Cardinal Team Winners Of St. Lawrence Honours

IROQUOIS, Ont.—By virtue of their 2 to 1 victory here Monday night over Spencerville, Cardinal are champions of the St. Lawrence Hockey League. The teams finished their two-game series on Saturday night, with the score on the round tied, and met here Monday night in a sudden-death game for the title. With the championship goes the Benson Cup.

Each team scored once in the first period, Bush scoring for Spencerville, and Marshall for Cardinal. Marshall netted the deciding goal after two minutes of play in the second session. Spencerville made a determined bid to tie up the score in the third frame, but Cardinal put up a stubborn defence to retain their lead.

The teams:

Cardinal—Goal, Carther; defence, W. Gamble and D. Gamble; centre, Sorrell; wings, Little and Marshall; subs., St. Louis, Loughridge, and Dixon.

Spencerville—Goal Switzer; defence, Ferguson and Cameron; centre, Bush; wings, McCabe and Olsen; subs, Martin, Fairbairn and McAuley.

Referees—Bill O'Hara and Jack Duggan, Ottawa.

New Car Demolished Lady Driver Injured

Crashing into a telephone pole a few miles west of Kingston with a new Chevrolet sedan just a few hours out of the factory, Mrs. Hart Melvin, of Winchester, suffered several broken ribs, a bruised back and minor cuts Monday afternoon. The sedan, one of a lot of 20 cars being brought from the General Motors factory at Oshawa to Melvin's Garage Winchester, was completely demolished.

Road conditions were very poor, deep ruts being encountered which were made dangerous by the melting snow. The car jumped out of the rut and, out of control, crossed the road and smashed into a post. Mrs. Melvin was taken to a Kingston hospital by H. Flora another member of the party.

Police Dog Disappears Same Time as "Wolf" Shot

PEMBROKE—Two local youths were given a great deal of credit for barging a wolf recently, but now a resident claims his police dog disappeared recently, and doubt has entered the mind of County Treasurer J. M. Jamieson. Local experts are divided on whether the pelt which the youths turned over to the treasurer for the $25 wolf bounty is the late police dog or a wolf, so it will be sent to the Department of Game and Fisheries at Toronto for decision.

Chesterville Juniors Win 5-2 In Exhibition Game Here

Chesterville Juniors defeated the Iroquois Juniors, champions of the St. Lawrence League, last night at the local rink by the score of 5 to 2 in a return game of the match played in Iroquois Thursday night when they tied three-all. The local boys held an edge over the Iroquois team most of the evening and had the majority of shots on goal, although drawing down the major portion of the penalties, Cornell scoring Iroquois' first in the third when Chesterville was short one man.

Chesterville opened the scoring in the first period after four minutes when McElroy passed the puck out from the corner to Don Farmer who batted it past Hailey. A few minutes later Hailey almost scored one for Chesterville when the puck fell on the goal line of the Iroquois net, but he handled the succeeding threat Chesterville made on his net and the first period ended 1 to 0 for Chesterville.

Chesterville tallied in the second when McElroy rushed through centre and scored unassisted in eight minutes, Archie Black making the score 3 to 0 when he pegged in a nice shot from the blue line with but a couple of minutes remaining in the period. By this time Iroquois was sending up four-man rushes in an attempt to avert a wash-out and forced the local boys to do some smart checking.

Five minutes of play had gone in the last session when Cornell, Iroquois' husky little defence man, teamed up with Smith and Kaloran and sent a high shot from away out that deflected off Plantz's hand and skimmed by the diminutive Chesterville goalie, Lyle Alford, who put up a great game in the local's nets. Four minutes later McElroy again scored when he went down with Bus Hutt, but Iroquois came back with another goal with five minutes of play left when Smith poked the rubber in from a scramble around the Chesterville net. A couple of minutes later the disc entered the Iroquois net from McElroy's stick from a pass out from the corner but it was called offside. A minute later, however, McElroy made a sure goal when he rushed in after Farmer's rebound with but a minute of play left and made the score 5 to 2 for the Chesterville boys.

For Iroquois, Cornell, Kaloran and Smith showed up perhaps the best, with the rest digging in with all they had and putting up a game fight. The combination of Farmer, McElroy and Black did effective work and put them through the Iroquois lines time and again. Lyle Alford played a splendid game in the local nets, the "professor" showing the crowd that his size did not retard his effectiveness. Plantz and Fyke put up a good defence and the relief line held their opponents well when the regulars were getting their wind.

The Citizens' Band was present and entertained the small crowd of spectators.

The line-ups were:

Iroquois — Goal, Hailey, defence, Proudfoot and Cornell; centre, Smith; wings, Don Kaloran and Montepit; subs., Riddle, Cisty, and Kennedy.

Chesterville—Goal, Lyle Alford; defence, J. Fyke and P. Plantz; centre, Donald Farmer; wings, Billie McElroy, and Archie Black; subs., Hubert Harper, Harold MacLean, and Bus Hutt.

Referee—M. Harper.

Chimney Burning Out Cause of Fire Scare

A chimney burning out on the west end of the Kearns' Block, Main Street North, caused a fire scare on Monday afternoon when the fire whistle was sounded just before four o'clock.

The stove pipes leading from a kitchen stove took fire and the blaze spread to the chimney. As it burned up to the third story, heavy smoke poured out and filled an upper room so that it seemed the fire had spread to the building. A heavy westerly wind was blowing and an alarm was phoned in, but before assistance arrived it was seen the fire was confined to the chimney although woodwork surrounding a stove pipe hole in the chimney was scorched by the flames puffing out. A few pails of water were sufficient to eliminate the danger.

Livestock Perishes In Blaze Near Metcalfe

Fire of unknown origin breaking out at the farm of David Morrison, between Metcalfe and Edwards, about midnight Saturday night, razed a large outbuilding, and burned to death about 21 head of cattle, one horse, 95 hens, five geese, and ten pigs, besides a quantity of hay, with a total loss of about $3000, partly covered by insurance.

Mr. Morrison, with his wife and five children, had retired for the night, when they were suddenly awakened to find the series of barns joined into one main building in flames. Mr. Morrison immediately rushed to the blazing building, where he succeeded in rescuing a team of horses and eight young pigs before the fire became too menacing.

By the time neighbours from the surrounding district arrived on the scene, the flames had enveloped the buildings, and all efforts to save it were fruitless. Volunteer firemen formed a bucket brigade, and although unable to save the burning building, succeeded in confining the flames to the barn. Besides the cattle, Mr. Morrison had about 23 loads of hay stored in the barn.

Late Mrs. John G. Otto Mourned by Friends

The death of Mrs. John G. Otto, of Seventh Avenue East, Osnabruck, which occurred on March 9th, caused deep sorrow in that community, in which she was born and her life spent, being held in high esteem by all her intimate friends. She bore her suffering with patience, never complaining. She was given the most loving care, but fond hopes and ardent wishes were of no avail. She was a loving wife and a dear mother and will be sorely missed in her home as well as by a wide circle of friends to whom she endeared herself by her cheerful disposition.

She leaves to mourn her loss, a sorrowing husband, one son, Wilfred, at home ;four daughters: Mrs. Claude Middlemiss and Miss Eva Otto, of Ogdensburg, N.Y.; Mrs. Arthur Zeron, and Mrs. Ellard Zummach, of this place; also two brothers and two sisters: Will, of Dauphin, Man., and John Alguire, of this place; Mrs. Hersey Bush, of Finch, and Mrs. Agnes Scott, of Sandtown.

The funeral took place on Friday from her late residence to the United Church and North Valley Cemetery, the service being conducted by Rev. H. D. Whitmore, assisted by Rev. W. J. Robertson, of Sunshine Hill. The pall bearers were, Messrs. John Ostler, Kenneth Alguire, Elmer Scott, Claude Middlemiss, Arthur Zeron and Ellard Zummach.

The flowers were many and beautiful. The friends from a distance were: Mr. James Hamilton, Mrs. Ralph Hamilton, Mrs. Eva Scott, of Massena, N.Y.; Mrs. Fred Rupert, of Raymondsville, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. William McGinnis, of Wales; Mrs. Harold Stephenson and baby Isabel, of Cornwall.

Millionaire Kodak Man Commits Suicide in Home

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 14.—George Eastman, 77, millionaire manufacturer, philanthropist, and big game hunter, shot himself to death to-day, his physicians announced, in his East avenue home here.

Dr. Audley D. Stewart, announced that Eastman had shot himself after putting all attendants away from his bedside, said Eastman left this note:

"To my friends:

"My work is done. Why wait?"

