Are you reading our serial story, "The Desperate Lover," by the Prince of story writers, E. Phillips Oppenheim The first instalment was published in last week's press. If you are a lover of fiction, don't miss reading this. It appears on the inside pages.

According to a report in the Mail and Empire of April 17, the McLeod River Mining Corporation has been re-organized with C. O. Cameron as its president. The report states that active operations will be conducted during the summer, and new machinery put in operation.

The Cardinal correspondence to the Iroquois Post, referring to the work of St. John's United Church there, of which Rev. M. I. Robinson, B. A., is pastor, writes: "It is with grrtitude to the Great Head of the Church that this charge reports forty one new members as a result of the special Easter invitation. Beginning many weeks before the Easter period and with much cheerful personal work and earnest prayer this gladdening result is now brought about.

The campaign for voluntary signatures to the total apstinence pledge regarding the use of alcoholic beverages is well begun. Our church gladly joins in this Canada-wide effort, feeling that the best of all temperance laws is the total-abstinencs pledge taken ahd kept

The Orillia News Letter tells an interesting story. It is that, two years ago a Scotchman landed in Orillia. He was accompanied by his wife. He was penniless. He had no friends in Orillia or even in Canada, Chief Church found temporary employment for him, A short time later he left Orillia. He was lost sight of by his local benefactors, but the other day his present whereabouts came light. He now holds an extremely important position with a growing company in a large Canadian city. No friends, no pull, no money, alone in a strange land, but in spite of these disadvantages he managed to climb above the mob. More than six thou and men obey his orders. Two short years ago he didn't have enough to pay the first instalment on a free lunch. Canada needs immigrants of this type.

Death of Guy Erratt.

Word was received here on Monday morning of the passing of Guy Errett, at the home of his son, Geo. E. Errett, at Winnipeg, in his 78th year. Mr. Errett was taken ill during the winter, and his son came down from Winnipeg and took his father back with him. Since then Mr. Errett had not improved. He was for many years an employ in the Beach factory here, and was a man much respected and esteemed by all citizens. For the past few years he boarded with friends in town, his son George in Winnipeg being the only remaining member of his family. The remains are being brought here for interment in Maple Ridge cemetery, and the funeral service will be held in the United Church on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The funeral will take place from the home of Mr. Andrew Brown.

Council Proceedings

A special meeting of the Municipal Council was held on Tuesday evening, and many subjects of public interest discussed. The question of street improvements was gone into, and the feeling of the council was that any funds that were available for the purpose should be used to the best advantage. Main street was sadly in need of repair, but so also were some of the side streets. A general survey will be made, and the probable cost before any work is undertaken. A street light was ordered to be placed on Louise street, as there was no light on that street, and owing to the number of trees on it, it was very dark. The question of opening a short street to connect Gladstone and Alexander streets was also discussed, and a committee appointed to look into the matter and report. Our constable is to be provided with a proper constable's uniform to be worn when on duty. The Reeve and Councillor Fetterly were appointed to look after the matter of procuring the necessary "Stop" and "No Parking" signs to be placed. Councillor Gibson reported that the street sprinkler needed some repairs and in order that those repairs be made it would be necessary to let it dry out thoroughly, and as a consequence no street sprinkling could be done for a week or more. The matter of the amount available for street improvements was discussed. Two weeks ago the Reeve reported that owing to the fact that the money received from the County, to be used on the streets, had been used for current expenses, that it would have to be made up out of this year's current revenue. It was explained that the old council had left in the town treasury the sum of $773.72, and that was to cover the unexpended amount received from the County for road improvement purposes. The misunderstanding was due to the tact that the annual statement did not show in Current Liabilities the amount due to be expended out of that $773.72, a sum of $638.87, which still remained out of the $1605.82 received from the County. This sum of $638.87 was deducted from this years rebate from the County, but will be paid over when the amount has been expended on road improvements and a certificate to that effect sent the County Road Supt. There was a deputation present from the Women's Institute, with Mr. W. J. Cass as spokesman, asking the Council to do something toward putting the piano in the town hall in good repair. At present it was useless. It could be put in good shape for about $20, but the W. Institute had not the funds to spare at present and asked the Council to help them. Reeve Ross stated that the Council was there to help any good cause, whether social or business, that would help the community. He said the piano had been much abused, and thought it should be kept locked and the key left in possession of the caretaker. He assured the deputation that the Council would deal generously with them, and advised them to go ahead and get the necessary repairs made, and then present their claim to the Council.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

We are pleased to report that, after several week's illness, Alice Rice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Rice, is on the road to complete recovery.

Messrs. H. B. Fetterly, E. M. Shaver, Wm. Quart, O. Pierce and B. Smith went to Kingston on Sunday last to attend the funeral of the late Dr. Edwards, M. P. for Frontenac, who was one of the most prominent Orangemen in the Province.

Rev. Jas. McAvoy, formerly of Kemptville, and now of Glen Sandfield, has accepted a call extended to him by the congregation of the Calvin Westminster United Church, Montreal. the stipend being $3,000 per annum with manse.

Mrs. Wm Barkley of Dunbar, mother of Miss Lucy Barkley, of Winchester, aged 77 years, was buried in the Williamsburg Cemetery on Tuesday of this week. She was married 61 years and had three children, Alva and McKenzie of Williamsburg, and Lucy of Winchester.

Three Smiths Falls young men enticed a fourth young man to take a car ride with them in the country on a promise of procuring for him a bottle of liquor. At a lonely spot they beat the young man nearly to death, took all his money, some $32, and left him on the roadside. He managed to reach a farmers house, and was at once taken to Smiths Falls to the hospital. The men who had committed the assault were arrested and will be tried for their offense.

A lifelong resident of Russell, Ont., Idella May Pillar, wife of Henry MacDonald, passed away last week in her 43rd year. The late Mrs. MacDonald was an attendant of the United Church at Russell, and was actively associated with the Ladies Aid and Missionary societies. Besides her husband she is survived by her father in Russell, a daughter, Lillian, and a son Hubert. Four sisters, Mrs. C. Hutchinson, of Winchester, Mrs. Craven, of North Gower, Mrs. E. Wynn, of Kenmore, Ont., Mrs. E. Riddell, of Brownlee, Sask, and a brother, Willard Pillar, of Prescott, also survive.

Got Jail Term

A young man named Lawrence Trickey, of Lancaster, was last week sentenced by police Magistrate at Cornwall to serve 30 days in prison for driving his motor car when intoxicated.

$2,820 for a Calf

A calf bred and fed by a boy, Harold Richardson of Bowden, Alberta, sold for $2820 at the recently held Calgary spring life stock show. The calf was the first prize winner in the boys' girls' calf feeding competition and sold for $3 a pound Several thousand boys and girls in Ontario and Quebec are interested in the club work and through this new force live stock breeding and feeding for high grade quality is increasing in many districts. District agricultural representatives will give assistance to boys and girls in rural communities who desire to organize.

A Healthy Family

Above is a cut of Mr. James Ball, of Maple Ridge, who is now in his 92nd year, and able to attend to the chores about the house and barn, milk half a dozen cows each day, drive to town when he feels like it, is as straight as an arrow and as lively as a man in his forties. Mr. Ball frequently calls at the Press Office, and tells us of his boyhood days, when this section was a vast wilderness, no roads, only trails through the forest to the river front. He has always lived on the farm, and while his life has been one of industry and retirement, he has always been faithful to his duties, to his Church, his country and his family. Standing just behind him is his youngest daughter, Mrs. Cross, of Maple Ridge, and at his side is her son Frank, who also lives at Maple Ridge, and in front of him is his daughter, this making four generations in one group. Mr. Cross says he never used liquor or tobacco. He was born near Iroquois in 1838, his parents coming from England. Shortly after his birth they settled on the land he now occupies.

Spring Conditions

Some Winchester citizens have been annoyed this spring with water in their cellars. There has been an unusual amount of rain this spring, and few cellars have escaped. But in no case has the water reached to a heighth that it put out the furnace fire. Conditions in other places have not been so satisfactory. The Alliston Herald, in its last issue devotes several columns space to telling of the floods, damages done, cellars flooded, etc., in that village and section. Here are some of the head lines "Small streams go mad." "More than a thousand acres seen under water." "Water in many cellars, gets into firepots and furnaces in some homes. Has so saturated school grounds that tiles will not clear water out of basement. Cellars flooded all over town." Damage to roads is heavy, County will have expensive repairs following floods" It sounds pretty bad and no boubt was. Down here in Winchester a few cellars have had a few inches of water, and the fuss made over it would make one think that the water has reached the kitchen stove. We may have our drawbacks, but on the whole you will travel over a good deal of country before you find a better or healthier place than good old Winchester.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

Young men and boys who persist in playing ball on the streets do it at a great risk. It is a very dangerous practice.

