THIS INSTITUTION offers a superior training and thereby ensures a more successful future. It leads all others—a fact fully established by more than 625 pupils who have left other business schools to come to it—and ranks among employers as "The School of Higher Efficiency."

It is not surprising then that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should definitely state "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Firemen Make Quick Run

Friday afternoon at 4.30 a blast of the fire alarm gave the brigade a good opportunity to show just how efficient it is in getting on the job. A smouldering blaze with very much smoke issuing from the building on Queen street formerly occupied by Francis LaSalle as a shoe repair shop and at present occupied by Jack Gibbons and Walter Vandusen as bachelor quarters, was the cause of the alarm, but was effectively handled by a quickly formed bucket brigade before any damage was done. The fire is said to have originated when a heap of rubbish in a back room began to smoulder.

From the time the whistle blew until a line of hose was attached to the hydrant at the corner of LaSalle's garage was exactly five minutes, which was exceedingly good time.

Unemployment Relief Work Will Start Shortly

Unemployment relief work for Chesterville will commence in a few days, the village council has announced, and will take the form of breaking stone to be used in repairing the streets next summer. For this, a quantity of quarry stone has been purchased and a lot near the skating procured where the work will be done under the supervision of the road committee.

The rate of wages has not been derink procured where the work will be paid by the cord or the load. Instead of payment in cash for their labour, workers will receive orders drawn on the several stores in town for necessaries, that is, for food, fuel, clothing, and shelter. This brings the work under the heading of direct relief by which the village, federal, and provincial governments each pay one third.

Orders for stone hammers have been placed with a local hardware firm and as soon as they arrive the work is expected to commence.

Finch Wins 2 to 1 On Chesterville Ice

On their first visit to Chesterville in the league race, Finch, as in many former years, won their game, defeating the locals in a doubled score 2 to 1, before the smallest crowd that has witnessed these teams battle in years. The ice was in fine condition, but there have been many better games played on the local arena. Chesterville felt the loss of Plantz from their firing line, while Finch was without the services of Dickie. Plantz's injury which was at first diagnosed as a torn ligament is now said to be the fracture of a small bone in the foot, which will keep him out of the fray for some time. Even at that it is reported that he was lucky enough on the afternoon of the game in which he was injured to have been accepted as a risk for an accident policy and will draw down a satisfactory amount while laid up. Dickie is suffering from an injured shoulder suffered in the first game of the season in which he took part.

The first period passed without a score, neither goalie being deceived by the long shots pegged at them from outside the blue lines. Stark and McIntosh doing the sniping from outside the defence with Robillard taking an occasional shot but getting nowhere. Jarvis, Clarmont, and McAvoy, the first line Chesterville flung out, were a bit wild in their shooting but after several tries McAvoy got right in for a sure counter when Casselman tripped him. Jarvis was given a penalty for tripping and Helmer rolled McIntosh over a trifle too strenuously and was like-wise banished. Chesterville had manœuvered into position for a counter and the rubber was on its way to land behind McMillan as the period ended.

The middle frame opened with very slow work, both sides shooting from mid-ice until McIntosh made a dash in and passed Helmer, giving Fyke the hardest shot of the game, which was easily handled. McIntosh and Stark were giving the red forwards a rough ride every time they bored in until Midget Clarmont snared the puck at the blue line and beat McMillan on a floater with eight minutes of the time to go.

Finch came from behind in the final frame and won their game. After four minutes McIntosh grabbed the puck in a mix-up in the corner near Chesterville nets and after making a shot on Fyke which he went down to clear, McIntosh again got the rubber and circled behind and popped it in the other corner before Fyke could cover it. Stark essayed to repeat in a minute but was bowled over by Helmer who took a penalty for it. Stark, however, got credit for the winning goal a short time after when he blazed one into the boards for a rebound, which came out, struck Fyke's skate, and caromed into the twine. Just one of the breaks of the game that spell victory.

Chesterville threw out a four-man forward line and pressed hard for the evener to throw the game into overtime but there was nothing doing as Finch kept lifting the disc down the ice at every opportunity.

The line-up:

Referee—E. Evaire, Ottawa.

Free Wheeling

When we head this item "Free Wheeling' 'it is not intended as free ballyhoo for some of the new crop of motor cars but just a statement of the condition of the traffic lanes of this country in the middle of a Canadian winter. Motoring is almost as free from snow drifts as in the middle of the summer. Every day on our streets are lines of parked cars and just when sleigh bells have jingled along we can hardly remember. Another little thing that has attracted our attenion is that although new license plates have been in order for some time there are more of them adorning the cars of farmers than of village folks. There is possibly good and sufficient reason for this.

Winchester Takes Revenge

Saturday evening on Winchester ice the home team took revenge on Chesterville for the trimming the latter administered to Winchester on their visit here, when they handed Chesterville a 2 to 1 defeat. The game was fairly fast and clean. The first period went scoreless, but early in the second McAvoy gave his team a lead which was soon overhauled when McLean tallied for the home team. The only score in the final was the winning tally of the game when Carkner netted the puck after ten minutes of play and which Chesterville was unable to equalize.

The line-up:

Chesterville—Goal, Fyke; defence, Helmer and LaPierre; centre, Jarvis; wings, McAvoy and Dagenais; subs., Farmer, Tate and James.

Winchester—Goal, Williams; defence, Seguin and M. Scott; centre, McLean; wings, lashway and Carkner; subs., Summers Thompson, Pratt and Vail.

MorewoodPresbyterianW.M.S. Mark Women's Day of Prayer

The regular meeting of the W.M.S. of Morewood Presbyterian Church was held at the home of Mrs. T. E. Coulthart on Friday, January 8th.

The order of service for the Presbyterian Women's Day of Prayer for Ontario was used. The president, Mrs. Coulthart, presided and the programme was prepared by the committee in charge—Mrs. Colin McGregor, convenor; Mrs. Allen Smirle, and Mrs. T. W. Moffatt.

Several members took the Bible readings and the prayers for God's blessing on the many branches of the W. M. S. work.

Rev. Mr. Nimmo was present and gave a splendid address on "The Extension of the Kingdom Through Faith and Sacrifice," based on the text, "Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

A large number of members were present who thoroughly enjoyed this interesting and helpful programme of the first meeting of the new year.

Former Berwick Girl Successful Poultry Breeder

The following item from the Virden, Man., Advance, will be of much interest to many of our readers in the Berwick district:

"The R. O. P. Poultry Association of Manitoba has just completed a sale of at least four hundred R. O. P. Approved Barred Rock Cockerels to go to Ontario breeders under the cockerel distribution policy. The purpose of this policy is to more effectively link the product of the pedigreed breeders of Canada with the accredited and approved flock associations which are being used as the sources of supplies for eggs for hatcheries.

These birds were assembled in Winnipeg for final inspection before being shipped east.

"Mr. Warrington, of Cornwall, Ont., who was responsible for the selection of the Canadian exhibit that was sent to the World's Poultry Congress in London, Eng., in 1930, was in charge of the birds while in transit.

"Fifty of the birds in this shipment were chosen from the flock of Mrs. George Carruthers, Virden, Man."

Mrs. Carruthers before her marriage was Miss Nettie Pollock, of Berwick, where she is well remembered, while her husband is also from the district. Mrs. Carruthers in renewing her subscription to The Record says they are having a very fine winter at Virden with not enough snow for sleighing, with the thermometer hovering around fifteen above and the sun shining. They always look eagerly for The Record every Monday with all the home news in it.

Wotta Life!

An income-tax collector has died, and a subscription was raised in a Wall Street office for a wreath. The boss promised five dollars. A few days later one of the clerks called to collect the money, and the chief handed him a ten-dollar note.

"You want five dollars' change, sir," said the clerk.

