Mrs. James Dwyer Died Tuesday After Brief Illness

One of the oldest residents of Chesterville passed away Tuesday evening at her home on Mill street, in the person of Mrs. James Dwyer, aged 77 years, after an illness of less than a day. The deceased, whose maiden name was Anne O'Donohue, spent her whole married life in Chesterville where her exemplary Christian life made her beloved by all and her naturally retiring disposition marked by thoughtful kindnesses to others leaves a pleasant memory.

Her husband, James Dwyer, passed away six year ago, and she is now survived by one son, Frank, of the Nestlé's Milk Products Co., London, Ont., and three daughters, Mrs. Norman Cameron and Miss Helena in Chesterville, and Mrs. Huston, of Toronto.

The funeral will take place tomorrow morning at St. Mary's church.

SENTENCED AT WINCHESTER.

Two hangovers from Hallowe'en were settled by Magistrate John McCormick in court Tuesday at Winchester when he assessed Moses Atlas, of Chesterville, $10 and costs of 75 cents on a charge of obstructing a police officer in his duty, and Mrs. Minnie M. Merkley, of Williamsburg, was placed on suspended sentence for two years, bound over to keep the peace and placed on the "Indian list" for causing a disturbance and being intoxicated on the streets of Chesterville on Saturday evening. October 30.

Deer Dashes onto Highway Damaging Winchester Car

In the restricted game area of Carleton and Dundas counties, deer are reported to have become so numerous they are a danger to traffic on highway 31 from Winchester to Ottawa. Sunday night, Dwight Lannin, returning from Ottawa, had his car damaged when a two-year-old doe jumped from the roadside near Greely, to crash into the left fender, break a headlight and jam in the side of the car.

Finding the force of the impact had killed the animal, Mr. Lannin took it to Winchester, where it was handed over to Chief Herbert C. Helmer, deputy game warden of that district, who sent it to a charitable institution.

BUSINESSMAN UNDERGOES APPENDICITIS OPERATION

The November meeting of the W.M.S. of Trinity United church held at the Parsonage last Wednesday was well attended. The president, Mrs. W. O. Dixon, conducted the meeting throughout. After the devotional exercises, consisting of a prayer, a series of scripture readings and the responsive reading which was given by Mrs. Martha Hummel, Mrs. W. N. Fulton gave a very comprehensive report of the Sectional Presbyterial meeting held at the White church, Iroquois, recently. Mrs. Stanley Shay sang a solo in her usual acceptable manner. The chapter of the study book was in charge of Miss E. Johnston and her committee. Those taking part were Mrs. Chas. Graham, Mrs. T. Houlehan, Mrs. R. Campderros and Mrs. D. McElheran.

Arrangements were made for the completion of the name quilt and a Nominating Committee was appointed to report at the December meeting.

The meeting closed with the benediction.

Berwick Women's Institute Entertained by Mrs. McQuaig

Mrs. McQuaig was hostess to the Berwick Women's Institute, Thursday afternoon last when the meeting was opened with the Ode and the repetition of the Lord's prayer in unison followed by two minutes silence and singing "O God, Our Help in Ages Past." A report on "Buymanship" was given by Mrs. Gordon Ouderkirk. A donation of ten dollars was made by the Institute to the Crippled Children's hospital in Toronto. The roll call was responded to by a three-minute speech on the subject of "Peace." A paper on "Legislation" was given by Mrs. Geo. Pollock after which dainty refreshments were served by Mrs. McIntosh, Mrs. A. D. McMillan, Mrs. Rutley and Mrs. McQuaig.

Residents of Nation Valley Remember Fallen Heroes

Residents of Nation Valley assembled to commemorate the cessation of active hostilities of the Great War by observing the 19th anniversary. A memorial service was held in the school house attended by relatives of those who made the supreme sacrifice, members of the Winchester branch of the Canadian Legion, veterans from Chesterville and guests from the surrounding communities. The building was filled with reverent spectators at this most impressive Remembsrance Day ervice. The flag on the tower flew at half mast and the school was decorated in red and blue and hung with flags.

The blackboard was draped with Coronation blue, painted poppies and flags and under the flags and facing the audience, the desk was draped with Coronation blue and flags to represent the Altar of Sacrifice with the words above it in gold letters "Their Names Liveth for Evermore," and on the flag draped altar were five tapers.

The service opened with the Reveille followed by the hymn, "Peace, Perfect Peace" sung by a quartette from Chesterville, Mrs. T. Smirle, Miss Gertrude Weegar, Messrs. Milton Shaver and John Fleming.

Nursing Sister Ella Rae Hirst McIntosh, in veil and full uniform, conducted an impressive candle service in memory of Sergt. Harold A. Merkley, Corp. Wm. B. C. Moodie, Pte. Howard Hess, Pte. Henry Coughlar and Sapper Warren Rae who passed away later. Rev. D. W. Summers, of Winchester, closed in prayer.

W. N. Fulton, ex-service man, was chairman for the second part of the service which was opened with the National Anthem. The Chesterville quartette led in the singing, with Mrs. Enos Munro playing the accompaniment. In his opening address, Mr. Fulton thanked the committee for asking him to be chairman. He felt it an honour and appreciated the privilege to be present.

He spoke sincerely and feelingly of the deplorable state in which the world finds itself to-day. It was thought the last war had ended war with such a tremendous sacrifice of life, property, money and suffering.

Rev. W. D. Turner, of Winchester, took the opening prayer followed by the hymn "O God, Our Help in Ages Past." After the two minutes of silence, Mrs. Earl Munro, of Winchester Springs recited "Lest We Forget," the reply being given by Miss Gertrude Weegar, of Chesterville, and the Last Post sounded by W. F. Workman, then the last three verses of "Abide With Me" were sung.

