YESTERDAY'S election in Grenville-Dundas, which resulted in Geo. H. Challies being returned with an increased majority, was keenly fought locally when workers for both candidates were active from morning until night. Chesterville gave Barnard a slightly smaller majority than obtained by Marselis in the last election when the latter had 58 majority here compared with 37 for Barnard yesterday.

The majorities throughout the riding, with perhaps slight corrections, were as follows:

	Challies	Barnard
Chesterville		37
Winchester	154
Cardinal		8
Iroquois	151
Morrisburg	56
Kemptville	163
Prescott		96
Merrickville	154
Mountain Twp.	256
Matilda Twp.	276
Williamsburg Twp.		75
Winchester Twp.	64
Oxford Twp.	324
Augusta Twp.	161
Willford Twp.	190
Edwardsburg Twp.		116
South Gower	37

The result throughout the province was not unexpected, although Western Ontario was not expected to go so solidly Liberal as it did. Eastern Ontario divided the honours in a more impartial manner.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATE.

George H. Challies

Winner over Percy Barnard, Spencerville, in yesterday's provincial contest in which Hepburn Government was given mandate for another term.

Car Foodstuff and Clothing To be Loaded Wednesday

In naming the collectors in the different districts who are expected to look after the soliciting of vegetables and clothing for the relief car to be loaded at Chesterville station next Wednesday, the name of Mr. E. Carroll, of Limerick, was inadvertently omitted.

The organization of the village and district is going on with the hopes a full car may be made up at this point. All vegetables and canned or dried fruit will be acceptable. The car will be at the local station next Wednesday morning, Oct. 13th, but if anyone finds it more convenient to bring in their donations the day before they will be taken care of by the Women's Institute at its room in the Community Hall where it will be packed and sent to the car.

SHORT COUNCIL MEETING.

The Village Council staged one of the shortest meetings on record Tuesday evening when the only business transacted was the passing of the accounts.

Ward Pitcher Died Sunday Following Midnight Blaze

Lamp Chimney Broken During Alleg-Drinking Party, Fire Starting in Stair Partition.—Pitcher Removed From Upstairs Room by R. Ouderkirk

INVESTIGATION UNDER WAY.

Ward Pitcher, 71, died Sunday afternoon of heart trouble brought on by shock following a fire in his home at the south end of town at midnight Saturday when he narrowly escaped death as fire spread from a lamp with a broken chimney up the stairway partition and between the upper floor. Robt. Ouderkirk, owner of the building, saw the blaze from his home and was successful in dousing the blaze with a few pails of water and getting Mr. Pitcher out of the upstairs room.

There had evidently been a drinking party staged, as police uncovered a number of empty and full liquor bottles. Pitcher and another man with him were both intoxicated ,police say.

Pitcher was taken to the Dominion House by Constable Garnet McLean and when he became ill about noon, he was removed to the home of Walter Collingridge where he died during the afternoon.

Coroner Dr. Peter McLaughlin, of Winchester was notified and ordered an investigation after consulting with Crow Attorney J. G. Harkness, K.C., of Cornwall. Provincial Constable commenced his search Monday morning, and an autopsy was performed on the remains by Dr. J. J. McKendry, of Winchester, in the presence of Dr. McLaughlin and Constable Rose at the funeral Parlours of H. M. Henderson, which failed to reveal any evidence of foul play. Death was said to have been caused by an acute heart condition and liver complaint and possibly hastened by shock.

At 12.15 Sunday morning, Mrs. Ouderkirk saw a light flickering in the Pitcher home and called to her husband. He hastened over and found the fire. Calling upstairs he was answered by Mr. Pitcher who said he was all right. A few pails of water were sufficient to extinguish the blaze and then Mr. Ouderkirk went upstairs to get Pitcher. He was found huddled in a baby's crib with the room in disorder.

With the aid of another man who was in the house, Pitcher was brought down the stairs and outside. Firemen on their arrival completed the fire-fighting task.

HOME FROM HOSPITAL.

Generous Voluntary Subscription Puts Hall Fund Over The Top

TWO weeks ago an appeal was made for donations to complete the objective of the committee in charge of the Special Hall-Building Fund. The response was immediate and has been most gratifying. The latest donor, Mr. Ralph Smith, volunteered the amount required to complete the payment of the last bill to which we were committed. Mr. Smith's donation was for an amount substantially greater than that of any other individual contributor and it is gratefully acknowledged because it was volunteered, because of the amount, and because it provided for the payment in full of the last outstanding bill.

The building of the Hall was possible only because of individual givings. The committee proceeded with insufficient funds in sight. We had faith in the people of this village and district and in our friends everywhere and that faith has been fully justified. Those who have assisted in this project have done a very fine thing. The sacrifices we have made will be more and more appreciated as the months and years pass. The doing of it has drawn us together in the bonds of a common interest that cannot but make for better citizenship.

Total Receipts to date have been	$ 1911.51
Total Disbursements	1911.29

In due time a complete accounting will be available for the reassurance of all parties interested.

Suitable furnishings would greatly enhance the usefulness and appearance of the stage. It would be a fine thing to have this accomplished before Old Home Week next year. Any further sums that may be tendered may be used for that purpose.

Winchester Jeweller Dies After Drinking Cyanide

J. A. McDougall, Winchester jeweller for the past 37 years, died Tuesday afternoon after drinking by mistake a quantity of potassium cyanide which was used for cleaning watches and which was in a glass on the workbench in his store.

Mr. McDougall was alone at the time and it is believed he might have been working with a magnifying glass in his eye and, reaching for a drink of water, took the wrong container, and before he realized his mistake had swallowed some of the deadly poison. He tried to reach the apartment over the store but collapsed on the stairs.

Mrs. H. Fader, his housekeeper, hearing him fall, rushed to his assistance, and called Dr. J. J. McKendry, who declared the man a victim of cyanide poisoning and that he was beyond help.

Mr. McDougall was born in Maxville 59 years ago, a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Alexander McDougall. He was educated in Maxville and served his apprenticeship in the jewellery trade there.

He later went to Chesterville, where he was employed by the late W. M. Saucier. In 1900, he established a business in Winchester, and in 1910 built a large business block on St. Lawrence and Main streets. In his younger years he was a prominent lacrosse player and took a keen interest in sports of all kinds.

