

Marketing hydroponic lettuce

Turning over a new leaf to reach Eastern Ontario market

by Joe Meagher
Press Staff Reporter

OSGOODE — A small band of organic technologists is bringing its high-tech product to the forefront of the Eastern Ontario vegetable market.

With a rare combination of engineering know-how and marketing savvy, Greens Alive International Inc. has dug out a niche in the Ottawa Valley lettuce market.

With just a handful of full-time employees and a dozen part-time harvesters, the budding company is supplying hydroponic lettuce to 13 food stores, including stores in Osgoode, Vernon, Kemptville and Manotick, and four exclusive Ottawa restaurants, including the Chateau Laurier.

The company will produce about 460,000 heads of lettuce this year, less than one per cent of the Canadian market, and is expecting sales to top $500,000. Next year it plans to build a second greenhouse and in 1990 a third.

But Greens Alive isn't some fly-by-night glitzy show with no substance.

The greenhouse south of Osgoode is the result of 17 years research. For four years they tested their product in climate extremes ranging from Florida to Northern British Columbia.

Greens Alive has registered four patents and has two more pending. They turned down CBC television from doing a feature story fearing trade secrets would be shown on TV screens across Canada.

At the heart of the operation, which has focused on engineering breakthroughs rather than new nutritional formulas, is the husband and wife team of Dr. Helmut and B.J. Julinot.

Dr. Julinot, president of Greens Alive, has a special knack for developing simple, yet effective ways of overcoming traditional hydroponic problems. One invention, self-indexing feed tubes which has a patent pending, continually feeds nutrients to plants while they roll down the greenhouse conveyor belt on the eight-week road to maturity.

He has blended mechanical engineering with a belief in the "underlying spirituality of all living things."

Born in Salzburg, Austria, home of Mozart, Julinot will only play soothing classical music in the greenhouse. Harsh rock n' roll would disturb the plants.

He also believes that his employees must be at peace with themselves. He cites research, his own, that indicates the germination rate can vary from 10 per cent to 100 per cent depending on whether the person planting the seeds was in a turbulent or serene mood.

Julinot himself reflects that philosophy. He has stayed away from planting seeds at his operation because he is upset with a government loan which has not come through.

However, he shies away from being labelled biodynamic — a way of life based on how the earthly and cosmic environment affects plants.

"They go a little too far for my beliefs," said Julinot, who frequently quotes the Bible.

But the blooming business, which started

Seeing green

Danny Rivett, greenhouse manager and Kemptville College graduate, takes the seedlings and places them in holes in the conveyor trough. The seedlings spend about four weeks under lights before they start their journey on the conveyor.

production in February, has a jump on the competition with a unique marketing plan designed to cater to two different markets.

The company designed living lettuce for restaurants and caterers and then came up with salad in a bag for retail outlets. Both come in attractive packaging under the trademark "Salade Minute."

The salad in a bag is a combination containing one-quarter a head of four salad greens: Boston lettuce, leaf lettuce, iceberg lettuce and spinach, although Greens Alive has had some difficulty producing spinach without the leaf edges browning. They will soon be adding four sprigs of watercress.

Consumers are forking over $1.95 for "Salade Minute" but the premium price, twice that of a regular head of lettuce is justified, says Julinot.

The "Salade Minute" leaves are sealed in a tamper-proof bag within 60 seconds of harvest and are on the supermarket shelf within 24 hours. They have an estimated shelf life of one week.

And with the recent cholesterol scare and the quiet revolution of health conscious Canadians, the Greens Alive product has one more selling feature which traditional chemical farming can't claim.

The product is grown organically. Greens Alive uses no herbicides, pesticides, fungicides or preservatives — they don't even own any — and Julinot boasts the lettuce is cleaner than tap water.

The plants are fed through a liquid solution containing Epsom salts, chelated iron plus trace elements and calcium nitrate. A pH adjustment is usually made using phosphoric acid, the stuff found in soft drinks.

