HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.
No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.
Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Former Heckston Lady Died at Pembroke

It was with great regret and sorrow that we learned of the death of Mrs. Asa Picksley of Pembroke, nee Dorothy Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson of Heckston. Mrs. Picksley had been steadily failing for three months but all hopes of recovery were held out by herself and her family till she passed peacefully away in the Pembroke hospital on Saturday May 4th. The remains were brought home to Heckston and rested there over night.

To mourn Mrs. Picksley's loss are her husband and two small children, Dean, aged 3 years, and Marian, aged 3 months, also her father and mother and sister Marian and brother Kenneth. She was only 23 years of age, having been married at Heckston four years ago and moved to Pembroke the next year.

The cheerful memory of Dorothy will linger long in the minds of her friends and to all the bereaved family do we extend our sympathy.

Many and beautiful were the floral offerings to this dear one gone on.

Funeral of the Late Frank Fraser

On Sunday evening, April 28th, this community was greatly shocked and deeply grieved at the sudden death of Mr. Frank Fraser, who expired from heart failure while in the act of milking the cows. He had been in his customary good health up to the time of his death and the unexpectedness of it cast a mantle of gloom and sadness over the community.

The late Mr. Fraser was in his sixty-first year, a son of the late James Fraser and Elizabeth Kyle and had spent his whole life on the farm east of Morewood. He had always been keenly interested in everything for the betterment and advancement of the public at large. For many years he had served his township in municipal matters with shrewdness and his colleagues on the township and Counties' Council Boards loved and respected him. He was a man of a jovial and optimistic nature and sterling character, and made lasting friendships with everyone with whom he came in contact. He had served the community in educational matters on the Trustee Boards of the Public and High schools at various times. For years he had acted as Secretary-Treasurer of the Morewood Milk Company.

In fraternal circles the late Mr. Fraser was a member of the Canadian Order of Foresters. In religion he had been a Presbytrian up to the time of Church Union when he became a member of the Morewood United church.

The funeral on Wednesday afternoon was largely attended by people from all parts desirous of paying a last tribute of respect to one whom all loved and respected during his sojourn on earth, and to extend words of sympathy and comfort to the sorrowing family in their bereavement. Rev. R. P. Stafford conducted the service at 2:30, interment being made in Maple Ridge cemetery. The pall bearers were Messrs. Alex. Dillabough, Mahlon Casselman, Frank Jervis, Benson Hutchinson, Joe Shaver, Emerson Faulkner. The following assisted with the flowers, R. James, Murray Dillabough, O. Dagenais, Lorne Marcellus, W. Loughridge.

The chief mourners are his wife and one son Gordon at hime, and two daughters, Mrs. W. H. Slinn of Lachine, Que., and Mrs. Leslie Moore of Ottawa.

Floral offerings were received from Pillow, the Family, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fraser; Mound, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Rombough; Basket, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. McKinnon; Spray, Mr. and Mrs. Willis Fraser, Mrs. Elliott and Susa, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Armstrong of Avonmore, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fraser and family, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rainey, Mr. Henry LeBreton, Mr. Earl Bilow, Mr. and Mrs. E. His pall bearers were six of his brother Oddfellows, Wilfred Hutt, Walter Steinberg, Harry Empey, Frank Jervis, Clarke Smith and Roy Fetterly. Interment was made at Maple Ridge cemetery with the burial service under the direction of the Oddfellows' Lodge.

Miss Armstrong, with the aid of Miss Emma Feeley unwrapped the gifts so everyone could see. Isobel thanked her many friends and invited them all to come to her new home, then she sat down in the arch under balloons which held confetti and two of the girls burst them. Nestle's Food Company In Gigantic Merger

Plans are said to be under way to bring about the largest merger which has ever taken place in connection with the producers of condensed milk. The principals mentioned in the deal are the Nestlé Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk company of London, England, and the Hollandia Anglo-Dutch Milk and Food company of Holland, and Canadian concerns are drawn into it because they are subsidiaries of the parent organizations in Europe. Nestlé's Food company of Canada, Limited, is a subsidiary of the Nestlé Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk company and the Laing Produce and Storage company of Brockville is a subsidiary of the Hollandia company. If the merger goes through they naturally will be included.

