Now that our idle rich critics, and others, have tired of criticising the new turning post, what next will they turn their attention to.

It is now John Graham Harkness, K. C., Cornwall, instead of J, C. H., County Crown Attorney. Howard is certainly passing his favors while his power lasts.

Cadet Inspection

The Annual inspection of the Winchester High School Cadets took place on Tuesday afternoon by Capt. M. Isbester, M. C., of Kingston, and was witnessed by a large number of citizens. It was an ideal afternoon, and although the boys had had very little little training, because of the unfavorable weather and damp grounds, they showed remarkable aptness to military precision and description. They were in charge of Company Leader Melvin Scott, who has as his assistants, Douglas Davidson and Arnold Barkley. After a parade from the school grounds, up St. Lawrence and Main Streets, they were put through their various exercises, which were performed in a most creditable manner and brought forth complimentary remarks. At the close the medal for the best marksman of the corps was presented to Gordon Gibson by Mr. A. Sweet, and the medal for neatness and trimness presented to Harry Rodney by Dr. McKendry, Chairman of the H. S. Board. Reeve J. H. Ross then addressed the boys briefly after which a number of guests, the officers and the teachers adjourned to the school where refreshments were served.

Election Date Changed

At a regular meeting of the Municipal Council held on Friday night last, a by-law was passed changing the date for holding the municipal elections from the first week in January to the first week in December. The nominations will be held the last Monday in November instead of the last Monday in December. In taking this action the Council felt that the change would be better, as nearly all towns and villages in Ontario have now adopted the new dates. Another by-law was put through fixing a tariff of 25c for automobiles, 15c for other vehicles and 10c for waste matter per load, sent to the Municipal dump ground. The grounds have been open for General dumping and in a coupie of years would be filled, if some regulation was not made, as the whole countryside seemed to think they had a right to dump their discarded stuff there. A new gate with cement posts will be put at the entrance, and admittance can only be had by applying to the local Constable. Considerable other business of a general nature was transacted. Mr. Frank Hogoboam was present on behalf of the Citizen's Band and wished to know ff the Council intended making the annual grant, and if they wanted the Saturday night Concerts continued. He was assured that the grant would be forthcoming and that the Saturday night concerts were to be continued for the summer months. Reeve Ross was asked to seek legal advise as to the right of outside bakers coming into Winchester and selling their bread in competition with our local bakers, and the question will be dealt with at the next meeting of Council.

The date of the Court of Revision on local assessment was fixed for Friday night, June 6th.

The matter of certain street improvements was discussed, but no definite action taken.

Billy Wilson And His Sponges

For many years, in fact up until last week, we had an idea that a "sponge" was something that was usually placed in the contemptible class. When one referred to another person as a sponge, you naturally associated that person with stinginess, meanness, closeness, one who took all and gave nothing in return. Last week we received a fine looking sponge with compliments of "Yours Sincerely, Billy Wilson," Gananoque. Now why in the world did Billy send us that sponge, and what its significance. Then we remembered that some 2000 sponges had been sent from Florida to a Mr. Wilson, Gananoque, Canada. Billy hadn't ordered any sponges, had never thought of sponges, but the dealers in Florida had received an order from someone in Canada for 2000 sponges. They lost the address, but knew Billy, or had heard of him, so they took the long chance and sent them along, and, to make a long story short, the sponges were eventually unloaded on Billy, and he in turn disposed of them to the very best advantage, after remembering some of his friends.

However, what we started out to say: our idea of a sponge has changed. To call a man a sponge is to confer a compliment. A sponge is a most useful article. It can be put in a small space. Like many girls, it can be squeezed without hurting it. It's never out of place whether wet or dry. A sponge can take in much moisture, and it can retain it for some time, and then by a little squeeze, will give out all it has, and do it willingly. The sponge Billy sent us is of fine quality. We have dedicated it to our office, and it is among the most useful articles to be found in a printing office What we esteem most is Billy's thoughtfulness, We value his friendship, and when we think of Bily we think of the open gates (not the "Gates A'jar") and the beautiful town of Gananoque and the Isles of the Majestic St. Lawrence.

A Warning

The farmer, whose mind became so lonesome by living alone in his farm house, wandered away, and was found several days later walking along the railroad track. Questioned as to the reason for his strange act, he replied that he was so tired of living alone that he thought he would take a long walk. This should be a warning to all bachelors. They may get away with their "single blessedness" for a time, but that lonesome feeling will get them sooner or later, and if they don't take a long walk they are most likely to take to drink or perhaps suicide.

Late Mrs. Thomas Irving

It was with profound sorrow that the many friends of Mrs. Thomas Irving learned of her death, which occurred on Thursday, May 1, at the home of her sister, Mrs. R. M. Keeler, with whom she resided at Prescott, Ont. It seems only a few short weeks ago that Mrs. Irving was a visitor to some of her old Winchester friends, and it is hard to realize that her bright and cheering presence will never again be present with us. Possessed of a very charming personality, Mrs. Irving made friends wherever she went and she wielded an influence for good in the commnnity. She was born in Winchester 70 years ago, a daughter of James and Nancy Brown. Over fifty years ago she married Thomas Irving.

In religion she was a Presbyterian and took an active interest in the various organizations of the church and held offices in the Womens' Missionary Society and the Ladies' Aid Society. She is survived by her husband, her only daughter, Mrs. (Dr.) Beggs, having died in England in 1923. Three sisters and one brother also survive, namely, Mrs. R. M. Keeler, of Prescott; Mrs. E. L. Shaver, of Ottawa; Mrs. E. W. Suffle, of Calgary; and Wm. Brown of Sacramento California. There is one grandson, Robert Beggs, at present attending Cambridge University. The funeral service was held in the Presbyterian Church, Prescott, on May 3rd and was conducted by Rev. Dr. Taylor, her minister, assisted by Rev. Mr. Cobourn, of the United Church. The interment took place at Maple Ridge, where Rev. Mr. Turner of Winchester assisted Rev. Dr. Taylor in the service. A large number of sorrowing friends gathered about the last resting place of one who was very dear to them in life, and whose memory will always bring kindly thoughts. There was a large collection of floral tributes.

AFTER YEARS OF EXIL

Entire Village of Swedes Recently Moved from Southern Russia to Ancestors' Home.

One of the remarkable events of the day is the exodus of the entire village of Gammal Svenskby or Old Swedish village from south Russia and its reception into Sweden.

These people who are Swedes were established on Dago, an island on the coast of Estonia, and were forced by the Russian in 1781 to emigrated to south Russia, where after many vicissitude they founded the Swedish colony of Gammal Cvenskby at Dnjepr.

The last few years of their 148 years' exile, however, have been somewhat more than they could bear, and their longing for return to Sweden has at last been realized, says a despatch from Stockholm to the Christian Science Monitor. Through the efforts and prestige of Prince Carl of Sweden the authorities in the Soviet and the Ukraine gave them permission to leave the country.

Part of the joy of departure was clouded by the low price the Soviet Government allowed them for their farms. The inhabitants had estimated the value of the farms they were leaving at 300,000 Russian rubles, but a valuation committee appointed by the Soviet set the price at 42,000 rubles, and this was the price allowed.

There is some difference of opinion as to how these inhabitants of Gammal Svenskby will support themselves in Sweden, but all agree that they will be self supporting. A bakery where the girls will produce certain kinds of bread peculiar to Ukraine has been planned.

From the time they left their Russian village till the time the Swedish Prime Minister, Arvid Lindman, greeted them on Swedish soil in Jonkoping, their temporary homes in Sweden, these people have been feted in a surprising manner. After a six days' journey across the Black Sea in a small Turkish steamer, Furizan, two days in a Rumanian third-class train to Vienna, with time for food and rest in Bucharest, Brascov and Budapest, a chance to sleep out in the railroad station in Vienna, whose halls were placed at their disposal; a meal in a German railway station; finally on August 1 they reached Sassnitz. At Tralleborg, where they first set foot on Swedish soil, Prince Carl greeted them.

The story is not complete without recording the royal reception accorded them in Hungary, Rumania and Vienna, the decorated stations and the Rumanian girls in national costume who entertained the sojourners with their singing. In Jonkoping they were met by the Prime Minister, Minister of Agriculture, Minister of Social Service, Governor Malmroth and general director and general secretary of the Red Cross, Malm and Baron Stjernstedt, respectively.

The question of Swedish citizenship, of school instruction, for old as well as young, and of employment and residence are all to be worked out by the committee on Svenskbyorna, of which Prince Carl is president.

The language of these folk is, apart from Russian, the Swedish of 150 years ago. One of the questions to be settled regarding their future is whether they shall continue to live as a group in Sweden, or be separated and absorbed in the swedish population. Only families have been kept together.

One of the treasures they were able to rescue from Russia and bring with them was their church bell, which they had formerly received as a gift from Sweden. They had to "loan" this bell, as they expressed it, to get out of Russia.

A national collection has been taken up in Sweden for the purpose of helping the Svenskbyorna to their new home in Sweden.

OLDEST CHURCH IN U.S.

Structure Erected by German Pioneers In Wilderness.

In the little county of Madison, Va., where President Hoover goes in season for trout in the mountain streams of the upper reaches of the Rapidan river, writes Mrs. Berkeley Calfee in the Washington Star, there is one of the most historically interesting spots in Virginia. This is the Hebron Lutheran church, or the "Old Lutheran Church" as it is affectionately and familiarly known, which was built in the year 1740 by the little band of Lutherans who had come from Germanna down toward Fredericksburg, where Governor Alexander Spotswood had his "enchanted castle" and his iron mines, to settle on the banks of the Robinson river and in the valley of the White Oak Run.

