HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.
No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.
Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Car Turns Turtle

A motor mishap which occurred Sunday opposite the Doering Stock Farm south of the village resulted in a seriously wrecked automobile and fortunately without loss of life, when George Hartwell's Ford coupe was turned upside down in the ditch as Henry Sauve attempted to pass the coupe. It is stated that when Hartwell, followed by a car bearing a Quebec license plate and by Sauve, were proceeding south a horse-drawn buggy in which were Milton Shay and his wife was coming north, Hartwell and the buggy were almost opposite each other when the Quebec car passed between them and it is thought that Sauve attempted to follow the car ahead and in do so fouled Hartwell, crowding him off the pavement with the result that the coupe turned a complete somersault landing in the ditch with its wheels in the air and Hartwell and Cecil Barkley under it.

There was considerable water in the ditch but the men not seriously hurt were able to work themselves clear of the wreckage.

An investigation will take place before Magistrate McCormick in Winchester Saturday afternoon.

Bird Club Organized by Public School Pupils

Taking the place of the regular Agriculture period on the afternoon of Wednesday, March 13th, the pupils of Room A of the Public School met together to organize a Junior Bird Club, under the auspices of the Hamilton Bird Protection Society, nc., which, in turn, is under the National Association of Audobon Societies with Headquarters in New York City. The Principal explained the objects of the Club, showing how they were: (1) Educational, because the members pledge themselves to learn all they can about the wild birds. (2) Humane, because each member is expected to be kind to the birds and to protect them. Each pupil present voted in favor of these conditions and promised to abide by the rules of membership. They also agreed to pay an annual fee of 10 cents for which each receives: a set of 6 leaflets on Birds, a set of 6 coloured bird pictures, a set of 6 outlines for drawing, and a Bird Club Button. There being 28 members in all, the Club will receive a free subscription for the official magazine "Bird Lore" for a year. The members agreed to call their Club "The Chesterville Peptimists Junior Bird Club", the meetings to be held at least once each month. The following officers were lected: President, Ronald Hummel, Secretary, Frank Bronskill; Programme Committee, Olive Casselman and Pauline Pomeroy; Field Committee, Willie Nash, Betty Bolster, Roy Marcellus.

The first meeting of the Club was held Thursday afternoon, March 28th, when a very interesting programme was presented. The Field Committee reported the return of many of our Spring Birds and plans were made for further activities of the Club. Following the organization in Room A, Rooms B and C are both taking steps towards forming a similar Club in those rooms.

Coincident with the formation of the above Club came a very fine offer from the Women's Institute to present prizes for the best Bird Houses made by pupils from the local schools, which added a further incentive to activity in the new organization.

Bird House Prize Winners

The Women's Institute held a very successful tea and home-made baking sale in the Library Saturday afternoon, March 30th. Excellent music was supplied during the afternoon by an orchestra composed of Miss Marion Casselman, Miss Rae Dixon and Mrs. Casselman.

The main feature of the afternoon was the presentation of the prizes to the winners in the Bird House contest. The first prizes being donated by Mr. Newman and Mr. Hunt. This contest was open to the Public and Separate schools. Eleven well-buil houses were exhibited, showing interest and keen competition among the pupils. The winners were—

Senior Class—1, Ronald Hummel; 2, Frank Bronskill.

Junior Class—1, Bobbie Barrie; 2, Lloyd Hess.

Others of Honorable Mention are—Gwyneth Roberts, Lillian Graham, Arthur Hewitt, Bill McElroy, Jack Fulton, Billy Fulton.

Girl Guides Entertain Mothers

The First Chesterville Company of Girl Guides held their regular meeting in the Library Wednesday afternoon, April 3rd, when the mothers of the Guides and ladies of the Local Association were entertained to afternoon tea.

Recently a number of recruits have joined the Company so that now there are thirty-three guides with two Guiders.

Death of Mrs. John Grady

It has pleased God in His infinite mercy to call from the midst of her dear friends and relatives, Mrs. Jno. Grady, who passed away at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Murphy, of Chesterville, on Sunday, March 24th.

Although Mrs. Murphy had been in ill health for some time her death came as a shock to the whole community. Some time previous to her death she had been with her aunt and was given the most tender and loving care but fond hopes and ardent wishes were of no avail.

During her illness she was comforted by Rev. Father Staley, who administered the last rites of the church at her death.