Tests at the Plant Analysis Laboratory at the University of Guelph show their greens have mineral levels 50 per cent to 400 per cent higher than the competition.

The hydroponic product has appeared to "upscale, smaller stores" and is squaring off with the competition.

According to Julinot, an American firm has been shipping "living lettuce" to Ottawa. But he says the Greens Alive product is twice as heavy at 250 grams and is one week fresher, for the same price.

"Living Lettuce" is Boston lettuce transplanted live from the greenhouse to the restaurant table. The root block is squirted with nutrients and the product will last in cold storage 10 days.

"Living Lettuce" was invented by Julinot in 1976.

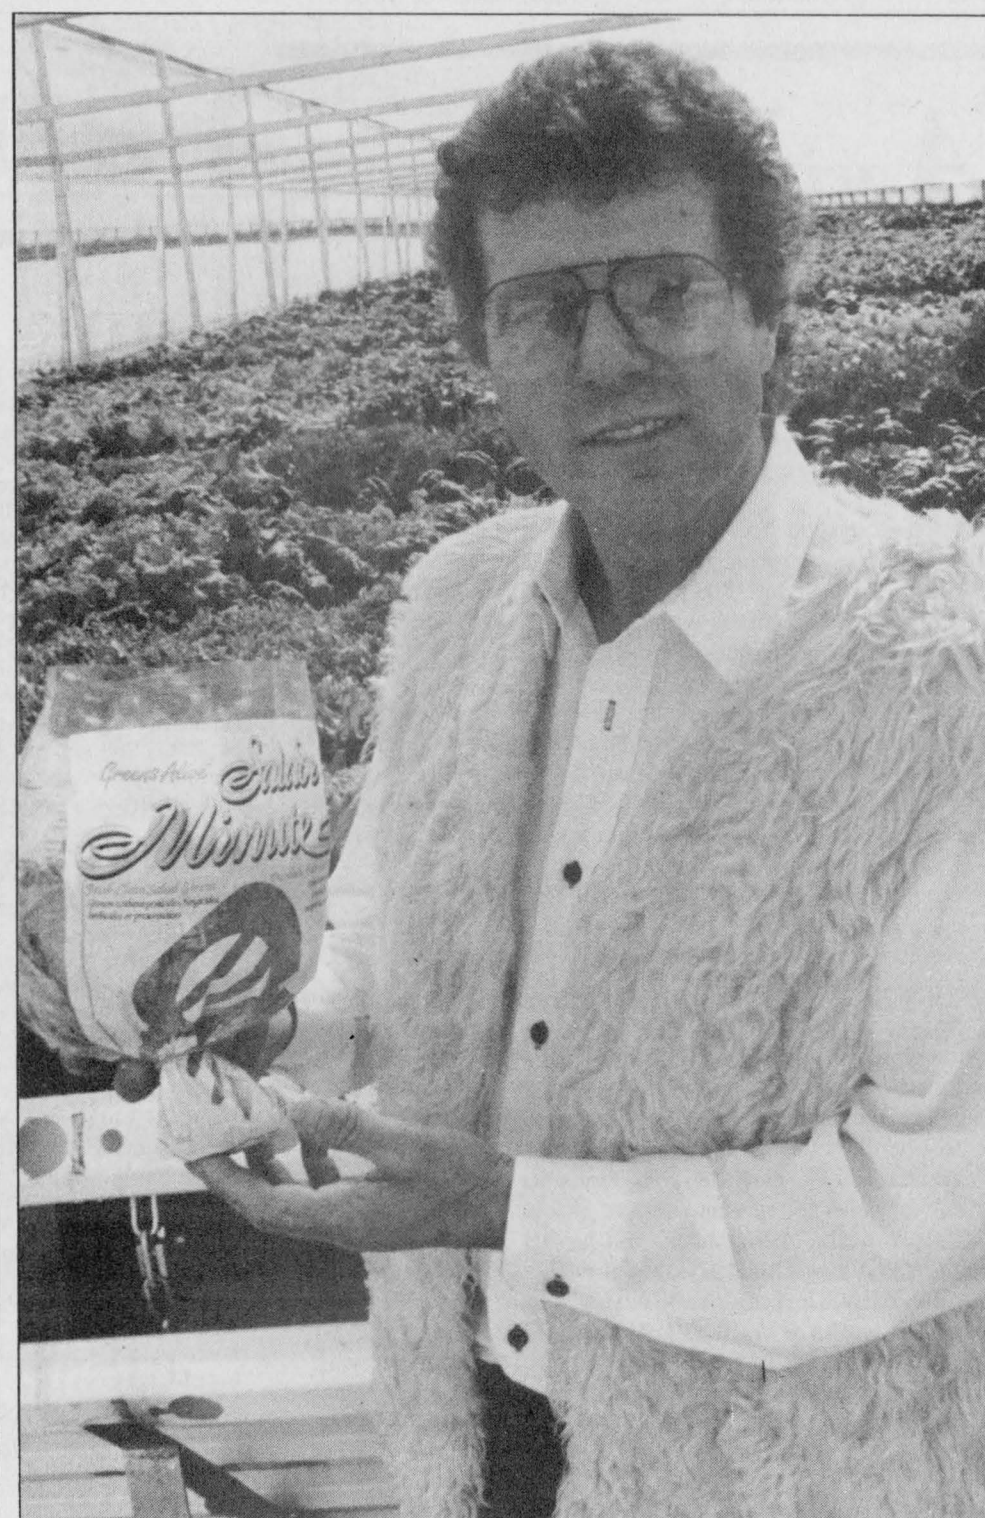

The product has proven so popular that Greens Alive was hesitant about media coverage because it can't keep up with demand.

Now, lettuce is rolling down the conveyor belt-like garden in half the greenhouse. By next week capacity should double to 7,000 heads per week when the second conveyor gets rolling.

Even then, the company might not be able to fill orders from new clients.

Greens Alive is also experimenting with broccoli, cauliflower, kohlrabi and herbs.

And it has a special order of French endive for the Chateau Laurier.

Helmut Julinot, president of Greens Alive, holds the living lettuce which he sells to Ottawa restaurants. Behind Julinot waves of lettuce are being fed liquid nutrients on a conveyor which carries them the length of the greenhouse. From seeding to harvest takes an average of eight weeks.