Pioneers these settlers were indeed, for when the Lutherans went into what is now Madison county there was literally no other white settlement between them and the Pacific ocean and Indian villages existed less than forty-six miles away. From a tradition which has come down from father to son it is said that from the old church on White Oak Run the smoke of Indian fires could be plainly seen near what is now the town of Haywood and that, like the Pilgrims of Massachusetts, these sturdy settlers went to church carrying their muskets and that some of the men were always detailed to stand guard while others worshipped, in case of a sudden Indian attack.

It is indicative of the sturdy fibre of these German settlers that no sooner had they cleared little places in the forest and built themselves plain dwelling-houses than they then set about building a house in which to worship. The church as first built was fifty feet long by twenty-six feet wide, with a small vestry room nine by eleven feet attached to the north wall just back of the pulpit. There was a door at each end and two galleries, one over each door, for the convenience of negroes who came with their masters to the service. The pulpit, following the custom of the day, was of goblet or hour-glass shape, set high against the wall with steps leading up to it.

All of the timber used in the construction of this fine old church, which has weathered the storms and changes of nearly two centuries, was got out by hand of the members.

Fund to Help Export Trade.

Encouragement of foreign trade to help wipe out Japan's annual unfavorable trade balance of about $100,000,000 is the chief aim of a special commission appointed by the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Finance and Commerce and Industry.

This group has studied the problem carefully and has made plans for a system of financial aids to exporters which is expected to be put in force soon. Under the new regulations the Government will guarantee the payment of bills owed by foreign buyers to any bona fide Japanese exporter. If the exporter does not get his money within a reasonable length of time the Government will advance this sum.

While it is anticipated that most foreign accounts will be good eventually, it is agreed that delays in payment are a great burden, especially to the small trader, and the authorities want to encourage this class of business men by such financial assistance. Efforts will be made especially to open up new fields of trade in South America.

Elastic Chimney.

A rare and somewhat alarming phenomenon has been observed at a chocolate factory on the outskirts of Paris. The tall chimney of this factory took fire and gradually leaned over other buildings until it was about two feet out of perpendicular. There was a panic in the workshops, all of which were evacuated pending the arrival of firemen and architects attached to the Prefecture of Police. The fire was promptly quenched, and then, to the general astonishment, the chimney resumed its proper position, like a tree recovering from a sudden blast of wind. An examination of the structure has shown that it is perfectly sound with the exception of a few burnt bricks, which are to be replaced. This elastic chimney, which is now fifty years old, created a similar scare some years ago, but afterwards appeared none the worse.

Hardwood Cut In Maine.

Although Maine at the present time is the greatest hardwood novelty manufacturinug state in the Union, the hardwood resources are still practically untouched.

It is conservatively estimated that Maine has available within economic haul of present transportation facilities 10,000,000,000 feet of hardwood, largely white and yellow birch, rock maple and beech. The amount annually cut is approximately 75,000,000 feet, the annual growth, estimated at one per cent, is 100,000,000 feet.

What Price Midshipmen?

An investment by the United States Government of approximately $20,000 is represented by the four-year education of a midshipman at the Naval Academy. In order that there may be some definite return from this expenditure, each midshipman is required to serve at least two years after being graduated before being eligible to resign.

Rifles Amuse Whales.

Shooting a whale with a rifle is a waste of time and ammunition. One was caught in a salmon trap at Petersburg, Alaska, and after shooting at him for a week with rifles the fishermen had to use dynamite to destroy the big fellow.

A Gallant Gentleman

General Seely's Story of an Adventurous Life: Cheating Death on Land, Sea, and in the Air; When He Nearly Killed General Botha: A Maori Idyll

By FRANK WHITAKER

"To die," said Peter Pan, "would be an awfully big adventure," to which General J. E. B. Seely no doubt replied, if he ever met Peter Pan, "Probably; but why die?"

A man who has survived apparently certain death by each of the four elements; who has been drowned and revived; fallen a distance commonly thought to be fatal, and lived; faced an enemy rifle at almost point-blank range and been spared; flown in an aeroplane with a burst petrol tank and escaped unscathed; and "over and over again on the western front found myself alone unharmed when every one of those around me had been killed or wounded"—a man who has flouted dangers like these can afford to talk like that. A charmed life? Why, the normal expectations of a cat are, as they say in the North, a 'fool to't!"

The Problem of Fear

General Seely has now told the story of his extraordinary career in "Adventure", and told it well. The book moves in a crescendo of excitement from the first page tn the last; it is curious to note how the scale of the adventuring grows as the years go by. It begins with a solitary fall down a cliff and widens and deepens, involving more and more people in a kind of arithmetical progression, until it mergest in the supreme adventure of the War itself.

As a boy General Seely often listened to the tales of his uncle, Colonel Browne, who had won the V.C. for spiking a gun at Lucknow, and who managed the family estates at Brooke, in the Isle of Wight.

It was he (says General Seely) who first set me thinking over the problem of fear. I well remember walking along the beach and reflecting that being frightened was a foolish thing, like biting one's nails; obviously it did no good. I set to work then to try to overcome this failing; and thought I have never succeeded, the constant conscious attempt has been very helpful.

It was apparently helpful not long afterwards, when a cliff at Brooke gave way uder his feet and he dropped seventy feet on to the beach, for he says his dread vanished like a flash, and he "seemed to be just happily dreaming suspended in space." Fortunately, a lot of the cliff fell too, forming a perfect cushion for his landing. He lay there for two hours and took a whole term to recover from his injuries, but the experience "proved to me that fear was foolish, and that no case, however desperate, is ever hopeless."

The Seven Eggs

His next experience was being drowned while diving for eggs. He had brought up seven, and someone else eight. That meant, of course, that he must go one better. Down he went again . . six . . seven . . and then he found that the others were several yards away. He had a moment of agony when he felt he must breathe or burst, but he overcame it and took one more stroke . . .

Then all at once the pain and agony ceased. It was as though when some great orchestra has been playing crashing and discordant sounds, suddenly the music is resolved into a beautiful major chord with every instrument in perfect tune. Then I found myself walking over a green field in glorious sunshine, with bright yellow buttercups studding the grass; in the distance church bells were ringing, and I had a sensation of complete joy and happiness. I was fished out, black in the face and unconscious, and was finally brought to by artificial respiration.

Many years later a sailor who had had his consciousness restored in the same way told him that he had gone through precisely similar sensations. So that, apparently, is what it feels like to be drowned.

The Flag on the Steeple

At Harrow this lively youngster, with the aid of a companion and a child's bow and arrow, shot a rope over the beams in the church steeple, hauled himself up from stage to stage, and tied a Union Jack to the top. His career at Cambridge was ended abruptly by a hair-raising experience with a runaway horse in Switzerland. With bridle broken it galloped for miles down a mountain track and deposited him, unconscious, with his legs dangling over a chasm two hundred feet deep. He was laid up for months with congestion of the brain. ("My dear Jack, that explains it all!" said the then Mr. Balfour twenty years afterwards, when Seely, who had been the first to leave him on the Fiscal question, told the story at a Commons dinner-party).

Next he swam out with a line to a wrecked French ship, received a gold medal, a broken rib and a punctured lung. He set off on a long sea voyage to recover his health, served as an A.B., was swept out of his cabin by a hoge wave, and saved himself only by clinging to the after-rigging as it swept past. During the same storm his companion, Tom Connolly, fell from a yard a hundred and twenty feet above the sea, clutched a swinging rope—and held on. As the ship heeled over he caught the ratlines and descended safetly to the deck! Truly miracles seemed to follow Seely wherever he went.

The Maori Princess

In New Zealand he was nearly drowned again, and then came an adventure of a more romantic kind. While swimming one day in a pool in the heart of the Maori country he encountered a lovely girl, "the most beautiful thing—animate or inanimate—that I had ever seen, like the most perfect Greek statue, with the poise of Raphael's young St. John the Baptist at Florence" and a "delicious enigmatic smile." She was the sister of the local chief.—

The rest of the story is soon told. As we wandered about the great forest finding strange birds, hot springs and occasionally the track of a wild boar, I was often with the princess—as she was called. She started to teach me Maori, including many kind and friendly words in that singularly melodious language. I can still say in Maori that "my soul is filled with respectful adoration." It was all very delicious and innocent, but difficult to see how it could end.

She gave up the Kiwi mats, and was dressed in ever-changing costumes of garlands of flowers and leaves. After a few days the chief came to see me and quite politely, but bluntly, asked me my intentions. To use the novelist's phrase, I was "torn with conflicting emotions." This girl of seventeen, though some would have described her as an untutored savage, was without doubt the most beautiful creature I had ever seen. Moreover, though she could run and jump like a gazelle, and swim like a salmon, she had the manner and bearing of a queen; thoughts and ideas of unbelievable charm and beauty.

I had often heard people make speeches about cementing the Empire with friendship and the union of hearts; here was a union of hearts if ever there was one. But for Tom, we should have married and I suppose I should have become what was termed a "Pakeha Maori." Tom had only one argument and refused to give another single word of advise. He said I should break my mother's heart.

So they parted the next day—how, General Seely tells in a charming little passage:—

I put my arm round her, and kissed her, no rubbing of noses in native fashion, but a kiss from one to the other. She burst into tears and so, I confess, did I as I jumped into the canoe and in a moment shot into the stream, under the deft blows of the twelve well-wielded paddles. Just before we rounded a bend I looked back and saw her standing hand-in-hand with her brother. She waved farewell to me and I never saw her again.