She bore her suffering with Christian fortitude and resignation. It was God's holy will she leave this world for a brighter and happier home.

The late Mrs. Grady was born at Berwick, March 10th, 1886, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Curran. In September, 1907, she married Johnnie Grady and since has lived in Berwick vicinity where she enjoyed the warm regards of a wide circle of friends. Her patience and charity and humility were remarkable. Her loss is an exceedingly great one.

She leaves to mourn her death her husband, one daughter, May, and one son, John, also her mother, Mrs. Edward Curran, two sisters, Annie and Mary, and four brothers, Leo, Eddie, Bennie and Hugh.

The funeral, which was one of the largest, took place from the home of Mrs. Murphy and proceeded to St. Mary's church, Chesterville, where requiem high mass was celebrated by Rev. Father McPhee, and thence to Crysler cemetery for interment.

The pall bearers were Messrs. Eddie Lynch, Neil McRae, George McMahon, Frank Galvin, Mike Kearns and Bernard Grady.

Monday's Storm Does Heavy Damage

At Spencerville

Damage amounting to thousands of dollars was caused in Spencerville, Ventnor and Shanly districts early Monday afternoon by wind and rain. Barns belonging to Roy Henderson and Ernest Billings, of Shanly, were totally destroyed with machinery and implements. The C.P.R. station at Spencerville was damaged and an implement shed owned by Levi Levere was blown from its foundation near Shanly.

Steel Barn Demolished at Lansdowne

While no serious damage is reported in Kingston, considerable damage is reported from the oustide district. The wind played havoc on the farm of Robert Shield, near Lansdowne, when a large steel barn was demolished. The barn was 40 feet by 90 feet, and regarded as one of the best in that section of the country. The barn was housing 27 head of cattle, 20 sheep and a dozen pigs. Two hogs, four cows and two sheep met death, while Varda Wilks, well-known trotter and her yearling colt were also killed, and some of the cattle injured, according to the report reaching here. and it is reported some are injured so badly they cannot live. An idea of the terrific force of the wind can be imagined in the fact that iron sheeting on barns was carried about half a mile.

Bad at Cornwall

Monday afternoon a section of Cornwall was struck by an exceedingly high wind, accompanied by a down pour of rain. As a result quite a number of trees and fences along Second and Third streets were levelled. As the trees fell the trolley wires of the street railway company were broken in a couple of places and power wires were dislodged. The street cars were tied up for about three hours and users of power in that district were without lights and power for that period also. The wind came from the southwest and travelled in a narrow strip. Besides the damage already referred to, two of the small pinnacles on the tower of St. John's Presbytrian church were blown down and a small section of the roof of the Cornwallis Hotel was loosened when the wind got under the cap at the southwest corner and ripped some boards loose and scattered them into adjacent yards and on the tops of houses next to the hotel. The damage at the hotel was negligible and it in no way interfered with the interior as the hotel is supplied with a concrete roof over the sixth floor and the boards loosened from a covering over this roof. The high wind only lasted about five minutes but the storm was the worst ever experienced there and the roar which preceded the break caused consternation among those living in the area affected. Fortunately it was of short duration. The wonder is that the town escaped with as little damage as it did.

WHY BUY A HOME?

The North Carolina "Christian Advocate" tells of a real estate man who was trying to sell a young married man a site for a home, and the young fellow seemed ready to consider the matter favorably. But the wife spoke up: "Why buy a home? I was born in a hospital, reared in a boarding school, educated in college, courted in an automobile, married in a church, get my meals in a cafeteria, live in an apartment, spend my mornings playing golf, my afternoons playing bridge; in the evenings we dance or go to the movies; when I get sick I will go to the hospital; and when I die I will go to the undertaker's. What do we need of a home?"

Granted that there may be some exaggeration in this picture, yet it is altogether too near the truth to suit most of us who are old-fashioned enough to think that the home is the brightest spot in all God's universe. There are too many young people who are missing the joys of home life, while they think they are getting something as good or better. But the men and women who have the joy of seeing their children playing about their own door know that the others are missing the very best of life. There is no movie like the one which our own children provide at our own fireside. There is no automobile, even if it is the very latest eight-cylinder car, which can give one the thrill which comes when we help to furnish and decorate our own little home, and turn a modest house into the very antechamber of heaven. A country can afford to go without skyscrapers; it can manage to live without making many of its citizens multi-millionaires; it can even get along tolerably well without providing every luxury for its people; but if it ceases to be a country of homes then its doom is not far away. No amount of wealth, no degree of luxury, no wide extension of culture can create a nation out of a homeless land.