Dr. Stewart was Eastman's personal physician for many years.

Dr. Stewart said while Eastman, in ill-health for many years, apparently had recovered to a degree that was very encouraging to his friends, "he apparently was in such a mental state that he shot himself after sending all his friends from his room."

A moment after they departed, said Dr. Stewart, they heard the shot and returned to find him dead.

Eastman was a bachelor with no near relatives. He had been in failing health for a long time, but remained chairman of the board of the Eastman Kodak Company, a $200,000,000 concern he fostered after beginning his business career at 14 on a salary of $3 a week. On April 7, 1925, he resigned the presidency in favour of William G. Stuber.

Normally the Eastman factories here employ 20,000. There are others, in many parts of the world.

Eastman's death occurred a few months after his personal friend, Thomas Alva Edison, with whom he contributed largely toward the development of the modern motion picture.

Alert, wiry and full of mental vigour until almost the very end, Eastman had an insatiable curiosity about life. Science, invention, and philosophy intrigued him, and he was wont to have persons about him who could discuss all three. Music he enjoyed as regularly as his meals. Describing himself as a "musical moron," he nevertheless spent millions for music for himself and others.

Dr. Stewart said the suicide occurred at 12.50 p.m. The news of Mr. Eastman's death was not known, however, until some time later.

Seditious Speech Brings Severe Sentence From Court

One year with hard abour was the sentence imposed by Mr. Justice Chas. A. Wilson in the Court of King's Bench, Montreal, on Leslie Morris, of Toronto, convicted of having uttered seditious words at an alleged Communist meeting held in the Prince Arthur hall on January 23rd last.

His Lordship told the prisoner in passing sentence that he was fortunate his trial had not taken place in Toronto for he probably would have been sentenced to five years in the penitentiary instead of only one. In any event, the judge said, no matter where young men with revolutionary ideas hailed from they were better to stay away from Montreal.

"People who come here to preach Communistic doctrines," His Lordship said, "are going to be severely dealt with. We are a peace-loving race here in Quebec and we don't want any young firebrands coming here to stir up trouble. You, Morris, said in the course of your speech at the Prince Arthur hall that the best way for people to get what they wanted was to use force. That is why I am adding the hard labour riding to my sentence. You will have to exert yourself at hard labour and that may have the effect of curbing some of your forceful tendencies."

Morris appeared indifferent to the judge's remarks and shrugged his shoulders on hearing the sentence.

HELPING OTHERS

NOTHING has been so heartening and helpful throughout this period of depression, which is now beginning to lighten, especially in these later stages, as a new spirit which seems to be abroad in the land, the Philadelphia Public Ledger says. Difficult to define in words, it is felt by all. Partly described by such terms as "co-operation," "kindness" and "understanding," it includes something more—a unity of thought and action for the common welfare which has never been so marked in previous visitations of hard times.

While the Public Ledgers' reference is, of course, to conditions in the United States, it is not difficult to see a parallel in Canada. This country has experienced the same thing. Days of adversity have served to bring out the very best side of human nature. Never, perhaps, in the history of our country has there been a greater desire to co-operate, to help the other, than has been evidenced during the last year or so. We have seen many examples of this and the same thing has been true all over the country. Those with money and those with jobs have given lavishly to those in need, striving to reduce suffering and to make life more bearable for men, women and children who have felt the adverse effects of a long drawn out business depression.

This wholesale working out of the gospel of kindness and goodwill is a refreshing rebuke to the cynics.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Ontario farmers annually lose hundreds of dollars from parasites in sheep and hugs. Dr. L. S. Stevenson has made a special study of this problem and has written several bulletins, copies of which can be obtained from your local Department of Agriculture.

Commercial fertilizers when applied to various crops in conjunction with good farming methods give big returns. Phosphates increase yields of almost all crops, on almost all types of soil. Potash pays especially on the sandy soils. Nitrogen for most farm crops should, as far as possible, be obtained from growing legumes.

Better seed pays big dividends in crop improvement. Production may be increased from 10 to 14 pounds per bushel by sowing only large, plump seed. The farmer will find it a paying proposition to get the old fanning mill out of the store-house, fit it up properly with screens and make a genuine clean-up of seed this spring.

Current Crop Report

Fall wheat, though bare of snow practically all winter, is reported to be in good condition in most counties, and alfalfa and clovers are also doing well, but the sweet clover has heaved considerably on soils in numerous districts. Lincoln county reports that fruit trees have wintered satisfactorily. As a result of the campaign to grow alfalfa, inquiries are reported by Peel County from all sections of old Ontario, and it is stated that owing to the abundance and low prices of alfalfa seed this year, the farmers are going to seed down more than the normal acreage of this legume. Perth County reports a number of farmers busy cleaning seed grain and predicts a good demand for seed of the 1930 crop which was of very good quality. Renfrew's seed-cleaning plant has been running at full capacity night and day and that county also expects a large increase in alfalfa acreage. No injurious effect upon crops is seen in Oxford as the result of the open winter, although orchards were damaged by the January ice storm.

The Seed Situation

As the seeding season approaches the domestic movement of clover and grass seeds naturally increases. In the past month the movement from wholesale houses to dealers commenced and there has been a lot of seed bought from growers, particularly of red clover and alfalfa in Ontario, but also substantial quantities of other seeds. The export market in Great Britain for red clover and alsike has continued active longer than was expected and has absorbed large quantities of these seeds. However, there are still substantial supplies of red clover in the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia. Carlot quantities are still awaiting buyers in a number of districts. Large amounts of alfalfa seed have been bought from growers recently in Ontario, presumably in anticipation of a good demand from the present alfalfa campaign conducted by the Department.

How To Keep Milk

Four little words tell the whole story about how to keep milk in proper shape for use in the home. These are "Clean, Cool, and Covered." This is one of the fundamental rules of home economics. For best results milk should be served at the end of the meal, and it should always be sipped slowly. Milk is the ideal food for children of all ages because of its high quality and quantity of protein, its abundance of calcium, its readily assimilable phosphorus content, its iron and its easily digested fat and sugar.

Selection of Fertilizers

Dr. R. Harcourt, head of the Department of Chemistry at the O.A.C., advises that when selecting the fertilizer for any given crop the following points should be considered:

1. The present fertility of the soil.
2. Previous cropping.
3. Nature of the crop growth.
4. Previous manuring.
5. Feed characteristics of crop to be grown.
6. Composition of fertilizers.
7. Source of ingredients of fertilizer.
8. Method and rate of application.
9. State of tilth of soil.

Naturally some of these points are interrelated, but all must be considered if fertilizers are to be used intelligently and economically. Furthermore, it must be clearly understood that fertilizers should be thought of as a supplement to farmyard manure, crop residues and good cultivation.

"Your engine's missing," remarked the mechanic.

"I know it," growled the motorist, "and I wish the whole dash car was, so I could collect on my theft insurance."

Swarms of Angry Bees Halt Discharging of Liner

Ten million Canadian bees created considerable consternation among a host of Chinese coolies engaged in discharging a large cargo brought to Hong Kong from the Dominion by the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Russia, and many of the coolies returned home with swollen eyes, cheeks, noses, ears and other portions of their anatomy. Although warned to pay particular attention to the consignment from Alberta, the coolies failed to secure firmly several of the hives or boxes being unloaded from the ship and these fell to the wharf. The containers broke open, releasing their aggravated inhabitants, which took the opportunity of venting their wrath on the unfortunate Chinese in the vicinity. These individuals took to their heels ,though not before they had suffered from the bees' stings, and steadfastly refused to return and complete discharging the valuable cargo until the creatures had been captured.

MR. PEASLEE ON THE CHURCH MILITANT

"THAT MINISTER," Hyne," observed Mr. Peaslee reflectively as he watched a tall, young man going down the village street, "has got more'n one way of appealin' to a pusson's finer feelin's. He's a man I approve of—Mr. Wills is. If he can't get a man into the fold one way, he'll try 'nother. Take Otis Budsnap, for instance."

Mr. Hyne regarded Caleb from under his grizzled thatch of eyebrows.

"I wish you'd try to talk sense," Caleb," he said with surly disapproval. "Ote Budsnap and finer feelin's is a combination I ain't ready to swaller, even from you."

"It happened last Wednesday-night meetin'," went on Mr. Peaslee evenly. "You know how Ote Budsnap and some of them young larrikins that's led round by him have been gettin' in the back seats of the vestry with the one idea of makin' as much noise and confusion as they could. Wal, the last Wednesday night that ever was, a passel of them critters, with Ote Budsnap amongst 'em, slid into the back seats, same's common, and started to scuff their feet and cough and snap their fingers."