He was a life member of Henderson Lodge A.F. and A.M. His wife, the former Lily Elliott, died in 1933. He has one brother-in-law, R. M. Elliott, of Winchester, and one sister-in-law, Miss Norah Elliott, also of Winchester, and a number of cousins in the vicinity of Maxville.

Kitchen Shower is Held In Honour of Bride-to-be

On Thursday evening last, a kitchen shower was held at the home of Mrs. Aden Bowman in honour of Miss Minnie Cameron whose wedding was to take place shortly. About 30 friends were present and the evening was spent in games, and music was furnished by Miss Vivian LaSalle.

During the evening an address was read by Miss Gwellda McGillivray and a basket of lovely presents was presented by Mrs. Aden Bowman and Mrs. Melvin McElroy. The bride's book and bouquet were presented by Miss Melba Perkins. Miss Cameron replied very nicely and voiced her thanks. All joined in singing "For She's A Jolly Good Fellow." A dainty lunch was served and all present signed the bride's book.

"THE CASHEL MAN-HUNT"

Third of a Series of True Dramas of R.C.M.P. Broadcast Over National Network.

THE case of the young Wyoming desperado, Ernest Cashel, who for many months defied all the resources of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police after committing murder, will be presented over the CBC national network on Tuesday, October 12, at 9.30 p.m. EST. This play, "The Cashel Man-Hunt," adapted by Harwood Steele from official records and produced by Rupert Lucas, will be the third of a series of true dramas based on the history of the force. Cashel was one of the "bad men" of the early American west who fled into Canada after a series of crimes in Wyoming and other states. The reckless outlaw continued his wild career on this side of the border by murdering a Canadian rancher. The Scarlet Riders combed the Prairies for hundreds of miles in quest of the elusive Cashel, and it wasn't until months later that they finally brought him to the bar of justive. Five days before the date of his execution, he escaped from a Calgary guardroom, under the very shadow of the gallow. The Wyoming criminal started another reign of terror, pillaging scores of farm houses and robbing lonely travellers. After one of the most thorough searches in the annals of the Mounties, they tracked him down to pay his debt to society.

BEATTY SEES HOPE WEST ON COMPLETING LONG TOUR

Montreal. — Sir Edward Beatty, Chairman and President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, struck a note of optimism concerning Western Canada's outlook on his arrival from 8,000 miles of travel through the Western Provinces.

"Wheat will total something better than early advices had led us to hope," said the railway hear, who has just completed his annual inspection tour over C.P.R. lines. "After domestic requirements are filled the exportable surplus will be small, but prevailing prices will in some measure compensate. Many sections of the country, on account of excellent grain and live stock prices, will this year take a long forward step towards normal conditions of prosperity," he asserted.

Drought areas inspired less cheering comment. "Central and Southern Saskatchewan are suffering tragedy," Sir Edward declared. "Not only is grain a failure, but the shortage of feed for stock means large numbers of cattle will have to be sent to other parts of the country."

Manitoba he described as being "in an extremely happy position." Crops would approach the best in history, while, in Alberta, he saw a generally "favourable" situation. Besides fair to good crops, a plentitude of fodder had brought considerable relief with stock in splendid shape.

HYDRO IS YOURS....USE IT !

THE SHOW MUST GO ON!

There is an unwritten law in the theatrical profession. Regardless of what happens—"the show must go on!" In thousands of theatres throughout Ontario this same traditional rule still applies, but in a different way. Today, "the show must go on"—with Hydro.

The "Talkies" and Hydro, bring to the cities and the small towns alike, the best the theatre offers in drama, music, comedy, while travelogues and news-reels bring a new form of education.

Hydro also makes it possible to enjoy your theatre night right through the hottest season, with the aid of air conditioning and cooling systems, which the majority of theatres now provide.

This same Hydro service that is essential for the "Talkies" is also necessary for night baseball, tennis, lawn bowling and other forms of night entertainment and sport, which electricity now makes it possible to enjoy to a much greater degree.

Thus in the realm of entertainment and sport—as in so many other phases of activity—Hydro—your Hydro—makes an essential contribution to a better, happier, healthier livelihood for the people of the Province of Ontario with its low-cost power.

The success of Hydro in being able to lower power costs in the past two years in the face of a general increase in the price of practically everything we use, is a noteworthy achievement. Its continuous efforts to lower these power costs still further, and extend the benefits which accrue throughout the Province of Ontario, is a matter in which you should be vitally interested.

On Thursday of last week, Messrs. Wray McPherson, Rupert McMillan, Lee Smith and Lee Merkley started out to find work in the Quebec lumber woods. Rev. R. S. and Mrs. Smith accompanied them to Maniwaki and saw them safely landed in good jobs. During their visit in Maniwaki, Rev. and Mrs. Smith were guests of Rev. Geo. Perrigard. On the return journey they were guests of friends in Kazabazua, The trip along the Gatineau is marvelous in its beauty, but the condition of the roads is abominable.

On Sunday morning a very impressive communon service was enjoyed by a large congregation in the United church. The pastor conducted the service.

On Sunday afternoon the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Graham McPherson was baptized in the United church, receiving the names Helen Lenore; and the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Barkley was baptized, receiving the names Keith Raymond. The ceremony was performed by the pastor of the church, Rev. R. S. Smith, B.D. A very interesting feature of the ceremony was that the little boy and girl were cousins, Mr. McPherson and Mrs. Barkley being brother and sister, children of Mr. and Mrs. Morley McPherson.

Rev. W. Lister, of Dundela, has been a recent guest at the parsonage.

A very interesting mail has just arrived from each of the post offices in the Arctic Circle and North-West Territories visited during the past summer by the Govenment boat the S. S. Nascopie.

THE GEM OF THE OCEAN.

Interesting Facts About Our Dominion of Canada.

THE PEARL is the birth gem for June. From prehistoric times it has been worshipped for its beauty. It is mentioned in the Book of Job and in the Talmud. During the height of Rome's power, pearls were the most desired possessions of her princes and women of fashion. Throughout history, in dedications, gifts and benefactions, the pearl was the predominating jewel, chosen to express human feeling at its height. The Gaekwar of Baroda has a sash of one hundred rows of pearls. The value of seven of these rows is near to a million dollars. Many old stories say that these beautiful gems were tears which the gods changed into pearls.