The Man Who Would Not Shoot

When the Boer War broke out General Seely, who had meanwhile joined the Yeomanry, went out in charge of a squadron, and had two of the most amazing adventures of his life. While reconnoitering a ruined Kaffir kraal he was surprised by a shout of "Hands up!" from a small party of Boers:—

I stood quite still, watching a man aiming his rifle at me. It was a clear, sunny morning, and he was within twelve yards of me. I could recognize him to-day from among a hundred others. It was no good for me to run away, because I realized that I could not be missed; so I stood still waiting for the end. Then an extraordiary thing happened. The man lowered his rifle, looked me straight in the eyes, turned round and walked away. It was said to me in explanation of this curious episode that my three troops, who had already got round the flank of this small party of the enemy, had made the man realize that he must get quickly on his horse in order to escape. But I know perfectly well from the look he gave me, and from the deliberation of his movements, that what really happened was this. He was sorry for a young Englishman thus surprised, and, out of sheer good nature, decided not to kill me.

The Horseman in the Mist

In the other adventure he himself was the man with the gun. It came to him at an advance post on the top of a high ridge, on a misty night when a party of Boers had been reported near. Suddenly a figure on horseback appeared through the mist, riding towards the outpost:—

The corporal was about to fire, but I snatched his rifle from him, whispering, "Let him come on." The mist was drifting in swathes over the hill and for a moment he was invisible; while I heard the horse advancing on the stony ground; then for a second I saw a commanding figure silhouetted against the grey mist. The corporal was so excited that he shouted to me quite loud: "Shoot, sir." The figure turned and galloped away, I fired, reloaded, and fired again; I ran forward with the corporal, but although the range was not more than fifteen yards, I had made a clean miss both times. I make this one confident claim to distinction, that I made the luckiest bad shot for the British Empire that any man has made! For the commanding figure was Botha himself! He was reconnoitring his enemy's front before making his desperate and successful attempt to break through.

It was Botha himself, years later, who told General Seely of his escape, and it was Seely who recommended the King to make Botha a lieutenant-general of the British Army. "This is the first time," the King replied, "that I have been asked to make a man a lieutenant-general for his brilliant services against us." But he made him a full general, and as the world knows, Botha lived to render invaluable service to the Empire.

Preparing for War

General Seely returned home to find himself a member of Parliament, and he devotes a large part of his book to the stormy politics of the ten years prior to the War. In a deeply interesting chapter he describes the growth of his conviction that war was inevitable, and how as soon as he became Secretery for War in 1912 he set to work with redoubled energy and secrecy to prepare for it. In his view, the historian of the future will fasten "war guilt" not on any single person, however highly placed, but on the political aspirations and policies of the contending nations: and his definition of these rival policies will be a desire by Germany to expand, a resolve by England to maintain its status quo.

In 1912 General Seely had an interview with General French with far-reaching consequences:—

He came to me and said: "Would it not be a good plan for us to invite to our manoeuvres an eminent French soldier who is likely to take a leading part in the defence of France if the war which you anticipate happens?" As always, the difficulty in preparing without inciting undue suspicion and distrust was sufficiently obvious in this case. But I decided to take the risk, and said. "Yes. Whom shall we invite?" He replied: "I think the most remarkable man in the French Army, although he is far away from being senior, is a man called Foch."

Foch's Prophecy

And so Foch was invited. When the maneouvres were over, he made this striking prophecy:—

"The armies have outgrown the brains of the people who direct them. I do not believe that there is any man living big enough to control these millions. They will stumble about, and then sit down helplessly in front of each other, thinking only of their means of communicaction to supply these vast hordes, who must eat. Your little Army, directed by my friend French, with your sea power enabling you to send them where you will, may well prove decisive if ever a conflict comes."

But before the conflict did come there were exciting events at home. The one that affected Genrral Seely most closely, of course, was the Curragh incident, for it led to his resignation. He traces the development of that unhappy business temperately, and as far as one can judge from the published documents, fairly, although the late Sir Arthur Paget would probably have differed from him on more than one point.

There was excitement to spare in those days, but it was not of the kind that appealed most to Seely's active temperament. He confesses that he grew sick of politics, and one can imagine the tightening of the lip and the squaring of the shoulders with which he heard the fateful declaration of August 4th, 1914.

Within a few days he was at the British Headquarters, "never expecting to see England again." Every day his duties took him into the British and French front lines and back to Headquarters to report personally to Sir John French what he had seen. No man saw more in those weary, confused days, when whole armies stumbled blindly over the fields of France and Death lurked round every corner. But Fate was kind to Seely. Shells and bullets encompassed him, but, in the language of the time, his name was written on none of them.

Eventually he went to Antwerp, where he found "the whole business in Winston's hands."

He dominated the whole place: the King, Ministers, soldiers, sailors. So great was his influence that I am convinced that with 20,000 British troops he could have held Antwerp against almost any onslought. . . From all I learned and all I saw, I think it very possible that had Winston not brought his naval men to Antwerp, the Belgian Field Army would not have escaped. Had Winston been vigorously supported, even thus late in the day, the Germans would have been forced to detach such large forces that their advance on Ypres would have been stayed, and might have been prevented altogether.

The Arrest of Mr. MacDonald

On General Seely's return to Headquarters one night, General French told him that "some idiot at Dunkirk" had addested Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, who had come over to visit a hospital, and asked him if he would put the matter right. He did so; "MacDonald took it very well, and after a word or two of serious protest, laughed the matter off." Later he took Mr. MacDonald up to the front line, and it was only by great good fortune that they escaped with their lives. They stumbled into the middle of a French counter-attack; shells fell all round them, their car was repeatedly hit by bullets, and finally they took refuge in a support trench, where they were nearly shot as spies! From first to last, when he reached safety covered with mud, the future Prime Minister, says General Seely, "behaved with the utmost coolness."

Eventually General Seely was given the command of the Canadian Cavalry Brigade, which he led with conspicuous gallantry and success. For their brilliant capture of Moreuil Ridge at the end of March, 1918, which saved Amiens, they received high praise from Foch and General Rawlinson, and were mentioned in the communique of the day. Soon afterwards, suffering badly from the effects of gas, Seely was ordered home.

He was one of the few non-professional soldiers who reached high rank as a combatant, and he scathingly criticizes the follies of some of his superior officers. Many avoidable disasters, he says, were caused by the failure of commanders to make personal surveys from the front line before ordering an attack, and many hardships were traceable to their attempts to apply obsolete theories to new conditions. He clearly ranked French above Haig, and symphathized with French when he was recalled.

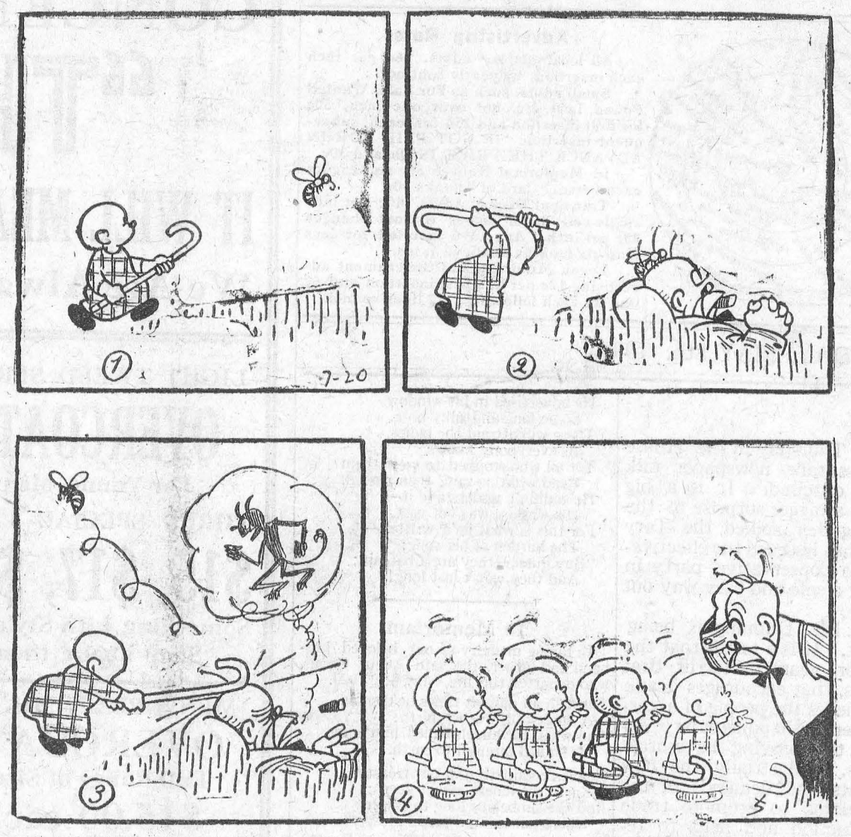
ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES—By O. Jacobsson



New Type Race

Ocean Air Mail Race Between Airship and Plane in Prospect

Rio Janeiro—An international air mail race between an airship and an airplane from Europe to Rio Janeiro is in prospect for the early days of May.

The Graf Zeppelin will leave Friedrichshafen, Germany, at a date in May to be fixed later, for her long-scheduled South American flight, carrying mail and passengers. A day later an airplane of the French Aero-Postale Company will leave Paris on the first all-air transport of mail from France to South America.

Experts here estimate that the Graf-Zeppelin will take at least 96 hours to make the distance, while the regular air mail from Paris should reach Rio in 72 hours.

The French airplane will make the first flight across the South Atlantic ocean with mail from Dakar, Senegal, to Port Natal, Brazil. Jean Mermoz, veteran French pilot who recently broke a world endurance record in a hydro-airplane ,will be at the controls, and will fly the hydro-airplane with which he made his record.

On arriving at Port Natal, the South American mail will be transferred to land plane. Mermoz will pick up the return mail for Europe, which according to schedule will arrive at Paris before the Graf Zeppelin reaches Lakehurst, N.J.

Defective Cars Cause Accidents

Owners Should be Punished A.O.A. Suggests in Review of Subject

Expressing the belief that defective cars are the cause of a large number of accidents a suggestion is made by the A.O.A., in the current issue their bulletin, that a law should be passed penalizing those who are found driving cars in this category.