The matter has been brought to public attention by the "Canadian Grocer," and in its next issue it will carry the following despatch from London:

"With further reference to the reported merger of the Nestlé Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Co. and the Hollandia Anglo-Dutch Milk and Food Co., it is now fairly definitely established that this is going through, if the entire deal has not already been completely consummated. This can be termed a '$25,000,000 merger' and as far as Canada is concerned at least a '$1,000,000 merger.'

"It involves two subsidiary companies, both strongly established in this country. One is the Nestlé's Food Company of Canada, Ltd., a subsidiary of the Nestlé Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk company with head offices in London, England, and Vevey, Switzerland, and the other is the Laing Produce and Storage company of the Hollandia company above mentioned. of Vlaardirgen, Holland. The latter company is an exceedingly large one with 101 branches throughout the world and a capital estimated at some $25,000,000.

Local Assets Large.

"The assets of the Laing Produce and Storage Co.. of Brockville, Canada, are estimated at over $1,000,000. The Hollandia company has been in business for half a century. Advices state that the amalgamation has practically gone through, and it is understood that the Nestlé Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk company now owns, or soon will own, about sixty per cent. of the total stock in the Hollandia company. In view of the fect that the Nestlé company is one of wide ramifications, the deal becomes one of the biggest in canned milk that has ever taken place.

"This concern has branches in every country of the world and includes as stated above, the Nestlé's Food Company of Canada. Ltd., as well as several subsidiary companies in the United States. Their production factories are also located in every dairy country of the world. Not long ago they secured control of the Dai Nippon Condensed Milk Co., of Japan, involving an exchange of capital of some $3,500,000. They also recently took over Gerber and company, cheese manufacturers in Switzerland, a firm that had been doing business all over the world.

"It is understood that the Nestlé concern will eventually take over the entire sales of the Hollandia company all over the world, including Canada."

The Late Mrs. Wm. Barkley Elma

One mile east of Elma and near Spruce Grove there passed away to her Heavenly Home Mrs. Wm. Barkley, in her seventy-seventh year. Mrs. Barkley was the eldest daughter of the late Cyrus Utman and his wife Anna Barkley of Dunbar,

She had been in failing health for the past couple of years, but since the New Year had been going down more rapidly. She knew for some time that she could never be well again on this earth and at different times during the past had bidden good bye to friends who came to see her. She planned her funeral, picked her hymns and asked some of her friends to sing at her funeral the pieces she loved best, which was all done just as she asked.

Death occurred on Sunday evening, April 21st, with all her very near ones by her side. She leaves to mourn her loss her aged husband, one daughter, Miss Lucy A. Barkley, Winchester, and two sons, Alva on the homestead, and MacKenzie on the adjoining farm, one sister, Mrs. Martha Miller of Dunbar, and one aged aunt, the only remaining sister of her father, Mrs. C. L. Barkley, of Madrid, N.Y.

The deceased was a member of St. Lukes Ev. Lutheran church, Dunbar, where her forefathers all worshipped. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, April 23rd, her pastor, Rev. Cronmiller of Williamsburg, taking for his text II Corinthians, ix: 9.

Mr. M. A. Barkley, of Morrisburg, and his son, Mr. G. F. Barkley of Elma, Mrs. Barkley and Mrs. C. M. McIntosh of Williamsburg, sang very sweetly "Going Down the Valley." Mr. Geo. W. Brooks, Chesterville, sang a solo as Mrs. Barkley had requested of him. The choir sang "Asleep in Jesus," another hymn beloved by the deceased.

The casket was covered with beautiful flowers from near and dear ones. The pall bearers, picked by herself, were, Messrs. W. Barkley, W. McKenzie of Spruce Grove, W. A. McMillan and I. N. Dillabough of Elma. She was laid to rest in Williamsburg cemetery near her parents where she awaits the Resurrection Morn.

SOWING BY AIRPLANE

To the ever-increasing services of the airplane is now added the happy work of making deserts blossom. On the "cut-over" timber lands of the Pacific Northwest it is being employed to sow thousands upon thousands of acres with grass seed, which transforms a barren waste into lushy ranges for cattle. The rough and broken character of the country makes it sowing by hand exceedingly difficult and expensive.