The pearl of the oyster is built up of layer on layer of carbonate of lime, skin on skin. similar to the layers of an onion. The trade name generally applied to all salt water pearls is the "oriental" because of the superior orient or sheen they are said to possess. Nor do fresh water pearls have the fine colours of the salt water gems. Incidentally the true or gemuality pearls are almost never found in edible oysters.

The source of the oriental pearl is the Persian Gulf, the northern coasts of Australia, Japan, Panama, Venezuala and the South Sea Islands. Fresh water pearls are got in some North American rivers and in Scotland, while the pink Conch pearl is found in Florida and the West Indies.

In common with their sisters of other lands, the women of Canada love pearls and the importation last year of these gems. real and artificial, was upwards of $100,000.

Williamsburg Constable Narrowly Escapes Injury

Constable Lawrence Riddell was forced to leap for his life to the side of the road at Williamsburg Sunday night when an automobile which he had signalled to stop drove straight at him, then disappeared up the highway in a burst of speed.

The licence number of the machine was that of a sedan stolen some time ago from W. L. Currier, of Ottawa, and further identification of ownership was found in Boy Scout equipment thrown from the car, and having Mr. Currier's name marked on it.

Occupants of the stolen car had tried to enter Weber's store at Williamsburg, and after the attempt had disappeared in the direction of Chesterville. Ottawa police were advised that the car was apparently heading for Ottawa. The machine had also been seen at Glen Becker where an attempt was made to break into a service station operated by Claude Barclay.

Hardy Roses.

She was purchasing her spring seeds for her garden, and her questioning was boring the salesman to the point of exasperation.

"And, oh, by the way," she continued, "what is a hardy rose?"

"A hardy rose, madam, replied the seedsman slowly, "is one that will allow you to dig it up every morning and night to see if it is taking root!"

But there is a very simple method by which better newspapers can be produced, and that is for those who subscribe to them to take an individual interest in seeing that they get more local and personal news. If you have visitors or if you have been on a visit send or phone the information to your home town paper. Every little item of a local or personal nature helps that much to make a still better newspaper. That is how you can help make your newspaper more interesting and you are invited to start doing so at once.

SAFE MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT

The Daily Sentinel-Review, Woodstock, Ont.

MEN connected with the finance departments of municipalities who have been in convention at Boston are impressed by the unanimity of the opinion voiced there that there is no reason why municipalities should be in financial trouble if they would adhere to sound business principles. It is the experiments in unorthodox functions that have pauperized so many municipalities. They have consented to the inauguration of projects involving unjustified expenditure, out of all proportion to legitimate revenues.

The sphere of action for a municipal administration of any kind, from the hamlet to the metropolis, ought to be to provide its people with the basic utilities, roadways, sidewalks, water supply, sewers, police protection, primary education, light and transportation. Today even some of these conveniences, such as light and transportation, are provided by organizations outside the municipal scope. The municipalities that have incurred insolvency invariably have been those whose governments have been swayed by the appeals of boomsters who urged super-development calculated to benefit their personal schemes. They embarked on projects that were outside their legitimate realm, the cost of which saddled a burden on the community that the latter was unable to carry.

A municipal government has a much better opportunity to operate successfully than has a private corporation, since it has arbitrary authority to collect taxes. A private corporation, besides being exposed to much competition, has to assume heavy losses on account of customers who are unable to pay. That is one important reason why a municipality ought to be a financial success.

It is encouraging to find that the officers of municipalities who are chiefly concerned with the finances are imbued with the idea that a simple formula of sticking to legitimate functions will protect the corporations from monetary embarrassment.

JUST AN ACCIDENT!

A pleasant Sunday afternoon in the country. Thousands of happy families "out for a drive," whizzing along a typically picturesque Ontario highway. Suddenly, around a curve—screams, the shriek of brakes and tires, a terrific crash, the screech of tearing metal, the sickening shatter of glass, agonizing moans — then a deathly moment of silence.

A man, one arm hanging limp, crawls from the wreckage. One ear has been flayed from the side of his head. He leans over someone else in the car, then collapses.

Help comes almost immediately. Limp, broken bodies are dragged from the wreckage and laid on the roadside. A thin red stream trickles over the running-board of the car and forms a pool on the highway. One body is covered over with a blanket. Two others are rushed to the hospital; there may still be time to save them. A bystander peers curiously into the back of the car. He turns away with a shudder and is violently sick; someone else fishes out an arm and tucks it under the blanket beside the still body.

Horrible, isn't it? But neither uncommon nor exaggerated. It is simply a factual report of one of the 501 motor accidents in 1936 which resulted in fatalities. The headline in the newspaper next day read something like: "ONE DEAD IN CURVE CRASH, TWO IN HOSPITAL MAY DIE." You've seen dozens of headlines just like it, but how often do you stop to think of the hideous picture of blood and pain and death that lies behind them.

Accidents are horrible. Horrible to hear about and look at. Horrible in the pain and agony and sorrow they bring. Most horrible in the realization that THEY NEED NOT HAPPEN!

In Ontario, the Department of Highways is determined they will not happen. But to prevent them, it needs your help. You must drive (and walk) carefully, sanely. You must stop taking chances. And you must make sure that others do the same thing by reporting those who endanger lives by reckless driving. Dismiss any silly prejudice which suggests "it's none of your business." It is your business! It is one of your responsibilities to yourself and to the community. It is one of your duties as a citizen—and it is one of your duties as a human being to help save others from a needless death or injury. You are your brother's keeper!

$200,000,000 IN PAPER MONEY CIRCULATING IN CANADA

Ottawa.—Hidden in teapots or under mattresses, carried about in pockets and purses or deposited in merchants' tills, more than $200,000,000 in paper money is in the hands of the Canadian public ,according to the September statistical summary of the Bank of Canada.

The August average of note circulation, as distinguished from notes in banks, was $203,000,000, higher than any time since the boom year 1929, when it averaged $205,000,000.

In 1865 tax collections were poor and the Intendent Demeulles was harassed by demands of soldiers for their pay. The suppy ships of Louis XIV. were not due for months. As an expedient, Demeulles cut playing cards into four, marked them to denote different amounts, and signed them. Merchants were compelled by ordinance to accept them as money.

