days in advance. A 10 per cent deposit books your order. Stop in and get our catalogue and our new price list next time you have a chance.

Tagged Starling Captured.

That starlings recognize neither national boundaries nor immigration laws, was proved recently on the farm of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. McIntosh, St. Elmo East, when their cat, that is somewhat epicurean in taste, caught one of these feathered marauders and brought it in triumph to its mistress. Mrs. McIntosh found an aluminum band on one of its legs, numbered and bearing the request that the finder or capturer notify the Biological Department, no place being named. After some correspondence, Mrs. McIntosh learned that the bird had been tagged at Cincinnati, Ohio, last year. By unanimous consent our farmers express the wish that all the starlings had been gagged instead of tagged at Cincinnati or Honolulu.

Keep on plugging. Remember the first olive you succeed in fishing out of a bottle loosens up the others.

Little Dorothy had gone to the pantry a few minutes before and, as there was complete silence, Mother suspected mischief, so she called out: "What are you doing, dear?"

The three-year-old came out and replied: "I didn't do anything! I couldn't get the cover off."

Outside the station the rain fell in torrents, and the one passenger who had alighted from the last train gazed dismally around. There was no help for it; he would have to take a taxi home.

"How much do you charge to drive to ——— Street?" he called to the solitary driver.

"Five shillings," replied the man.

For a time they haggled, but the driver refused to come lower than four shillings. At last the prospective fare had a brain wave.

"I say, I'll toss you double or quits!"

The driver agreed. He called "Heads," and heads it was.

"Rotten luck," growled the other. "I shall have to walk after all!"

TROOP NEWS.

The Whip-poor-wills are again in possession of the Honour Patrol Pennant, having won it from the Beavers at the conclusion of the competition just ended. The Wolves finished the first meeting a few points on top but the race is on for the last before camp. Ten points are to be given the first patrol with a Second Class Scout and the boys are working hard for the bonus. Gordon Hummel of the Beavers passed his signalling last week and along with several others qualified in the tests on the Triangular bandage. The Court of Honour has passed a resolution, by the way, that no Scout without his Second Class rank may attend camp, except of course the new recruits. So the battle is on.

Instructions have been received from Ottawa concerning the B.-P. rally on Saturday, May 18th, which will be talked over to-night.

THE SCOUT COMES HOME.

Hot and dusty, sunburnt, hungry and incredibly dirty, their Boy Scout came home Carrying an enormous untidy swag, his hat battered out of shape by rain and wind, but whistling merrily, he strolled through the gate. Hustled protestingly by mother and sister into the waiting bath, he sang lustily the latest addition to his collection of Scout songs. His voice was cracked and husky with the dust and shouting of the Jamboree. They listened to him:

"Oh, Sinbad was a mariner—
You know what sailors are!
He sailed the seven seas,
But once he sailed a bit too far.
He came upon a mermaid,
She was combing out her locks..."

Suddenly he broke off, and started a new Indian song which sounded like a sweet lullaby, but with a Scout one never knows! Clean and shining with soap he was asked by his admiring family how he had enjoyed the camp life.

"All right," said he, "but what's for dinner? The best meal I had down there was the day I was cook!"

The parents pondered over the change in their offspring. The red scarf had been swopped for a green, the plaited woggle for a nut; his nose had a different hue. But above all there was a new assurance, a jauntiness as of one who had seen the world. He had pow-wowed with boys of many lands. He had talked with "B.-P."—From the Melbourne Herald.

HEALTH by Dr. Alan Brown

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

SWOLLEN GLANDS.

FLOWING through the body, to and from the heart, is the blood stream. This life fluid contains myriads of red blood cells, many white blood cells and the plasma, or fluid part, which holds salts, sugars and materials in solution. The blood is the medium whereby food and oxygen are carried to all the tissues and the waste products of the tissues' activities removed In order to do its work the blood must be kept in constant circulation, and this is what is accomplished by the regular beating of the heart.