"The United States at times furnish us with some fairly good examples which we might do well to follow," the artile reads. "As an instance, last year a number of the States adopted a measure stipulating that all automobiles in operation must be kept in good running order. Severe penalties were attached to this law and with a view to rigidly enforcing it a special force of police were organized recruited from men who were thoroughly familiar with cars and their inner workings.

Punish Offenders

"Every offender found operating a car which was in some way defective was taken before the courts and summarily punished. Particular attention was paid to motorists using cars with a steering wheel exhibiting too much play; a defective axle; a steering rod in bad order; bad brakes or brakes poorly adjusted; a defective speedometer, etc. In short, any fault in the car which might be the cause of an accident was considered as an infraction of this new law and the owner was punished.

"The ultimate result of this law was that eventually the highways were purged of the rickety specimens of gas wagons, a familiar sight on all roads, and which are the cause of a good percentage of the accidents which occur. The inevitable protests with which the law was greeted in some quarters at the start were rapidly changed to songs of praise as the public came to realize the wisdom of the measure.

"We ourselves might well emulate our neighbors in drafting legislation along this line. The number of accidents registered last year for which defects in cars were the cause would undoubtedly represent a substantial figure. How many motorists ever take the trouble to have their machines looked over by competent mechanics?

Suggestion for Ontario

"When can we expect our own government to emulate the example set by our neighbors and draft a law controlling the use of automobiles which are not in good running order. Such a measure is undoubtedly on the public interest and would be welcomed by all sane motorists. Surely we can never go too far in the matter of legislation delegated to make our highways safer places to drive on and any measure in this regard must receive popular acclaim."

Paris Fails At Long Skirts

Society Flock to London Workrooms With Floods of Orders

London. — London dressmakers are experiencing a boom in orders from society people such as they have never before known.

This revolution has been brought about in less than three months by the much-abused long skirt.

Paris dressmakers invented the new fashion of long skirts, and then found that they could not make them! And London dressmakers smiled pityingly.

Paris, in fact, came a cropper over making the tight-fitting bodice which the new fashion requires. The problem, however, did not worry London.

Mr. Norman Hartnell, the London designer, stated that his work-rooms are flooded with orders.

. "The new fashions have had a startling result," he said. "People who used to go to Paris are coming to London. The superior fitting in London is no doubt responsible, and I find also that English people prefer London, where eccentricity is barred to a greater extent than Paris.

England's Influence

"Paris may have lost her old ascendency but she will always have some kind of position, because she produces London's materials, decided on a year in advance.

"England has always influenced fashions in France through sport costumes. Now it seems as though we had a chance of doing it in a more general way."

A prominent leader of society fashions, who described the new long skirt as "wonderful,' 'agreed that the fashion is bringing an unprecedented influx of society business to London.

"New York dressmakers, too, are finding themselves flooded with orders that formerly went to Paris," she said.

"I have nothing but praise for the London houses. I have been able to inspect three London work-rooms. Their work is a credit to British taste and enterprise.

Silk Stockings as Life-Savers

The old, old argument about the pillion girl on the motor-cycle has taken a new turn. Some motorists have noticed that at night her silk stockings act as "reflectors," and it is claimed that collisions have been averted as the result of the warning flashed to following traffic by silk-sheathed limbs.

Silk stockings are thus appreciated on the road. They are also appreciated at the Zoo in London. The biggest of the chimpanzees there has a passion for silk stockings, and though he is rather doubtful whether they are meant to cover his arms or his legs, he is immensely pleased and proud whenever a visitor presents him with a pair.

At one time stockings were made of cloth, and one of the pioneers of the silk stocking was Queen Elizabeth. She was presented with a pair of black knitted silk stockings, and was so pleased with them that she never wore the cloth variety again.

Canada Pushes Bid for Trade In West Indies

U.S. Tariff Schedules Give Dominion New Opportunities in British Islands

Toronto.—Canada may soon be a sort of stepmother to the British West Indies. The sugestion that the Dominion assume the rights and obligations of parenthood came from the titular head of the government, Governor-General Willingdon. It was made unofficially at a public address in Toronto and has been supported since by messages from various islands of the Indies.

Canada is now connected with the Indies by a trade treaty and by a subsidized Canadian steamship service. Lord Willingdon's suggestion of political as wel as commercial ties followed his return from a tour of all the British West Indies and may have been inspired by governors of the various islands. No official negotiations are under way.

New Turn for Empire

Lord Willingdon said he hoped to see Canada take over Britain's part and have a parent's interest in the Indies. The development thus suggested would be a new turn in the evolution of the British Empire. Equal status of the dominions and motherland has been officially recognized. But to have Canada take over Britain's obligations in regard to crown colonies would be an effective demonstration to the world that equal status existed.

Two years ago there was some agitation in British Guiana for annexation to Canada. The movement never reached serious proportions, but it pleased Canada. It was taken as a compliment, even though it was realized that such a union was impracticable.

Trade Ties Strengthened

Whether or not political ties are formed between Canada and the Indies, it is a safe prediction that closer trade relations will develop. Since the government steamship service connected Canada with the various colonies the trade has trebled. A new and wider trade treaty is planned. The new United States tariff has developed a friendly feeling toward Canada in the islands of the Caribbean and the Dominion is planning to take full advantage of it.

Canadians are more and more going to Jamaica, the Bahamas and the other British islands instead of to Florida and California in the winter. Passenger business on the Canadian National liners is rapidly growing and as Canadians get to know the Indies the chances for closer political and commercial relations increase.

Politics and Popularity

Wickham Steed in the Review of Reviews (London): Fear of unpopularity is the beginning of political rottenness. The first care of any real national leader should be the lasting well-being, moral and spiritual no less than material, of his own fellow-countrymen. Well-being does not merely consist of bellyfuls of cheap food. It consists of healthy conditions of mental and physical life; for, without them, a people cannot do its duty to itself or to others. The best test of a national leader's fitness to lead often lies in his readiness to get himself hissed and hooted by the ignorant, the selfish and the foolish.

Why Hurry?

Truth (London): An old gentleman who was interested in working out such things once informed me that the Emperor Caracalla travelled post from York to Rome as speedily as Sir Robert Peel could go from Rome to London. His idea, I believe, was to show the amazing strides that transport had made during the last century compared with its stagnation throughout the others. I told him that the Emperor Caracalla could go from London Bridge to Charing Cross at mid-day very much more quickly than I can. At the present rate of increase among motor vehicles that congest all the roads, the same truth will probably apply to ever-increasing distances as time goes on.

Britain's Financial Problem

Nation and Athenaeum (London): Although the immediate problem is to find the cash to pay our bills, the fundamental problem is to stimulate the productive activity which provides the ultimate sources of revenue. On the narrowest view this is so. Even a cow must be well fed if she is to yield her full quota of milk. And incomparably more essential, on the broadest grounds, is at present the wise husbanding of our national resources. Our most vital need it to encourage industry, expand production and increase employment.

THE BUDGET.

The Dunning budget brought down last Thursday in the House of Commons has caused a lot of talk, business talk, newspaper talk and political talk, but it has not been much critcised. It is a big surprise, a surprise even to the Liberals, but a bigger surprise to the Conservatives. While it may not have altogether spiked the Tory guns, it has dampened their ammunition, it has lessened the effectiveness of their fire, it has, in a sense, placed the Conservative party in "No Man's Land" and they are now seeking a safe and easy way out of a difficult situation.

That the new tarriff announced by Hon. Mr. Dunning, is being favourably received there can be little doubt. It is a tarriff that the Conservative party has been advocating for years, a tarriff that means protection to the agricultural interests, that encourages trade within the Empire, and to a small extent relieves the people of a ceramount of taxation. It also shows that, even with unnecessary extravagance, the balance sheet is encouraging, thus proving the resorcefulness and industry of the Canadian people. Industrially the new budget seems to be meeting the requirements and demands of the Canadian people. Economically it is calculated to promote trade within the Empire, to encourage home production and help to reduce the cost of living. Politically it is a Liberal somersault that has upset the Conservative critic.

For the people as a whole it may prove a good thing. We all hope that it shall. It is announced that the present trades arrangement with New Zealand will terminate next October, and that the duty on butter coming to Canada will be increased. This may or may not prove a blessing but it is what the Conservative party have been demanding for the past twelve months, and was one of the outstanding planks is Mr. Bennett's platform. The Conservatives say it was a shabby trick for the King Government to steal that plank and place it in their own platform, but what can they do about it. He is a wise man who can see something worth imitating or adopting in an enemy's campaign. That is how the allied armies won the war from Germany, and that is how Germany was able to continue as long as she did.

Anyway, the budget is pronounced on all sidess, a progressive and economical one. It is called by many ,an election budget, and that means that before many months there will be a Dominion Election. No doubt it does, and before the snow flies again there will be a new parliament at Ottawa.

OTHER WORLDS TO CONQUER.

Modern science has almost turned this old world of ours upside down. It has conquered the sea and the air. It has made possible the crossing of the north and south poles. Not only do men penetrate the earth for miles and tunnel mountains, but they invade the depth of the sea and literally crawl along the bottom of the ocean. A German genius predicts that within a short time a man will be projected through the air at a rate of 1000 miles per hour, and that air ships will cross the ocean with hundreds of passengers in less than two days.

But there is no change in nature's laws. Life, death, growth, the seasons, even human nature, love and hate, are practically the same as they were at the beginning of human life. Human genius can go so far, but there is a limit, and that limit after all is the most important thing in nature's laws. Men are very wise and can make plain many of the mysteries now hidden from the ordinary mind, but they cannot explain life, space, or time and eternity. Yes, there's a limit.

