HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Fire at Finch Destroys Mike Maloley's Stock

Shortly after midnight Sunday fire destroyed the two-storey brick building in Finch occupied by Mike Maloley as a dry goods store and by the Bell Telephone Co., as their central office, with complete loss of stock and building. Mr. and Mrs. Maloley were forced to leave the building in their night clothes.

The fire had made such headway when the Maloleys were awakened that it was by a very narrow margin they made their way to safety through the storeroom of the building, leaving everything behind with the exception of a few hurriedly snatched garments, which did not include a pair of trousers with the cash receipts of the two previous days.

Mr. and Mrs. Maloley have been married but a few months and their loss included a number of valuable and highly prized wedding presents along with their household effects.

The loss on the building, which was owned by the Hamilton estate, is estimated in the neighbourhood of $30,000. The Maloley stock was heavy in anticipation of the Christmas trade, the loss reaching around $15,000 with a comparatively small amount of insurance.

Girl Guides Helping Santa

This year the Chesterville Girl Guide Company is helping Santa Claus look after forty children or thirteen families of new settlers who live in Alberta and Saskatchewan spending their first Christmas in Canada.

This company, being the first to apply for settlers' names, has the honour of having the first special toy-shop pin placed on the big toy-shop map at Boy Scout Dominion Headquarters, Ottawa.

The girls have been busy dressing dolls and fixing a few toys donated by the guides and school children. By Saturday the Christmas parcels will be ready for wrapping and mailing.

The Captain wishes to express her thanks to Mr. O. L. King for his kind donation towards the postage, and, as postage to the West is heavy, any one else wishing to do a Christmas good turn may do so by helping to send the parcels.

Given Six Months On Grave Charge

Charged with a serious offence against a girl under the age of 16, Percy Beckstead, of Morrisburg, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, when he appeared before County Judge F. T. Costello, in County Judges' Criminal Court in Cornwall Tuesday afternoon. The girl left her home in Ottawa last September to attend school at Brockville, where her sister resides. Soon after arriving in Brockville she disappeared and was found by the police some days later at Winchester. Evidence showed that she had lived with Beckstead as his wife at the home of a farmer near Winchester for several days. The sentence upon Beckstead will date from his arrest in Septem-

Barn Burned at Cannamore

Friday morning about 6.30 fire destroyed the barn and contents belonging to J. V. Fetterly about half a mile from Cannamore. Mr. Fetterly and his boy were in the barn doing the chores and had placed the lantern on a door sill leading from the granary and had proceeded to feed the cattle, when it was shortly noticed that the lantern had been upset, now thought to have been knocked over by a cat. The flames were almost under control when, reaching some loose hay, they quickly mounted, and the efforts of the men were turned to releasing the stock, all of which was turned out to safety with the exception of the hens.

Barton---McConnell

Charming in every detail was the wedding at St. Luke's Presbyterian church, Finch, on Saturday afternoon, when Miss Leila Mae, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar McConnell, of Finch, became the bride of Mr. Edward Allen Barton, son of Mr. John F. Barton and Mrs. Barton, of Ogdensburg, N. Y. Rev. Dr. Owen Roberts performed the ceremony. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion with the season's blooms. Mrs. J. S. Farrell, of Chesterville, presided at the organ and played the wedding march, while Miss Margaret MacLean, of Finch, sang "O Phomise Me" during the signing of the register.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by Miss Merle Flynn, of 20 Nepean st., Ottawa, as maid of honour, and Miss Elizabeth Hall, of Prescott, as bridesmaid, while little Miss Doreen McKercher, daughter of Dr. A. S. and Mrs. McKercher, of Wales, Ont., acted as flower girl. The bridegroom was assisted by Mr. Carl Paige, of Ogdensburg. The ushers were Mr. Albert Barton, brother of the groom, and Mr. Russell Fury, of Ogdensburg.

The bride looked charming in her wedding gown, of white satin, made in long princess lines. Her white tulle veil was arranged in cap effect on her head with a spray of orange blossoms, with crepe slippers and hose to match. She carried a shower bouquet of calla lilies of the valley. The maid of honour was gowned in yellow chiffon with a black velvet hat and slippers in matching tones. She carried a bouquet of yellow mums.