"No," growled the other; "keep it and bury another."

Well Defined!

Asker: "What is the difference between communism and capitalism?"

Teller: "Communism is when everybody works for a committee and capitalism is when they work for a board of directors."

ONTARIO PROVIDES A NEW LESSON IN GEOGRAPHY

MOOSE FACTORY, on James Bay, will henceforth be known as Moosonee. This fresh name for Ontario's only seaport is a new one for our school children to learn, and though we do not know the exact meaning of the name, it seems to be justified by the fact that it has been used by the Indians of the district for many years back. As everyone knows, the T. & N. O. Railway was completed to the new port last Autumn, and it will be opened for tourist trade and general business next June. In preparation for the opening the railway management is erecting a small hotel of the bungalow type. A combination passenger and freight depot of a temporary character will also be built to serve the new town on a site which will not obstruct the erection of permament buildings as the development of business warrants. The management is to be congratulated upon restricting its building operations in keeping with the times. The prospect is that with the resumption of normal economic conditions a considerable tourist business to Moosonee will be developed. There is romance in the thought that Ontario is at last in touch by rail with Hudson Bay, that great inland sea which for centuries has been nothing more than a large body of water on the map, identified, in the main, with the history of the historic Hudson's Bay Company.

Are Given Two Months For Cutting Shade Trees

Convicted of cutting shade trees on a farm upon which the Ontario Agricultural Board had loaned money, Howard and Hugh Lynch, of Morrisburg, appeared before Magistrate McCormick in Winchester, following a charge laid by J. A. Riddell, inspector for the board at Morrisburg.

The two men, on being found guilty, were sentenced to two months at hard labour, and the following morning were taken to Cornwall by Provincial Constable Frank Rose, where they will be committed to the counties' jail.

NEW RIFLE FOR NEW WIFE

"IF AN ESKIMO BOY wants a wife he just grabs her—but he usually has to make a present to her old man." That's the doctrine of Eskimo matrimonial laws given by R. L. Miller, who was the first white man to live for a winter on Victoria Land that bleak and treeless Arctic Island north of the American continent. The prices go up and down, but even when fur is good and the Eskimoes have lots of money a rifle is a high price to pay for a wife. For that a boy could pick himself nearly any woman on the island—married or single.

"There aren't many single women for the boys to pick from. As soon as any girl is old enough she generally gets married, because they're short of women. But the boys often trade wives if they don't get along very well—which is as often as not. If a boy doesn't like the wife he's got he generally dickers to trade her. He could just kick her out if he felt like it, but good wives are hard to come by up there, and they didn't kick any kind of a wife out until they've tried their best at trading.

"If the wife doesn't like the husband she's with, if he beats her too much or something, she just stops sewing for him. That generally brings the husband round, because none of the Eskimo boys are experts at needlework. They wear out a lot of moccasins every Winter, and they hate to make new ones for themselves. So if a wife goes on strike, the husband generally looks round for a swap. Sometimes they have to throw in a few fishhooks or cartridges when they trade like that, but most Eskimos would a lot sooner hand out a few handfuls of hardware than to have to make their own boots."

Take Many Ling From Rideau Lakes

According to a report of the Smiths Falls Fish and Game Protective Association, just issued, the campaign to rid the Rideau Lakes of the ling, an undesirable fish, is proving most successful and it was stated that up until Saturday 558 ling had been caught in nets. Of these, many were large fish, ranging from seven to ten pounds, and the largest weighed 10¼ pounds.

The fish are being supplied to all those asking for them and, according to the report, the demand has been heavy.

From Wednesday until Friday of last week no less than 565 pounds of ling had been given out.

The campaign is under the direction of John Barron, of the Department of Game and Fisheries, and he is receiving the hearty support and co-operation of the Smiths Falls association in his work.

PHILCO

112X

—the first radio scientifically designed as a Musical Instrument

It looks different • It sounds different

It is different!

THE new Philco's inclined sounding board throws all sound directly up into the field of the listener. Ordinarily high notes are largely lost because high notes travel in a straight line without spreading out very much. Instead of projecting them along the floor the new Philco sends them up into the range of your ear so that for the first time in any radio you now hear the full musical register.

Furthermore, this Philco is the first radio ever designed so that you hear sound only from the front of the speaker. Ordinarily the sound from the back of the speaker strikes the wall back of the set and is reflected forward, reaching your ear a fraction of a second later than the sound from the front. This naturally causes a blur.

In the new Philco the sound from the back is directed down to the floor by the inclined sounding board and is not reflected forward. Yet even more protection is provided by the echo-absorbing back which absorbs much of the sound from the back before it even gets out of the cabinet. You have never before heard such clear, sharp, unblurred tone as this wonderful new instrument gives.

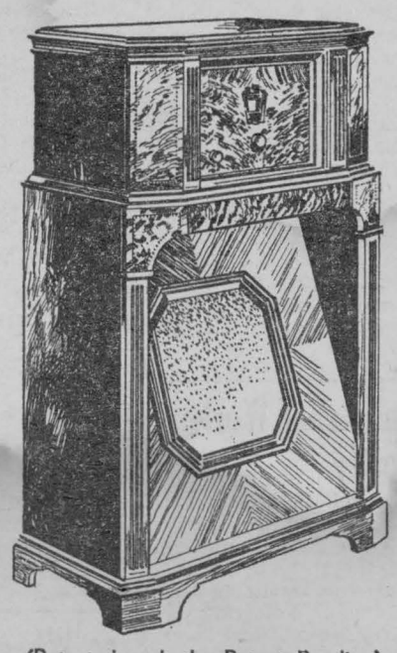

Still further, there is no hollow "barrel" or box-like sound because the speaker on the new Philco is not mounted in a chamber as usual, but on a sounding board with practically no enclosure in front. Thus you get in the new Philco the true, free, natural unboxed tone of the original instruments and voices.

Again, the size and weight and rigidity of the sounding board are all greater than usual, still further contributing to the most perfect vibrationless tone ever heard in a radio.

Words cannot express the supreme quality of this marvelous instrument. Here is a fidelity of tone beyond anything you ever thought possible. Turn your back or close your eyes; you will believe that you are in the actual presence of the artists themselves

NEW DISCOVERY BENEFITS HONEY INDUSTRY

ITEMS appearing in several Ontario newspapers on January 4th, regarding a method of processing honey invented by a former Guelphite at Cornell University are incomplete and rather confusing. In the interests of the inventor and of the Ontario Agricultural College an explanation seems necessary.

The inventor, Dr. Dyce, is and has been for several years a member of th faculty of the O. A. C., and the process referred to was the result of research conducted by him while he was on leave of absence and taking post graduate work at Cornell University. The process is now recognized as being of great value to the honey industry, and Dr. Dyce is deserving of commendation for having applied for patents in both the United States and Canada, and for turning these patents over to Cornell University for the United States and to the Ontario Agriculture College for Canada These patents prevent any company or individual from securing a monopoly on the process though any company or indivuad may use it under government license.

Stated briefly, the process is one of pasteurizing the honey at a certain definite temperature to prevent fermentation and then cooling it rapidly to avoid loss of flavour. Ten per cent of previously processed honey is stirred into the liquid honey after it is cooled. This acts as a starter which promotes rapid granulation so that within a few days, at a lower temperature, the whole mass takes on a fine ,smooth, uniform, semi-solid texture; is safe from fermentation, and retains its natural delicious flavour. This processed honey is very satisfactory for table and kitchen use. It has lost its drippiness and can be cleanly and conveniently lifted with a spoon or spread with a knife.

The process is now being adopted by the Ontario Honey Producers' Co-operative, and Dr. E. F. Phillips, head of the Department of Apiculture at Cornell University, in an article appearing in the January issue of "Gleanings in Bee Culture," speaks glowingly of Dr. Dyce's work and of the fine contribution which he has made to the honey industry of Canada and the United States.