AS ONE THINKETH

"As a man thinketh, so is he," is an old proverb, but none the less applicable to individuals, to communities, to nations today. We have been hearing much about hard times, too much; money is tight, collections poor, no money in circulation, too many out of employment, etc. And yet the sale of automobiles is increasing. The number of people who find time to drive on our highways is daily increasing. The standard of living is, if anything more expensive, and the demand for the latest in tropical fruits and vegetables is increasing. It is not that times are harder, or that there is less money in circulation. The trouble is that the demands are more expensive, more extravagant. "Keeping up with the Joneses" is no fairy tale in any community. It is in evidence everywhere, and that is why money is hard to collect, why so many complain, why we say that times are hard. Think it over and see if those are not just exactly the facts. Getting down to business again, living within our means, denying ourselves a few luxuries that a few years ago we never dreamed of, and settling down to work, will solve the hard times cry and the unemployment cry, quicker than any Act of Parliament.

JUST WHY?

Just why the Toronto papers are making such a fuss over the city aldermen voting themselves a raise in salary is hard for the outside observer to understand. When the members of the House of Commons increased the sessional indemnity by several thousand dollars, there was little said about it, the only real protest coming from Miss Agnes McPhail. When Premier Ferguson announced that his Cabinet Ministers, as well as himself, were entitled to more pay, the matter was accepted by the same Toronto papers that are now howling at their city aldermen because they voted themselves a raise in salary. City Aldermen, and especially in a city like Toronto, should be paid, not $1200 but $2000 per year for their services. No member of the Dominion or Provincial Parliaments do more real service in the public interests than does a member of the Toronto City Council and the latter get a pittance in comparison. The Toronto Globe, at least, has not maintained its high standard in National life by its columns of twaddle about the city salary grabbers.

WILL BE AN ELECTION

Premier King announced in the House of Commons on Tuesday that there would be an election, and at an early date, probably in July. Hon. Mr. Bennett, Conservative Leader, challenged Premier King to bring on an election, and Premier King promptly accepted the challenge and invited Mr. Bennett to confer with him with a view of bringing the present session of parliament to an early close. Now the county conventions will get busy in selecting candidates. In the new riding of Dundas-Grenville, Mr. A. C. Crsselman is the present representative. He has not been heard much of in these parts, and his only activities hereabouts have been in the interests of the Ontario Ferguson Government. Whether tbe Liberals will put a candidate in the field or not remains to be seen, but they likely will.

THE HIGHWAY TRAVELLER

The highways these days are thronged with foot travellers who are looking for a "lift.' A motorist, with plenty of room in his car for an extra passenger or so, feels ashamed if he passes by and refuses a ride to those who have to walk. Yet, that is the only safe course for him to follow. Only a few days ago a motorist near Malone, N. Y., picked up a stranger on the road as an act of kindness. His passenger demanded money, and on being refused shot the motorist dead. Similar instances have been reported from other parts of the United States and Canada during the past few years. They all go to show the danger of giving a ride to a stranger.

He advertised in his window
Some long and silky hose.
These will attract the ladies,
As everybody knows.
Yet all who stopped to view them
Read what he said, then passed.
He couldn't understand it—
His wisdom was not vast.
For this is what he'd written—
The burden of his song:
"Buy quick—they are a bargain;
And they won't last long!"

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our beloved husband and father, the late Angus Coons, who departed this life, May 6th, 1929.

Through all pain at times he'd smile,
A smile of heavenly birth;
And when the angels called him home,
He smiled farewell to earth.

Heaven retaineth now our treasure,
Earth the lonely casket keeps;
And the sunbeams long to linger,
Where our sainted father sleeps.

Slashing Attack On Churchill

By J. L. GARVIN

While the Naval Conference is still sitting in London, and while there are things of supreme importance to be saved, with it or without it, a foremost British statesman has allowed himself to make a speech which is of the deepest public disservice in every way, but especially mischievous in the tone of its references to Anglo-American relations. It is an unavoidable necessity to repudiate that speech in the name of at least five-sixths of the British people.

We write these words, and what follows ,with the greatest possible reluctance and regret. Few public men are personally so attractive to us as Mr. Churchill. We have often given him generous support, and most staunchly at times when his friends were hard to seek. He is in his fifty-sixth year, and will be sixty within those few years more which will pass like a breath. We had hoped that in present public circumstances he would play, both in Parliament and the country, a still greater part as an eloquent and intellectual statesman. Those hopes have so far been disappointed. Just now something is going wrong with his splendid powers.

The Prime Minister is conducting the naval negotiations in the name of the country and the Empire. Whatever else happens at St. James's, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald will win golden opinions for his memorable services to the all-important cause of enduring Anglo-American settlement. Yet at this delicate and critical moment, Mr. Churchill addressed a meeting and permitted himself to attack the Government and to challenge the whole spirit on whih Anglo-American friendship and co-operation depend. Firstly, the orator suggested that amongst all the delegations, British Ministers were notably exhibiting themselves as squeeable and shuffling persons, feebly surrendering British interests at every step and to everyone. In this statement there is not a particle of resemblance to the facts, whether as regards the Prime Minister himself, or Mr. Alexander, the First Lord of the Admiralty, or any one of their colleagues. It was Mr. MacDonald who said "The Navy is us."

Let us work this out. "The Simple is desirable," said Pascal, "but the simple is so hard." Like others, we have desired the simplicity of a complete Five-Power agreement. We have nevr been over-sanguine that this particular idea would be realized in any honest and effectiual manner. Anticipating the position taken up by France, we have shown how the logical pursuit of armed Security by one nation involves all neighboring nater-armaments and increasing insecurtions in the choice between full counity. The twentieth century is getting on. In the end France must disarm or Germany must rearm. The present contrast between them is more unnatural than anything ever seen before in the world The great German race, bound to become nearly twice as numerous as their Western neighbors, while second to none in brains and fibre, cannot for ever accept a Gallic suxerainty in arms which France by herself never could have established. She owes her practical ascendency to the ex-Allies and the ex-Allies and the ex-Associate who now ask her to concede something to them.

Though every year that passes will strengthen the plea, as Versailles recedes and French diplomatic connections weaken, this argument by itself is not likely to be of much present avail at St. James's. What then? It is suggested that if the "Never, Never Pact" against war were supplemented by agreement amongst the signatories to consult under American auspices in case of violation or serious menace, Grance would face some reduction of her present bristling program. "If ifs and ands . . ." What kind of agreement to consult? How much French reduction in return? These questions ought to be frankly put and answered to clear up the psychological situation and complete the efforts of the delegations to understand each other's positions whether the positions prove reconcilable or not.

Britain is ready of, course, for any extent of consultation when peace is threatened or even locally ruptured. The United States seem to us to have a great moral opportunity ,involving no practical embarrassments or entanglements. This has been shown with his usual sagacity and lucidity by Chief Justice Hughes. For the Pact is the basis. It implies every kind of mediation but prohibits resort to violence. Consultation would ensure the largest possible number of neutrals, and compel delay—just the conditions that were lacking when the wild, blind sweep to doom surged onwards in the last week of July, 1914. Can President Hoover contemplate the entry of the United States into such a guarded agreement to consult without any increased obligation to act? It is the idea of "co-operation without entanglement" that we have urged often during the last seven years. It would be wonderfully worth while to moot the idea and to ask what France would give in the way of reduced tonnage were such an arrangement possible. In business, non-committal discussions beginning with "If and if" are frequent, and usually clear the air.

The method moderates temper. There is, of course, a profound difference of mental approach between English-speaking minds and French minds. The English-speakers believe that saving common sense were the Pact affronted, would bring about consultation, even if, as now, there were no formal compact to consult. But in this, as in a thousand other contrasting ways—social and literary as well s political—French logic demands the rule, the regulation, and the protocol.

The Japanese are equally important, and have one of the greatest opportunities of wise statesmanship. In the course of their marvellous development they have brought a unique kind of fresh and continuous study to the English-speaking world. They understand it better than the French ever will—with the exception of a few brilliant and beloved French friends, such as are known to all of us, who have a genuine thought amused affection for Britain or America, or both. Japan, like Italy, does not, and cannot, want to force up naval expenses. HeHr deepest students of America and Britain know that in the English-speaking world as a whole there is more respect and liking for them than ever there was before. Why should a nation so progressive and discerning, force the United States to build more than the American people at present desire? For Japan any agreement in the general spirit of the Washington Conference is far better than no agreement.

The greatest thing to be secured, whether in the Conference or out of it, is the Anglo-American settlement. In all constructive hopes and plans for the world's peace, that is the keystone of the arch. Pull it out and the rest collapses. Every thorough student of international affairs is well aware that amongst many minds in at least three continents—not excluding South America—speculation on eventual Anglo-America discord is an unconfessed but most obstinate and pernicious influence against disarmament. Talk like Mr. Churchill's nourishes that evil thought. Until it is eradicated and extirpated—until the lingering conjecture that the two English-speaking Powers may yet be divided is absolutely given up—the best atmosphere required for the progress of a new world-spirit under President Hoover's leadership will not exist.

The Conference, whatever else happens, will have done much to create that atmosphere. The sequel must be made to ensure it even if the rigidity of the French program should compel this country to build more cruisers and destroyers than we had hitherto imagined. Even in that event, which would release us from all diplomatic entanglements in Europe, full means of friendly adjustment between the American Government and the Labor Government would be found. At the Morayshire dinner Mr. Stimson paid a generous tribute to the Prime Minister, whose patience, courtesy, and dignity have never failed.

If the Conference comes, in spite of all, to a Five-Power Agreement, which will be a real service is Disarmament and to confidence in Peace, very well and very good. For our part we would rather have an honest break-up than a false sucess. If nominal failure should be he end of it, we shall show at once how the main cause on which the whole world's hope depends can be and will be saved on lines equally bold and pratical. Meanwhile, it has been our business to tell America why Mr. Churchill's attack on the British Government at this juncture is condemned by five-sixths of the British people. It was this spirit that helped largely to damn the late Conservative regime at the polls. If the lesson has not been learned it will be reveated with additions.—Montreal Standard.

