B of M "Sunshine Account" Brings Results in Happier Holiday

"I wish I could see my way to take a holiday trip", said one young man recently to Charles Wood, local Bank of Montreal manager.

"Mind if I suggest a method some of our customers use?" asked Mr. Wood. "The first step is to decide on a trip within reasonable financial reach. Then the customer starts a B of M 'Sunshine Account' and every pay-day he deposits an equal amount towards his objective.

"By the time holidays come 'round, he's usually proud of how well he's done....and sholld emergencies arise during the year, the money is always available. If you try it, you'll find the planning and saving fun in themselves - and the saving habit will add a pleasure bonus to your holidays, too."

Valley OF REVENGE

JACKSON·COLE

SYNOPSIS

Chapte IV: The red-headed avenger arrives in Paisano Valley and the village of Luna Roja where Garvin lives. Cautiously gaining entrance to Garvin's home, Valdez finds himself before the closed door of Raymond Garvin's office.

CHAPTER V

His lips tightened grimly, Behind that door was one of the men he had hunted so relentlessly for five years.

He threw open the door and stepped into the office, both hands dropping to the silver-decorated holsters of his heavy six-guns. He closed the door behind him and leaned carelessly against the wall beside it as slowly, mockingly, he removed the scarlet handkerchief, revealing his face.

The man before him did not exactly face him, for Raymond Garvin had his back to the door through which El Caballero Rojo had quietly entered.

Never would he forget that cadaverous face, the lips that were pale brown lines over discolored vulpine teeth, the man the youth of eighteen had instantly pictured when he had heard his father whisper his name. Garvin's hair was now sparse and gray, for the years of continued brutality had not dealt lightly with this ruthless man.

But one thing had not changed —his love of gold. Even believing himself alone, his movements were quick and furtive as he fingered a gold piece from a stack in front of him.

With abruptness he seemed to sense that he was not alone. He spun half around in his chair to glare at the red-headed man who stood against the wall. Garvin's piercing green eyes below the overhanging brows were shot with sudden accusing anger.

"What do you want here?" he barked. "Who are you anyway—and how did you get in?"

El Iaballero Rojo laughed. It was low, harsh laughter that ceased on an ominous note.

"I've come to settle the affairs of the de Cuevas place up the valley," he said tightly. "Maybe one or two other things while I'm about it."

"The de Cuevas place?" Garvin's fingers beat a tattoo on the desk. "Umm, let me see . . . Oh, yes, the de Cuevas place down the valley." He added sharply, "I know the place now, but there is no longer any chance for discussion about it. The bank has foreclosed. I—er—the bank has already taken over the property — the case is closed."

"But the case is not closed," El Caballero Rojo drawled meaningfully. "Because I'm right here now to reopen it. Two lives were taken this morning on that little rancho. All the money you have to your name can't give them back. But"—his shrug brought fresh glitter in the lamplight from his conchas and silver trappings—"I still can take your money from you to help all the other folks you've cheated and robbed hereabouts."

While the man sat at the desk as if paralyzed, the unwelcome visitor's voice grew commanding as he pointed to the safe.

"Open that!" he ordered.

Raymond Garvin's slack mouth gaped as he stared into the hard, cold eyes of the man who confronted him.

The land hog, the man who had demanded usurious interest from the peons who had trusted him, who had over and over sold the land he had taken back from his devastated victims, cringed.

He got up from the desk and approached the safe in the wall back of the desk at which he had been sitting. He knelt before the big iron box, spun the dial and threw open the safe door. His hand went inside it toward a row of labeled drawers. It came out suddenly—and as it moved, an arm clad in a silver-braided sleeve reached over his shoulder. The hand at the end of the arm gripped the gun clutched in the banker's hand.

"I thought you were entirely too willing to open up the safe for me," said the red-headed man. Then his tone grew grim, menacing. "Now bring out the money—quick. And every cent you've got cached in there! And every blessed mortgage you've got in any of those labeled drawers! Quick, I said, I've got a nervous trigger finger."

Once his clumsy trick at trying to outwit El Caballero Rojo had backfired, Raymond Garvin had no choice. It was obey or be killed. The muzzle of the gun that bored into Garvin's back sent shivers down his spine.

Trembling in every limb, a ruthless man gone cowardly when his own skin was menaced, he brought out what he was ordered to produce, under the watchful eyes behind the steady gun. A heavy bag of coins was plopped on the floor, then stacks of currency. Then the long reaching arm, exploring the safe, brought out a stack of folded papers bearing red seals.

"These papers won't do you any good, you devilish red-headed outlaw!" Raymond Garvin burst out in fury as he threw the last of the lot on the floor. "You can't collect on 'em — nobody can but me! And—"

"And you neither can, nor will!" Valdez snapped. "Now dig out that yellow-backed box down there in the corner of the safe. It looks like a letter file from where I stand, and I'd be plenty interested in reading your personal mail."

Garvin reluctantly did as he was ordered, and the man holding the gun on him took one hand to pick up the box and lay it on the desk beside the other loot. Garvin got waveringly to his feet and turned to face the red-headed menace.

"You don't think you're going to get away with this, do you?" he burst out furiously. "You won't! Because you'll never get out of here alive—not out of this place! Unless you kill me in cold blood—"

"Which I'm not aiming to do, not just at present—unless you plumb forget to keep your shirt on," drawled the red-headed man. Then his voice grew hard and cold. "I'd like to know the name of the man you're working for, Senor Garvin. What's more, I want to know where to find him—and mean to know, savvy?"