Three Prescott Men Killed Early Saturday Morning

A coroner's jury under Dr. Charles Macpherson brought in a verdict of accidental death at the inquest which was held in the Town Hall, Prescott, Saturday afternoon, on Joseph O'Reilly, 24, Francis Black, 17, and John Easter, 15, all of Prescott, who lost their lives when the car O'Reilly was driving crashed into the southerly abuttment of the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, one half mile east of the town, in the section known as Wexford, at two o'clock, Eastern Standard Time, Saturday morning.

The three victims of the tragedy, along with John Kelly of Augusta, the only survivor, were en route home to Prescott, after attending a dance at Kemptville. O'Reilly, who was driving, had evidently turned out to the left side of the road in order to pass a car ahead, but he must have swung just a little too wide, as although the front of the car did not strike the abuttment, he had obviously been unable to bring his car over far enough, and the impact occurred on the door of the car, opening to the driver's seat.

O'Reilly was killed outright, his body being afterwards found huddled in the front seat, pinned behind the wheel. His skull had been fractured. Black, who was sitting in front also, was thrown out on his head in the road, and he also suffered a fractured skull, as well as a compound fracture of the left leg. He died a minute or so afterwards. Easter and Kelly were in the rear seat of the car, and Easter likewise received a fractured skull, from which he succumbed four hours afterwards in St. Vincent de Paul hospital, Brockville, where both he and Kelly, who escaped with a broken collar bone, were rushed by Dr. T. B. Patterson of Prescott, who came to the scene of the tragedy when notified by Claude McCarney, of Burritt's Rapids.

McCarney came along in another car soon after the crash had taken place, and ran a mile to Daniel's Hotel, to use a telephone, as he could not continue in his car, the road under the bridge being blocked by the wreckage of the sedan.

A Poignant Note.

A poignant note to the sad triple fatality is that Charles Black, Francis Black's brother, came up in another car a moment or so after the crash had occurred, to find Francis lying in the middle of the road in a dying condition. Francis expired within three minutes after the brother reached his side.

The jury reached its verdict mainly on the testimony of Samuel Brint, salesman for a motion picture concern, who was the only witness of the tragedy, and it all happened so quickly that he was only able to give a hazy idea of how it occurred. Brint was alone in his car which was ahead of the car O'Reilly was driving. He was enroute from Otawa to Kingston. He told how he had almost reached the C.P.R. viaduct at Wexford, one half mile from the the town, when the sedan suddenly flashed by his car and an instant later crashed into the southerly abuttment of the bridge. He stated that he had heard no warning from the horn, and while he would not swear to it, he was sure the other car had no lights on. He expressed the opinion that the other car had attempted to pass him before the bridge was reached, and that apparently O'Reilly had swung out too far, as although the car in which the young men were passengers did not strike head on, it was so far over to the left side of the road, that it crashed into the heavy stone abuttment on its side, the impact being on the door giving access to the driver's seat which had been occupied by O'Reilly.

Brint then told how the sedan careened out into the road again, catapulting Black out on his head in the middle of the road, and completely blocking the road for other traffic. He had pulled up his car as quickly as possible, and had gone to render what aid he could.

BETHUNE BUSH

On April 22nd, the Death Angel visited the hom of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin S. Munro, taking with him their infant son, Elburn Carson, only five months old. This wee darling had, by his cheery smiling face, endeared himself to all who knew him and although he suffered untold pain yet all were amazed at the patience he displayed in fighting what was from the begnning of his sickness, a losing battle. All that willing earthly hands could do to hold him here was done, but God had ordered his release and early in the morning of April 22nd his spirit took its flight homeward, breaking for the first time this family circle. It is many years since a child has been taken from Bethune Bush and all the neighbors join in extending a kindly sympathy to the parents and family.

An angel child was lent to brighten
Your home, for a very short while,
To win all hearts with his cheery face
And his sweetly winning smile.
Now God has gathered His jewel home
To rest from all pain and care,
Your circle broken may yet be complete
When you join him—your darling—up there.

The Newspaper

Did you ever stop to think that the average newspaper publisher and editor is hard pressed to understand just why the average layman thinks he knows more about running a newspaper than the men and women who have devoted long years of endless days trying to learn something about it themselves by actually running one.

