Dr. C. H. Doering Passes On Saturday Afternoon

Gave Up South African Prectice To Return To His Native Province.—Purchased Allison Stock Farm 11 Pears Ago.—In His 68th Year.

The death occurred on Saturday afternoon of Dr. C. H. Doering, operator and owner of the stock farm adjoining Chesterville which bore his name, in his 68th year after an illness extending over several years. A couple of years ago the deceased spent the winter months in Trinidad and Jamaica in an effort which was unsuccessful in restoring his health. There are left to mourn besides his widow, one son, Lawrence H., of this place, and one daughter, Mrs. C. V. Loverock of Capetown, South Africa, who spent several months this winter with her parents and had only reached London on her return journey when advised of the death of her parent. A sister also survives, Mrs. Charles Wagner, who lives in Oregon, as well as an uncle, Dr. F. E. Doering, residing in the Channel Islands.

The funeral was conducted at the family residence Monday afternoon by Rev. R. E. Newman, with Masonic honours under the direction of Past D.D.G.M. Dr. S. H. Hutt of the local lodge with which Dr. Doering became affiliated when coming to Chesterville 11 years ago. Interment was made in Maple Ridge cemetery, the pallbearers being Messrs. A. O. Robertson, Dr. H. H. Casselman, P. S. Boyd, O. L. King, J. H. Fulton and James Hanna, fellow members of the Masonic order.

Dr. Doering was born in Waterloo county and at the age of 17 went with his parents to Nebraska, later settling in Kansas. After his marriage to Miss Ora Patterson of Kansas, they spent some time in Oregon before he graduated from the Philadelphia Dental College after which he moved to South Africa where he saw service in the Boer War. At the conclusion of the war he took up the practice of dentistry in Capetown where for 15 years he carried on successfully before returning to his native province and acquiring the Allison Stock Farm where he spent the remainder of his days.

The late Dr. Doering was a most likeable man and those who had the privilege of his acquaintance, and association with him in the local Lawn Bowling Club, esteemed it very much and sincerely regret his passing.

Settlement Is Effected Wmsburg. Slander Case

Payment Of $500 Made By Members Of Dr. Locke's Clinic Staff And $5,000 Bond Posted. — Minutes Fyled As Supreme Court Opens.

Cornwall, March 12th.—With the posting of a $5,000 bond as guarantee of the defendants that they would refrain in future from interfering in the personal or business affairs of Mrs. Maida Knowles, and payment of $500 to cover disbursements made, settlement was effected at the spring assizes of the Supreme Court of Ontario here to-day in the $25,000 slander action brought by Mrs. Knowles against a number of her neighgbours at Williamsburg, Ont. Minutes of settlement were fyled when court opened late this afternoon.

Mrs. Knowles, an artist, had claimed that she had suffered monetary loss and mental anguish as a result of alleged slander and conspiracy on the part of defendants: Orlean Weegar, Alex McGruer, Sr., Alex McGruer, Jr., and Mrs. Eva Whittaker to oust her from her position as assistant at the Locke Clinic in Williamsburg.

When Will the Ice Go Out?

St. Patrick's Day Is Only Two Days Away And The Thermo-Still Below Freezing.

With St. Patrick's Day only two days away there does not seem much chance to see a movement of ice on the Nation this year. The 17th of March is the date set by many for the annual movement of the ice, but if it is gone by Easter this year we can be thankful. This morning the thermometer is well below freezing, and where there has been any flooding of the ice already covering the fields and roads it is just that much thicker after every night's hard freezing. The country roads are in excellent condition, however, and hauling of all kinds can be done to better advantage right now than has been the case all winter. Just to remind our readers when the first serious snow storm took place, we mention that on October 24 there was six inches of snow, and since that date the fields have never been bare.

United W.M.S. Members Enjoy Interesting Meeting

Held At The Home Of Mrs. Geo. W. Reaburn Yesterday Afternoon.—Study Book And Paper Very Fine

The March meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Church met at the home of Mrs. Geo. W. Reaburn yesterday afternoon. Mrs. C. W. Casselman, first vice-president, occupied the chair and a large number of members were present.

A very interesting programme, based on the fifth and sixth chapters of the study book, "Living Issues In China," was given by Mesdames Houlehan, Durant, Saucier, Clayton, Johnston, Davidson, Barkley and Cross.

Mrs. James Smith, secretary of Christian Stewardship and Finance, gave a very fine paper on "Planning the Budget," urging that all members pray, plan and work that the allocation may be reached.

Mrs. Chas. McMillan sang a very delightful solo accompanied by Mrs. Reaburn.

Kin Of Chesterville Folk Meets Death Under Truck

James Bailey, 23, Son Of Mr. And Mrs. Anderson Bailey, Cazenovia, N.Y., Falls Beneath Truck Driven By His Brother.

Injuries suffered when he was crushed under the rear wheels of a heavy truck driven by his brother, claimed the life of James Bailey, 23, of Cazenovia, N.Y., on March 5th. His death occurred at the Hospital of the Good Shepherd, being due to a ruptured spleen according to Dr. S. H. Raymond, Madison county coroner, who released the body to an undertaker after the autopsy. The young man has several relatives in this district, his father being a brother of Messrs. Wiiliam, A. and B. Bailey, and his mother a sister of Mr. Wm. Sheldrick of the Melvin Settlement.

The coroner also stated that Bailey suffered a fracture of three ribs and a crushed lung. According to reports of the fatal accident received by Dr. Raymond are that Bailey had left a tractor in a field at Bingley, north of Cazenovia, and ran to board a truck driven by his brother who was starting for hime. The victim failed to catch the moving vehicle and fell under the rear wheels which passed over his body. He was taken to a physician and later to hospital.

Surviving are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson Bailey; four brothers, Leslie, Lawrence, Hartley and Arthur Bailey; two sisters, Mrs. James Almond and Miss Annie Gertrude Bailey.

Funeral services were conducted at the family home at two o'clock Thursday afternoon by Rev. H. C. Barnes, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The body was placed in the Evergreen Cemetery Mausoleum until spring.

Sympathy is extended to the bereaved family.

Winchester Up Four For Friday Night's Final

Nation Valley Boys Lose To Chevrolets 6-2. — Clerks Tie Heart-Breaker With Rangers 6-All.—Final In Winchester Friday.

Last night, before another large crowd of excited fans in the local arena, Winchester took a death grip on the inter-town cup. In the first game the Valley found it difficult to hold Jimmie Stuart who started the scoring. Gray on a pass from Gordon evened it up. Summers, on a pass from Stuart, and then Stuart unassisted made the score 3-1 at the end of the period for the Chevs.

The second period went better with the Valley holding the Chevs scoreless while Gray, on a pass from Gordon, made the score 3-2. The last period was the same as the two previous meets of these teams, all Chevs. McDermid, from Blair, then Carkner and Summers ran the score up to 6-2. The players all tried hard. Stuart stood away out for the Chevs while Marcellus and Merkley appeared best for the Valley.

Rangers Score Two Fast Oones.

Before the second game, between the Rangers and Clerks, was 45 seconds old the score was Rangers 2, Clerks 0. Blair teamed up with Kenny from the first face-off to score, then Bob Hitsman breezed through from the next face-off and scored. The Clerks had not as yet had the puck. They at last secured the puck and McLeod, Jarvis and McCloskey went down fast, Bill scoring. Blair came right back and made it 3-1. Jarvis and Edgerton worked a pretty pass with Alf making the count. To finish the period off right, Hitsman scored another. Rangers 4; Clerks 2.

Play was fast and Workman was making stop after stop. Hitsman broke through again and scored, shortly afterward Jarvis gave McCloskey a perfect pass and "Diddly" made not mistake. The second period ended 5-3 for the Rangers.