S. are attending this gathering, the delegates being the Pres., Mrs. T. O. Keyes, Mrs. Fred Parker, and Mrs. J. L. Dixon. The Band and Circle also are represented by Mrs. Reveler and Dr. M, Fetterly.

Sent Up For Trial

Ralph and Harvey Markel, alleged chicken thieves, were on Friday last sent up by Magistrate J. McCormick for trial at the the Cornwall June Assizes, after evidence had been taken by him at a court held at Iroquois. Witnesses were Hugh and Bruce Barkley, Mr. Hartley, of Morrisburg, poultry dealer, who bought from the Markle brothers, and Alzon Zeley, of Rowena, who one morning found his stock of poultry had been taken from his hen house.

Clean-up Day

Next Thursday and Friday will be clean-up days in Winchester. We ask all citizens to read carefully the advt. in this issue with relation to health precaution and clean-up. The health authorities are becoming very strict and the municipal authorities are required to see that all regulations are carried out.

Horticultural Officers and Canvassers Entertained

Last week a very successful drive under the direction of the Women's Institute, was made for members for our Horticultural Society. The town was divided up and a thorough canvass made. On Friday at 4.30 p. m. these canvassers were asked to meet with the officers at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell-Johnston, where reports would be received. The guests were graceiously received by the host and hostess and afterwards conducted to the dining-room where a delicious luncheon was served, with Mrs. Sweet and Mrs. Flora pouring tea, and Mrs. Cass and Mrs. Carr assisting in the serving. The table was decorated with larkspurs. Reports of the canvass were taken by Mr. Campbell-Johnston, after all had retired to the reception room, and these proved very gratifying. A hearty vote of thanks was given Mr. and Mrs. Campbell-Johnston for their hospitable entertainment and encouragement of this worty work.

Returned From South

Mr. Harvey Nesbitt arrived in Winchester, bright, happy, and smiling, having just returned from a motor trip extending over three months, and taking in a goood deal of the territory lying between the St. Lawrence River and Gulf of Mexico. He was accompanied most of the way by Mr. Dave Mulloy, of Inkerman. They covered a good deal of territory, saw much of the country, and enjoyed the best of health during his absence. They visited the big city of Miami and St. Petersburg in Florida, most of the cities on the Atlantic sea coast and did not neglect the capital city of the United States, Washington. Mr. Nesbitt says that while he enjoyed the outing, having travelled all the way by motor car, and was benefitted in health, he was glad when he got a glance of the mighty St. Lawrence river, and saw the comfortable farm homes of Eastern Ontario. He does not think that, outside of climate, the country south of us can compare with Ontario, and he is glad to be back to his native province and breathe its bracing and invigorating air.

Farmer Commits Suicide

Mr. Ernest Coulthart, a well known farmer who resides about two miles northeast of Inkerman, committed suicide by hanging himself in his barn on Monday morning last. Mr. Coulthart had arisen about five o'clock and had gone to the barn to commence the day's work, while Mrs. Coulthart prepared breakfast. When he failed to come in Mrs. Coulthart sent her little daughter to the barn to notify her husband that the breakfast was ready. Finding the doors locked, the child gained entrance through the horse stable and discovered her father hanging in the west section of the barn. She immediately ran to the house and the neighbors were called and when they examined the man he was dead. Dr. P. McLaughlin, coroner, of Winchester, was immediately summoned and he declared the man dead for some time by strangulation. Mr. Coulthart had apparently gone to the barn and immediately hanged himself in the west mow of the barn by tying a ¾ inch rope to the track at the peak of the roof, for no work had been done when he was found by the neighbors. Mr. Coulthart had been in poor health all winter and was in a despondent mood, but no one imagined that he contemplated taking his life. He was for a number of years, previous to his moving to Inkerman, a resident of Winchester. He was 49 years of age and is survived by his widow and four children.

THE FISH DOCTOR.

Miss Ida Mellon Takes This Matter Seriously.

Can one doctor fishes that are indisposed? Who would think of doing so?

Well, there is an official of the New York Aquarium, Miss Ida Mellon, who takes this matter seriously, and she is a capable fish doctor and fish nurse.

Two goldfish, apparently dying, were recently saved by her quick and skillful attention. She was obliged to operate on the eye of one, and she dosed the other with castor oil. Miss Mellon has a big light workshop at the top of the Aquarium, where she is surrounded by all sorts of jars and globes containing languid fishes, ailing turtles, and kindred invalids, "all basking," we are assured by somebody who has seen it, "in the warmth of her capable nursing."

Miss Mellon thinks nothing of tackling the eyes of blind fish with boric acid solution; and the other day she boldly immersed sick goldfish in a bucket of kerosene, and thus cured them of a skin trouble which was slowly killing them.

There was a deadly salt-water parasite that was killing valuable salt-water fish all over the waters. This Miss Mellon routed, and the parasite has now been named in her honor. Fishes do not like taking castor oil; in fact, they are very cunning about it, and will hold it in their mouths for five minutes, hoping to get back into the water and eject it. But with a wet rag bound round his gills Master Fish cannot do that; and he swallows it in spite of himself, and feels better.

Miss Mellon saved one penguin which came under her care last winter. He was given cough mixture and sniffed benzoin fumes, and improved.

WORRYING THE SWISS.

Nightingales Have Become Intolerable In Switzerland.

While naturalists in England experience great difficulty in hearing the nightingale, the inhabitants of certain districts around Geneva are complaining that these birds have lately become an intolerable nuisance.

One morning an Englishman living at the foot of the Saleve mountain counted no fewer than seven in his garden and the volume of sound was such as to drive him almost to distraction.

Another Englishman employed by the League of Nations has just enjoyed the unique experience of hearing two nightingales more than 600 miles apart singing simultaneously.

He was listening to London when the nightingale's broadcast from Pangbourne, Berkshire, suddenly broke in. Almost immediately another bird on the roof of an adjoining villa burst into song. The peculiarity of the nightingale in Switzerland is that it sings best about nine o'clock in the morning.

To test this fact a motorist on the League of Nations' staff had a wager with an English delegate that he could make the nightingale respond to the throb of his engine at any time of the day. The car was taken to a spot about a mile from the centre of Geneva and the engine was left running. Before many seconds had elapsed the purr of the engine was drowned by a flood of glorious melody.

LIBRARIES IN MEXICO.

Distribution Increases for Volumes on All Sorts of Subjects.

Mexicans are becoming greater readers and the demand for books on all subjects is on the increase in that country. This is revealed by figures announced by the Department of Libraries of the Ministry of Education. According to this report there was a total of 3,617 libraries in Mexico at the end of 1927. Of these libraries 1,345 distributed books of a general nature, 970 were for scholastic works, 797 were for technical volumes and the rural districts were served by 508 libraries.

These libraries distributed a total of 625,527 volumes on all subjects last year, a remarkable increase in distribution, as only 95,017 books were distributed during the first year the Department functioned, which was five years ago.

Last year the number of lectures that were delivered in the libraries was 1,223,287, an increase from 144,690 that were delivered during the first year that the Department was in operation.

Bicyle on Wings.

A machine said to be capable of the nearest approach to the reproduction of a bird's movements yet known has been made by Mr. G. R. White, at St. Augustine, Florida.

His "bird" measures 29½ feet from tip to tip and weighs 126 pounds. Rubber "muscles" and the pilot's feet provide the motive-power for the strange-looking mechanism, known as an ornithopter. The wings are constructed of a patented variety of celluloid, with high tensile strength, and have a maximum up-and-down beat of 17 feet. The "feathers" spread on the upward movement and contract as the wings sweep downwards.

A slanting upward movement decreases resistance and at the same time provides a forward thrust. Each wing has nine primary "feathers" and eight secondary ones, and the ability to flap one wing faster than the other will enable the pilot to control his direction and avoid tipping over.

King's Birthday Plans Announced

Prince of Wales to Take Salute at Trooping of Colors

London—The official celebration of the King's birthday will take place this year on His Majesty's birthday, June 3. The principal celebration in London will be the timehonored trooping of the colors on the Horse Guards Parade, where the Prince of Wales will take the salute, it being unlikely that His Majesty can be present himself. The birthday honors list will be published the same day.

