HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.
No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.
Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Osnabruck Farmers In Auto Crash

Two cars were very much damaged Saturday night about eleven o'clock two miles south of Finch when a car driven by Roy Rupert in which were his wife and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Hezekiah Gallinger, was struck by a southbound car in which were Mr. and Mrs. George Moak, who live about a mile west of Newington, the mishap occurring within sight of Mr. Rupert's residence. Mrs. Moak was slightly injured with slight cuts and bruises and was taken to her home by Dr. McLeod of Finch who had been summoned to the scene of the wreck.

Mr. Rupert was on his way home from Cornwall, while the Moaks were returning from Finch. The road is straight and clear approaching the point where the cars struck with the exception that heaps of sand, for road repairs are strung along the shoulder of the road, and it is supposed that Mr. Moak when turning out to meet the other car struck more than one of the sand piles, lost control of his car by perhaps a broken radius rod and swung towards the centre of the road striking Rupert's car just behind the front wheel, crumpling the fender and running board and taking off two wheels, causing it to turn completely around and land in the ditch facing the opposite direction. Both cars were very badly damaged and it is a wonder that more than one of the occupants did not receive serious injury.

Domestic Science Course Being Well Attended

The domestic science course which commenced in the library last week and is continuing to the end of this week under the direction of Miss Cameron, sponsored by the Women's Institute is attracting a large number at each session. The demonstrations are particularly interesting to those responsible for the maintenance of the health of their households through the purchasing and preparation of food in the most approved and economical manner. The regulation of the diet through balanced meals where all the necessary elements in building and maintaining the health of the family is supplied daily has come to be the big work of the housewife of the day.

OSNABRUCK

A very sad accident happened here last Thursday when little Donnie Campbell fell from the top of the house while his grandfather was working at a new woodshed beside the house. Dr. McLeod of Finch was called and hurried the little fellow at once to the Cornwall General hospital, where a delicate operation was performed, the skull having been factured. At time of writing he is doing well and all hope for a speedy recovery.

R. McLauchlin, Kenmore

Impressive tribute to the memory of Robert MacLachlan, a life-long resident of Kenmore, was paid by a large number of relatives and friends at the funeral held Monday afternoon from his late residence to Spring Hill cemetery. A beautiful funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. H. Woodside, of St. Paul's United church.

Mr. MacLachlan was one of the best known residents in Kenmore and his death is widely mourned by his many friends in the district.

He leaves to mourn his loss besides his widow, a daughter, Mrs. Donald Darling, of Winchester; two sons, J. Knox MacLachlan of Montreal, and Dr. Glen R. MacLachlan, of Brooklyn, N.Y., and two brothers, Alex. and Donald MacLachlan, both of Carleton Place.

Ordination and Induction Rev. Nimmo at Morewood

The Presbyterian church, Morewood, was filled to capacity on Tuesday afternoon, the occasion being the ordination of Rev. Alex. Nimmo and his induction as minister to the congregations of Morewood and Russell, where he has served as student pastor for the past 18 months. The arrangements were in the capable hands of Rev. W. Burkholder, interim moderator, ably assisted by the following members of Brockville Presbytery—Rev. Dr.'s McLeod and McOdrum, Brockville; Rev. W. Merrilees, Iroquois; Rev. W. Barker, Cardinal; Rev. M. McGregor, Prescott, and Rev. A. Fowlie, Kemptville. Rev. Dr. Ross, Moderator of the Synod of Montreal and Ottawa, and Rev. Dr. Johnstone of Ottawa, were also present and took part in the solemn and impressive ceremony.

The service was opened by singing Psalm selection 89. Dr. McLeod read from the 20th chapter of II Kings; Dr. Johnstone leading in prayer. Dr. McLeod then preached an eloquent sermon from the words, "What is in Thine House," taken from the chapter he read.

Rev. Mr. Burkholder related the steps leading up to the call. The ceremony of the "Laying on of Hands" was then proceeded with, the ordination prayer being offered by Dr. Ross. Words of counsel and advice were addressed to the newly ordained minister by the Rev. Dr. McOdrum, Rev. Dr. Barker acting in a similar capacity tothe congregation.

Interesting features of the afternoon's proceedings were the presentation to the church of a beauitful baptismal bowl from the Young People and the baptism of little Margaret Elizabeth, the infant daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Nimmo. Dr. McLeod made the presentation on behalf of the Young People, Rev. Mr. Burkholder accepting same for the congregation. Dr. Johnstone administered the sacrament of baptism.

There were also present Mr. McKenzie, minister-elect of Spencerville and Oxford Mills, and Mr. Ritchie-Bell, late of Chesterville, fellow-graduates of Mr. Nimmo, and Messrs. Fulford and McLean, student-pastors of Chesterville and South Mountain, respectively.

After singing the concluding hymn Rev. Mr. Nimmo pronounced the benediction.

Oddfellows Attend Service Kemptville District No. 53

Despite the inclement weather conditions existing on Sunday afte over two hundred members of the Independent Order of Oddfellows gathered at the United church here to attend the annual divine service of Kemptville District No. 53, commemorating the 110th anniversary of the founding of the order. The parade was formed at the local lodgerooms and, headed by the Citizens' Band, marched to the church at two o'clock, where service was conducted by Rev. Bro. John MacKay, B.A., B.D., assisted by the Rev. R. E. Newman, pastor of the church. Mr. MacKay delivered a fine and inspiring address on the subject, "Let Brotherly Love Continue." The choir was composed of members of the order, representing the different lodges in the district. Special music was rendered by the local I.O.O.F. Quartette, Messrs. Geo. W. Brooks, D. C. Seymour, A. Peake, and M. Shaver. Mr. J. A. Morris presided at the organ.