"I've kind of wondered," said Mr. Hyne glumly, "why Mr. Wills has stood it so calm. He's got a kind of sot-looking mouth and chin."

"He's got a grip, too," said Mr. Peaslee placidly. "For p'ticulars, consult Ote Budsnap. To come to the point, though, that night Mr. Wills got through standin' it calm, and them critters hadn't more'n fairly got started enjoyin' themselves when he got up and started for the back of the room. He took about four steps gettin' there, and he took them pretty lively. When he passed me he twitched my coat and motioned with his thumb to'rds the doors, so I got up and started.

"Whether he got Ote by the collar or by the ear, I couldn't make out clear but whichever it was, Ote came out of there 'sif there'd been a pair of hosses hitched to him, and he went through the door the same way, with the minister right behind him, shovin' him along.

"When they got outside, the minister never let Ote stop, but kep' him goin' right down by the brook into that little holler you can't see from the road. Mr. Wills motioned with his head for me to hang back so I did, a little, but I heard most of what took place, and even made out to see a little.

"I s'pose if ever a man got a thorough lickin' and change of heart, all inside of two minutes, Ote Budsnap was the man. The minister didn't waste a minute tellin' Ote what he was goin' to do; he jest went ahead and done it, and when he got done Mr. Wills stepped back along to where I was,—he might have been breathin' a speck faster than common, and he wiped his forehead with his handkerchief,—and he told me to go down and look after Ote.

"So I stepped down where Ote was, and found him leanin' over the fence and cryin' like a baby. I was kind of scared when I saw him cryin', for a grown man don't cry less'n there's somethin' really the matter with him. I took holt of him as gentle as I could, and s'I, 'Where be ye hurt most, Otis?' I says. 'I'll fetch Dr. Kimball—'

"When I said that," continued Mr. Peaslee, "Otis lifted up his head and looked at me. 'I ain't hurt none to speak of,' s'he, 'and I don't need any doctor,' and then he bust out cryin' again.

"'Wal,' s'I, 'if you ain't hurt, what in tunket are you cryin' for and carryin' on for?'

"'Wal,' s'he, 'its what the minister said to me. Every time he'd hit me he'd tell me how wrong 'twas for me to act the way I'd been doin', and 'fore long he got me to feelin' sorry 'bout the way I've acted. That's what the matter is,' he says. 'I ain't bodily hurt—I'm tetched.'

"And when a critter like Ote Budsnap is 'tetched,'" Mr. Peaslee concluded, "I'm willin' to b'lieve two things—that he's got two things—for one, and that the new minister's got a way of gettin' at 'em, for another. What do you think, Hyne?"

Council Might Be Responsible Had Treasurer Arrested

Pembroke, Ont.—A warrant was issued Friday for the arrest of Patrick McCarthy, former treasurer of the Township of Ross, Buchanan and Wylie, and he was arraigned here charged with conversion of funds amounting to more than $200.

An audit of the township funds, made last summer by M. J. Howe, of Pembroke, disclosed a shortage in the treasurer's accounts of some $1650. When the discovery was first made the council appeared to look upon the matter somewhat lightly, and made an arrangement with McCarthy whereby he was given an increase in salary and was to be allowed to make restitution by leaving his salary with the township.

Subsequently, however, learning that the members of Council themselves, by permitting such an arrangement, might personally be held liable for the amount of the shortage, McCarthy was dismissed and a decision to take civil action against him was reached. Finally, a few days ago, the motion to take civil action was reached and criminal proceedings were decided upon. Accordingly all information was laid with Crown Attorney H. B. Johnson and a warrant issued for the arrest of the treasurer who had previously been a trusted officer and respected resident of the municipality.

Gordonville

W. L. Thompson was in Chesterville on Monday.

News of the probable advance in price for milk at Nestlé's was very favourably received here. Here's hoping it is realized.

Mr. A. James Thompson spent Friday evening at the home of Mr. Archie Carruthers.

Due to the illegibility of the copy, or to a printer's error, the sentence in last week's issue that read: Mr. Geo. Thompson and son were callers at W. L. Thompson's on Sunday, should have read: Mr. Geo. Thompson and chum were callers, etc. We asked George regarding this, and he replied that he has no son at present.

Mr. Donald Arbuthnot was at Mr. Allan Thompson's on Saturday morning.

If this cold weather keeps on much longer the wood supply will be less than nothing, so here goes the correspondent to replenish same. You can imagine him at it, can't you? Same here.

Finch Young People's Society Hold Pleasing Programme

The Young People's Society of Chalmer's United Church, Finch, met Monday evening, when a splendid programme was provided with Miss Bessie Shaver in charge. The worship period was conducted by Miss Baker and Mrs. C. Eligh. Mrs. Chas. Jack read an interesting paper while a duet was rendered by Mrs. W. Johnston and Mrs. Maxwell. C. Eligh conducted the business while the secretary, Miss Emily Plunket, aided in the opening ceremony. A debate, planned as part of the evening's programme, was postponed until April 12. Phil. Casselman led in community singing and a social time concluded the evening's programme. J. Simpson, agricultural representative for Dundas and West Stormont, was present.

Lights and Shades of London

BABIES IN THE SUN

FAT BABIES, white dogs running, nursemaids with the wind pulling at their snuff-coloured veils, and at least six sharp intervals of sun strong enough to paint three shadows on the grass. That was how Kensington Gardens looked the other day, that delicious annexe to a thousand nurseries, that lovely land of young things insulated from our common world by a row of spiked railings.

I went up the Broad Walk revelling in this untroubled side of life, joyfully appreciating other people's babies patting other people's dogs, admiring the smart turnout that lacked only a crest on the dove-grey perambulator, noting with pleasure that tall, neat young Kensington mothers with their lamp-post figures in well-cut tweed. When the sun came through it was like a game of musical chairs. The nursemaids stopped perambulating. Wind-blown walkers came to a stand-still. They sat down on green seats.

So did I.

Next to me was a maiden of about three ,a little unopened rose-bud of a girl, whose crisp gold hair escaped from a woollen cap with a yellow woollen tuft on top like a tangerine. Her short legs, in grey woollen trousers, stuck out into space so that she, sitting on a grown-up's seat, was in exactly the same position she would have assumed had she been sitting on the floor! Her brother was perhaps five. He wore a peaked cap of corduroy, leggings, and a little fawn coat with an absurd belt at the back.

These two were holding hands, a difficult feat, I imagine, when hands are so small and woollen gloves so bulky and fluffy. They were discussing railway travel. He said that the carriage wheels say "lickety-lick, lickety-lick, lickety-lick," which I thought was very true, but she, woman-like, contradicted him, saying that they go "tell-a-train, tell-a-train," which I thought also was very true. Then suddenly he said loudly three times, because his nurse was reading a novel:

"Nannie,' 'he said, "I'm going to marry Madge!"

She looked shocked, put down the novel, and said:

"No, Master John, little boys don't marry their sisters ,ever."

"I know,' 'said Master John. "Not now, of course, but when I grow up and get big. Some day when I'm—"

Here he opened up his arms to denote size and maturity.

"Yes; but then you'll marry some other boy's sister,"

"I won't—ever!" cried John furiously. "I'll marry Madge! Other boys' sisters are silly asses. They play with dolls!"

The sun went in and they went away, nurse telling him that "nice boys" don't say "silly asses"—ever! I smiled. Little minds in fairyland grappling for the first time with this incomprehensible world! Poor John, dear Madge!

Ten minutes in the Broad Walk make you think a lot about small children. How much character they show at an age when they seem hardly to exist as reasonable beings! See how some lag behind, how others are unhappy unless they are in front, exploring, climbing, meeting great dogs on which, at the last moment, they turn their backs in fear. Watch how some just endure a walk placidly, while others shine with the adventure of it, seeing every detail, wondering, questioning. Look how some collect things busily: sticks, by the armful, stones by the pocketful! Restless, acquisitive little creatures. All instinct with motives planted in them before birth.

How amusing it is to watch it all. Such tiny, instinctive people.

* * * *

The Round Pond flecked by wind. White gulls. Ducks with green velvet heads. Not one ship slanting across this ocean; not one. Only a boy prodding the water with a stick:

"Too cold to sail a ship!" I said.

"It isn't," he replied scowling. "But mother thinks it is."

"And she's right!" I said, wishing to rebuke him.

"She isn't!" (Slap, slap on the water.)

"She is!"

"She isn't!"

