Four Local Men Sentenced Convicted of Sugar Stealing

Yesterday in Police Court at Winchester Magistrate McCormick handed out fairly stiff sentences to four local men which will break up a gang which has been carrying on an illicit traffic in sugar stolen from the local plant of the Nestlé's Milk Products Company.

Graham Price, unmarried, was given 18 months determinate sentence and six months indeterminate.

Howard LaSalle, unmarried, 12 months and six months indeterminate.

Napoleon Paul, married, six months determinate and six months indeterminate.

Joseph Paul, single, six months determinate and six months indeterminate.

All the prisoners will be taken to Guelph to serve their sentences with the possibility that Price will be transferred to the prison farm at Burwash.

The thefts of the sugar had been going on for some time, when recently a conversation was overheard between two men when the information was imparted that very cheap sugar could be purchased through the gang apprehended, which information was carried to the Nestlé's Company when a check-up of their sugar stocks revealed a considerable shortage, and Constable Garnet McLean was asked to make an investigation. With the assistance of Provincial Officer Rose of Morrisburg, search warrants were secured and several places searched with the result that some of the stolen goods were recovered and the information gained from whom it was purchased.

Tuesday night the officers visited Price's home, but as they came Price made an attempt to evade them, resulting in a chase across fields before he was landed. Prices implicated Howard LaSalle, who is understood to have received a bag of sugar for assistance rendered to the gang. Price and LaSalle gave the names of the Pauls as the others interested in the stealing and a visit by the officers to the home of Napoleon Paul between two and three o'clock Wednesday morning landed them in the toils.

It is believed that the sugar was taken from the storage room at the west end of the plant and carried down two short flights of steps to the warehouse at the east end of the main plant and through a north door from there across lots to the home of Price, while the watchman at the plant was in another part of the buildings.

Some of the sugar sold has been located but the investigation will be continued in an endeavour to clear up the whole situation.

It was moved by Fred Smith, seconded by John Wardell, that Mr. Ray Dillabough be re-engaged as principal at his present salary and the motion was carried.

John Wardell moved, seconded by Alex Barrie, that the present staff of ladies be re-engaged at a salary of $800, and this motion also met defeat.

A motion was then made by Fred Smith and seconded by Arthur Peake that $900 be offered the present lady teachers, the applications to be in the secretary's hand by June 5th, which was carried.

Winchester Bailiff's Auto Nearly Crashes Police Car

Provincial Officer Rose and Constables McLean of Chesterville and Helmer of Winchester had considerable excitement crowded into a few minutes of Victoria Day in Winchester. The officers were going north on Highway 31 through Winchester and were about to negotiate the turn around the silent policeman when a car from the east flashed by them regardless of all precautionary measures, compelling Officer Rose to slam on the brakes and swerve out of its way. Once straightened away the officers proceeded to overhaul the speedster, when the latter cut across their path and zipped down a side street. When later overtaken it was found to be the local bailiff who explained that he thought by virtue of his office he was not under obligation to observe traffic signs. He paid a fine and costs for his little escapade.

Sister of Mrs. J. Farrell Dies Suddenly at Napanee

Kemptville, Ont.—Friends here will learn with deep regret of the death Friday night of Minnie Fulton, wife of Rev. R. J. Dumbrille, of Napanee. Mr. Dumbrille was rector of St. James' Anglican Church here for 19 years previous to his appointment to Napanee in 1927.

During her long residence in Kemptville, Mrs. Dumbrille was well and favourably known throughout the community; she was an enthusiastic church worker and earned the respect and admiration of a wide circle of friends through her whole-hearted support of all community activities. Her sudden and unexpected death as the result of an operation came as a great shock to her family and friends.

Besides her husband, she is survived by three sons, Oscar, of Ottawa; John, Kirkland Lake, and Rupert, at home; three daughters, Mrs. James Smith of Alexandria, Ont.; Mrs. John Findlate of Toronto, and Mrs. Harold McFarland, of Philadelphia. Several brothers and sisters also survive.

The funeral on Sunday was attended by Mr. and Mrs. J. Farrell, of Chesterville, Mrs. Dumbrille being a sister of Mrs. Farrell.

Bears Are Moving About In This Part of Dundas

During the week it has been reported to this office of black bears having been seen in the vicinity. Mr. Maurice Beckstead while driving near Colquhoun on Victoria Day observed one on the road a short distance ahead of him which on being approached jumped into the bush on Rob. Colquhoun's farm. Yesterday morning Calvin Gordon, of Morewood, called up to say that the evening before a large bear had been seen by the members of his family on W. J. McConnell's farm about a mile south of Morewood, as it jogged along towards the peat bog.

It is unlawful to take any bear except under authority of a Trapping License or a Hunting License (Deer or Moose) and during the open seasons in which such licenses are valid.

U. S. Farm Prices Rise

Washington.—A 17 per cent rise in United States farm prices—the most sensational spiral since the post-war "boom" days of April, 1919—was reported for the period of April 15th to May 15th. The upward sweep has continued since that date.

Statisticians of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics who computed the increase on the basis of prices paid farmers at their local markets, said that during the 30-day period prices paid by farmers for goods had remained unchanged at the pre-war level.

Province of Ontario Offers New $25,000,000 Loan

Toronto, May 31st.—A new issue of $25,000,000 Province of Ontario Debentures is being offered for public subscription. The issue includes:

(a) $10,00,000 four per cent serial debentures maturing in equal annual amounts of $2,000,000 from June 1st, 1934, to June 1st, 1938, inclusive, prices ranging from 99.76 for 1934 maturity to 98.22 for 1938 maturity. Yield is 4.25 per cent for the 1934 maturity varying through the successive maturities to 4.40 per cent for 1938 maturity. Denominations are $1,000 only.

(b) $15,000,000 4½ per cent 17-year Debentures due 1950. Price 99.00 yielding 4.58 per cent to maturity. Denominations are the popular ones of $100, $500, and $1,000. Accrued interest applies to both offerings.