A Book of Remembrance, prepared and designed by Mrs. Harry Holmes (née Lenora Merkley), Mrs. Enos Munro and Miss Helen Jamieson, was presented to the community by W. H. Casselman, Reeve of Chesterville, and received by Miss Ida Munro. Mr. Casselman paid tribute to those who had charge of arrangements, and thanked the committee for paying him a very great honour by asking him to present the Book of Remembrance and its contents. Such a programme was a tangible manifestation of that community spirit which was the cause of the erection of the monument on the school grounds in honour of those who sacrificed their lives in the war. He knew of no community of its size that had done so much during the war, and what a beautiful thought to gather it all together along with the photos and histories of the veterans of that district with war poems and war scenes of interest: a Book of Remembrance which will be placed in a glass case and kept in the school.

Rev. R. C. Tait, Chesterville, gave the afternoon address. He spoke on the significance of Remembrance Day and the empty tomb. He was alive to his subject and painted vivid word pictures of war at its worst as he saw it at Halifax as the battleships plied to and fro across the Atlantic, going with Canada's best and returning with those broken in body and spirit. He spoke of the work that was done in his church in Halifax for the comfort of the disabled returned men. He concluded by saying that only by the spirit of Christ and good-will toward all men, the spreading of the gospel to all nations, and then, when all the nations had accepted Christ as their leader, and only then, would wars cease.

O. L. King, of Chesterville, sang a solo, "Christ in Flanders," accompanied by Miss Shirley King. W. F. Aitchson, of Winchester, closed in prayer.

With the singing of "O Canada," the veterans signed the Book of Remembrance, and then formed a guard of honour through which the relatives of the fallen heroes passed on the way to the cenotaph, where Howard Nesbitt, Winchester Springs, had charge of condolences and gave an address. He remarked that the boys who made the supreme sacrifice and whose names were inscribed on the monument were loved and mourned by the community. When they had given their lives they had given their all. They had gone brave in heart and spirit to uphold and fight for British law and justice. Mr. Nesbitt repeated the old U.S.A. war song, "Just Before the Battle, Mother," emphasizing the last two lines:

"You will not forget me, mother,
If I'm numbered with the slain."

In hushed silence invaded by loyal hearts in prayer, he softly called the names of the boys who were slain but not forgotten. The five white crosses with their blood red poppies given by the families were placed by Lloyd Merkley, Mrs. W. A. McElroy, Miss Helen Jamieson, Miss Helen Coughlar and Norman Rae. Jas. Munro placed the community wreath. A member of the Winchester branch B.E.S.L. E. R. Summers, placed the wreath from the veterans. The Province of Ontario wreath was placed by Charles Gray.

Rev. Geo. Extence, of Chesterville, pronounced the benediction and the Last Post was sounded by W. F. Workman, Winchester.

Canada's Garden of Memories is opened to every community. We enter the sacred precincts of this garden sheltered by walls of affection for those who gave all for us and in giving all have passed beyond the surging flood of battle's tide. On the sounding of the Last Post we pass out with a firm step, and as we turn for one last look, we are glad we have lived again on this anniversary a brief hour with the glorious dead.

WIRE BASKET FOR EGGS.

Keeping Quality of Eggs Greatly Improved With Rapid Cooling.

One of the requirements for membership in the newly organized Ontario Poultryfarm Egg Producers is that the eggs be gathered and cooled in wire baskets. There's a reason. The keeping quality of the egg is greatly improved by rapid cooling. In a test it was found that eggs gathered in wooden pails had a temperature of 82 degrees and in ten hours of 65 degrees. Eggs gathered at the same time in wire baskets had a five-hour temperature of 67½ degrees and a 10-hour temperature of 56½ degrees.

Wire baskets for egg collection are now in almost universal use on commercial egg plants in the New York and Boston areas. Wire baskets are now manufactured and sold by poultry supply firms. A very satisfactory basket can be made with sides of light lumber and a bottom of wire netting with half-inch mesh. Screw a spool under the corners so that the air can always circulate up through the eggs.

Thieves Loot Maxville Store Take Goods Value of $1,000

Maxville.—Making the largest haul secured in any individual robbery in this dstrct, thieves Sunday night gained entry to the store of J. Walter Smillie, in Main street south, to carry away loot valued at over $1,000 with the possibility that the amount may be increased to $1,500.

Believed to have been foiled in an attempt to enter a store at Moose Creek, six miles west of Maxville, the thieves apparently drove to Maxville. Entrance was gained by a basement window, and although a light was kept burning in the store, the intruders apparently carefully selected their loot.

The stock was composed of ladies' and gents' furnishings as well as a large stock of groceries.

The higher priced ladies' hose was taken and the moderately priced boxes left intact. Mackinaw coats, windbreakers, shoes, tobacco and cigarettes, and a large shipment of dry goods that came on a transport truck late Sturday evening and had not been opened, were included in the stolen goods.

The thieves also took time off to eat a lunch.

Provincial Constables J. Berry, of Alexandria, and R. H. Hawkshaw, of Cornwall, with County Constable Calvin MacKenzie, of Maxville, are investigating.

How Chesterville is Affected By New High School Course of Study

A Discussion of Local Conditions Under the Change Developed by the Department of Education in the High Schools Throughout the Province

—By—CHIEF INSPECTOR ROGERS

CHESTERVILLE, like many other high schools built some 25 years ago, although adequate for the needs of that time, should, in order to keep up with teaching requirements, have two rooms in addition to the four it already has.

In order to bring the school up to standard, a new wing consisting of two rooms, some 40 feet by 25 feet, should be built, the lower room to be fitted up as a shop and agricultural room for boys, and the upper room as a home economics room for girls. Since there is no science room in the school at present, one of the old rooms could be fitted for a science room or a part of the home economics room could be so equipped.

The basement should be also utilized for physical training and other allied classes in the winter months.

The Department does not recommend a lot of expensive equipment, but a policy of installing when it is certain to be needed is considered best.