B.J. Julinot, right, helps sort the lettuce after harvest. One-quarter head of four different kinds of lettuce goes into a single bag of Salade Minute.

Hydroponics nothing new OSGOODE — Growing plants without soil, called hydroponics, is nothing new.

About 500 years before the birth of Christ, the Hanging Gardens of Babylon, one of the seven wonders of the world was actually a hydroponic garden.

They were a series of terraces filled with gravel and watered manually by slaves with river water.

At Greens Alive, it is done slightly differently.

At one end of the greenhouse, seeds are planted in a plug of peat moss, placed in a plastic container and within 24 hours the plant sprouts.

The plants are raised under lights and when they get large enough they are separated and four weeks after seeding are individually placed in holes in growing troughs.

The growing troughs move slowly by conveyor and spread apart giving the plants room to grow.

Four weeks later, they are harvested at the other end of the greenhouse.

While the plants were on the conveyor, they were continually being fed liquid nutrients.

The squat Greens Alive greenhouse is the size of a football field and is covered with the world's largest single sheet of polyethylene plastic.

Franchising: Greenhouse builder's dream to sell $330,000 kits

REIDS MILLS — All that stands in the way of Greens Alive International Inc. breaking into a $50 million franchising market is a $50,000 government loan.

Hoping to sell hydroponic greenhouses, the company has waited eight months for the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation to approve the loan.