The bridesmaid looked charming in a light green chiffon dress wearing a black velvet hat with slippers and hose to match. She also carried a bouquet of yellow mums. The flower girl was daintily dressed in pink and carried a bouquet of yellow rose buds and lilies-of-the-valley. Miss Margaret MacLean wore a dainty frock of beige lace and georgette.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride to a large number of guests who were received by the bride's mother, wearing a black lace and georgette dress with a corsage of rose buds and the bridegroom's mother, wearing a blue georgette and carrying a corsage bouquet of yellow and pink tea roses.

The young couple left by motor for New York and Atlantic City and other points. On their return they will reside in Ste. Anne's Que.

The bride's travelling dress was of wine silk crepe trimmed with egg shell georgette and she wore black suede shoes with hose to match, black velvet hat and black kid gloves with trimming of white. She also wore a black Hudson seal coat and carried a black bag of antelope leather. Both are graduates of Queen's University, Miss McConnell in 1929 and Mr. Barton in 1930.

Hockey To-Night and Tuesday

To-night local hockey fans get their first opportunity of seeing the locals in action and get a line on what might be expected from them when they swing into the championship race. The Montagnards of Ottawa Senior City League will make their annual appearance here tonight and the result should be a bang-up game.

Tuesday night an all-star team from Morrisburg, Iroquois and Cardinal will come here for an exhibition game with the locals which should give a good line on the brand of hockey the St. Lawrence league will play this season. It speaks at least of confidence on the part of the locals that they will take on the pick of three teams and endeavour to demonstrate the superiority of hockey played in this loop.

Winchester Twp. Holsteins Score Outstanding Success

Few exhibitors at our major Canadian Live Stock Shows can boast of a record like that made by Mr. W. J. Fawcett, Winchester, at the recent Ottawa Winter Fair. Mr. Fawcett exhibited three head and succeeded in capturing a Grand Championship, a Senior Championship, a Reserve Jr. Championship, four firsts and a third.

Mr. Fawcett's aged dry cow "Sylvia Dimple Carborn" won her class of five cows, was later made Senior Champion cow, and Grand Champion Holstein Cow of the show. She also won first in the class for cow with official yearly record. In addition to being an outstanding cow from the standpoint of Holstein type, this cow recently finished her year with well over 19,000 lbs. of 4 per cent milk. Her son, "Dimple Carborn," was first prize Senior Bull Calf, and Reserve Junior Champion Bull.

The third animal of Mr. Fawcett's string, "Thelma Ottile Pontiac," was first in a class of ten aged cows in milk, and third prize cow with official yearly record.

Cars Crash on the Square

With a resounding crash and the breaking of glass a Hudson coach came to grief against a telephone pole opposite the post office about 12.30 Wednesday morning when a car driven by Orlin Barkley, of Morrisburg failed to keep clear of a Durant roadster driven by Maurice Beckstead. Barkley was severely cut by flying glass and suffered a small bone broken in his wrist.

Both young men were returning from a party in the country. Barkley is said to have been proceeding across the river from King street after having left some of his passengers at their homes, and failed to make the stop before entering Main street. As Beckstead came south on Main street, the latter's car hit the Hudson, throwing it against the pole where it was badly wrecked.

Morewood Women's Institute

The regular monthly meeting of the Morewood Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. James Bogart on Tuesday, December 9th. With the president in the chair, the meeting was opened with the Ode, followed by the Lord's Prayer. The minutes were then read and adopted.

The roll was called to which 17 members and 3 visitors responded. The president gave a report of the convention held in Ottawa. The collection amounted $1.20.

The judges of the work done by each member out of a yard of cotton were Mrs. W. Stevens, Mrs. F. Jervis, with Mrs. J. W. Bogart winning the prize. The articles made were sold. Home-made flowers were made by Mrs. Sheppard. The meeting closed with the National anthemn, after which a dainty lunch was served. The next meeting will be at Mrs. G. Bogart's.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Lowering the Cost.

One authority makes the following suggestion for lowering the cost of milk production: (1) Eliminate inefficient producers, (2) Raise your own feed for the herd. Legume roughages will reduce the need for purchased concentrates. Raising more legumes will also increase grain yields. (3) Provide warm water for the herd in winter, preferably kept before them in the stable. A proper water supply has a greater effect on production than is commonly realized.

Winter Feeding Problem.

A scarcity of both corn silage and roots, the two home-grown sources of succulence, will complicate the feeding situation this winter in Western Ontario at least. Corn is a short crop, though of good quality, and roots less than half a crop. Nor is hay very plentiful. There is an abundance of straw of which much will be fed. The large use of straw presents a dual feeding problem. Succulence and proteins will have to be supplied in larger measure than in previous years. Such rich meals as oilcake, cotton seed and gluten will provide the protein, although in the case of cotton seed care must be exercised because it is constipating. Succulence can be supplied by molasses and by soaking dried beet pulp. When there is some silage it should be mixed with cut straw 24 hours in advance of feeding in order to make it go as far as possible.