To help municipalities finance new building, the Government pays 50 per cent of building and equipment, but this percentage will likely be cut down in the not distant future.

The Goverment also grants to schools that are equipped to teach the new course the scale of grants as follows:

Grade I	$400.00
Grade II	300.00
Grade III	200.00
Grade IV	100.00

This grant would be in addition to $150.00 you already get for teaching agriculture.

The Counties will also contribute to the building and equipment an amount in proportion to the number of county pupils 80 per cent on a pro rata basis.

As your furnaces are now worn out, a proper heating system could be installed at the same time and whereas you would ordinarily have to pay the amount it could be included under the above arrangements and would cut your heating costs in half.

It would not be necessary to increase your present staff as summer courses are provided to enable teachers to fit themselves to teach the new course.

The Department recommends Mr. Warren, architect who built Kemptville's new school and will next summer bring up to standard a score or more other schools, Maxville being among them. Mr. Warren visited Chesterville school last week and will shortly submit plans and estimates to suit your requirements, his instructions being that nothing unduly expensive or unnecessary be included. The plans may be changed if found unsatisfactory.

If the citizens of Chesterville and surrounding district wish to take advantage of the above offer of the Provincial Government and Department of Education, keeping in mind that the new subjects will in all probability soon become compulsory, they should not hesitate to approach the school board and municipal council to encourage them to take advantage of the reduced cost of standardizing their high school.

Large Attendance Mourners At Funeral Morris Servage

During the past week we were called upon to record the death of a well-beloved and highly respected citizen of this district in the person of James Morris Servage, who passed away after a prolonged llness at his home south of Chesterville early Tuesday morning. The funeral was held from his home to St. Mary's church Thursday morning, where Rev. Father Keaney officiated at the Requiem Mass. Rev. Father Bougie was present in the Sanctuary. Interment was made in the Upper cemetery.

The pall-bearers were Thos. Ralph, George Brownell, Thos. Dillabough, Bernard Coyne, Ed. Moran and Emmett Shane.

Mr. Servage was born in Connaught in the year 1868, and in 1896 he was married to Mary Beehler and took up residence on a farm north of Berwick. Here he spent the early years of his wedded life and the host of friends who came from Berwick and Crysler to pay their last respects was evidence of the high esteem in which the late Mr. Servage was held in that community. Some 25 years ago he took up residence on a farm south of Chesterville where he remained until God called him to his eternal reward.

Mr. Servage was a neighbour in the true sense of the word, always ready to sacrifice his own time and interests to help anyone in time of trouble or need and never did any person call on him in vain. Therefore his passing leaves a vacancy in the community which can never be filled. He was a devout member of St. Mary's church and took a very active part in all functions pertaining to the welfare of the parish.

For two years Mr. Servage was a member of the Winchester township council, which position he relinquished owing to ill health during the past year.

Besides a host of friends, he leaves to mourn: his widow, one son, Willie, at home; three daughters, Mrs. Wm. Morearty, Finch; Mrs. Lawrence Lisson, Syracuse, N.Y., and Mrs. Leonard Curran, Chesterville; two brothers, George, of Chesterville, and William Jos. Servage, of the Flin Flon district in Manitoba; two sisters, Mrs. Nicholas Rushman, of Canton, N.Y., and Mrs. Jerome Flynn, of Dunlap, Iowa, and 22 grandchildren.

Friends and relatives present from a distance were Mrs. A. P. O'Reilly, Dundee, Que.; Mrs. Wm. McIntosh and Mr. Ernest Reo. Monkland; Albert Norton, Massena; Mr. and Mrs. Nich. Rushman and Angus, Canton; Miss Helen Beehler, Ogdensburg; Mrs. Lisson and Laura and Mr. and Mrs. A. Lisson, Merrickville; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Lisson and Joan, Syracuse, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Herman Shane, Pendleton; Messrs. Ernest and Lawrence Shane, Lemieux; Mr. and Mrs. James Norton and family, Wales; Mr. Wallace Campbell, Russell; Mr. and Mrs. Jas. MacGregor and Annabel, of Ormond.

Spiritual offerings were received from the following. Rev. The United Church Parsonage,
Elma, Ont., Nov. 15, 1937.

To The Editor,
The Chesterville Record,
Chesterville, Ont.
Dear Mr. Editor:

May I be permitted, through the columns of your valuable paper, to express an opinion regarding the action of the Municipal Council of Chesterville in prohibiting all manner of gambling devices within the jurisdiction of the Council, by passing the By-law No. 588.

The Reeve and members of the Council may be quite sure that the way in which they faced the problem of gambling, and the way in which they have combatted the evil, will receive the commendation of many thoughtful people, not only within the municipality of Chesterville, but also from the adjacent countryside.

I would like to offer my own personal congratulations to the gentlemen of the Council upon their splendid courage in passing this by-law, and to express my own gratification that this was accomplished.

Also, as Convenor of the Committee of Evangelism and Social Service of the Dundas-Grenville Presbytery, of the United Church of Canada, and as a member of the same Standing Committee of the Montreal and Ottawa Conference of the United Church of Canada, I would assure the Municipal Council of Chesterville of the very real appreciation that these committees, and the church they represent, have of this outstanding piece of social service accomplished by their courageous vote and action in passing this by-law.

I have the honour to be, dear Mr. Editor, very truly yours
ROBERT S. SMITH.

WHY DO CANADIANS EAT SO LITTLE CHEESE?

THE decline in the consumption of cheese by the Canadian people is causing considerable worry to the producers. Last year the per capita consumption of cheese by Canadians was only 3.37 pounds, which is not a great deal of cheese to consume. Just what may be the real cause that keeps Canadians from eating their own make of cheese we do not know, but there might be something in the kind of cheese we are offered for our tables. There seems to be a wide difference in what constitutes the finest cheese. Old or well-cured cheese, the kind one had to put in a tea cup after being served to keep it from walking off the table, seems rather difficult to come by any more, and new cheese and the fancy brands around a dollar a pound just don't touch the spot for the real lover of tasty cheese.