Just Plumb Lazy

"Rastus, your dog seems to be in pain."

"No, suh, he ain't in pain. He's just lazy."

"But surely he must be suffering or he wouldn't howl like that."

"Jes' plumb laziness; he's sittin' on a thistle."

Smiles

"I have a terrible time keeping track of things around here. Has anyone seen my hat?" "My dear, you have it on your head." "Thanks, if it han't been for you, I would have gone without it."

DOG ON RAMPAGE
TAKES HEAVY TOLL

One rabid dog carried destruction into the Mountain district during the week-end. It attacked a 12-year-old boy, a grown-up man, 47 sheep, two calves and killed a number of hens before it was finally destroyed by Mike Arcand. Gerald Arcand, the boy, succeeded in beating the animal off after it had bitten him in the arm. All the animals attacked are under quarantine. Many may have to be destroyed.

A Long Wet Spell

The Sunday School lesson was from II Kings, xxii-1 and read, "Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem." On telling about the lesson to his mother, Paul, aged four, said, "The lesson was about a good rain, and there was a little boy named Josiah, and it began to rain when he was eight and when he was thirty-one it was still drizzlin'."

The Mania For Speculation

We are passing through what is in some cases a perfect orgy of speculation, especially in mining stocks, although the entire stock market is affected. The New York Stock Exchange during last year reached new high records, and more shares changed hands in a day than ever before. And in England, we are told that for twelve months the Stock Exchange has witnessed a very fever of speculation, with even clergymen doing their best to get rich quick. And Canada seems to be no whit behind her bigger neighbors.

We heard of one Canadian girl who took all her savings, amounting to about $2,000, and invested them in some stock, with such success that when she sold out she received $6,000; and no doubt her success was a stimulus to many others who heard of it. And we know of others who had certain mining stocks which inside of a year jumped up to a value which doubled or trebled the investment. And these cases could be multiplied in every city of the Dominion. Talking to a man who has his pulse on the market we were told that on the streets in Toronto the common topic of conversation is the price of some favorite stock. And some have made fortunes by their investments.

But there is another side to the story, which has often been told and which needs to be repeated, for the victim of this rage to get rich quick is always with us. We heard of one woman who, on advice, invested all her small fortune, which only amounted to a few thousands of dollars, and she had the satisfaction of seeing that investment grow until she could have sold out and made quite a comfortable little fortune. Her broker advised her to sell, but why should she when she could see her fortune growing larger every day? So she held on. And then the stock began to slide backwards; and, of course, she would not sell until it recovered; and as, unfortunately, she was carrying her stock on margin she had to borrow from her friends from time to time to keep her margin intact. Finally she sold, and now she owes some $17,000, with nothing at all to pay with.

There are fortunes in stock gambling for the fortunate; for the poor fellows who are caught on a falling market there is often bankruptcy, and all too often a dishonored grave. The stock market may be a good place for the successful gambler, but it is a bad place for his victim.

Some who read this will be attracted by vision of fortunes made overnight; but they will not hear of fortunes lost overnight; and they possibly will not come into close contact with the men and women whose very prosperity has been their ruin turned them into confirmed gamblers. Better go slowly than attain a speed which spells danger, and all too often destruction. Invest if you will, but better take the advice of some one whom you know, and know well; and probably your own banker will tell you that you had better shun any stock that pays too high a dividend. We recommend in these days of feverish speculation that men study the words of the one of old who said: "They that desire to be rich fall into a temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition."

A GOOD SPORT

Midland Free Press—Last Saturday morning a purse containing something over $41 was picked up on King street and left with The Free Press with instructions to advertise for the owner. Two minutes after the finder had left the office a young girl called to enquire if anything had been heard of her lost purse, and she was, naturally, greatly pleased at recovering her money so promptly. But the strange part of the whole thing was that only a few months ago the finder, and he is far from being a rich man, lost $200 on the street and never heard of it again. It would be interesting to know how many people in similar circumstances would have done what he did on Saturday or how many would have considered the money which he found as a payment on account of his own heavy loss. But he played the game, as it should be played and his act may be the means of recovering his own $200.

Do you know why McLAUGHLIN-BUICK rides so much more comfortably than other cars?