Australian Finance

London Times Trade Supplement (Ind.): There seems to be some confusion of thought in regard to the financial position in Australia. It was recently stated in the House of Commons, in reply to a question by Mr. A. M. Samuel, that in the last ten years Australia, as a whole, has borrowed abroad, mainly in this country, but partly in America, over £50,000,000 more than she has paid in interest. The meaning of these figures is that the Commonwealth has failed to create sufficient credits in London by its exports to offset its imports, and has therefore been compelled to raise further loans to meet its annual indebtedness. Failing further loans, the exchange was bound to move against Australia and this has happened. In some quarters there has been a tendency to blame the banks, but it should be obvious that the bankers are powerless in the absence of sufficient credits. The real remedy for the present state of affairs is for Australia either to increase her exports or restrict her imports, or do both, but the fall in the price of wheat and wool has accentuated the difficulty and the withholding of stocks from sale has increased the trouble.

Roads on the Brain

London Daily Telegraph: (Cons.): Mr. Lloyd George still has roads on the brain. He sees road traffic developing until every by-road becomes a secondary road and every secondary road a broad and spacious highway. The railways he treats as a back number, their development already stationary. He still abides by his election panacea,—unlimited millions for endless roads. It is time that he also mentioned afforestation —which for half a century has been the refuge of the gravelled statesman —canals and the like; but first and last on the Liberal program is roads.

Africa Bares Copper Veins to Supply Wealth

Discovery of Red Metal in North Rhodesia Brings in Era of Civilization

By MAXWELL NORMAN

Who would associate industrial prosperity with Central Africa? Who indeed, would think of the interior of the continent, the heart of the explorer's paradise, the big-game hunter's stamping ground, as the hub of an industrial activity that would startle the world Yet it is an established fact.

Imagine a land of open forest, abounding in many varieties of big game, treversed by streams and rivers, populated sparsely by villages of savage blacks, wrapped in its entirety in ignorance and bound by ties of a superstition bred of centuries of unenlightenment. Imagine hundreds of thousands of square miles such as this, where the only means of transport is walking, and that on narrow paths worn smooth by the constant tread of naked feet.

Spirit of Wilderness Reigns

Picture this country where the total extent of the native's world is limited to the dozen or so little villages within his immediate surroundings, where knowledge of an outside world, other countries ,oceans, cities, civilization, is simply non-existent. Imagine ever-present death lurking amid these trees, creeping on softly padded paws in the long grass around the drinking pool; the constant battle with nature, the struggle for existence, with the reality of the elements.

Then vision, in the very heart of such a country, townsites paved with streets, electricity, radio, airplanes, power plants; great smokestacks towering above the topmost branches of the forest trees; giant smelters, with their enormous reverberatory furnaces; the hum of machinery, and, in fact, all the conglomeration of modern scientific industry and mechanical invention. This offers a limited portrayal of the phenomenal development, during the last three years, of northern Rhodesia.

And the reason? Just copper. No more, no less. Metal in hundreds of millions of tons, in thousands of square miles—in fact, briefly, a field that may prove the richest and largest ever discovered in the world.

A year or two ago Northern Rhodesia was a tract of country almost unknown to the world at large.

For years after the energy and genius of Cecil John Rhodes first opened up the country it lay dormant. A few lone prospectors did a certain amount of desultory prospecting, but they were handicapped by the fact that a fair thickness of geologically recent detritus overlies the whole country hiding the rock outcrops and covering up the surface showings of potential mineral wealth.

When Progress Started

It was not until 1923 that the first of the big concession companies came into existence. The government then granted exclusive prospecting rights over 52,000 square miles of land in return for a guarantee to expend a certain sum of money in the country annually. This company brought in trained geologists and engineers and scattered them over the country, and by the end of 1926 it was realized that there were huge possibilities for wealth in minerals there.

As soon as this became apparent other companies were formed, more concessions granted, and now almost the whole of Northern Rhodesia is taken up by concessions from government of exclusive prospecting rights. Within the last few months the greatest and richest copper field in the world has been discovered.

But there are difficulties The thousands of miles which separate the country from so-called civilization means that the importation of machinery, European food and living necessities is difficult and costly.

Labor offers another problem. The native men never have worked in their lives, nor even have any of their ancestors. Their women have done all the unpleasant jobs—hoed the gardens, kept the huts in good shape, cut and carried the grass for thatching the roofs, and so on. If a family moved its habitat, all the household possessions were gathered into one bundle and the woman carried it on her head.

Tax Made Native Work

The first difficulty, then, was to make these natives work. So the government placed a "hut tax" of $2.50 on each adult male native, and this had to be paid in cash. There was only one way for them to obtain cash. They had to go to work for the white men. And then, when they began to learn to work, they learned also to covet the cheap goods of the traders.

The wages of a "raw" native amount to about $2.50 a month at the start plus his food, which costs a similar amount, for he lives almost entirely on "bunga" (corn meal porridge). But even now it is very rare for a native to work for more than six months. After that, when he has earned enough to pay his hut tax and buy some of the kaffir truck from the traders, he goes back to his village to do nothing for the rest of the year.

Then, superstition plays a large part in his everyday life. For example, among certain tribes it is considered a dire calamity for a child to cut its upper teeth first. This foretells that the child will become a witch and will kill many people. In the more distant villages and those off the beaten track of the native commissioners the only remedy is the death of the child.

Such cases illustrate the difficulty of introducing civilized law into this country, inhabited by a people who, though they have a strict code themselves, are almost incapable of appreciating the meaning of anything different

Then concidence plays a large part in the "proving" of their superstitions. I remember once my cook-boy appearing in shirt only to explain that he was unable to serve the mid-day meal owing to his having no trousers. Upon inquiry I elicited the fact that he had given his trousers, valued at four shillings to a witch doctor in the native compound in payment for some "muti," or magic medicine, that would save the life of his child. I had a look at the piccaninny, who was very far gone with a severe attack of dysentery, gave him some good medicine, and, under dire threats, made my cook go to the witch doctor and give back the muti in return for his nether garments again. After some argument he did so. The child died. I was to blame.

Look, now, at the heart of the copper belt as it is to-day. The diligence and persevrance of the pioners have discovered a number of mines with huge potential futures. There are Bwana M'Kubwá, Nkana, Roan Antelope, Chambishi, Mufulira, N'Changa, Mindóla, Baluba and several others. At each of these townsites are being laid out great power plants being erected; concentrators, shops, smelters, stores, streets, schools hospitals are under construction. Three new railroads have been laid down and put into operation and others are in process of construction. Giant steel structures, bridges, automobile roads, service stations, telephone lines , hotels, film theatres, clubs and so on are springing up everywhere. Millions of dollars are being expended annually.

The airplane is playing a large part in this development. Some 20,000 square miles of country already has ben surveyed and mapped by aerial photography and a further 60,000 square miles is being surveyed at present.

It was a memorable moment when the first airplane took off from N'Changa. Thousands of natives had flocked to the air field. They had never heard of such a thing before. Suddenly the engine burst into a roar and the machine started off across the field and in a few seconds was climbing into the air. Men shouted and women screamed. They ran helter skelter. The next day, however ,their fear was gone. They had come to accept it all as the magic of the white man.

Radio Arouses Fear

It was the same with radio. I constructed ,as a recreation ,a short wave transmitter and receiver and operated under the signal VQ2NC. It was the first one in the copper belt. The natives heard music played by instruments that even yet have never appeared in northern Rhodesia They heard concerts from Europe and once, during a test, they heard one of my own natives broadcast in their own Chinyanja language from a few miles away I was immediately dubbed an "mfiti" (wizard) and was given the name "Bwana Nsambo ya Mpepo," which means "The White Master of the Wire of the Wind." And "Nsamba ya Mpepo" Wire of the Wind) is now the standard name for radio throughout the country.

In a few years more the district will be producing more than 1,000,000,000 pounds of copper a year. But the world can absorb it. Since 1920, or roughly since the World War, statistics show that the world's consumption of copper has increased by an average of 9 per cent on each previous year's demand. This is due, not only to the rapid advancements and expansion of the electrical industry, modern scientific discoveries, and so on, but also to the fact that the population of the world is steadily increasing Especially is this so in the large cities and industrial centers where copper is used far more than in the rural and less populated areas.

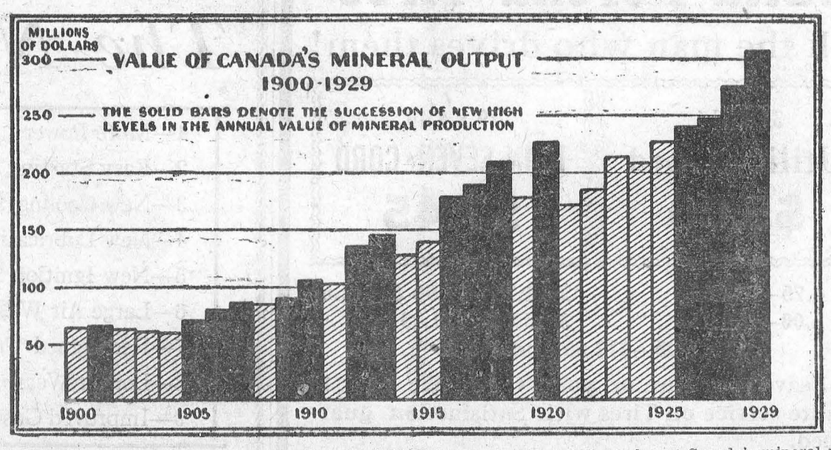
In 1928 the world's consumption of copper was 2,000,000 tons. By a very simple process of arithmetic it may easily be seen that by 1934 the world's demand for copper should reach, theoretically, 3,204,000 tons for the year.