Weekly Crop Report.

Recent rains have modified the severity of the water shortage situation which had become acute in many counties. According to reports of agricultural representatives, a large percentage of the wells and streams had dried up and stockmen particularly were alarmed. Fall work is reported in good shape and fall ploughing in all counties practically completed. In Dundas, compensation and salvage received for reactors to bovine tuberculosis are in many cases more than sufficient to cover their replacement with clean cattle on account of the low price right now. A sudden drop in temperature in Kent found the farmers with work well done and time to devote to cleaning up around the premises. In Lambton, farm stock auction sales are bringing good prices, while in Lanark there is a demand indicated for stockers and hogs with a light supply. Farmers in South Simcoe are marketing their grains by feeding it to hogs and beef cattle. All stock are being stabled in Temiskaming with little shipping being done.

Live Stock in Peel.

The agricultural representative in Peel County reports that in 1929 that county had only 20 fully accredited herds of cattle. At present there are 55 herds, either accredited or under accreditation. He continues to say that this large number will be increased next spring and accredited live stock men claim to be entirely sold out of surplus stock. A number of pure bred accredited cattle are being brought in from Norfolk, Haldimand, Oxford and Perth counties. Open and bred heifers are being bought in preference to springing cows.

Canadian Seed in Demand.

A sharp increase in the demand for registered grades of Canadian-grown seed of roots and vegetables is indicated, particuarly in Ontario. Vegetables growers, gardeners, and farmers find that the extra cost of high grade seed is slight in proportion to its actual superiority. Two factors make for quality in seed grown in Canada. These are inherent advantage of careful selection in foundation seed stock and the important fact that seed grown in Canada is acclimated, giving maximum assurance of production results. Heretofore the most of field root and garden vegetable seeds used in Canada have been imported from the United States and Europe. Field tests are showing that this imported seed is of poor quality and much of it of very questionable worth.

Iodine for Livestock.

According to Dr. Lionel Stevenson, provincial zoologist, most losses among livestock, particularly those of such a nature as goitres in lambs and calves, hairlessness among hog litters and joint ill in foals, can easily be prevented if iodine is incorporated in the rations of the breeding stock and especially in the rations of pregnant animals. Its regular use is essential during the period when the stock is stabled, as there is then absolutely no chance of picking up any iodine in its natural state.

For convenience sake, iodine is usually fed in the form of potassium iodide, being mixed with salt, feed or water. It is quite simple to handle, and according to the best live stock opinion in Canada is a cheap insurance against many live stock losses. As doses vary with the different animals, stockmen are well advised to secure a pamphlet entitled "The Significance of Feeding Iodine to Live Stock" and distributed on request by the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers, Toronto. It covers the whole subject, giving the methods of administration and the particular doses for the various types of live stock under various conditions.

Winter Care of Machinery.

Winter care of farm machinery is of decided economic importance and this cannot be effected without a shed for shelter. Weathering caused by snow coverings and continual freezing and thawing and wet periods in fall and spring brings rapid decay of the wooden parts, and causes metal parts and bearings to rust. This weakens the implements and rusty, stiff bearings are often a source of costly breakages. Not only will the period of usefulness be lengthened by housing the implements during the long idle period, but at the time of storing the mud and thick grease can be removed, bearings oiled, shares and mould boards greased, and lists made of repair parts needed to put the machinery in shape for the following season. The farmer who has his machinery housed has a much better opportunity to repair the machines during the winter months than has the farmer who has his machines buried in snow.

Value of the Institute.

At the annual convention of Women's Institutes recently Superintendent G. A. Putnam discussed the value of the Institute in providing opportunity for all women and girls in the rural communities to meet once a month on common ground for discussion of problems of mutual interest and to have a social half hour. The Institute was recognized as the great rural service club, it made surveys as to the community's needs, provided assistance where needed and frequently it furnished proper treatment and care for crippled children. Pointing to the enviable record of Women's Institutes, he declared that its form of organization was being copied in many lands and that it was one of the strongest forces to combat the tendency to rebellion against existing methods and institutions. The Government was very generous in its offer to provide instructors, because it felt that money spent in this way was worth while.