In announcing the new issue, the Hon. E. A. Dunlop, Provincial Treasurer, made the following statement:

"As in the case of our offering some twelve months ago," he said, "this new debenture issue affords Ontario citizens an opportunity of participating at an attractive rate of interest in the highest grade of security available in the Province—a security which is a direct obligation to the Province of Ontario and backed by the whole resources of the Province. The four per cent issue is, of course, available in denominations of $1,000 which will adequately meet the needs of many investors. The four and one-half per cent issue is in the popular denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000 so that everyone with $100 or any multiple of $100 may take advantage of this high grade offering. As I have said, in both classes of debentures in this issue, the yield is attractive and the security unquestionable.

"A notable feature of this new $25,000,000 issue is the special time arrangement for the benefit of residents throughout the Province who may wish to participate in the loan. With the official announcement of the loan published on Wednesday, May 31st—with the date of taking subscriptions set one day later, namely Thursday, June 1st—it is felt that all residents of the Province will thus have ample time in which to make application. The advantage of one day's notice puts everyone on an equal footing so that neither rural or urban residents have an advantage over the other. This arrangement will, I think, be appreciated by every citizen.

"On Thursday and until the issue is subscribed, subscriptions will be received by all banks throughout the Province, by all branches of the Province of Ontario Savings Office and by recognized bond dealers and stock brokers. Altogether, there will be in excess of 1,600 agencies in the Province through which orders may be placed, thereby providing extensive facilities to the public for participating in the loan. Following last year's precedent, this loan is being offered direct by the Province of Ontario to the public.

"The issue price is the same to all purchasers, large or small. I urge all who contemplate investing in the debentures not to delay in entering their orders.

"The proceeds of the loan," concluded the Treasurer, "will be applied to the funding of short term indebtedness incurred for capital expenditures."

Rain in the West.

Out in Saskatchewan they are telling of a child of three who had never seen rain until the other day. When the downpour opened she told her father someone was throwing water on her.

They are saying also, no doubt, that there are frogs three years old which haven't yet learned to swim; that fish which had learned to do without water now are in danger of drowning.

The prolonged and extreme drought in parts of Saskatchewan has ended at last. The ground is soaked, the streams are running full, there is water in the sloughs. Districts which bore their privations with hope and courage now see the promise of a land restored to fertility as the dought cycle runs its course.

The unconquerable optimism of the Prairies again has justified itself.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

In feeding barley to horses, care should be taken that it is never finely ground because it makes a sticky meal which adheres to the horse's teeth and cheeks.

A larger planting than usual of early potatoes has been made in Dufferin County. Owing to the convenience of five-minute acidulated corrosive sublimate treatment, many more seed tubers are being treated there this year. Fall wheat, alfalfa and clovers have made excellent growth and are in good condition in most districts. Seeding of spring grain has been practically finished.

Kill The Woodchucks.

Woodchuck holes are a great nuisance. They may cause a horse to break a leg, while the mounds may break the cutting bar of a mower or at least blunt the knives. This is the time of year to get rid of the pests. Search out all the holes and plug up all exits. Into the entrance either put calcium cyanide or else use the exhaust of an automobile. To use the automobile attach a pipe and run the engine for twenty minutes, then plug up the hole and go to the next burrow. In the case of cyanide also the burrow must be carefully closed, preferably with damp earth. When using both these methods care must be taken. Be sure no cyanide is left around where animals or children can get it. Keep away from the deadly gas coming out of the car exhaust.

Fertilizer Demonstration Scheme Enlarged.

The interest shown by farmers in the Co-operative Fertilizer Demonstrations which have been conducted since 1929 by the Department of Chemistry, O. A. C., has led that body to include an ever increasing element of experimentation in their demonstration programme. The work was started primarily to show the effectiveness of various mixtures of fertilizers, under the farmer's own conditions and observations, but with four years' experience it is felt that much valuable information can be obtained from these sources.

The 1933 work will be carried out on 120 farms in Old Ontario, and the total number of plots will exceed six hundred. The tests, as usual, are being laid down on all of the standard crops, but special studies are to be made of fertilizers on potatoes, turnips, alfalfa and sugar beets. The effect of fertilizer mixtures in hastening maturity is a point of special investigation in the husking corn areas, and their effect on quality is one of the problems to be studied for the potato and turnip growers. And also being carried out with the market gardeners in the vicinity of Sarnia, London, Toronto, Brockville and Ottawa. These growers are particularly interested in problems of fertility management.

The keeping quality of milk is determined more by the temperature at which it is held than by any other factor. To keep satisfactorily, market milk must be cooled to around 45 degrees F. and held at that temperature.

Pears Are Peculiar.

Pears are somewhat different to other fruit in so far that they do not develop their highest quality if allowed to ripen on the tree. For exemple, a William pear that has a tinge of colour on it, wrapped in paper and placed in a drawer for a few days, will ripen in such a way as to give a flavour that is highly desirable.

O. M. B. Reports Maple Syrup Going to British West Indies

The Ontario Marketing Board reports that in the near future, several hundred gallons of maple syrup will go from Montreal to Jamaica, Trinidad, Bermuda, British Guiana and other points in that region.

Figures show that practically no Canadian maple syrup has reached the 2,000,000 population of the British West Indies, and very little from any other source.

Interest in Smaller Cheeses Registered in Great Britain

British cheesemakers are recognizing the need for small cheeses to meet popular demand, according to the Ontario Marketing Board.

At the recent annual meeting of the Cheshire Dairy Farmers' Association it was suggested that makers should consider the production of cheeses weighing two, three, four or five pounds. This item is of interest because it gives direct evidence of a trade not being solicited by Ontario cheese patrons, despite the fact that Canada is one of the world's largest cheese exporting countries.

Walnut Trees Are Distributed To Women's Institutes

Several hundred Japanese Walnut or Heartnut trees have been distributed to the Women's Institutes of Norfolk and Durham, and to more than one hundred of the Junior Institute delegates who attended the recent Girls' Conference held at Macdonald Institute, O. A. C., Guelph.

Mr. J. A. Neilson, former nut specialist with this Department, generously donated the trees from his Guelph garden for the purpose of stimulating an interest in this neglected form of horticulture in Ontario.