HEALTH

BAD BREATH

A BAD BREATH is altogether undesirable and, for that reason, consideration should be given by everyone to the causes of the condition in order to avoid its occurrence.

The fermentation of food particles in the mouth will almost certainly cause a bad breath. This commonly occurs when food is held in a decaying tooth cavity. Proper care of the teeth, by brushing them regularly after meals and—most important of all—at bedtime, in order to get rid of food particles, and by the securing of regular dental care will prevent bad breath from a source that is now common.

Where there is actual disease of the mouth, such as pyorrhœa, or of the adjoining parts, bad breath may result either from the condition itself or from the fermentation of food particles which the condition favours. A healthy throat and a mouth kept clean by regular use of the toothbrush are the first considerations in preserving an inoffensive breath.

In addition to the local conditions, which act as a cause of bad breath, there are general conditions which bring it about. We think, first, of the digestive tract because in our minds a bad taste in the mouth is frequently associated with digestive upsets. Bad breath does occur quite often among those who overeat, or whose elimination is faulty. The bad breath, in such cases, is really a symptom of an abnormal condition of the digestive tract and is regarded as such by the individual's physician.

Under such conditions, the remedy lies in altering the mode of living. A proper diet, avoidance of over-eating or of over-indulgence in one or more articles of diet, regular elimination, increased intake of water, and exercise are the points which should first be dealt with.

The correction of an unpleasant odour should always be thought of along the lines of the removal of the cause. It is much preferable to overcome body odours by regular bathing than by attempting to overpower them by using perfumes. In the same way, the logical manner of dealing with bad breath is to remove its cause.

A treatment of symptoms is necessary, but their cure and the prevention of their recurrence depend upon the treatment of the cause, the root of the condition. It never pays to temporize; it is always satisfactory to get to grips with the cause.

Hunters Find Hoppers Fair Game Out West

Whoppers that Grow in Little Saskatchewan town Command Respect of Sportsmen.—Hotelkeeper Tells of Fence-Uproot-Insect He Shot—Maybe.

PAGE Paul Bunyan and hold on to your hats. The grasshoppers are coming.

Out in Saskatchewan—this side of Weyburn—what entomologists used to call grasshopper control is now looked upon as big game hunting. Why, they grew so big. . . .

Well, one farmer rushed out to the barn to find two hoppers had just killed his best team of horses. He fled back into the house for his shotgun and when he reached the barn again, the grasshoppers were pitching horseshoes to decide which would get the harness to eat. . . .

Everybody out in that country has seen miles of fence taken down, the work of the insects that were getting too big to crawl under the wires. . ..

Schoolboys in many areas are training the creatures to pull their wagons to school. . . .

Animal husbandrymen at the university at Saskatoon are developing a dairy-type hybrid by crossing with Guernseys. They fear butterfat tests will be low for a few generations, but have high hopes for a hardy animal with good foraging ability. . . .

A man from down east drove out south of Regina in his auto, and, though he had been warned to look out for grasshoppers, he drove into one and wrecked his new sedan. But that was all right, for the hopper, feeling sorry for the easterner, offered to carry him back to Regina.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

RUMANIAN SCOUT PROVES TO BE MODERN DAVID

A Rumanian Boy Scout, Constantine Varaticeanu, watching his father's sheep, emulated David's battle with the lion when an eagle swooped down to carry off a lamb. As the great bird rose with the lamb, the Scout threw himself upon it, and after a terrific struggle had the eagle secured with good Scout knots. In recognition of his bravery Scout Varaticeanu received a medal from the King of Rumania.

BOY SCOUTS' "PERPETUAL FIRE OF FRIENDSHIP"

A thought-provoking feature at the recent National Jamboree of the Boy Scouts of America at Washington, attended by Scouts from 27 foreign countries, was a "Perpetual Fire of Friendship." The fire, which symbolized the unity, peace and good-will existing among Boy Scouts throughout the world, was lighted with an impressive Jamboree, and was kept burning brightly day and night until the close of the camp. Ashes from the fire were then collected and taken by the American Scout contingent to the World Scout Jamboree in Holland, where the fire was rekindled.

BOY SCOUTS ON POSTAGE STAMPS.

Several countries have issued special Boy Scout postage stamps from time to time, including Holland and Hungary, in connection with Scout gatherings held in those countries. Rumania has issued four series, the first in 1931. Of these the 3 leu stamp pictures the investitutre of a Tenderfoot Scout. Scouts in camp appear on another, and on another a Scout bringing food to a starving mother and baby. The Rumanian Chief Scout, Prince Nicholas, and King Carol, in Scout uniform, appear on two high value stamps. Another series show a Wolf Cub signalling the letter "X" in semaphore, two Scouts cooking over a camp fire, and a Scout with pack and staff on the trail. The same series was over-printed in 1934, the surtax going toward the upkeep of the Rumanian Scout Jamboree of that year. The last series, of 1935, show a Sea Scout, a land Scout and a Girl Guide on the 10 leu stamp; Sea Scouts and and land Scouts on the 2 leu, a Scout bugler on the 1 leu, and a saluting Sea Scout on the ½ leu.

PLAIDS, BLACK AND BROWN, FOR DUCHESS OF WINDSOR

Paris.—"Wallis blue" went by the board last week.

New clothes chosen by the Duchess of Windsor were black, brown and red. Only one costume struck the familiar blue note. It was a travelling ensemble in navy blue woollen.

There was a strong note of plaid in apparel the Duchess selected for day wear at Mainbocher's, where a private room was set aside for her fittings.

Her new dinner frocks for winter parties were of lamé and georgette. The fabrics chosen for formal evening gowns included broadcloth, tulles, flashing metal fabrics and sombre velvets.

COWS AND THE FIRE BELL.

Who says cows aren't intelligent? Here's the manager of a farm near Washington who claims all its 195 cows run to the nearest exit and leave their barns two minutes after a fire bell rings. If cows in general could be so trained, farmers woud be spared many heavy losses in barn fires.

Sale Prices.

"Business is so quiet that we had better have a special sale," said the shoe merchant.

"All right," said the store manager, "what shall it be?"