Leaving the left side of the heart, the blood passes into the aorta, the main artery of the body. From the aorta, branches take off which, in turn keep on draining into other branches, becoming smaller and smaller until they are like a fine mesh spread throughout the body. These are the capillaries. The walls of the capillaries are so porous that gases, such as oxygen and carbon dioxide, or the substances held in solution by the plasma, can pass in or out. A certain amount of the blood plasma will also filter out and, having done so, it is known as lymph.

Lymph differs from blood chiefly in that it does not contain any red blood cells. The tissues of the body are bathed in lymph, which means that the internal structure of the body is surrounded by fluids just as truly as the outer covering of the body is surrounded by air.

If lymph is formed too quickly or if it is not removed as rapidly as it should be, the part of the body affected will become swollen, waterlogged or oedematous. If this condition is sufficiently established, pressure of a finger on the part will leave a mark which will persist for a time. The presence of lymph in normal tissue is seen when a water-blister forms as the result of injury or irritation.

There is a regular system of tubes, the lymphatics, by which lymph, when not returned direct to the blood vessels is drained away from the tissues, finally emptying into a large vein near the heart. At intervals along the lymphatics are located nodes or glands. These act somewhat in the manner of a filter, and if the lymph is carrying with it disease germs from the tissues, these are caught and held in the gland, at least temporarily. The swollen gland is [redacted] the skin and lumps, or swollen glands can be felt, first at the elbow and later at the armpit. These are nature's barriers to the spread of infection. There is always a reason for swollen glands and this should be looked for in order to remove source of the trouble.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Harvest

THREE GIRLS sat together in a room high up in the dormitory of Preston Academy. The Turret Room was historic in the annals of Preston; the occupants of it—for it was really a suite of three: two bedrooms and a study—were accounted rarely fortunate.

Two years before her daughter had entered the Academy Mrs. Vance had bespoken the room for Sarah. Aside from other considerations, it had been a matter of sentiment with her. Upon a day, now long past, she had herself been the happy occupant of the Turret Room.

Sarah's roommate was to be Cora Blair, whose mother had shared the Turret Room with Sarah's mother. The young Sarah and the young Cora in company with their elders of the name. both now rather too plump and short of breath really to enjoy the excursion of their old aerie, had come on a summer day to view their mother's ancient haunts.

Sarah was slim and fine; Cora, even thus early, had come into her inheritance of pinkly swelling flesh.

There was another pair of visitors to the old academy this morning—mother and daughter also, to judge by the resemblance. Sharply Mrs. Blair looked and looked again at the young girl—dark-eyed with a fresh and lovely colour, and simply and tastefully dressed.

"Sarah Vance," Mrs. Blair said to her former roommate, "if I didn't know I was fortynine, I could almost believe I was nineteen, and that that girl was Abbie Grilley!"

Mrs. Vance peered agitatedly, not at the girl but at her mother. The woman—tall, a little spare, a little worn, with a sort of dainty shabbiness—returned the look with a frank and open one of pleasant surprise.

"It is Abbie Grilley!" exclaimed Mrs. Vance. "How strange!"

"And yet how natural," said the old Abbie Grilley; "three old Preston girls, and three new ones!"

In the hurried manner of those who would take a panoramic view of the years, the three women exclaimed and explained. Meanwhile the three young girls stood discreetly in the background, like little make-believe mothers with noisy children. Their interested, curious glances took one another in. Plump young Cora sighed anew at the slim, gallant lift of shoulder under the young Abbie's simple cotton blouse. Abbie, in her turn, viewed the linked richness that bound her watch upon the creasy wrist of Cora. And Sarah Vance, whom some one had likened to a white honeysuckle, fair but colourless, watched the roundly spreading flush upon Abbie's cheek, like a rose with a white heart.

Mrs. Vance remembered first.

"Abbie, I want you to know my daughter, Sarah. Mrs. Summers belonged to the old academy days, Sarah. And this is Abbie the second."

"My daughter, Cora, Abbie—and Miss Summers—I declare—I keep forgetting you're not she—she's not you—well, you know what I mean!"

Mrs. Blair's round, brown little eyes rolled between the two like marbles in a groove.

Abbie put out her hand. Her lovely colour came and went. In her little cotton blouse, untrimmed except for the exquisite setting of its stitches; in her plain skirt, falling roundly, her black laced shoes, her simply banded hat—she gave a curious, exquisite impression of fine simplicity.