These trees, which are of a hardy, fast-growing race of Japanese walnuts, are valuable, not only because of their very palatable nuts, but because they make valuable shade trees on streets and lawns. The Heartnuts require very little attention after planting, and if planted on otherwise waste land, they make a very desirable permanent crop.

Farmers' Cheques Exempt.

Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Federal Minister of Finance, has made provision in legislation to exempt farmers' cheques, money orders and postal notes of less than $5 from the provisions of the three-cent stamp tax, the Ontario Marketing Board announced recently. This means that farmers' cheques for eggs and poultry as well as for milk and cream are now free of the stamp tax.

Gladiolus Thrips.

A great deal of damage is being done to the Gladiolus in Ontario by a pest known as Gladiolus Thrips. All citizens growing this beautiful flower are urged to treat the corms before planting, so that the danger may be controlled as far as possible. The following treatment is suggested:—Dilute one ounce of Corrosive sublimate in six gallons of water, and after peeling the corms soak them for three hours in this solution, the liquid being kept at about 70 degrees F. This material is deadly poison and should be dissolved in warm water, using earthenware or wooden vessels.

A light dressing of hydrated lime may be sprinkled over the Irises at this time.

Cut worms will soon begin to operate in the garden. A simple method of control is to mix one quart of bran, one teaspoonful of Paris Green and one tablespoonful of molasses, with sufficient water to moisten the bran. This mixture should be lightly sprinkled about the plants in the late evening.

Farm and Home Week at O. A. C. June 19th to 23rd Inclusive

As usual the Ontario Agricultural College will be at home to the farm folks of the province for one special week in June. This year it has been arranged for June 19th to 23rd inclusive, and although many visitors find it possible to remain for only one day, provision is now made for those who wish to remain for from two to five days—at their convenience—and the week's programme is prepared with this in view.

A special low rate of $1.00 a day for room and meals has been arranged for those who remain over and they should, if possible, send notice to the college in advance, and should register for their rooms immediately on arrival.

The programme includes practical demonstrations and tours of inspection for both men and women each day, as well as entertainment in the evening, and visitors are allowed to choose what most interests them in the programme.

Most of the members of the faculty will be at the college for the week and will do everything possible to assist visitors to have an enjoyable and profitable time.

Four Killed in Train Smash Well-Known in Chesterville

Rev. Martin F. Leedy, 58, minister of the Standard Church at Marmora; his wife, aged 42; Rev. A .Carson, 65, and his son Asa, 16, of Bancroft were all instantly killed Friday at 10.45 a.m. at Elm Tree crossing four miles west of Arden when their motor car was struck and reduced to a mass of wreckage by a Canadian Pacific way freight.

The crossing is considered a dangerous one and allows no view of approaching trains from either direction.

The quartette, all of whom were followers of the Standard Church, were returning home from a camp meeting near Brockville. They had planned to visit Mrs. Leedy's brother, Arthur Hayes, and were only about a mile from the latter's home when the tragedy occurred.

The car was struck broadside by the train, and was carried ten pole lengths, the contents of the car being scattered along the right of way for over two hundred yards.

Mrs. Leedy and the two Carsons were hurled from the car, but the body of Mr. Leedy was still beneath debris when the train was brought to a stop. All the bodies were mangled, and in each case death occurred instantly.

Engineer Stanley Barlow of Havelock and Conductor George Warren, Smiths Falls, both stated that the whistle was blown for the crossing several times. The car was loaded with hymn books, literature and papers, all used in connection with camp meetings which are being held in various parts of the country.

Rev. Mr. Leedy is well known around Arden as he was in charge of the Standard Church at Elm Tree for some years. His wife was also born in that neighbourhood and has several brothers and sisters residing there. They have been at North Marmora for some time. They have two small children Asa, 15, and May, 8, both attending school at Marmora.

Rev. Mr. Carson leaves a wife and two children. Coroner Dr. Seldon of Sharbot Lake was called to the scene and after viewing the remains ordered an inquest to be held next week at Arden. The bodies were removed to Barkers Mortuary parlours at Arden. Mr. and Mrs. Leedy will be buried there. The other two bodies were sent to Bancroft Friday night.

Constables Hicks and Olsen of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police detachment of Tweed and Provincial Constable Wager of Enterprise, are conducting an investigation into the accident.

How to Down Cats.

Claiming that cats do much damage, Sheriff Carr, of Hamilton, would place a tax on them. He doesn't like cats because not only do they do a lot of damage but they keep people awake at night and they climb trees they cannot come down, sometimes getting themselves into such a difficult fix that the firemen have to be called to rescue them.

To rid the world of cats, the worthy Sheriff of Hamilton would put a stiff tax on them in the hope that people would rebel at the tax and get rid of their cats.

In this the Stratford Beacon-Herald disagrees, saying that the Sheriff has been caught up with the mad spirit of the age and asks what would be done if the cat had four or five kittens—as some cats are in the habit of doing. Would the tax be put on them immediately or would the Sherig wait until he learned how many of the kittens were to be allowed to live. The Beacon-Herald suggests the Sheriff forget about the tax and if his neighbour's cat yelps at night let him fling a shoe at it.

We have even a better idea. Dogs are cats' natural enemies, so the best way would be to remove the dog tax. People who don't own a cat would buy a dog, because anything without a tax on it these days is a great attraction, and pretty soon all the cats would be run out of town.

While dogs may howl at the moon at night and bark at sparrows on the streets early in the morning, at least it is never necessary to call the fire brigade to get them down out of a tree.

How Does the Maintenance of the Gold Standard Affect the Welfare of the Private Citizen ?

IN A SELF-CONTAINED COUNTRY, which neither bought nor sold abroad, which neither invested nor sold abroad, nor received deposits from abroad, the currency problem would be relatively simple.

The citizens as a whole, would have an interest in keeping stable the prices of commodities in their own domestic market; for falling prices would threaten the profits of employers, and so the tenure of their jobs by the workers: while rising prices (and their consequence, a rising cost of living) would threaten the standard of comfort of the great majority. No doubt an absolutely stable price level must be regarded as utopian; nevertheless, in a country free from the complications involved in foreign trade, such arrangements with regard to currency would obviously need to be made, as would minimize the risk of price fluctuations in the home market, and also their extent. When once a fairly stable commodity price level had been secured: when a currency had been established with a fairly constant purchasing power at home: the monetary problem would have been solved for all practical purposes.