"You're loco," Garvin growled, "I haven't any boss, nobody I'm beholden to. I run my own business, and—"

"Give me the name, Garvin," Valdez said wearily. "You should know I mean to have it—because maybe you know who I am by now."

"Who hasn't heard of El Caballero Rojo?" sneered Garvin. "The road agent, the imitation Robin Hood, so thoughtful for the oppressed —when it gets him anything! Masquerading in a lot of Spanish gewgaws and a red handkerchief over his face!"

"Listen, Raymond Garvin!" Valdez said coldly. "Many would like to know just who I am. I'm going to tell you—here and now. Maybe you'll be particularly interested. My name is Michael Valdez y O'Brien. V-a-l-d-e-z! Savvy that? Does that name mean anything to you?"

The self-appointed banker's eyes went wide with sudden shock as he heard the name. A flickering tongue wet his thin, brown lips. His glance darted to the window as if only now he had fully realized that he was trapped. But in the face of that glittering gun held steadily on his middle he could make no move.

"I don't know any such name," he said surily. "Never heard of it in my life."

"Then I'll help you to remember," Valdez said coldly. "The story is all about the time about five years ago when you and a couple of your partners were in the business of freighting settlers into a new valley you were opening up, down not far from the border. Funny thing what trials and tribulations those settlers had. Just one misfortune after another—like as if a curse was pursuing them. Then one day a man named Valdez began to wonder just why it was that all these folks should be so unlucky . . ."

Young Husband Offers Chart For Happiness

I'VE ONLY had the pleasure of * following your column for a short * time," writes a young husband. * I'd like to congratulate you on the * valuable advice you give young * folks who are dating, courting and * preparing for marriage.

● THE BIBLE SAYS—

"AS the Bible states, 'Let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband. How couples can apply this to every day living should make valuable information for them."

I agree with you that if wife and husband kept in mind the constant need of pleasing the other, the divorce courts would have little business. And as you say, it is What is right that is the vital question. So many rules of human conduct are written so simply in the Bible that any intelligent person can apply them personally! During and since the war, I learn that daily Bible-reading has increased tremendously, and I wish with all my heart that the habit became universal. The wisdom, and the comfort, of the ages is ours for the seeking.

Marriage uncovers hidden faults in the best of us. Daily association with each other shows us how to deal with them and, as we try, we cultivate patience and understanding, tolerance and true charity. So, we can make married life a thrilling and beautiful experience for the one we love and, in doing that, we find our own happiness as surely as the sun rises.

Your Handwriting and You

By Alex S. Arnott

Can you read the writing in the example below? It can be read, but with difficulty. The handwriting is a good example of a common criminal, a person whose mentality and environment have made him everything his writing indicates. Notice the smeary script with feather edge downstrokes of the letters and the dirty appearance of the writing, also the scrawly, disorderly arrangement of the whole script. The "a's" and "d's" are open at the bottom, a real give away of a writer who would deceive at every opportunity.

Notice, too, how the crosses of the letter "t" stop short of the stem, an excellent example of caution, as though he were avoiding being caught in a dishonest act. There is nothing refined or graceful about this writing, it is as hard as the writer and as difficult to understand. Study this script and you will see how the criminal covers up his writing, blots and smears cover up letters so that one letter cannot be distinguished from another, and the up and down trend of every word reveals the shiftiness of the writer's habits in that it is hard for him to write in a straight line even if he wishes.

This, of course ,is the writing of a common crook. There are other types of criminals—the embezzler, the fellow with a smooth, shady kind of writing; the forger, whose artistic touch can be detected by his too light and too dark pen pressure in every word of the script. Each criminal has his way of revealing his bad habits easily picked out by the handwriting expert to reveal them for what they are.

Sunday School Lesson

The Way to Peace

Scripture: Proverbs 3:30-31; 15:1, 18; 22:24-25; 25:18, 21-22; 26:20-21; Matthew 5:9; James 3:17.

The dictionary defines harmony as "concord or agreement in facts, opinions, manners, interests, etc." But most of the passages cited from the Book of Proverbs have to do with the best way of getting on with angry and disagreeable people.

In general, the basic advice is that if other people are mean toward you, don't be nasty yourself. If a man is angry with you, that's the time to control your own temper. "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger." "Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go; lest thou learn his ways, and get a snare to thy soul." Proverbs that recall Pal's counsel, "As much as lieth in you live peaceably with all men."

In a similar spirit, the Proverbs stress the wisdom of regulating one's own life with good sense, and not according to what others are doing. Peace of mind is of the very essence of inward harmony.

The passages cited in our lesson deal chiefly with wisdom in personal attitudes and relationships, but it is obvous that our world today presents great problems of harmonious living between groups, races, peoples and nations.

In our personal lives we can do much to avoid people who don't like us, but in the larger social and international relationships we are confronted with conditions and sitations that we have to take as they are: situations involving sharp differences if not conflicts. Yet unless we can achieve some measure of mutual good will, tolerance, and forbearance, dark tragedy looms again upon the nations.

The proverbs and counsels that make for wisdom and harmonious living in individual life ought to be watchwords in the affairs of the nation.