Officer Jakeman Questions Chicken Thief Suspect

A great future seems to be in store for some O.A.C. grad. or other person, who can produce a breed of fowl by crossing the common variety of hens with a talking parrot and give it vocabulary enough to identify the station from which it has been stolen, as the radio announcers would possibly put it.

Yesterday morning considerable mild excitement was occasioned in town when it became known that Provincial Officer Jakeman was in town believed to be on the verge of a big clean-up in the chicken stealing racket. It all commenced when a farmer from several miles east of Chesterville landed in town around four o'clck in the morning and offered a load of hens for sale to I. Atlas. Three or four days ago Joe Featherstone, down Grantley way, had his coops raided when about fifty hens were taken, among which was a big red rooster. Joe came to town and made the fact known to Atlas, requesting that should a flock with such an outstanding bird come to his notice that Featherstone should be advised. There was a big red fellow in the lot offered yesterday morning. Atlas consulted with Constable McAvoy who placed the matter in the hands of Officer Jakeman, while the seller was detained for payment until time for the bank to open. Featherstone's boy came to town and is understood to have identified the rooster, but no arrest was made. Jakeman questioned the party offering the chickens for sale and while it is understood that the replies were not altogether satisfactory sufficient information was not elicited to warrant the man's detention. The freely expressed opinion among those who know the party is that he is being made a tool of by those doing the actual stealing, as but a short time ago the same man marketed a flock of about forty birds.

Funeral Is Held Accident Victim

Attended by many friends the funeral was held of Henry Gallagher, of Winchester Springs, who was fatally injured Thursday when the automobile in which hew as driving was struck by a C.P.R. train at Winchester station.

The funeral was held from his father's home to the Wesleyan Methodist church, where service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Leroy, assisted by Rev. D. W. Summers and Rev. W. W. Waddell. The cortege, one of the largest ever seen in the locality, and the wealth of floral tributes which banked the casket were evidence of the esteem with which Mr. Gallagher was held in the community. During the service solos were rendered by Mrs. Johnston, Miss Mason and Mr. Rennick.

In the cortege were noticed his widow, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Gallagher, Earl Gallagher, Mr. and Mrs. John Gibson, Lloyd and Hubert Gibson, Mr. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Richmond, Smiths Falls; Mr. Exford, Mr. and Mrs. W. Merkley, of Ottawa, and many others.

Pall bearers were: Lloyd Gibson, Herbert Gibson, Alvie Steele, Herbert Loucks, Joseph Steele, Dalton Coons.

Interment was made at Maple Ridge cemetery.

Peterboro Bishop Goes To Kingston

According to a despatch from Vatican City, the Right Rev. Michael Joseph O'Brien, Bishop of Peterboro, has been appointed Titular Archbishop of Amoria, and Coadjutor to the present Archbisop of Kingston., the Most Rev. Michael J. Spratt.

The appoinment will vacate the see of Peterboro, and it will mean that Most Rev. M. J. O'Brien will eventually succeed Archbishop Spratt as Archbishop of Kingston. No appointment has yet been made to succeed him at Peterboro.

Bishop O'Brien was born at Peterboro on July 29, 1874. He studied at St. Michael's College, Toronto, the Grand Seminary, Montreal, and the Canadian College, Rome. He was ordained priest in 1897, and received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Propaganda College in Rome in 1898. When he returned to Canada he was located at Peterboro, and upon death of the Right Rev. Richard O'Connor in 1913, he succeeded him as bishop of the diocese.

During the time he has served as Bishop of Peterboro he has been noted for his zeal for Catholic education, religious vocations and temperance.

His appointment is highly popular in Canadian Roman Catholic circles. Official confirmation of the change was sent to Kingston on Monday by the Papal Delegate.

New Village Park for Iroquois

Iroquois Post—The large vacant piece of Government property next to the bowling green, which for the last few years has been an eyesore to the beauty of our village, has been acquired by the local Council and converted into a village park. Small evergreen trees have been planted along the west and south sides, and a twenty-foot roadway runs all the way around the park ground. The park will also be enclosed with an appropriate fence. The ground has been laid out in four squares. Each square will have a large flower bed in the centre and at each corner of the squares shrubbery will be planted. A gravelled walk will run directly through the centre of the park. According to the plan, which was prepared by a prominent horticulturist of Toronto, a fountain is to be placed in the centre of the park.

Chicken Thieves Sentenced

Three convicted chicken thieves, Harvey and Ralph Markell and Lee Lizert, Matilda township, were arraigned before Acting County Court Judge, E. J. Reynolds in County Criminal Court, Cornwall, and were sentenced to one year definite and one year, less one day's imprisonment at the Ontario Reformatory. The prisoners were severely lectured by Judge Reynolds.