BUT there is, in fact, no such thing as a self-contained country—nor has there been (at least in the Western world) for many centuries. Thus, for example, it is simply because she has access to the world market that our own country normally provides ten millions of people with comforts and even luxuries; without access to the word market she could not do so. Her people are prosperous (in normal times) because she maintains continuously the sale abroad of her staple products, and because she buys abroad the goods that she cannot make, or can make only with difficulty.

With continuous access to the world market, Canada has been able to develop her resources rapidly, because capitalists abroad have been willing to make long-term investments in Canadian securities. On account of principal and interest we have thus incurred (quite voluntarily) large debts: without incurring these debts we could only have developed our resources much more slowly. But the necessity of meeting our financial obligations abroad, or discharging them day by day, links us the more closely with the world market.

It follows that those Canadian business men who buy goods or sell goods abroad, who have debts to meet abroad, or to collect abroad debts owed to them, are continuously making purchases and sales of currency other than their own; and that the business men of other countries who have dealings with us, are continuously making purchases and sales of Canadian currency.

The volume of these transactions is vast. We have, therefore, a double interest: firstly, in keeping as stable as possible the purchasing power of our own money in Canada; secondly, and of no less importance, in keeping as stable as possible the prices of other currencies reckoned in Canadian money.

THERE is no country of any importance to-day that does not live, as Canada must live, in close daily contact with the world market. All countries have the same interest in maintaining stable the prices of other currencies, reckoned in terms of their own money. Since the prices of many commodities (and these as a rule the most important) are made in the world market and not at home, it is impossible to keep such prices stable in any one market, unless the relative currency values of the countries participating in the world market are also stable. That is to say, the stability of business conditions in any given country depends not upon one but upon two monetary factors: firstly, upon the absence of disturbing influences disturbing the relative values of currencies. The gold standard was invented in order to satisfy the second of these two necessities.

AN individual country may be said to maintain the gold standard, so long as its currency may freely be converted into gold at a fixed rate, and so long as the gold obtained in exchange for that currency may be exported. If either of these conditions is absent, that country is not, strictly speaking, on the gold standard.

When each of a number of countries maintains these two conditions, it is obvious that uncertainties cannot exist with regard to the relative values of their currencies: for since each of the currencies concerned is in a stable relationship with gold, it follows that there are certain fixed ratios of value between them.

IN THESE conditions, the trader with commitments abroad, or the man dealing in any staple commodity whose price is made in the world market, can make contracts with a reasonable certainty that they will not involve him in loss, and with a reasonable expectaiton of profit. Secure in this consciousness he quickens his energies; and the business of his country benefits.

But when the reverse is the case, when the currencies are no longer in a stable relationship with gold and one another, the trader who makes commitments abroad, or even who purchases and sells in the home market the staple commodities of world trade, is facing speculative risks which have a paralyzing influence on trade. There is a constant threat of loss, which cramps all trading activities, and acts as an effective blight on business.

THE degree of uncertainty to which traders are exposed, when currencies are not in a stable relationship with gold and one another, varies, of course, with the liability to fluctuation of the currencies. But, it is noteworthy that, for many years past, those forces have been growing stronger, which, in the absence of an international gold standard, are most easily capable of wrecking currency values. The growth in the volume of international transactions, previous to 1929, greatly swelled the size of the short-term balances which were kept abroad by their owners. Even more powerful influences in swelling these balances were the development of a gold exchange standard, by countries not strong enough to maintain the gold standard with their own gold resources (which led to the creation of large balances abroad by certain of the central banks) and the nervousness of the citizens of certain countries, with regard to conditions in those countries, which led, in many cases, to precautionary measures—the transfer of private balances from those countries to great financial centres elsewhere. These balances as a whole were easily shifted without notice; and, when suddenly shifted on a large scale, were capable of quickly changing the relative values of currencies, and even of causing a breakdown of the mechanism by which the transfers themselves were made.

AT PRESENT, it is in precisely this situation that the world finds itself. Shifting balances—amounting in all, it is believed, to no less than $10,000,000,000 — have repeatedly, since 1929, rocked our industrial civilization. Reacting in turn upon many countries—upon Austria, Germany, Britain, the United States and others — they have intensified the grave disturbances of recent years, led to the drastic curtailment of credit, narrowed the market for goods, caused heavy losses to legitimate traders, no less surely than they have ruined speculators, and thrown millions of men and women out of employment. All of these merchants who have been crippled, all of these unemployed (and in fact, all others whose tenure of employment is still precarious) have an interest in the gold standard, as real as that of the specialist in economics. Theirs is, indeed, perhaps the more vital interest of the two: for the breakdown of the gold standard has destroyed, or at least endangered, their livelihood. The gold standard is to them not an academic, but a very practical consideration.

GROWING GIANT DAHLIAS

GIANT DAHLIAS of the type which have become the outstanding attraction in late summer gardens and autumn flower shows make heavy demands on soil moisture and plant food.

They must be given plenty of room and well prepared soil. Four feet each way between plants should be given if possible. The tubers, or plants from rooted cuttings, may be set out at any time from the time the soil first warms up until July 1st. As the finest flowers come late, late planting is most favoured, but in regions where frost comes early, planting should be done by July 1st.

Prepare a place, which enjoys the full sun, to a depth of at least ten inches. Apply a complete plant food at the rate of around one tablespoonful to the square foot of space, working it well into the soil. Set the tubers about six inches deep.

Until the sprouts appear the soil should be cultivated to maintain a good mulch. After the top growth begins care should be taken to give only shallow and light cultivation, lest the roots be disturbed.

To obtain large blooms the following method of disbudding may be followed: Select the most vigourous stem and remove all others. When the selected stem has made four pairs of leaves, pinch off its growing end. This will divert all the growth to the side branches, which will soon appear. Leave the end bud on each side branch, but remove all others, diverting all the energy of the plant to the flowers which grow at the end of the branches. This method may be modified, if one prefers to grow more flowers, by allowing a larger number of buds to mature.