The native is accepting civiliation. The marvels of science and invention have come, and, for a moment, surprised him. He has become, unconsciously, the operator of inexplicable wonders, but he still remains, at heart, the savage. He has welcomed the white man as the "master," and though he is learning to perform the operations required of him, he will always remain, pathetically I think, the native.

Anglo-French Co-operation

"Augur" in the Fortnightly (London): The experience of ages past and of our own time down to the present day shows that British intervention in European affairs never has been so profitable to the cause of peace and so productive of positive results ,as when exercised in agreement with our geographical neighbor, France. On the whole, we prefer the Germans, but until now Anglo-German co-operation has neither been stable nor effective; generally speaking, we like the French much less than the Germans, but Anglo-French ententes (for there have been several) have always had excellent results for this country, and the last, no doubt, saved us from falling under the economic, if not the physical, hegemony of a Prussianized Empire in Berlin.

Canada's Remarkable Advance in Mineral Production



During the thirty years embraced by the period 1900-29 inclusive, the annual value of Canada's mineral production has on no fewer than sixteen different occasions surpassed all previous marks. While the effect of the upward trend of prices must be taken into account, especially as regards the war period, this record is nevertheless a remarkable illustration of sustained growth. It stamps the mining history as a foremost force in the march of Canadian development during the twentieth century.

The sheer increase in value—from less than $65,000,000 in 1900 to well over $300,000,000 in 1929—is amply impressive in itself. But the manner in which it has been attained is no less notable. There has been a great advance in variety of output. At the opening of the century gold and coal were the only two large items of Canada's mineral production, whereas the Dominion's present-day mining industry owes its magnitude not only to coal and gold, but to copper, nickel, lead, silver, zinc, asbestos, and in short, to perhaps a wide a diversity of resources as any country affords to mining enterprise.

France Alarmed By Birth Rate

Figures of Neighboring Countries Provide Striking Comparison

Paris—The race between the stork and the reaper again monopolizes front page space in the Parisian press. The newly-published census figures for 1929 reveal that France is in the dilemma of a constantly falling birth-rate a decrease of marriage and an increasing death rate while surrounded by neighboring countries—Germany, Italy, Spain—all of whom registered tremendous increases of population in the past twelve months.

France is becoming alarmed at these figures. According to the official figures of the National Alliance for the Increase of Franch Population, deaths exceeded births in 1929 by 12,564, and it is estimated that unless something is done to check the accentuating tendency of recent years France in a few years time will be subjected to an annual loss of population of 2,000,000 or more.

The situation thus has become so serious as to make thinking Frenchmen open a cry for a "birthrate policy" on the part of the government. One reason for this lies in the Franco-Italian rivalry. Mussolini has already inaugurated a birthrate policy and the census returns show that it is working—to the extent of hundreds of thousands additional births per year.

The National Alliance report reads: "In 1929 Italy increased its population by 375,000, Germany grew by 350,000 in habitants, Spain increased to the extent of 200,000. We are being overwhelmed by our neighbors. France is really faced with a profoundly serious problem. It is about time that those in power inaugurated a real policy of births with the idea of increasing the size of the average family by making it easier to earn a living.

The St. Lawrence Waterway

R. C. Hawkin in the Contemporary (London): Who will pay for this mighty enterprise? Mr. Hoover's financial proposal was that the United States and Canada should constitute an International Board, with authority to issue waterway bonds guaranteed jointly by the United States and Canada. This would obviously place the whole project under the control of American financiers, and experience elsewhere indicates that under those conditions Canada would play a very secondary part. The alternative plan would be to recognize frankly that not only Canada, but Great Britain, is deeply interested in the scheme. England and Canada, acting together, need not ask assistance from New York bankers. They can find 50 per cent. of the money required, so that the project would be on a fifty-fifty basis.

Western Canada Tightens Liquor Control Policy

British Columbia's 3-Man Board Has Power to Fix Price of Wet Purchases

Montreal, P.Q.—Drastic changes in the operation and enforcement of British Columbia's liquor policy was revealed by Attorney General R. H. Pooley in the British Columbia Legislature. The new amendments provide for a three-man liquor board and tightening up of the present liquor act as follows:

The board will do all its own liquor purchasing. Up to the present all purchasing has gone through the government's purchasing department. The board alslo is given power to fix liquor prices, which are fixed now by the government.

Specified soldiers' clubs will be allowed to sell beer to their members under strict regulations designed to prevent others from obtaining beer in these establishments. This will legalize beer sales now proceeding unchecked in many soldiers' clubs.

Proprietary clubs, considered a leading source of illicit liquor sales, will be wiped out.

The Manitoba system of padlocking bootlegging establishments is adopted to be enforced after a second conviction for liquor sale within a year of the first conviction. Such establishments may be completely closed for twelve months, whether they are dwellings or otherwise.

Liquor advertising on billboards dodgers, leaflets and by similar means will be prohibited after January 1, 1931.

Wine makers on a small scale, who cannot afford to hold their wine long enough to mature it poprerly, will be allowed to sell it to the larger wineries, which have adequate maturing facilities. This is designed to maintain the standard of British Columbia wines.

New regulations are provided to prevent any persons from using another person's liquor permit to obtain liquor at government stores.

Under the new regulations, any person under twenty-one years who makes application for a liquor permit, or is found without lawful excuse in a licensed club or beer parlor will be guilty of an offense against the act.

Another clause provides that when liquor is transported illegally the automobile, boat or other conveyance will be forfeited to the Crown.

The new act goes into force at once.

New "Dole" Act

Britain Knows No "Paupers" In New Relief Act for Poor

London.—A system for the administration for the poor which in some respects has been in effect since the days of Queen Elizabeth went into the discard April 1, when the local government act passed by the Conservative government in 1929 went into effect.

The former poor law system has been swept away and its functions taken over by county and borough councils. The new law apparently aims to suppress "inferiority complexes" on the part of recipients of public relief, for under the new law there is a complete change of names. There are no more "paupers"; they are called "persons in receipt of help"; there are no more workhouses, but "labor institutes." Lunatics become "mental defectives"; infirmaries become "hospitals", and asylums for the insane become "mental hospitals."

There were on March 31 more than 1,000,000 persons in receipt of public relief under the poor law. Of this number more than 200,000 were in workhouses or infirmaries. The change however, has been mostly administrative and in name, and, so far, has not involved much shifting about of the recipients of relief. Last year approximately £40,895,000 was spent in England and Wales on poor law relief, as distinct from doles and unemployment insurance for the temporarily unemployed. Of this amount, £34,800,000 came from local taxes, and the balance from government grants.

Tidying Up the House

To the woman with a "tidy complex" a household careless in this respect is a constant source of irritation. She spends her time putting things straight and gathering up other people's litter.

A little thought and arrangement will suggest ways of counteracting untidy tendencies.

Books and periodicals are special offenders in this line. A small book-rack, or a pair of book supports, on a side table give room to magazines, library volumes, etc., which are otherwise left lying about. A portfolio, manufactured from two large sheets of strong cardboard, canvas or cretonne-covered is a ready-to-hand receptacle for newspapers. Another portfolio for the music, which was wont to strew the piano, disposes of that eyesore.

A roomy letter-rack placed prominently on the writing-table is a hint to the family that unanswered letters and invitation cards are better kept there than put on the mantelpiece or making an untidy heap on the blotter.

The unsightly array of bottles, glasses and other articles which usually decorate the bathroom shelf may be accommodated in a small cupboard, in which each member of the family is allotted a shelf.

The presentation of a smoker's cabinet would be a silent reminder to the chief male offender that stray pipes and tobacco pouches should have a proper home. P.H.E.

OUT OF TOWN CALLS — QUICKER AND CHEAPER THAN EVER

Mrs. Rush had her things on all ready to go out.

"I wish I knew how many yards of that curtain stuff my sister needs. I wonder if I could reach her by telephone?"

Her sister lived in a city over 80 miles away — but in just a little over a minute Mrs. Rush was talking to her and getting the details she wanted. It didn't delay her shopping trip more than two minutes and it cost her only 50 cents.

"Well, that was certainly worth while! Now I know exactly what to buy", she said as she stepped into her car to go down town.

Our facilities are now so complete that the average long distance call takes only a fraction over a minute and a half!

It is so easy to place a long distance call. Just ask for "Long Distance," and give her the distant number. If you do not know the number, "Information" will look it up. Calling by number speeds up the service.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

A CENTENARIAN

He lived about thirty miles from me, in a not very noisy farm district. I had not even heard of him until about two years ago; I at once made up my mind to go and see for myself, the results of a hundred and one years on the human body, and how the old man had managed to attain such great age.

He was sitting by an open fireplace, fully dressed, and could not have been mistaken for an invalid by even an unpracticed eye. He was chewing tobacco, calmly, utilizing the only tooth that I could see. He greeted me pleasantly, saying he was glad he was not in need of my services—in which I acquiesced with all my heart.

He said he had lived pretty much as he pleased; had eaten and drank and slept when he felt like it, and had stopped when he had enough. He had made it a point above all else, to do enough work each day to compensate for the blessings he had received; and, as in the eating and drinking, he had stopped working when he had done exactly enough; tomorrow would always provide a new day; he did not propose to do two days work in one.

What an example here of right living! Our modern man of business might add years of life and happiness, by adhering to the simple philosophy of this old man, who had proven that he knew how to live.

No, he never ate heavy suppers; he "didn't sleep good if he over-ate for supper." He believed he "relished his breakfast a leetle better than the other meals—tho he enjoyed them all. You'll laugh at me," he ventured, "but, I'd ruther have a glass of good buttermilk and three or four cookies for supper, than any of your new-fangled fixin's."