In the third, the Clerks forced the play continually and if Workman had been at all human the Chesterville boys would have scored ten goals instead of three. Chance after chance "Chubby" smothered at the goal mouth till at last Bill McLeod scored on a pass from Edgerton. Then Hitsman sailed down for his fourth unassisted goal of the game. The Clerks were still forcing and Lynch gave McLeod a pass for Bill's No. 3. To end the game and tie the score at six-all, Jarvis made a beautiful rush and flicked the puck past Workman.

While the Rangers all played well, Workman and Hitsman were the works for the Winchester team. Jarvis with two goals and two assists, played a perfect game, leading rush after rush and giving perfect passes, only to be stopped by Workman.

An outside referee, Gordon Smith, of Morrisburg, handled the games to everybody's satisfaction. At least to as many as are ever satisfied with a referee.

Chesterville goes to Winchester for the return games Friday night. Their four-goal deficit looms big, but if Stuart and Hitsman and Workman could be chloroformed there would be nothing to it.

Minister Dise Suddenly While In Dentist's Chair

Rev. A. Wilson, Brinston, Dies Just After Getting In Dentist's Chair At Iroquois Tuesday.—Had Been Ill For Some Time.

After hurrying to keep an appointment with a dentist in Iroquois, Rev. Arthur Wilson, minister of the United Church at Brinston, collapsed about two minutes after getting in the chair on Tuesday and shortly after medical arrived, died.

Mr. Wilson was in his 50th year and last June started his third term on his present charge. For some weeks he had not been in good health and on Sunday was not able to take evening service.

The dentist was making preparations to fill a cavity for him when he heard his named called. He hurried to him and found he had slumped forward and was unable to speak. He summoned Drs. E. H. Marcellus and J. R. Miller, who used artificial respiration but to no avail. Mrs. Wilson was at once notified.

Besides Mrs. Wilson, three children survive. Dorothy, Ruth and Gordon, all attending High school at Iroquois.

Former Local Resident Dies At Age Of 90 Years

Mrs. Silas Swerdfeger Passes Four Hours After Suffering Paralytic Stroke.

One of the oldest citizens of the township of Williamsburg in which she was born, died at her home on Monday, Feb. 26, in the person of Mrs. Silas Swerdfeger. Death came four hours after she had suffered a paralytic stroke. The late Mrs. Swerdfeger was born in 1844, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Marcellus, of Williamsburg. She was united in marriage to Mr. Silas Swerdfeger in 1867, and a loving mother to four children, passed to her eternal rest at the residence of her son, Mr. Roy Swerdfeger. Many beautiful floral offerings were received, testifying to the esteem in which the deceased was held.

Those who survive are: two daughters, Mrs. Laban Barkley of Mariatown, in the township of Williamsburg; and Mrs. (Dr.) Stanley Merkley, of Melfort, Sask.; two sons, Dr. George Swerdfeger of Buffalo, N.Y.; and Roy Swerdfeger on the old home place.

The funeral service, conducted by Rev. Albert Milliner of Toronto, assisted by Rev. Ryder of Winnipeg, took place at her late residence on Wednesday, February 28, after which the remains were placed in the vault at Williamsburg. Interment will take place in the spring in St. John's cemetery, Riverside.

It may not be a sign of spring, it maf only be a result of a hard winter, but as we came out King street this morning we noticed a red squirrel happily poised on top of an insulator among the telephone wires at the corner of Queen street.

Difficult Task.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Look After The Ice House.

At this time of the year a farmer should thoroughly inspect his ice house. Repair any little job before it becomes a big and costly job. If, for instance, a batten is rubbed off the ice house by live stock, rain wil get behind the studding and decrease the value of the insulation, start rot in the sill, studs and sheating.

Heavy Cattle In Demand.

At present, according to the Ontario Marketing Board, there is a definite demand at the Union Stock Yards for top quality heavy cattle, with strong prices prevailing.

Recently a choice lot of this class sold at six and one-half cents a pound. These cattle were smooth and well finished, weighing upwards of 1500 pounds.

With the surplus relieved as a result of last year's export trade, feeders should profit by marketing properly-finished cattle of this weight.

Sow Thistle Menace.

Determined that sow thistle be stamped out within the confines of its area, the Council of the County of Kent have had a conference with Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture.

Colonel Kennedy has offered his assistance, and has promised to prepare revisions to The Weed Act, enabling local weed inspectors to administer weed control measures more effectively. A definite organized campaign is now being prepared, consisting of newspaper publicity, special sow thistle lessons in all schools of the county, and a stringent clean-up of all waste and cultivated land during the growing season.

Henhouse Ventilation.

The removal of moisture is a major problem in poultry houses. Poultry have no sweat glands, but they give off relatively large amounts of vapour in respiration and through the skin. It was found at one experimental station that maximum egg production was obtained when temperatures were not allowed to fluctuate widely. A henhouse temperature at 50 degrees F. is too high to be maintained on most farms in winter without artificial heat. Hence, a lower temperature held uniformly would be desirable. Increasing numbers of poultry men have had success with artificial heat properly regulated, but failure has commonly resulted when temperatures were allowed to go too high or to fluctuate widely.

Dairy Cattle Rings.

A common affection of cattle at this time of the year is ringworm. This can be easily controlled if taken in time. Wash the part with soap and water to remove crusts, scraping if necessary, then dry the spot and paint with tincture of iodine, repeating the treatment daily until cured. Sulphur ointment or any good smothering ointment will also give good results.

Beware Of Weed Seeds In Manure.

Weed seeds find their way to the manure pile through the digestive systems of animals and in bedding. When fresh manure is hauled out and spread on the land viable weed seeds may be spread with it. If weeds are present allow the manure to remain in the pile for at least one month before spreading and thereby avoid the danger of increasing weed infestation.

Immediate Action Advised.

"To farmers who have not secured their requirements of seed grain to date, I would say that immediate action is not only wise but vitally necessary."

This was the recent statement of Arthur H. Martin, Assistant Director, Crops and Markets Branch.

The shortage of seed grain, and the fact that many registered growers have exhausted their surplus, are clearly indicated by figures included in a survey made by this official of the Department.

Available supplies of registered seed grain in Ontario as of February 26th, according to the survey follow: Oats, approximately 7,800 bushels; barley, some 3,600 bushels; and somewhat less than 500 bushels of spring wheat.

Pruning Should Be Done During The Dormant Season

Pruning as practiced by the commercial fruit-grower, should have two essential objects: first, to train the shape or growth of the tree in a specific way, and second, to influence the production and quality of fruit.

When speaking of training a fruit tree, the purpose is not to mould a beautiful or shapely object, but rather a tree that is commercially profitable and capable of carrying its crop without breakage of limbs. Furthermore, the proper pruning of a tree will facilitate other orchard operations such as spraying and picking.

Pruning may be done at any time during the dormant season, but late winter and early spring is preferable. However, the amount and type of pruning is far more important than the time at which it is done.

Current Report.

Parts of Ontario are now beginning to feel the pinch of short supplies of both hay and grain due to poor crops last sumomer. In recent reports from agricultural representatives, it was indicated that the extreme severity of the present winter, coupled with dwindling feed supplies, was lowering the vitality of stock. Bruce county mentions many cases of pneumonia among cattle due to the cold, and Muskoka and Parry Sound indicates that the live stock of the district are in poor condition, due to the long, cold winter.

Peel and Dufferin report grain and hay scarce and many dairymen not feeding for maximum production because of the high price of mill feeds. In Prince Edward county and points further east, there is every indication that a great deal of hay will be needed by cattle feeders and dairymen before the winter is through.

Practically all counties mention that any surpluses of hay are being readily snapped up by neighbours who are short and that prices range from $10 per ton in the western end of the province, to $16 and $18 on the Ottawa market for loose hay.

Hulless Oats.