"Well," said the boss, "take that line of $5.00 shoes and mark them down from $10.00 to $8.50."

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

MISS HELEN LACEY, B.H.Sc.

FRYING IN DEEP FAT.

FOODS fried in deep fat are sometimes considered unwholesome because of the absorption of fat. This can be prevented by following a few simple rules.

* * * *

GENERAL RULES —For— DEEP FAT FRYING

1. Use a fat which will drain from the food before cooling, as lard or a good lard substitute.

2. Have the fat at the proper temperature before beginning to fry. For food already cooked, a cube of bread should brown in 40 seconds, and for uncooked foods, the bread should brown in 60 seconds.

3. After using, strain fat through cheese cloth, cover when cold and keep in a cool place. The fat may be used several times.

POTATO APPLES.

2 cups hot riced potatoes
2 tablespoons butter
1-3 cup grated cheese
½ teaspoon salt
Few grains cayenne
2 tablespoons milk
2 egg yolks

Mix all ingredients together, beat thoroughly. Cool. Shape into small round balls; roll each ball in bread crumbs, then in beaten egg, and again in crumbs. Fry in fat which will brown a cube of bread in 40 seconds. When nicely browned, remove from the fat, drain on unglazed paper, garnish and serve while hot.

SALMON CROQUETTES.

1 cup hot mashed potatoes
1 cup flaked salmon
½ teaspoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 egg yolk

Mix all ingredients thoroughly; chill. Shape in cylinders or small balls. Roll in bread crumbs, beaten egg and bread crumbs. Fry in fat which will brown a cube of bread in 40 seconds. Drain and serve with any desired fish sauce.

FRITTERS.

Fritters are entrées made from pieces of fruit dipped in batter and then fried in deep fat, or from chopped fruit or vegetables stirred into the batter and fried by spoonsful.

Left-overs can be often used to make fritters and in this way can be served in an appetizing and disguised form.

Fritter Batter.

1 cup flour
½ teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
1-3 cup milk
1 egg
½ tablespoon melted butter

Mix and sift dry ingredients. Add milk, beaten egg and butter. Mix well.

Apple Fritters.

Wipe, quarter, core and pare two apples; cut into small pieces. Stir into fritter batter. Drop by spoonfuls in deep fat which browns a cube of bread in 60 seconds. When cooked, drain on unglazed paper; sprinkle with powdered sugar and serve.

Corn Fritters.

1 cup drained canned corn
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon paprika
Few grains cayenne
2 eggs

Mix corn and flour sifted with the baking powder and seasonings. Add egg yolks well beaten; fold in stiffly beaten whites. Drop by spoonfuls in fat which will brown a cube of bread in 60 seconds. Cook until golden brown; drain on paper and serve hot.

FRENCH FRIED POTATOES.

Wash and pare potatoes; cut in slices or in strips. Soak one hour in cold water. Drain; dry thoroughly between towels. Cook in deep fat which browns a cube of bread in 40 seconds. Cook until a golden brown; drain on unglazed paper; sprinkle with salt and serve hot.

Sweet potatoes may be French-fried in the same way.

In preparing crumbs for deep-fat frying, dry pieces of stale bread in the oven until crisp. Put through food chopper or roll fine.

* * * *

When deep-fat frying, put enough fat into the kettle to submerge to a depth of from one to two inches the foods to be fried.

* * * *

Do not fill the kettle more than three-quarters full of fat. Fat in an over-full kettle may bubble over and catch fire.

* * * *

Do not put large quantities of food in hot fat at one time as: firstly, it will cool the fat below the proper cooking temperature; secondly, the hot fat causes the moisture in the foods to boil and this bubbling may cause the fat to bubble over the edge of the kettle and catch fire.

* * * *

Care should always be taken when using fat to prevent it from catching fire.

"Alibi Al"

HE WAS the only new fellow in our tent that summer. All the last-year crowd were back: Roger Brown, Joe Haley, Jimsy Rollins and I; and Polk Drummond, one of the best of the counselors, was in charge. At Nanepash each tent holds five fellows and a counsellor or a junior counsellor, and there were twelve tents. Doctor Whittier, the director, never takes more than sixty, and so you have to work like the dickens to get up there. But it's worth the trouble. for it's a corking camp, and you find a mighty nice lot of chaps.

Roger and I were getting into good old camp togs that first afternoon when Jimsy came stumbling down the headquarters trail and brought the news. "He's a fellow named Alfred Follen," said Jimsy. "Jack Cooper knows him. He goes to Jack's school, and Jack says he plays ball."

"That'll help," I said. "Upper's going to need talent this year."

We had a camp baseball team and played some of the other camps each summer, but the best games were between Upper tents and Lower tents. I was captain of the Upper and of course keen to beat the Lower again, as we had last summer. My name's William Phipps, by the way, though I am generally called Billy.

"What's he like, this Follen?" I asked Jimsy.

"I don't know. Jack didn't say any more, but I guess he's all right. He hasn't come yet."

"Probably be along on the next load," said Roger. "Joe, too. Old tent seven's lucky not to have more than one stranger, eh? Three's got only two of the last-year crowd, Billy, and they've stuck the new counsellor in there, too,—the tall fellow. Name's Mildew or something."

"Meldrum," chuckled Jimsy."

"Is that it? Anyhow, Bob Fraser's disgusted and trying to exchange to tent five. Wish he could get in here. I don't like fellows named Alfred Follen."

"Ever know any?" I asked.

Roger said he didn't, and Jimsy and I laughed at him.

We went down to the ball field about four o'clock and limbered up for an hour or so, and I didn't run across Follen until just before supper. He was alone in the tent, unpacking his bag when I got there. I said I supposed his name was Follen, and my name was Phipps, and we shook hands. He was a nice-looking guy about my age, which is sixteen, with darkish hair and gray eyes and a sort of pert nose. I told him he had got in the best tent in camp, and he said he was glad to hear it, and then I asked, "Do you play ball?"

"Oh, yes," he answered. "I've played—some."

Saying it as he did and smiling a little, I knew he was pretty good. It turned out he was a catcher, which was better still on account of Buster Ward not coming back and Upper being in need of a good catcher. I took Follen along to the wash-up and then over to the dining-hall and got him a seat at our table.