DOTTY MARIE — Marie McDonald features these red and white polka dotted tailored pyjamas with a matching rose-wool robe in her next picture, "Living in a Big Way," in which she plays opposite Gene Kelly.

Just Strange

Discussing his epitaph, Sir John Strange said, "I want no fuss, nothing fancy. I simply want these words on my stone: 'Here lies a lawyer who always spoke the truth'."

"But," a friend protested, "no one will know who rests there." L

"Oh, yes, they will know," Sir John replied. "All who read will say, "That's Strange!"

How Can I?

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I prevent mold in the fruit closet?

A. Place a can of lime in the fruit closet, or on the shelves with jellies and preserves.

Q. How can I keep the skin soft?

A. The skin will be soft and fine if a healing astringent cream is applied regularly. By doing this, chapped, dry skin, and blemishes are healed. The astringent closes the pores and makes the skin silken smooth.

Q. How can I thoroughly clean greens?

A. Add a handful of salt to the second water when cleaning greens. This makes all the sand sink to the bottom of the pan. Another rinsing will make them thoroughly clean.

Q. How can I make cut flowers last longer?

A. They will last longer and keep fresher if a little camphor is added to the water.

The Last Frontier Vanishes...

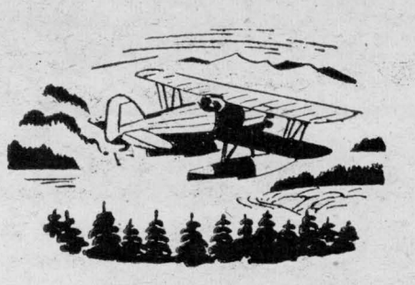

TODAY mining and industry push forward to the Arctic Circle, as Canadian initiative develops the vast resources—the minerals, waterpower and oil—of the one-time wilderness.

New war-time transportation facilities ended the isolation of millions of square miles of the Northwest. The airplane brought the farthest corners of our country—inaccessible for centuries—within a day or two of the cities of the continent.

That northward expansion is typical of modern developments which are stimulating all Canadian activities today, creating new and greater opportunities in every field of endeavour.

Until the present century the story of Canada's North was an epic of exploration—from the days of Elizabethan seamen seeking the Northwest Passage and the old fur traders pushing into the wilderness, down to the Arctic journeys of Stefansson and Bernier and the Mountie patrols of our own time.

Greatest single factor in Northland development was the airplane. It made possible the most significant mining discovery in the North—when, at Great Bear Lake in 1930, pitchblende was found—the continent's only source of uranium, vital ingredient of the atom bomb.

The war brought new activity to the North, and the creation of great new lines of transportation and communication—the Alaska Highway and the famous Air Staging Routes—with landing fields and radio and meteorological stations established throughout the territory.

DAVID HENDERSON started his own business in Montreal when only 17, and displayed an energy and integrity in surmounting early difficulties which won him the friendship and support of his suppliers and bank manager. After achieving success as a jobber he commenced the manufacture of felt hat shapes in an old windowless building. Today his Beacon Products Inc., in its new up-to-date Valleyfield plant, is considered one of the most successful plants of its kind in Canada.

MR. HENDERSON says: "No other country offers such opportunities as does Canada to young men who have ideas and the determination to back them up. Here, if their plans are sound and they know their business, they will find plenty of help and encouragement and every assurance of success."

For a 'Shut - In'

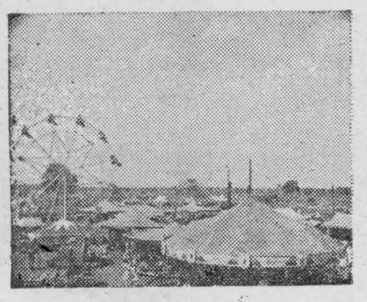

At the "We Have a Card for Every Occasion" counter of a large department store, says Readers' Digest, the clerk asked the woman standing beside me what he could do for her.

"I'm afraid you haven't anything that will do," she said. "I've looked all these cards over."

"Madam," said the clerk, "we have greeting cards for everything. What kind do you want?"

The woman hesitated, then leaned forward and said in a low voice: "My brother has just been sent to jail, and I want to send him a card expressing my regret."

The clerk thought a moment, then reached among the cards "For the Sick" and handed her one. It read: "Sorry to hear you are a shut-in. Hope you get out soon!"

FAIRTIME HIGHLIGHTS

by Your Ful-O-Pep Reporter

Ridgetown

This week your FUL-O-PEP reporter left behind the "razzle-dazzle" of the C.N.E. and headed for the smaller towns of Ontario. The first port of call was in Kent County where the Ridgetown District Agricultural Society held their 93rd annual exhibition.

The crowds were gay and colorful. The atmosphere friendly. The midway offered a variety of entertainment. The ferris wheel, the Merry-go round, the scooter ride, the rocket-sensation,—all did a roaring business. The high pressure salesmanship of the C.N.E. was missing and this was all to the good. The out of town visitor could hardly fail to notice the air of ownership which was general. The crowds on the midway, in the grandstand and the throngs visiting the various booths obviously felt that this was THEIR fair. The good natured neighbourliness of the crowd emphasized this feeling of propritiorship.

The farm iquipment display was the centre of attraction for many. In this line N. L. Turner of Blenheim had a fine exhibit which drew large numbers of rural residents who were obviously combining business with pleasure.