Cleaning Out Couch

The eardication of couch grass, otherwise known as quack, twitch, or scutch grass, is one of the hardest problems with which the farmer has to deal. Few people realize the enormous quantity of couch grass roots which exist in infested fields. Tests conducted by the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa show weights of roots ranging from 1.531 to 6,997 pounds to the acre—as much as a heavy crop of hay. No wonder it is hard to clean out when it spreads by roots as well as seed. Thoroughly cleaning out the roots is the one effective way of getting rid of couch. In small areas this may be done by hand. In larger areas by shallow ploughing and working thoroughly with the cultivator to keep the roots turned up to the sun long enough for them to "kill." Only as large an area as can be thoroughly cleaned up at one time should be undertaken, as half-way measures are only lost time and effort.

Canadian Eggs Best

The per capita consumption of eggs in Canada is approximately 366.18 a year, according to J. A. Carroll, secretary of the Ontario Marketing Board, a record unequalled by any other country, because of the fact that Canada produces the best eggs. Mr. Carroll gives as the underlying reason the fact that Canadian eggs are government graded, and declares: "Guesswork is eliminated. The annoyance and disappointment of paying for a high quality product and receiving an inferior one, is a thing of the past in Canada, so far as the egg business is concerned. The old expression, 'let the buyer beware,' is obsolete in this country when eggs are being purchased. The Canadian consumer decides the quality of eggs he or she purchases, not the dealer, providing the eggs are bought by grade. As for the effect of this huge consumption on general prosperity, consider these figures. The farmer received an average price of 23 cents a dozen for his eggs, or a total revenue of $69,940,000. The consumer paid an average price of 38.5 cents a dozen, or a total of $117,176,000. The difference of $47,234,000 is the sum contributed to 'business' in the way of transportation, storage, merchandizing, and incidental costs."

Ship Approved Cockerels

Under the federal policy of cockerel distribution, arrangements have been made to ship male birds which have passed inspection to Ontario for the coming breeding points to supply demands season. One lot of 200 cockerels is being shipped from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to Ontario, while another lot of around 500 birds is being shipped from the Western Provinces also to Ontario. Most of these birds are Barred Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes.

Fattening Poultry

In crate-feeding poultry particular care should be taken to feed a ration which will produce the white fat and the milk-fed quality. The following ration has been tested and found suitable for crate feeding: Equal parts of middlings, ground oats and barley; equal parts of middlings, ground oats and mashed potatoes; equal parts of middlings, ground oats and cornmeal; equal parts of shorts, ground oats and ground barley; equal parts of low grade flour, ground barley and ground oats; equal parts of ground whole wheat, ground whole oats and ground whole barley; equal parts of ground barley, ground buckwheat and bran.

Barley Crop Important

Barley has competed strongly with wheat as a revenue producer on Ontario farms. This grain holds an important place, for several reasons. It is a comparatively high yielder. Experiments show that, mixed with early oats, returns from the combination exceed highest yields obtainable from either grain separately. Also, in analyses, it is shown that in carbohydrates and protein, barley compares very favourably with field cron. Barley is also the north country corn. In northern counties, where early frosts render the growing season too short for the production of large crops of corn, barley is found to be an excellent substitute. It grows rapidly and is the shallowest rooted of all the cereals. Because of these two points, barley does best of all cereals on ground which is insufficiently drained and hence is cold and backward in spring. In recent experiments by the Department of Chemistry, O. A. C., it was noted that the highest yields of barley were realized where it followed a root crop. The department's experiments with fertilizer on barley, showing a big increase in yield where fertilizers were used, are important in view of the fact that this province last year sowed 508,000 acres to barley.

Hay Market Quiet

The hay market is reported as extremely quiet throughout Canada. The domestic demand during December was light as compared with other years, owing to the mild weather. The usual movement of hay to lumber, mining, and road construction camps was not as brisk as in other years. The export demand for hay continues to be poor and unless it improves no real substantial movement is expected of the large supplies of commercial hay still in growers' hands in many parts of Canada. Prices being paid for immediate needs of the trade are much lower than in other years.

Alfalfa For Poultry

Alfalfa in the green state has long been recognized as an ideal poultry feed when used in conjunction with the usual grains and mashes. It is used extensively as range or as cut green feed for birds in confinement during the spring, summer, and fall months in most alfalfa-growing areas, but the value of the hay as a winter feed is not so generally known. So much of the year's success depends upon the number and quality of chicks hatched each spring, that it is important to do all possible to increase the fertility and hatchability of the eggs and the livability of the chicks. Experiments have shown that 20 per cent better fertility and 6.4 per cent better hatchabiliy of fertile eggs can be obtained from birds where alfalfa hay instead of straw is used as litter in the breeding pens. The alfalfa should be used as litter during the winter months preceding the breeding season and the same treatment given to males and females.

Asks Acreage Registered

Forms are being sent out as widely as possible to fruit and vegetable growers requesting them to register with the Ontario Growers' Council the acreage of the various crops they grow and intend to produce next season. Any grower who does not receive a form is asked to write for one, to the Secretary, Ontario Growers' Council, Bruce Bldg., Hamilton. A concerted effort is to be made to provide next season against any repetition of the disastrous season experienced by the growers this year.

In so far as fruit and vegetables are concerned, dependable information has been available from practically all producing districts in Canada with the exception of Ontario. This has resulted in Ontario production always being a most disturbing factor on domestic and export markets and the net returns to the growers for their production highly unsatisfactory. With this information available for Ontario, however, an accurate estimate of Canadian production can be made and thus closer forking facilities can be arranged between all the fruit and vegetable producing provinces in order that the greatest advantage may be taken of all possible markets.

MANY NEW GADGETS AT THE BIG AUTO SHOW

WORD from the biggest automobile show on the continent, the annual display by all makers at Grand Central Palace in New York, is to the effect that there has been no "depression" in automobile ideas on this year's models. Besides many accessories of a mechanical way designed to make the road smoother for the motorist, there are some new accessories of the luxury class. For instance, one car is provided with a cigar lighter that not only lights the weed for the smoker, but takes the first few puffs to provide the necessary "draw." Another lighter combines a clock, memo pad, pencil, and holder for 20 cigarettes. The new devices which make the car run better, however, are perhaps attracting the most attention. "Ride control" is one of these. So also is the automatic choke device, which is soon to be seen in Canada on a car yet to be announced. This device eliminates the choke button on the dash and a device does the work automatically, starting at full choke for cold motor and gradually closing off choke as the engine warms up to normal.

Most Gratefully Thankful

Many people who assisted to fill the car recently sent from Winchester township to the distressed area of Saskatchewan are receiving very grateful letters in acknowledgement for the good things received, and telling of conditions which now prevail and which brought them into the positions in which they find themselves.

Mr. R. S. Leslie, secretary treasurer of the municipality in which is Trossachs, member and speaker of the Legislative Assembly, writes:

"As Secretary-Treasurer of the municipality above mentioned and as member and speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Saskatchewan, I am writing to express the gratitude of the many people who have been the humble and thankful recipients of the kindness and generosity of the good people of Chesterville.

The entire constituency of Weyburn, comprising seven rural constituencies, has been badly crippled in the year of '31 by drought, but through Government and private assistance has been assisted in a very exemplary manner.

There are some people here who came from the vicinity of Chesterville—the Munroes, and of course they were delighted to see a car of eatables from the dear old town.

As an Ontario product myself, from the dear old town of St. Mary's, I have personally received about 700 pounds of clothing for distribution from the Presbyterian church there and also from a Catholic church in Stratford near which I used to teach."