Six to eight weeks after planting make another application of plant food at the same rate as mentioned above, working lightly into the soil around the plant. Dig the tubers in the fall before the ground freezes and store them in shallow boxes of sand in a cool place where the temperature remains above freezing.

Farewell at Morewood for Mr. and Mrs. L. Loughridge

On Thursday evening last the friends and neighbours gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Loughridge at Morewood to bid them farewell before leaving for their new home. The presentation was made by Mrs. Olive Craik, and the address was read by Mr. Wm. Bouck. Lunch was then served and dancing was enjoyed till the wee sma' hours of the morning.

Following is the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Loughridge:

We, your neighbours and friends, have learned with deep regret of your removal from our immediate midst. During the years which it has been our opportunity and pleasure to be neighbours together, which we regret have been all too short, we have always found you ready and eager to help in any time of need. Your untiring energy, willing helpfulness and industrious citizenship have endeared you to us all. It is not always that one can have neighbours who are at all times ready and willing to lend the helping hand to one and all alike. We would fain believe that you enjoyed in some measure at least your sojourn among us and now we hope that in your new home which you are about to enter you will find genial neighbours whose delight it will be to make you feel entirely at ease in their midst. If we must, therefore, say good-bye, we would wish you God's blessing in your new field of labours and we are glad to believe that you will make friends there as you have done here, but we cherish the hope in your memories of other days there will be reserved a fragrant corner for this section of the Morewood vicinity where it has been our pleasure to spend the last few years as neighbours. As a token of esteem and friendship we ask you to accept this little gift.

Signed on behalf of your Morewood friends and neighbours.

THE LIFE HISTORY OF THE JUNE BEETLE

THE WHITE GRUB, from which so much injury to timothy sod, corn, potatoes, roots crops is expected in Eastern Ontario during 1933, is the immature stage of the June Beetle, says the Dominion Entomological Branch. The beetles feed upon the leaves of shade, forest and ornamental trees at night and lay their eggs in the soil. They prefer to lay in timothy or other sod on light land and as a rule the number of eggs in the locality is graduated very closely with the type of soil and the degree of its occupancy with a crop.

The heavier the soil and the more spare the occupation of the ground with plants during the month of June, the smaller the number of eggs.

The eggs are laid during June and July ,they hatch in about two weeks into small white grubs. These feed upon the roots of crops until autumn when they descend to the deeper levels of the soil where they spend the winter. They come to the surface again in May of the next year, feed all summer and again descend into the soil for the winter. In the spring of the third year they once more come to the surface, feed for a month or two till full grown and after passing through a pupal stage in July mature as beetles. Beetles stay in the ground till the spring of the fourth year when they fly about as June beetles. Eggs are laid in the soil by this new crop of bettles and a new generation of ill omen to the agriculturist is started.

The insect therefore passes through three full years of time in its life-history distributed over four calendar years. Most of the injury is caused by the feeding of the grubs in the second year; though serious defoliation to the trees may take place from the feeding of the June bettles themselves.

The Worst is Past

From different parts of the country word continues to be received of a slight improvement in industrial and other conditions which is causing the future to be faced in a much more hopeful manner than that which has ruled for months past. Manufacturers and retailers are reporting quickened activity and a new feeling of optimism which is being reflected in additions to staff and in enlarged operations. A Brockville merchant returns from Montreal with a report of almost capacity operations being the rule in the textile and hosiery trades ,several of the factories being unwilling to book orders because of the deliveries already contracted for, and there are similar reports from some other banches of business.

This "Good Earth."

It is not for nothing that normal man has always loved the springtime and the season of growth. We may make our jokes about the spring poet and his raptures as we like but it needs no poet in language to feel the stirring of satisfaction at the sight of the overturned earth in the springtime, fresh and fragrant with that subtle but distinctive aroma of the good earth yearning to be sown that it may in its season bring forth the fruits that man needs for his sustenance and delight.

The sight of early growth, the sprouting grain and the green of the garden and lawn and budding trees, brings hope anew even in times when hope has had its struggle to be renewed in the hearts of men. The recent rains through this province—so welcome in regions that have suffered drought in seasons past—have refreshed and renewed the earth, have quickened a better feeling and given encouragement to farmers who badly require a good measure of that commodity.

All sections of the community are given repeated reminders that they depend upon the bounty of Nature and the work of the primary producer to live and to enjoy a reasonable measure of comfort. It is well that that lesson may never be forgotten when brighter days dawn and all other sections of the community will desire, not merely in self interest, that the man on the land, the worker with Mother Earth, shall receive once again his full share of the comfort and reward that his effort ought to receive in a civilized world.

"You must be pretty strong," said Willie, aged six, to the pretty young widow who had come to call on his mother.

"Strong? What makes you think so?"

"Daddy says you can wrap any man in town around your little finger."

Strange Pets Discovered In Montreal Woman's Home

Nearly every family has a pet animal, some have more than one, but few have 500 "pets"—especially if the "pets" happen to be mice! A woman living in a second-storey flat on St. Denis avenue, St. Lambert, is the exception to the rule. Cages line the walls of every room and each contains scores of the rodents, not white mice, but the ordinary grey variety, well-fed and happy.

Following complaints of neighbours about unusual odours emerging from the home in question, Dr. L .O. Mauffette, St. Lambert's sanitary inspector and health officer, and Chief of Police Wilfrid David, visited the premises and discovered the extraordinary hobby of a middle-aged woman who resides there with her husband.

The house was condemned as unsanitary but the woman is loath to give up her "pets" and it is understood that the police and health authorities anticipate trouble in enforcing the law.

The woman, it was learned, started the rodent colony by catching alive mice which had set up their home in the old wooden building. She believed in being kind to animals and spent over $125 to have special double-decker wood and wire cages constructed to house the rodents. They are kept fat and contented by a daily feeding of oatmeal.

Mice, like rabbits, have large families and multiply rapidly but this caused the owner little concern. She bought more cages and expended more for feeding the mice. Yesterday 500 of the animals were found in four well-built cages and now the problem is to get rid of them.

Nurse: "Don't you like your new baby sister, Johnnie?"