In the Tri County Shorthorn Club Tent the talk as usual concerned feeds and feeding problems. Your Reporter was repeatedly asked when FUL-O-PEP would be in greater supply and how it had been possible to maintain the same high quality during these hectic years of general shortages. It was a real pleasure to point out that the main reason that FUL-O-PEP was still a little difficult to obtain in some areas was because of the absolute refusal on the part of the manufacturer to use inferior ingredients. As a result FUL-O-PEP is still a feed second to none, a feed in which quality has not been sacrificed for quantity.

The Tri County Shorthorn Club deserves congratulations for a job well done and President Peter Cameron, as well as Treasurer S. W. Pearce and Secretary J. C. McKinlay can indeed be proud of the club's contribution to the fair.

The yougsters were far too busy to think of regular meals and consumed huge quantities of "pop" and hot-dogs. The elders did their share in this line, too, but were more inclined to patronize the booth set up by the Beechwood Women's Institute where Dinners and lunches were served on both days of the fair.

From Ridgetown your reporter travelled across country to Port Perry where yet another fair was in full swing. Here, as at Ridgetown, the atmosphere was gay and pleasant. The crowds were in a festive mood and the children were eagerly exploring the myteries of the midway.

Port Perry

The Port Perry Fair more than maintained its reputation as one of the outstanding Ontario Fairs. Your Reporter was particularly interested in the showing put on by the Black and White Club (Holsteins) and entries were the biggest ever with a total of 128 and the efforts of this Club is to be commended for the work they have done in improving the breed as was evidenced by the high quality of cattle that was shown.

One of the highlights of interest was the pony race. Unfortunately our local entries were not able to beat the Leggette entries from Oshawa who have been making a regular clean-up this Season in Fall Fairs. Bob, Billy and David Leggette walked away with the honors.

Next year we hope the local entries will have their revenge in this popular event.

It was too bad the weatherman was not kinder to the large crowds that turned out but even the weatherman couldn't dampen their enthusiasm and a good time was had by all.

Other details about the Fair including prize winners will be found elsewhere in your paper.

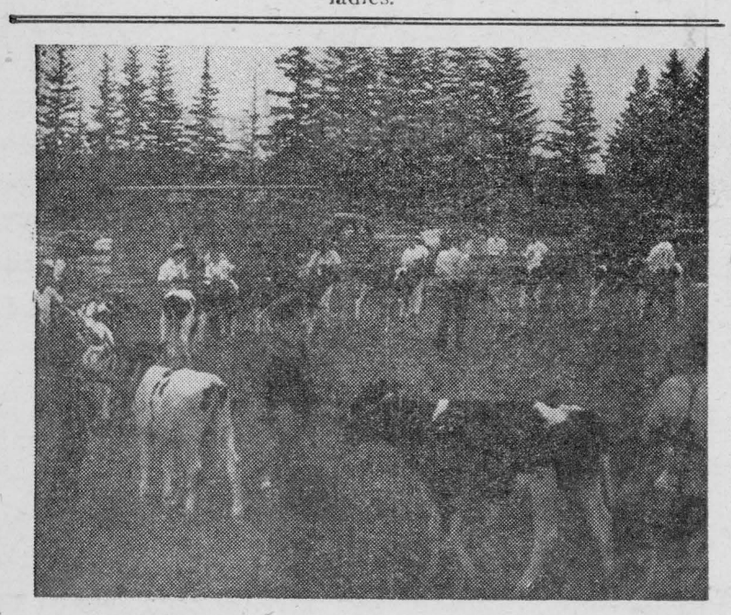

In closing we would like to congratulate the Fair Board headed by Fred G. Christie, President and ably supported by Alex Johns; Anson Gerrow, Armour McMillan, first Vice President, Ben Smith, Dick Woon, Secretary Treasurer, Lloyd Lee, Frank Honey, Earl Martyn, Garnet Cochrane and James L. Crane in their untiring efforts in making the Fair this year the best ever.

Summer is the best time to carry out cleaning and repairs of the heating system in the home.

M-M-M — You can see that we were wasting our time looking at cattle and other exhibits at the Fair. This is one of the many fine samples of cooking and other exhibits shown by our good ladies.

Tonnage ..... 130,000,000 lbs.

1,373,000,000 lbs.

The outstanding feature of the year's result was the extremely small profit derived from the first two groups,—viz. Live Stock Products, and Other Farm Products. Total weight of products in these groups was 667,000,000 lbs.

Net profit for the two groups was $233,592.00 equivalent to ..... 3½c per 100 lbs.
otherwise ..... 1/30c per lb.
Profit as percentage of Sales ..... 1/6 of 1%

On the other two groups, totalling 706,000,000 lbs., net profit was $1,752,673.00 equivalent to ..... 24.8c per 100 lbs.
otherwise ..... ¼c per lb.
Profit as percentage of Sales 2.6%

The very low profit on Live Stock and Other Farm Products was due to conditions arising out of war controls. On all these products, especially meats and poultry, supply was much below demand, and prices paid by black market operators were, for long periods, above the equivalent of the established ceiling prices.

During those periods, processors who respected the ceilings were forced either to buy the live stock at prices involving loss, or to withdraw from operations. For the regular firms in the Packing Industry to cease purchasing live stock was, of course, impossible. Therefore, the losses had to be taken.