Cornwall Man Drowned While on Fishing Trip

Robert J. Raney, 22, of 445 Walter street, a lineman employed by the Bell Telephone company, was drowned in the Black River, 20 miles east of Cornwall, at 6:45 Saturday night. Raney and a companion, Frank Rothschild, were crossing the river to join two other members of a fishing party when the craft overturned. Rothschild succeeded in reaching safety through the assistance of men on shore who pushed a log out to him, but Raney attempted to right the boat, lost his grip and went under. Fishermen recovered the body 25 minutes later and artificial respiration was employed for more than an hour to no avail. The body was taken to Bert Jardine's funeral parlors, Cornwall, Saturday night.

School Trustees and Ratepayers Mix It

Fisticuffs and challenges for further bouts marked developments in the dispute between the two factions in school section No 7, Pittsburgh township, over the week end. The board of trustees recently decided to dispense with the services of A. J. Dilworth, the teacher, but many of the ratepayers have protested and wish to have Dilworth retained.

Feeling ran so high between Vincent Redmond, secretary of the board of trustees, and Thomas Allison, one of the ratepayers favoring the dismissed teacher, that they came to blows.

R. K. Campbell, chairman of the board, said he was willing to meet Dilworth any time and any place to settle the controversy in the good old-fashioned way.

Like a Woman

"She insisted hotly that, economy or no economy, she must have a new frock, and he, with equal warmth, declined to produce the cash.

"I'll never speak to you again!" she said, angrily.

"How like a woman!" he sighed. "When everything else fails, you try bribery!"

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

John Hartley, Morrisburg, was committed for trial by Magistrate John McCormick in Police Court at Morrsburg Friday on a charge of receiving stolen chickens. Evidence taken was to the effect hat Hartley had received poultry from Harvey and Ralph Markell and Lee Lizert, who were sentenced to jail for chicken thefts, in County Court at Cornwall.

Iceless Refrigeration in Cars

We have iceless refrigeration in common use for domestic purposes in the cooling machines which are to be found in many homes, but the first car to adopt this plan passed over the railways only a few days ago, carrying a cargo of fresh beef. The process of cooling is simple enough. A material kownn as silica gel. a hard, glassy substance which looks like clear quartz sand, has the property of absorbing any vapor to the extent of twenty-five per cent. of its own weight. This silica gel is placed in the car, and along with it there is an evaporator and condenser, with the vapor which is to operate. After the vapor is condensed it begins at once to evaporate, cooling the car, and this evaporation is at once absorbed by the gel. When the process has proceeded to a certain point a gas burner comes into play and heats the gel sufficiently to drive off the vapor, which is again condensed, and evaporation begins all over again. The process goes on without interruption throughout the entire journey, keeping the temperature of the car at the point desired, without any need of human intervention. If the process can compete commercially with the use of ice, it will no doubt soon make its way, and will dispense with the use of natural ice, even in the warmest weather.

MEAT A LA MARNE

Use freshly cooked or left-over veal, lamb or chicken. Mix with an equal amount of medium cream sauce (1 c. milk, 2 tbsps. butter, 2 tbsps. flour). On a deep platter make a border of mashed potato or boiled rice. Garnish the rice or potato border with butter, paprika and parsley, and pour the creamed meat inside.

He Wasn't Poorest Man Another Owned Half

Hon. Joseph Monteith is provincial treasurer for the province of Ontario and prominent in Canadian politics but for all that he is just plain "Doc" to many residents in and around the town of Stratford. And at heart this cabinet minister is a real family doctor, a man who has never kicked about being called from bed in the middle of the night even those whose accounts "for services rendered" have many times gone unpaid.

Business of the province takes up his time during the week, but on Friday night he usually manages to forget politics and he returns to his practice for the week ends.

He has had some humorous experiences while practising as a physician. He was driving his horse and buggy home from a case once when he stopped near a man working in a field. "How's crops?" he asked, casually.

"Fair tuh middle'," the farmer replied.

"Rather a bad hill you're plowing there, isn't it?"

"I know," said the man in the field. "Bad horse pullin' the plow, bad plow, bad everything."

"You talk like the poorest man in Ontario," Dr. Monteith remonstrated.

"Well, I ain't," came the response. "Another fellow owns half of this crop."

"Once," Dr. Monteith relates, "the telephone rang in the middle of the night and someone shouted over the wire, 'For heavens sake, doctor, come quick.' But they didn't give any name or address. I never did find out who it was."

Another time he was leaving a farmer's house in the early morning when a neighbor stopped him. "Tell me," she said, "is it a boy or a girl?"

"Both," said he. "A boy and a girl."

"Twins!" gasped the woman. "Say, some of you doctors ought to be shot. That's too much of a joke." The neighbor really blamed the doctor.

A political opponent of the minister is alleged to have told him that he once took a little strychnine to clear his brain.

"How soon did the effect pass off?" Dr. Monteith is reported as asking, but the man didn't seem to get the point.

All the minister's life has not been spent as a physician in Stratford, however. When graduated from the University of Toronto in 1895 he decided that he wanted to see the world and to work hard. After a few years of practising he packed up and went on a long trip. This developed into an annual event when he takes an annual pilgrimmage to some foreign point.

TOO MUCH SUNDAY SELLING

Wholesale prosecutions for alleged violation of the Lord's Day Act by Ottawa merchants will be made in Police Court this week, following great activity by Inspector Tom McLaughlin and members of the Morality squad on Sunday.