And according to Helmut Julinot, president of Greens Alive, the EODC originally approved a $100,000 three-year interest free loan "in principle" last August, a decision which enticed Greens Alive to locate in Osgoode Township.

Then two weeks ago, on March 30, Julinot said the EODC gave oral assurance that a $50,000 loan will be awarded.

"I had counted on the loan and we have spent the money," said Greens Alive president Dr. Helmut Julinot. "I can live with it (the smaller interest free three-year loan) but we have made it a part of our capital budget."

Julinot said it was like spending $200 for a night on the town and then running out of gas on the way home.

The loan was to pay for production equipment but now the firm is looking to lease the machinery needed.

As a result, Greens Alive has delayed setting up its greenhouse production centre and a two-year goal of building 16 greenhouses will not be reached. Instead of five greenhouses this year, the company will likely build two.

$1 MILLION INVESTMENT

Greens Alive set up its hydroponic greenhouse operation south of Osgoode village with a $1 million investment in the hopes of selling $330,000 greenhouse kits.

The company bought a livestock farm near Reids Mills (the deal closed in February) and spent half their investment to set up a head office and a full-scale greenhouse training centre.

The greenhouse went into production in February and Julinot said he expects an annual net profit of $100,000, without any glitches.

The hydroponic football-field sized structure will also be used as a teaching centre for franchise buyers. Included in the kit price is a $40,000 franchise fee which covers a five-week hands-on training course as well as a site feasibility study, a greenhouse operations computer program dubbed MacGreen (it won't print cheques until all the company's paperwork is up to date) and a 24-hour Fax hot-line. Greens Alive also has two advisors available, one trained in marketing, the other horticulture.

Already, the first greenhouse off the production line is spoken for, and this week co-owner Stephen MacKneson expects to finalize three more sales.

While Julinot, with a Ph.D. in mechanical engineering, is the man behind the machine, MacKneson was the man behind Cottman Transmissions, Ziebart Rustproofing and Bunsmaster Bakeries.

MacKneson, also co-founder of Canadian Organic Growers and the international Organic Crop Improvement Association, said selling hydroponic greenhouses is "a classic franchising situation."

Within the next five years the company has projected sales of $53 million. In North America it expects to sell 70 greenhouses (the first four orders are Canadian) and in Europe, the Middle East and Far East 75.

Julinot even expects to sell greenhouses to Third World countries where lettuce is imported for the wealthy at high prices.

When the company reaches capacity, 48 will be employed building greenhouse kits.

And one of the reasons Julinot decided upon Eastern Ontario for his enterprise was the available labor force.

"We've come to love the Osgoode area.

Especially, we've come to respect the many hard working people who applied and wanted to work for us. We have interviewed many who are well qualified and need jobs desperately," he said.

New breeds registered

OTTAWA — Agriculture Canada has approved three breeds of sheep for recognition under the Livestock Pedigree Act. The three breeds, the Canadian Arcott, the Outaouais Arcott and the Rideau Arcott, were developed under a breeding and selection program initiated by Ottawa's Animal Research Centre.

The Canadian Arcott was developed for use as a terminal sire, and has superior growth rate and lean meat yield. This breed claims about 28 per cent of its genetic make-up from the Ile de France breed with the remainder of blood coming from established domestic breeds.

The Outaouais Arcott and Rideau Arcott were developed as prolific dams, lambing, on average, 2.5. Genetically the Outaouais Arcott is almost half Finnish Landrace. The Rideau Arcott is 40 per cent Landrace and 14 per cent East Friesian.

The new breeds will be registered by the Canadian Livestock Records Corporation on behalf of the Canadian Sheep Breeders' Association.

4-H youth outstanding in field

NEPEAN — 4-Hers will be getting together this summer to find out what sheep, buffalo, giraffes, deer and cattle all have in common. Yes, they all have four legs, but they also have four stomachs.