In this situation, the record of the Packing Industry as a whole was a highly creditable one. With only rare exceptions, inspected packers, large and small, scrupulously adhered to the regulations and did everything in their power to assist the officials of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

On their part the directing officers of the Board made a strenuous and continuous effort to enforce ceilings. But the task was a difficult one.

The difficulty was that of securing evidence. Only two persons, the seller and the buyer, knew the facts of illicit transactions. As both these persons were exposing themselves to heavy penalties, they were most undependable witnesses. The record of the illicit transactions, in the accounts of seller and buyer, furnished no evidence. Goods were invoiced at ceiling prices. Payments in excess of ceiling were in currency, and were made 'under the counter'.

In the main, violations were confined to processors on the fringe of the Industry. These persons found themselves in a position to greatly increase their volume, at margins of profit much higher than normal. The fact that they were spread throughout the cities, towns and villages of all Canada made the task of catching up with them a very difficult one. In relation to offences, there were extremely few convictions.

Under war conditions, steps had to be taken to ensure an even distribution of the available food. The necessary war effort could not otherwise have been sustained. The Wartime Prices and Trade Board was set up for this purpose. It was directed at the top by a group of men of the highest ability and character. The job they did was one of the most essential of Canada's total war effort. On the whole it was highly successful. But its enforcement of ceilings in respect of food left much to be desired.

The following notes are set down in the hope they may prove useful in the field of animal products, if the necessity to establish controls should again arise:—

1. When food is scarce and purchasing power high, enforcement of ceilings is a most difficult task. The public may unreservedly endorse the principle of price control, but public opinion, of itself, cannot be counted upon to check illicit operations.
2. Only by an alert and firm Enforcement Branch, can controls be made effective. The post of Chief Enforcement Officer calls for a man with the highest qualifications of ability, courage and cool judgment.
3. In respect of meats, illicit transactions begin at the stage where the meats pass from the processor to the retailer. But the retailer is clearly an unwilling participant. He does not wish to pay more than the ceiling price, and with intelligent leadership could be secured as an ally of the Enforcement Branch.
4. Enforcement is bound to fail unless penalties are severe enough to deter offenders. (A fine of a few hundred dollars is no deterrent to a violator who is making illicit profits of thousands.)
5. Cancellation of licence is the ultimate and the only effective deterrent. This is a drastic penalty which should be imposed only in case of flagrant and repeated violations, involving the head or principal officers of the firm.

   Only a few cancellations would be necessary.

*Although the foods processed in this department are farm products,—meats, vegetables, fruits, nevertheless the operation is one which does not form a necessary, or customary, part of packinghouse operations. The plant required for the processing is specialized and expensive. It is for these reasons that these operations are segregated as 'Manufacturing'.

One result of black market operations was that producers received a higher price for their live stock than the equivalent of the ceiling.

It is only just to point out that this involved no breach of the regulations, either technical or moral, on their part. Their animals were sent to market as usual, and were sold on the market, openly, to the highest bidder. No other system was possible.

The Wartime Prices and Trade Board wisely refrained from imposing ceilings on live stock. This was tried in United States and proved completely unworkable.

In view of the extremely poor results on live stock and other farm products, it was fortunate that volume in the other two groups was high, and profits normal (one-quarter cent per lb.).

In the fourth group the chief product was one developed in the Laboratories of Canada Packers, viz. Canned Blood Sausage. All this product was sold to UNRRA. As suggested by the name, the product contains a substantial percentage of cooked blood (from inspected animals). This gives it a high protein content. Other ingredients add important calcium and carbohydrate values. Because of its high nutritional value, convenient form, and comparatively low cost, Canned Blood Sausage was a very useful food for UNRRA distribution.

Once this product had been accepted by UNRRA, the Canadian Meat Board directed that the formula should be passed on to all Canadian plants equipped to produce it. Shipments of Blood Sausage formed a very important part of Canada's total sales to UNRRA. During 1946 total shipments from Canada were 63,000,000 cans.

While this quantity was small in relation to UNRRA's over-all relief shipments, nevertheless it is gratifying that a product developed entirely in a Canadian laboratory should have played even as substantial a part in the relief programme of 1946.

With the winding up of UNRRA, orders for Canned Blood Sausage have ceased. It was essentially an emergency food. Notwithstanding its high nutritional value, and low price, its colour subtracts from its appeal to the civilian consumer.

The experience of this year proves again the wisdom of the Company's policy of diversification. In 1927 when Canada Packers was formed, live stock plus other farm products comprised 79% of the Company's total volume. In the year under review, the corresponding percentage was 49%. More than half the volume and 85% of the profit were contributed by groups three and four.

It will be recalled that following World War I, deflation of food prices set in during July, 1920,—approximately eighteen months after Armistice Day. That deflation was brought about by the fact that, by July, 1920, food supplies had begun to catch up with effective demand.

Following World War II, it was expected that the greater destruction of property and the greater displacement of population, in Europe, might result in a more prolonged period of dislocation. However, it seemed likely that the restoration of normal food conditions might follow the same general pattern as in 1919-20; —i.e. a period of advancing prices, to be followed at some time either by a slide or a collapse.