Here are three important reasons

McLAUGHLIN BUICK'S famous cantilever springs—the most expensive type of springs employed on any car in the world, coupled with the famous McLaughlin-Buick torque tube drive—are designed solely for comfort, not for transmission of power, and provide the maximum degree of riding restfulness.

McLaughlin-Buick's Lovejoy hydraulic shock absorbers . . front and rear . . absorb the jars and jolts of the roughest roads, thus adding still further to the buoyancy of McLaughlin-Buick travel.

And McLaughlin-Buick's deep, soft seat-cushions, together with the lounging spaciousness of McLaughlin-Buick interiors, provide unequalled riding luxury for every passenger.

McLaughlin-Buick offers the highest standard of motoring comfort ever attained; and this is one vital reason why more motorists drive McLaughlin-Buicks than any other fine car.

Mrs. Geo. H. Challies Morrisburg

After an illness extending over several months, the death occurred on Sunday, March 24th, of Mrs. Jean Gibson Challies, wife of Mr. Geo. H. Challies, Reeve of Morrisburg. She had been confined to her room for about five weeks, but hope was entertained for her complete recovery and her suddn passing came as a severe shock to her relatives and friends.

Deceased was born in Morrisburg January 2nd, 1885, a daughter of the late Matthew Gibson and Mrs. Gibson. On May 27th, 1913, she was united in marriage to Mr. Challies.

Possessed of remarkable stability and sound judgment in all her activities pertain to the welfare of her native village, she was recognized as one of the leading women of the community. She was teacher of a class of girls in the United Church Sunday School; a member of the Ladies' Aid, the Women's Missionary Society, Mission Circle, the Young People's League, the Women's Institute, and did remarkable work with the Red Cross during the Great War. Thoughtful, kind and generous, a helping hand she extended to all classes, by whom she will be greatly missed. The municipality paid an official tribute to the deceased seldom accorded a citizen, by requesting that all places of business be closed during the funeral. The service was conducted at the house on Tuesday, Rev. E. Lawson officiating, assisted by Rev.'s H. Cameron, Ottawa; J. A. Waddell, Winchester, and J. Burkholder, Morrisburg. The remains were laid to rest in the family plot, Fairview cemetery. The floral tributes were very numerous and beautiful, occupying three cars at the head of the funeral procession.

The late Mrs. Challies is survived by her husband, her mother and one sister, Mrs. Robert Montgomery, Los Angeles.

The Greatest Obstacles To Health

By W. W. Bauer in "Hygeia"

I am not a psychologist, but my business as health officer of a growing city gives me opportunity to observe psychological phenomena as they affect health. So many problems of physical health are complicated by mental reactions that it seems worth while to relate a few instances I have encountered and to consider what lies back of the actions in the minds of the persons involved.

We all know persons who refuse to go to a physician, bearing semi-invalidism with a greater or less degree of stoicism, because of a fear of what the doctor will find. Ask any of these persons if they do not realize that neglect may make matters worse and they usually asknowledge that they do. I know one man who spent years suffering from a distressing stomach ailment, taking soda literally by the barrel; he was firmly convinced that he had an ulcer but feared confirmation of the diagnosis. At last he was forced to seek relief and found that his stomach, so far from having an excess of acid, had practically none. A few drops of acid with his meal made him well. He never had an ulcer, though he might as well have had, for he suffered from one mentally for years.

He'll Die Before He'll be Operated on

There is the person who is so impressed with the occasional fatality accompanying surgery that he will die before he will submit to an operation. And he does. It is the same frame of mind that keeps many from availing themselves, for their children, of the modern means of preventing diphtheria, or even causes them to refuse antitoxin for its cure in cases in which death is inevitable without it. They have heard of some bad results, and they are not going to take any chances. Most of these people have never seen any of the things they fear nor have they authentic proof of them; they are basing their opinions on word of mouth rumors. They might not credit gossip that their next-door neighbor was a thief, but they believe whatever they hear about health except what comes from authoritative sources. These people are ruled by their fears.

Whatever It is, He's "Agin" It

Another type of mental reaction is represented by persons whom a friend of mine calls the "aginits". They are against everything. Tell them about the importance of supervising the health of well babies to keep them well. They are "agin" it. Recommend an annual physical examination as a health measure. They are "agin" that. Try to persuade them of the truth of any of the well founded and universally accepted health facts of today and see how much impression you can make on their adamantine opposition. Of course there are persons who are honestly opposed to things. Such people have reasons which, however mistaken they may be, are nevertheless reasons until they are overcome. But the chronic "anti" is just "anti", and that's that. He hasn't any reasons; he doesn't need any. He won't, because he won't. Nobody is going to tell him what to do!