Mr. H. E. Newman, also writing from Trossachs, says:

"On December 26th we received at Trossachs a car of fruit and vegetables, in fact, a miscellaneous car, from Winchester, Chesterville, and Morewood. It was a wonderful car, containing goodies to no end, and was distributed without partiality over the entire municipality. What crowds! Also what radiant faces met us as we delivered its contents, also many indeed were the expressions of thanks. In my holdings I have the names of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. B. Short, Chesterville, also, John Devaney, Chesterville. Will you please convey our heartiest thanks to those dear people, also my own earnest appreciation of the entire district in their most benevolent spirit as a very humble member of the church board here."

RESULTS IN BREEDING YORKSHIRE SWINE AT KAPUSKASING

Experimental Farms Note

IF FARMERS are to get the best results in breeding swine, too much attention cannot be given to the selection of the breeding stock. Both the strain and the individual sows used within the breed selected have much to do with the success and profit of raising pigs.

At the Dominion Experimental Station, Kapuskasing, Ont., a number of pure-bred Yorkshire sows are kept each year for breeding purposes. In selecting these young sows, particular attention is paid to the type, quality and prolificacy of their ancestors, whether they have been thrifty and economic feeders and whether the dams have been good mothers. They are chosen individually for their good development, their clean-cut neck and head, their smoothness of shoulders, strength, depth and reasonable length of body, and their reasonable spring of rib, strength of loin and generous supply of well-placed and well-developed teats.

When a really good sow is once obtained, she should be kept in the herd as long as she retains her usefulness. Quite often only one litter is farrowed by these young sows, after which they are fattened and killed. While this method may save the expense of carrying over brood sows from one litter to another, it destroys the possibility of building up a good strain of breeding stock. The breeding records of this station bring out some very interesting information. Over a thirteen-year period 183 litters have been farrowed giving 1922 pigs, 1400 of which were raised to weaning age, making an average of 10.5 pigs born per litter and 7.7 pigs raised per litter. The average numbers of pigs raised per sow from one to seven years of age are as follows: 7.4, 8.3, 8.5, 7.3, 7.5, 6.3, and 5.6. These figures indicate quite vividly that the average sow is not at her best until she is three years of age and that she will continue to give very good results until she is five.

"I hear your sister is married. Is she happy?"

"Very. There is only one thing annoys her. She can't bear her husband. But one can't expect everything."

CARD OF THANKS

The family of the late Andrew Kearns wish to express their sincerest appreciation of the many expressions of sympathy and acts of kindness on the death of their father.

Bay of Prayer Observed Dy St. Andrew's W.M.S.

St. Andrew Women's Missionary Society met in the church on Friday afternoon for the Presbyterian Women's Day of Prayer, with the president, Mrs. L. H. Doering, presiding. She opened her meeting with the hymn, "O God, our help in ages past" and the Scripture reading was taken from Isaiah, chapter 55.

The president asked the secretary Mrs. Myles Marcellus, for the minutes of the December meeting, which were read and adopted. The roll call followed when sixteen members responded with a verse of Scripture.

Miss Jamieson took the prayer, "The Church."

Several matters of business for the new year under discussion were disposed of satisfactorily, followed by singing of "O God of Bethel, by Whose Hands."

Miss Agnes Rae took the prayer, "For Canada." Rev. A. H. Sproule gave an interesting and instructive address on the first chapter of the study book. "The Tide of Opportunity," which will help greatly in studying and explaining the book by those who will prepare the papers.

Mrs. Baldrey took the prayer "Missions," after which the hymn, "Lord, for all mankind we pray" was sung.

Mrs. Doering read some very beautiful New Year poetry suggesting that it be added to the W. M. S. motto for this year. If they were combined and lived up to, not only this auxiliary but others would be benefited and great good done this year.

Rev. Mr. Sproule pronounced the benediction.

RETIRED ON EIGHTY DOLLARS A YEAR

WHEN THE TWO had reared and helped six children to set up homes of their own, they began to admit to each other, "We're not so young as we used to be."

The question of withdrawal from the full brunt of life's activities became one of increasing interest. They owned a white-painted cottage with a parlour, two bedrooms, a kitchen. woodshed, and half a dozen steps away, a low stone milkhouse. The garden belonging to it was large. In its rear were some apple and pear trees; a few gooseberry, red and black currant bushes grew along the fence, and there was a rhubarb bed. A brick path led past a roothouse to a stable in the corner and the remainder was open vegetable ground which a neighbour farmer ploughed and harrowed each spring. Besides this, they had firewood, pasture for one cow, and a cash annuity of $40 each from the farm. On this they decided they could retire and "live happy ever after."

How It Was Done

Every spring when the cow "freshened," a little pig was bought. This, with the calf, 15 hens and a rooster, used up the surplus skim milk. When the calf was old enough it was sold to the butcher for veal. When the weather became hot and the pastures lush, and the milk flow heavy, the wagon called on its route to the cheese factory and took up the little can. The precaution had been taken to "put down" a crock of butter to supplement that which would now be made only from the week-end cream. The pig and hens had to manage with whey, a bushel or so of wheat, and what they could pick up in the garden.

He milked, fed the animals, attended to the stable, and buck-sawed and split the wood for their two stoves. She took care of the milk, gathered the eggs, and did most of the housework. Both worked in the garden until their cheeks were rosy and their appetites good. Strings of Scarlet Runners made the porches beautiful in summer and the table toothsome in winter. His Early Rose potatoes were always mealy and the pig made unbeatable sugar-cured hams and bacon, varied by an odd young chicken for roast or an old hen for soup. Sometimes a bit of butcher's meat.

Weekly the storekeeper's cart called for the extra butter and eggs, fruit or vegetables as might be, occasionally a few pairs of socks or mittens knitted in her leisure hours in winter. In return he took their order for groceries, feed, and the dry goods needed to replenish the household supplies.

Once in a while they went with a neighbour to the city when a new suit or dress was required for the wardrobe, or curtains for the windows. Each had an orderly array of best, second best, and everyday clothes, clean and carefully repaired.

They went regularly to the Sunday and Wednesday services of the little church at the crossroads and paid "their share" to the minister's salary.

The children loved to come to the little cottage, cosy and warm in winter, cool and flower-bordered in summer, where there was always a welcome home for them and pennies and rhubarb jam for the grandchildren, where every animal was a friend with its own name and the garden a perennial source of pride and display.

"Aren't they the dearest young-old things! Regular pair of old sweethearts," the sons and daughters were apt to say with fond wistfulness. "If we could only keep them for fifty years yet."

"If there were more like them the world would be a happier place," the lawyer-member remarked with an unusual husk in his voice when he came to solicit their vote.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it. The test of life is how it works out. The balance of work and rest, of social life and quiet, of indoor and outdoor occupation, the interest in young and growing things, the sense of independence, carried both on happily into their eighties without a more serious illness than the loss of a tooth or a bit of a cold. They died at last within a week of each other and when their affairs were settled up it was found that out of the eighty dollars a year, enough had been laid away to cover the costs of a decent entombment.

But this was in the gay nineties, when men worked to make a living—and lived; not to make "money"—and die in fear of a poverty-stricken old age.

Thanks From Relief Com.

The members of the Relief Committee desire through the columns of The Record to express their appreciation of the splendid response to the appeal for assistance on behalf of the needy of this community, also for contributing to the happiness, particularly to the children, through the medium of the Community Christmas Tree. Several letters of appreciation have been received by the executive, all of which would seem to show that the work has not been in vain.

It is also desired to render a vote of thanks to The Record for publication of various articles and announcements concerning the activities of the committee.

There is still urgent need for further relief to accomplish which more workers will be welcomed by the committee. It might be further noted that the committee will meet every Tuesday evening a 7.30 at the sewing room, instead of Wednesday as heretofore. —Mrs. Boyd, Secretary.