It seems certain that no arrangements have even been discussed yet for a national thanksgiving for His Majesty's recovery, though gossip has been busy on the subject. The King is not yet officially pronounced convalescent. St. Paul's Cathedral is mentioned as the place where the principal celebration might be held, with Their Majesties in attendance. The cathedral, however, is still in the hands of restorers and less than half of the structure is in use.

If the King's complete recovery is announced early in the summer it might be possible to have an openair service on the steps of St. Paul's, similar to the great event marking the diamond jubilee of Queen Victoria.

Fitzmaurice to Try Refueling on Atlantic

New York—Col. James C. Fitzmaurice, co-pilot of the transatlantic airplane Bremen, has just announced a scheme for a new transatlantic airplane flight in which aerial refueling will be atempted. Colonel Fitzmaurice came here to act as technical adviser for a new airport which is to be built on Long Island. The arrangements for the transatlantic flight he said, are not definitely completed, but he expects that it will be made between Potsdam, Germany, and New York.

Coeducation Held 'National Calamity'

British Schoolmasters Oppose Women Teachers for Boy's Classes

London—Feminizing of boys in the mixed departments of British Elementary schools constitutes "nothing short of a national calamity" according to a resolution passed unanimously by the National Association of Schoolmasters at its concluding conference at Leicester.

The association declared that the appointment of a head mistress meant ultimately a wholly feminine staff and resolved "fully to sustain any member who ,on advice of the instruction executive, refused to serve under a head mistress consequent upon the reorganization of the elementary school."

Another resolution was passed urging that it is no tin the best interests of education that women teachers should be employed at boys' schools, or that women students should be trained in schools for boys. These resolutions followed a debate in which it was argued that the smallness of remuneration offered to teachers was responsible for the fact that members fitted for this vocation adopted other occupations.

The association, which passed these resolutions, is one formed after the war, when some thousand of masters broke away from the National Union of Teachers on the issue of equal pay for men and women.

Mining Market Sound for Future

Temporary Recession in Many Issues Will Give Opportunity to Investors to Profit by Good News

NORANDA STRONG

By LLOYD J. MOORE
Member Standard Stock and Mining Exchange

Reversals overtook the entire Canadian mining list during the final week of March. Sharp declines were registered all across the list. There was a fairly substantial recovery before the Easter holiday, but indications were present that the selling movement was not entirely finished. There were some exceptional opportunities for securing stocks at bargain prices. Noranda dipped below $47 and Nickel went to $41.75 on March 26th, when call money commanded 20 per cent. in New York. The liquidation of mining stocks was caused primarily by the disastrous break which took place in New York. International Nickel was one of the principal sufferers, but although the decline in this stock was sharper than in most of the others, it was not greatly out of line. Much distress selling took place. This involved a great many people, since the stock is very widely held in Canada. The New York selling had every appearance of including heavy short sales augmenting the already large New York interest on the short side that has been known to exist.

Nickel recovered vigorously to $52 before the end of the week, but was again subject to further selling on Easter Monday in New York while the Canadian exchanges were closed. The sponsors of Nickel are quite as emphatic concerning its merits for a long hold as they were in more bouyant markets of January and February. Its market course has been more or less in line with the general trend of New York stocks. From the Canadian angle at least, it was vulnerable because of the large amount of stock held on thin margins.

Noranda Meeting

One of the most interesting developments of the weak was the annual meeting of Noranda Mines, at which President J. Y. Murdoch gave much data of a favorable character concerning recent operations at the Horne property. It was announced that diamond-drilling data shows the continuance of ore to a depth of 1,500 feet. The management is conservatively estimating a production of 2,000 ton from two reverberatory smelting units toward the latter part of the year. It is expected unofficially, however, that the production will be about 2,500 tons a day. Full advantage is being taken of the present high price of copper. The highest quotations availabl are being obtained for the current production of metal. The results of exploration and development work since the beginning of this year have been highly encouraging. Occurrences of sulphide below the 875-foot level are shown to be of very large dimensions containing much highly profitable ore. Mr. Murdoch was unable to give any further figures of new ore placed in sight beyond saying that the work thus far this year had shown up more ore than would be handled by the melter during the entire twelve months. Last year's work showed $9 of ore placed in sight for each $1. put through the smelter. In other words—the additions of new ore amounted to $52,000,000 and gross production was approximately $6,000,000. As has been indicated in these columns in previous articles the Horne smelter is performing much beyond expectations.

The shareholders were informed that only a small portion of the possibilities of the property has yet been explored and the officials are confident that ore will be found at much greater depth than have been investigated up to the present.

The shareholders approved the by-law to issue one new share for each thirty held at $45 per share.

Sherritt-Gordon

Among the other stocks that recovered readily from the selling pressure of the past week, none was more impressive than Sherritt-Gordon. This stock rebounded from its slow at $7.10 to a high at $8.75 before the close of the week. On numerous occasions recently Sherritt stock has seemed scarce and remarkably good buying power has been noticed. Upon the completion of construction of the railway line to the property probably by September the development of the mine will enter a new phase. It has been practically decided that the Hudson Bay smelter will be located adjacent to the lime deposits about twenty miles from the Flin Flon and not far distant from Cranberry Portage. This smelter will treat concentrates from both properties according to present indications. It seemed like unnecessary duplication to have two smelters in Northern Manitoba. Both Hudson Bay and Sherritt-Gordon should benefit substantially from the co-operative arrangement. Both properties are developing well. Current prices of copper should swell the probable profits of each and especially of Sherritt-Gordon, which has a higher copper content in its ore. It is difficult to predict the metal markets far ahead. The price of around .24½ cents for copper looks entirely too high to be reasonable. The demand and supply situation points to the continuance of comparatively high prices. An average of around 17 cents a pound over a long period would enable the new Canadian producers to earn very handsome profits. Such an estimated price appears to be very conservative.

Copper Refinery Promised

An announcement of far-reaching importance was made by Premier Ferguson in the Ontario Legislature that a copper refinery would be built by International Nickel-Consolidated Smelters and Ventures, Ltd., in the Sudbury district. The probability is that Sherritt-Gordon and Hudson Bay blister copper will be treated at this refinery. It will have a capacity of 10,000 tons a month and will cost approximately $4,000,000. It will treat Frood blister copper as soon as that mine comes into production. At the same time it is interesting to note that President J. Y. Murdock has reaffirmed Noranda's intention of building its own refinery at some site to be decided, probably on the Lower St. Lawrence. The Noranda enterprise has British Metals Corporation and Nichols Copper Company associated with it.

Don't forget, Mr. Moore answers any questions on mines and mining investments. Address, L. J. Moore & Co., 10 Jordan Street, Toronto.

Appropriation For Air-Mails $800,000

Total Appearing in Main Estimates Considerably Cut Down

Ottawa.—The appropriation for airmail services appearing in the main estimates this year is not as much as was figured on in the suggested vote. The total now is $800,000. As a result the coat will be cut in proportion to the cloth.

Meanwhile it is planned that, while maintaining the services already in operation in the east, they will be extended on the prairies with a daily service between Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Edmonton.

The Lethbridge Board of Trade has askd for a survey of a route to the Pacific through the Crows Nest Pass rather than going to the coast from Edmonton.

"The National Defense Department already knows the relative routes but there is no need for an early decision because an air-ail service to the Pacific coast is out of the question this year," asserted a high official of the Postoffice Department.

Girl Who Lost Passport Waving to Liberty, Wins

Secretary Davis ordered that the girl, Mary Collaghan, Queenstown, Ireland, be admitted temporarily without a passport if department officials found the report authentic.

Canberra Cost Autralians Over $60,000,000

Financing of Federal Capital Found to Be Difficult—Divergent Views

Canberra, Australia—According to the latest report of the Federal Capital Commission, Canberra has cost the people of Australia to date $61,000,000.

Although Canberra did not become the federal capital in anything more than name until after the official opening by the Duke of York on May 10, 1927 ,about half the public service of the Commonwealth has now been transferred from Melbourne, and all the principal departments now have their headquarters here. The permanent population of the capital is now about 8000 and it is expected that within three years the entire staffs of the various departments will have been transferred.