Of course we "put him through" that night, same as we did all the new fellows, and he did a comical act when his cot went flat the moment he sat on it. We helped him fix it up, very sympathetic, and then he got in and found it was full of sand. He was a little bit peeved about that and sputtered some until Polk told him to pipe down on account of the lights being out. The last I heard of him he was trying to get his bed made again.

NINETEEN fellows turned out for practice the next day, and it did look as if Upper would have a ball team. After a while we made up two nines and went through four innings. Al Follen caught for one side and wasn't bad until he tried to throw to bases. Then he was awful. One time with three on he got it into his ivory dome that he could catch the runner napping at second. As there were two out, it would have been fine if he had done it, but he plugged the old apple three feet above Gus Lozier's head and let three runs in. Another time, with a runner on third and two down again, Harry Luden, who was pitching, knocked down a liner and, getting rattled, threw to the plate instead of to first. Follen was so surprised that he just stepped aside, and the ball went through the backstop and the other team scored again. By the time practice was over I saw that friend Al wasn't so good as he was touted, and, going back up the hill, I said, "Where'd you play catcher before today, Follen?"

"On my school team," he answered. "I caught all this spring."

"Well, I said, "you sure made some bad breaks today."

"Yes, I wasn't used to the ball."

"What was the matter with the ball?"

"It was a 'Junior.' I've been playing with a 'Big League.' There's a lot of difference, you know."

I looked at him hard, but he didn't seem to be joking, and so I said: "Well, in case we don't get hold of any 'Big League' balls by tomorrow, I guess you'd better play in centre field. And, listen: if you make a catch, you'd better run it in instead of throwing it!"

I thought maybe he'd get mad, but he didn't. He just said, "All right, cap."

He might have been a fair fielder if it hadn't been for the sun. You see the field was laid out so that in the afternoon the sun was in your eyes if you were in right or centre, and Al only got one out of about three chances. I might have switched him to left, only that was Joe Haley's position, and Joe didn't want to swap. So, as we didn't have any sun glasses in camp, I told Al he'd better sit on the bench until we got a pair. Somehow I always forgot to send for them.

Everyone liked him, though, even Roger, who had sort of made up his mind he wasn't going to. He was awfully even-tempered and never got peevish for more than a second, no matter how sarcastic you were; and he got a lot of sarcasm for a while. You see, he was one of those guys who can do anything anyone else can do and do it a little better too, only there was always something in the way; like not having the right kind of ball or the sun getting in his eyes—or like when we were putting the shot one evening back of the tent. Al came along and looked on a minute. Then he said, "Let me try it, will you? I used to be pretty good at it." So he made a couple of heaves, and the best he could do was about twenty feet. "I'm out of practice, I guess," he said, shaking his head.

"What's the best you ever did?" I asked, winking at Roger.

"Twenty-eight feet, nine inches. But of course that was with a toe board. A toe board's a great help to you."

"It must be," said I, "if it lets you do seven feet better than that last try!"

HE looked pretty good on the tennis court, and he smashed the balls around mighty impressively as he was warming up. But when he and Joe got to playing Joe trimmed him 6-3, 6-2. Al said he was surprised he had done so well, considering the court. I asked him what was wrong with it, and he said it was rough.

"That's nothing." I replied. "You'll like it a lot better after you've used it a few times."

But he said no, that it would hurt his game to play a poor court, and he guessed he'd better lay off it. It turned out that he had played Sandy Weiner once and got one out of three sets from him. At least that's what Al said, and, as he wasn't ever caught in a lie so far as I know. maybe he did. Maybe Sandy wasn't feeling well that day.

I don't just recall who started the "Alibi Al" business; perhaps it was sort of spontaneous. Anyway, by the time camp had been running a week, Follen was "Alibi Al" to everyone. Or sometimes it was just "Alibi." He didn't seem to mind, but acted as if he thought it was a good joke on him. You couldn't help liking the guy.

One day we got him to umpire a game with Breasted Camp. He lasted three innings. Then two or three of the Breasted Camp fellows wanted to lay him out, and we retired Alibi to private life. Some of his decisions had certainly been funny, too! Where he made his big mistake was in calling Joe safe on third when he was forced. Al thought the third baseman should have tagged him and insisted upon it. Afterwards he owned up that he had made a mistake and said he hadn't looked over the rules for a long time and was sort of rusty.

We had our first hike about the middle of July, and Alibi was awfully keen for it. Hiking was one of the best things he did, it seemed. The rest of us didn't say anything much; we just let him tell about some trips he had made. But we grinned a lot when he wasn't looking. It was what we called the short hike, that one. We started at nine in the morning and went up Nanepash and down the other side over a trail we'd made, and stopped at twelve to eat. We started again at one and made the summit of Old Man by four-thirty. Of course we each had a pack, and twenty pounds gets pretty heavy after six hours. Alibi was as sprightly as you please until about three o'clock. Then he began lagging behind and having trouble with his shoes and his pack.

HE was mighty good-natured about it and wanted us to go right on and not bother about him, but that was against the rules on account of a fellow getting lost once up there, and so we all waited for him to get fixed up again. He said he was sorry to be such a nuisance, but he wasn't used to hiking in the kind of shoes he was wearing, and they hurt his feet. He told Polk and "Mildew" just what sort of a shoe was best for rough walking like this, and Polk said he'd sure try to get him a pair and wrote down the address Alibi gave him. Alibi was all in when we reached camp, and I was sorry for him. He was too tired to eat much supper, and two or three times after we put up the pup tents I heard him groaning. Next morning, though, he was feeling a heap better, and going down the Rat River Trail he told Roger and me about a trip through the White Mountains a couple of years before. He had sure torn off the miles that time. but of course he had the right shoes for it. We fetched home at three that afternoon, and Alibi slept until supper time.

Camp Nanepash is six miles from good bathing, and even then it isn't so blamed good. We'd go down and hit the highway south for four miles and then take a trail that led to Round Pond. It was a pretty stiff hike and we'd start early in the morning so we could spend most of the day in the water.