Why is it that the outsider thinks the news game is such a snap and the hardest job an editor his is to fill his paper; that he will be tickled to death to publish a 'good joke" on some friends or fill his paper with thinly disguised free advertising to boost this, that, or the other thing, but always some other fellow's business?

A newspaper is primarily a medium to keep the public informed on last minute events transpiring, first at home, then the province, then the nation, and the world if you have room, and not the least of its missions is to aid business in its advertising columns—those who have things to sell, and the consumer, those who want to buy—to get together for their greatest mutual benefit. This job is a business all its own, so distinctly different from any other business that it may be true that "good newspapermen are born, not made," and at the same time it is so intimately interwoven with other business and the public at large that those outside the profession may perhaps be excused for thinking it is their business too and wanting to run it.

If we walked into a merchan'ts store or a manufacturer's plant and asked him to give us a suit of clothes or an automobile "to boost the town and local business." he would declare us crazy; but it too frequently happens that the merchant or the manufacturer walks into the editor's office with a request for his valuable white space for purely personal or business reasons and thinks he ought to get it for no other reason than a belief that the editor needs something to fill his paper.

Ye gods! If the editor just had the money that goes into the preparation and postage on stuff he can't use and wouldn't if he could, he could buy out the biggest business enterprise in the country and afford to pay for all of his advertising. Newspapers are not trying to run other people's business; they are trying to help every other fellow by letting him know what's going on in the world and to get his share of prosperity and contentment out of what he reads there.

THE OLD GARDENER SAYS:

It is impossible to keep growing good crops without the use of fertilizers in one form or another. With barnyard dressing becoming scarce, amateurs must depend more than ever upon commercial fertilizers, but often find themselves puzzled about the proper amounts to use in small gardens, as the directions usually refer to acres. It is well to remember, therefore, that 100 pounds per acre will equal one pound for a plot 10 x 43 feet, while 200 pounds per acre will equal one pound for a plot 10 x 21 feet. If this ratio is followed it will be found that 400 pounds per acre will equal one pound for a plot 10 x 11 feet, while 500 pounds per acre is at the rate of one pound for a plot 9 x 10 feet.

Some Features About Apple Scab Control

(Experimental Farms Note.)

From repeated and continuous observations made by the Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology, Kentville N.S., on the seasonal development of the scab fungus, it has been possible to find some of the weak points in the application of control measures. All the early infection comes from spores produced by the fungus in the fallen apple leaves. These spores are liberated during rainy weather and require six to twelve hours in which to germinate and enter susceptible new growth. Thus, in order to successfully protect the new growth, sprays should be applied before wet weather.

The earliest date spores have been found to mature coincides with the time the first green leaf tips are visible on the trees. About the time that the earliest blossom buds show pink, a general discharge of spores from the fallen leaves takes place. The heaviest liberation of spores during each of the past four years has occurred between the 23rd and 28th of May; i.e., at the time when the early varieties are bursting into bloom. Additional periods of infection from spores arising from the fallen leaves may appear until the middle and occasionally the end of June. However, after blossoming, scab is spread in the orchard by spores produced on scab spots which have developed on the new growth.

It is necessary to spray before the spores are liberated if thorough protection is to be obtained. The first spray, at what is locally called the "delayed dormant" or "green tip" stage gives the first protection necessary. Leaf tips are just breaking through and seldom over one-quarter to one-half inch long at this time. The second or "pre-pink" spray is applied when the earliest flower buds show pink but before they are seperated. The third spray before blossoming should be the most thorough. It is applied just before the early blossoms commence to open and when the buds are separating in the clusters. The "calyx spray", i.e., when most of the petals have fallen, should not be delayed, as this application is important for the control of other pests as well as diseases. Later sprays may be applied at 10 to 14 day intervals as the season demands.

Further information may be obtained by consulting the spray and dust calendars available for each province.

PETER ADJUSTS HIS CONSCIENCE

Peter Cole looked across the shop at Slim and Buck, who were trying to pull a frozen wheel that had stuck on Slim's truck. The wheel would never come off without a wheel-puller, Peter knew very well. And wheel-puller there was none. Outside fourteen trucks were idle that it was Peter's particular business to keep running on this piece of state-highway construction.