(It is important to remember that the world's food supply is produced from year to year. If one year's crop is inadequate, hunger [perhaps starvation] may be the result. However, a bountiful world crop in the following year can at once restore normal conditions. The hunger of the previous year does not carry over.)

World War II ended with V-J Day, August 15th, 1945. That is a full two years ago.

But, as yet, world food supplies have not caught up with demand. Prices of most staple foods are not only above those of V-J Day, but actually, in the case of many essential foods, are still at an all-time high.
The following table gives a comparison of prices (in Canada) of animal products and cereals from 1939 to 1947.

§ Equalization payments.

It will be seen that each price in July, 1947 is at the high point of the eight-year period.

But all these prices would be higher still except for the operation of controls. The chief control exists in the fact that (by mutual governmental agreement) Canadian foods are not permitted to move to the United States.

In that country, prices for the same products throughout the same period are shown in the following table.

UNITED STATES FARM PRICES, 1939—1947

(Chicago Market)

The startling fact regarding the two preceding tables is that United States and Canada are two of the chief food-surplus countries of the world. That prices in these two 'surplus' countries should have remained at these record levels is due to three main factors:—

1. The pull on North America supplies due to the acute shortage of food in Europe. (This shortage is aggravated by the fact that political disharmonies prevent certain natural movements of food;—e.g., grain from Eastern to Western Germany.)
2. The fact that in United States and Canada, purchasing power,—and consequently domestic demand for foods,—is at an all-time high.
3. The further fact that, in the face of this record demand (export plus domestic), production of live stock in United States and Canada seems definitely headed downward. Inspected slaughterings of Cattle and Hogs for the last three years have been as follows:—

	United States		Canada
	Cattle	Hogs	Cattle	Hogs
1944	13,960,337	69,016,982	1,354,104	3,766,441
1945	14,538,405	40,959,809	1,820,127	5,683,727
1946	11,413,325	44,393,920	1,666,310	4,253,511

Is it possible to forecast the course of live stock prices in Canada for the years immediately ahead?

No attempt at a comprehensive answer to this question will be made. But all the following factors have a bearing.

Prices cannot continue to advance indefinitely. At some point they must level off, and at a later date a substantial decline seems inevitable. However, the immediate trend in Canada seems upward rather than downward.

This is certainly the case in respect of Hogs. An advance of 2c per lb. in the price of Wiltshire Sides has been announced for September 1st. The present Bacon contract with England would seem to ensure the maintenance of the September 1st level until the expiry date of the contract,—viz. December, 1948.

As to Cattle, the fact that Steers in United States are selling at twice the Canadian price would indicate that the immediate price trend might also be upward.

It must be remembered, however, that the great Beef exporting areas of the world are South America and Australasia. In both these areas, Cattle prices are much lower even than the present Canadian level. When transportation facilities are restored, prices of Beef on the open world markets may soon be brought to a level based upon costs in the exporting countries.

In the present period of acute shortage and record prices, it seems difficult to recall that the ten-year period immediately before the war was one of burdensome surpluses and ruinous prices.

The war crisis brought about a clearer realization of the fact that a nation's chief asset is the physical health of its citizens. An understanding of problems of nutrition has been advanced as in no previous period. Each nation will make the better feeding of its people a main objective. Except for widespread economic breakdown, the world demand for food will be higher than in the pre-war period.

Whatever happens, it is unlikely that the ruinous food prices of the 1930's will ever recur.

Nevertheless, a time will undoubtedly come when food-surplus countries will have to 'compete' for the available world markets. When that time comes, each food-exporting country will be forced to offer its surplus in the form of those products which it can produce most efficiently.

In the case of Canada,—one of the chief food-surplus countries,—two products stand out. These are the two food products which, above all others, Canada can produce in competition with the world.

They are Wheat and Bacon.

There seems little danger of Canada reducing her Wheat production. But the record of the last two years is proof that a serious danger does exist in the case of Hogs.

Between 1944 and 1946, inspected Hog killings were cut in half. Only by increasing and maintaining Hog production can Canada make her Agriculture safe. The main objective of Canadian agricultural policy should be immediately to build up her Hog population. For her Wiltshire Bacon there is an immediate, and continuing market,— namely Great Britain. And Great Britain needs Canada's Bacon more urgently than ever before.

Ontario and Alberta are the two chief Hog-producing Provinces. In both these Provinces the Departments of Agriculture have recently launched active campaigns to stimulate Hog production. The Ontario Hog Producers' Association and the Alberta Livestock Co-operative Limited have joined actively in these campaigns. It is to be hoped other Provinces will take similar measures, especially Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Quebec.

It is felt that this year a more extended reference than usual should be made to Labour relations.

The Directors recognize, without reserve, that the first claim on the earnings of the Company should be that of Employees,—the men and women of all ranks whose working lives are spent in the Company's service.

Plant Employees are represented by their Union,—the United Packinghouse Workers of America. With the Union, except at times when negotiations are under way, relations have been cordial and co-operative. This is mentioned because widely published threats to strike, each time an agreement is being negotiated, may have given Shareholders,—and the public generally,—a wrong impression. During the war period advances have been frequent and substantial.