No fewer than 107 charges of illegal selling are being laid as the result of the alleged sale by retailers of cigarettes, candy, fruit and other commodities for consumption elsewhere than on the premises.

The Power of Soup

Lindsay Post—It is reported that John Parkes, serving time in the Essex County jail for theft, was on a hunger strike but that when steaming pails of vegetable soup were being carried down the corridors past his cell that he weakened and demanded more than one helping. Now why wasn't the idea thought of long ago in stimulating the appetite, and more particularly where prisoners are hunger striking. The succulent not to say tempting odors of vegetable soup are indeed powerful when one is hungry.

The Life of a Watch

How do you treat your watch? Do you fling it about as carelessly as you do your shoes; wind it only at irregular intervals whenever you happen to think of it; wear it when you are bowling, playing baseball or otherwise violently exercising; never bother to have it cleaned and oiled—and then complain bitterly when it fails to keep good time? Many people do.

Th mechanism of modern watches is so perfect that even the most commonplace watch will run along serenely for a long period without adjustment or repairs, if treated with even ordinary politeness and respect. Furthermore, its life may be prolonged to hoary old age, according to experts of the United States Bureau of Standards, if it does receive such treatment.

But no other piece of mechanism in constant use is so much neglected as the average man's watch, the Bureau finds. The owner of an automobile has it examined at frequent intervals to see if it needs attention, but a watch is permitted to run along without exciting the slightest misgivings until it finally weakens and collapses. Then, in pained astonishment, he at last rushes it to a jeweler for repairs.

As a matter of sensible precaution, a watch should be taken at regular intervals—say every six months—to a jeweler for inspection, even when it is apparently running perfectly. For when examined with a magnifying glass minute defects may be discovered that will become serious if allowed to run on. A slight injury which appears as the tiniest crack under the microscope is likely to cause no end of trouble eventually, if neglected.

Under the stress of modern life a watch must take its bumps and shocks like the rest of us, but it can at least be proteced from unnecessary strair and casualties. Here are a few suggestions offered by the Bureau of Standards experts, who examine and test thousands of watches every month:

Don't let a coat or vest containing a watch drop suddenly with a thud on the back of a chair, which may or may not be your custom of undressing. Such a shock is extremely likely to disturb the delicate mechanism. Another careless habit is to swing or drop a watch into your pocket, with an abrupt, impatient gesture—watches resent such rough treatment; they must be handled gently. Even anything so simple and necessary as a sprint for a train or bus is likely to ruffle your watch's adjustment to life.

Especially vital to the health of a watch is winding at regular intervals, preferably once a day and at about the same time. The best results are said to be obtained by winding it upon arising in the morning. The winding should be done slowly and steadily, and the action slowed as the end is approached, to avoid straining the spring.

It is a common boast nowadays that a watch will last a lifetime. But with proper care a good watch should survive, like the family silver, into the next generatin and perhaps live on to be the cherished property of your grandson.

Mullets By the Ton

Chesley Enterprise—Russell McLaughlin, of 13th con. Sullivan, and Andy Maxwell, of town, have a fresh-fish contract by which they must deliver the fish alive. They have contracted to supply seven tons of mullets at $100 a ton to a number of Yiddish folk in Toronto. Fresh-water tanks are sent by truck to Vail's Point in Sydenham township, Grey county, where mullets come up from the bay into a creek in such numbers that the water is fairly black with them. Rus and Andy and their helpers grab the fish near the gills, the least slippery party of the fish, and take them in buckets to the tanks and they are sent alive to Toronto where they are in special demand at this season by those of the Israelitish faith. There are lots of bones in the mullets as there are in suckers but taken from cold water they make fairly good eating and are a cheap food.

Better Crossing Protection Asked by Coroner's Jury

"We, the undersigned jurors, agree that Harry D. Gallagher, came to his death on May 16, 1929, from being hit by the fast express, No. 19, at the crossing east of the station at Winchester. According to the evidence we conisder his view was obstructed by the way freight on the siding, which was the cause of the accident. We recommend that ample protection be provided for the safety of the public at this crossing."

The coroner's jury brought in the above verdict after hearing the evidence taken before Dr. Peter McLaughlin, at Winchester Tuesday in connection with the death of Harry D. Gallagher, Toyes Hill farmer, who lost his life on Thursday morning last at the C.P.R. crossing at Winchester village.

Evidence was to the effect that a freight was stationed on the north or "business" siding of the C.P.R. east of Winchester station, the engine being on a curve of the track, in such a position as to obscure the view of an approaching train until a person was within a few feet of the track. The deceased had left Winchester station and turned south about 20 feet from the crossing and could not see the train coming until right on the track. His car was almost across the track when struck.

The train whistle and bell; and the electric crossing bell were going at the time of the accident. Train No. 19 was about five minutes late and was travelling about 60 miles an hour The engineer on the train saw Gallagher's car when he was about 800 feet east of the crossing, and put on the brakes but not in time to avert the accident. A strong northwest wind was blowing at the time, rendering it difficult to hear the train whistle.

There was a difference of opinion as to whether or not a person could see the express approaching from the position in which the way freight was on the siding.

Robert Kirkwood, who passed the crossing in his car just a few seconds before the fatality stated that he could not see the approaching train until he was within a few feet of the track. John Mallory and Dodds Mallory, who passed the deceased as he was leaving the station gave it as their opinion that the freight train engine was about 150 feet east of the crossing.