Cheese is so safeguarded in manufacture and graded afterwards, with the finest shipped to the overseas market, that the taste for well-cured cheese in this country may be disappearing.

CONSUMPTION INCREASES OF CONCENTRATED MILK

IT may possibly be interesting for the Concentrated Milk Producers Association to learn that during the year 1936 the consumption of concentrated whole milk had increased in Canada by but little short of ten million pounds over the year 1935. It is getting to be a very large business. The price of the vast quantity of milk supplied by the producers is what is causing so much concern among the producers, as evidenced by the specialists speaking at the banquet of Chesterville Local last week, and just why the Local officials should have misgivings of the support behind them for better prices and better conditions is not easy to explain. Organization has increased the price of almost everything a farmer, or anyone else for that matter, uses, and to offset these increases the farmer must organize and stay organized. Organization will undoubtedly cost something, but if from the result of organization more than that amount is returned to farmers it looks like a good business proposition.

A PLAN TO HELP FARMERS AND CANADA AT LARGE

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is asking Congress to come across with 275 million dollars for the assistance of the agricultural industry in the United States, which amount will not be expected to be paid back into the treasury by the farmers.

How many farmers in this country who have mortgages registered against their properties would not consider themselves lucky to have an opportunity to pay off that mortgage, say, in a period of twenty years?

Look at it this way: The total mortgage indebtedness against farm lands in Canada is in the neighbourhood of 500 million dollars. The average rate of mortgage interest is around six per cent. Now, suppose the government assumed all the outstanding mortgages and paid them off with newly issued money, taking from the farmers new mortgages at, say, two per cent, the difference between the six per cent and a new rate of two per cent if paid annually on the principal would wipe out the whole indebtedness in a matter of twenty years computed at compound interest.

DEER'S TRUST MISPLACED.

THE other day a news item from Lindsay reported a farmer killing a deer with a club to put it out of its misery after the deer, pursued by a hound, bounded into the barnyard. We have in other days heard of wild animals seeking protection from humans when pursued by dogs, but this one, in dire straits, found its trust misplaced when it was "put out of its misery" as three hunters arrived after following it for a mile and a half.

REMUNERATION.

Windsor Stad.

S. E. McGORMAN, chairman of the Sandwich, Windsor & Amherstburg Railway Company's board of directors, explained last night how they made a paying proposition out of the city's street railways. "We didn't have a dime when we started, not enough to make a down payment on a stamp," he related, "but we hired a Scotchman to take care of things and told him that if we got any money we'd give him some Whenever he wanted any money, we held a meeting and decided not to give it to him."

PUMPKINS AND PIES.

Peterborough Examiner.

THIS has been a great growing season. One man at Port Severn has a pumpkin which weighs 95 pounds. In the Examiner office window there has been a 19-pound turnip, and now we learn of Emile Kiel, of Steinback, Man., who has a pumpkin which weighs 106 pounds. On nearly every occasion the newspaper people put in these stories and say something about the large pumpkin being sufficient to make pumpkin pies for the entire winter, and sometimes they become so enthusiastic that it is made to appear one huge pumpkin might even feed a township.

We learn that one ton of pumpkin will produce 800 pounds of pulp; that is 40 per cent of the pumpkin is pie material. Also that 14 ounces of pulp will make an average pumpkin pie.

So this large Manitoba pumpkin of 106 pounds would have within it 42.4 pounds, of 678.4 ounces of pulp, and allowing 14 ounces to a pie it would account for 48.4 pumpkin pies.

Prominent Winchester Man Died After Brief Illness

Winchester lost another prominent man when on Thursday morning last Joseph Robinson passed away unexpectedly, being ill but a few minutes.

Born in Mountain township, near the Mulloy school almost 72 years ago, the late Mr. Robinson spent the greater part of his life farming there and for several years served on the municipal council, being Reeve for some time.

Twelve years ago he moved to Winchester where his wife passed away three years ago. There are two surviving sons, Creighton and Willie, also one daughter, Mrs. Chester Robinson.

The funeral, which was held on Saturday afternoon in St. Paul's Presbyterian church, was very largely attended, testifying to how well and favourably Mr. Robinson was known. The service was conducted by his pastor, Rev. W. D. Turner, who spoke from the text: "It is appointed unto man once to die." He was assisted by Rev. D. W. Summers, of the Wesleyan church, Winchester, and the minister of South Mountain Presbyterian church. The choir, with Miss C. J. Irving at the organ, contributed an appropriate selection.

The floral tributes were numerous. Interment was made in Maple Ridge cemetery.

CLEAN HANDS

TO keep the hands clean by regular washing, and not to touch foods without having given the hands a good washing with plenty of soap and warm water and using a nail-brush, is one of the most practical means whereby we may protect ourselves and others against communicable disease.

The whole purpose of hand-washing is often defeated by the wash-basin. The only sanitary way to wash is in running water. Most wash-basins, however, are constructed with two taps—hot and cold—each with a separate spout. This makes it practically impossible to wash in running water as the water which comes out of the taps is either very hot or very cold.

Strange to say, most baths are equipped with a common spout, so that, by adjusting the flow of the two taps, the right temperature is secured. It is, however, rather awkward to use the bath when washing the hands. Why put the type of equipment on the bath which is really needed on the basin, not on the bath?

Wash-basins are provided with stoppers in order that hot and cold water may be mixed. The objection to this is that you not only wash in the dirt which comes off your hands, but also in what may have been left by previous waters. It is quite possible that your hands, after such washing may not be as free from germs as they were before you started.