When Optimism Becomes Dangerous

Optimism is admittedly an excellent characteristic, in its proper place and in reasonable amount. When applied to health it may become dangerous. I was talking to a father of four children during a serious outbreak of smallpox in 1925. None of his family, himself included, had ever been vaccinated, though he was not opposed to having them so treated. He was perfectly confident that his home would escape and laughingly put off the precaution.

The emotional attitude toward health matters is perhaps the most common of all, especially when children are concerned. We observe it constantly in our clinical work. It is especially unfortunate because it has such a profound influence on children's reactions. It is exemplified by the mother who wishes her children to have diphtheria prevention but who cannot bear to see them stuck with a needle. She lets the children see her feeling. It is only natural for them to conclude that something is about to happen to them of which they may well be afraid. Often it is evident that the simple treatments have been discussed at home in the presence of the children, who come with firmly fixed ideas that something dreadful is about to happen. The only result is a scene, sometimes a struggle, and the child departs needlessly upset, frightened beyond reason, and magnifying a little hurt into a big fear.

Parent Assumes Child Will Be Frightened

Another manifestation of exaggerated timidity on the part of the parent is the assumption that the child will be frightened. This results in premature efforts to allay a fear that does not exist and promptly creates the very result it was intended to avoid. Some parents will falsely assure the child that nothing is done except to look at them. Unless the doctor is wise enough to make this false statement a truth by postponing everything except a look, the child's confidence of his parents is destroyed. Their mistaken course merely necessitates another trip to the doctor.

Most of these attitudes toward children are based on a mistaken conception of how much they understand and remember. Over and over again, when I have tried to call the attention of apparently intelligent mothers to this, they have assured me that the little one did not really comprehend. They know better than that, for they have all been scandalized by having a child repeat remarks in company that were intended only for the family circle. The capacity of our children for absorbing and retaining impressions is much greater than we usually credit it to be.

I have written thus frankly about these various attitudes of mind not because they are amusing, though sometimes they are, but because I conceive them to be the greatest obstacles to progress in individual and public health. I think that public health in the future depends no more on the further dissemination of health knowledge than on the conquest of these mental reservations, antagonisms and inhibitions. They affect many persons, not only individually but through contact. They spread like the contagious diseases. Each is likely to be the centre of influence of a group. Sometimes these groups crystallize into organizations and employ all the modern methods of publicizing their point of view. They are, in the last analysis, responsible for the continued existence of plagues, like diphtheria and smallpox, for which we hold in our hands the weapons of annihilation.

MANY PLAN HAVE COVERED RINKS

If all the places that are mentioned as ambitious to have a covered rink succeed in their enterprises, Eastern Ontario will soon be well supplied with covered rinks. The places now on the list for rinks next season are Morrisburg, Iroquois, Prescott, Kemptville, Brinston, South Mountain, Vernon and Inkerman will probably be next on the list.

Every woman should follow my example and take 'Fruit-a-tives,' and they would surely get the wonderful relief that I did." Try it. Your dealer has this wonderful fruit medicine—25c. and 50c. a box.

Railway Reaches Hudson Bay

Historic in its importance, Manitoba's seaport, Port Churchill, terminus of the Hudson Bay Railway, was linked by rail to the outside Good Friday when the track-laying crews, which have battled against adverse weather conditions during the long months of winter, reached their objective.

"Steel reached Churchill to-day," was the message received in Winnipeg Saturday over the telegraph line which recently opened communication with the far nothern port via The Pass to Winnipeg.

Announcement of completion of steel to Churchill was made by H. A. Dixon, chief engineer, western division, Canadian National Railway.

From now until frost releases its grip on the muskegs of the north, there will be a rush of traffic over the line to Hudson Bay. On every available siding north of The Pas, railway cars loaded with supplies are now waiting to be rushed to the new terminus of the new Canadian commercial route.

Once frost loosens the muskeg, whole sections of existing railway may disappear. Work was rushed to take advantage of the frozen muskegs. In August or September, it is expected that the road will be ready for permanent service and at that time Senator George P. Graham, who turned the first sod, will drive the last spike.