Johnnie: "She's all right, but I wish she had been a boy. Willie Smith has got a new sister, and now he'll think I'm trying to copy him."

The Sheffield Party

"I SUPPOSE," Mrs. Sheffield said a bit doubtfully, "we could afford a simple party, Sara, but just now what with the business depression and the dentist's bill and the cost of everything—"

"The immortal Dickens," broken in Sara whimiscally, "had nothing on us when he wrote Hard Times, mother. I'm tired and sick of hearing about hard times. It we weren't so everlastingly poor!"

Aunt Lib eyed her niece disapprovingly. "Poor!" she echoed. "Poor! Think of the starving children in Russia, and of bread lines a mile long. You ought to look at the other side, Sara."

"Now, auntie," said Sara, "don't be preachy. Why think about unpleasant things? There's still another side. Take the girls over on Pershing Avenue where we used to live before we came down in the world. Why, they have everything . There's Evelyn, for instance. At her party they had a caterer and a decorator, and the favours were scrumptuous, and the ices were moulded in the shape of doves. If I can't give a real party—"

Dorothy Ellen, who was undergoing martyrdom at the ironing board, burst out indignantly, "You think you're smart, Sara Sheffield, just because you're sixteen! If I were mother I shouldn't let you have a party!"

"Did you speak, Dot?" inquired Sara of her small sister.

"Smarty, smarty had a party;
Nobody came but a little fat darky!" gibed Dorothy Ellen.

"There, there, Dorothy Ellen," interposed Mrs. Sheffield mildy. "Never mind; finish Daddy's handkerchiefs. That's a good girl!"

Dorothy Ellen picked up a fresh one and sighed. When it came to ironing the iron fairly entered her soul. "When I'm married," she announced positively, "my husband is not going to use big handkerchiefs. He's got to have little ones like mine."

Sara giggled.

"Smarty, smarty," began Dorothy Ellen wrathfully, "had a party—"

But Sara, pencil in hand, was too much engrossed in sundry calculations to pay any attention. "Let me see," she said thoughtfully, "there would only be ten, mother, besides me; it ought not to cost very much."

"A simple party wouldn't," admitted her mother. "I think if you just informally invited the girls in and made fudge and toasted marshmallows—"

"Why, mother! You don't know Evelyn. She's the snippiest thing! She's all the time remarking, 'So-and-so is not in our class socially.' I can just imagine her saying, 'Why, our washerwoman's daughter down in Clabber Alley could give a better party than that!"

"I don't want my daughter to be a snob, Sara," said Mrs. Sheffield quietly. "Perhaps you judge Evelyn by your own standards. There is no aristocracy in mere wealth, but only in mind and culture, in kind hearts and simple faith."

"Sara's so sal-fish," put in Dorothy Ellen, championing .her mother's cause. "When I'm grown up I'm going to do just as mother says."

"And so am I, goosey," said Sara, laughing. Then she sighed. "Of course I can't have caterers and things but I'll send formal invitations. And we'll borrow Mrs. Dooley's punch bowl and use the drawn-work lunch cloth father brought from Mexico. Dot can open the door and direct them upstairs—and, oh, if we could only have an orchestra playing off in a conservatory as Evelyn!"

"Huh!" Jimmy roused himself from a desultory study of plane geometry. "Maybe you'd like to have me buttle—"

"Would you, Jimmy? The girls don't know you, and you'd look every inch a butler!"

"I should sa-ay not! Catch me! Girl," he added with brotherly candor, "give me a swift pain."

"Did you say I could open the door, Sara?" Dorothy Ellen broke in gleefully. True to feminine instinct, she had switched over to her sister's side. "O-o-oh, won't it be grand! And can I wear your blue sash?"

"If I weren't so sal-fish," Sara said gravely, "and so smarty—"

"You're not," declared Dorothy Ellen. "You're lovely."

Now that the die was cast, preparations for the party went merrily on. That evening Sara proceeded to write her invitations. After she had ten a number in a cramped schoolgirl hand, Dorothy Ellen came to her rescue with a red volume entitled the Uplift Manual for Home, School and Office.

"Here's some invitations and things," she announced importantly. With her finger on a page she intoned in her best class recitation manner, "Letter of sympathy on the death of an infant. Con—g-r-a-t—oh, yes—congratulations on an a-p, ap—approaching marriage—"

"Heh, heh!" laughed Jimmy in an excess of mirth. "Haw, haw!"

"What, that's what it says, smarty," cried Dorothy Ellen defensively. She continued to spell out slowly, "Letter r-e-q-u-e—requesting loan of money."

At that apparently unimportant statement Mr. Sheffield looked up from his paper and smiled.

"Never mind, Dot," said Sada. "Go on; that's a dear. You'll come to it."

"I-n, in—t-r-o, tro—introducing a gentleman to a lady," spelled Dorothy Ellen and hastened on. "Letters of c-o-n—con—condolence on the de—disease of a husband—" She glared at the writing form of Jimmy. "Well, if you don't believe it—" Hastily she turned over several pages. "Invitation to dinner; invitation for evenin—"

"That's it, Dot! That's what we want."

Dorothy Ellen read triumphantly: "Mr. and Mrs. William Howard Pickle. At Home—"

Sara snatched the book.

"Pickell, goose not Pickle. Thank goodness, at last! She studied the form and after much effort wrote the following: "Miss Sara Sheffield requests the pleasure of your company at a party on Saturday evening—"

"I say, sis," Jimmy broke in, "what is the date of the senior play?"

"The twentieth," answered Sara absently, without looking up. She finished the copy and inspected it critically. "There, I think that will do. I'll just copy this card for all the invitations. Then I'll get them in the mail to-morrow. They'll receive them Friday. And then the next day — she squeezed Dorothy Ellen ecstatically—"will be the party."

Preparations for the event went on rapidly. Friday Mrs. Sheffield went to the city and bought nut cups and place cards and materials for favours. When she had bought mints and a few flowers and a new hair ribbon for Dorothy Ellen the amount reached an alarming total. She went home tired out, and her feet ached miserably . It seemed that the party was to be anything but simple, after all.

That night she and Aunt Lib and Sara worked on the favours and the decorations until almost twelve o'clock.