He worked mechanically, as if his mind were concerned more with a mental problem than with putting in new clutch discs. A car stopped outside; then Conrad Lewis, the young superintendent of construction for the state, came into the garage, a transit over his shoulder.

"What luck?" he asked the two drivers, who were jarring the stubborn wheel gently. "Couldn't you do it with that chain and ten-ton jack?"

"Never fazed it!" said Slim.

"I can't figure any way to get it off without a wheel-puller, Connie," Peter said. "I've tried every way I can."

"All right, Pete. You're the doctor. Order one out from the city at once. But I didn't want to go to the expense unless it was absolutely necessary. That clutch is beginning to look pretty fit again. Going to have any more trucks running by afternoon?"

"Number eight will be up—that's all."

Peter had watched the fleet of trucks day after day, when the morning din of tuning up was over, line up in order on Main Street at the central mixing plant, stop in turn under the huge hopper while the wet mix filled the cavernous bodies and then rumble off at three-minute intervals to dump their cargo four miles away where the new pavement steadily stretched its several hundred more feet each day. Back they had come again in noisy close succession, just enough of them halting at the garage with minor injuries to keep him comfortably busy.

Any mechanic, he thought, could have handled the job then, when the trucks—old army trucks—were fresh from their overhauling at the state garage, and when the weather had introduced no mud to buck and the hauling had been over smooth subgrade. The real test had come in these last two weeks, when it had rained day after day and one truck after another had slid off into ditches, over the ends of bridges and culverts, or sunk knee-deep in the mire, from which they had to be pulled by force; when parts began to break all at once, after four months of continual wear and tear. This was the real test, now. And he was not standing up to it.

There was a great roar of approaching trucks outside.

"It's Red," announced Slim. "Towing number three. She's dead."

Red appeared in the doorway, bareheaded, tossing back a mop of bright hair. "More grief, Pete."

"What happened, Red?" asked the chief.

"Connecting rod broke in two—smashed a hole in the side of the crankcase. You could hear the report a mile! Fat's out of a job for a while, I'll say, till this is fixed—if it ever can be! Pete, old top, you look worried."

Peter walked resolutely to the other end of the garage.

"Conny," he said, "I want to resign."

Lewis straightened up from the instrument into which he was peering. "You want to resign? Why?"

"It's no use. I'm not big enough to handle the job; I need more men and more equipment to put it over."

"You can have any equipment within reason, I've told you Pete. But it's a field job, and you can't expect the layout of a city garage. And as for help—the drivers are supposed to be putting in their time under you whenever their trucks are down—and I told you long ago that you might have any further help you felt justified in asking for."

"That's the point, Connie. I don't feel justified in asking for more. I ought to be able to swing it. But I'm not; I can see that now. I've been holding up the whole job, but I'll get out now and give a better man a chance. I can't conscientiously stay on any longer."

The chief still stood regarding Peter in that strange way, as if he were seeing him for the first time. Finally he turned back to his instrument.

"All right," he said coolly. "Quit—if that's the way you feel about it. But I'll say there's something the matter with you!" He was carefully sticking a needle-pin into a small hole to adjust a capstan-headed screw. "Your conscience resembles this instrument—a delicate and valuable piece of mechanism, but all out of adjustment! But I'll get some one for your place if you say so. There are plenty crying for work."

'I wish you would, then."

"You'll stay on long enough to let him get broken into his duties?"

"Of course."

It was a slightly different Peter Cole whom the new mechanic encountered. The same accurate, deliberate, quiet young fellow, instructing him most conscientously in his duties, but a young fellow with a suggestion of bitterness in the set of his mouth. A slightly different Peter he was, too, to the truck drivers; he was not quite so tolerant of their errant ways, they discovered one morning.

"We can dispense with your valuable services from now on. Buck," he announced apparently without any apparent compunction whatever. "Last night you skipped off without cleaning your truck for the third time. That's about three times too many!"

At this moment a new driver with more bravado than skill came roaring into the garage full speed ahead with pretended nonchalance, aiming to come to a sudden and smart stop. But he fell short of his aim—or rather found himself carried far beyond it, —for he went crashing over the stove instead of stopping smartly just before it.