Donald Hummel, assistant agent of the C.P.R. at Winchester, said he did not think it necessary to have a man at the crossing to warn cars of approaching trains. Thomas Martin, the engineer on the express, gave it as his opinion that the presence of the way freight on the siding would tend to obstruct the view of an approaching train. George Miskelly, conductor on the way freight, said he did not feel his train obstructed the view of an approaching train. The crossing bell, he was positive, was ringing, as the express approached.

Making A Lawn

When one is making a new lawn it is a matter of great importance to have the soil in suitable condition. A loamy soil is best and will make a very good lawn if properly graded, the surface made even and fine, and the seed put in properly. When one has a clay soil it is necessary to see that it is well underdrained as a matter of first importance. It is good importance also to apply an inch or two of sand or black muck to the surface and have it worked into the first five inches of clay. This, of course, should be done after the grading has been accomplished. Neither black muck nor sand will grow grass without fertilizer. The presence of the clay will help but the addition of a good mixed fertilizer is well worth while. A mixture of four parts of sulphate of ammonia, three parts acid phosphate, and one part muriate of potash makes a complete fertilizer that may be applied at the rate of three hundred pounds per acre which is about one ounce to the square yard of lawn. This should be well worked in to the top soil by raking. A good lawn seed mixture is one consisting of eKntucky blue grass and White Dutch clover mixed at the rate of four to six bushels of the blue grass and from one to two pounds of the Dutch clover. This amount is sufficient to sow an acre of land. For small lawns of an area of fifty by one hundred feet, one peck of the Kentucky blue grass to a good handful of the Dutch clover is about the right amount. This should be carefully sown when there is no wind blowing, and the soil well raked and rolled. If an application of this sort is followed with a few days with a shower of rain it will be but a short time until a green sward is evident. As most surface soil conains weed seeds it is probable that there will be a considerable crop of weeds appear in the new grass. As these are as a rule mostly annual they will disappear with the frequent cuttings that will be necessary during the season. These recommendations for the making of a lawn are contained in an address delivered by Mr. M. B. Davis of the Experimental Farm at Ottawa at the annual convention of the Ontario Horticultural Association.

The "Calamity" of Too Much Food

The only bright spot on the wheat farmer's horizon is caused by the Hessian fly! If this creature causes damage enough in the mixed farming belt east of the Mississippi, the wheat farmers west of that river may yet be saved.

What a commentary on the so-called intelligence of our present social and industrial organization! Good crops are a disaster, and pests which destroy human food have become a blessing!

If there were a real surplus of wheat in the world, a really intelligent society would buy that surplus and store it against the inevitable short crop of some unknown year in the future.

A certain gentleman did that in Egypt quite a long time ago, and to expand the process to world-wide proportions ought not to be so difficult.

But, as a matter of fact, there is no surplus of wheat. There is merely lack of ability to buy wheat. Even America contains some millions of people whose diet would be richer if they could afford to make it so. This is true of a heavy majority of the people of Europe, and in China millions are starving.

Yet, under such circumstances, men are losing their homes because they have produced too much food; and savants assure us that the "system" which brings such results is so wise and delicately adjusted that it cannot be changed!

Dobbin Not Yet Through

In spite of the omnipresence of the automobile, the horse still has an economic excuse for existence. Wherever there are "short hauls" and frequent stops, it pays to use horseflesh instead of gasoline. It costs six cents a minute to keep a big auto truck on the streets of New York, and only two cents a minute to use a two-horse team that will draw nearly the same weight of freight. The milk companies of the same city have found that it costs $102,000 less a year to deliver $1,000,000 worth of milk in one-horse wagons than by automobile trucks. And with the continually increasing congestion of motor traffic Dobbin's economic advantage promises to increase rather than diminish.

Boys' Savings

Sixty-five thousands employed boys, aged from 14 to 17, who attend the continuation night schools of the state of New York, save more than $5,000,000 a year, according to a report of the Education Department. Some save 50 cents a week, some $1 and others $2, while 74 per cent. of the pupils save something regularly. The record is an encouraging sign, in that it shows that a large proportion of the rising generation are serious-minded and are following the old and proved road to success. They are learning and saving, and sacrificing time and effort to do so.

Fire Prevention

School children in Leith, North Dakota, were taught the virtues of fire prevention by the following rhyme, printed on large posters and displayed in every school room:

"There was an old woman who lived in a shoe;
Her house never burned, for she knew what to do;
She cleaned up the trash, the oil can she hid;
She kept all the matches in a jar with a lid."

Good Things to Eat

1929 PICNIC SANDWICH

Try to get away from ordinary picnic foods. Take a few of the old standbys, of course, but always have something novel.

Vary the cheese and ham sandwich with something lighter. Leave the hard-boiled eggs at home and take some fresh eggs to fry over your camp-fire embers. Here is a tasty sandwich for the next picnic:

Spread thin piece of bread with cold beans. Spread another slice with finely-minced, stuffed olives. Make a sandwich out of the two. Graham, rye or even white bread will do.

BAKED SPRING DELICACY

2 large oranges
3 cups diced rhubarb
2 cups sugar
½ teaspoon mace
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
12 whole cloves

Place all ingredients together in a casserole, using grated rind, juice and sliced pulp of oranges. Cover and bake until rhubarb is tender.