A NIGHT IN THE ARK

"Have we passed the boundary yet, Frank?" John Ledger asked, lifting his paddle from the water for a moment and gazing at the blurred line of horizon on the left.

"Yes, we must have," Frank Howell replied, "for the ferryman said it was only a mile ahead, and we've paddled a good two miles, or I'm a mighty poor guesser."

"You're a poor planner," his companion grumbled, "or we'd have stayed there where it was warm and comfortable instead of sloshing along through this storm, with the prospect of sleeping in a three-inch puddle of rainwater."

"We'll find a lodging place, don't you worry, and it'll be in the good, old United States. Aren't you sick of foreign parts? I am."

"Canada isn't foreign enough to make me despise a warm bed and a good supper. I vow, I believe this country is deserted!"

"No! See that light?"

Without warning, a narrow gap had appeared in the bluffs that bordered the lake. It marked the entrance to a small bay, out from the shore of which stood a building, with two windows that were giving forth a cheerful glow. It seemed a queer place for a house; but if people chose to imitate the ancient lake dwellers and build their houses over the water, travelers whose sole quest was food and shelter had no right to complain.

The thickening darkness and the rain blotted out most of the landscape; but the young men managed to get the canoe through the narrow channel that led to the bay. The water was evidently shallow, and in rough weather would no doubt be dangerous; but now the falling raindrops pelted it to oily smoothness.

"This must be that fisherman's resort the ferryman told us about," said Frank. "He said they ran a store and hotel combined."

"And he also said that he couldn't recommend the place. He knew a lot about it that he wouldn't tell. However, that won't stop me from going there tonight. They've got to take us in where its warm whether they want to or not."

Young Howell said nothing, but fixed his eyes on the structure, which stood two or three rods from the shore of the small bay and which seemed actually to extend down into the water. As they slowly skirted the house, looking for a landing place, they saw that the lower course was of planks nailed vertically. The two young fellows had paddled and sailed more than a thousand miles that summer, following most of the time the borders of the Great Lakes, but in all of their journeying they had found nothing that was quite so queer as this.

"It's an old pier warehouse, made over," said John. "See, there are piles in a broken row to landward. Let's get around on that side."

As the canoe made the turn, John produced a flash light and threw the glare on the building. Instantly there sprang into view an ancient weather-beaten sign that read:

THE ARK
Fisherman's Rest. Good Board.
Bait and Tackle for Sale.

The sign was on the landward side, where also was the only entrance to the structure—a broad door above a floating landing stage that seemed to the boys to be hinged to the building.

Suddenly the door opened just enough for a heavily bearded man to thrust his head out a few inches.

"What are you doing with that light?" the man shouted. "These are private waters! Don't you know that?"

"We were just trying to find out how to knock at your door," said Frank; "we couldn't see it in the dark. We're wet and hungry and want a place to stay overnight."

"We don't keep anyone here," said the man.

He had started to close the door, when a woman appeared behind him, carrying a lamp with a reflector. She was taller than the man and apparently more fearless, for in spite of his restraining she threw the door wide open and stepped squarely into the opening, holding the lamp high and looking at the boys in the canoe.

"They're nothing to be scared at," they heard her say in a low voice to her companion, who kept out of sight. "They're students or youngsters. Well," she added in a louder tone, "what's your business, and how do you happen to be here this kind of a night?"

"We're on a canoe trip," Frank explained, "and want a place to stay in and something to eat. We haven't a tent."

"Why didn't you stay back at the ferryhouse?"

"I wanted to sleep in the United States. We've been more than a month in Canada, you see; and, besides, it wasn't raining nearly so hard then. We're willing to pay you for taking us in."

Frank's manner was igratiating, and the woman seemed impressed by it. She turned and said something to the man, who replied in a hoarse growl. "I cant give you a very good meal. I'm afraid," she finally said to the boys. "There's not much in the pl[illegible]"

"Oh, anything will do; we're not particular. What we need most is a roof over us; we're soaked, and we want a chance to dry off."

"I'll have to charge you a couple of dollars apiece."

"That's cheaper than staying out here and getting pneumonia. Shall we pull the canoe up on this landing?" asked John, taking hold of the bow.

"No," the man commanded, pushing his way to the front. "Tie it to that ring on the side, there."

"But it'll rub," John protested.

"No, it won't; the wind will keep it off. If I had my way," he added grumblingly, "you'd be on about your business."