KNOW YOUR ONTARIO

IS the trans-Canada highway to be built for pleasure alone or is it for both business and pleasure, and to let U. S. A. tourists see what we have? Hon. Chas. McCrae states there is further drilling to be done at the lignite deposits. Say, we start at North Bay. First we find lumber; then Temagami Lake with 3.000 miles of shore and a thousand islands. For miles around there hundreds of smaller lakes and a veritable paradise for tourists. Then proceeding north we come to silver mines that have produced hundreds of millions of dollars, and if silver ever goes up there will be hundreds more millions. A little further on we come into a rich agricultural belt where hundreds of settlers have made their homes. Going on we find gold mines that have yielded hundreds of millions of dollars, and will give hundreds more. There are also many new mines yet to be discovered. Proceeding we come to another immense agricultural area with thousands of settlers, some of whom do not know they live on top of gold mines because there is gold to be found everywhere. Two of the world's greatest paper mills and a great pulp industry is still north of this area, while every few miles we have travelled we have passed through large or small towns. North of this are lignite, china clay, and fire clay deposits, and large power plants at Abitibi Canyon, while James Bay is going to be an important place not only for tourists but for new finds of minerals.

SOUTH SEA BUBBLE AND TO-DAY

THE SOUTH SEA BUBBLE was a name given to a series of financial projects in Great Britain taking their rise about two hundred years ago. To the student of history they were similar in effect to a recent series of financial projects in Canada and the United States, scarcely on the map at that time.

In 1791 the amount of the national debt in Great Britain was £51,300,000. Her people loaned Great Britain this money in return for a fixed income for life—a Government annuity. The South Sea Company aimed to induce the people to exchange their annuities for company stock—which they did very largely. The stock appreciated from 128½ to 1,000 in six months. This produced a mania of speculation and hundreds of new companies. Some were perfectly legitimate. Others were merely means of extracting money.

In 1720 the British Government abolished 86 companies. In August of the same year the "insiders" of the South Sea Company sold out and the stock began to deflate. In four months thousands were ruined. A Government committee reported fraud and corruption on a large scale. Some of those implicated died before another year passed.

By Act of Government, estates of the directors of the South Sea Company were confiscated, a small fraction of which was returned to them for their maintenance, the balance being devoted for the relief of sufferers.

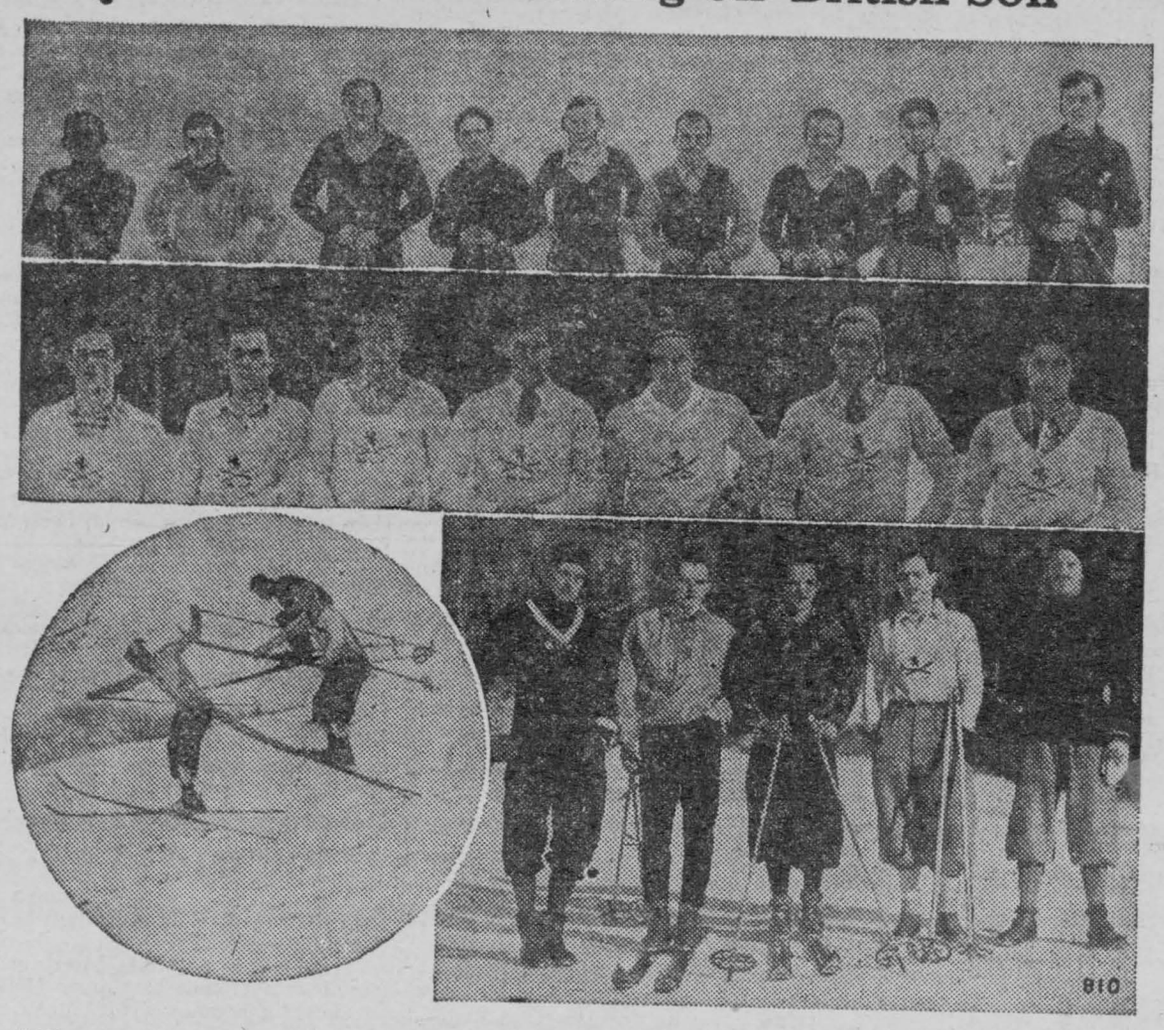

A review of these facts is very interesting at a time like this when the South Sea Bubble is mentioned.

Oxford and Cambridge Skiers Hold First Meeting on British Soil

History was written in Canadian and Empire ski annals at Ste. Marguerite, Que., over the end of 1931 and the beginning of 1932, when the ski teams of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge held their Inter-Varsity meet on British soil for the first time. Hitherto the famous British Universities have always settled their winter sports differences in Switzerland, the recent visit to Canada having been made in the light of the "Buy British" campaign, and for the encouragement of University Sports between different parts of the Empire. They also met Canadian college teams, were entertained at Ottawa by His Excellency the Governor-General, and made the acquaintance of a number of Canadian Ski Clubs. The pictures show (Dark Sweaters) the Oxford Team; (Light Sweaters) Cambridge, who won the British inter-varsity meet; and (in group) taken immediately after the Oxford-Cambridge cross country race, Left to Right: Alexander Keiller, President of the Ski Club of Great Britain and Honorary Manager of the teams, timekeeper; W. (Bill) Thompson, Montreal, former Canadian Olympic Skier, starter; F. J. Walter, (Oxford) individual winner; W. D. Dunn, Cambridge, second; and H. Spence former British cross country ski champion and member of the technical committee of the Ski Club of Great Britain, timekeeper. Inset—a fine jump by three of the British undergraduates. All were enthusiastic about their visit to Canada and the beautiful mountain resort on the Laurentian line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The party travelled from England in the Canadian Pacific liner "Montcalm" and returned on the "Duchess of York."