This grand old patriarch died at 102. Just got ripe, and fell off the tree! Isn't he worth thinking about? Why not? Hasn't he made of life the greatest success possible?

JESUS ACCLAIMED AS KING

Matthew 21:1-11
Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

Familiar events crowd for attention in this lesson. Some are especially spectacular, quite in contrast with the retiring life Jesus had sought to live during His public ministry. The Perean ministry was ended when the party from Galilee crossed the Jordan. At Jericho blind men were healed. Then the ascent to Jerusalem was negotiated and it is indeed a climb as personal memory can testify. Bethany was the lodging place over the Jewish Sabbath. When sundown of Saturday came a feast was given in the home of Lazarus and Martha, the sister was an active host as usual in caring for the needs of the guests. Mary made this an occasion for a most beautiful tribute to her Lord and friend, who had raised Lazarus's body from the tomb. She expended no less than the amount of 300 days' pay for an ordinary laborer as she broke her alabaster jar of ointment and anointed both the head and feet of Jesus, as He reclined at the table. Then Judas exposed his cupidity and Mary was commended for her deed as further reference was made to the approaching cross, now less than six days distant.

On Sunday morning, the first day of the week, plans were made for a special journey to Jerusalem, already thronged with multitudes from every section who had come up to the Passover. Many in Bethany seem to sense the situation and go with Him to the Holy City. They always had something for glorious memory. Two disciples found the ass and the colt as Jesus had predicted and Jesus rode in really royal state. Garments padded the back of the beast of burden and other garments were cast along the way as a carpet. With the waving of palm branches the people chanted the great Hallel, Psalms 113-117, which were especially used en route to Jerusalem by the pilgrims going up to the various feasts.

There was one minor strain in this great song. It was when Jesus first beheld the city as the procession rounded Olivet. At once His grief for the indifference of humanity was expressed as He wept over the city because it would not recognize Him as the long promised Messiah. Then onward down the slope and across the Kedron stream. A company from the city came out to meet Him, and these turned about and greatly lengthened the procession. Together they acclaimed Him king, though they did not fully sense the import of their use of Scripture as they cried "Hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed be him who cometh in the name of the Lord." For a graphic description of what may have actually taken place turn to the account in "Ben Hur." One of the incidents in fiction is the healing of the sister and mother of Ben Hur, who had been afflicted with leprosy. The faithful nurse said that Jesus would hear their cry of faith no matter how weak might be their voices. He looked, He spoke His word of power, and they were cleansed.

This Triumphal Entry, as it is called, and celebrated on Palm Sunday each year, is a great appeal to join the growing company of those who follow with Jesus in life's service. Of course there were those who shouted his praise on Sunday and who cried "Crucify Him" on the following Friday. There were also real followers who were ready to go with Him even unto death in helping mankind. Today at least one third of the population of the world acknowledge the name of Jesus as Saviour. The subject for the Young People and Adult classes is an appeal to all of us in applying this lesson study. It is "Make Christ OUR King." First comes a definite enlistment for life and then follows a life of service for His sake.

MANY BIRCH BARK CANOES FILLED WITH REDSKINS, WERE SEEN BY CARTIER AND HIS CREW IN THE EARLY MORNING. BY THE OFFER OF GIFTS, THE INDIANS WERE LURED ON BOARD THE SHIP. THEY THOUGHT THE WHITE MEN WERE VISITORS FROM ANOTHER SPHERE

THE GREAT CHIEF DONNACONA CAME TO VISIT CARTIER. HE WAS KINDLY RECEIVED AND TREATED TO BREAD AND WINE.

CARTIER THEN ENTERED THE CANOE OF DONNACONA TO RETURN THE VISIT, TAKING WITH HIM THE TWO INDIANS WHO HAD GONE WITH HIM TO FRANCE AS INTERPRETERS.

A WONDERFUL PICTURE CARTIER SAW. THE MIGHTY CLIFF GUARDING THE NOBLE RIVER, WHILE BELOW CLUSTERED THE WIGWAMS OF DONNACONA'S CITY, STADACONA—NOW THE ROCK-BUILT CITY OF QUEBEC.

The May meeting was held in the Library on Friday afternoon last with the President, Mrs. Helmer, in chair. After devotional exercises conducted by the President, a donation of $8. was voted to add to what had been already voted for prizes in the Temperance Contest. The Treasurer in giving her report said that $37. had been raised by donations to the Budget Fund. A communication was read from Mrs. Gordon advising the W. C. T. U. not to contribute money to the educational temperance fund. The Nominating Committee were instructed to bring in their report at the next meeting. The Mizpah benediction closed the meeting.

The United Church

Very earnest and forceful messages were given by Rev. J. A. Waddell at Sunday's services. To the boys and girls he brought a message on the cigarette menace which he said endangered their highest welfare and moral well-being.

From Acts 2:1 he spoke on Pentecost. He said Peter and his associates went out after this experience and brought in thousands. These men needed encouragement, new light on God's word and holiness of life. Some of the results of such a baptism of the Holy Spirit were shown to be, a new life created within us, a new joy in the hearts, and a new equipment for service. Before this comes there must be a period of watching waiting upon God. It is then that His Holy Spirit will come and reveal Himself. The pastor asked: "Have we caught any of the Pentecostal fire? Do not curb enthusiasm." These men had a spirit of glorious optemism. Pentecost is only going to mean an enrichment of life as we take time to be holy and to seek that power that God alone can give us.

Josh. 24:15 was the evening text and the subject was, "A Great Decision." These words of the text were uttered at a very eventful period of Israel's history. Joshua sent out this challenging message to the people of his time.

God is a necessity in the human heart. This is a personal choice. It is a glorious thing to be on the Lord's side. Temptations are sure to come but God's help is near. Yield not to temptation. In Jesus Christ we can conquer every foe. Those who are on the Lord's side are called to declare themselves. Mr. Waddell pleaded with the young people to accept Christ now.

The choir gave two pleasing anthems with Mrs. Dennis in charge after being adsent four months through illness.

Happy Reception

A reception party was given Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Dignard at the home of Mr. Isaac Marion on Tuesday evening, April 29th, in their honor, after their return from their honeymoon. The home was delightfully decorated and the tables were made beautiful with an abundant display of Roses, Lily-of-the-Valley and Violets. It was a very happy party and congratulations and best wishes were showered on the young couple. Those present on the occasion were:

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Marion, Mr. Noah Sigouin, Felix Sigouin, Jos. Marion, Miss Irene Gerard Marion, Germaine Marion and Fred Dagenois, M. Anne Sigouin and Edgar Marion, Dora Sigouin and Edgar Dagenais, Jos. Sigouin, Emile and Alonzo Dagenais, Leona Dagenais and Adeline Marion from Marionville; M. M. and Messrs Percy Lafleche, Ernest Racine, Hormidas Villeneuve, Albert Lafleche, Gilbert Lafleche, from Casselman; Mr. and Mrs. Elphige Poirier and Messrs. Leo Poirier and Albert Dagenais from Crysler; Mr. and Mrs. Peter Dignard Floyd Riddell, and Messrs. Gerald Helmer, Hector McLean, Fred Smith, Garfield McVey, Stanislas Dignard, from Winchester; Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Ferland, Aurel and Stella Dagenais, from Ottawa; M. M. and Messrs Jos Dignard and Lorenzo St. Pierre and Mr. Castonguay from Montreal; Misses Hilda Wells and R. Lea Dagenais and Mr. Barkley from Morrisburg.

The bride was dressed in light fawn georgette and black satin shoes.

New German and U. S. Cable.

In consequence of the enormous development of cable communication between Germany and America a second cable will have to be laid. The number of words cabled in 1925 amounted to 9,000,000, in 1927 to 14,600,000, in 1928 to 18,000,000, and in 1929 there will again be a great increase, says a Berlin despatch to the Christian Science Monitor.

The German-Atlantic Cable Company has decided to lay a second cable and negotiations with the Commercial Cable Company and the Western Union will soon be concluded. It will lead, like the one already existing, by the way of the Azores, and be operated by the three companies together. The new cable will have a duplex system enabling 3,000 letters to be sent a minute, while the present cable can transmit only exactly half that number.

Five separate canals with telegraphic printing machines will operate the new cable, two serving the Commercial Cable and two the Western Union. Equipment of the fifth canal for telephonic transmission is also being considered. The German company's financial share is estimated at 18,000,000 marks.

Panama Finger-Prints Aliens.

All aliens in Colon, Panama, must present themselves at the house of justice, register, have their fingerprints taken, and contribute a five-dollar-bill to the country's exchequer. Failure to register, it is said, will result in a fine of from $5 to $25 or imprisonment. United States business men do not like the idea of being invited to have their finger-prints taken, though the Panama officials say the idea is to facilitate the notification of consulates of misfortunes which might befall nationals.

Record Glider Ascent.

An unofficial altitude record for motorless plane was set by a German glider pilot recently when he soared to a height of more than 6,000 feet with no other power aiding him than rising currents of air.

The Most Economical Protection for Your Home

"Price-per-Gallon" is a very deceiving basis on which to judge the Cost of Paint. All things being equal, the Higher the Price-per-Gallon, the higher the quality—and the lower the initial or ultimate cost of paint is sure to be. Cheap "Price-per-Gallon" Paint increases the cost of painting, the cost of labor, of protection and the cost of repainting. The comparative costs are illustrated below.

LOWE BROTHERS'	VS.	CHEAP PAINTS
$5.35	Average Price per Gallon.	$3.50
450 Sq. Feet (2 coats)	Average Coverage per Gallon.	300 Sq. Feet (2 coats)

$35.00	Labor Cost of applying required amount of Paint.	$52.50

$17.00 or 27.5% of cost of the whole job is saved by purchasing Lowe Brothers' "High Standard" Paint, not to speak of the added advantage of having a superior job in appearance, service and long life.