After making the canoe fast, the young men picked up their sleeping bags, which served as waterproof portmanteaus during the day, and entered the building.

The main room on the lower floor was lined with unpainted pine boards and contained a counter, backed by an assortment of rods and fishing tackle, and a gasoline cooking stove. A few chairs and benches completed the furnishings. The man disappeared at once into an adjoining room, where he could be heard talking to some one in an undertone. The woman fried some fish and potatoes, which she served with coffee and bread. When they had eaten, she lighted a lantern and, giving it to Frank, indicated a flight of stairs, almost as steep as a ladder, at one side of the room."

"Take your first door at your right up there," she said.

Those were the only words she had uttered since they had entered the house, although both of the campers had vainly tried to engage her in conversation. Finaly they had ceased to try.

"I've seen more genial folks," John said, with a grin, as they entered the room assigned to them. "They don't believe in serving any kind words with their simple fare—but never mind."

The room was absolutely empty except for an old, four-post bed in one corner, which was very poorly supplied with blankets. John, however, after a preliminary shiver, fell asleep at once; but Frank, in spite of his weariness, was wakeful.

For a quarter of an hour or more the woman moved steadily about in the room below. Then she quietly ascended the stairs, seemed to pick up something in the hall outside and went down more slowly. This visit led Frank to remember that their door was unlocked, and he slipped out of bed and felt for the key, only to discover that there was not even a keyhole in the door. He turned the knob, but the door refused to open. Evidently when the woman had paused for a second in the little corridor she had quietly hooked or barred the door.

Frank stood for a moment, scowling and biting his lip, and then crossed over to the bed and shook his companion.

"Wake up!" his whispered. "We're locked in!"

"Locked in?' John murmured sleepily. "Who did it?"

"Sh-h! The woman," whispered Frank. "She just came upstairs and went down."

"They're afraid of us. That's an awful reflection on our looks, Frank; and to-morrow, when I've had my sleep out, Im going to resent it. Now, however,—Aw-w-w!"—he yawned prodigiously,—"you'd better come to bed."

"Wholly unimpressed by the occurrence, John turned over and in a few seconds was sleeping soundly again. Frank seated himself on the side of the bed to consider the situation. He soon began to nod, however, and was about to disregard his fears and lie down, when a peculiar creaking sound attracted his attention. It resembled the squeak of an unoiled winch and seemed to come from the side wall of the structure directly below them. But Frank did not stop to wonder what it was.

Two steps carried him to a window, from which he peered cautiously in all directions. The darkness was so intense that at first he could see almost nothing, but when he thrust his head outside, after a few moments, and looked down he made a singular discovery.

The floating landing or wharf was being raised by some mechanical contrivance apparently worked by a crank from within the house. Slowly rising on its hinges, it left the water and came to an upright position against the side of the building, and then slid upward for several feet until it stopped at a height that completely blocked the door and the two windows on that side.

Presently he heard the creak of oars and saw a boat shoot directly beneath the upturned landing stage. The boat, which contained two or three men, disappeared toward the open lake.

After that Frank heard nothing more. He was so tired that at last he had to lie down. But it seemed to him that he had no more than fallen asleep when he was roused by loud voices outside and downstairs. Starting up, he saw a glare of light reflected on the wall from the open window. John also awoke, and both of them sprang from the bed almost at the same time.

"Put down that stage and let us in!" someone was shouting outside. "Be quick about it!"

"Clear out, you robbers, or you'll get a charge of buckshot!" came from inside the house.

Hurrying to the window, the boys saw outside a motor boat, with a huge gasoline flare mounted in the bow. The whole front of the building was brightly illuminated. One of the men in the boat spied John and Frank at the window and called to them:

"You fellows up there, come down and lower that staging! Do you hear? Come down and lower it!"

"We can't; we're locked in our room," Frank replied.

The man, who was apparently the leader, turned at once from the boys to one of his men.

"Chop out those chains!" he ordered. "Stand up and take an axe to them. Joe! Chop them out!"

"I tell you to keep back if you want a whole hide!" roared the man inside the house.

The boat shot forward until the bow almost touched one end of the staging, and the man called Joe sprang up, with axe in hand, and waited.

"Sheer off! Sheer off!" the proprietor of The Ark cried; but the next instant the first blow of the axe bit into the planks.