DREAMY DATE DAINTIES

By Etta Bitta Pye

Frosted Stuffed Dates

Remove stones from dates (unless you buy the already pitted kind). Fill the cavity with pieces of candied fruit, with chopped maraschino cherries, with bits of candied ginger and nutmeats. Press the edges closed again.

If you have some fondant, melt it in the double boiler, dip the dates in it one by one (easily done with the aid of a fork), and lay them on wax paper. You can have the fondant matching any delicate colour scheme, by tinting it with a tiny bit of colour paste. If you have no fondant, a very acceptable substitute lies in a little plain uncooked icing—cream or fruit juice, with icing sugar sifted into it and worked to a smooth paste, a tiny bit of butter added; mix this in generous proportion with fruit, nuts, etc., and stuff the dates with the mixture, leaving the cavity open so it will hold more. Dust the dates with powdered sugar.

Date Supreme

1 cup granulated sugar
2 cups brown sugar
1 cup milk
1 heaping tablespoon butter
1 cup stoned and chopped dates
1 teaspoon lemon, orange, or vanilla extract

Bring sugar and milk to boil, then drop in butter and cook to soft ball. Remove from fire, beat in dates, add whatever extract is preferred, turn into buttered pan and cut in squares when cool. Keep for a week in cool, slightly moist place ,such as the refrigerator, then the candy will be ready to eat.

Date Dreams

2 cups brown sugar
¼ cup syrup
½ cup water
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
½ cup finely chopped dates
½ cup chopped English walnuts
2 egg whites
1 teaspoon vanilla

Boil sugar, syrup, water, and cream of tartar to soft ball. Take from fire, beat in dates. Return to fire and boil to hard ball. Add half the nuts and the vanilla. Have egg whites beaten stiff and dry. Pour boiling syrup over them and beat until creamy, drop by spoonfuls on waxed paper and put rest of nuts on top.

Chocolate Dates

Stone fine, large dates, fill with chopped nuts, any kind. Press opening together, and dip one by one in melted chocolate, drying on waxed paper. A nut half may be laid on each before chocolate hardens.

THE CARE AND CULTURE OF HOUSE PLANTS

Experimental Farms Note

OUR HOMES, especially during the winter months, are much too hot and dry for most plants. High temperatures combined with too little sunshine produce weak, spindly growth and under such conditions flowering plants often drop their buds. As the home can only be modified to a very slight extent, plants must be chosen that can adjust themselves to such environment. Many failures to grow plants successfully are due to: faulty drainage, careless watering, and insect injury.

Soil—Sods and barnyard manure composted and allowed to rot make splendid soil for plants. To this may be added a small amount of rotted leaves or other organic material. When potting ferns add a larger amount of leaf mold.

Potting—The best time to shift house plants is in early spring. Geraniums, bagonias, coleus and similar plants that have become unshapely should be cut back at this time. Plants rarely need repotting during the winter months. Do not over pot. Flowering pots need to be root-bound to flower freely. When potting make sure drainage is provided. A piece of inverted crock over the drainage hole with a small amount of broken crock, gravel or cinders is excellent. Cans or other utensils in place of pots are not recommended, but when used should have an outlet for water at least one-half inch at the bottom. When repotting it is well to remove a portion of the old soil and roots. Plants and cuttings should be set firmly, care being exercised that the roots are not injured. When completed the soil should be one-half inch below the pot rim.

Watering—After potting, the plant should receive a liberal watering and then no water given until needed. Blooming plants require more water than the slower growing plants such as palms. With a little experience one can tell when plants really require water. The appearance of the plants is, of course, a good indication of its requirements. A method commonly followed is to tap the pot with the knuckles; if it has plenty of water the sound is dull, if it is dry the pot will ring. Occasional syringing is beneficial, especially for ferns and other foliage plants.

Jardinieres—If properly used, the jardiniere is a source of added beauty to our plants, but ordinarily causes great injury. This injury results in stagnant water collecting in the bottom of the bowl causing what is termed "wet feet." This may be overcome by placing a few inches gravel or an inverted saucer in the bottom for the pot to rest on.

Insects—Red spiders thrive under house conditions and are hard to overcome. At the experimental station at Charlottetown good results were obtained by dusting carefully with flowers of sulphur. Sucking insects are controlled with nicotine sulphate, one teaspoonful to one gallon of water; biting insects, with a tablespoonful of arsenate of lead to the same amount of water. Scale insects on ferns may be controlled by miscible oils now on the market.

DRINK MILK FOR GOOD TEETH

THAT GOOD TEETH have a direct relation to good health and that defective teeth may lead to serious illnesses, are two well-established facts. Medical authorities are stressing to-day more than ever before, the importance of building strong teeth and of maintaining them in good condition by eating proper foods, by keeping them thoroughly cleaned, and by having them examined periodically by the dentist.

The minerals necessary for good teeth are, fortunately, supplied in our most common and abundant foods. Milk, high in calcium, stands first as the chief tooth builder and it is of vital importance that the diet of both children and adults should include a sufficient amount of this food to supply the calcium requirement. There will be no danger of a deficiency if milk is served as a beverage, particularly for children, and generously used in the making of cream soups, creamed meat and vegetable dishes, and milk desserts. ARTERIOSCLEROSIS

WITH THE APPROACH of old age, changes in the arteries are to be expected on account of their constant use over a period of years. The change which we know as arteriosclerosis, or hardening of the arteries, means that the walls of the arteries have become thick and inelastic.

When this change occurs in middle life we have what may be called premature old age, for it has been said with truth that a man is as old as his arteries. The change in the arteries is generally associated with changes in other parts which may be either the cause or the result of the altered condition of the arteries.

Hardening of the arteries follows poisoning of the body. Alcohol and lead are systemic poisons. Another form of poison is by the toxins given off by germs which are present in the body. The toxins may come from a focus of infection, such as diseased teeth, or they may be the toxins given off by the germs of syphilis or some acute infection.

Overwork of some part of the body leads to an early wearing out of the body machine, and this may mean early hardening of the arteries. Perhaps the most usual way in which the body is made to overwork is through overeating. Another cause is living at high pressure under mental strain.

It is evident that if we wish to keep our arteries young, which means elastic, it is necessary for us to live a life of moderation. Discretion in eating and drinking, attention to the simple rules of healthy living have their reward in more years of health, more years in which to enjoy life, to work, and to play. This is better than trying to crowd a whole lifetime into a few years. then to spend the remainder of life handicapped by a prematurely worn-out body.

Those individuals in whom the condition has developed must face the situation; they must adjust their lives to meet new conditions. If they do so, they can enjoy a life of restricted activity.

Life for such individuals must be quiet, well-regulated, and without indulgence to excess in food or drink. Excesses of any kind, whether physical exertion, mental worry, anger or excitement, must be avoided.

The prevention of hardening of the arteries lies in a hygienic life, the attention to diet, and the early avoidance of excesses, reasonable treatment of an infectious condition. Abuse of the body results in harm. The body cannot suffer abuse to-day and have it made up for by extra care to-morrow. Abuse leaves permanent scars which lead to an early wearing out, or premature old age.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto will be answered personally by letter.

Disciplining Josiah

MRS. HIGGINS wiped the perspiration from her brow and sighed. Then she seized the pump handle and began to work it vigorously up and down. But her efforts were without result, and she desisted with a groan.

"It ain't no use," she said. "It's give out completely, and I'll have to haul water from the barn for a month before Josiah'll get it fixed."

She went to the kitchen door and looked out. It was a radiant summer morning, just after a shower. The drops still hung on the trees and sparkled in the sunlight, while the little puddles lay all along the walk which led to the barn. Mrs. Higgins shook her head as she regarded the watery way, then turned and climbed the stairs. At the top she opened a door, and entered her own sleeping-room.