I felt that this conversation had all the elements of eternity, so, after delivering a last word in defence of the mothers of Kensington who release the navies of the Round Pond at exactly the right temperature, I left this scowling die-hard admiral to his melancholy.

* * * *

Then, on a path under bare trees, I saw a fat, round fairy in sa'mon pink. Just standing, she was. I sat down to look at her. She advanced slowly. Among the bare trees someone called, "Joan, Joan!" She reminded me of a faun I saw once on the Rock of Loreli on the Rhine. It advanced in just this same doubtful. solemn manner; one movement on my part would have sent it with beating heart into the thicket. So she advanced. I smiled; she smiled. Then she touched my coat with one finger, laughed, and—ran unsteadily away over the path under bare trees. Flirt!

I left Wonderland, and caught an omnibus to Piccadilly in a remarkably good temper. . . .

Next week: Faces in the Strand.

Ship's Cook (to new helper): "Ever been on a ship before?"

Helper: "Sure. I was a gunner in the Navy."

Cook: "Well, start right in and shell the peas."

An architect remarked to a lady that he had been to see the great nave in the new church. The lady replied: "Don't mention names; I know the man to whom you refer!"

Egg and Butter Market

Eggs stole the limelight from butter on the Montreal wholesale dairy and produce markets yesterday. Of late, butter has held the spotlight owing to its sensational advances in price, aggregating 11c a pound within five weeks. Yesterday butter started to ease up in its upward move, while eggs showed the widest change.

The egg market tumbled 2c a dozen as regards Ontario fresh eggs arriving graded. The current quotation became 26c for extras, 24c for firsts, and 20c for seconds, the former two grades being 2c down, while seconds remained unchanged. The reason for seconds holding steady was on account of a good demand for this grade ,and none too many available.

HEALTH SERVICE

of the

CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

STOP AND THINK

HEALTH is a precious posession, but it is one which most people do not appreciate until they are threatened with its loss. We seldom consider just how much good health means to us. We rather take good health for granted, and seldom make any real effort to improve it or keep it until we are faced with losing it.

It is not desirable to spend all our time thinking about health. We know what a nuisance the health crank is, and how irritating is the person who always wants to tell us about his pains and aches. It is, however, equally foolish to ignore health entirely, and to disregard symptoms of abnormal conditions of the body.

What we should strive for is the happy medium which avoids extreme. Health should receive a reasonable amount of attention and consideration. Without becoming food faddists it is well for us to put into practice certain principles with regard to what we eat.

We are practically unaware of our body functions as long as they go on normally. We should realize, therefore, that when discomfort is felt or where there are signs of unusual occurrences, while there is no need for reserve strength and ability to adjust itself to changing conditions, but it it a mistake to call upon reserves unless this is necessary. It is much better to help than exhaust nature.

It is surprising how many people will go on, day after day, ignoring conditions which clearly indicate that there is something wrong, that nature requires assistance. Persistent coughs are overlooked, progressive loss of weight is not given attention, unusual fatigue is not investigated, and thus it is that many cases first present themselves to their doctor with a well advanced turberculosis.

There is always some cause for what is called indigestion. If this persists or recurs, it means that whatever condition is responsible continues to be present. Lumps do not occur in the normal female breast; unusual discharges do not come from the normal body; ordinary sores heal and do not break down again.

It is because such happeinngs as these do not receive prompt attention that cancer is allowed to develop beyond the stage at which it can be cured. While they are not always signs of cancer, still the patient cannot tell whether they are or not. There is only one safe way to act, and that is to find out from the doctor, in every case, what is the true nature of the condition.

Reasonable attention is required if health is to be preserved. If treatment is to be secured when it can do the most good, attention must be given to any signs of symptoms of abnormal conditions.

RENEWING SUBSCRIPTIONS

MANY subscribers to newspapers wonder why the publisher keeps on sending the paper when the subscription has expired. And yet doubtless many would wonder why the same publisher doubted their integrity of purpose if he stopped their paper immediately the subscription became overdue. They would like as not stride into the editorial sanctum and administer a tongue lashing to that already abused gentleman for daring to insinuate that the subscriber's credit was other than good.

Rather than cast any reflection of dishonesty on the customer, who might be a few days, weeks or months behind with his subscription, the publisher continues sending the paper because he is imbibed with the sentiment that 99 out of every 100 people are honest. In metropolitan centres publishers do not permit the subscriber to continue for months without paying his subscription. The reason for this is plain enough. The publisher of their journal in all probability does not know the subscriber, has never seen him, and does not know his financial standing. In the country newspaper office, enters the human element, and the editor usually knows every subscriber, even if they run up to more than a thousand, as does the Record. They have either lived in the community for some time or they would not be interested in the paper, or they have moved away and are interested in the old home town. And so the editor knows them and he trusts them to pay their way as they go along. Some do not, and get a year or two behind, wondering no doubt, why the editor does not cut them off the mailing list.

As a matter of fact, subscribers should be aware of the ruling of the Canadian courts which provides that any person who takes the paper regularly from the post office, whether addressed in his name or another's, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. The ruling continues to tell us that if a person who is behind with his subscription orders his paper discontinued, that delinquent subscriber must pay up his arrears before the paper be discontinued. The publisher may continue to send it until payment is made in full and then collect the whole amount of arrears and the extra time the paper is sent, whether the paper is taken or not. This ruling has been made because some subscribers have made it a habit of letting their subscription run on after the first year has run out and then after getting the paper for a year without payment would drop off the subscribers' list and the publisher would never get the money. The best way, however, to all concerned is to try and pay your subscription at the same time each year, and see that it is paid in advance.

Depression Hits Babe Ruth Salary Cut to $75,000

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 16.—To the accompaniment of sound effects in a garden setting of tropical beauty, the great man of baseball, George Herman (Babe) Ruth, magnanimously accepted a $5,000 salary cut to-day and signed a one-year contract for $75,000.

For the sixth time in the 13 years he has been with the New York Yankees, the Babe put his signature to a document that keeps him in a class by himself among ball players. Colonel Jacob Ruppert, the Yankee owner, won his point about signing Ruth for only one season but went halfway to reach a compromise on the figure.

The club's original offer was for $70,000 for 1932 only. The Babe had rejected this and countered with a demand for the same salary he has been getting for two years, $80,000, unless the Yankees would give him a two-year contract.

Both declared they were thoroughly satisfied with the agreement, which cuts Ruth's salary for the first time since he became a Yankee in 1920. His first salary with the clubs, $20,000, was quadrupled within 11 years.

"Well, boys, I am glad this is all over," remarked the Babe, doing his very best to bear up under the reaction of his long vigil as a holdout. "I am pleased with the terms. I think the cut is fair enough in times like these, even though I had a great year in 1931. The Yankees have always treated me very fair and I always give them my best. The pennant race ought to be a breeze for us this season."

"Babe, I wish you success for this year, and for many years to come," the Colonel remarked. "I hope and believe that with you and the young talent we have on the club, the Yankees will win the pennant."

SELLS HER HUSBAND FOR SMALL SUM

Russian Wife Loses Out in Husband Bargaining

LET ANYONE who says that revolution has not brought new freedom to the women of Russia consider this story of a wife who sold her husband, and cheap, too, for just 100 rubles, which have the purchasing power of about five American dollars.

It is the authentic story of a happening in the textile manufacturing town of Podolsk, twenty-five miles from Moscow, and it was broadcast by a local radio station, presumably as a lesson to other wives.

The couple in question worked in a textile factory, were in the middle thirties and had three small children of school age.

To the wife came a less comely friend, who was a teacher, and said: "I want to get married, but I have no chance of meeting men as you factory workers have. Can you help me?"

Finally she offered to pay 100 rubles if the other could secure for her a "kind-hearted man with domestic taste." The wife thought it over and decided that her Ivan would do—she could guarantee him, she felt; her friend had never met him, and the wife needed 100 rubles.

She arranged a meeting between her husband and the friend without telling the latter who the former was, and later fixed it so that her husband could divorce her, marry the other woman, live with her a fortnight or so, then divorce her and remarry.

The divorce and second marriage went off smoothly and she got the 100 rubles. But a fortnight and then a month passed, and Ivan stayed put. The former wife approached him in the factory, but he replied:

"She is a better cook than you, and I am satisfied. Anyway, you took all of the 100 rubles for yourself.'

She went to the new home and made a "big scandal," as the Russians call it, but to no avail. Then she appealed to court. The tribunal decided that "the woman acted from shameful, money-grabbing motives reminiscent of the bad old days now happily past in the world's first proletarian republic. Under Soviet power, men and women no longer are cattle to be bartered for lucre."