Haldimand county farmers who have been making a specialty of Liberty hulless oats report growing interest in this new grain all through Ontario. Poultrymen seem to be especially interested as they can feed the grain whole without any rolling whatever and, of course, there is no danger from hulls and no worry about excess fibre. "They make ready-made poultry feed," states Bruce Mehlenbacher, one of the largest growers, at Cayuga. Hog feeders who must also be careful of fibre, are finding more use for the new oats, especially for young pigs. Growers in the Haldimand district report good yields for Liberty hulless. Though last season was by no means favourable for any kind of spring grain, Stephen Culver of Rainham Centre, reports an average of 25 bushels from his ten-acre field, while a neighbour, Wilfred Loucks of South Cayuga, had the same yield from 25 acres. These growers explain that the hulless weighed over 50 pounds to the bushel, therefore giving a return of 1,250 pounds of solid feed per acre. When the 30 to 35 per cent hull of the ordinary oat is deducted, and the difference taken into consideration, these yields are equal to 50 bushels per acre for Banner. Haldimand growers also claim that the hulless oat being earlier than Banner is less affected by dry summer weather.

No Directions.

Particular Diner (after altering his choice several time): "Yes. waiter, I will have mutton chops and chip potatoes. And make the chops lean."

Fed-Up Waiter :"Yes, sir. Which way, sir?"

Imperfect Compliment.

The new superintendent of a private lunatic asylum was strolling round the grounds a few weeks after his appointment when suddenly one of the inmates accosted him.

"Excuse me, sir," he said, raising his hat, "but I have great pleasure in informing you that I and all my unfortunate friends like you better than the last superintendent."

"Thank you," replied the new man pleasantly. "And may I ask why?"

"Well, sir," answered the lunatic, "you seem more like one of ourselves."

Funeral of J. H. Pillar Held At Russell Tuesday

Native Of Aultsville Was In His 85th Year.—A Descendant Of The United Empire Loyalists.

The funeral of John Helder Pillar was held from the residence of his sister, Mrs. Robert Long, of Russell, to the United Church, on Tuesday afternoon at 2.30. He was in his 85th year, and was the son of the late Soloman Pillar, being born at Aultsville. He was a descendant of United Empire Loyalists stock. The greater part of his life was spent in the Russell vicinity but of late years he lived with his son, Willard, of Prescott.

He leaves to mourn, in addition to his son Willard, four daughters, Mrs. Ed Wynn of Kenmore, Mrs. Coleman Hutchison of Winchester, Mrs. Chas. Craven of North Gower, and Mrs. Thomas Riddell of Brownlee, Sask.; three sisters, Mrs. Robert Long of Russell, Mrs. Enos Fetterly and Mrs. Chris York of Hamilton, and four brothers: Jacob of Clear Lake, Wash., Arvid of Vancouver, B.C.; Michael of Wisconsin, and Seeley of Riverside, Calif.

Service was conducted by Rev. D. M. Cockburn of the United Church, Prescott, assisted by Rev. Thos. McNaught of the Russell United Church. Interment was made in the United Church cemetery at Russell.

N.H.L. Championship Games Will Commence March 22

Toronto Maple Leafs And Detroit Red Wings Clash For Title.—Finals Probable About April First.

Toronto, March 12th.—The Toronto Maple Leafs and Detroit Red Wings will open their fight for the championship of the National Hockey League on March 22nd, the League's Board of Governors decided to-day. Red Wings are leaders of the American Section of the circuit and Leafs head the Canadian Section.

Two games will be played in Toronto, March 22 and 24th, and two fixtures have been set for Detroit, March 26 and 28, in the three-out-of-five series. If a fifth game is required it will be played in Detroit on March 30.

Frank Calder, president of the N.H.L., announced the play-off dates to-day following a meeting of the governors. He also announced a $20,000 trust fund with Conny Smythe, Toronto Leafs manager, and himself as trustees, had been established for Irvin "Ace" Bailey, injured Leaf player. The fund was established from the proceeds of the benefit games at Boston and Toronto and the balance of Bailey's contract with Leafs.

The total came to $27,969 and the $20,000 trust fund was arranged with Bailey receiving the remainder of the money in cash.

The teams capturing second and third places in the two sections will battle for the second and third positions in the whole league in two-game total-goal series. Winners of this series will meet in another two-game total-goal series to decide the challenger for the Stanley Cup which will meet the winner of the Detroit-Toronto series.

The first games of the second and third-place struggles will go the regulation 60 minutes but if the teams are tied at the end of the regulation time in the second games they will play until the tie is broken, the first team scoring getting the victory.

If Canadians and Chicago emerge in second positions in their sections, they will start their series in Montreal on March 22, the second game going to the Illinois city, March 25. Rangers and Montreal Maroons have chances for second places also. If Rangers come through with Canadiens, the first game will be played in Montreal on March 22 and the second in New York on March 25.

Providing Maroons and Chicago get the call they will meet in the first game in Chicago on March 21 and the second in Montreal March 24. If Montreal meets Rangers, the first encounter will be in New York March 24, and the second in Montreal, March 26.

The third-place battles or section "C" have been mapped out as follows:

If Canadiens meet Chicago, the first game will be in Montreal March 22, and the second in Chicago, March 25.

If Canadiens meet Rangers, first game will be in Montreal, March 22, and the second in New York, March 25. If Montreal meets Rangers, the games are scheduled for Montreal, March21, and New York, March 25.

Play-off dates for the second and third-place winners and to decide the Stanley Cup challenger follow:

If Chicago meets Rangers, games will be played in Chicago, March 27 and New York, March 29. If Chicago meets Canadiens, games will be played in Montreal, March 28, and Chicago, March 31. If Rangers meet Canadiens the games will be in Montreal, March 27, and New York March 29. If Rangers meet Montreal, the games are scheduled for New York, March 27, and Montreal, March 29. If Canadiens meet Montreal they will play in Montreal March 27 and 29.

The Stanley Cup series is slated for March 31, April 2, 5 and 7. The winners of the Detroit-Leaf series will have the right to decide on whose ice the series will open.

Providing the Detroit-Leaf series goes four games and Rangers capture the right to challenge for the cup, the games on April 4 and 5 will be played in New York. If the Detroit-Leaf series requires five games and Rangers capture their series, then the Stanley Cup game will be played in New York on April 1 with the remaining games on the ice of the other team.

Mrs. Hirst McIntosh and Master Rae spent the week end with Mrs. Jas. Rae.

Little Benny looked up at his mother thoughtfully.

"Mum," he said, a frown on his face, "tell me—did you get me in a bargain basement?"

"Whatever makes you think that, Benny?" mother asked.

The boy held up his hand.

"I was just wondering," he replied. "You see, my fingers are all odd sizes."

FOUR PERFECT BRIDGE HANDS REPORTED BY PERTH CLUB

The Perth Olympic Club has won a reputation in the Bridge field which we have never heard duplicated. One evening last week Messrs. Harry Byrne, J. Jarbeau, Frank Steidman and Eddie Rowe sat in to a game. The cards were ruffled or shuffled three or four times in the customary manner, and then cut twice, the first time some of the cards showing, necessitating a second cut. The dealing was then proceeded with and resulted as follows: Harry Byrne picked up 12 Hearts and the Ace of Diamonds, J. Jardeau had all the Clubs, while Frank Stedman had all the Spades and Eddie Rowe had 12 Diamonds and the Ace of Hearts. Certainly four unusual hands.

Increase Of Optimism With Budget Surplus

With No New Taxes, Balance Seen In Spite Of Reduced Revenue In Many Quarters.— Northern Settlers' Conditions Improvement.

TO INVESTIGATE STOCKYARDS

A SURPLUS of $215,000 for the fiscal year ending October 31st next was forecast by Premier George S. Henry in presentation of the budget in the Ontario Legislature last week. In delivering the financial picture for 1934, the Premier drove a warm attack on members of the Opposition for their lack of faith at a time when Ontario is emerging from depressive conditions to renewed prosperity.

"On all sides we find faith and optimism," declared the Premier. "This feeling of confidence exisits because a Conservative administration is in control. And despite blue-ruin talk from Opposition critics the Province is sound and stable."