Cora felt that vaguely, but she put it down to the adored and despaired-of slimness. "She'd look well in anything," thought Cora resignedly; and she fell to regarding the watch on her creasy wrist. In life's darkest moments that talisman had power to soothe.

"I've just thought of something!" said Mrs. Vance. "Abbie must be the third girl in the Turret Room. Cora and I have thought and wondered a great deal about who should be the other girl."

"I declare! It's as if it had been destined that way!" marvelled Mrs. Blair.

Abbie cast a speaking glance at her mother. The Summers always had to consider things in their relation to money—and the Turret Room was one of the more expensive rooms. She hoped her mother would say, as she always said when a matter of reasonable expense came up, "We'll see."

What her mother said was, "I could not ask for anything pleasanter for Abbie. It would make me very happy; and I'm sure Abbie will be happy. She has never been away from home before."

Abbie was saying in a sort of delightful inner tumult of love and determination, "Oh, I will make it up to you—I will—I will!" For she knew that it would take "seeing" on her mother's part to achieve all this.

So it was that on a fall day darkening to evening, with spiteful little gusts of rain assailing from time to time a curving pane in the Turret Room, the three of them sat in their little study, sometimes looking out upon the drenched campus, but looking back quickly again about their cosy, intimate quarters. They were waiting for the dinner gong. Cora was writing heavily and steadily, and with a complete lack of inspiration, upon a required theme. Abbie, to whom English was always a fascinating subject, had finished the first draft of her theme and now sat copying it roundly and smoothly. Her pen moved like a little gold flame. Sarah sat watching them She had come in last, and her face was all eagerness. She waited impatiently for them to cease their labours. Finally she could wait no longer, and rapped sharply.

"The house will please come to order!"

Cora stretched out her pudgy arms and yawned. "What's done's done," she declared, with a sort of noble satisfaction; "and what's left will keep! Now ,with Abbie it's different. Genius still burning?"

Abbie gave a lingering look at her page as if it had been a picture, screwed the cap on her pen, and sat back.

"It's a letter from mother," said Sarah, drawing it out lingeringly, as if to prolong the delightful suspense "This is what she says: "I'm thinking of having you a simple little dinner frock'—no—that's not it.

"Here it is: 'I'm thinking of having a little special merrymaking for you the Thanksgiving holidays—for you and your house guests.'"

Sarah turned the page with annoying deliberation.

"'House guests,'" she repeated "Oh, yes, there's something comes before." She turned back. "'I thought perhaps you would like to bring Cora and Abbie home with you for the Thanksgiving recess. I'm thinking of having a little special merrymaking for you.'"

"I accept." said Cora. "Deliberately and unhesitatingly. The consequences be upon my own head."

Abbie said, "O Sarah!"

Abbie had spent one fairy-tale week-end with Sarah Vance. At home they had painted floors. The Vances' floors shone like still, frozen pools. At home the carpets were modest ingrain. The Vances' floors might have been spread with moss—delightful, silvery, gray-green moss, perpetually fresh and fadeless. And the draperies were transparencies—great spun webs. Sarah's room was pink—a wonderful, translucent pink. like the inside of a shell. And at night lights, like candles in silver sconces, sprang into a radiance of bloom along the walls.

Abbie had enjoyed that week-end with a peculiar, appreciative zest. She knew, with an absolute inborn knowledge, that her simple clothes were just right. Abbie, slim, graceful, colourful in her simple white with the handrun tucks the work of her Cousin Jen; in her simple lawn with narrow edging ruffles; in her modest suit with immaculate blouse—Abbie was a delight to the eye.

"Well, that's settled, then! said Sarah with a sort of gleeful satisfaction as the gong rang for dinner.

But Abbie's "Oh, Sarah!" had not meant acceptance. Abbie had had a letter, too.