On the bed lay a man of mild and venerable appearance. A newspaper was carefully spread under his stockinged feet to keep them from contact with the snowy coverlid, and his head was elevated on several pillows. His hands were clasped over his stomach, and his pale blue eyes looked upward. His whole countenance expressed benevolence and content.

When Mrs. Higgins saw the object on his pleasant contemplation, she groaned again. There had been a leak in the ceiling for some time, and during other showers the drippings through it had been collected in pans set on the floor beneath. Now her husband had propped under it a sort of a trough. To this was attached an old eave-spout which carried the water out of the window, where it fell in a gentle stream upon the flower bed below.

"Kind of a cute idea, ain't it?" he said. "I've got the thing lined with some old oil cloth so'st the water can't run through."

"Josiah Higgins!" exclaimed his wife, "in half the time it took you to fix that thing you could have mended the roof."

"I know it," said Josiah, "but I couldn't mend it after it began to rain."

"No," she said snappishly, "an' when it ain't rainin' it don't need mendin'. You do beat the Dutch, Josiah."

Josiah turned his head slowly at the unusual inflection of her voice, His wife was a stout, rosy little old lady and gave the expression of being warm and soft and "pussy-catty." One almost expected to hear her purr. To-day, however, there were grim lines about her double chin, and she looked more like scratching than like purring. Josiah looked at her in mild surprise.

"What's the matter, Marthy?" he inquired sympathetically. "Don't you feel well?"

"No, I don't, an' you wouldn't either if you did the work in a house where half the things was never finished, an' the rest was busted or wore out. The pump's broke," she continued gloomily.

"Sho! Is it?" he inquired genially. "I must git it fixed.' '

"That's what you always say, but it'll be a year before you do. There ain't enough baking powder to make the biscuit for supper, an' the lard and eggs is all out. You'll have to hitch up an' go to the grocery."

Josiah's face fell. He was so comfortable. "Can't you get along some way without?" he said in plaintive tones.

Mrs. Higgins' answer was only a contemptuous sniff, but she arose from her chair and went out of the room, slamming the door noisily behind her. He looked after with some concern.

"It ain't often she gets so riled over a little thing," he meditated. "She'd feel better if she'd bile her a cup of tea." And with this comforting reflection his face resumed its accustomed lines of serenity; soon, lulled by the monotonous drip of the water, he fell into a refreshing slumber, all unconscious of the declaration of independence that was formulating itself in his wife's heart.

Josiah Higgins was a thoroughly amiable old man, about whom there was nothing remarkable except the attacks of inertia from which he suffered. But these were astonishing because of their duration and frequency.

He had never been known to finish anything that he began. He explained this perculiarity by saying. "I couldn't take any manner of pleasure in life if everything was all done. 'Twould seem just like I had nothin' left 'cept dyin'."

TEN years before, to his wife's great delight, he had decided to build a new house. When it was nearing completion, he suddenly discharged the carpenters. "I guess I'll rest a spell now," he said, and he had been resting ever since.

A new house had always been Mrs. Higgins' ambition, but now that she had it, its incompleteness was a source of vexation and soul weariness to the neat and thrifty woman. The priming coat of paint had soon worn off, and the building grew brown and weather-beaten. It's porchless front made her think of a man without a nose, and the two windows over the door were boarded up in default of glass, thus adding to the impression of an afflicted individual by suggesting blindness. Martha Higgins felt indeed that life held small satisfaction for her.

However, she was a patient soul and devoted her affection to Josiah. She tended him and waited on him, hunted his collar buttons and uncomplainingly harvested the crops of newspapers which he sowed upon the floors all over the house. She admired immensely and considered him capable of becoming a great man "if he'd only stick to tryin' to be one long enough."

As hopes of seeing the new house completed grew less, she adapted herself to circumstances as best she could. However, the proverbial worm was not to be compared to Martha when she began to turn. While Josiah slept his wife pondered.

The result of her cogitations was plainly visible upon her countenance that afternoon as she again stood at her kitchen door and looked off toward the orchard. She saw her husband, seated at the foot of an old apple tree, engaged in his favourite occupation of contemplating his apiary. He spent hours in this quiet retreat, studying the habits of his bees and making curious and rickety hives out of the old boards that lay about.

The world was fresh and spicy after the rain. Nature had long since removed the wintry mantle, but today the orchard was powdered with a snow of flowers. Their fragrance, mingled with the suggestion of damp foliage, was borne to Martha's nostrils, and the satin petals drifted slowly down on Josiah's bent shoulders and his discrepit straw hat.

An expression of tenderness settled upon her features as she gazed at him, which passed away when it began to be apparent that something was happening. Josiah sprang to his feet and waved his arms frantically.

"They're a-swarmin', they're a-swarmin'!" he shouted. "Come quick!"

She dropped her dishcloth and, seizing a tin pan and a poker, made all haste to the spot. Josiah was rushing excitedly about trying to prop up a crazy hive for the reception of the buzzing cloud that whirled in the air near by.

"Kind of early in the season for them to swarm, but I knew they was a-goin' to the way they acted. I been watchin' them for two hours. Get to poundin', quick!"

Martha, accustomed to serve as an orchestral accompaniment at the periodical swarming of the bees, began a furious tattoo upon the dishpan. The cloud soon gave evidence of settling.

"Good! Keep it up, keep it up!" Josiah shouted, breathless and perspiring. "This is a swarm of Italians. I wouldn't lose them for five dollars. What's the matter?"

He looked around in astonishment, for the noise had ceased, and Martha was gazing thoughtfully up into the serene, blue sky. "Looks like rain again," she remarked abstractedly.

"Why in all creation don't you keep on drummin'!" he demanded.

"Oh, I'm tired," said his wife indifferently, "an' it takes so long. Maybe they'll go in theirselves. They look like they was most ready to." And without further remark she walked slowly back to the house.

Josiah looked after her in amazement, his grasp upon the beehive loosened, and it fell to the ground with a crash, startling the swarm of bees, which was just about to settle. The cloud arose and passed gracefully over the tree tops.

"Consarn it," he growled, "if she'd kept on poundin' a minute more they'd 'a' gone in. What ails her anyhow?"

JOSIAH had a hard time that afternoon. Another swarm came out, and this he also lost, for, irritated by the defection of Martha, he did not summon her again to his assistance. It was a tired and disgusted man that entered the house in answer to the supper bell, but like all indolent people he was extremely optimistic.

"I'll feel better when I git somethin' to eat," he remarked. But alas for the futility of human hopes! The first thing that his eye fell upon when he was seated at the table was a plate of curious, round objects which in shape at least suggested one of his favourite dishes; but were these the flaky, delicious dreams of delight that Martha was accustomed to serve?

"Seems to me," he said doubtfully handling one of them, "your biscuit ain't as light as usual?"

"There wa'n't no bakin' powder, so I made 'em without,' 'said Mrs. Higgins with a jerk.

He laid down the biscuit with a sigh and turned his attention to a fine steak which he had selected at the market the day before. It proved to be almost raw. If there was anything Josiah disliked, it was rare meat.

"I should think this steak would be better if it was cooked a little more," he suggested with some hesitation.

"The fire burned out before I got through cookin' it, an' there wa'n't any more wood cut," was the grim answer.

Josiah sat silent for a moment. He did not at all understand his wife's attitude. Heretofore she had always managed to furnish a good meal even when the pickings in the pantry were poor, and as for wood—why, she always cut it herself when he forgot it.

"Well," he said at last, "I ain't very hungry, an' I reckon I won't eat anythin' but my pie."

"There ain't any pie," responded Martha gloomily; "I told you this mornin' we were all out of lard."