To Progressive Leader Nixon, Premier Henry delivered a stinging retort for the former to go and tell Provincial Liberal Leader Hepburn the truth about the Province.

"Tell him to sing a song of optimism and hope in the future of this great province," declared the Premier, "and not to spend his time going up and down the country sowing seeds of distrust, dissension and disorder. The people of the province are proud of the statements I have made on the budget. They will be prouder to speak some time this summer as to what they think of the stewardship of the Conservative administration and of the record of Opposition."

Crowded galleries listened in interest to the Premier's presentation which required an hour and three-quarters, stressing the surplus for the last financial year of $476,000, predicting another surplus despite difficult times and accomplished without a single cent of new taxation. The Premier also pointed out that when revenues permit, taxation then will be reduced, and while a report had indicated the surplus would amount to $1,000,000 he said if that had been possible then taxation would have been reduced.

The surplus for the current year is based on estimated revenues of $51,079,000 and expenditures of $50,864,110, while the surplus for the last year represents the difference between revenues amounting to $51 373.051 and expenditures totalling $50,896,626. Last year's public accounts shows a reduction of $5,300,000 in ordinary expenditure and a $9,000,000 cut in capital expenditure from the 1932 figure; a decreased revenue of $5,339,404; decreased liquor revenue to the extent of $3,745,000; retirement of $15,000,000 in New York treasury bills; expenditure of $32,637,000 on free grants and services for public welfare; additional Hydro reserves of $69,000,000 and continuation of all services at usual levels despite economic depression. Gross debt of the province is set at $592,000,000 with net debt of $299,000,000.

Ordinary revenue decreased $2,802,181 from the amount collected in 1932, the chief decreases arising in fines and fees under Legal Offices inspection $58,000; insurance agents, brokers and adjusters licenses $8,000; bonus and timber dues $799,000; corporation tax $482,000; race tracks $216,000; land transfer tax $52,000, etc. Revenue increases occurred in crown lands leases and licenses $78,000; Mines Department assessments $140,000; mining licenses and recording fees $39,000; gasoline tax $288,000; motor vehicle licenses, etc. $86,000; wine tax $86,000; succession duties $1,945,000, and stock transfer tax $355,000.

The Premier also defended the government against criticism of the recent $40,000,000 loan, declaring the government had not favoured the large corporations and investment houses. Figures showed that a good percentage of the bonds had gone into the hands of the small investor. This loan, too, had cost less than any loan floated in many years.

With a view to removing alleged unfair commission charges and other abuses in the sale of live stock, the Agriculture Committee approved a resolution asking the Stevens inquiry at Ottawa to inquire into packers, stock yards commission men and all conditions pertaining to marketing of live stock. The motion asking for the inquiry was moved and seconded by H. J. Davis, and John A. Craig, Conservatives, East Elgin and North Lanark. Data on alleged unfair dealings and charges are to be submitted to the committee which will present it to the Stevens inquiry. The committee also endorsed a scale of reduced commission charges.

Albert V. Waters (Cons., North Cochrane) in speaking on the budget debate, urged the government to have control of settlers in Northern Ontario vested in the Ontario Department of Agriculture and adoption of a plan to improve conditions for northern settlers so that the province would have farmers and not road menders. Mr. Waters asked that settlers in the agricultural areas that would be developed be grouped in order to form communities, the townships to be surveyed into 100-acre lots with a narrow frontage. This scheme he said should be based on the present policy exisiting in the Province of Quebec, where he said remarkable results have been attained.

Frank Spence (Cons., Fort William) presented a plan for the Provincial and Federal Governments to complete about 400 miles of the Trans-Canada Northwestern Ontario highway in order to provide relief work and take many people off direct relief. Mr. Spence said the cost would be $10,000,000 shared by the two governments, the work would employ 40.000 over a five-months period.

Hon. Leopold Macaulay, Minister of Highways, in introducing amendments to the Public Commercial Vehicles Act, announced that he is requesting the Provincial Department of Labour to investigate the matter of minimum rates of pay for drivers in order that adequate pay will be insured under the new regulations. If this minimum wage is set up ,it will be the first established for men in Ontario. The new regulations fix the amount, nature and class of insurance or bond which shall be provided or carried by commercial vehicle owners; publication, filing and posting of tariffs or tolls and the payment of tolls, and provision for the minimum age of drivers and minimum rates of pay or wages for drivers. The act is the result of the inter-provincial conference held at Ottawa recently, attended by representatives of all provinces which delved into the question of uniform rules and regulations for commercial vehicles throughout Canada.

Aged Farmer Trampled Receives Severe Injuries

John Cooke, 72, Mountain Township, In Serious Condition With Both Legs Fractured And Body Bruised —Lay Three Hours Before Found

The condition of John Cooke, 72, well-known Mountain township farmer who suffered severe injuries when he was trampled by a horse on his farm Saturday afternoon was reported to be as good as can be expected. Due to his age, however, his condition is still considered serious.

Mr. Cooke was putting liniment on the legs of a horse in the barn when the animal kicked, knocking him down. Before he could get clear the animal trampled on him, fracturing both his legs and causing severe body bruises.

Mr. Cooke, unable to rise, was found on the floor of the barn three hours later by his son, Harold Cooke. Removed to his home, he was attended by Dr. R. C. Gross of Winchester.

Miss Doris Kittle had a few friends to tea on Tuesday to celebrate her ninth birthday.

WITH THE BOY SCOUTS

FIRST AID INTERESTING.

Much interest was shown in the First Aid work at last week's meeting by all boys, big and small. While it was of an elementary character, including explanations of the large triangular bandages, broad bandage and narrow bandage, this forms the foundation of future studies. Many arms were put in slings as the boys practiced on "broken" arms for about 20 minutes. Practical use of the Scout staff was demonstrated and practiced by using two to make emergency stretchers. These were made with coats turned inside out, buttoned, and the staves passed through the sleeves.

The Fireman's Lift was practiced again with the rules this week calling for the picking up of an "unconscious" subject from the floor. It was somewhat harder and made the contest much more strenuous. The other game run off was an Alligator Relay won by the Beavers.

BIRD HOUSES REPORTED.

Two or three birds houses are already reported by individual Scouts for our spring supply. It is expected P. L. Rodney Hummel will have a martin house in sections for display to-night so all may see how this type is made and put together.

ELEMENTARY FIRST AID.

For Second-Class Scouts.

No. 7—Fractured Leg.

TREATMENT.—Lay the patient on his back Steady the limb by holding the ankle and foot. Draw the foot into its natural position and do not let go until the splints have been fixed. Apply splints on the outer and inner sides of the leg, reaching from above the knee to the bottom of the foot. Fasten the splints with bandages above and below the break, around the ankle and above the knee, also apply a broad bandage around both knees. All knots are to be tied over the splint.—The Handbook.

ANNUAL REPORT ENCOURAGING

A copy of the Annual Report for Ontario was received this week from Provincial Headquarters and brings very encouraging news for the past year. Through three difficult years the Boy Scouts have driven steadily onward and the report of the Assistant Provincial Commissioner, Frank C. Irwin, shows the membership at 24,753, an increase of 877; made up of the following branches:

	1933	1932
Wolf Cubs	9,870	9,946
More Cubs "went up to Scout Troops.
Boy Scouts	12,178	11,515
40 new Troops.

Camping

In spite of economic conditions and the fact that camping equipment could no longer be obtained on loan from the Department of National Defence, we had more camps and more boys in camp than ever before. 4,809 attended 205 camps of which 123 were registered and granted Scout Camp Certificates. The summer was one of the best camping summers in recent years from the standpoint of weather conditions and no serious accidents or illness marred the record of any camp.

We will attempt to deal with other sections of the report in coming issues as our space is limited and much interesting reading is found in the 1933 annual.

NOTICE OF ANNUAL QUOTA.