"The gathering is to be at Aunt Maggie's this year," her mother had written. "And what she and Jen aren't doing! They've all written to say they'll come—your Uncle Ben Bigelow and family, and Aunt Grace and her little Helen, and all the relatives down Plainview way. And Jen says, now you're a visiting relative. you shall be one of the guests of honour. But I miss my guess if Thanksgiving dinner doesn't find you and Jen changing plates for the pie, and bringing on the nuts and apples in the old way. Esther can hardly wait for you to come."

Abbie saw just how it would be. Aunt Maggie's diningroom was in the L. You took a step down to enter it. It was a big room, like a box. Abbie saw the table—a great oval with its extra leaves—spread with two cloths. And she saw the Bigelow cousins—good-natured harum-scarums, and the little peevish Helen Aunt Grace's sickly daughter, and all the clan from Plainview way. She saw cousin Jonas Peavy, a sort of solitary, who "lived round," and had a small itinerant tinkering trade—a little effacing, a little apologetic, with his ridiculously thin voice. "We-ll, just a leetle more, then. Not more'n half full, anyways, Abbie. The laig'll do plenty well for me, Will—er the neck." How common it all was! Uncle Ben Bigelow drank out of his saucer, and Aunt Harriet Purdy eschewed her napkin as savouring too much of style.

Of course there were mother and Esther. Mother was, well, different. But mother would understand. Mother had had her one precious year of the academy. And Esther—she would send the child something. And it was so short a time to Christmas. Mother would want her to make the most of her opportunities—and what an opportunity this one was!

"A little special merrymaking for you and your house guests. . . . You and Jen changing plates for the pie."

She put off answering her mother's letter. It was hard to reduce the thing to words. Besides, Thanksgiving was two weeks off. She found herself half envying plump, slow-witted Cora. Cora did not possess fine perceptions. For her there would have been little distinction between Aunt Maggie's lavish country table and the mahogany island that was the Vances' with gleaming wave-clear crystal. To Cora, a table was a table; something at which to eat. Once Core said discontentedly and as if to herself, "I have not half spent my allowance this quarter. I wish it were doing somebody some good." Abbie had to laugh. She saw through Cora's little fumbling design. Cora thought that Abbie was troubled about money, and was trying to offer her a loan.

"Oh, I know you!" Abbie said. "Your tricks and your wiles! But it's not that. It's—I can't tell you what it is—but I'm just as much obliged."

"It's nothing," mumbled Cora. "Between friends—" But from that moment Cora meant to Abbie something more than plumpness and good nature.

"If I don't write, they will think it is because of getting my work up before the holidays," Abbie said to herself. "And then, of course, I'm not decided yet. I may go home."

She went over and over the reasons for accepting Sarah's invitation—all good reasons. She began to have a slight sense of injury.

Then suddenly one night things were decided for Abbie. Mrs. Martin, the matron, came up to the Turret Room with a message for Abbie. Esther was very ill, and Abbie must come home at once.

Abbie was very fond of her little sister, Esther. A foolish little toy—the "something" she had been going to send to Esther—stood upon her dresser. She had got it only that day in the village—and now, curiously, it was she that was going to Esther. Cora and Sarah helped her about the hurried dressing and packing. No one thought of the Thanksgiving merrymaking. Sarah cried a little for sympathy, but Cora said prosily, "I suppose you'll find enough to do to help your mother with the work and nursing, but I hope you'll drop us a line about Esther. Her funny little messages—I've loved to hear you read 'em!"

The crisis was passed before Abbie reached home; but, as Cora had surmised, she found plenty to keep her busy. Esther, who had had to have an operation on her ear, had responded to the treatment, as children do respond, with marvellous quickness. And now she was in the most trying stage of convalescence.

Cora had packed the foolish little toy, and one day Abbie, coming across it, had been minded to throw it away. It brought back vividly that old time of indecision. She thought better of it and carried it up to Esther. The little girl played happily with it for a whole afternoon and proudly displayed it to Aunt Maggie and Jen when they came over in the evening.

"Sister brought it to me from the academy," she told them importantly. "I knew sister would bring me something when she came home for Thanksgiving. But I shouldn't have cared," she added magnanimously, "if she hadn't brought me anything—if she only came herself—not much, I wouldn't."