The ruminant digestive system of beef and dairy animals will be the focus of this summer's community club. On the agenda will be nutritional requirements of beef and dairy calves, cows and market animals, as well as feeding options for producers. All members will have a chance to care for and show a beef or dairy animal.

For those who prefer to be outstanding in their field, crops will be another focus this summer. Included will be how field crop production is affected by climate, and a look at soil types and tillage methods. Members will grow a crop or vegetable to exhibit at a fall fair.

DCCFA to hold banquet

WINCHESTER — The Dundas County Christian Farmers' Association will be holding its annual banquet meeting April 22 at 7pm at the Winchester Lions hall.

Featured will be elections for local board members, a presentation on "cultivating your marriage" by Ramsayville couple Wilf and Connie Wight, greetings from the CFFO by director Karl Mantel, and entertainment by Bart and Joyce Geleynese.

Tickets are $10 per person. For reservations, call board members Peter Biemond (652-4118), Alice Schuler (448-3638) or Leendert Noort (774-2880) before April 18.

Dion to submit brief

MOREWOOD — The president of the Dundas Cattlemen's Association says supply management is hurting the beef industry and he's fighting to either abolish marketing boards or give all farmers equal subsidies.

"Subsidies are not the answer," said Reg Dion. "But if the government continues subsidizing, then the beef industry must be subsidized to the same level as others."

Dion will submit a 16-page report to the Beef Industry Task Force outlining his concerns. The task force is expected to make its recommendations on the industry in June.

As well, the Dundas Cattlemen's Association has set up a committee which will submit its concerns to the task force.

Dion says he wants farmers operating under a quota system to have their entire farm come under the same rules.

"Producers must be made to choose either the free enterprise system or the supply management system. No one must be allowed to take advantage of both systems," he said.

Dion says some farmers with a "guaranteed income" are unfairly competing in other markets with farmers who don't have that regular cash flow.

In his paper, Dion outlined four major areas of concern for Ontario beef producers.

He cites ineffective and dangerous leadership, unjust international and domestic competition and a poor stabilization plan as being the sources of producer strife.

He says marketing boards have created a "civil war" in farming and that is creating the worst problems. While some provinces, namely Quebec and Saskatchewan, have lucrative beef subsidy programs, Dion said Ontario producers are getting very little.

As a result of the domestic situation, Dion says the local beef industry is highly susceptible to international trade wars.

Finally, he cites leadership as a major stumbling block.

He says the special grains program implemented in December is a typical example of poor leadership.

He said that under that program, a cash crop farmer with 100 acres of soybeans was paid $33.62 while someone with 100 acres of corn, who fed it to his cattle, could have been paid $2,740.

What was to be a subsidy for needy farmers ended up being a way to buy votes, said Dion.

Dion and the Ontario Cattlemen's Association will submit their papers this week.

Farm update

Lung diseases occupational hazard for most farmers

WINCHESTER — Every farmer has a tennis-court sized site for contaminants to enter his body. Eastern Ontario's medical officer of health told DFA members at the association's monthly meeting.

Human lungs cover a 70 square metre area, Dr. Robert Bourdeau told the meeting, compared to the two square metres of skin and 10 square metres of digestive tract.

Lung diseases are almost an occupational hazard for farmers, who expose themselves to dust, chemicals, gases, micro-organisms and pollens on an everyday basis.

Humans use six or seven litres of oxygen per minute, said Bourdeau. The tiny air sacs in the lungs, called the alveoli, are where the body exchanges oxygen for carbon dioxide, replenishing the supply of oxygen in the bloodstream, and taking lethal carbon dioxide out of the blood. If the lungs are damaged, the exchange of oxygen for carbon dioxide can't happen.

Farmer's lung is the best-known occupational lung disease for agriculturalists, said Bourdeau. This hypersensitive allergic reaction may affect up to 10 per cent of farmers, depending on the climatic conditions of where they work. Many farmers who suffer from the disease don't even realize the problem, blaming a nagging cough on a cold or smoker's cough.