The new marriage was therefore held valid and the court dismissed the former wife's plea for alimony on the ground that she herself was earning an adequate wage.

Enjoying Himself

A mother sent her small boy to the country and after a week of anxiety received this letter: "I got here all right, but I forgot to write before. A feller and I went out in a boat and the boat tipped over and a man got me out. I was so full of water that I didnt know anything for a long time. The other boy has to be buried after they find him. A horse kicked me over and I've got to have some money for fixin' my head. We are going to set a barn on fire to-night, and I should smile if we do not have some bully fun. I am going to bring home a tame woodchuck if I can get him in my trunk!"

Son: "You can take your finger off that leak now, father."

Father: "Thank goodness! Is the plumber here at last?"

Son: "No, the house is on fire."

HITCHIN' UP FOR THE WIDDER MASON

AS HE SETTLED himself upon the long seat near Caleb Peaslee's back door, Mr. Obed Gunney groaned wearily.

"What's ailin' you now?" Caleb asked him. Obed stretched his arms painfully once or twice and grinned feebly.

"I ben hitchin' up a hoss for the Widder Mason," he confessed, "and I feel kind of wore out."

Mr. Peaslee's surprise was patent in every feature. "Hitchin' up a hoss!" he repeated. "That ought not to tucker a man out same's you be."

Obed cross his legs with a visible effort and began his explanation. "Mebbe four hours ago—right after dinner 'twas—I sot out to go down to the village and get two-three things I was needin' at the store—some harness soap, and some lamp wicks, and such. When I got to the Widder Mason's place, she was out by the fence, peering up and down the road. When she ketched sight of me her face lit up wonderful.

"'Oh, Mr. Gunney,' she squeals, 'I'm so thankful you come along jest when you did. I was jest wantin' some man to hitch the hoss up fer me; 'twon't take you a minute, hardly.'

"Well," Obed submitted, "what could a man do but say he'd be glad to do anything he could? 'T any rate, that was what I told her.

"'Oh,' she says, 'will you? Ain't you the helpin'est man! Well, seein' you're so good, mebbe I'll ask you to shift over that pile of lumber. I had it hauled from the mill, and they piled it right where I don't want it,' she says.

"Some of them timbers," Obed commented grimly, "was six-by-eight-inch stuff and green spruce at that. 'Twa'n't no one-man job shiftin' 'em round, but I'd gin my word, and it took me the better part of an hour to git it done.

"The widder'd been watchin' me all the time, and jest b'fore I took holt of the last sticks she disappeared into the shed, and when she come out she had a spade and pickaxe in her hands.

"'Of course,' s'she, 'what I really wanted you to do was harness the hoss fer me, but long's we're standin' here talkin' you might jest as well be busy. And I've ben wantin' a couple of post holes dug there for I d'know how long,' she says, and with that she shoved them tools into my hands and sot me to diggin'—and in that ledgy back yard of hern, too!

"The long and short of it is, Kellup," Obed said gloomily, "that woman kep' me there four mortal hours pilin' over lumbers and diggin' post holes and settin' in the posts and tackin' on a few shingles on the shed and pokin' down a horents' nest out of the gable of he house,—I got stung twice doin' that,—and it was all done under the colour that we was jest standin' there talkin'!

"Fin'ly, when I'd done more than a reg'lar day's work and my back was achin' and my left eye'd swelled up so's't I could scurcely see out of it, she let on that she'd have the hoss harnessed and go down to the store.

"I threw the harness onto the hoss with both hands, and I made a quick job of that, if I do say so myself. I didn't c al'late to give her time to think up any more work, and when I give her the reins and helped her in, she fairly beamed on me.

"'There,' she says, 'I've had a real nice, long talk with you, and 's far as delayin' you goes, I don't b'lieve that harnessin' took you over a minute. I'm glad it didn't, for I'll feel free to call on you again sometime, when I need some one to hitch up for me,' and with that she drove off, leavin' me there with my mouth gaped open and without so much as a 'thank you kindly' for the four hours' work I'd put in for her!

"But," concluded Mr. Gunney firmly, "the next time Eudora Mason gets a man to hitch up a hoss for her that man won't be Obed Gunney. There's too much to it."

An exhaustive investigation shows that motoring at a mile a minute is three to four times more expensive than at forty-five miles an hour.

LEGUMES

Results of Experiments by Some Dundas County Farmers

"ONTARIO is a land of legumes," says Prof. W. J. Squirrell, of the Ontario Agricultural College. In no part of the continent can legumes be more successfully grown than in this province. Have we made the greatest use of the opportunities provided for growing these crops?

The large amount of good hardy alfalfa seed available this year at a comparatively low price will mean a considerable increase in the already large alfalfa acreage and an increased quantity of alfalfa seed sown in mixtures. The addition of alfalfa to the other legumes and grasses in the hay and pasture mixtures will result in two very necessary things for the stockmen—a greater yield of hay or pasture per acre and a better quality of hay and pasture. General recommendations for those who will sow alfalfa for the first time this year follow:

1. Sow seed of the Ontario Variegated variety.
2. Sow 18 to 20 pounds of seed per acre when alfalfa is to be grown alone.
3. Sow 4 to 10 pounds of alfalfa seed in mixtures.
4. Sow seed on reasonably well drained land.
5. If grown on land for the first time have seed inoculated with the proper bacteria.
6. Clay loams and well drained heavy clay soils are well adapted for growing alfalfa. It is not possible to grow alfalfa successfully on particularly acid soils.
7. Sow seed on a well prepared seed bed. The smaller the seed sown the finer should be the seed bed.
8. Alfalfa seed can be successfully sown in early spring with a nurse crop of barley or oats or on winter wheat following a late snow fall in early spring. The melted snow will carry the seed into the ground and usually no after cultivation is necessary.
9. Alfalfa can be successfully sown on land which has been well cultivated up to about July 15th. If sown in July it should be remembered that soil at this time of year usually contains a minimum of moisture and germination will be helped if seeding follows a shower of rain.
10. Alfalfa should not be pastured or cut for hay the same year in which it is seeded. It should not be pastured late in the autumn or too early in the spring of any year.

The mixture that is held in high favour at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, is composed of 10 lbs. of red clover, 2 lbs. alsike, 6 lbs. alfalfa, 6 lbs. timothy, sown at the rate of 20 lbs. per acre with oats as a nurse crop. In 1931 this mixture yielded 4.14 tons of hay per acre.

Mr. Arthur Nash, of Morrisburg, has a method of untilizing alfalfa in a mixture which could be very profitably adapted by many farmers. Mr. Nash sows a mixture of 5 lbs. of alfalfa, 5 lbs. of red clover, 2 lbs. of alsike, and 6 lbs. of timothy per acre, with five pecks of spring wheat as a nurse crop. Two years ago from a nine acre field of this seeding, Mr. Nash cut a first cut of 30 tons and a second cut of well over 10 tons, making an average of about 4½ tons per acre. The hay was comprised largely of alfalfa, alsike, and some red clover. Very few spears of timothy were to be noticed. The second cut was practically all alfalfa.

On the type of land that does not lay dry, or have good drainage, the system followed by Mr. Malon Zeron, R. R. 1, Iroquois, is worthy of a trial. As early as the soil permits, Mr. Zeron sows one to one and a half bushels of oats, and 25 lbs. of sweet clover per acre. The whole crop is cut for feed while the oats are in the milk stage, or just before the bottom leaves drop off. The crop is easily cured at the time. Weather conditions are generally more favourable than when the sweet clover is cut for hay in its second year, and the clover is much finer and softer. From this mixture Mr. Zeron has cut well over 3½ tons per acre of choice feed. He believes that it is equal in feed value to alfalfa, a crop which readily winter kills on his flat soils. The second year the sweet clover is pastured.

It is wise if at all possible to sow scarified seed of sweet clovers, as this treatment generally does away with the sweet clover volunteering in crops which follow.

REVIEW OF THE WEEK IN THE ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

Debate on Speech from the Throne Completed—Amendments to Municipal Act Introduced—Authority Asked for Examination of Grand River Conditions—Mortgage Moratorium Bill Becomes Law.

IN THE FIRST DIVISION of the present session, the Henry Government was sustained by the overwhelming majority of 76-19 in adopting the Speech from the Throne. The division took place on the amendment of Premier Henry moved to the amendment of W. E. N. Sinclair, Opposition Leader, the Henry amendment pledging the House to adhere to Hydro principles of power at cost and expressing entire support for the efficiency and integrity of the Hydro Commissioners. Mr. Sinclair's amendment, calling for further investigation into the $125,000 payment of R. O. Sweezy to John Aird, Jr., on the Beauharnois contract and enquiry into seven specific Hydro power purchase contracts, was lost on the same majority.