Financing Was Difficult

The financing of the new capital is the most serious problem which has to be encountered, and owing to the strenuous period which Australia has passed through in the last two or three years, the difficulty of finding money which is essential to the development of Canberra has been very great. There are many who take the view in an entirely uncompromising manner that every pound spent by the goverment upon Canberra is sheer waste.

However, against this, there is a strongly growing body of public opinion that some day Canberra will be the show place of Australia.

Owing to the steady number of public servants which are being transferred form Melbourne the commission's responsibilities in regard to housing have greatly increased.

No Private Enterprise

As the result of a lack of support by private enterprise, the commission was compelled to assume the entire responsibility of providing residential accommodation and up to June 30, 1928, 723 houses had been erected. There have been many complaints regarding the cost, both for purchase and rental of these houses, as compared with the cost of similar houses in Melbourne. This, the commission explains, is due to the high cost of building in Canberra. The total capital value of the commission's houses is about $3,500,000.

Those members of the public service and the general public who do not occupy houses, have to live in the commission-owned hotels and boarding houses of which there are eight. Hotel Canberra, the leading residential establishment in Canberra, cost $940,000 to erect. The commission has come to the conclusion that it would not be possible to make these places pay their way under any tariff obtainable, and it is likely that the commission will decide to cut its losses and let them to private enterprises for whatever can be obtained for them.

Tunnel Inquiry Starts in Britain

Commission Named to Consider Solely Economic Aspect of Channel Railway

London—Edward Robert Peacock, a Canadaian ,who is also director of the British banking firm of Baring Brothers & Co. ,has been appointed to preside over the long-promised official inquiry into the question of a channel tunnel to connect England and France, Mr. Baldwin announced this in the House of Commons, adding that consideration of the military and political aspects of the question is to be postponed until the economic side has been investigated and published.

This avoids for the time further conflict of opinion upon the much disputed potency of the military considerations.

If the committee decides that the scheme is economically impossible, then it falls to the ground apart from other considerations. If it is declared feasible from this viewpoint then the military question can be reconsidered.

Other members of the committee of inquiry are Lord Ebbisham ,ex-Lord Mayor of London; Sir Clement Hindley ,ex-chief commissioner of the railways of India; Sir Frederick Lewis, chairman of Furness, Withy & Co., ship owners, and Sir Henry Strakosch, member of the financial committee of the League of Nations.

"What do you do with the things you cook?" asked the doctor. "We send them to the neighbors." "Dear little woman," he returned, kissing her. "Always thinking of your husband's practice."

Indian Princes Affirm Faith in British Crown

Maintenance of Connection Within Empire Declared to Be Essential

Calcutta.—The Chamber of Princes at Delhi has passed a resolution affirming their faith in the value of the British connection in any constitution that may be framed for the future administration of India and the States.

Baron Irwin, the Viceroy, described the resolution as the most important ever discussed by the Chamber of Princes, and on which reflected the view, not only of those present, but of the entire order of princes.

The Maharaja of Patiala moved the resolution, which read: "While adhering to their policy of non-intervention in the affairs of British India and repeating thei rassurances of sympathy with its continued political progress, the princes and chiefs composing this Chamber, in view of the recent pronouncements of a section of British and Indian politicians indicative of a drift toward complete independence, desire to place on record that, in the light of mutual obligations arising from their treaties and engagements with the British Crown, they cannot assent to any proposals having for their object the adjustment of equitable relations between Indian States and British India, unless such proposals proceed upon the initial basis of the British connection."

Multitude of Interests

Their ties with British India were close, added the Maharaja, and they were linked to it politically, historically, and economically. They, therefore, regarded it as their duty to give suitable and timely expression of deep concern that the developments in Indian politics should not be such as would create an insurmountable obstacle in the way of closer relations between British India and Indian India, or inconsistent with the due discharge of their mutual treaty obligations with the British Crown; for in India, taken as a whole, their interest was of a magnitude only second to those of British India.

"We feel we are entitled to an adequate voice in the shaping of the ultimate policy of the whole country. It is our profound conviction that in the best interests of India herself British connections should be maintained.

Greater and More Prosperous

"We believe that India will be a greater and more prosperous land as a Federation of Autonomous States and Provinces within the Empire than she will be outside the Empire."

Other sentiments voiced by the Princes on the occasion were as follows: The Maharaja of Kashmir: "British India and the Indian States will find greater opportunity of mutual service under the Crown than under any sche e of political partnership." Maharaja of Kapurthala: "Britain's good will and assistance were needed not only to attain (India's) freedom, but to maintain it." Maharaja of Alwar: "We all wish British India to achieve her goal in a short time, and as a united India we can march forward with respective obligations to the crown."

Canada's Right To Speak at Geneva

The Status of Britain's Dominions Made Clear

One fact which has been made clear by the recent session of the League of Nations at Geneva is that Canada and every British Dominion has a definite and independent function in that body. Despite the conditions under which this country entered the League and the World Court there still remains in the minds of some European statesmen the erroneous idea that Great Britain is the spokesman for the whole Empire.

Several episodes during the last session brought this subject to the fore and in such a way as to make the position of the Dominions abundantly clear. One of these had reference to the World Court when exception was taken by several European delegates to a British Dominion being separately represented even if the question dealt with was of paramount importance to that Dominion.

Such a contention is absolutely contrary to the whole basis of Dominion inclusion in the League and the World Court and the British delegate, Sir Cecil Hurst, replied very forcibly with the statement that even if an English judge was on the court the Dominions would have the right of representation should it be dealing with a question which directly affected their interests.

Neither Canada nor any of the self-governing Dominions have ever recognized the right of the Motherland delegates to vote or speak for them and the sooner this is clearly understood by all member states of the League the sooner will progress be made in matters affecting our interests.

Canadians are heart and soul behind the general idea and ideals for the maintenance of world peace of the League but they will never be satisfied to take any position of inferiority in its councils or relegate their vital interests to any one but their national representatives.

Public Heatlh

In public health the discoveries of science have opened a new era. Many sections of our country and many groups of our citizens suffer from diseases the eradication of which are mere matters of administration and moderate expenditure. Public health service should be as fully organized and as universally incorporated into our governmental system as is public education. The returns are a thousandfold in economic benefits, and infinitely more in reduction of suffering and promotion of human happiness.

British Capital for Canada

Ottawa Journal (Cons.): Canada welcomes American capital, or any other capital, and will always treat it fairly; but next to control of Canadian enterprises by Canadians the best thing that can happen is to keep control of what we have within the British family. CHICKEN THIEVES

Last week two young men were tried at Iroquois before Magistrate McCormick, on a charge of stealing poultry and disposing of same to a dealer at Morrisburg. The accused were sent to Cornwall to stand trial at the June assizes. It is estimated that in the township of Matilda alone between three and four thousand dollars worth of poultry was stolen from the farmers. The same estimate can safely be applied to the other three townships in Dundas. In this immediate district it may be safely estimated that nearly two thousand dollars worth of poultry was stolen from the farmers. It is very difficult to convict a supposed chicken, as has been shown time and again. From the evidence in the case referred to, a number of chickens were left in the barn of the Morrisburg dealer without his knowledge or consent. Evidently the persons leaving them there expected to return to collect the price. The township council of Matilda offered a reward of $50 for the conviction of anyone found stealing chickens. If other township councils would do the same it might have some effect. Or if the four townships would unite and offer a reward of $100 for every conviction, $25 each, it would have a better effect. Anyway the problem of putting a stop to chicken thievery is as perplexing as the problem of stopping bootlegging, and the chicken thief is no better at heart than the common bootlegger.

THE SMALL TOWN AND THE BIG CITY

Communities, like automobiles, must change according to the demand and desires of public opinion. The advent of the automobile has changed the order of things generally, but more noticeably the relation of the small towns and nearby cities. The city with its big stores, big varieties of choice, and up-to-the-minute way of doing business, attract a great many customers from the nearby small town. The city stores make a strong bid for that trade, and spend much in advertising to reach and capture it. And that is why the cities are so strong for good roads. They know what good roads mean to the trade of the city.

Unfortunately too many of the "small town" folks are too easily influenced by the glare and trumpet of the city. They begin to find fault with their own small town because it does not measure up to the city in its stores, its conveniences and its attractions. And they do more harm than they know, because they spread the spirit of discontent and dissatisfaction.