BOSTON CREAM PIE WITH ORANGE FILLING

¼ cup butter
¾ cups sugar
2 eggs
1 cup milk
2 cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt

Cream butter and sugar; add eggs and beat until light and fluffy. Add milk and fold in flour sifted with baking powder and salt. Bake in deep cake pan in a moderate oven (375 degrees) 35 minutes. When ready to serve cut in halves crosswise and fill with a filling made as follows:

½ cup sugar
3 tablespoons flour
¼ teaspoon grated orange rind
¼ cup orange juice
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Yolks of 2 eggs
1 teaspoon butter

Mix sugar, flour and grated rind. Add orange and lemon juice and beaten egg yokes. Cook in double boiler, stirring constantly, until thick. Add butter, stirring until it is melted, and cool.

CORN SOUP

1 medium can corn
1 cup boiling water
1 slice onion
1 teaspoon salt
Few grains pepper
2 cups milk
2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons butter

Rinse can with boiling water and add to corn and onion. Simmer 20 minutes. Rub through a sieve. Add mixture to 2 cups thin cream sauce (2 cups milk, 2 tablespoons flour, 2 tablespoons butter). Season and serve hot.

CAMP-FIRE APPLES

Try this on your next picnic. Wrap a nice, juicy apple in some aromatic leaves like sassafras. Encase both leaves and apple in a layer of wet clay. Deposit the whole in the embers of your fire and leave there for about twenty-five minutes.

When you take it out, the clay will break away and you will have a delicious roasted apple, the juice of which has been retained by the leaves.

CANDIED ORANGE PEEL

Put peel from 8 oranges in cold water; heat to boiling point and cook gently until very tender. Drain; put in cold water, and when cold remove membrane and soft part. Boil 1 cup sugar and ½ cup water until syrup spins a thread; put in peel and cook gently until syrup is evaporated and peel looks clear. Drain on wire cake cooler and leave in open air until thoroughly dried.

Handing Us Over Piece By Piece to Uncle Sam

Ottawa, May 22.—By the Pacific fisheries treaty negotiated by the King Government with the United States and now before parliament for approval, it is proposed to give the United States equal control with Canada in an immense territory in British Columbia. This treaty is to preserve the sockeye salmon industry, almost ruined by the United States, and would place the watershed of the Fraser river under the control of a joint international commission — three from the United States and three from Canada.

This immense area, over which the King government proposed to give the United States equal control with Canada regarding lakes, rivers and improvements thereon, is about 100,000 square miles, equal in area to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island combined, and also equal in area to that part of Ontario between Ottawa on the east, Windsor on the west, Niagara Falls on the south and Sudbury on the north. In the territory is included Canada's great Pacific port of Vancouver, which may be subjected to certain control by this international commission.

The treaty is viewed with grave suspicion by British Columbia members, as giving the United States an economic partnership in half of that province. International joint commissions have been disastrous to Canada. The St. Lawrence power diversion was secured by a Canadian commissioner joining with the American members of the International Joint commission. Fortunately that Canadian member has been retired, but not before he did irretrievable harm. The International Joint Engineering Board on the St. Lawrence development recommended the power plant on the international section be placed in the American territory. This was done by a member of the Canadian section joining with the American section.

It is felt the proposed treaty in giving the United States equal authority in Canadian territory is creating a precedent that may strike a deadly blow at Canadian independence. It is argued if this is done in British Columbia, United States partnership and control may be extended to areas in every province.

"THRIENDS"

"Are you our thriend?"

"Your what, Katharine?"

"Our thriend."

"Your friend, do you mean?"

"Yes'm."

"Why, of course, you dear child."

Marian Gray was holding in her arms the smallest of her seventeen small children of her school. The rest were huddled together round her on the grassplot on the mountain side which they had chosen for the purpose of a picnic luncheon. An utterly unexpected rain and wind storm had come up, and it was a very much frightened little picnic party, indeed, and a very much frightened little teacher that had just discovered the danger.

No one had thought of such a thing as a storm to-day. When Farmer Penney had driven his hayrack up the steep road two hours before, with the rollicking little people aboard, he had confidently predicted fair weather that would last at least twenty-four hours. Since there was nothing else to fear up here on "Old Drom"—short for Old Dromedary,—only two miles from the village, Marian had had no misgivings.

Now, after a perfect morning of fun and frolic and a delightful luncheon that they had just finished, a big smoky-looking cloud had abruptly swept round Old Drom's double-humped top and was throwing its shadow far ahead of its ragged, wind-whipped edges.

The children were apprehensive, indeed, but trustful of their young teacher; they had become suddenly quiet only because they were accustomed to being taken care of. Little Mildred Conner was crying against Marian's skirt, and Katharine Wendell had climbed confidently into her arms and had asked her question. The little girl's brown eyes were wide and solemn and searching, but they were not afraid.

Young Billy Purden was the one who had first given the alarm. He was a sturdy urchin, unscared by anything that had ever yet come into his brief life. He was standing now, looking up at the coming cloud with only boyish excitement.

"Look!" he exclaimed. "It's going to be a corker!"