Bourdeau likened farmer's lung to poison ivy. Few will develop the allergy, but sufferers are hit hard.

Farmer's lung is caused by moldy hay spores, minute organisms that like the heat and reproduce rapidly at 130 degrees Fahrenheit. The spores are especially prolific in stored hay that has been improperly dried.

Spores are commonly found in hay late in winter and early in spring when farmers are getting towards the bottom of their hay supply.

In its worst form, says Bourdeau, farmer's lung can be a chronic illness. Victims suffer from a dry cough, fever and shortness of breath four to eight hours after exposure. Fever and chills may follow.

Symptoms are similar to those of pneumonia, but the treatment for farmer's lung is steroids, a medication avoided by doctors who are treating pneumonia. Specific lab tests are required to diagnose the disease.

Bourdeau says the timing of symptom appearance after exposure usually offers some clues to doctors treating the allergy.

While lack of education might be one of the biggest stumbling blocks to awareness of the disease, prevention is the best way to avoid contact with farmer's lung. Bourdeau advises proper drying and ventilation, the use of mold inhibitors and respirators and working upwind as good ways to stay clear of the antigen.

If these tactics don't work, the farmer could be forced to use other feed, stay out of the hayloft or barn, or, in the worst-case scenario, quit farming.

USE PRECAUTIONS

But Bourdeau says proper precautions are just as effective as throwing in the towel. Citing a study, he said there is no difference in symptoms between farmers who left the farm and those who stayed and tried other safety measures.

Silo filler's disease, caused by inhalation of nitrogen oxides, is another insidious disease attacking farmers.

The level of nitrogen oxides in silos can be up to 100 times more dangerous than industrial levels, said Bourdeau. The air inside the silo takes three to 10 days to reach toxic levels, with gases appearing as a brown haze. After one breath of nitrogen oxides, the victim may rapidly lose consciousness and die soon after.

The first damage to the lungs occurs in the upper passages. Other doses go to the alveoli and cause irreparable damage, but it may take weeks before the patient shows symptoms.

Without oxygen, plant nitrates turn into nitrites, which then turn into nitrogen oxides, with an odor resembling household bleach.

Farm workers can't recognize low concentrations, said Bourdeau, and by the time the danger is recognizable, damage has already been done.

High doses result in rapid death as the victim gags and air supply to the lungs is shut down. In lower doses, nitrogen oxides mix with water in the lungs, forming nitric acid. Within a few seconds, the victim feels nauseated and experiences a shortness of breath as nitrites combine with the hemoglobin in the blood and cells are no longer capable of carrying oxygen.

As blood becomes more acid, there is a decrease in blood pressure. Blood vessels dilate and blood no longer reaches organs.

Within two weeks, the patient appears to suffer from acute bronchitis. He experiences fever, chills and shortness of breath. The alveoli damaged by the acid is rebuilding scar tissue which blocks small airways.

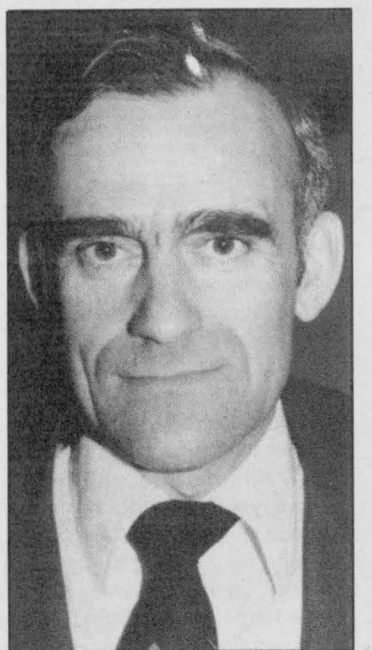

Bourdeau says farmers can control some of the factors affecting high levels of plant nitrates. Levels of nitrates are usually up after rainfall, and are increased with the application of nitrogen-rich fertilizers and in rich organic soils. Fields with a lot of weeds and damaged leaves also produce high levels.