Prior to the vote being taken, the three leaders, Premier Henry, Mr. Sinclair, and Harry Nixon, Progressive Leader, finished the debate on the Throne Speech which has been practically entirely devoted to argument on Hydro. Premier Henry personally answered the major criticism by the Opposition, particularly from Dr. G. A. McQuibban, Liberal Whip, showing that Dr. McQuibban's statements were based on inaccurate information in discussing power purchases, sales of off-peak power, and other Hydro contracts.

"Absolutely false," charged Premier Henry of the McQuibban statements on Hydro. "When Dr. McQuibban states that there is sufficient capacity at Niagara and that not one horsepower purchased under the contracts made by Hydro with Quebec producers was necessary that statement is absolutely false."

Premier Henry flayed the Liberal Hydro critic from all angles, quoting statistical data, and analytical reports showing the opposition criticism being far from the mark. This statement, said Premier Henry, was read in the interests of accuracy, the facts secured from the Hydro Commission. Dr. McQuibban had said that the peak demand on the Niagara system was 867,963 h.p., and that the three plants at Niagara had a joint capacity of 920,000 h.p., consequently there was no need to enter into outside contracts.

"If this were true, and it is not," said Premier Henry, "it would put Hydro under a very serious indictment. Dr. McQuibban has entirely overlooked the power demand on the Gatineau supply, 219,000 h.p., and his failure to add that in put him hopelessly out of court for instead of the peak demand being 867,963 h.p., it actually was 1,086,963 h.p."

Instead of the capacity at the three Niagara plants being 920,000 h.p., he went on, as stated by the Liberal critic, the acutal capacity was 873,890 h.p. to meet a peak demand of 1,086,963 h.p.

If Ontario was permitted to use all the water she is permitted to divert under treaty, it would be far short of the volume required to keep the Niagara plants working to capacity all the time, he observed. To keep the plants continuously at capacity would require a steady diversion of 42,000 cubic feet per second but under the treaty only 24,500 cubic feet per second was possible.

"I venture to say that if statements such as the Hon. member (McQuibban) has made on the floor of the House were made outside of it respecting any financial or commercial enterprise," declared Premier Henry, "he would hardly escape court proceedings."

"I call upon the members of the House to reassert their approval, their confidence in Hydro," said Premier Henry. "I ask the members to seriously consider what it means to oppose the amendment to the amendment. It will not only mean the endorsement of this House, but of the vast majority of people in the province."

UNDER the Municipal Act, several changes were introduced by Hon. Wm. Finlayson, Minister of Lands and Forests, chief among them being on temporary borrowings by municipalities ;reduction in legal limit of per diem fees of elected representatives of townships, villages, counties, and cities of under 100,000, and provisions that the bonds of municipal treasurers be from recognized guarantee companies. These amendments follow the select committee of the House, appointed last session, to deal with revision of the Municipal Act, presided over by Hon. Mr. Finlayson. Another amendment provides the new right of farmers' daughters shall not mean that they will be counted in calculating the population of counties for the purpose of deciding the representation of county councils.

AUTHORITY was also asked in a bill introduced by Hon. Mr. Finlayson to establish a commission to be known as the Grand River Conservation Commission for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the carrying out of works whereby the Grand River and its tributaries may be controlled in time of flood and conserved to more effectively afford a sufficient supply of water for various municipal purposes. This move is due to the financial losses that have accrued to residents and municipalities of the Grand River basin, caused through frequent floods and the inadequate supply of water during drought seasons. Any municipality affected by the situation may appoint a commissioner, and five or more may petition for incorporation to undertake the investigation deemed necessary by the Government. This area covers some 2,600 square miles affecting the counties of Grey, Dufferin, Wellington, Perth, Waterloo, Halton, Oxford, Brant, Wentworth, Norfolk, and Haldimand.

ROYAL ASSENT was given hurriedly to the measure of Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney-General, providing for a modified moratorium on mortgages. Sir William Mulock, administrator and Chief Justice of the province, visited the Legislative chamber and gave the legislation formal endorsation, thus placing it on the statutes as law. Third reading was given a few minutes prior to the Royal assent.

HON. WM. FINLAYSON, Minister of Lands and Forests, speaking to his bill appropriating $5,000,000 for Northern Development, indicated the government will institute a very much reduced programme for this work during the present year. Operations on the trans-Canada highway construction were reviewed, Hon. Mr. Finlayson expressing the view that it was a matter of great satisfaction that in the employment of some 40,000 men during five to six months work in these camps, not one major crime arose, and but one major accident occurred. The major item of work this year is a new bridge on the highway at Englehart. Work on the trans-Canada highway is not likely to be completed for many years, he observed. Since April 1912 when money votes were first made to Northern Ontario, the Government has spent $53,509,953, said Hon Mr. Finlayson, while ninety-five per cent of this total was spent on roads and bridges. Other items expended last year were: purchase of cattle, $12,901; seed and grain $10,434; settlers' loan accounts, $131,355, and for creameries and grain elevators $1,100.

ESTABLISHMENT of a barbers' governing board is contained in a bill introduced by Fred G. McBrien, Conservative, Brocton-Toronto, similar to the medical and dental professions. Control is sought as a health measure to compel sanitary conditions and to bar physically unfit barbers from serving the public.

HON. LEOPOLD MACAULAY, Minister of Highways ,introduced amendments to the Highway Traffic Act compelling motor cars be equipped with lights which on roads outside towns and cities will illuminate the roadway for a distance of 200 feet. Provision is also made to prevent trucks travelling on the highways at a distance closer to each other than 100 feet, and also cutting the lengths of truck-trains from 65 to 50 feet.

GEORGE BARR, director of dairying, Ontario Department of Agriculture, informed a sub-committee on dairying that the farmers of Ontario had lost $551,520 last year through producing second grade cream in butter manufacture. Last year there were 76,604,813 pounds of butter produced, 13,000,000 pounds less than in 1930. The loss was 3 cents a pound less for second grade cream. Mr. Barr suggested that some means be taken to urge the farmer to produce first grade cream, urging that he be compelled to keep clean and proper farms and dairy implements.

THE SPRING

By Jalmari Jappinen

LONGER DAYS, longer days,
Streams of rays and brighter space,
Higher track and hotter race
For Sun car in the Winter chase.
There the sky horse snorts and neighs,
He knows the wheel but never sleighs,
The murky nights and frosty haze,
The ruthless, roughshod visit pays,
Asunder soon its icy case
And freed all little ponds and bays.

Longer days, longer days,
Streams of rays and brighter face,
Upright head and lighter pace,
Nothing bonds and nothing weighs,
As if a child a grown-up plays
Like in his youthful March-and-Mays.
The life is just a mirthful maze
And knows all hidden, thrilling ways,
And mounts of Easter eggs she lays,
Lading tables with cups and trays.
The world is still the happiest place
You read in everybody's gaze.

Where steady smile and laughter stays,
No difference in ayes and nays,
For absent are all fights and frays
And life runs neat and white as lace.
A man you meet he meekly says
His halloos, so longs, even heys.

Merrickville Churches Given Big Fuel Supply

The Anglican and United churches, at Merrickville, through the voluntary labour of the men of the parishes, have provided sufficient wood to heat the church buildings for the next year. On Thursday the Anglicans finished drawing 50 cords, while Saturday the United Church completed their self-imposed task of piling on the premises their 120 cords, sufficient for two years, and this will mean a saving to the church budget of more than $500. The ladies of the churches provided dinners for the men during the days they worked. The burning of wood instead of coal will be a new venture for both churches.

IT'S A REAL OFFICE to work in," Ruth declared enthusiastically. "Light and airy and cool and not undermanned—or undergirled—like Langmaid's. When you walk through the front office it looks as if there were a girl for every ledger. And, although Mr. Ranelagh isn't exactly friendly, he's quiet and dignified; you couldn't imagine his ever hounding a secretary or shouting at her. And then there is my new title. Until now I've never been anything except some one's extra-special stenographer. It's a wonderful opportunity!"

"Summary for the defence," said her brother Eliot, grinning cynically. "But?"

Ruth laughed. "You'd get it out of me sometime," she admitted. "And maybe you can help me see how ridiculously mistaken I am. Eliot, it's the girls in the office,—in the back office, I mean, where I am. There are three of them, and I'm sorry to say I don't know how I'm going to manage!"