The mouth, from the point of view of disease germs, is the dirtiest and most dangerous part of the body. The wash-basin, which receives the rinsings from the mouth of the family as they clean their teeth, is more than likely to be badly soiled with any and all of the germs present in the mouths of each member of the family. The wash-basin that is used for teeth cleaning is not safe to wash in until it has been disinfected.

Bad as the wash-basin may be in the home, the public wash-basin is infinitely worse because it is used by greater numbers of persons. Also, many public wash-basins, in order to save water and over-flowing, have spring taps that resist any effort the individual may make to wash or rinse his hands in running water. Trains, at least, do provide a separate basin for brushing the teeth.

The dirt we can see is, generally speaking, not dangerous. The real danger lies in the invisible dirt—secretions of the body—which carries with it the germs of disease, for example, the saliva deposited on the common drinking-cup. It would seem reasonable, from all we know, to say that hands should be washed in running water—the way the surgeon prepares his hands before an operation—and that all wash basins should be equipped to make this possible.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

MISS HELEN LACEY, B.H.Sc.

HOME-MADE CANDY.

HOME-MADE CANDIES must be popular since so many candies on the market are advertised as home-made. So, why not be smart and make your own candies for your next party or save these recipes and make your own Christmas candies. And, speaking of Christmas, it isn't far off what with pictures of Santa Claus already appearing in the papers.

MARSHMALLOWS

2 tablespoons gelatine
¼ cup cold water
¾ cup boiling water
2 cups sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
Icing sugar

Soak the gelatine in the cold water until softened. Boil the sugar and water to the soft ball stage. Add vanilla and salt to the gelatine. Pour the sugar syrup slowly over the gelatine, beating constantly with a dover beater until cool and thick. Butter a shallow pan and dust with icing sugar. Turn the marshmallow mixture into the pan and smooth the top. Dust with icing sugar. Allow to stand over night. In the morning cut in squares and roll in powdered sugar.

TAFFY.

2 cups brown sugar
1½ tablespoons vinegar
¾ teaspoon salt
½ tablespoon butter
2 teaspoons vanilla

Mix sugar, vinegar, water and salt in a saucepan. Heat slowly, without stirring until the sugar is dissolved, add butter. Boil without stirring to the brittle stage. Add vanilla just before turning out. Pour into a buttered pan; mark in squares before it hardens.

POP CORN BALLS.

3 quarts popped corn
1 cup sugar
1-3 cup corn syrup
1 cup water
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

Cook sugar, syrup and water to the soft crack stage. Add flavouring and salt. Pour over the popped corn. Stir so that all kernels will be evenly coated with syrup. Shape the corn into balls, wrap each ball in waxed paper.

RAISIN FUDGE

2 tablespoons butter
2 cups sugar
2-3 cup milk
2 squares unsweetened chocolate
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ package seeded raisins
½ cup nuts

Melt the butter, add sugar and milk. Heat to boiling. Add chocolate, cut in small pieces. Boil without stirring to the soft ball stage. Remove from the heat, add vanilla and stir until almost creamy. Add raisins and nuts. Turn into buttered pans and mark in squares.

FRUIT ROLL.

Chop equal quantities of raisins, prunes, dates, figs and marshmallows. Knead thoroughly. Roll in small balls and coat with granulated sugar.

DIVINITY FUDGE.

2½ cups granulated sugar
½ cup corn syrup
½ cup water
2 egg whites
½ cup chopped nuts
½ teaspoon flavouring

Mix sugar, syrup and water in a saucepan. Heat gently, stirring constantly, until the sugar is dissolved. Boil whites stiff in a large bowl, gradually beat in ½ cup of the syrup. Boil the remaining syrup to the brittle stage; add gradually to the egg mixture. Continue beating until the mixture begins to stiffen, add nuts and flavouring. Drop from a teaspoon on to waxed paper and when set remove to a plate.

A small amount of corn syrup added to candy will help prevent it from becoming sugary.

Never stir candy while it is boiling, also, never leave the spoon in the dish while the candy is boiling.

* * * *

When candies are made from brown sugar and molasses, they may be stirred while boiling to prevent curdling of the milk by acids contained in the brown sugar and molasses.

* * * *

Creamy candy should be cooled before beating. Beating candy while it is hot causes large crystals to form, resulting in sugary candy.

* * * *

The soft crack stage of syrup is reached when a small amount of the syrup forms spirals or threads in a cup of cold water. These spirals or threads are brittle under water, but soften as soon as removed from it and stick to the teeth when chewed. The hard crack or brittle stage is reached when the spirals or threads do not stick to the teeth when chewed.

Mushrooms

WHEN the generous "chunk" of butter in the chafing dish had melted Edith Lee proceeded to bind it with flour. From near by seven pairs of enchanted eyes watched her easy movements. From a far corner of the room one pair of thoughtful eyes watched both the dainty purveyor of the dainties and the worshipful group around her.

"Um—the milk! Quick, somebody, please!"

A dozen eager hands reached for the bottle.

You might have suspected anything of James Gridley, the courtly gentleman in the corner, except approbation unless you had known that the austere Vandyke beard and the forbidding spectacles hid the youth of his heart, just as forty years before they had hidden the youth of his years when he first came to Arne as superintendent of schools.

The six girls and the lone boy of the junior class must have been familiar with the masquerade, however, or they would not have presumed to come romping boisterously into the precise office of that precise gentleman. They had so romped into it a few minutes ago, laden with packages and cooking utensils and exclaiming to him that Miss Edith was going to make them a chicken "à la King" because they had rehearsed their play so well.

With their arms around one another's shoulders the girls now stood grouped in a semi-circle around their young instructor, who was smaller than any of them. Edith Lee, with a certain subdued light of excitement in the deep blue of her eyes, stirred the mixture around and around and around. A little distance away Val Horton, the lone boy, clumsily but gallantly cut green peppers and separated chicken into modest bits.

"O Miss Edith! Wait! You've put salt into it twice already!"

"You have something on your mind, Miss Edith!" was the next accusation. "I've noticed it all the evening."