Following is a summary of the advances:—

	Men	Women
During 1941, 1942 and 1943, Cost of Living Bonuses reached a total for men of $4.60 per week, and for women 18.4% of their wages. In 1944 these were converted to permanent hourly increases of	9½c per hour.	7c per hr.
In addition to this the following successive general increases were negotiated:—
In the agreement of 1943	5 c per hr.	5 c per hr.
In the agreement of 1945 — 6.8%, equivalent to	5 c per hr.	3½c per hr.
In the agreement of 1946	5 c per hr.	10 c per hr.
Total rate increases from 1939 to 1946	29½c per hr.	25½c per hr.

In addition, there have been many upgradings and individual increases. These with the above general increases have resulted in raising average rates per hour as follows:—

	Men	Women
August, 1939, average rate per hour	50.8c	32.8c
March, 1947, average rate per hour	88.1c	63.5c
Increase	37.3c	30.7c
Percentage increase	73.4%	93.6%

The average advance in hourly rates throughout all Canada, for the same period, as published by the Dominion Department of Labour, has been 54.6%*

The increase in hourly rates does not, of course, represent a corresponding advance in 'real' income,—that is, in income measured by purchasing power. Subtractions must be made for increase in the cost of living, also for Income Tax;— the latter offset to some extent by Family Allowance payments. It is probable, too, that the actual increase in the cost of living is somewhat greater than that reflected in the official table of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics,—viz. ..... 34.8%†

However, when all allowances have been made, the increase in real income of Plant Employees, as compared to 1939, is certainly not less than ..... 15%.

And this in spite of a substantial reduction in number of hours worked (1939,—average weekly hours 46¼; 1946,—average weekly hours 42½). If hours worked had been the same, increase in real income would have been at least ..... 22%.

Over and above these rate increases, important supplementary privileges have been granted. These include:

Improved vacation schedule;—now { after 1 year —1 week, after 5 years—2 weeks, after 20 years—3 weeks.

Rest periods with pay—10 minutes, morning and afternoon.

Night work premium—5c per hour over corresponding day rates.
Guaranteed minimum of 37½ hours work per week—or pay in lieu of work.
Pay for eight public holidays.

These suppplementary privileges represent an annual cost to the Company of approximately $850,000, equivalent to ..... 7.4c per hour.

Following the practice of previous years, an important share of the profits was distributed to Employees in the form of Bonus.

The sum distributed at the year-end was ..... $1,250,000.
(Bonus distributed in March, 1939, was—$216,000.)
The practice of profit sharing has been in operation for thirteen fiscal years.
Within that period, total profit-sharing payments have been ..... $8,910,000.
Total Dividends to Shareholders within the same period have been ..... $9,550,000.
Total Sales for the same period have been ..... $1,716,000,000.

President.

Sports – And One Thing or Another

By FRANK MANN HARRIS

("A Sixbit Critic")

The following letter brings up a point that has doubtless intrigued many newspaper readers; and we pass it along without comment, in the hopes that our guardians of the law may be induced to look into the mystery. "Dear Mr. Sixbits," it begins, "I take it that you are interested in racing, deducting this from the way you misuse race-track language in your writings, and also from the fact that you are generally about a month overdue for a date with your barber and wear fringes instead of cuffs on your trousers, these being unmistakeable signs of the deep student of racing form. So I am writing you about a matter that has long been puzzling me.

"No doubt you have noticed," the epistle goes on, "the large number of chartered banks that have been informally entered of late; in fact such bust-ins are getting so common that I understand some of our papers are thinking of listing them no longer as Crime News, but under the heading of BUSINESS OPENINGS. You will also have noted how, in iti search for the culprits, The Law invariably comes across a number of citizens possessed of large sums of folding money which, they are always careful to explain, they won by betting on the races.

"Now I would be the last to doubt the veracity of such people," the letter concludes, "who are no doubt worthy citizens whose word is as good as their bail-bond. So I want you to use any influence you possess to find out something for me. As a turf investor who hasn't had a winning day since the afternoon HOROMETER copped the King's plate, I am eager to know what system those guys use for picking the horses they play so profitably."

It was the manager of a self-service grocery establishment who told us of the two very young housewives recently observed scanning a large display of various soaps and washing-powders, apparently undecided between two different brands, both making .the .claim .CUTS .YOUR DISH-WASHING IN HALF. "I know what I'm going to do," finally exclaimed one of the youthful matrons. "I'll buy a package of both kinds, and the darned old dishes will do themselves."

Decision of the Ontario Govt. to cut itself in for a small slice of football gates comes as no surprise—the only surprising feature being that it waited so long to do so. We may be sure, too, that what the Provincials have begun the Federal lads will not be slow in following up; and when they start in with their chisels and gouges, the wails of the sufferers are liable to be heart-rending indeed.

However, the football moguls may take what comfort they can from the thought that they have nobody but themselves to blame. For years they have made small effort to hide the fact that they were professionals in everything but name, with bigger, better and more frequent gates their principal aim. So if they are looking for sympathy, they would do better hunting under the letter "S" in the dictionary than among their cash customers.

The really interesting point is this —now that they've started in on football, will the same thing happen to amateur hockey? That great Winter pastime can ill afford to wrap the mantle of simon-purity about itself and point the finger of scorn elsewhere; nor are those football folks of a type liable to hold still under the probe of the taxing-lancet while hockey escapes with a whole skin.