It undoubtedly was to be far more than any ordinary storm. Marian's heart had leaped with fright at first sight of the big, dirty-gray mass of vapor. She knew enough of mountains storms to understand that this was no common one. It was no rolling, black thunderhead that was sweeping over and down from the towering double dome above. That would have been bad enough. But this great, raced brown thing that was stretching out upon the wind in the darkening sky above them with rapid, silent stealth, and with steam-white shreds of vapor flying before and beneath it, was a storm of another sort. It looked like some horrid, tawny wild beast that had sprung out of the woods up there, with froth upon its savage jaws, creeping forward to strike. And the little party on the small open shoulder of the mountain was defenseless.

There was no human shelter for them. There was not a house nearer than the village, which was just visible among the trees far down in the green valley. There were woods, wide stretches of them, all about, but in a terrible windstorm they might be as much a source of danger as of protection. There were rocks, great bare, gray fellows, standing upout of the earth here and there, but they offered no refuge that the girl could see. The little school-teacher's fear rose swiftly as she glanced down over the little flock all dependent on her—perhap for their very lives.

It was a thing to frighten an older and wiser head than Marian's. She was young. She felt the impulse to run and cry and cower coming up almost uncontrollable within her—the same sort of impulse that was making little Marian Conner weep so piteously into the folds of her gown. The child's fear and the growing panic of the other children were getting into her blood.

"Oh what shall we do?" she cried involuntarily.

Several little faces, peering at her suddenly, drew themselves into the distorted lines of terrified grief. One little child screamed. Part of Marian's self-control suddenly came back.

"O children!" she cried. "Don't be frightened. We—we'll find something to do!"

She had got upon her feet, still holding the little girl who had first sought her arms. She suddenly became aware that Katharine was watching her with round, brown eyes. She looked down into the clear little eyes and tried to steady herself.

"We won't be frightened: will we, Katharine?" she said quickly.

The little girl smiled. She was strangely untouched by fear. Suddenly she put her small, soft hand on Marian's chin.

"Did God really make the rain?" she asked.

Marian hugged her tight. "Bless your trusting little heart, darling!" she whispered.

She turned to look round her, with courage and determination returning. An instinctive prayer came to her lips.

A sudden advance gust of the storm stirred the branches near them. Little Katharine turned to look at the whirling leaves that leaped at its touch. Marian looked that way too. There was a small clump of staunch old oaks, the leaves of which were fluttering warningly, and the girl instantly decided that they offered the best shelter at hand.

"Here's a place just made for us!" she cried, trying to put cheer into her voice.

She had found the weeping Mildred's hand now and turned toward the woods. For an instant she faced the wild sky again. Against the now ink-black background the green foliage on Old Dromedary's double top looked pale and still and awful; but nearer at hand the storm was dipping and touching the trees. The roar of it was already rising, and branches were bending before it in a long rolling wave that was like water.

"Come!" she cried and ran forward, with the little group of children breaking and following.

They reached the side of the half dozen big trunks and huddled together again. Several of the children were whimpering now, but Marian was alert, excited but hopeful. She held little Katharine in her arms with the feeling that the child's calm assurance was the source of her own returned strength.

A sudden wonder at the faith of this baby took possession of her. Little Katharine was not old enough to question and doubt the perfect goodness of an overruling of Providence, as other people are likely to do. Marian herself had read and told to her little charges the things of religion in the daily devotional half hour allowed in the tiny country school. She was suddenly startled at the revelation of something this child possessed that she, the teacher, had not known or had forgotten. In giving perfunctory instruction in an almost conventional religion, had she had a hand in building something so real and so wonderful? It seemed a strange time and place to learn a stranger truth!

The wind was coming down upon them now. Trees were bending, and branches were thrashing above their heads. They called her thoughts back. As she looked toward the approaching tempest, her fear rose again. Darkness was coming swiftly, like a sudden falling of night Chaos seemed to be upon the woods that she could see through a rift up the mountain. Sheer physical shrinking from the terrible violence that was almost upon them made her cry out again.

"Children, lie right down on the ground!" she called. "We'll all have to lie down quick!"

But even as she was gathering the youngest in close to her, Billy Purden, who stood with boyish bravado on the outer edge of the group, shouted to her. It might have been unconsciously that he used the teacher's phrase of a moment before:

"I know a better place that was made for us. It's over there! It's rocks!"

He was pointing. Through the woods, which seemed oddly clear and open at the moment. Marian saw a low, heavy, mound-like mass of stone protruding from the ground. The side looked flat. It did seem better—far better—than the trees. But the storm was at hand. Could they reach it? Did she dare to try?

A sweeping, sucking draft came against her face, and something in it struck and stung. Leaves and bits of wood, bark and twigs were all at once in the air about her, flying past, but cutting like sleet and hail where they touched. Suddenly Marian knew that the trees would not guard them from all the flying branches that the gale must bring. She turned and caught Mildred also up in her arms and, bending her head, made a plunge toward the rocks. In an instant the wind was tearing at her skirts and at her heavy double burden; but a sudden sense of exultation, born of the thoughts she had had a moment ago, made every fibre of her young body tense to meet the strain. She shouted back to the children and staggered forward.

She covered the distance. Down behind the big, flat side of the rock she fairly fell upon the bed of moss and leaves. The two small girls still clung tightly to her. She turned to look for the others, and in they came, scuttling to shelter like chickens. As she hurriedly looked them over, counting for certainty's sake, she knew with a glad heart that all were safe.

"This is Providence, indeed, little people!" she panted. "Now lie close and hold hard, for we're going to get very wet and see some wonderful things. But we're not going to be hurt."