"So've I noticed it."

"And I!"

"Let's guess what it is!"

"Pooh! That's easy!" said Val. "Miss Edith is still under the spell of the translation I made when that lordly individual was visiting the Latin class this afternoon."

"Oh, yes—who was that man, daddy?" asked Helen Gridley.

"Dr. Baird, the president of Rolling College," replied James Gridley.

"Horrors!" The seven literally staggered under the blow. "What was he doing here?"

"He came to adjust some matters relating to our accrediting system."

"Well, he seemed to find it easy to stay. He must have been impressed with you, Miss Edith. He tagged you around from one classroom to another all the afternoon."

"I'm fully aware that he did," Miss Lee acknwoledged emphatically. "The only reason that I was able to bear up under the strain was that you all helped so much. You never did make better recitations."

Val bowed low over the chicken and the peppers. "Thanks, lady, for the kind words. Personally I knew I was covering myself with glory." Then he added, "I hope, Mr. Gridley, that the gentleman appreciated your good luck in the matter of—faculty personnel."

"He isn't human if he isn't green with envy," Alice pronounced as she sprinkled paprika into the chafing dish.

"Oh-h!" gasped Jane. "Suppose—only suppose—that he should become covetous!"

A cry of dismay went around the room.

"He couldn't!" flatly declared Helen Gridley. "It wouldn't be professional ethics. It's entirely outside the code to covet your neighbour's Latin and English instructor, isn't it, daddy?

James Gridley had turned partly toward his desk and was making idle scrawls on his pad. "Mightn't it be also outside the code to stand in the way of one who had an opportunity to go to better things?"

Unanimously and without compunction the seven uttered complete disapproval. Edith Lee shot a quick, puzzled glance at the rather awesome figure by the desk; then she concerned herself with her chicken à la King.

"Oh!" she exclaimed in sudden dismay. "Where are the mushrooms? I do believe I utterly forgot them! Never mind; two of you girls can run down to the store on the corner for them."

"Jiminy, Miss Edith!" Val protested. "Why fuss about them? I don't think that stuff will go begging as it is."

"Sure! Let's eat it this way," urged Helen.

"Oh, why, we couldn't!" remonstrated Miss Lee. "I don't like it without mushroom. I must have them. Why, who ever heard of chicken à la King without mushrooms?"

"I have," said Jane in doleful tones. "We haven't had a mushroom in the house in a blue moon. They are eighty cents a can! Mother says they are taboo on the menu till prices come down."

Edith Lee joined in the laugh at Jane's playful mimicry of a practical-minded mother.

"I know they're expensive," she conceded, "but the old high cost of living has me so deep in the hole now that it won't feel any worse to crawl in deeper. Run on, girls," she said to the two who were waiting to spring out of the door at her bidding. "Charge them to my account. And get two cans."

Open admiration showed in the faces of the little group around Edith Lee. James Gridley drew his hand back over his smooth hair, and the absurd figures he was drawing grew more enigmatic. He laid down his pencil finally and, wheeling around his swivel chair, sat intently regarding the babbling, comradely group.

His eye travelled from one to another, as if he were tracing the quite obvious reception of Edith Lee's distinctive ideas in the dress and in the coiffure of the young girls; he may have observed that Alice tucked in stray wisps of hair in the same unconscious businesslike manner that Edith did, and that when Jane talked she threw out her hands in the precise expressive way of her instructor.

The interest of the superintendent quickened as their talk presently caught his attention. "No," Jane was declaring emphatically, "I simply am not going."

"Not going to the senior ball!"

"Nope; not an inch. Mother has decared that I can't have another party dress this season; you know how mother is! Consequently I shall be spending the week end in town that week."

"O Jane!" Miss Lee was clearly distressed. "You wouldn't miss it at all—just for that. You have any number of pretty dresses. Wear one of them. What do you care?"

"I care a lot!" Jane replied with a wry little smile. "And so would you. You know very well, Miss Edith, that you'd never go in a dowdly old frump of a dress that everybody's seen. You have a dream of a new something for everything that comes along. Whee!" and she stretched out her young arms luxuriously. "It must be a glorious feeling not to be bossed about your clothes—just to go and buy whatever you want and have no fussing with anybody over the—the ethics of it!"

James Gridley rose uneasily from his chair, connected the cord with the electric toaster and gave his attention to making toast.

When the enthusiasts had consumed the chicken à la King—with mushrooms,—he asked, "Can you give me a few minutes, Miss Edith?" And after the chattering seven had cleared the table and taken themselves happily off he drew a chair for her close to his desk.

"Dr. Baird told me he made you an offer," he began, "which I consider an excellent one."

"Five hundred a year more!" The light leaped quickly into Edith's eyes and was as quickly subdued. "But—I gave him no answer, of course. I don't at all know what to do!" She threw out her hands in her quick way. "It has been beautiful here; you have all been so good to me. Somehow it does not seem right to go just when you have helped me to get a start; and yet to be English assistant in a college is an opportunity."

James Gridley sat absently working his hands along the arms of his chair.

"I think it would be best for you to go, Miss Edith," he said finally.

"You—do?" Edith spoke the words slowly. Something in Mr. Gridley's tone gave her the impression that he had other things than her financial betterment in mind. "Why?"

He reflected a moment; then he looked at her out of amazingly direct dark eyes. "I think I shall tell you frankly, Miss Edith, that it was a great relief to me when Dr. Baird intimated only a little while ago that he should like to procure your services."

"You mean—that I wasn't—giving satisfaction?"

"Yes, in a way."

Naturally, her consternation deepened, for all through the year not the slightest criticism had reached her ears and appreciative, kindly words had been legion. She knew that she was warm in the hearts of her students, who had made unusual progress. "Oh — I never knew — I supposed —" she stammered miserably.