"If we are poor," declared Sara, "we can be artistic."

"Humph!" Aunt Lib, ruffling a frill for a nut cup, tore the dainty paper in her exasperation. "When I was a girl we didnt have such highfalutin' ways. The best party I ever went to they had sausage and rhubarb pie."

"Why, Aunt Lib!" Sara was scandalized. "I'd like to see Evelyn—"

"It was good too," Aunt Lib went on reminiscently. "They were plain folks, and they didn't put on. The memory of that rhubarb pie has made my mouth water these thirty years."

"Oh, you and your rhubarb!" Sara broke in, laughing. "Mother, are you going to order the ices?"

"I'll freeze the cream myself," said Mrs. Sheffield wearily. "It's so much less expensive. We'd better get to bed now, for Nettie's coming early to clean."

"Then we'll leave this muss for her," said Sara, yawning. She gave her mother an affectionate hug. "Mother, I can hardly wait till tomorrow night."

"I can hardly wait till it's over," put in Aunt Lib grimly.

"All day Saturday the house was in a state of upheaval. Nettie, the coloured woman whom they occasionally hired for cleaning, polished and scrubbed until things fairly shone. Mrs. Sheffield baked two cakes and froze a freezer of ice cream. Sara polished the silver and the cut glass and arranged the small tables.

By six o'clock the house looked stately, cold and formal. The library table was denudued of books and papers and, draped in the drawn-work lunch cloth, supported a massive punch bowl in which mint leaves scattered between floating blocks of ice gleamed like little green islands. The tables were strewn with rose petals and fern leaves.

"It looks heathenish to me," said Aunt Lib critically. "Is it practical? Can a body eat 'em?"

She flounced to the kitchen, where she ate a cheese sandwich. Supper that evening was in the nature of a "hand-out.' 'Nettie, who had remained, brewed tea and in the seclusion of the pantry nibbled suppertitiously at sundry toothsome edibles.

At eight o'clock everything was in a state of painful expectancy. Mr. Sheffield in an uncomfortably stiff collar gave only divided attention to the evening paper. Mrs. Sheffield in her Sunday - go - to - meeting gown watched the clock nervously. Jimmy, chafing under parental authority, gloweringly applied polish to his shoes; and Dorothy Ellen, a fairy-like apparition, stood at attention at the front door. Sara, pale with excitement, flitted round like a bird on the wing. The moments seemed to drag. Aunt Lib, with one eye on the door, lost count in her tatting. At a quarter past eight o'clock Nettie broke the strained silence.

"Dey sho am late." Her approving glance fell on Dorothy Ellen, who with arms hanging primly was still patiently standing like a sentinel, and burst out admiringly. "Ef dat ain't the cutenest young un. Talk about yo-all footmans! Dorothy Ellen, honey, yo is sho de mos' mannerable chile!"

No one replied. At any other time such praise would have met with hearty response. It was as if nothing in life mattered except the clang of the doorbell. The silence grew oppressive. The ticking of the clock sounded like blows from a hammer. With a stenorian chime the halfhour struck.

"Why don't they come?" burst out Sara.

"I can't imagine what's keeping them," said Mrs. Sheffield anxiously.

The hands of the clock travelled on to nine, and still no guests came. Dorothy Ellen had slid to the floor, and her blue eyes were glued pathetically to the door knob. Nettie swayed rhythmically in the kitchen rocker. Tears stood in Sara's eyes.

"I don't know what to think," began Mrs. Sheffield, "It seems strange to think that none of them telephoned or sent reply. Are you sure you gave the date? Of course the telephone has been out of order—"

"Mother!" Sara whirled round with eyes flahing. "They didn't try! They didn't want to come! It' all Evelyn. She was too snippy. Just because she lives on Pershing Avenue she thinks we are nobodies! She leads them all. She's done this just for spite—"

"They may have been delayed," Mr. Sheffield broke in hopefully. "It is only a quarter past nine."

But Sara answered in a heartbreaking voice, "They are not coming. And after all our work! O mother, mother—"

She fled blindly to her bedroom and flung herself on the bed, sobbing. From the kitchen came the sound of Nettie's snores in rhythmic time with the creak of her rocker. Dorothy Ellen's head had fallen on her breast . Another half hour rang out. Mr. Sheffield pushed back his paper. "Well?" he said helplessly.

"I call it a rotten shame!" burst forth Jimmy.

From the bedroom came faint, stifled sobs. He flung his geometry at the unoffending cat. Mrs. Sheffield stopped and gathered Dorothy Ellen into her arms. Tears were in her eyes.

"Smarty, smarty, had a party," Dorothy Ellen mumbled sleepily; "nobody—"

Sara, lying in a white, inert heap, caught the words, "Nobody came" and she finished the couplet and repeated it over and over monotonously. The ridiculous words had been prophetics. After all the work and worry and expense, all her delightful anticipation, only Nettie—only Nettie!

"Do you want some of the ice cream, dear?" It was her mother's voice.

"O mother, I couldn't—I couldn't —" Her voice broke in a sob.

"For thirty cents," exploded Jimmy, removing his pinching shoes, "I'd punch that Evelyn creature's head!"

"I'll tell her what I think of her!" cried Sara to herself. "I will! I will!"

But as she grew calmer she decided to ignore the slight. She would not be obliged to see the girls. They attended a different school. It would be best, she thought, to go her separate way and forget them. She would neither telephone nor write to demand an explanation. She would no longer call them friends—girls who could do such a despicable thing.

A week went by, and no word of explanation came from the girls. The Sheffield family slipped back into its usual routine. The hurt lay deep in Sara's eyes, but out of the bitter experience she had learned something. It had taught her the value of sincerity. She had come to despise her old false standards.

"You had rhubarb, and I had rue," she told Aunt Lib laughingly the Saturday evening after the ill-fated party.

Mrs. Sheffield looked up quickly. "Sometime you can give another party, Sara. You can make new friends. Perhaps we could manage one this winter after we"—she smiled ruefully—"have recovered from the expense of the last one. With Nettie's bill and the favours and things it cost us fifteen dollars."