Mr. W. Carr, chairman of our Group Committee received word from Toronto this week that our annual quota has been placed at $10. This is our share of the $14,500 required by Headquarters to carry on the many services given to the local organizations for the coming year. The rapidly increasing membership has made the work much more difficult for the Provincial staff which has not been increased since 1928, although the membership has grown 6,253.

Adventures Of Case Of Eggs Told To House Of Commons

Hansard Contains Startling Disclosure Montreal Packing House's Methods Selling And Buying Eggs.

Speaking in the House of Commons Mr. F. H. Pickel said that on June 6 last he telephoned to a packing house in Montreal for a crate of select eggs. They were sent over and I have the tag which was attached to the crate. They were tagged, according to law, with letters an inch high, and we paid $6 for the crate of 30 dozen eggs, at the rate of 20 cents a dozen.

That crate of eggs was shipped out by express to the eastern townships; it was re-packed into another crate in the presence of witnesses and shipped back within 24 hours to the same packing company for sale.

Here is the result: We paid $6 for the crate. It was returned to the same packing house within 24 hours and the return we got from it was $3.20. We had: extras, 8½ dozen at 15 cents; firsts, 13 dozen at 12 cents; seconds, six dozen at 10 cents, and cracked, 19 dozen at nine cents.

I want to say right here that when the crate reached its destination in the eastern townships there was not a cracked egg in it but when those eggs reached Montreal there were 19 dozen cracked and four rotten.

European Winter Sport Fans After Canadian-Made Skates

Touring Canadian Hockeyists Develop Hockey And Skating Interest.—Exports More Than Doubled.

Popularity of Canadian-made skates in Europe, especially in those countries where touring Canadian hockey teams have played in the last few years and where hockey is rapidly developing into a national sport, is shown by the export figures.

No fewer than 24,418 pairs of Canadian-made skates were shipped to 14 European countries in 1933, compared with only 11,315 pairs in 1932, and only 6,001 in 1931.

It is regarded in Canada as not only a tribute to the excellent quality of Canadian-made skates but a development of interest in hockey and skating in those countries that has been stimulated by the visits to European countries of Canadian hockey teams.

Import Figures.

It is significant that countries like Germany, Czechoslovakia, France, Switzerland, imported most of the skates from Canada. Germany alone imported 7,259 pairs last year compared with 1,549 in 1932 and only 451 pairs in 1931, while France imported 3,009 pairs last year against 1,559 in 1932 and 257 pairs in 1931.

Czechoslovakia imported from Canada 3210 pairs compared with 1,544 pairs in 1932 and 702 pairs in 1931. Switzerland was also actively in the market for the Canadian blades, bringing in 2,460 pairs against only 805 pairs from this country last year.

Skate To Market.

Even the women in the Netherlands have taken to skates, going to market on them, carrying their marketing baskets on their arms. Belgium imported 599 pairs last year, against only 66 pairs in the previous year. Other countries where the imports rose sharply last year were Poland, Japan, Roumania, Italy and Hungary. There is a decline in the export of this commodity to other parts of the world.

Most of the hockey sticks used in Europe are of Canadian make.

INFECTION.

INFECTION is a term which is used to describe the implantation of disease in the body from without. In this sense, the use of the term implies the communication or transfer of disease by a living agent or disease germ.

Disease germs are so small as to be invisible to the naked eye. Through the microscope many of them can be seen and identified, but some of them are too small for even the most powerful microscope to magnify sufficiently to allow of their being seen.

Outside of the body, disease germs do no harm. They must first gain entrance to the body, and this they do in one of three ways They may be breathed in, or swallowed, or they may enter through a break in the skin. Because they are so minute the break in the skin need only be of microscopic size to allow germs to penetrate.

As far as we know, disease germs do not grow and multiply in nature outside of the human or animal body. Some of them are hardier or more resistant than others, but they do in general die fairly quickly outside of the human or animal body. Like plants, germs require moisture to live; drying, especially in sunshine, destroys them. The important practical point is that, in most instances, disease germs are spread direct by the fresh, germ-laden secretions of the sick person.

There is danger in the use of articles recently soiled by secretions. The common drinking-cup is a real menace, because there is not time for the germs deposited in the saliva of one user to die before the cup is placed to the lips of another, and so the saliva of the first passes into the mouth of the second, carrying any disease germs which the saliva may have contained. Nevertheless, our real danger lies in the coughs, sneezes and loud talking which throw particles from the mouth and nose into the faces of those around.

If you want to appreciate this danger, stand in front or a clean mirror. Cough, sneeze and talk at the mirror; then observe the deposit of droplets on its surface. Try this standing at various distances and see how many feet you throw these droplets; in this way, you have a practical demonstration of what the uncovered sneeze and cough mean to those who come within the range of droplet fire.

When the germs gain entrance to our bodies and establish themselves, we become infected. When we begin to pass the germs out, we are infectious. The infectious person is to be avoided unless he takes the precautions necessary to protect others.

"All right," said his wife, secretly resolving to get her own back on dear Cousin Jane.

"Here's the hat, dear," she told her husband some time later and she displayed an atrocious-looking object which was very much out of date.

"Is that exactly what you would like yourself, dear?" he asked, looking at the hat rather doubtfully.

"Exactly, dear," she smiled. "I think it's wonderful."

"That's good," he replied. "Now I'll tell you my surprise. The hat isn't for Cousin Jane at all; I intended it as a present for you, dear."

Political Rivals Can Be Friends On The Street

By Fred Williams.

THE UNIQUE and most excellent photograph reproduced in The Mail and Empire on Wednesday, the work of that artist, Nelson Quarrington ,affords me an opportunity to recall a story once told by Sir John A. Macdonald, explaining how it is that men can be deadly political rivals and yet be gentlemen in their social contacts It was at the (I think) only dinner of the Parliamentary Press Gallery held outside the precincts of Parliament, in either 1889 or 1890. It was held at the Russell House, because the press men had decided to ask the Governor-General to be their guest, and at that time the fiction still existed that the only part of Parliament House which His Excellency could visit was the Senate Chamber, this putting the parliamentary restaurant, which was within the Commons precincts, "out of bounds."

Lord Stanley of Preston accepted the invitation, and gave us a new view of his character. The very dignified English aristocrat soon lost his dignity and entered into the spirit of the evening. Sir John was, of course, at the head table; so also was Mr. Wilfred Laurier, leader of the opposition; and quite a number of favourite M.P.'s were present as the personal guests of the press men. I think the chairman was T. P. Gorman, a most rabid Liberal.

I have lost the menu of that night after keeping it for years and cannot state definitely the toasts to which Macdonald and Laurier spoke. I think the Liberal leader spoke first and that Sir John followed; anyway the Prime Minister made friendly reference to his political rival and wondered why it was that so many of the general public were of the opinion that because men differed on political issues they must therefore be personal enemies. He could only account for it by the state of mind into which politics sometimes led people to party feuds as to family and religious differences, illustrated by an experience of some dozen years before.

In the National Policy campaign of 1878 the Conservatives held many political picnics throughout Ontario, and Sir John was at most of them. There were also a few joint meetings addressed by both Prime Minister Mackenzie and some of his ministers and Sir John and his lieutenants. One of these was held in the county of Lambton, somewhere near Sarnia (I forget the locale). It was a tremendous affair, people travelling from all over Western Ontario to hear the big leaders. It was a very hot day, and most of the speakers, including Sir John, of course, doffed their coats and spoke in their shirt sleeves, but not Alexander Mackenzie. He was too dignified for that; he perspired under the hot sun in his frock coat, thereby upholding the "sacredness" of his office.

It was a red hot meeting. Politics were red hot in those days and the partisans cheered, booed and yelled, and sometimes fought, to their hearts' content. Neither Macdonald nor Mackenzie spared the other. Perhaps not so vituperative as some of the minor speakers, yet they worked the meeting to high pitch. When the meeting ended, the people divided into two camps, one escorting Mackenzie to the depot in more or less decorous style, the other cheering Sir John and pulling the carriage in which he sat.