The pond wasn't big, and it was full of pads except at one place where there was an old pier and a diving-board. You had to go pretty nearly to the middle to find a place that was over your head much. We made our first trip to Round Pond about a week after the short hike, and there was a lot of talk about it for a couple of days beforehand. Of course we asked Alibi Al about his swimming and diving, and we got just what we expected. He wasn't much on the sprints, he said. but he could swim a long while. Once he said he had done a mile and three quarters. Rogers said that wasn't much; he had done three miles and better himself. Alibi said well, he didn't call himself much of a swimmer, but he certainly loved it. Diving was another thing he was fond of. He wasn't much on fancy stuff, though: he liked high dives.

Joe looked kind of hard at him then. "Say, Alibi, have you ever been to Round Pond?"

"That's where we're going? No."

"Then some one must have told you about it." said Joe, "because there isn't a chance of a dive higher than five feet, and you couldn't swim a quarter of a mile no matter how you planned it."

Alibi looked puzzled. "I don't see what you mean," he replied. "But it doesn't matter much to me if I can't swim very far, and I guess you don't have to dive to have fun. What time do we start?"

"Some one told him about that mud hole," sighed Joe when Al had gone off with Roger to play volley ball. "I am wondering what his alibi would have been if the lake was a big one with a twenty-foot tower."

"He'd have had one," I said. "Trust him!"

"Yeah, and it would have been a good one," said Jimsy admiringly "What I want to know, fellows, is this. Is he just a plain liar or—or what?"

Just then Polk came along, and we put it to him. Polk was a little fellow who wore spectacles and was sort of bald in spite of only being about twenty-five or maybe twenty-six. He was about the best of the counsellors and knew more about camping and hunting and fishing than any of them except the doc. We all liked Polk. He looked thoughtful for a minute and then said: "No, I don't think Follen lies, Billy, not consciously at any rate. And you can't call him a four-flusher either. The way I dope it out is like this. In the first places he's an egotist."

"Yeah, I guess that's right," murmured Jimsy, who wasn't quite sure what an egotist was and was afraid we'd suspect it. "Yeah, an egotist."

"Thanks, Jimsy. Wel, when Follen does a thing he thinks pretty well of it. If you and he, Billy, did the same thing in exactly the same way, he'd think he had done a bit better. That is, he'd think you had done perfectly well but he had performed rather extraordinary. You'l notice he never belittles the other fellow's stunt."

"No, that's right," I agreed. "He doesn't knock."

"No. Well, after he's pulled something off," Polk went on, "he gets to thinking about it, and it looks better to him all the time. He doesn't mean to exaggerate, probably doesn't know that he does. It's sort of—sort of automatic. Probably works out something like this. We'll suppose, for example, that he's done, say, sixteen feet in a broad jump. He goes home and his mind gets busy. That was a good jump, and he's a good jumper; yes, sir, a mighty good jumper. Being as good a jumper as he is, that sixteen-foot jump must have been better than he thought at the time. More likely it was seventeen feet, because sixteen wouldn't have been much of a jump for a fellow like him. Probably it was fully seventeen, or anyway, it might easily have been seventeen. Even eighteen feet wouldn't be much more than you'd look for from as skillful a chap as he. No, sir, eighteen feet was reasonable enough."

"Don't sound like sense to me," said Joe. "Must be some of that psychology we studied last term."

"Yes, you'll have to go psychology for an explanation of it," agreed Polk.

"Seems to me he's lying just the same," said Jimsy.

"No, he isn't, because a lie is a deliberate, premeditated attempt to deceive, Jimsy. The deception is there, I'll grant, but it isn't intended."

"Looks to me then," said I, "as if egotism has the same relation to lying as kleptomania has to stealing!"

"Just about," chuckled Polk. "Only of course all egotists don't get the results Follen does. He's a decent chap, and it's too bad he's got this habit."

"What bothers me," said Joe, "is the nifty way he gets out of a jam. That bird must have invented excuses!

"Egotism again, Joe. He says he has done a thing, tries to do it again and fails. What's the explanation? You say he never did do it, but Follen can't accept that explanation because it would be opposed to his delusion of grandeur. He looks around for another explanation and finds it and is sincerely convinced it's the true one."

"Like the toe board," I muttered. Polk asked what that was, and I told him, and he nodded.

Tea for every Taste

"SALADA" TEA

"Exactly. He missed the toe board and at once concluded that the lack of it affected his efforts. And quite possibly it did."

"Rats!" I said. "He never tossed a six-pound shot any twenty-eight feet some inches!"

"Maybe not, Billy, but he thinks he did."

"Well, all I can say," put in Joe, "is it's a rotten bad habit, and some one ought to break him of it."

"I agree," said Polk. "Why don't you fellows try it?"

"How?" asked Joe and I in chorus.

"Well, I'm not sure that I know the answer," replied Polk laughing, "but I've got an idea, and you can see what you think of it."

WHEN we got to Round Pond, which we did about half past ten, it didn't take us more than two shakes of a lamb's tail to get into bathing suits and hit the water. When you haven't had a swim for two or three weeks any old pond feels good. After cooling off a bit we started diving, and, seeing Alibi Al wasn't taking part in the exercises, we yelled to him to come in and try the board. He seemed willing enough but you could see that he didn't approve of the thing, which was only a few feet off the surface. He made a poor dive with his legs spread and hit pretty flat, and we teased him when he came up. He just grinned and tried it again. He didn't do much better the next time, though, and said he was through.

"I never could dive from that height," he explained. "There isn't time to get straightened out, you see."

Joe looked around longingly, but there wasn't a thing doing. I guess he'd have built a platform for Alibi if he'd had some tools! In the water Alibi swam around with the rest of us and I noticed he used the breast stroke most of the time. Polk and the three counsellors who had come along staged some stunts and a few short races, and Alibi started in everything but never finished. After a while we rested up on shore, and some of the fellows built fires and began to get the grub ready. Roger and Joe and I—we'd taken Roger into the plot—stuck pretty close to Alibi, and when Joe wanted Roger to show him about surface-diving and we went back to the pond, Alibi came along. We swam out a little way, maybe up to our shoulders, and Roger did his stuff. Out in the middle of the pond a youngster named Stedley was pushing himself around in an old leaky skiff. Of course he could swim like a fish, else he wouldn't have been allowed in the boat. But Alibi didn't know that, and when we heard the splash and looked out there, and Stedley came up thrashing his arms wild and yelling like Sam Hill, why, Alibi got pretty wild.