But it is against this condition of affairs the small towns have to fight to hold their own, and there is growing up and becoming manifest that spirit of home town loyalty and enterprise that will mean much to the community where it is most in evidence. Individual effort is almost hopeless, but community effort is irresistible when well and carefully directed. And it is this united community spirit that needs to be encouraged and stimulated. A few pessimistic knockers, the wise-alls, who sit back and do no pushing, never helped any place grow or develope. The city merchant who never rearranges his stock, never puts in the newest and best system of serving his customers, is the merchant who quickly goes to the wall. The same applies to the small town, whether in the retail business or community work. The town that allows its streets to become hideous with rubbish, weeds, and its walks to go into decay, will soon follow the road. When travelling through the country how quickly you note the small town that gives evidence on every side of the wide-awake, up-to date spirit of its people. The same rule applies to the home and the individual. If you want to be in the race you must prepare yourself for the race. It is wonderful what a small town may accomplish if actuated by the proper spirit. After all a few wide-awake and energetic leaders will find a good support that even the cronic grumbler and fault finder cannot overcome.

WHAT WOMEN CAN DO

The canvas made for membership to the Horticultural Society last week, under the direction of the ladies of the Womens Institute, is another illustration of the splendid work being carried on by that organization. The Winchester branch of the Women's Institute have done some splendid work in this community. To their efforts the plot of ground just east of the town hall is due. To their efforts the neat and attractive appearance of the interior of the town hall is due. It is because of their efforts that Winchester has "Welcome" signs on the main approaches to the town. They have done much in charitable work that is not published. They have a fund of $200 they voted to be used to reseat the town hall. There are only a few of the accomplishments of the local branch of the Women's Institute, and creditable as they are, they are only a small item in the splendid work that has and is being done by the organized women of this community.

In other communities too the same organization is accomplishing great things. The little village of Portland, on the Rideau Lake, with a population of less than 300, and the Women's Institute with a membership of only 33, seeing the need of a community meeting place, undertook to provide one. And what the W. I. undertake they generally accomplish. The women got an old building in fair shape for $500. They purchased a piece of land for $400, moved the building to the new lot, and the building is being put in shape for the intended purpose. This is only one outside instance of the activities of this splendid organization. They are being repeated all over the Province. The Winchester organization has accomplished much in the past. May its future accomplishments be ever more marked and merited.

Marshal Foch, Allied Commander-in-Chief The Man With the Will to Victory

The Passing of the Generalissumo Who Applied to Science of War His Principles of Flexibility and Moral As Opposed to German Fixity of Method

A HISTORY OF THE MAN

Marshal Foch's fight for life after a small army of physicians had given him up was characteristic of Foch the man and Foch the soldier. Like the often-quoted message he did not sent to Marshal Joffre at the Battle of the Marne, "My right is shattered, my left is broken, my centre gives way; the situation is excellent, I shall attack at once," Marshal Foch's last great battle was against the seeming certainty of defeat. His lungs were weakened, his heart beats were dangerously fast, even the lightest of foods were too heavy for him; still the invalid regarded his condition as "excellent" and willed to recover. That will kept him alive for many weeks.

If it is possible to distill into a phrase the complexities of world historical figures, then "the will to victory" is the personification of Foch who dictated the armistice terms to Germany, who led the allied armies out of defeat, and whose teachings before 1914 filled the French Army with the hope that its next encounter with the German military machine would not result in the disgrace of 1870. "Materially, I do not see that victory is possible," he said to a skeptic at the time of his designation as Generalissimo of the Allies. "Morally, I am certain that we shall gain it."

How can a military machine, assembled and moved upon a timetable basis, combat a state of mind? Human frailty in executing the most carefully prepared plans may cause defeat. Human endurance may conquer over the prearranged. Here, then, is the Foch formula of victory. Machines, yes, they are essential; but they are instruments. What counts in the last quarter of an hour is morale.

Offense the Best Defense.

"Attaquez, attaquez, attaquez!" Foch's staccato orders were merely a paraphrase of the sterling maxim of war, football, pugilism, politics and courtroors, that a good offense is the best defense. But they are probably most applicable to that Latin instrumnt of human combat, the rapier. So also to the Teuton broadsword; but the thrust is quicker and more accurate than the slash. Foch was the rapier.

It takes time to fashion a rapier and temper its steel, and this is generally lost sight of, but not by Foch in 1918. Then the Germans broke through the British Fifth Army. Haig's men stood with their backs to the wall, and the Allies eventually agreed to a one-man co-ordination of their armies vested in Foch. April 14, 1918, this authority was extended to make him Commander-in-Chief of the allied military forces.

Foch was a Gascon, but about this elderly, wiry man in horizon blue there was none of the boasting, swashbuckler of French romance. When he spoke he did so calmly and with careful enunciation, with the result that even those who knew no French felt that they were ollowing his meaning. His only gesture was a wave of the right forearm, like a conductor whipping up his orchestra. Was this the man who led to victory 10,000,000 troops? Why, he looked more like a professor of nathematics!

As a matter of fact, this surface impression of Foch as a professor was essentially correct. He was not the dashing, magnetic leader who would inspire soldiers to follow him to death. He had not the crowd-winning personality which electrified the common soldier. He was not a living idol. The poilus did not call him "Papa Foch" as they did Joffre. For Foch was a teacher.

Happily for the success of allied arms he was a teacher who after training many pupils had an oportunity to practice what he taught. He was a schoolmaster not of soldiers in the ranks but of strategists, of generals and staff officers. And, curiously enough, the military philosophy he he sought to instil into the officers who might direct armies emphasized the same qualities which made successes of forlorn hopes on the battlefield. "A battle won is a battle which we will not acknowledge to be lost," was one of the maxims he laid down before his staff pupils. Therefore the teacher of staffs accomplished in his field what the picturesque military personality inspired among his troops. The latter may win battles; the former wars.

Foch and Hindenburg.

It is a coincidence worth recalling that both Foch and Hindenburg were military teachers before the war. For a number of years Hindenburg lectured before the staff college in Berlin upon a theoretical campaign against a Russian invasion of East Prussia; then he had the temerity to criticize the Kaiser's handling of a cavalry charge at some army manoeuvres and was banished to retirement. In August, 1914, the German tide swept through Belgium into Northern France, but at the same time the Russian tide was pouring into East Prussia. How could the latter be stemmed? Some one at German General Headquarters remembered the rugged old soldier who conducted blackboard campaigns in this region at the staff college, and Hindenburg was recalled into active service to command the German operations about Tannenburg in the Masurian Lakes region.

Hindenburg, with the staff work of Ludendorff, was winning glory in the marshes of East Prussia early in September, while Foch made a brilliant counterstroke with exhausted troops in the marshes of St. Gond at the Battle of the Marne. These parallels in the careers of the two Generals are dramatic; the contrasts are more reinto practice some of the principles he had taught in theory was typical of the German method, so irresistible in 1870 and in Belgium in August, 1914, of waging war according to the time-table. And Foch, in hurling his beaten army forward in attack instead of withdrawing, carried out his teaching that "if defeat comes from moral causes, victory may come from moral causes, too."

It may be too sweeping a statement to declare that defeat was the inspiration of Foch victories; nevertheless, the appalling French military disaster of 1870 was the foundation upon which Foch laid his military teaching, which brought him success in 1918. He was 19 and a student in Metz when the Franco-Prussian War broke out. He enlisted, did not get to the front and returned to his studies. He was graduated from the Polytechnique in Paris and received a commission in the artillery.

It was rather a depressing time in which to enter the French Army. The humiliation from 1870 was still profound, army morale was low and there seemed little likelihood that if Germany should choose to cross the frontier again the result would be any happier for France. The French Army knew too well who struck Billy Patterson; but how Billy Patterson was struck was another matter. In such a state of affairs it was only natural that the younger French officers were skeptical of what there was of the French military system and were deeply impressed with the seeming invincibility of the German Army machine. Could they hope to beat the Germans at tehir own game? If so, then bicycle mechanics might compete with locomotive works.

Like the others, Foch studied the German operations of 1870, but he came to different conclusions. His conclusions became fixed after he attended the Ecole Superieure de Guerre and he was ready to state them when he became a professor in this French staff college in 1895. Seemingly almost in the face of the facts Foch denied the invincibility of the German pre-arranged method. He analyzed the German operations which had so thoroughly crushed the French. Granted that his pointing out the flaws on the German side made the French disgrace of 1870 greater, Foch's analysis filled his pupils with hope. The German military machine was not invincible!

It would be fatal military policy, Foch reasoned, for France to emulate her enemy. The German preconceived plan provided for all expected movements; it was prepared for anything but the unexpected. In other words, the German method lacked flexibility, and the French formula for victory should be adaptability—opportunism, if you will.