Eliot, a rangy, substantial-looking chap with a keen, kind face, put down his book and stared frankly at his sister. She nodded understandingly.

"I know," she said, answering his look, "it sounds perfectly insane, and it's taken me a whole week to get thoroughly discouraged about it. Even now I'm open to encouragement."

"Well?" He eyed her quizzically. "Out with it. If I can't help you, we'll weep together. What's the matter with the girls? Jealous?"

"Eliot Markham! What a stupid idea!" Ruth opened her brown eyes indignantly. "You can't be helpful if you're so foolishly masculine in all your conclusions. Can't a girl ever dislike or even just not like another girl without having 'jealous' hurled at her?"

"Well, it's usually that," rejoined her brother in a matter-of-fact tone. "Anyway, it's a good first bet. One girl does a better job than the rest; boss naturally likes his work done that way; learns the name of girl who does it; calls for girl; and there you are! Neat little case of office jealousy. But if it isn't that, what is it? All problems are one to me."

"That's very ingenious," his sister said ironically. She tossed back a lock of blonde hair as fine and yellow as corn silk. Indeed in her straight green linen frock she reminded you pleasantly of a blade of corn. "If I knew what was the matter I'd know how to go about remedying it myself. You see, there are three of them in the office. Miss Yeager has charge of the filing. She's about thirty, I should think, and she lives with her married sister, who has two or three babies. The first time Miss Yeager was short with me I thought it might be because she was tired and worried about things at home, but that same morning I saw her laughing and talking with the other two. Then there's Mary Delehanty, and she's a dear. I can see she is from a distance, because that's the only place I have to see her from. She makes me keep it too. You know she's Irish-haughty—bubbling and delicious to her friends and don't-come-near-me to the rest.

"And then there's Miss Carter, the cashier, the most perfectly groomed thing! Eliot, you'd like her! She's—she's a—a lady.' 'Ruth coloured delicately. "I don't mean that the others aren't; but, you know, buddy, she's different. For instance, she's awfully tall and thin, and, instead of trying to disguise it with fussy clothes, she comes right out and accentuates it by wearing long, lean tailored things that make her look like a greyhound. I don't think she particularly dislikes me; she seems even to have a sort of lazy liking for me—"

"Recognizes a sister artist in clothes," suggested Eliot whimiscally.

"Oh, fiddlesticks!" Ruth exclaimed impatiently. "I wear what I feel at home in."

"Well, you always manage to feel at home in something mighty becoming, I observe," said Eliot with unabated good cheer. "However, to our lambkins. If the crown princess likes you why don't you strike up a friendship with her and let the other two frosts jump off the bridge or organize a croquet club?"

"Eliot!"

"Ma'am?"

"When you were in the army,' 'his sister said slowly, "would it have been any fun for you if all the other fellows hadn't had any use for you?" There was a quiver in her gay young voice.

"I'm sorry, sis," The young fellow sprang to his feet, instantly serious. "I hadn't realized that you were really troubled. As to what you ask—no, I'd have hated it. And the office is your barracks, isn't it? Please don't stop now. Go on, and I'll really try to help."

"You're a dear," his sister said impetuously. "Oh, buddy, I'm glad you are back! No, dear, I won't tell you again how much I missed you, but—Well, as I said, I think Miss Carter would be friendly, but she doesn't want to make any effort to go against the other two. It's easier for her to work with them if she dislikes me, or seems to do so, as heartily as they do. And their dislike is hearty enough," finished Ruth forlornly. "I can tell it by how terribly polite they are."

"It's a mighty unpleasant situation," said Eliot, "and the only advice I can give you is just what I'd give another chap. It may not be any use; take it for what it's worth. Of course, sis, their attitude could be easily explained if you were the sort of girl—" he paused. "Well, the sort of girl that you aren't," he finished, smiling. "I mean, if you felt pretty much set up about your new job, or something of that sort. But I acquit you of any uppishness; and I don't believe they can even imagine they see any of that sort of thing in you. It's probably some kind of misunderstanding, and you'll have to keep a grip on yourself and let it work out. There wouldn't be any use in talking this way, Ruth, except that you're big enough, and gentle enough, too, to manage it. Buck up and shut your eyes to everything disagreeable. Just don't see it. That part of it is not so terribly hard, I guess. We are not likely to concentrate on things that hurt us. But—and this is the part that counts—at the same time keep your eyes wide open for the least chance to show you're perfectly friendly yourself. Selah!" He shook himself like a huge Newfoundland. "Have you got any lemonade?"

"Not yet," Ruth accepted the change of subject gayly. "Come on, buddy, put on a record, and I will go make some.

* * * *

"Well, how's the front line?" inquired Eliot the next evening. "Still holding?" His keen glance took in the little weary droop of Ruth's mouth.

She smiled. "Yes, it's holding all right, but, Eliot, it's no use pretending that they're just cold and slow about getting acquainted. They've really got something against me, something definite. Mary Delehanty is fiery with it, and she feels she ought to treat me this way. I know she does."

"Well, I guess you can get along," said Eliot. In his anger he had forgotten his sober good advice of the night before. The blood ran hotly in his cheeks. "No, Markham," he declared proudly, "is dependent on the good will of office girls.

Ruth put up her hand. "You're wrong, buddy. Markham or not, I do want the good will of office girls when they're my fellow workers, and I'm going to have it. I've—I've found a way that I think will work. It's a real Markham way too." She laughed. "I'm sure I can do it if my nasty pride doesn't come up and choke me while I'm trying. I expect to get an awful lot of practice in swallowing."

"How are you going about the contest?" inquired Eliot.

Ruth flushed. "Don't ask me," she begged. "It would sound terribly silly to you,—it would to anyone,—but it's the only way I can think of. I will let you know how it works."

By common consent they dropped the matter. If Eliot was a little more considerate of his sister than usual and saw that she went to the Canoe Club where she met her intimates a little oftener, and that she had the magazines she especially wanted and heard an occasional concert, only Ruth knew it, and she loved him devotedly for it. It was a pretty hard pull at the office, but the work was easy. Mr. Ranelagh, as he relaxed under the efficiency and accuracy of his new secretary, became increasingly friendly and communicative. "Yes," he remarked explosively, "Miss Markham, it's a relief to have some one to take dictation who isn't—" He stopped suddenly. "Who's competent," he finished. "Er—I met your brother at the Calumet last night. Splendid chap!"

"Yes ,sir," Ruth agreed proudly.

Yes, so far as Mr. Ranelagh was concerned, everything was pleasant and friendly, but to be in the presence of her three women associates was getting to be nothing less than torture. Perhaps it would have been more bearable if Ruth had not struggled so desperately to overcome their mysterious antagonism. It was the very mystery of the thing that put the last weight on her spirit. Ruth could have dealt with a foe she could see; this invisible enemy kept her groping pitifully in the shadows. It would have been easier to resign, but she could not bring herself to do that. It was not so much giving up her position, for by now the desirability of the place over which she had rejoiced had shrunk to nothing beside the chagrin she had experienced in it. But she could not quit, for she did not know how.

"I've done nothing wrong," she told herself wearily. "I'm doing my work honestly, and I like all three of them. Surely it can't keep on."

But it did keep on, until Ruth, who had always sprung out of her bed rejoicing in a new day, wished guiltily that Sunday could stretch just a little farther into the week. Then one icy March noon she fell and broke her arm.

"It was just in front of a violet shop," she told her brother a little wildly after her arm had been set and she was coming out of the ether. "So I can't help it if I did fall down. I bought the violets and told the man to take them to Miss Carter's mother. She's getting over the flu and—"

"Miss Carter's mother!" exclaimed Eliot, staring. "You're still under the ether, sis. Come on out. That's better. Who's Miss Carter? Oh, the crown princess." His face lighted. "So you're on violet terms with her, are you? How are the rest of 'em?"

To his dismay she began to cry weakly. "Don't mind me, buddy," she begged. "They're just—just ether tears, I guess. I'm so tired. I don't suppose Mr. Ranelagh will hold my place for me, and I don't believe I care. I guess I'm glad of it. I—I guess I'm glad I broke my arm if it will take me away from the office. I'm tired of trying to make them like me. And, O buddy, I did believe in the scheme I told you about; but I've tried it almost a month now, and I don't believe I've done anything except amuse them, and I don't see how I can go back and face it again."