"On the surface of things your first year in the schoolroom has been a meteoric success, Miss Edith. Your class work is beyond reproach. You have a comradely way with the students that reduces your problem of discipline to a minimum, and yet you also control them—well, the upshot of the matter is that control. You control them too absolutely."

"Why," she gasped, unbelieving, "I give them all the liberty—"

'Yes; but at the same time every mother's child in high school is your ardent follower. You are their criterion."

'Well—well—" she said, flushing.

"And, believe, Miss Edith, I speak only after agonizing thought upon the matter. I fear that your influence which might be immeasurably constructive, is deleterious for one grave reason."

A hurt look crept into Edith Lee's eyes, and as Mr. Gridley continued the uplifted corners of her mouth flattened into a straight line. "I believe that the first duty of a teacher is to teach self-control. But, you see, you do not practice self-control yourself."

Edith's straight little back grew straighter, and her chin lifted slightly, she plunged her two hands deep into the voluminous pockets of her blue taffeta gown and asked, "In what way am I lacking in self-control?"

"Well, let us take the mushroom issue of this evening. The mushrooms were not necessary; you were in no position to buy them; their price was beyond all reason. It was not ethical, as Jane put it, to buy them, and yet you did. Why? Because you wanted them."

"Mr. Gridley," Edith broke in, with an unmistakable coldness in her voice, "I must say that I think the manner of spending your own income is your personal affair."

"Perhaps; perhaps not," he answered thoughtfully. "Right here is the point. You had the opportunity to give those young people a forcible lesson in self-control — thrift, economy, ethical spending, whatever you want to call it—sense and independence chiefly, I should say. Instead, you set for them a dangerous example of extravagant self-indulgence. By your own statement, made in a spirit of bravado, you are 'in the hole.' Helen tells me, speaking as of a heroic achievement, that every month your bank account is overdrawn—O.D. has taken on for her the glamour of adventure."

James Gridley paused, and Edith Lee sat studying him with narrowed eyes, "I cannot but consider it a point of honour to live within your income," he concluded.

"Aren't you entirely ignoring the inadequacy of salary?"

"You are receiving one hundred and twenty-five dollars a month," Mr. Gridley said thoughtfully. "It is not what it should be, of course; and yet—do you mind telling me what you pay for room and board?"

"Eight dollars a week."

"Which is fair enough, you must admit. And—this is prying, I grant—but what per cent of the rest of your income goes for investment or savings?"

"Mr. Gridley!" Edith exclaimed, almost losing patience. "Do you have any idea at all what it costs to dress appropriately to set the example that is expected of her?"

"Nine new dresses, six pairs of shoes and five new hats so far this year constitute that example, I believe." He smiled faintly.

"You are observant."

"No; I am merely quoting Helen. The town is full of homes that could furnish equally accurate statistics. You are the young people's excuse for extravagant demands, Miss Edith. Mrs. Grant, Jane's mother, called here yesterday, rampantly insurgent over what she termed the younger generation's silk-lingerie mania.

"The Grants are almost millionaires and yet they have pretty rigid principles of living. I'll venture," he said thoughtfully, "that neither Mrs. Grant nor Jane spends so much on dress as you do, Miss Edith. No, nor upon amusements, either. Do you remember that Jane was not allowed to go into town to the matinée with the rest of you the other afternoon, because her mother considered it an outrage to spend four dollars to see a play of such little consequence?"

Edith made no reply. As she sat there with partly averted head and inscrutable eyes she seemed suddenly little and far away.

The quiet decisive voice went on after a pause, "I hope you will forgive this analysis of your personal habits, Miss Edith. It is my firm conviction that the manner in which a person spends his income is an index to his character. These are trying times. They are times when it is nothing short of dangerous to hold up before young people the idea that we must satisfy our own desires, regardless of the cost. It alters the case none that our students come from the well-to-do class."

Edith's eyes met Mr. Gridley's at last, and she managed to smile. But her tone seemed to invite the closing of a futile discussion as she said, "I gather that I need feel no qualms over accepting Dr. Baird's offer, Mr. Gridley."

"In the circumstances, no. It makes it easier for both of us that you can go to something better. "But," and his voice was vibrant with warmth and kindliness, "if it were not for this one thing, if I did not consider that proper adjustment to the day's problems transcends the lessons of the curriculum, I am afraid that I should be selfish enough to try to keep you. And I should not be so selfish, at that. You are very young; it would not be bad for you to wait a year."

From her expression Edith Lee might have been going to cry or to burst out in wrath, or she might have been about to make some sweetly cool little answer that would imply that she was now in a position to overlook disparaging criticism.

Doubtless James Gridley would have been glad to have her do any of those things. But she did none of them. She sat tense and still.

Throughout the days that followed she still moved within her wall of silence. She was frank and courteous in all their business intercourse; but she saw to it that all their intercourse was of a business nature. Class work went on serenely and efficiently. She was comradely with the students, but in a way that vaguely puzzled them. For some unaccountable reason Val Horton called her Miss Lee three times in one day.

Under her direction the class play came and went without a hitch, leaving the juniors radiant with triumph but enthusiastic in ascribing credit for all the glory to Miss Lee. The senior ball now swung to the forefront, and snatches of plans were wafted about the corridors.

One sunny afternoon James Gridley walked into his office and discovered himself literally in a rainbow maze of filmy, fluffy tulle and chiffon that was being manipulated in no end of bewildering ways by fluttering young hands. Blinking his surprise, he stood there on the threshold a moment. Then Edith Lee, glancing up from a cloud of pale blue that hovered on her lap, discovered him.

"O Mr. Gridley!" she cried in tones that were not at all businesslike. "I'm so glad you came in. I was thinking of telephoning you." She stood looking steadily up at him in his austerity with bright eyes no longer inscrutable. "As soon as our chef has it ready we are going to have chicken à la Wing—without mushrooms. Will you stay?"