Cutting plants higher than usual, planting disease and insect-resistant crops and aiming for a weed-free harvest are some steps that can be taken to reduce danger. Respirators are a poor defense because they need oxygen in order to work. Bourdeau suggests using a self-contained breathing apparatus instead.

EDUCATE DOCTORS

"Farmers are good at telling doctors what they think they have," said Bourdeau. "We don't learn about these things at medical school."

Most medical seminars focus on industrial ailments, a situation which Bourdeau thinks could be changed to reflect the concerns of farmers. He recommended that the OFA request the Ontario Medical Association give seminars on agricultural diseases at their annual meetings.

DFA applauds right to farm legislation

WINCHESTER — A DFA committee has applauded the principle behind proposed provincial legislation designed to protect farmers from the demands of residential neighbors.

But the committee wants the legislation to be fine-tuned before it is passed.

As it stands, a farmer's neighbors have the right to request an injunction if they feel that the farmer's day-to-day operations are disruptive. Farmers feared that their operations could grind to a halt because of the complaints about noisy machinery or an ill wind from a manure pile.

Committee recorder Arden Schneckenburger says the legislation has the potential to define a "normal farming practice" as well as protecting farmers from the threat of injunctions.

"With agriculture constantly changing through the adoption of new technology, farmers can continue to adopt new technology without the fear of a nuisance charge."

The proposed legislation, called An Act Respecting the Protection of Farm Practises, or Bill 83, is commonly known as right-to-farm. Developed to protect farmers from harassment, the act aims at allowing farmers to continue with their farming operations, as long as farming practises are in keeping with accepted customs and standards of farming.

According to the proposal, no farmer can be held liable for noise, odor or dust resulting from his operation, as long as he subscribes to "normal farming practises." The act would protect farmers from injunctions or court orders telling the farmer to stop his operations.

Under the proposal, farmers would still be subject to the any land use control law, the Environmental Protection Act, the Pesticides Act, the Health and Promotion Act or the Water Resources Act.

The DFA committee says current land use control laws could sabotage Bill 83. According to the present wording "any land use law may negate any benefit this law has for farmers if individual municipalities can on a whim curtail farm practises," says the committee report.

Complaints against farmers would be directed to a five-person Farm Practises Protection Board established by Queen's Park. The board will decide whether the accused farmer works according to normal farming practises.

The board will also have the power to ensure that its orders are being carried out. No injunction could be carried out until the board had made its decision.

But the five-man DFA committee wants a better outline of what constitutes a normal farming practice. Many practises considered normal for farmers conflict with provincial statutes, says Schneckenburger. He pointed out that the noise level produced by farm machines often exceeds the decibel threshold allowed in the Health Protection and Promotion Act of 1983.

According to a preliminary draft of the act, local land use control laws can be enacted to limit normal farming practises. The committee recommended that this section be clarified before the bill goes to the next reading.

The committee also wants major farm organizations to have more input in the selection of board members. Board members can hold office for as long as two three-year terms. Board members may be civil servants or farmers.

The board will also provide many opportunities for Ontario farmers, says Schneckenburger. The board can study a farming practice and make a ruling on the request of a farmer, an agricultural association or the OMAF minister.

The complaint form is a workable proposal, says the committee but the system may only be effective if a complaint is taken to the board, and not under any other provincial act governing farming practises.

The committee suggests co-operation between OMAF, and the ministries of health and the environment would help farmers understand how the act relates to other ministries.

Abuse of the appeal system is another of the committee's concerns. "The ruling of the board should stand until the case is heard before the divisional court. By doing this, the board rulings may be more readily accepted."