When the depot was reached, Mr. Mackenzie at once entered the car—a public car; there were no private cars then—and settled down to read. Sir John, on the other hand, stayed on the platform until the conductor's "All Aboard," shaking hands with everybody, enquiring about children he had never seen and generally proving that he was the best "mixer" in the world. At last he entered the car. He looked around, every seat was filled—except one, that at the end of the car occupied by the prime minister. Doubtless Sir John could have had anybody's seat, but he refused and sat down beside Mackenzie, who gave a brief and brusque greeting. The train started. John A. had to talk to somebody, so he talked to Mackenzie, and it was not long before the dour countenance of the prime minister softened, smiled now and again and finally emitted a peal of hearty laughter.

Seated across the aisle was one of those old hard-shelled Grits from either the Bruces or the Hurons—they were Grits indeed; the Globe was their Bible; John A. was to them the devil himself. This old fellow stood the ordeal as long as he could, but there came a limit to human endurance. Just as the train neared London, where it was to be broken up to go east and north, this Scots farmer who took his politics as seriously as his Presbyterianism, rose in his wrath, advanced to where the two big politicians were seated, and shaking his fist, declaimed at the top of his voice in broad Doric, which Sir John imitated:

"Well, I always thought politics was a put-up job. Now I'm sure of it!"

Whereupon Sir John added that there was worry enough in life without carrying political differences into private life, and that if he and Mr. Mackenzie could get along together how much easier it was for him and Mr. Laurier to be friends. We of today cannot realize the extent of the fierceness of politics in that and the previous generation. Tories were Tories; Grits were Grits; they could not mix except in fight, and they would have frothed at the mouth had they been able to look at so definite evidence as that photograph that men can be political foes and yet be personally friendly.

FREE-WILL GENERAL STORE

Brockville Recorder.

WE have been just reading about a unique general store which is conducted in Waller, Texas, by a certain Albert D. Purvis—possibly of Leeds County ancestry — who had carried on a successful business for 19 years in spite of the fact that he is dependent entirely upon the free-will offerings of his customers.

Mr. Purvis' establishment, in appearance, is not unlike many others which stand in rural communities throughout Ontario, and is known as "God's Mercy Store," and the method underlying the business conducted in it is explained upon a blackboard, which reads: "All goods in this store are sold to you at cost—nothing has been added as personal gain or profit. The store is kept by free-will offerings. Anything you add to your purchase will be received with thanks."

The cost of the merchandise is marked upon the blackboard and the purchaser selects the article that he requires, consults the price list and adds to it whatever he feels is a fair profit.

Texas is popularly considered to be rather a hard-boiled part of the world and yet we have Mr. Purvis' word that, notwithstanding the way in which he does business, he averages ten per cent profit during the year.

Absent Treatment

HAVING an ingenious turn of mind, Clifford Daniels applied more time and thought to circumventing difficulties than to surmounting them. He gave less attention to his studies probably than any other boy in St. Timothy's School, yet he quite consistently held a place about one third of the way from the bottom of the class.

The position, although giving no cause for pride to Clifford's parents, seemed to him comfortable and satisfactory. He managed so skillfully that he always ranked just high enough not to be excluded from participation in athletic sports or to be deprived of his afternoons.

At least that had been his record for two comfortable years at St. Timothy's. Then a new master, Mr. Babcock, came to the school, and undertook to teach Greek history to the fifth form, of which by that time Clifford was an honoured and popular member. And Mr. Babcock expected just as much of the fellows in the middle of the class as of those at the top. At the second meeting he called upon Clifford to tell what he could of the Battle of Marathon.

Clifford rose and began impressively: "The Battle of Marathon was one of the great, one of the really decisive battles of the world. In fact, it was one of the great naval battles of all time. It proved to be a great victory—"

"You may sit down, Daniels," said Mr. Babcock, with the utmost frigidity.

"But I haven't told half what I know about the Battle of Marathon!" cried Clifford in an aggrieved voice, while the class grinned.

"Twice zero is still zero," retorted Mr. Babcock.

From Harry McCune, who was next called on and who had studied the lesson, Clifford learned that the Battle of Marathon took place on land. Instantly Clifford made violent gesticulations designed to indicate his chagrin at having committed such a stupid blunder, and to intimate that he had really known a lot about the Battle of Marathon. The cold eye with which Mr. Babock regarded this demonstration incensed Clifford.

In Latin, Greek and French it was Clifford's practice to prepare exactly half the lesson. He would count the number of lines in the passage assigned, and then as hastily as possible work out the sense of the first half or the second half of the passage, alternating the halves day by day. If he was called on to recite in the section that he had prepared, he regarded it merely as the just award of Providence; if, however, he was called on for recitation of the part of the lesson he had ignored, although feeling that he was the victim of an unkind fate, he always made a dauntless effort to read at sight, and sometimes he beguiled the teacher into giving him just the help that he needed in order to tide him over a difficulty. When this occurred, he enjoyed a feeling of rare happiness and virtue.

But such methods as these were clearly valueless in the case of history, especially when it was taught by a master like Mr. Babcock. It was not possible to guess your way through history, as you might occasionally do through a language lesson.

Clifford set his inventive mind to work on the problem of dealing with Mr. Babcock and Greek history. In consequence of his meditations, he studied the lessons in Greek history for the next three days quite thoroughly. Each day in the classroom he sat extraordinarily alert and attentive and whenever the pupil called upon hesitated or was unable to answer a question, up would shoot Clifford's hand, and there would be a noisy snapping of the fingers and a frantic waving about of the member, while Clifford, erect on the edge of his bench, with eyes eager and mouth open, fairly yearned to communicate his knowledge.

Mr. Babcock, in a dry and skeptical voice, said, during one of these demonstrations, "Very well, Daniels; you may enlighten the class." Thereupon Clifford poured forth a glib and accurate recital of events in the careers of Aristides and Themistocles; the class sat stupefied rather than enlightened. There was something so artificial about the perfection of the performance that Mr. Babcock was irritated instead of being pleased.

"Very good, Daniels; very good indeed. A little less fluency would be more convincing; however—Lanshaw, please go on."

"Nasty blighter!" exclaimed Clifford afterwards to McCune; he enjoyed introducing English slang into his conversation for the effect it produced upon his friends. "He's got it in for me, he has; but I'll fix him."

In the history class Clifford became a nuisance with his omniscience. It was unsettling to the boy reciting to see Clifford's competent brown hand suddenly elevated and to have the fusilade of finger-snapping begin—Clifford could produce remarkable explosive sounds with his fingers. And perhaps the boy reciting knew the answer, and was merely hesitating a moment over the phrasing of it. If he did not absolutely know the answer, but had a hazy idea, Clifford's insistent advertising of knowledge was likely to chill his confidence and check the groping of his thoughts. The effect upon the harassed pupil was, however, less notable than that upon Mr. Babcock.

"Daniels," said the master, on the fourth day of Clifford's eager gesticulations "kindly don't be always waving your hand in the air. I will call on you to recite when it suits my convenience to do so." He did not call on Clifford at all; and afterwards Clifford exulted publicly.

"I've got Babcock bluffed to a standstill," he boasted. "I never looked at the lesson today, and rather than give me a chance to get off a perfect recitation he didn't dare to call on me. I've got his number. I'm going to make a monkey of him."

"You don't think he'll never call on you—just mark you perfect on the strength of your hand waving?" said McCune derisively.

"No, but I'll work out a system; I'll outguess him. Of course once in a while I'll have to study a lesson; those are the times I'll hypnotize him into calling me up. The other times I'll see to it that he doesn't."

His listeners scoffed, but looked forward with interest to the experiment.