"You're canned!" proclaimed Peter; his audience of drivers looked on in amazement at their once patient and forbearing chief. In vain the new recruit offered explanations. Peter would not even allow him to back off the stove. "Get your time!" was all he seemed able to say.

Peter's unwonted sharpness was the outward manifestation of a deeper resentment. He had not expected the chief to condole with him, yet he had expected him to be sympathetic enough to recognize that his resignation had wrenched mightily—that with it a whole set of new-born ideals and aspirations had gone to smash. Conny had always seemed so understanding before.

So Peter went about doggedly setting his house in order for his successor. How those trucks did go up, with the help of another skilled mechanic, with dilly-dallying drivers frightened into diligence by the discovery that Pete had no qualms about "canning" a fellow, with new tools and machinery, which Peter had needed but had not felt justified in asking for! He ordered them revengefully now.

The chief came into the garage one morning as the fleet of trucks thundered off toward the mixer.

"How many up today, Pete?"

'Nineteen."

"Pretty lucky, I'll say! Just had word that the governor and chief engineer of the state will be here tomorrow. So far as I can see, the stage is all set to give them a rattling good show. But we ought to make a record run about tomorrow—crane and mixer and finisher all on their best behavior, a subgrade in good condition!

The chief went off, and Peter turned to his work. "Oh, yes, Conny'll cover himself with glory, without doubt!" he remarked to the new mechanic.

But in the night there came a shower that made the roads slippery. Then, when Peter came down to the garage early in the morning, he noticed that the crane was idle and soon detected the reason—a broken cable. "I called up the chief as soon as it happened," the night operator said, "and he hopped out of bed and hurried into the city for a new one. He ought to be back by nine o'clock if he pushes right along. Couldn't haul before that anyhow. Binx says that clay subgrade is like a greased board."

The chief's big day was not starting out propitiously. There would be no record run. It would be slow going over the greasy roads, to say nothing of the two hours lost in the morning. The chief was back shortly before nine, however, the new cable was in, and the line of trucks before the great whirling mixer were just ready to venture out with their first loads when a gray car drove up, and the governor of the state and the chief engineer stepped out to form their estimate of what was more or less of an experiment—the building of a piece of highway on force account, trying to construct at a cost below current bids.

It was more or less of an experiment, too, their putting young Lewis, just a year out of college, in a position esesntially that of contractor. Peter reflected as he watched Conny shake hands with the guests and chat with them briefly today they would probably form a final opinion as to their superintendent's ability.

"It's rotten luck," Red declared, "that the high moguls had to blow in here today of all days!"

That brand of luck held consistently all day. The trucks that went out at three-minute intervals came straggling back at twenty-minute, half-hour and even hour intervals, having been in trouble in mudholes and ditches. The mixer was often inactive, waiting for a watchman to signal that a belated truck was in sight and that a new batch might be started. Meanwhile the guests of distinction went all over the plant.

In the early afternoon Conrad Lewis came to the garage.

"Wish ,you'd come out with me Pete," he called. "The finisher's quit and the operator can't start it. Maybe you can find what's wrong."

On the ride out Conny's only comment was, "Fine luck to have that break down today! What next, I wonder."

They were soon to learn. Arriving at the work they discovered that not only the finishing machine but also the laborers had quit. The men stood in idle mutinous line beside one hundred feet of freshly poured concrete, which was rapidly setting just as it had fallen from the dump bodies of the trucks.

Leaving the car at the side of the road beyond the point to which the forms had been set, Conny and Peter hurried forward.

Binx the foreman, was out to meet them. "I canned one of those dirty wops because he wouldn't work where I told him to, and now the whole bunch has struck till I take him back! If it was any other time,—if the high monkey-monks themselves weren't coming down the road this very minute—I'd can the whole good-for-nothing bunch! That's what I ought to do!"

"Do it, then!" said Lewis, with a brief glance at the shining motor car rolling toward them. "I think you're right. Your morale will be all shot to pieces if you take them back."

"But it puts you in such a mess—today—with them here! Maybee I'd better give in to the wops under the circumstances."