The DFA's recommendations will be submitted to the OMAF. Bill 83 received its first reading on Dec. 17, 1987, and has to have two more readings before it receives royal assent.

Research scientist addresses Ottawa nut growers meeting

NORTH GOWER — A research scientist was the featured speaker at the annual meeting of the Ottawa chapter of the Society of Ontario Nut Growers.

The meeting, held at the Baxter Conservation area, welcomed Dr. Fred Von Althen, a scientist with the Canadian Forestry Service at the Great Lakes Forest Research Centre at Sault Ste. Marie.

Von Althen has had extensive experience in growing hardwoods and softwoods, and his talk was based on his working years with hardwoods in Southern Ontario.

He led the audience through the sequence of site selection, ground preparation, stock selection, planting, weed and pest control and maintenance.

Von Althen augmented his talk with slides, mostly of black walnuts. He stressed the importance of choosing the right kind of site, especially in depth. The necessity of clearing away weeds before planting was also discussed, and Von Althen illustrated the best way of planting young trees.

Fertilizing, mulching and herbicides were addressed, and Von Althen answered questions at the end of the discussion.

Federal funding of fairs debated

by Diane Johnston

OTTAWA — Canada's fairs and exhibitions associations and livestock producer groups will continue to seek a compromise to the federal funding debate that's split the two groups.

While the exhibitions group seeks more flexibility in the system that divides $2.4 million annually among 214 agricultural fairs, livestock producers are afraid their shows could suffer.

Meanwhile, federal agriculture minister John Wise has promised he'll make no changes to the 52-year-old agricultural fairs program until an agreement is reached.

Last month, Wise rejected the recommendations of an industry advisory board that would have allowed fairs unable to present livestock shows, to divert the money to other aspects of the fair.

The livestock producer panel of the board says the proposal could threaten the future of shows, essential to the marketing of their animals.

"There certainly is a need for other areas of agriculture to be supported, I don't argue that at all," says Albert Hall, chairman of the livestock panel.

"The recommendations of the fairs (and exhibitions groups) open the possibility for the fairs to do away with livestock shows in the future, therefore channeling all the money into other aspects of the fair."

Livestock show prize money accounts for approximately $1.4 million, the lion's share of the federal money. The remainder is shared by 4-H shows, judges' fees and permanent improvements to facilities.

Malcolm MacGregor, director of Agriculture Canada's livestock development division, says the proposed funding switch could actually help livestock shows.

"It works both ways. The fairs that really want to go into livestock could really put more money into it."

Taylor, a Cambridge area farmer and past-president of the joint dairy breeds association, admitted changes are needed to the program.

The livestock panel, he said, has suggested that the number of exhibitors needed to qualify for federal prize money be raised from the current three.

He knows of fairboards who call local breeders the night before a show to drum up the required three exhibitors.

But he insists any new agreement contain a guarantee that livestock shows, the foundation of the rural fair, continue to receive federal support.

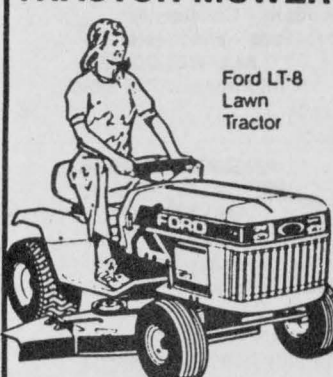

"We certainly don't wish to stop progress," he said. "At the present time, it is hoped we can come to some kind of compromise with the fairs and exhibitions committee."

A proposal to revise the formula for sharing the federal funds among the provinces has also hit a snag.

MacGregor said Ontario's 103 fairs now receive almost 44 per cent of the federal money. Under a new formula, based on statistics of farm units and urban population, Ontario would lose to other provinces.

MacGregor said fair associations from across the country have accepted in principle the need for greater flexibility in funding, but Ontario associations "had some problems with the implementation" of the fund redistribution proposal.