"Im going right ahead with the gathering," Aunt Maggie said to Abbie's mother. "There was a time I thought—well—you know—I guess we didn't any of us have a heart for it—Esther here. I guess you'd have come home to a pretty blue Thanksgiving, Abbie. But it's like I says to Will I says, 'It's a kind of harvest of hopes,' I says. 'Esther getting well so fast, and Abbie fininshing out the education her mother never got but one year of; and Brother Ben Bigelow got his place at last paid for; and Grace's little Helen's foot out of the plaster cast—to say nothing of Jen's doing so well with the sewing—one-fifty a day and dinner; and Cousin Jonas Peavy's last line selling so good along with the tinkering. A harvest of hopes—that's what I calls it. And I guess we can make out to spread a sort of table—eh, Jane?"

Jen was a pretty, plump, dark girl. "Oh, Abbie," she exclaimed, "it'll be just like old times! You and me'll change the plates. Jess has gathered about a bin of nuts, and pa's winesaps look for all the world like big red balls. Let's dress alike—scarfs and all. Won't it be grand?"

Esther set up a wail. "Won't I get to go?" she cried. "Won't I be at the gathering?"

"It's all right," her mother soothed her. "Doctor says so. Aunt Maggie'll fix up her couch for you to lie on. And you can sit up to the table for dinner."

"Cousin Helen—she's always had her foot, and now I got my ear!" exulted Esther. "And will I wear my bandage?"

"We'll see," promised her mother.

The gathering taxed the dining room in Aunt Maggie's L to its utmost capacity. Every known variety of relative was represented, and, according to the ancient rites, everyone brought something to the feast. They were homely gifts from homely people. The Plainview cousins brought almost a quarter of beef. Aunt Harriet Purdy, as always, had brought the crocks of slaw, shredded to the thinness of grass blades. Each cousin was determined that every other cousin should try a slice of her cake. On the part of each there was modest deprecation of her own cookery, and generous praise for the others'. Cousin Grace's little Helen's limp was barely perceptible; her little face was almost round and was tinged, like a baby rose, with faint pink. Cousin Grace was even daringly happy. She had never dared to be quite herself.

When it came Cousin Jonas Peavy's turn to be served, he hemmed apologetically.

The neck's good enough fer me, I reckon, Will—er the back—anything—"

"There you are!" said Will, piling on thick, succulent slices of white and dark meat.

Abbie brought him a brimming cup.

"Good-lookin' as ever, Abbie, ain't ye," said Cousin Jonas facetiously as he took the coffee.

"Abbie is good," spoke up Esther, with conviction. "She brought me something home."

"Well, Abbie," Uncle Ben Bigelow commended her, "I didn't, first news, fall in with your mother's plans for education and that. But it ain't harmed you none. I can see that. Learning's a grand thing, but it ain't all confined to books. No, not by a long ways."

That sentiment sounded so good to Uncle Ben that he repeated it with a knowing wag of the head. "It ain't all confined to books. No, not by a long ways."

"Does it seem the same to you, Abbie,—this Thanksgiving,— you having been off to school and all?" inquired Aunt Delia Bigelow.

"I never appreciated before what it did mean." said Abbie. "I feel it. But I can't say it."

"That there's a good way to be," spoke up a Plainview cousin. "Most anyone can be lippy--most folks too much so. But feelin's the real thing."

"Seems like every year there's something extry to be thankful for," put in Aunt Maggie with bustling cheerfulness.

Uncle Ben Bigelow supped noisily and appreciatively from his saucer.

"We're all spared to set here at another gathering," suggested Uncle Will Stoner, in his capacity of host.

"No different from last year," said Cousin Jonas Peavy, sucking his lips along a chicken bone as if it had been a mouth organ.

"Here's all our young folks, coming along so well," pursued Uncle Will warmly.

"'Tain't nothin' new. So they was last year," obstinately declared Couson Jonas, nimbly travelling up and down the mouth organ.

"Here we all be, abiding in peace and charity," intoned Uncle Ben, with a reversal to his solemn churchly manner.

"Same as always," averred Cousin Jonas; and he took a deep draft from his cup. The relatives regarded one another strangely across the table as if were represented there the perpetual Thanksgiving feast of the years—the mingled sweet and bitter that make up living. Abbie sprang up with Cousin Jonas' cup.