"Our business is to run the job according to our best judgment regardless of the showing we make. Turn that bunch loose! And, Red!" Conny addressed the driver who had just dumped his load. "Hurry in and stop the mixer and tell Slim to order a new gang from the employment agency to report tomorrow morning; and bring out all the hands you can pick up round the plant! Now let's see if we can't save this pavement. I think we can do it if you can doctor up the finisher, Pete."

Peter hurried over to begin his diagnosis. But while he investigated the trouble, oiling a bit here, adjusting there, cranking, his eyes and thoughts were on Conrad Lewis. For Conny was working desperately, now at one end of the heavy rolling-pin-like hand finisher, now shoveling cement in a manner to put a laborer to shame, patting and smoothing, calling the engineer to test the surface with his straight edge, inspiring the few Amercan workmen to extraordinary efforts and causing ironic smiles on the faces of the discharged men.

Once, in his zeal to overcome a rough spot, Conny walked, all unheedingly too close to a dumping truck, and its contents splashed a thick coating over him. He casually reached to a rear pocket, wiped the stuff from his face and eyes and went on shoveling, oblivious that he presented a solid cement front setting up as rapidly as that in the roadbed, and that the governor of the state and its chief engineer stood fifty feet away looking on with amused smiles.

Then Peter Cole became conscious of an overwhelming sympathy for Conny. How inglorious his day—this day when he had counted on making his record run, on showing his superiors that he was equal to his job! How unfair to him that they were sitting in judgment now, when business was far from being as usual!

Perhaps it was his sympathy that helped Peter speedily to locate the trouble with the refractory finisher. When he cranked it up, and it went "to the right tune," moving slowly down the strip of pavement to the unfinished stretch, tamping down the rough places, the belt smoothing industriously behind, Conrad paused long enough to wave his gratitude.

"And now, Pete," he called, "there's a truck gone dead straight across the road down there. Try a little first aid, and send Slim back here to work."

It was while he was under that truck fumbling at a universal joint that Peter had the severest jolt, and the most awakening one, of his hitherto placid and unresisting young life.

The governor and state engineer were coming on the way to their car. Peter heard a fragment of their conversation.

"Yes, the governor was saying, "we picked the right man for the job! Lewis will stand the grief—and that's what it takes first of all for this work. A man who will stand the grief! Many a young fellow would be giving up under such discouragement."

"Not Lewis!" answered the other. "When things go wrong he fights! And he isn't afraid of responsibility. Now the superintendent on that other job of ours telephones the construction engineer every time a car runs off the track or the finisher breaks down—he's afraid to act on his own initiative. But Lewis bears his own sorrows and says nothing. That's why I wanted to try hm out on this work; that was his attitude while he was in District Two—"

The speakers passed out of hearing. Peter flopped over on his stomach. The conversation about responsibility was still buzzing in his ears. That was a new idea to him—its being a man's duty to take all the responsibility he could from his chief's shoulders. But that was what Conny was doing. And undoubtedly that was what he expected of his foreman. How he had stood back of Binx, forfeiting all chance of making a good showing to his critics, regardless of what the cost might be to himself!"

The chief's car came limping up to the door of the garage next day.

"Something the matter with the old bus, Pete. Think it's the carburetor. Can you adjust it?"

"I guess I can, Conny," answered Pete in his deliberate way. "I've just finished adjusting a lot more troublesome working part than the carburetor of a flivver; I reckon this won't stump me."

The timekeeper came up, book in hand.

"How much longer do you want your name left on the pay roll, Pete?" he asked.

"I want it there," Pete said as he lifted the hood of the engine, "until I'm fired. I'm through firing myself. And, by the way, chief," he added when the timekeeper had gone on, "if you can fix it up that way with this mechanic you sent me, I wish you'd hire him as my assistant. He's a good man. I need him. And I feel justified in asking for him."

"That's the way I hired him in the first place, Pete," was Conny's laughing answer. "I figured all along that you were mechanic enough to fix that inner apparatus of yours that was out of adjustment."

The chief went away toward the plant, whistling.

Presentations at Dunbar

Mr. Geo. Fetterly and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fetterly Honored

A large crowd gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bernice Froats Wednesday evening, May 1st, in honor of Mr. George and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fetterly, who intend leaving shortly for their new home in Aultsville.