"The unknown is a constant factor in war," Foch told his pupils. "All armies have lived and marched in the unknown." And to conquer the unplus morale, "the will to conquer."

In such maxiums Foch laid down his formula derived from study of the German method he would not adopt. This is to be found in his two books, now standard military textbooks, "Principles of War" and "The Conduct of War."

"The will to conquer sweeps all before it. There is a psychological phenomenon in great battles which explains and determines their results. One hundred thousand men leave 10,000 dead and acknowledge themselves beaten; they retreat before victors who have lost as many men if not more. Neither one side nor the other knows, when they fall back, what its own losses have been nor how heavy those of the opposing force; therefore it is not on account of material damage, still less from any computation of figures, that the loser gives up the struggle."

These were the principles Foch implanted in the French staff college as professor for five years and, in 1907, as Commandant. Read in the light of Foch's achievements in the World War, these theories explain his acts. They explain the will power of the commander of the Ninth French Army holding the centre of the Battle of the Marne. Even they explain the legendary message to Joffre about the situation being "excellent" with both right and left shattered. No one version exists of this message and the number of phrasings it has been given reaches astronomical figures. During his last illness Foch denied to one of his physicians that he had ever sent the message, but he added, "I might have dictated it; it was my favorite doctrine." And so, even though a legend, the words are a part of history because they were so typical of the man.

In having been the leader of the armies of more than half a dozen nations fighting against Germany, Ferdinand Foch belongs not alone to France, whose uniform he wore for nearly sixty wears. France came first with him, to be sure, but his way of serving his country after he became Commander-in-Chief of the Allies was to unite all national military efforts under one comprehensive plan. "He could not have done more for us had he been one of our own generals," Lloyd George said of him.

It has been said of Foch that he placed too much value upon the offensive and that the results of his Soissons counter-offensive were as much of a surprise to Foch as they were to the German High Command; that Foch had not planned the Soissons action to break the German offensive. Assertions that Foch could not remain upon the defensive disregard both his teaching and his battles. Holding the French centre in the first battle of the Marne, he was very much upon the defensive. And throughout the Spring of 1918, after he had become the allied leader, he was again on the defensive, either unable to attack or biding his time. Moreover, the fact that Soissons was not planned as the counter-stroke to break the German offensive does not detract from Foch's military achievements.

The Attack Kept Up.

To assume that Soissons was a thoroughly preconceived operation would be to assign to Foch the German military principles which he had spent a lifetime in opposing both in theory and in war. For, recall, it was his formula that "the unknown is a constant factor in war" and that to exploit the unknown requires a flexible rather than a rigid plan. Had Soissons not broken the German attack, Foch would have attacked elsewhere, and attacked again and again. The fact remains that upon his first counter-attack the tide was turned; and, true to his Ecole de Guerre teachings, Foch continued to attack until Armistice Day.

Foch's Tact.

Foch's tact is perhaps best illustrated by an incident connected with the Allied Victory Parade through the Arc de Triumphe in Paris, July 14, 1919. Detachments from all the allied armies were to participate, also Foch and Jaffre. Who should lead the parade—Joffre or Foch? Joffre as a senior Marshal of France outranked Foch in the French Army, for Foch was not created a Marshal until the year before. Yet Foch was Generalissimo of the Allies. The dispute between partisans of the two soldiers almost became a feud. The night before the parade of victory it was agreed that Foch and Joffre should ride side by side through the Arc de Triumphe and down the Champs Elysee, with Foch, as leader of the Allies, in the place of honor at the right. But this concession to Joffre was not enough for Foch; for although the latter rode to the right of Joffre he was careful to keep his horse reined three feet behind.

History probably will advance Foch's horse.

Easter Lilies

No lilies bloomed above the place
Where our dear Lord was laid away;
But how the Easter lilies grace
His Rescurrection Day!

O lily bells, I almost hear you ringing
The joyful message of the Easter Day—
Echoing songs the Heavenly Hosts are singing
So softly sweet because so far away!

O snowy blooms, I almost smell your sweetness.
The fragrance of the robes the saintly wear,
When their earth life has rounded to completeness,
Their home become the Many Mansions fair.

O spirit flowers, I almost hear your story
Of your emergence from a darksome past
Into a springtime life of light and glory,
So shall each soul come to its own at last!

No lilies bloomed above the place
Where our dear Lord was laid away;
But how the Easter lilies grace
His Resurrection Day!

—Isabel Sidman.

An Aberdonian and a Yorkshireman foregathered in Hull. They discovered they were both thirsty, but naturally neither of them had any money. A bright thought struck the Yorkshireman. "I know a bar-maid who is very forgetful. If you engage her in conversation, she can't remember being paid or not. I'll go in and see if it'll work." In he went, and in a short time he came out to find Jock patiently waiting. "Weel, hoo did ye get on?" "Fine, Jock, you try it on." In Jock went, and after ordering his glass of whiskey, he engaged the bar maid in an interesting conversation and after ten minutes had passed he casually remarked: "Ah, weel, I'll hae to be going. Whit aboot my change?"

On the other hand, if you have any ideas for a feature to take the place of Limerick Corner, let us have them. Editor, Limerick Corner, Associated Publishers, 73 Adelaide St. W., Toronto.

British Preference

Manitoba Free Press (Lib.): There is much talk in many circles in Canada about the necessity of Canada buying more from Britain and less from the United States. Conservatives have frequently spoken of the desirabliity of Canada turning more to Britain and less to the United States. If Canada made it easier for British goods to get into this country, the British could cut into the trade of the United States with this country.

Nova Scotia's Gold Output.

Recent official figures regarding gold production in Nova Scotia since 1862 show that about $20,000,000 worth of the precious metal has been mined in this province, but it is estimated that these figures include only half the real output, as in the early days many operators did not make returns, and miners also indulged in "bootlegging," selling separately thousands of rich nuggets extracted from the ore.

Free gold is still so rich in Nova Scotia that operators have to guard against dishonest employees.

The total official output to date is 967,169 ounces, which was produced from 2,232,802 tons of ore.

WHAT HAPPENED BEFORE

Palermo is the scene. There an exile, Leonardo di Marioni, has come for love of Adrienne Cartuccio, who spurns him. He meets an Englishman, Lord St. Maurice, who falls in love with Adrienne on sight. Leonardo sees his sister Margharita, who tells him his love for Adrienne is hopeless. But he pleads with her to arrange an accidental meeting, to say farewell, between Adrienne and him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

She laid her troubled, tear-stained face upon his shoulder.

"It is wrong of me, Leonardo. Yet, if you will promise me to say farewell, and farewell only——"

"Be it so! I promise!"

"Well, then, each night we have walked past the Marina, and home by the mountain road. It is a long way round and it is lonely; but we have Pietro with us, and on these moonlight nights the view is like fairyland."

"And will you come that way home to-night, after the concert?"

"Yes."

"It is good."

It was almost midnight, and Palermo lay sleeping in the moonlight. The concert was over. One by one the promenaders had left the Marina, and all sound had died away. One man alone lingered drinking in the sweetness of the night. The Englishman sat on the last seat of the Marina, in the shadow of a cluster of orange trees.

He had seen her again—nay, more, he had heard her sing—this girl-nightingale, who had taken the world by storm.

He sat dreaming, with a burned-out cigar between his teeth, and his eyes idly wandering over the blue Mediterranean. Suddenly the stillness was broken by the sound of a soft gliding footstep close at hand. He had heard no one approach, yet when he looked up quickly he found he was no longer alone. A man in the garb of a native peasant was standing by his side.

Naturally the Englishman was a little surprised. He half rose from his seat, and then resumed it as he recognized the dark, swarthy face and black eyes of the waiter who had told him Adrienne Cartuccio's name.

"Hullo! What are you doing here?" he demanded.

"I was in search of the Signor!" was the hasty response. "For an hour I have sought him everywhere, and now it is by chance that I am successful."

The Englishman looked at him with suspicion. This change of dress was doubtless for the purpose of disguise. What was the meaning of it?

"Well, and now you've found me, what do you want?" he asked, watching him closely.

"I will tell the Signor. Is it not that he has an admiration for Mademoiselle Cartuccio, the singer? Well, she is in danger! It is for the Signor to rescue her."

The Englishman sprang up with sparkling eyes, and pitched his dead cigar into the sea.

"In danger!" he repeated breathlessly. "Quick! Tell me where!"