"Not more'n half full, Abbie," said Cousin Jonas. But she brought it brimming.

That night after Esther had gone to bed Abbie told her mother about the other invitation.

"I've always prided myself on my perception," finished Abbie "I'm not so sure now. I'm just beginning to perceive Cora And Jen. And the Plainview relatives. And Cousin Jonas. They've got something—call it honour. They wouldn't have hesitated." She gave her mother a brimming look. "I'm sure of you all. How can I be sure of myself? It's that you are all so honest."

"Honour is honesty—plain truth," said her mother reflectively. "It's as Cousin Jonas said: these things are enduring — not for one little day. Remember what Aunt Maggie said about our 'harvest of hopes.' One day, Abbie, you will be mine—you and Esther." She gave the handsome, humbled girl a look of exultant realization. "Cousin Jonas is right—why limit it to a day in the future? I already have my harvest!"

Little Bobby had been taken to a concert by his father. It was the first he had ever heard. and his mother was eager to learn how he liked it.

"Daddy, thinks it was a good concert," she said. "The band played very well. What do you think, Bobby?"

"Oh. it was pretty good," said the boy offhandedly. "They played well because they had to."

"Whatever do you mean?" asked mother. mystified.

"Well, they had a man in front of them threatening them with a stick," explained the boy.

WHY NOT FRESH PINEAPPLE FOR DESSERT?

CANNED PINEAPPLES may be served in many different forms and in combination with a variety of foods. Fresh pineapple is just as versatile and it has a delightful fresh flavour which is not present when it is canned. Perhaps you never serve fresh pineapple any way except just sliced or cubed with sugar. If that is the case, turn over a new leaf in your cook book and add these recipes to your list of successful dishes.

FRESH PINEAPPLE SHERBET.

1 quart milk
2 cups sugar
2 oranges, juice and grated rind
2 lemons, juice
2 cups diced pineapple
Pinch of salt

Let juice of oranges and lemons and the sugar stand one hour; add milk and salt. Freeze and when partly frozen, add pineapple cut in small pieces.

PRESERVED PINEAPPLE.

¾ lb. sugar to each pound of prepared fruit.

Pare the pineapple and with a sharp knife remove the eyes. Tear the fruit from the core in shreds, using a silver fork. Weight the pulp placed in a preserving kettle and partly cover with water. Cover tightly. Cook until pineapple is tender. Drain the pineapple from the water and add the sugar to the water. Cook together until the syrup is thick enough to coat a spoon. Return fruit to syrup and cook quickly until clear. Pour into hot sterilized jars and seal.

PINEAPPLE PIE.

2 cups fresh shredded pineapple
2 tablespoons cornstarch
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
Juice of ½ lemon
2 eggs

Scald pineapple. Mix cornstarch, salt and sugar together and stir into the pineapple. Stir and cook ten minutes. Add lemon juice and beaten yolks slowly. Cover and let cook five minutes. When cool, turn into a baked pie shell and top with meringue made from egg whites. Brown in a slow oven.

PINEAPPLE UPSIDE-DOWN CAKE.

¼ cup butter
¾ cup sugar
1 egg
¾ cup milk
2 cups flour
3½ teaspoons baking powder
1-3 cup salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cream the butter, add sugar gradually and blend well; add egg, then flour, sifted with baking powder and salt. and milk. Combine well and lastly add the vanilla.

Grease a cake tin and cover the bottom with quarter slices of pineapple in rows. Over the pineapple sprinkle a thin layer of brown sugar and butter mixed and on this pour the cake batter. Bake in a moderate oven.

This cake may be served with whipped cream and used as a dessert. If desired, maraschino cherries cut in halves may be placed on the bottom of the pan among the pieces of pineapple.

PINEAPPLE AND RHUBARB CONSERVE.

1 quart shredded pineapple
4 quarts rhubarb
2 oranges
3½ quarts sugar
1 cup nut meats

Cook the pineapple in a covered kettle with a small amount of water, until tender. Add rhubarb, juice and grated rind of the oranges, and the sugar, and cook until thick. Add the chopped nuts and seal in hot sterilized jars.