James Gridley returned her gaze for several moments. "Yes," he said, "I shall be glad to stay." And he squeezed himself into a chair already almost filled with a wisp of pink georgette that was a dress.

"Yes, for the love of Mike, have a heart and stay, Mr. Gridley!" cried Val Horton, the aforementioned chef. "They hauled me down from the library to this, because they were all so busy. Hope you don't mind having the stuff spilled round on your desk. I stuck everything that looked important into the second drawer."

"Just what is all this?" Mr. Gridley looked round in some bewilderment.

"Oh, you'll find out fast enough," Val assured him. "My head is fairly swirling with plots and schemes. You see, it seems all you have to do is to turn a last year's dress upside down and give it a few pats and things, and, presto! it's the dernier cri! Now, if you have any shiny spots on the elbows of your suit—"

"O Val, hush your nonsense!" Alice interrupted. "Mr. Gridley, we're simply altering over old party dresses for the ball. We're doing it every bit ourselves, too—except that Jane's mother came up a while and sort of planned things for us."

"Isn't that rather a departure?" Mr. Gridley asked curiously.

Ione held off the cuff of a sleeve critically to survey the fancy stitch that she was embroidering. "Oh, I don't know. You see, Miss Edith got to telling us about how she was making over one of her dresses to wear and said she wished we'd come and do it, too, because she hated to sew alone."

"And it really is no end of a lark," some one added.

"And a big saving besides," said some one else. "Miss Edith says that she's decided that it's perfectly scandalous to have so many new dresses in one year — especially in these times."

"Oh, and besides, Mr. Gridley," said Jane Grant, frowning at the needle she was trying to thread. "we've all started bank accounts with the money we were going to spend for new dresses." She looked up with a laugh as she at last managed to thread her needle. "Mother never whimpered at that."

"We have a new idea that's a bully one, Mr. Gridley," said Val as he energetically combined flour with butter. "From now on we're going to keep budgets—keep a close tab on our spendings and our savings. It's as Miss Edith says: it ought to be a point of honour with us to live within our allowances, and to save, too. Your expenditures are an index to—"

"Oh!" It was a little squeal from Edith Lee. "I did prick my finger so!" she explained as she raised a flushed face. "And do look at the mess I've made of putting this bias finishing on! I'm going to take it off and do it over."

"Oh, no, don't, Miss Edith!" Jane sought to stay her hand. "It'll never show when you get your trimming on!"

"No!" insisted Edith, freeing herself and pulling at a long length of thread. "Let me! I ought to! If I'd just stopped to think, I'd have known that the principle of that method was wrong. This will be penance." Then, playfully staying Jane's remonstrating hand, she remarked seriously, "I believe in penance — don't you, Mr. Gridley? Don't you think that when a person has done a thoughtless wrong she ought to be allowed to right it?"

"The penetrating dark eyes looked deep into her own. "I do. And I greatly admire the — self-control — that will seek to make it right when there might be—an easier way out."

A little byplay was going on during this conversation. Ione nudged Val and gave several emphatic jerks of her head in the direction of Edith Lee, at the same time motioning first to her own lips and then to Val's.

Val frowned and shook his head. "You," his lips formed.

Ione in turn shook her head vigourously. But when all the girls in concert began to nod insistently and to send out a volley of inaudible "you's," Val ran his fingers miserably around the edges of his collar and began:

"Er—Miss Edith?"

"Yes?"

"I—was sent up here to—to—interview you, you know. I represent the curious public. If you don't care to talk for publication, of course what you say will go no farther. But it would be a great relief if you'd make a statement."

"About what, Val?" she asked, smiling up at him.

"About this confounded report that you're going to accept a position at Rolling College. Is it true?"

"I—don't know," came the answer in a low voice; "I haven't decided."

"Hooray! Why don't you decide now?"

"Yes, decide now and decide in our favour!"

Edith Lee looked questioningly from one to another of them. "I think," she said slowly at last, "that I'm going to ask Mr. Gridley to decide for me."

A mighty uproar followed. The seven seized one another and executed little dance steps of joy, and shimmering, perishable fluffs of gowns clasped ruthlessly in their arms threw out glad lights. The chicken à la King —without mushrooms—bubbled merrily in the chafing dish. There was no doubt in the minds of the revelers. They were sure of the decision.

But Edith Lee was not sure. She was waiting breathlessly.

When at last the tumult had subsided James Gridley made answer in a voice that lacked its usual steadiness, "I am going to be just selfish enough to ask you to stay with us another year, Miss Edith. We need you."

SEA SCOUTS TO HAVE FLEET OF WHALERS.

A 28-foot whaler has been presented to the Sea Scouts of Vancouver by the Vancouver Lions Club. The craft, which will accommodate 16 boys, is the second of a fleet of four which the club set out to provide the British Columbia Sea Scouts. The first was presented last spring.

THE SHADOW OF GEORGE WASHINGTON AND HIS HATCHET

The shadow of a hatchet in the ghostly hand of George Washington "when he was young," as Mark Twain would have said, gave leaders of the big Scout Jamboree in Washington some concern this summer. Shortly before the 28,000 boys were due to arrive in the capital, camp headquarters was called by 'phone, and a much concerned feminine voice, "on behalf of a committee of ladies," implored the Scout officials to do all in their power to prevent the boys "chopping the trees with their Scout hatchets." A somewhat similar appeal came from the office of the Fine Arts Commission on behalf of "Washington's monuments and public buildings. So there was a final enjoyed laugh at the Scout Jamboree headquarters, after the last boy had left, when the committee of ladies and the Fine Arts Commission called with the "good news" that not one sign of damage had been found anywhere. A difficult question was left, however: Whether American Boy Scouts do not know their history, or whether they beg to doubt the authenticity of the cherry tree story, or whether, with respect to trees and hatchets, they presume to be more moral than the great Father of their country. Whichever way, a difficult decision!