After the reading of an address by Mr. Arnold McMartin, Miss Vera Merkley and Mr. Donald McMartin made the presentation.

The address:

Mr. George Fetterly and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fetterly,

We, your neighbors and friends, have gathered here this evening to bid you au revoir. It was with deep regret that we heard of your departure from our midst.

In the past we have appreciated the willingness you always displayed to undertake any task you have been called upon to perform.

To you, Mr. George Fetterly, we hope that your life-span will still be long, and as you leave for your new home, you will leave behind in the hearts of your friends ,a picture of that tall straight form whose personality was an inspiration to all those around you.

To you, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fetterly, we must confess that we are losing two friends whom we shall miss but our loss is a gain for some one else. Your genial disposition and thoughtfulness of every one has endeared you in the hearts of this community.

We wish you much happiness in your new home and, as you make new friends, we know that you will not forget the old ones.

As a slight token of our esteem and regard we ask you to accept these gifts. We hope that they may remind you of your old friends in this community.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbours.

Each made very feeling replies, expressing their pleasure and appreciation for all the kindness shown to them during their sojourn in Dunbar, as well as for the useful gifts they had received and very cordially invited all to visit them in their new home. All joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows." Lunch was served and the rest of the evening was spent in dancing and games to the wee sma' hours of the morning.

Elma Ladies' Aid Honors Mrs. Frank Fetterly.

The Ladies' Aid of Elma United church gathered at the home of Mrs. Frank Fetterly on Friday afternoon, May 3rd, in honor of Mrs. Fetterly before leaving their midst.

The following address was read, after which Mrs. Fetterly responded in a few well-chosen words of thanks and appreciation, after which lunch was served:

May 3rd, 1929.

Mrs. Fetterly,—

As a group of friends and members of the Ladies' Aid in which you have been a member for quite a few years, our treasurer, we wish to show you our appreciation by gathering here in your home for our last meeting together before you leave for your new home.

You have always done your part so faithfully and well and also so willingly.

We hope you may be as faithful in the community in which you are going and that there you may have many years of happiness and prosperity.

Will you please accept this Bible as a small remembrance and "may it be a lamp unto your feet and a light unto your path.

Mrs. A. N. Barkley, President; Vice President, Secretary.

CARD OF THANKS

Mrs. Abner Dillabough and daughters wish to thank their friends and neigbors for the great kindness shown them during the long illness and death of their beloved husband and father.

MAINLY ABOUT PEOPLE

Mr. and Mrs. O. L. King spent the week end at their former home, Enosburg Falls, Vt.

Mr. I. Pelletier is at present in the Hotel Dieu hospital, Cornwall, undergoing treatment.

Mr. D. Beattie, of Winchester, spent the latter part of the week visiting friends at Morewood.

Miss Alice McNaughton, nurse-in-training at the General hospital, Ottawa, is home on sick leave, on account of an operation on her throat.

Mr. and Mrs. Parnham Allison, Mrs. Chas. Graham and Mrs. A. J. Forward attended the funeral of Mrs. J. F. Cass in Winchester on Thursday last.

Mrs. Arthur Peake and Miss Joan are spending a couple of weeks with Mr. and Mrs. D. Ritchie, Montreal, before the latter leave for a visit to Scotland.

Mr. Gard Hutt and son Aura, Mrs. D. McElheran, Mr. Frank Perrault and Margaret attended the funeral of Mrs. Jas. H. Perrault at Woodlawn on Saturday.

A Morewood man had an interesting few seconds on King street Tuesday morning. When he parked his car he had left it in reverse gear and on returning started it by cranking. When the car began to move backwards he jumped for the brake but in his excitement threw the throttle wide open and the car crashed into another parked car behind it. The runaway car sustained a broken drive shaft, the other car escaping injury.

On Thursday evening of last week Mr. Gravelle of the Rex Theatre put on a picture, "The Enchanted Garden," turning the proceeds over to the Chesterville company of the Girl Guides. The weather was very unfavorable and there were numerous other attractions in town on this night yet the hall was well filled for two shows. The Guides are most grateful to Mr. Gravelle for his generous contribution towards their camping fund.

Mrs. Lawrence Runions of Niagara Falls, N.Y., accompanied Miss Katie Harper to her home here this morning.