"Never again, mother," Sara cried. "Not that kind of a party! But fifteen dollars is well lost in educating your snobbish daughter. My next party will be wholly without pretense. They can take us for what we are. Just think of this time a week ago!"

"Gee, I'm glad we're not looking for the rabble to-night!" cried Jimmy who was stretched out luxuriously on the floor. "This is somethin' like it, this is!"

Sara looked round the pleasant room and laughed. "It is comfortable if it is inelegant," she said. "I wonder what Evelyn would say to father with his collar off; to mother paring watermelon rinds; to Dot putting clothes on the family cat. What's that?" She looked up, startled, and listened intently. There was the sound of trampling feet on the porch. The doorbell pealed loudly.

"Mercy on us!" cried Aunt Lib, hastily reaching under the table for her slippers.

Another peal sounded. Mr. Sheffield strode to the door and threw it open. A laughing, shouting group of girls pushed inside.

"Why, girls!" stammered Sara. "Why, girls! Why, Evelyn!"

"Many happy returns!" cried Evelyn gayly. "Come on, girls, with your peace offerings. Here's mine." She extended a dainty tissue-wrapped parcel.

Sara caught only the words "peace offerings." They were trying to atone. "You should have let me know," she began stiffly. "If you had let mother know, anyway—"

"But you invited us, didn't you? And we could hardly wait. Sending us invitations that way a week ahead of time! That's one way to torture your friends, Sara Sheffield!"

"But"—Sara was slowly grasping a possible explanation—"my birthday was last week. We looked for you last Saturday night, the thirteenth—"

"Thirteenth?" There was a shrill cry of protests. "They read Saturday the twentieth as plain as day."

With ready tact Mrs. Sheffield came quickly to the rescue. "Why, it's all right, girls, I'm sure. Dorothy Ellen, take their wraps into the guest room. Sara merely made a mistake in the date. She probably got it mixed with the senior play. But we can have a party anyhow. Go right into the kitchen and make fudge, all you want. Jimmy will run down to the drug store and get some marshmallows. And there's plenty of cream and cheese for a what-you-may-call-it—a rick-tum-tiddy?"

"Oh," cried Evelyn, "isn't it just too lovely! Give me an apron, Sara. You were so high-toned with your formal old invites that we all had to wear our best bibs and tuckers. Lead me to the kitchen."

It was a hilarious party. Even Jimmy condescended to let Evelyn tie an apron on him. Dorothy Ellen asked nothing more of life. Since there was no rhubarb pie, Aunt Lib unearthed a crock of doughnuts, and Mrs. Sheffield cut innumerable substantial sandwiches that disappeared with lightning-like quickness. From his comfortable chair Mr. Sheffield looked on benignly and munched fudge and read the stock reports. And when they had stayed until the last possible moment Jimmy gallantly escorted them to the car line and carried Evelyn's party bag. He returned to find the family in a state of musing elation.

"Reminds me of the parties they had when I was a girl," declared Aunt Lib.

"And it was so sweet of them to wash and wipe every dish," added Mrs. Sheffield.

"And, O mother," exclaimed Sara, "I was all wrong about Evelyn! She's true blue!"

"I'll say she is," Jimmy added with fervour and straightened his necktie.

METHODS OF STAKING TOMATOES

TRAINING the plants to one or more stems on stakes has been found an advantage in the home garden, and also in commercial production. Stakes five feet long and about one and one-half inches square will be found very satisfactory. Steel rods are also very satisfactory. These should be five feet long and three-eighths of an inch in diameter. The cost is quite reasonable since the life of these stakes is much longer than that of wood.

A wire trellis may be constructed, having the wires spaced nine to twelve inches apart, says Mr. T. F. Ritchie, Dominion Division of Horticulture. As soon as the plants are set out, one or two stems should be tied with soft twine or raffia to the stakes or wires, and all lateral growth or branches developing from the axils of the leaves should be pinched out. This has been found to produce very symmetrical, smooth, clean fruit, and in sections of Western Canada, or where the nights are cool in summer, the tomatoes have been found to ripen sooner than where the plants were allowed to grow on the ground. Another method that has been found advantageous in the higher altitudes in British Columbia, is to set the plants in rows two and one-half feet apart, with the plants one foot apart in the rows. Tying to stakes is resorted to and the plants are allowed to set from two to three trusses of fruit, after which, all new growth is kept removed.

In sections where it is difficult to get a quantity of ripened fruit, it may be found necessary to pull the crop before it is frozen. Fruits that have developed colour can be pulled and successfully ripened in the house, or the entire plants may be pulled and hung up indoors in a dark room, where it is moderately warm, and where a large amount of the fruit will ripen quite well.

THINNING OUT VEGETABLES

ONLY a hardened professional or an amateur gardener calloused by long years of experience will thin his plants properly without some hesitation. The pulling up of some seedlings seems wasteful, but usually from one packet of seeds many more plants are raised than are needed, and a few properly spaced so that they develop to their full capacity in the long run will give far better returns than three or four times their number too thickly planted.

There is every danger that the average gardener will transplant his seedlings from boxes and seed beds too thickly unless he watches himself carefully. The surest way is to take a foot rule or a stick cut to the right length as to the distance apart the plants should be set and to set the plants at each end of it, moving the stick along. In this way the planter will be held rigidly to proper distances. The tendency usually is to "hunch" and think, "Oh, well, it won't make any difference if they are a little thicker." However, it does when the plants mature.

The proper distances usually are given in the directions on seed packets and it is the wisest plan to follow these strictly, particularly in the case of head lettuce and other plants making large growth and whose leaves form the edible portion of the vegetable.

THE CHEAPER CUTS OF MEAT.

AN INTERESTED younger housekeeper remarked to us the other day, "It really does seem that some of the quite cheap meat dishes you have suggested have more flavour and character than a lot of the expensive cuts I used to think were the only thing!

True, this, to a surprising degree. It so happens that a great many of the methods we use when giving to less tender cuts of meat the long slow cooking required to make them tender, we cook into them the flavours and savours of various vegetables and seasonings that are not used in the ordinary roasting and broiling processes which make such very fine dishes of our naturally tender (but alas, more expensive) cuts of meat.