The class was a large one, and it was impossible to make the rounds of it in an hour. The keystone of Clifford's system was the belief that Mr. Babcock would call on him when he gave evidence of being unprepared and would let him alone at other times. So, having deluded the master by hand waving, he next undertook to deceive him by showing a subdued, retiring spirit. He sat quiet and inoffensive, and Mr. Babcock called on him.

Thereupon Clifford rose and delivered a masterly account of the services rendered to Greece by Pausanias.

"You seem to have studied the lesson," conceded Mr. Babcock. "Your matter is better than your manner."

"I beg your pardon, sir?" said Clifford.

The class snickered, and Mr. Babcock reddened. Although a new master, he was not dull; and he realized now that there was to be a continuing duel between him and Daniels, and that the class was aware of it and was looking forward to it with enjoyment.

Clifford urged McCune to keep a record for him. "Just so you'll see how I outguess him. I'll tell you beforehand whether or not I've studied the lesson. To-day I haven't studied it, and I've figured it out that if I act kind of dopey in class he'll think I'm trying to draw him on, and he'll let me alone. You see."

Whether that was the explanation of Mr. Babcock's course or not, he did let Clifford alone that day, and Clifford's elation was superb.

"I'm going to use mental suggestion on him," Clifford said. "I have a feeling that I can make him do just as I want him to, poor boob! I've been reading up on mental suggestion, and I think he'll be a good subject."

It was with an eye to humourous effectiveness, but also it was with a superstitious desire to test its efficacy that Clifford formed the habit of shutting himself alone in his room for five minutes before every history recitation and giving Mr. Babcock during that period what he called absent treatment.

For a time Clifford's methods worked so well that his friends were impressed. Even those who had been most derisive in their comments on the absent-treatment ritual and most amused by the humour of it began to believe that it might be a way of dealing with a master. Clifford himself began to have a genuine faith in his own occult powers. He shrouded them in deeper mystery and declined to answer all questions about his mode of procedure during those five minutes each day when he withdrew to concentrate his mind on absent treatment for Mr. Babcock.

"I don't claim that my success is entirely owing to the absent treatment," Clifford said to McCune and Langshaw one day when they had been questioning him. "It's partly that, and partly also that I've got the rhythm."

"Rhythm? What's that?" asked McCune.

"Why, unconsciously there's a rhythm in everything that everyone does. There's a rhythm in life. If you read deep books, as I do, you'd know that. I came to see that Babcock must be governed by a rhythm in the way he calls fellows up. If I could kick in at the right moment and then keep in step, it would be a cinch. Well, as I dope it out, giving him the absent treatment, I get myself into harmony with his rhythm. It enables me to feel just when I ought to be prepared, and just when there's no need of it. Of course, by absent treatment and by using suggestion in class, I can often overcome the impulse of his rhythm, especially if it tend to make him call on me several days running. To correct a rhythm that tends to excesses is the secret of right living."

"I wonder if you believe all the bunk that you talk," said McCune.

"You won't call it blunk when you see how it works. You'll wish your own gross nature were attuned to these subtle harmonies."

McCune emitted sounds indicative of physical distress. He watched with eagerness for the collapse of his friend's theory.

Strangely enough, it did not come Occasionally, Clifford would be caught off his guard and would have to resort to more or less intelligent guesses in answer to Mr. Babcock's questions; but these occasions were rare as compared with those on which he answered most accurately or was not questioned at all.

Meanwhile, as an intellectual diversion, the contest with Mr. Babcock had become, for Clifford, of secondary interest. His great passion was lawn tennis; he was one of the best players in the school, and he aspired to win the championship. But McCune and Langshaw each seemed able pretty consistently to beat him; and why they did he could never quite discover. He was always sure to get one set in three from them; he needed only to improve his game the merest trifle, he thought, in order to win two sets in three from them. With his characteristic resourcefulness he decided to improve his game by following out rigidly the precepts of the "crack" players who had written for the enlightenment of others.

The perusal of one such work led him to conclude that he used a wrong grip on his racquet. He tried the method prescribed and, following it conscientiously, was beaten worse than usual by both McCune and Langshaw. Perseverance with the new grip did not bring about the expected improvement. He then came upon a treatise by another expert who regarded correct footwork as an important and little-considered factor in tennis. So for a time Clifford abandoned all thought of the grip, and while he played was constantly preoccupied with the position of his feet. That preoccupation seemed even more fatal to his game than the adoption of the new grip had been.

The next suggestion that appealed to him emphasized the necessity of always keeping the eye on the ball, even to the exact moment of striking it with the racquet. Clifford discovered that at precisely that moment he was accustomed to take his eye off the ball. He felt that at last he had arrived at the source of all his trouble. With this new knowledge to guide him he would very quickly improve his game enormously; perhaps in a year or so he might become one of the national "cracks." Yet a week of faithfully keeping his eye on the ball produced no noticeable alteration for the better; if anything, McCune and Langshaw had less difficulty in beating him than before.

During the winter months at intervals, Clifford read and meditated about tennis. It encouraged him to learn that one celebrated player had strengthened a weak backhand by making backhand strokes against a wall for a certain length of time each day. For more than a month that winter Clifford spent fifteen minutes daily in the squash court, practicing backhand strokes. From his extensive reading he derived other ideas about service and volleying and lobbing and cut strokes that he was eager to test when the playing season came round.

But about that time something went wrong with his work in Greek history. Whether it was that he had grown careless and failed to concentrate his mind sufficiently on the absent treatment for Mr. Babcock, or whether his theory had unaccountably broken down, he ceased to outguess the master. He was summoned to recite on just the days when he was not prepared; and on the days when he had studied the lesson he was compelled to possess his knowledge in silence. So marked was the succession of his failures that McCune, Langshaw, Benson and the others, whom he had compelled against their wills to pay tribute to his powers, became flatly and gladly derisive.

"It's the rythm of life," said McCune. "You've been lucky in your guess for a while; now old man Rhythm says it's your turn to be unlucky."

"You were lucky too long," said Langshaw. "Rhythm has some time to correct its excesses. That's what makes right living."

"I haven't been going on luck; I've had a scientific method," replied Clifford. "And science is bound to win in the long run."

"Not according to the dope that I get out of the deep books," said McCune. "They tell me that the rhythm of life is the one thing science can never conquer."

Clifford was irriated but not dismayed. He used all his craft in choosing the days for preparing the lesson and in adopting a manner that should induce Mr. Babcock to call on him only at the right time; he concentrated with greater intensity on the absent treatment. But it was all to no avail. Mr. Babcock's ability to choose just the wrong times for calling on Clifford to recite became positively uncanny. And by degrees and wholly because of his showing in Greek history, Clifford's rank fell lower and lower until, when the spring days came and outdoor sports were calling, it threatened to disqualify him from taking part in athletic activities.

It was at this time that Clifford learned that Mr. Babcock was a tennis player. "Good, too," said McCune. "I saw him beat Mr. Elwood. I guess he can beat anyone in the school."

"Sickening, isn't it?" said Clifford.

The next day when Clifford and McCune were having a practice match Mr. Babcock stopped to look on. Clifford had that morning failed again in Greek history, had endured a caustic rebuke from the master, and was annoyed now by Mr. Babcock's presence. It bothered his game, he thought; he was trying a new backhand stroke, keeping the head of the racket always higher than his wrist.

Mr. Babcock was interested enough to stand looking on throughout the match. McCune won three straight sets, and then, as he walked off the court, he called to Clifford:

"It's no use, Cliff; you can't win at tennis or anything else just on theories."

"What was your theory, Daniels?"

"Holding the head of my racquet so that it's higher than my wrist on backhand strokes," Clifford answered.

"That happened to be his theory today. He's always having a theory, Mr. Babcock."

"That's well enough, if you reject a theory when you find it won't work," Mr. Babcock commented mildly. "I should say, however, from what I have observed in your tendencies, Daniels, that you adhere somewhat obstinately to theories that the daily facts of life demonstrate to be unsound."

"I'm afraid I don't understand," replied Clifford.