Remember that fresh pineapple added to gelatine will prevent it from setting. There is an enzyme in the fresh pineapple which acts on the gelatine to destroy its powers of jellifying. If you desire a pineapple-flavoured jelly, use canned pineapple as the heat used in cannings was sufficient to destroy the enzyme.

Onion Cutters may now be obtained which consist of a jar with a fitted top, through which a handle extends. On the end of this handle which is within the jar a knife is attached and as the handle is worked up and down it cuts or chops the onion. The odour of the onion is kept in by the fitted top so that it is no longer necessary to weep while chopping an onion.

Mark Golden Anniversary of Brockville Presbyterial

All arrangements have been completed for the celebration of the 50th anniversary of the organization of the Brockville Presbyterial which will be held in Prescott on Wednesday and Thursday, May 15 and 16. A splendid programme has been prepared. Mrs. Charles Thorburn, Ottawa, and Dr. Margaret O'Hara, and other missionaries have been invited as guest speakers.

The Brockville Presbyterial of the W.M.S. was organized by the late Mrs. John Thorburn in 1885 in Prescott and the first annual meeting was held in St. John's church, Brockville, in 1886 with 40 delegates present. Mrs. J. M. Gill, Brockville, is the only surviving charter member. The president, Mrs. Jas. Riddell, and her committee have given much of their time to make these meetings a splendid success and trust that all W.M.S. workers will make it a point to attend the sessions and be benefited by the splendid addresses that will be given at each session, and make this indeed a wonderful jubilee long to be remembered by the Brockville Presbyterial.

The Record was pleased to receive a post card from Mr. Francis McCloskey, cruise director of the C.P.S. Empress of Britain, mailed at Peiping, China, on April 5th, reaching here a month later. The big round-the-world liner reached San Francisco at the week end.

JUBILEE CELEBRATED QUIETLY.

Chesterville's celebration of the King's Jubilee on Monday was very decorous, being limited to the display of a number of flags on business places and residences. Citizens attended church services while a few went to Ottawa to view the spectacle on Parliament Hill. The day was not good for outdoor sports neither was it enticing for the fisherman but the gardeners got in a useful afternoon.

THEY ALL AGREE.
Baltimore Sun.

The King, at the close of his coronation message, said: "Whatever perplexities or difficulties may lie before me and my people we shall unite in facing them resolutely, calmly, and with public spirit." The tone of that promise is not, indeed, very different from that of any political address or state paper. But twenty-five years of world confusion and the breaking of many beliefs have tested its spirit and the English people are pretty well unanimously agreed that it has triumphantly withstood that test. It is no great wonder, seeing how deeply they feel this to be the case, that they should strike off commemoration medals and fill the streets and let off fireworks and tell each other what a wonderful day it is. Other people everywhere will agree with them.

Chrysler Sales at Highest Peak in Corporation's History!

Extra Dividend Declared on Common Stock

NEW YORK.—The Chrysler Corp. to-day reported net profit of $9,163,182 for the three months ended March 31st, which was within $400,000 of the net income reported for the entire year of 1934.

With the release of the statement it was announced that directors declared an extra divident of 25 cents on the common stock together with the usual quarterly dividend of the same amount. Both dividends are payable June 29th to stock of record June 1st.

Record Business.

In the number of passenger cars and commercial vehicles sold to distributors and dealers, in sales to the public and in dollar volume of business handled, the first quarter was the greatest in the corporation's history, said Walter P. Chrysler, chairman and president, in transmitting the report to the shareholders.

The profits for the quarter were equal to $2.12 a share of stock outstanding. For the like period last year the balance for the stock was $3,303,850 or 76 cents a share.

Sales to distributors and dealers totalled 247,631 units to the value of $149,949,990 as compared with 167,212 units to the value of $95,287,305 sold in the first quarter of 1934.

Outlook Bright.

Regarding the motor trade outlook Chrysler said that "unless increased costs imposed upon the industry, whatever their origin, retard its present progress, there is more reason for the automobile industry to look ahead optimistically than has existed for several years."