Then the storm came. There had been hot, fair weather for several weeks, and it seemed to Marian that the storm made up for lost time this day. It had approached slowly, the threat long enough preceding the actuality to give warning, but when it arrived it came with a rush. The little party was close down in the lee of the great, friendly stone when the really heavy wind and the first dash of big drops came; but within a few seconds the rain was falling in torrents that made the roof of leaves over them useless. Then followed a scene that will stay in the mind of every one of that little party through all their lives.

The wind came through the trees with a strong suction that drew the dead leaves up from the ground in whirling clouds and sent them in wild, disordered flight on before the frightened birds. They rode presently on the air currents, like horizontal streams, and struck against the trees with a spatter that fell back on the rock and drenched teacher and children instantly. Behind their great barrier they cowered, almost as if beaten down by the storm. But that was only the beginning, for when the storm broke in all its fury it was like nothing that any one of them had seen before.

Summer was almost gone, and everything was dry and dusty. The leaves of past seasons that lay on the forest floor were as dry as if they had been in a kiln. For the moment when the first rush of wind caught them up there were swarms of them in the air until the end. They came past where the picnic party crouched with their backs to the rock as close as they could shrink under its side, and they seemed actually to whistle through the air as they cut through it. They leaped toward the branches above, as if makikng a rush at their younger brothers up there with the playful intention to drag them down to their bed below. The raindrops intermingled with the varicolored harlequin members of this throng, at first in big spattering handfuls of water, like silver trappings of the mad roistering party; after a moment or two, however, the water broke into spray among the trees and made a fine mist that swept on past the startled watchers at a wild, driving speed and that threw a cloudlike veil over the whole scene. The wind rushed through the trees with a roar that brought awe to every heart, and it swayed and bent the branches until some of them broke off and fell crashing to the ground. Even the trunks of the great oaks swayed as the gale tore at their tops. The great fibres seemed like muscles moving to draw taut in order to resist the onslaught. The leaves on the boughs that were nearest the rock—only a dozen feet away—were the only attached ones Marian could see now through the ruck. They seemed to be almost snatched loose from their stems, and the little branches stretched themselves out in straight lines with the pull of the wind, which made their ends fairly crack like whips. The leaves rattled like the rattle of hail when a slight shift of direction caused the blast to strike them sidewise.

The light had early sunk to gloom, but there was a strange yellowing of everything, which crept through the forest almost like the lurid reflection of fire. It tinged all the flying mist, and it seemed to be staining the trunks and the ground as if with paint.

The air sucked in round the rock by which they lay helpless and almost took the breath from their lips. It brought the water so fast that it drenched heir faces, though all the little party sat with backs to the wind. It seemed to be half drowning the children and wholly blinding them; and Marian made them put their heads down between their knees and circle them with their arms, so as to fill the lungs safely. And in the slow increase of the strain big live boughs and limbs that had been holding up until now began to crack and break and go down with sounds like the firing of guns.

One great branch struck the earth beside the rock with a jar that the children felt in their feet and in the muscles of their bodies, as you would feel a blow on a loose board upon which you stood. It was so close that it was a matter of inches between some of them and death. Another big stick struck the trunk of a tree nearby so hard that it broke itself in two, and the pieces were hurled far out upon the ground beyond. A tree only a little distance away bent and bent, with its lowered crest halfway to the ground; then suddenly it seemed to loose its footing, as it were, and tipped over, and the dirt was thrown high by the upheaving roots and was turned to mud spray instantly, darkening the yellow mist in a long smudge that looked like smoke. Marian would not have seen the tree uproot had she not felt the necessity of keeping watch, with the sudden crashing going on about them.

It lasted long for such a storm. After it was over the wood was like a battlefield, with the fallen trees lying like the dead upon it. When the time came when the girl and charges, safe but drenched, dared to leave their place, they crept out to the clearing from which they had fled and found at the edge of it, where they had first taken refuge, a great oak, which had been deceptively rotten at the heart, lying prone almost across the sport where they had stopped.

It was almost an hour later that the party, clambering down the wind-washed road,—because Marian feared to have them sit or stand about in their wet garments,—met the team and three frightened men on their way to aid them.

When they were all in the wagon, packed into blankets to keep out the chill, little Katharine Wendell nestled into Marian's arms and looked up at her face with still undaunted, eager eyes.

"God did take care of us," she murmured simply.

"He did, indeed, sweetheart," answered Marian, with her heart beating with earneset thanksgiving.

"He made the rocks for us," asserted the little girl, with supreme confidence.

"And He gave us sense and the strength and the courage to reach them," added Marian bumbly.

"Then," said Katharine contentedly, "He's thriends with us, too, isn't He?"

And anyone particular prefers this finer tea.

BUILDINGS EXPLODE

Tornadoes which destroy buildings do not create their havoc by the force of the wind itself, however great that may be. The air contained in every building is continually pressing outward with a force of almost a ton to every square foot of wall surface. Of course the air outside is pressing inward with the same force, so that ordinarily the pressure is exactly equalized. But the heart of the whirling tornado is a vacuum, or nearly so. When it passes over a building the pressure of the air is suddenly removed, while that of the air within the walls remains unchanged. The result is that the building explodes, as it were. Walls and roof are blown upward and outward and to fragments in the process.