"It has occurred to me for some time past that you possibly had a theory in regard to 'getting by'—I believe that is the expression, is it not?—in Greek history. If you wish to continue to test your theories in tennis, I cannot too strongly recommend you to abandon the theories that you have been applying in the classroom."

He walked away at his leisurely pace, flourishing his cane in his debonaire manner.

"Nasty blighter!" burst out Clifford. "What does he mean by my theories of 'getting by'?"

"I guess he wasn't born yesterday," replied McCune. "If you're going to play tennis or baseball or anything else this spring, Cliff, I guess you'd better drop the absent treatment and get busy with the history books."

Two weeks before the tennis tournament for the school championship was to begin, Mr. Babcock called Clifford before him. "Daniels," he said, "it is some time since you favoured us with one of your singularly perfect recitations. You are now resting on the edge of the precipice. One more failure in class and over you go. In other words—one more failure, and no tennis, no baseball and no recommendation for the college examinations."

At some sacrifice of pride, Clifford tried to make better terms for himself.

"I've studied a good many of the lessons, but you've not called me at the right time," he said.

"Of course your methods became after a time rather obvious," replied Mr. Babcock. "However, it's not necessary to go into that. You understand the situation now."

"I think so," said Clifford, quite crestfallen.

His recitations thereafter in history were extremely good and were delivered without the airiness of manner that had characterized his former efforts And he had to endure endless chaff about the collapse of his absent treatment.

What galled him more than anything else, however, was the fact that Mr. Babcock seemed bent on persecuting him with attentions outside the classroom. Every afternoon when Clifford was playing tennis, Mr. Babcock would take his stand beside the court and would appear deeply interested. Clifford ignored him, and tried to improve his game by fixing his mind on some detail that some tennis expert had specified as of particular importance. But he never improved it to the point where he could get two sets out of three from McCune; and it was curious that he did not, for to the onlooker he seemed to be making the strokes as accurately as his opponent.

The day before the tournament Mr. Babcock called Clifford before him again, after the history class. "Now what?" wondered Clifford.

"Daniels," said Mr. Babcock, "your work since we had our understanding together has been excellent. It shows what you can do when you put your mind on a thing and drop fantastic notions and false theories. There's no reason on earth why you shouldn't go in and win the school championship; your tennis style is better than that of McCune or anyone else, and you play your shots quite as accurately. But you won't steady your game down so long as you're discontentedly trying this new method and that new method and relying on it to pull you through without going as hard as you can after every point. Now forget all that you've been trying to pick out of tennis manuals, and fix your mind simply on going after every point and playing the game from the very start as hard as you know how. I want to see you get the most out of yourself."

Clifford met McCune in the finals of the tournament. They each won a set; the third fell to Clifford by a score of 8 to 6. After that, McCune's confidence was shaken and Clifford's was stimulated; he won the fourth and decisive set, 6 to 3. McCune jumped the net to shake hands with him: other friends of Clifford's crowded round to congratulate him.

But it was Mr. Babcock's congratulations that he most liked. The master walked with him to the athletic house.

"You can do in other things, Daniels, what you've done in Greek history and in tennis. You're clever, and you can get by in the things that bore you just on cleverness and bluffing and faking; and you can fail of success in the things that interest you by pottering and by trying to find short cuts to success. But if you will put your mind and heart into the things that are ahead of you, why, some time, Daniels,"—and Mr. Babcock laid his hand lightly on the boy's shoulder,—"some time you may be even more than a tennis champion."

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By . . . ETTA BITTA PYE.

IF YOU LIKE to be able to offer an effective variety of small cakes to your guests, but do not care to spend too much time in their making, these suggestions will prove useful to you.

Short-Cut Drop Cookies.

Into 1 cup sweetened condensed milk, stir 1 cup chopped nutmeats, 1 cup of dry breadcrumbs, ½ teaspoon salt and 2 teaspoons cinnamon. Drop by the rounded teaspoonful into a greased baking pan and cook about 12 minutes, until moderately brown, in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F. Makes 2 dozen.

Cocoanut Macaroons.

Mix well ½ cup sweetened condensed milk and 2 cups shredded cocoanut; add 1 teaspoon vanilla or any desired flavouring drop by spoonfuls ,an inch apart, on a greased pan and bake to a delicate golden tint in a moderate oven, 350 degrees.

Date Squares.

2 cups pastry flour
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
2½ cups rolled oats
½ to ¾ cup brown sugar
1 cup shortening
1½ pounds dates
1½ cups boiling water
1 teaspoon vanilla

Pre-heat oven to 350 degrees F.

Sift flour once, measure, and resift with salt, baking powder and baking soda. Put rolled oats through food chopper. Combine rolled oats and sugar with flour mixture. Cut shortening in finely, to give a coarse crumbly mixture.

Make filling by cooking dates to a thick paste with the boiling water. Remove from heat, flavour and cool.

Sprinkle a greased shallow pan with the crumbly rolled oat mixture, cover with a layer of date paste, then with a second layer of the rolled oat mixture. (Do not let cake be over ½-inch deep before baking). Brown lightly in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F.; time, 40 to 50 minutes. Cut in squares while warm, cool before removing from pan.

Uncooked Little Cakes.

1 cup marshmallows (quartered)
½ cup heavy cream
½ cup chopped dates
¼ cup chopped walnuts
Crumbs of rice krispies or graham wafers

Mix marshmallows, cream, dates and nuts. Let stand 1 hour. Pick up by spoonfuls — the mixture will be very soft. Drop into a small bowl of fine graham wafer crumbs or rice, and coat each little cake completely. Let stand in refrigerator to chill and become firm.

Locals Even Up Series Calling For Second Round

Chevs Beat Nation Valley 4-3 While Clerks Outscore Rangers 4-2 To Wipe Out One-Goal Margin.

Last Tuesday evening before 500 fans, the largest crowd to witness a hockey match here this year, the two tied the score with Winchester on the play-off for the inter-town cup, and a second round was made necessary to decide the best teams.

In the first game, Nation Valley looked like sure winners over the Chevs, leading 3-1 up to halfway of the third period. In the first D. Munro scored on a pass from Marcellus and shortly afterwards Ed Shay counted from Jim Munro. In the second, Brown scored on a pass from Jimmie Stuart's rebound. Then D. Munro scored again to make it 3-1 The last was all Chev., Nation Valley noticeably tiring. Midway through the period the Chevs got a break when Ab Munro while attempting to clear the puck, kicked it into his own net, Stuart getting the score. This upset the Valley and before they settled down again Summers scored from Stuart and then Stuart scored alone. The game ended, Chevs 4, Valley 3.

The teams:

Chevrolets—Goal, Carrie; defence, Brown and Dillabough; forwards, Stuart, Carkner Summers, McDonald, McDermid, Blair and Jacobs.

Nation Valley — Goal, Steinberg; defence, J. Munro and K. Merkley; forwards, Gray, Ab Munro, Gordon, Marcellus, Ed Shay, Stan Shay and D. Munro.

Clerks Save The Night.

Going into the last game with the total count two goals against them, the Clerks started to put Chesterville back in the running. Late in the first Swerdfeger scored on a pass from Cass. In the second period Jarvis scored, then McCloskey on a pass from McLeod made the count 3-0. The Rangers came to life and scored two quick goals with Kenny getting credit for both, the first on a pass from Hitsman. These two put Winchester one up on the round and it looked like Winchester's cup. However, late in the session McCloskey scored on a play from Jarvis and the round was tied. As it was then 12.30 in the morning, a decision was made to play two more home-and-home games.

The teams:

Rangers—Goal, Workman; defence, Scott and Ferguson; forwards, L. Kenny, Hitsman, Blair, H. Kenny and Stata.

Clerks—Goal, Durant; defence, Jarvis and Flynn; Forwards, Edgerton, McLeod, McCloskey, Lynch, Swerdfeger, Cass, Farmiloe and McLean.