Eliot stood up and walked over to the window. One reason was that he wanted to see what time it was by the big church clock on the corner; the other was because he did not want his sister to observe the expression on his face. If he had been a cannibal at that moment and had called for his favourite dish Mr. Ranelagh's back office would have been instantly depopulated! Crown princess, Miss Yeager, and the Delehanty girl—he could have disposed of them all in one furious gulp!

He stalked over to his sister's couch. "You don't have to go back." His voice was low and controlled. "Don't you worry, sis; there are dozens of places — Oh, there's the telephone. I'll be back in a minute."

Ruth closed her eyes wearily. Against the low murmur of Eliot's voice in the next room she drifted into a half sleep. Her brother's excited "Well, by George!" brought her back to consciousness.

He was at her side. "It was Ranelagh, sis. He says by the tumult down there when they got the news of your accident anyone would think the chief was dead, and he gathered from the pressure brought to bear on him that they wanted you pensioned or knighted, or the flag put at half mast or something—he couldn't tell what. He said Miss Carter and Miss Yeager and the Delahanty girl had all been to him separately and offered to do your work outside in their own time. And he said to tell you—get this, sis—it came out in their talk. Well, the Delehanty girl cried and said she didn't care if you had taken the bread right out of Etta Morrison's mouth, you were a wonderful girl, and everyone loved you, and they'd treated you shamefully, and so on. Then the other two waked up and began to weep too, just to be sociable. Ranelagh asked them what they meant by that talk about the Morrison girl, and it came out that because they had seen you driving with godmother, who they knew was the wife of Ranelagh's chief, they thought you had the Morrison girl thrown out so as to make a place for yourself. Then Ranelagh opened up and told them what he hadn't cared to before—that she wasn't a decent secretary, because she couldn't keep the office affairs to herself, and they'd lost a big contract through her talk; if she'd been halfway truthful she'd have told them when she went that he said he could not honestly give her a recommendation. Ranelagh was disgusted, but he said the Delehanty girl was a good hater, and Etta Morrison was a particular friend of hers. He'd like to know, and is coming to find out as soon as you are able to talk, what you did to make them all crazy about you even before they knew you didn't steal the Morrison girl's job. And I'm kind of curious myself, sis. What was it?"

Ruth, pale but radiant, did not answer him at once.

"It was a misunderstanding," she murmured thankfully at last. "Oh, I always knew it must be."

"Yes," agreed Eliot impatiently; "but what did you do about it?"

"Oh," Ruth explained reluctantly, "don't you know, Eliot? I thought I told you I got the idea from a book. You see, I couldn't get near them; they wouldn't let me; so I tried to be nice to the people they loved."

At the expression of bewilderment on her brother's face she laughed and said, "I know; it does sound funny. But I did it. I made Miss Yeager take home a bunny I knit for the youngest baby, and I made the little boy an animal scrapbook. She had to take them you see, because they were for babies, and you don't draw babies into quarrels. And Miss Carter couldn't refuse the violets for her mother. Oh, it was a game, buddy, and yet it was awful! Thinking up something for Mary Delehanty was the hardest; I had a terrible time. She hasn't any baby nieces or aged mothers ,and she's terribly self-reliant. Then I found she had a brother she thinks a good deal of who wanted to get back on a newspaper. He's a service man. I heard her tell Miss Carter about him, and I got Billy Knight to take him on the Herald They like him a lot, Billy says," Ruth added a little defiantly.

"Billy brought him to the Calumet dance, and I danced with him. He's wonderful, buddy," she declared stoutly. "He's clean and fine and honest like you. He asked me if he could come to call on me. You see, Mary hadn't told him anything, and so I couldn't let him, could I? But now I can. I'll have Mary and him both to dinner."

"Well, I'll—" For once Eliot's words trailed off into nothingness.

"It's only verse," Ruth said softly. "And of course the author didn't mean it the literal way I took it. He meant it more poetically. And the verse says 'he' instead of 'they.' But this is the way I used to keep saying it to myself:

"They drew a circle that shut me out
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
But love and I had the wit to win;
We drew a circle that took them in.

"And I thought the only kind of circle big enough to take them in would have to be drawn round some of the people they loved—their families, you know."

"H'm." Eliot bent down and kissed his sister tenderly. "Better get a little sleep, Ruth. Ranelagh says the three furies—I mean graces—want to come up and be admitted to your presence to-morrow."

Out in the living room he picked up a volume, read a page or two and threw it down. "Delehanty, eh?" he said to himself thoughfully. "And Billy Knight is social sponsor for him. Well, Billy knows. He'd be pretty sure of a chap before he'd present him to Ruth. Well, who knows? If we have them up here maybe I'll appreciate the charms of the redoubtable Mary." He grinned. "She seems to have a stout young capacity for being loyal to her friends if it does take her a long time to recognize them. O Ruth," he called cheerfully, "asleep? Well, say. listen. About that dragnet idea of yours—circles. you know. It's queer all right, but I'm not sure it's so unpoetical."

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By Etta Bitta Pye

Quick Chocolate Cake

2 eggs
1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons butter, melted
2 ounces chocolate
½ cup milk
1-3 cups flour
¼ teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons baking powder

Beat the eggs and beat sugar into them, dissolving as much as possible. Melt chocolate and butter together over hot water and add to first mixture. Add alternately small portions of milk and the dry ingredients mixed and sifted.

Turn into greased pan and bake in a moderate oven, 375 deg. F. Or the mixture may be baked as little chocolate cup cakes, in paper cases or gem gems, and topped with a little frosting.

Feather-Light Ginger Cake

2-3 cup shortening
2-3 cup boiling water
2-3 cup molasses
2-3 cup brown sugar
2 eggs
3 cups flour
2-3 teaspoon salt
2-3teaspoon soda
2-3 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon cinnamon

Put shortening into mixing bowl (an economical shortening may easily be used in whole or part, in a spiced mixture of this type) and pour boiling water over it. Stir in the molasses and sugar and beat well.

Add the well beaten egg yolks, the dry ingredients which have been mixed and sifted three times. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites (though when time presses, the yolks and white smay be beaten together and added to the first mixture).

Turn into two greased shallow oblong pans or a single large one and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees Farenheit.

WED LESS THAN A WEEK BRIDE AND GROOM DEAD

ST. CATHARINES. — Less than one week divided the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Sibley, and their deaths. Sibley, a former member of the Port Dalhousie Board of Education, was married last Saturday, March 5th. Within a few days both were stricken with pneumonia. On Tuedsay, March 8th, his bride died. On Saturday, Sibley's name was added to hers on the death register.

At a recent political meeting it was quite obvious that some hecklers were present. The candidate commenced his speech with: "I am here —"

"So am I!" shouted a voice.

"Quite so," retorted the candidate, "but you are not all there."

Geordie, the simple lad of the village, was eagerly watching the local football team, with his mouth wide open, and some fellows, seeing this, thought they would have some fun at his expense. So forward one went and said: "Geordie, yer mouth's open."

"Aye," said Geordie, "I opened it masel'."

Chas. Lindberg's Baby Proved to be in 'Peg

WINNIPEG.—There is a Lindberg baby in Winnipeg, but it is not Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr. Nonetheless, his father is a flier.

Monday night a man was nursing a baby in a parked car while his wife was shopping. A policeman passed and said, "You'd better be careful or they'll run you in for having Lindbergh's baby."

"This is Lindberg's baby," replied the proud father.

"Maybe it is," said the policeman, as he laughed and continued his beat.

The man in the car was Charles Lindberg of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

IN CANADA AND THE STATES

Los Angeles Examiner

HOW differently and how much better they order such things in Canada.

Look on this picture and on this:

In the last two years two thousand banks have failed in the United States and not one in Canada.

The last bank failure in Canada was back in 1923 and the responsible official is still in jail.

Bank presidents and directors across the border may know no more about finance than those in the United States, but they do know the law and they respect it.

An eminent American jurist, in a book on our criminal law, tells the story of two American racing men having a heated argument at a race course near Windsor. When one let fly the short and ugly word the other pulled his gun and would have fired but for the quick thinking of his companion:

"For God's sake, Jim, don't shoot—you're in Canada."

And back the gun went quickly into his hip pocket.

Canadian bank officials when tempted to go wrong probably reason in the same way.

They don't loot for the same reason that the racing man didn't shoot. They are in Canada.

When a Canadian banker goes to jail he stays there, and, perhaps, the vigorous protection of the public in Canada is the reason for that country's freedom from swindlers of the Beesemyer, Lewis, Morrissey and Fish Brothers type.

In America they are sometimes convicted and sometimes sent to prison, but they seldom spend long terms in the penitentiary.