Furthermore, should hockey come to be taxed, just where are they going to stop—or start—in a sport where there are junior clubs with vastly greater receipts—and expenditures—than any senior outfit can boast? It's all very confusing; and to a neutral observer it looks as if, before it's over and done with, Athletic Commissioner Apps might be wishing he'd stuck strictly to those Maple Leaf centre-ice duties of his.

That human nature is difficult to figure out is by no means a novel observation; but we had a new and beautiful example of its queerness the other day during a call from a middle-aged Englishman now visiting Canada. Asked about his country's rugged experiences during the war, he made light of them; and of last Winter's austerities, and the strict rationing and controls imposed by the Government since, he had little to say except that they were probably necessary.

But at one point in our chat he became extremely hot and bothered, indignantly exclaiming "One of these days those Socialist blighters will go too far!". When we heard him, we felt reassured that 'there'll always be an England.' For his outburst came when we told him of news just arrived—to the effect that Princess Elizabeth's honeymoon trip had been ordered curtailed!

TEEN-TOWN TOPICS

By BARRY MURKAR

"Where do you think you are going?" asked mom, as I prepared to make a get-away out through the back door.

"I'm going fishing with Susie down to the "deep-hole," I replied.

"That's what you think! What have you got in that bag?" Mom opened the ice box door and then made a lunge for the bag. "Give me that," she snapped — and snatched. "Half my chocolate cake gone and guests coming for dinner tonight. Honest-to-goodness Barry, you'll be the death of me yet! Now get that broom and get busy sweeping the front steps. After that I want you to go to the store."

"Gee whiz," I protested, "I'll never get fishing with all those jobs to do."

"If you hurry you'll have plenty of time for that," mother shot back. "You never bring home anything anyway unless it's a couple of dirty old mudcats."

Well, I finally finished these chores and was free to go—without the chocolate cake. Bounding up the front steps of Susie's house, I bumped into her mother."

"Well, Barry," she exclaimed. "I have been oloking for a strong man like you. I need someone to help put up the venetian blinds. Susie's father is working late tonight and my bridge club is coming in. I must get those blinds up this afternoon."

"But—," I started to argue, "I've never put up venetian blinds."

"There's absolutely nothing to it," came the reply. "The directions are with the blinds. Susie can help you"

I was cornered again.

Susie looked the perfect picture of dismay. Like two rats in a trap, we stared at the six boxes of blinds piled in the corner.

"Well, let's get cracking on these things," I growled. (Not loud enough for Susie's mother to hear).

The blinds each had two ropes. One wrapped around each end. In the middle of the blind was a package of thingamadoos. These were supposed to be screwed on the window-casing and also to be blind.

"I'll leave you two to go to work," said Susie's mom, "I have to go and make sandwiches."

First of all, we had no ladder. I tried standing on a chair, but couldn't reach the top of the window. Next I stepped on the window sill which brought a blast from Susie:' 'Get your dirty feet off those clean window sills or maw will kill you."

So what, I thought. Taking off my shoes, I got up again. The screw driver slipped from my hand and landed in the goldfish bowl on the table below me. Water splashed on the new wallpaper and two fish went slithering across the hardwood floor. Susie and I made a mad dash for the fish, knocking over chairs, upsetting a table of books and finally cornering the little fellows under the dining room table. Susie's mom came screaming from the kitchen; probably thinking a cyclone had hit the joint.

When this excitement quieted down, we tried again. The first two blinds were hanging at rakish angles and had to be taken down and straightened. My hands were blistered and bleeding in several spots where the screw driver had slipped and gashed me.

On the last window, I made a valiant effort to hurry the job. This was a mistake. Trying to balance a blind on my head, as I screwed in one end, meant defeat. The blind slipped. I slipped. The blind went out through the window with a terrifying crash and landed on the verandah. I went toward the center of the room with a terrifying yelp, and landed on my you-know-what, right in an old fashioned straw covered rocker. With my you-know-what protruding through the bottom of the chair, I made an effort to stand as Susie's mother entered the room. As I stood, the chair came up with me.

Susie and her mother stared at the open window with it's jagged edges and then back at me.

"I—I—I," came the gasping, choking sound from my throat.

"You'—you'", they chorused. They were stuck for words. Together they made a leap at me.

I jumped sideways and made for the front door, taking the chair with me. The arm of the chair caught on the door handle on the way through, leaving the chair behind and part of my pants with it.

Scooping up my fishing pole off the verandah as I went flying by, I ran all the way to the "deep hole."

I haven't ben over to Susie's place for over a week.

Home Building

In 1939 a five-roomed brick bungalow built in quantity in Toronto cost $3,500 while this year the cost is $5,200. The rise in the main costs of such a house since 1939 is enlightening. Painting is up 100 per cent., plastering 138, millwork 100, electrical 193, plumbing 116, heating 90, masonry 124, carpentry, 117 and excavating 53 per cent.—Financial Post.

YOUTH DEPENDS ON YOU FOR GUIDANCE

Today's youngsters are tomorrow's leaders. Canada's future depends on them. Anything you can do . . . by personal example or by directing youthful enthusiasm along useful channels . . . is a service to our country. Perhaps you can give some of your time to coaching a neighborhood hockey, baseball or football club—or to organizing a hobby group. You'll get a real kick out of this good work and real appreciation from the young people themselves. In addition, you'll be laying the foundation for their "Good Citizenship".

You can help this public service effort. Make a note of some of the little things which, in your opinion, contribute to Good Citizenship.