The man pointed inland.

"Do you see that belt of white road there, leading up into the hills?"

"Yes; what about it?"

"Have you noticed anything pass along it?"

"There was a heavy cart or carriage and some mules, I think, went by half an hour ago."

The native shrugged his shoulders.

"It was an hour, Signor, but no matter! Step back with me into the shadow of those olive trees. That is better. Now we cannot be seen, and I will explain."

The Englishman beat the ground with his foot.

"Explanations be damned!" he exclaimed. "Where is Mademoiselle Cartuccio? Quick!"

The man held up his hands, and spoke more rapidly.

"This evening I heard by accident of a plot to carry off Signorina Cartuccio by a rejected suitor. I hasten to inform the police, but on the way I pause. I say to myself, what shall I get for my pains, and for the risk I run? Nothing! Then I think of the Signor. I watched his face when the Signorina pass by, and I say to myself he has the passion of her. If I show him the way to save her he will be generous. He will win the lady, and he will reward poor Andrea."

"That's all right. Tell me what to do, and I will give you fifty pounds—anything you like. Don't waste time. Speak up!"

The man's eyes shone with cupidity. He went on rapidly:

"The Signor is a prince. Listen! Along yonder road, before many minutes have passed, will come the Signorina Cartuccio with her friend, attended only by an aged servant. Men are waiting for them in the grove of orange trees above the Villa Fiolesse. Their orders are to carry off the two ladies to the other side of the island, where a place has been prepared for them. For an hour I have searched for the Signor, that he might procure aid, and so encounter these brigands, but in vain. I was in despair."

"I want no help! How many of the blackguards are there?"

"Four, Signor!"

"Natives?"

"Yes, Signor."

"And cowards, I suppose?"

The man smiled.

"They have not much bravery, Signor. I know the men."

"I wouldn't have anyone else here for the world," the Englishman said, shaking his fist.

"Does the Signor want a knife?" asked the man, thrusting his hand into his inner pocket.

"Not I. We don't understand that sort of thing in our country, my brave Andrea. Fisticuffs will settle this little matter, you'll see!"

The man looked up admiringly at the Englishman's commanding figure and broad shoulders.

"I think they will run away from the Signor when they see him," he whispered. "But let the Signor remember this: if one of them thrusts his hand inside his coat, so, do not wait one moment—knock him down or get out of his way. He will have the knife, and they know how to use it, these brigands."

"Tell me the name of their leader—I mean the fellow who is trying to carry off the Signorina. Will he be there?"

The man shook his head.

"I cannot tell the Signor his name. I dare not. I was once in his service, and he has powers—hush!"

The two men held their breath, keeping well in the shadow of the orange grove. They had reached the road, and in the distance they could hear the sound of approaching voices.

"I leave you now, Signor," whispered his companion to the Englishman. "I dare not be seen. To-morrow, at the hotel."

He glided noiselessly away. The Englishman scarcely heard him, he was listening intently. Light footsteps were coming along the winding road toward him, and soon a laughing voice rang out upon the night air.

"My dear Adrienne, don't you think we were a little foolish to walk home so late as this? See, there is not a soul upon the promenade."

"Tant mieux!" was the light answer. "Is it not to escape from them all, that we came this way? The stillness is exquisite, and the night breeze from the sea, after that hot room, is divine. What a view we shall have of the bay when we get to the top of the hill."

"They say that this place is infested with robbers, and it is terribly lonely," was the somewhat fearful answer. "Why would you not let poor Leonardo come with us?"

"Because I did not want Leonardo, cheris. Leonardo is very good, but he wearies me by persisting to dwell upon a forbidden subject; and as for protection—well, I fancy Giovanni is sufficient."

They were passing him now so close that he felt impelled to hold his breath. He had only a momentary glimpse of them, but it was sufficient. A few yards behind, a sullen-looking servant was trudging along, looking carefully around. In the white moonlight their faces, even their expressions, were perfectly visible to him; Adrienne's rapt and absorbed by the still restful beauty of the dreaming night, and indifferent to all fear; her companion, whose dark eyes were glancing somewhat anxiously around her, and Giovanni's, whose furtive looks, more expectant than apprehensive, marked him out to the Englishman as an accomplice in whatever deviltry was afoot. Unseen himself, he watched them pass, and listened to their voices growing fainter and fainter in the distance. They were out of sight and out of hearing.

He was preparing to follow them, when suddenly another sound broke the stillness. He held his breath, and crouched down, watching. In a minute, two dark forms, keeping carefully in the shadows by the side of the road, crept stealthily past.

He waited till they, too, were out of sight, and then stood up with tingling pulses, but quite cool. Moving on tiptoe, he stepped lightly over the low stone wall into the road, and gazed after them.

The ascent was steep, and the road curved round and round in zig-zag fashion. On one side it was bordered by a thickly-growing orange grove, whose delicate perfume was sweetening the still languid air. On the other was a stretch of waste open country, separated from the road by a low wall. He chose the seaward side, and keeping under the shadow of the trees, followed them, his footsteps sinking noiselessly into the thick dust.

Once the two ladies paused to look back. He stopped too; and the two bending figures between them drew closer into the shadows, and waited. He was some distance away, but the sound of her voice floated clearly down to him on a breath of that faint night air.

Again they turned, and again he followed. Suddenly his heart gave a great bound. About fifty yards in front of the two girls was a rudely-built country carriage, drawn by a pair of mules and with a single man on the box. They had paused at such an unexpected sight, and seemed to be deliberating in whispers whether or no they should proceed. Before they had come to any decision, the two men had crept out from the shadow of the wall and trees into the road, and with bent bodies hurried toward them.

The Englishman sprang up with sparkling eyes. . . .

He did not shout out or make any noise; he simply lessened the distance between him and them by increasing his pace. The two stooping forms, casting long, oblique shadows across the white, hard road, were almost level with their intended victims. Now the shadow of one of them crept a little in advance of the ladies, and Adrienne Cartuccio, seeing it, stepped suddenly back with a cry of alarm.

"Giovanni! Giovanni! There are robbers! Ah!"

The cry became a shriek, but it was instantly stifled by a coarse hand thrust upon her mouth. At the same moment her companion felt herself treated in a similar manner. They could only gaze into the dark ruffianly faces of their captors in mute terror. The whole thing had been too sudden for them to make any resistance, and Giovanni, their trusted escort, seemed suddenly to have disappeared. As a matter of fact, he was watching the proceedings from behind a convenient bowlder.

The man who was holding Adrienne pointed to the carriage, the door of which the driver had thrown open.

"This way, Signorina," he said. "It is useless to struggle. We shall not harm you."

She shook her head violently, and with a sudden effort thrust his hand away from her mouth.

"What do you want?" she cried. "Who are you? You can have my jewels, but I will never step inside that carriage. Help! help!"

He wound his arms around her, and, without a word, commenced dragging her across the road.

"You may shout as much as you like," he muttered. "There will only be echoes to answer you."

A sudden warning cry rang out from his companion, and, with a start, he released his victim. The Englishman had stepped into the middle of the group, and, before he could spring back, a swirling left-hander sent him down into the dust with a dull, heavy thud.

"You blackguard!" he thundered out. Then turning quickly round he faced the other man, who had sprung across the road with bent body, and with his right hand in his breast. There was a gleam of cold steel, but before he could use the knife which he had drawn, his arm was grasped and held as though by a vice, and slowly bent backward. He dropped the weapon, with a shriek of pain, upon the road, and fell on his knees before his captor.

The Englishman's grasp relaxed, and taking advantage of it, the man suddenly jumped up, leaped over the wall, and disappeared in the plantation. Pursuit would have been impossible, but none of them thought of it.

Correspondence

Editor Winchester Press

In introducing a bill to have all sleigs widened to four feet nine inches, the Ontario Motor League is certainly putting one over on the farmers and teamsters. Those of us who have been on any of the highways this winter are well aware there was little or no snow where the car wheels run. The chains on the wheels loosen up the track made by sleighs and the result is the snow melts more quickly and the road becomes bare. Even if there is considerable snow on t e road there is no footing for a horse in the track where the cars run. Those of us who hauled ice last winter know something about driving in the track made by cars. If those who own cars wish to run them all winter, let them make and keep their own track. I note in the Press of April 11th a correspondent states the cost will probably be about twenty dollars per set, which is a very low estimate when we consider the amount of work required to widen them and the new material that will have to be used.