"Gosh!" shouted Joe. "That kid's fallen in!"

"Don't look as if he can swim either!" velled Roger. "Look at him! Some one'll have to swim out there!"

"He's drowning!" stammered Alibi. "Save him!"

Well, he certainly was giving a mighty good imitation of a fellow who coudn't swim! And yell—gosh, he put up an awful howl! Then he went under, and Alibi shook his hand at me and waved toward the boat and couldn't get the words out. I shook my head sadly.

"No use me trying it," I said. "How about you, Joe?"

But Joe shook his head, too, and Roger just kept on shouting and pointing. Alibi looked around toward the shore.

"Help!" he cried, pointing and waving. "Help! Boy drowning!"

"Maybe they can't hear," said I. "You'd better go, Al. It's only a little way, not more than two hundred yards I guess."

"Me!" stammered Alibi, looking scared to death. "But—but I can't—I swim so slow—"

"Well, you don't want him to drown, do you?" cried Joe. "Go on and get him."

"That's right," said I. "It's up to you, Alibi!"

Alibi looked wildly at Roger. "How about—him?" he sputtered.

But anyone could see that Roger wasn't up to it. Why, the big galoot was just standing there wringing his hands! Alibi got a little bit whiter and looked frightened and desperate. Out in the middle the kid had come up again,—how he had managed to stay under so long was a marvel—and he was yelping once more. Alibi looked at him a second, gulped as if it hurt him, gave a sort of despairing look at me and then, taking a long breath, struck out.

Well, if young Stedley had really been drowning, Alibi would have got to him about the time the coroner was signing his name to the certificate. He swam breast stroke, and about every other kick one of his feet would come out. We followed him.

STEDLEY went down for the third time and then, as Alibi hadn't arrived yet, went down again for good measure. Some one said it took Alibi four and a half minutes to get out there, but I don't know; I don't believe that anyone had a watch on him. I do know, though, it was a long time and that we had to loaf to keep from running him down. He made hard going of it, too, and once he fairly stopped, and I thought he was losing his nerve and meant to turn back. But he didn't, and after a long while we saw him make a stab at Stedley, who had just come up from his fourth dive and got him by the hair. The kid had pretty long hair that was always falling into his eyes, and so Alibi managed to get a good grip. Then he tried to swim back and pull Stedley with him. By that time the old boat had drifted quite a way off, and I guess Alibi thought if he swam toward shore he'd meet assistance. That was good reasoning, but Stedley hadn't bargained for being rescued by his hair. After two or three tugs he set up a holler.

"Let go my hair, you big chump!" he yelled.

Maybe Alibi didn't hear him. Anyway he didn't let go, but kept on trying to swim with one hand, getting his head under about every stroke and being in more danger of drowning than the kid. So Stedley grabbed Alibi's arm and tried to get loose. But Alibi wasn't going to let go.

"You're hurting me!" bellowed Stedley. "I don't want to be saved! You let me go, Follen! I—I'll smash you!"

"You shut up!" gasped Alibi. "You've got—to be—saved, con—found you!"

And then he saw us. We were all three laughing so we could hardly keep afloat. He looked at Roger and then at me and then at Joe. Then he stopped swimming, and just then the kid struck him in the neck, and he let go and just vanished!

"Hey, that's no way to act when you're being rescued!" cried Roger. "Where's your gratitude, kid?"

"Where's my hair, you mean!" yelled Stedley. "He almost tore—say, where is he?"

That was a fair question, because he hadn't come up again! Roger did one of his famous surface dives, and Joe and I and the kid went down, too, and there was an awful lot of arms and legs waving around down there. But Alibi had decided the come up anyway, and Roger passed him going down. Just the same we had to float him back to shore, for he was about all in and had swallowed a heap more water than his insides could accommodate. So after all we did have a sort of a rescue.

When he got fit again Alibi was inclined to be annoyed. Everyone was grinning, and Stedley was telling how he had almost got water-logged waiting to be rescued. Seeing that he had acted pretty blamed plucky, though, and wasn't feeling any too chipper, the fellows let him down fairly easy. Polk said, "Follen, you're a white man, and I apologize for my part in the trick we played."

"Oh, that's all right," said Alibi. "Only what—what was the idea? I mean, why pick me out for the goat?"

"Well, every practical joke has to have its butt, Follen, and you're a newcomer in camp. Besides, it would not have done to have picked out a fellow who wasn't a pretty fair swimmer, you see."

Alibi studied that a bit, and then he nodded. "I guess that's so too," he said.

Joe managed to hold in until we were going to bed that night. Then the strain proved too great, and he came out with the question he had been dying to ask all day. Yes, and the rest of us, too!

"Say, Alibi," asked Joe, "didn't you tell us the other night that you were a long-distance swimmer?"

"I believe I did," replied Alibi.

"I thought you did too. You said you'd swum a mile and three quarters once, didn't you?"

"Yes. Why?"

"Oh, nothing! That is, well, how come you couldn't swim a couple of hundred yards today any better than you did?"

"No wonder you ask that," answered Alibi, calmly winding his watch. "You see, Joe, I'm used to salt water."

Well Cleared Up.

A commercial traveller stepped off a train in a Pennsylvania town, where he asked a couple of Pennsylvania Dutchmen: "Can you tell me where the macaroni factory is?"

"I don'd know, do you, Jake?"

"No, I don'd," replied Jake."

They both walked to the end of the platform — then one of them hurried back. "Say, Mister, do you mean de noodle mill?"

"Yes," said the traveller, "it is the same thing."

"Vell," said the native, "ve don'd know vere that is either."

RASPBERRIES BEARING HEAVILY.

TUESDAY morning as W. J. Lynch, who lives on the Finch-Winchester boundary, was coming to town, he picked from bushes along the roadside a raspberry cane heavily laden with ripe and green fruit and brought it to the Record office, which is evidence of the particularly fine fall weather we have had this year. It is quite unusual that a killing frost has not killed vegetation in this district before this time of the year. In looking over the "Twenty Years Ago" news, by a strange coincidence it is recorded that Parnham Allison during the first week in October presented The Record with a box of fresh raspberries of the St. Regis variety taken from his garden.