Josiah stared hard and curiously at his wife. Then his mouth opened but closed again with a snap that cut in two a sentence that was just issuing forth.

He arose with a calm though assumed dignity and went upstairs, too entirely overcome to express himself. Presently his wife, who was clearing away the untasted repast, heard him opening and shutting bureau drawers and closet doors. Then he came to the head of the stairs and called:

"Marthy! Where's my new shirts? I'm a-goin' up town to the elders' meetin', an' I can't find a thing to put on."

"Oh, I dunno,' 'said Martha, presenting a red and expressionless face. "I guess they're around somewheres; but I don't believe you can wear any of 'em. There ain't any of 'em quite done."

"Well, where's a clean old one, then?"

"Why, I guess there ain't any except the one you got on. I tore 'em all up for rags. They were all worn out anyhow."

"Well, what be I a-goin' to do then?" he inquired helplessly.

"Oh, I dunno," said Martha with a fine unconcern. "Can't you get along somehow? Maybe you can pin 'em up." And with that she returned to her tasks.

Josiah went back to the chamber. He sat down on the bed and rubbed his fingers through his scanty locks and asked himself what in the world Martha meant! Neither his inner conscience nor his previous experience with her could explain any of these unusual occurrences. His wardrobe had always been her particular pride and care, and, if everything did not lie ready to his hand when he made his toilet, she ran with loving solicitude to wait upon him.

After a while he continued his search. It was rewarded by the finding of one shirt which was complete with the exception of the buttonholes. He accepted Martha's advice and resorted to pins. His efforts were painstaking in more senses than one and gave rise to remarks that he was not likely to repeat at the elders' meeting. Then, holding one wounded finger in his mouth, he sought his Sunday clothes, which he found in a heap on the floor where he had stepped out of them. Having donned these he sallied forth with attire and temper equally ruffled.

From this day it seemed to Josiah as if the house had suddenly become bewitched. The chairs that he sat in spread apart at the most unexpected moments. The handles separated from the cups, just as he raised them to his lips. He stumbled over holes in the carpets and suffered dyspepsia from the strange dishes which were always short of some necessary ingredient—salt, pepper, and goodness knows what.

Most dreadful of all, was the change in his wife. From a cheerful and happy little woman, always equal to any emergency, she had become a cross-grained, untidy cynic who seldom spoke, and when she did she exploded short, abrupt sentences which were like slaps of cold water in the face of poor Josiah.

Strange to say, however, it was weeks before he detected any method in her madness. He utterly failed to comprehend that she was demonstrating a problem in personal equations, or that his own lapses of memory and lack of energy were in direct proportion to her culinary failures and the collapse of his surroundings.

BUT one day he sat in his old seat out in the orchard. He had retired there after an attempt at dinner, frustrated by the failure of a table leg which caused such a hopeless mingling of food and broken china that he had lost his appetite.

As he pondered the ever vexing question, an idea presented itself to him. At first it seemed elusive, but he grasped it with persistence and was finally able to clutch it firmly and examine it carefully. Then he drew his lips together for a low whistle. Soon afterward he left the orchard, harnessed up the horse and drove to town.

The next morning when Josiah and Martha were eating their breakfast with their plates balanced upon their knees in default of a table, there was a lound knocking at the front door.

"Its the carpenters come to build the front porch," announced Josiah in as matter-of-fact a tone as he would have used if Martha had expected them.

Almost at the same moment there was a vigorous rat-a-tat-tat at the back door, and when Martha answered the summons she found a man who said that he had come to see about "that pump." A little later in the morning, when a wagon appeared bearing several stout, handsome chairs to match, her expression was a study. She could not even look at Josiah, but hastily retired to her chamber, where she burst into tears, whether of joy or remorse no one, not even herself, could tell. That day, however, the happy man feasted as he never had before, and the smiles exchanged across the new table were like those of lovers.

A few weeks later the Higginses sat on the front porch in the decline of day. Prim and self-conscious, they returned the greetings of such of their friends as passed by. There was a delightful odour of fresh paint in the air, and the newly set panes of glass sparkled in the last rays of the evening sun. As the dusk fell the pair, garrulous enough at first, grew silent. Presently Martha began to speak in a low and quavering tone.

"Josiah," she said, "I've been tryin' to tell you for a long time back. I don't think I done right to treat you the way I did, so mean, all those weeks. I'm—I'm sorry, Josiah, an' I shan't ever do it again."

Josiah reached out in the darkness and took her hand in his. He hesitated a moment, and then he patted it gently. "Well, Martha," he said, "I guess you won't ever have to."

THE FISH THAT GETS AWAY

By Edgar A. Guest

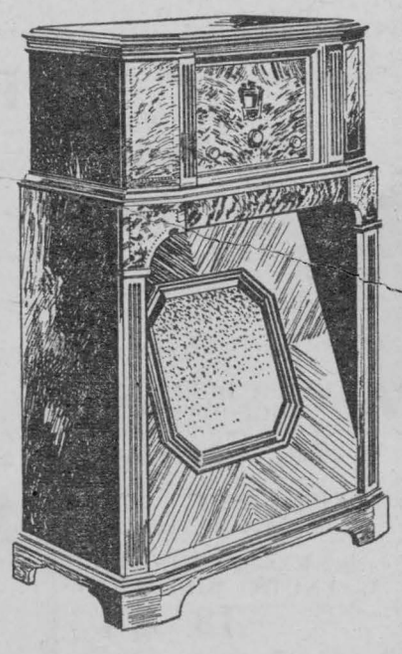

SOME MOURN the fish that gets away and boast his size and weight,
They stop their friends at night to say
How sorry was their fate.
Almost unto the net they'd brought
This beauty superfine,
It seemed to them they had him caught
And then he snapped the line.

Oh, yes, they had some fish to show
For all the time they'd spent;
Some luck they'd been allowed to know,
But they were not content.
The ones they'd caught seemed rather small
When put upon display,
And could not be compared at all
With that which got away.

He broke but once the sunbeams' dance
Upon the waters blue,
And though at him they'd but a glance
His weight and size they knew.
Not one in all their splendid catch
Which came to them that day
For beauty could begin to match
The fish that got away.

Perhaps against us one and all
Could lie the self-same charge:
The joys we catch seem very small,
The ones we lose seem large.
We pass our many blessings by
As though no worth had they,
And dolefully we magnify
The joy that gets away.

REVOLUTIONARY NEW RADIO

A new radio has just been announced by a leading manufacturer that departs radically from the conventional in design. The difference in performance is equally startling.

In this new radio, the speaker is mounted on an inclined sounding board, instead of in the usual perpendicular position. This projects all sound up into the field of the listener, instead of a few inches above the level of the floor.

It is claimed that this is the first radio ever designed so that you hear sound only from the front of the speaker. In the ordinary set, the sound from the back of the speaker is reflected forward from the wall, reaching the ear a fraction of a second later than the sound from the front. This causes a blur, which is entirely eliminated in this new radio. The result is a clarity and realism of tone that is positively startling.

It is understood that certain patents have been granted and others are pending.

IN MEMORIAM

Froats—In loving remembrance of our dear father, Amaziah Froats, who departed this life January 18th, 1929.

What we would give to clasp his hand,
His happy face to see,
To hear his voice and see his smile
That meant so much to us.

To those that have a father,
Cherish him with care,
For no one knows the sorrow
Until they see the vacant chair.

Entertainment By-Law Made Clearer by Council

The new village council has taken early steps to remove any ambiguity in regard to those who are expected to pay license fees for shows in Chesterville by inserting a couple of new clauses in the by-law which formerly controlled this feature. Another clause says that it is the intention to impose the license fee only upon companies, persons, or bodies of persons, giving shows or entertainments of any kind, either as advertisements for commercial purposes or for direct personal profit, within the village.