Vote To Improve Drain

There was a fairly representative gathering of the ratepaying concerned from Winchester Township in the Town Hall on Saturday afternoon last to discuss the question of the best way to deal with the Castor, Annable Creek, a drain great importance to many farmers in the township. The meeting was presided over by Mr. George Elliott, clerk of the township, who explained that a petition had been received by the township council to improve the drain. He was not himself familiar with the history of the drain, but Mr. Lawson, the township lawyer was, and he would call upon him.

Mr. Lawson evidently knows the history of this drain from A to Z. for he gave a lucid and full account of it from its first, begining in the year 1900

The scheme was initiated in 1900 when a largely signed petition was presented to Winchester Tp. Council by ratepayers owning the low lands North and North East of Winchester Village. The Coucil procured T. H. Wiggins O. L. S. to make a report.

The scheme consists of a Main Drain commencing at the cement bridge in Con. 8 on the Mountain—Winchester Boundary and running North East through Winchester and Russell Tps. to an outlet at Fielding's Bridge.

Branch No. 1 also commences at the Mountain—Winchester Boundary in Con. 9 and runs East between Cons. 9 and 10 into the Main Drain.

Branch No. 2 is North of Branch No. 1 aud commences at the Ormand Road.

Branch No. 3 commences on lot 7, con. 7 and runs North into the Annable Creek at Greer's corners. The total length of the Main Drain and its branches is 19½ miles, draining an area of about 33,000 acres.

Drains contributing water to this scheme are: The Tigh Award from Mountain Tp. and Henderson Creek flowing into Annable Creek, The Castore Extension Drain, a large drain from Mountain Tp. flowing in at the head of the Main Drain, the Hamilton Drain also from Mountain flowing into Branch No. 1 and the Black Creek with its numerous tributaries flowing into the Main Drain near Ste Therese.

The contract was let to Gilbert Bros. of Toronto at the prevailing low prices of those days and after completing most of the scheme Gilbert Bros. were relieved of their coneract.

In 1914 Winchester Tp. Council requested F. M. Eagleson O. L. S. to make a report on the condition of the scheme. Mr. Eagleson made an estimate of the cost of repairing it and also recommended certain changes in design. Owing to the outbreak of the Great War and the fact that heavy debenture payment were yet to be made the work outlined in his report has not been completed.

Mr. Ross, Reeve of Winchester, was next called upon. Mr. Ross explained that he was not familiar with the history of the draln, as it was constructed before he came to Winchester. He did know there were complaints about what was known as Henderson Creek, that passed through Winchester Village and was a part of the system. He thought Mr. Beach, the late reeve, might be able to speak more intelligently on the subject.

Mr. Beach referred the subject to Mr. Weir, the Civil Engineer. Mr. Weir went exhaustively into the subject, showing from a report made by Mr. Eagleson in 1913, who was then the Engineer for the township, that a survey of the whole Castor system had been made, and an estimate of the probable cost of improvement. In order to make a good job of it, it would be necessary to deepen the outlet.

Mr. Crowder, reeve of Mountain, was called upon. Mr. Crowder said that while Mountain Township was not directly concerned, he knew that any responsibility the township had would be cheerfully taken. He thought the work should be done and properly done.

Questions were asked by owners of farms in the township, and the points brought out were, Mr. Lawson's estimate of the proposed improvement would be not less than $50,000. Mr. Weir's estimate was that the work would possibly cost $75,000. A vote of those present was then taken. The first vote was for the Council to undertake maintainence work only. No one voted for it. The second question was for the Council to go ahead with improvement and maintainence. This vote was almost unanimous of the farmers mostly concerned. A vote was then taken "To do nothing in the matter," and that question received only two votes.

Mr. Beattie, Reeve of Winchester Township, then explained that the council had called the meeting to find out just what the ratepayer wanted. They were the ones who had to pay for the work. The council had now some authority to go on with the work.

The United Church

The text chosen by Rev. J A. Waddell for the morning service was Matt. 7:20 from which a message was given on the real tests of discipleship. Christ'r first disciples were called followers of the Way. Early Christianity was then a Way to be followed. The first test is love—"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye love one another." The second is sacrificial service—'Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit." The third is cross-bearing or the spirit of self denial. The pastor asked, "Before which of these tests do we fail.?"

"The Church and World Peace" was the subject for the evening, the text being: "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the children of God." Mr Waddell asked; "What is the great power that is equal to the task of bringing about peace in thir world.?" He showed the Christian Church to be that power. She can make her voice heard in a mighty protest against war. She must lend her aid to every agency that tends to bring about peace and show that the law of brotherliness and reason superior to brute force. The work and aim of the League of Nations were explained and the men behind it shown to be serious minded statesmen It's humanitarian work and its fulfilment of the desire of the Prince of Peace were shown. The morning anthem was: "How Long Wilt Thou Forsake Us, O Lord,?" in which Mrs Steele took a leading solo part. The evening anthem was: "O God Who Madest Earth And Heaven." On Sunday, May 5th. the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be commemorated.

Judge O'Rielly Dead

James Redmond O'Rielly, of the old county court of Dundas, Stormont and Glengary, died suddenly Tuesday, in the courthouse at Cornwall. Judge O'Rielly had gone to the courthouse feeling ill, for the purpose of holding divisional court. After ascending the bench, His Honor requested the bailiff to adjourn the court on account of his indisposition. He then retired to an outer room where he suffered an attack of Asthma and died before medical aid could be summoned. His Honor the late Judge O'Rielly was well known. He had been on the bench at Cornwall for the past 25 years, and previous to his elevation to the judgeship had practised law in Prescott. He had not been in very good health for some time but the news of his passing came as a shock. He was married to Rose Mary, daughter of the late James Bermingham, Kingston, in 1888. His widow and two sons, James, of Toronto, and Harty, of Montreal, survive.

Many Motorcycles

They came from Ottawa and were bound for the front. They seemed to be enjoying themselves.

Child Bitten By Dog

Olive, the three years old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morerity, of Chesterville was very badly bitten about the face by a dog on the farm of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Manion of Archer, on Wednesday of last week. Dr. Brown, of Aultsville, who was called to attend the injured child found it necessary to put six stitches in the child's sace in order to close the wounds made by the animal's fangs.

Manitoba Tragedy

A trapper named Desjardain, living in a shack near Lake Manitoba, was in love with a 16 year old daughter of a Mrs. Alfred Richards. He went to the house to induce the girl to go away with him, when the mother interfered. He grabbed the girl to carry her off, and whlle she struggled to free herself, the mother beat him with a club. He then picked up his shot gun and shot the mother dead. Taking the girl in his arms he carried her to his shack, when a few hours later a poose surrounded the shack, they found it locked. Breaking down the door they found the dead bodies of girl and trapper. He first shot the girl and then himself.

Oddfellows Enjoy Themselves

A very enjoyable evening was spent on April 22nd at the Local I. O. O. F. Hall when about thirty-five members of Rockliffe Lodge I. O. O. F., Ottawa, and about the same number from Morewood Lodge were entertained by the members of Winchester Lodge I. O. O. F. No. 336. During the evening the Degree Team from Rockliffe Lodge conferred the First Degree and Morewood Team conferred the Second Degree on a number of Candidates in a very effective manner, which proved very instructive to all present. Following the Lodge Work lunch was served, during which time a few speeches by members of the different lodges were much enjoyed, after which all went home feeling that it had been a very profitable and enjoyable event in Odd-Fellowship.

On the previous Friday evening the Oddfellows and their lady friends were the guests of the Rebecca Lodge at a five hundred party and taffy pull, and a very pleasant evening was spent by all present. The Rebeccas were tendered a very hearty vote of thanks for their entertainment.

On our own streets Essex the Challenger, under competent observation, averaged 20 miles per gallon. The average owner in this city can expect 18 to 20 miles and upward. ESSEX challenges the performance, the style, the luxurious roomy comfort of any car at any price, on the basis that no other gives you back so much for every dollar you put in.

That is why the big buying swing is to Essex. That is why motorists by thousands are switching from past favorites, and trading in their old cars for the big values Essex the Challenger gives. Essex challenges:

IN SPEED—challenging anything the road offers up to 70 miles an hour. IN FAST GETAWAY—any car regardless of size or price. IN RELIABILITY—60 miles an hour for hour after hour.

Essex offers a completeness of fine car equipment formerly identified only with costly cars, and available, when at all, only as "extras," at extra cost on cars of Essex price.