A gunshot crashed out, and the flare tumbled backward into the boat. Apparently the man had aimed at the light rather than at any of the men in the craft; but the effect was startling. For a second or two there was a chorus of angry outcries amid almost complete darkness; then the gasoline, escaping from the broken tube, ignited, and the boat burst into flame from stem to tern. Unable to endure the heat or fight the fire effectively, the men leaped overboard and swam toward th shore. One of them, apparently not so good a swimmer as his companions, dropped behind and finally perched himself on top of the nearest pile.

"Downstairs an angry dispute was in progress.

"What did you do that for?" the boys heard the woman exclaim. "Now we're in trouble for certain! You had no business to do that."

Her companion evidently was frightened, but he kept saying, "I showed 'em I wasn't bluffing." Then at last he whined, "I didn't think what I was doing, Jule; I didn't mean to pull the trigger!"

"You'll have plenty of time to think in jail," was the retort.

"Well, wouldn't we have gone there anyhow?"

"Not if you'd stood 'em off till I could fix things," replied the woman. "Now get busy and help me!"

The sound of shifting furniture came up through the floor, and Frank had got down on his knees in order to listen when an exclamation from John brought him quickly to his feet.

"That boat's drifting right under here!" John cried.

It was true. With flame rising ten feet above it, the little craft, drawn by the current, was floating between two piles straight beneath the ark!

"Fend off the boat, or we'll all burn up!" Frank shouted, but for a minute or two the couple below paid no heed to his cries, if they heard him.

Then the man shouted, and a cupboard or some other heavy article of furniture went over with a crash. For a minute or two the boys heard sounds of frantic scurrying: then the winch began to creak, and the landing stage descended with a splash into the water. No sooner had it fallen than the man and the woman ran out upon it; the man began hurriedly to unfasten the boys' canoe, with the plain intention of escaping in it.

"Here, let us out!" John called. "You locked us in; and you know the building's on fire!"

"I can't get to the stairs!" the woman shouted over her shoulder. "You'll have to jump into the bay!" As she spoke she sprang into the canoe after the man, and the craft shot away in the direction of the opposite shore.

Meanwhile, the men who had reached the shore, had procured a rowboat from some quarter and started in pursuit; but, seeing the boys' predicament, they stopped rowing and turned back.

"Stand on the sill and jump for all you're worth!" one of them called. "We'll pick you up!"

From below came the sound of crackling, accompanied by explosions heavy enough to shake the entire building. Smoke was oozing slowly into the room through at least a dozen crevices.

"We'll be roasting here in five minutes," said John, "but we've got to put some of our clothes on."

Dressed only in shirt and trousers, one after the other jumped with all his strength from the window, barely clearing the staging below. The men quickly seized them and pulled them aboard.

"Now, what were you fellows doing there?" the leader asked.

The boys saw that he wore the uniform of a revenue officer. They explained and finally convinced him they were not smugglers, as he had at first believed.

Meanwhile, under cover of darkness, the man and woman in the canoe had made their escape. The Ark was now blazing furiously and continued to burn until shattered by an explosion more violent than any that preceded it, after which most of the blazing timbers were quenched by falling into the bay. The revenue men believed that a store of brandy had caused the explosions, although it was probable that there had been a good deal of gasoline and possibly some gunpowder in the building.

"Old Jeff Provo," said the leader, "while pretending to run a fisherman's resort, has been smuggling brandy and drugs for years, but we've never been able to trail a party here till to-night. The weather just suited us. It will be interesting to look over those ruins when the fire burns out; he's fooled us a dozen times but I know he hid the stuff somewhere about the place."

At dawn the boys set off on foot round the bay and recovered their canoe, which was drawn up on the shore near the head. Coming back, they found the officers rowing round the wreckage.

"See here," one of them called, beckoning with his hand, "half of those piles under The Ark are bored out down to the water level! There's where old Jeff hid the stuff, and that's one reason why it took fire so quickly. I'd like to know how he covered the holes at the top so that we couldn't find them, but probably we'll never know. He won't tell if we catch him; and he'll keep away if he can. Anyhow, the fire has put the place out of business for good and all."

Frank and John were pretty well put "out of business," too, but fortunately they had money enough to buy coats, shoes and hats and pay their fare home from the nearest railway station. They learned later that Provo was subsequently caught and sentenced to a long term in jail. His wife went free.

"When are you going to pay your board?"

"I didn't know I had to," he said. "I thought I was working it out."