Good Demand for Apples.

The lifting of the British embargo against the lower grades of United States apples on Nov. 15 has made no difference in prices generally throughout the British Isles, according to Andrew Fulton, overseas representative of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association. As a matter of fact, Mr. Fulton says that there is a keener demand for both dessert and cooking apples with a marked tendency for higher values. There is a good demand for better quality red apples with every indication that this situation will continue. "It is my opinion that Ontario shippers can export with considerable confidence in receiving satisfactory prices, providing the apples are attractive," Mr. Fulton states. Ontario growers with apples to ship are urged to mark all barrels plainly with the words "Canadian Apples" or "Empire Apples." Failure to comply with this regulation has created no small hardship both in clearing shipments from the port of entry into the United Kingdom as well as the loss of several good sales.

Making your profits Permanent

THOUSANDS of men have "cashed in" on their holdings after years of unremitting toil and have re-invested only to lose their profits in unwise speculation. Life annuities provide an invincible protection against such calamities.

In May, 1928, a group of North Dakota business men sold their extensive holdings. While the deal was pending they decided to re-invest the proceeds in life annuity contracts. After investigation they paid the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada over three million dollars in premiums for annuity contracts. They were attracted by the safety and convenience of these annuities and the large return.

Old Kemptville Landmark Is Burned to Ground

Kemptville.—Fire of unknown origin, which broke out in a unoccupied house on the north side of the village at an early hour Monday morning, completely destroyed one of the oldest landmarks of the village. The building, which was formerly a section of "The White House," an old hostelry, was built at the corner of Prescott and Clothier streets prior to 1838 and since 1881 conducted by the late Thomas Warren. A recent purchaser disposed of the buildings and had them moved to their present site.

Owing to the rapid headway of the flames, the fire soon spread to the other portion of the building, which was occupied by Jack Miller and this was also entirely burned. A blacksmith shop, owned by Noah Brown, was partially destroyed.

7 Born in 13 Months

Ragueneau, Que.—Papa Stork apparently cannot pass the humble habitant cottage of Pantaleon Desbiens without alighting. Twice in the past year he has flapped heavily out of a clear sky with a set of twins for Mrs. Desbiens.

This past week the shadow of his wings was again over the Desbiens roof. He left triplets for Mrs. Desbiens young married daughter. That left a high score of seven for the Desbiens household all in the compass of thirteen months.

Making Good on Five Acres

Before the Saskatchewan Commission on Immigration, Robinson Carter, who came in Canada from Durham, England, with a harvesters' excursion in 1923, described how he is making good on five acres of land on the outskirts of Melfort, Sask. He arrived in Winnipeg without any cash and had made a living by butchering, railway switching, and various occupations on farms. He was able to make a living as a butcher but preferred the independence of his five-acre farm. He was milking six cows and had a few chickens, grew some potatoes and other vegetables and, with some odd jobs of butchering, he was able to maintain a good home for his wife and family. His cream cheques from ten cows last summer amounted to $1,000. He had no capital when he went on the land.

Assault to Scholar Charged to Teacher

Miss Pauline Pollard, a teacher in Byron Public school, is to appear before County Magistrate C. W. Hawkshaw, on Saturday next, charged with common assault on one of her pupils.

Joseph Turbine, on behalf of his 12-year-old son Alex, laid the charge. He alleges that on Friday last the boy came home with his hands badly swollen and marked, and that the scholar claimed he had been struck on the hands 147 times by the teacher, who wielded a strap.

Dr. A. W. Gregory, of Byron, who was called, had the boy placed in bed, and he says the lad's hands were swollen and black and blue.

Miss Pollard, in her defence, claims that she did not strike her pupil very often, much less 147 times. The punishment is alleged to have been inflicted after some one had shoved a piece of wood in the school pump, thereby rendering it useless.

Reviving Family Dinners.

The grocers are leading a movement to revive the old-fashioned family dinner on holidays and other occasions. It is to the grocers we shall have to look, if the family is ever brought together. In-laws that won't listen to reason will often come running at the sound of a dinner bell.

Beans Sown to Fill Gap Win First Prize at Chicago

Because there were not enough tomato plants to fill her plot on a 55-acre truck farm in P. E. county near Port Millford, Mrs. Mary E. Maycock planted a patch of beans—and won the championship in the field bean class at the Chicago Winter Fair.

"Well! I never thought I would win, but I am glad," exclaimed the breathless Mrs. Maycock when congraulations were showered upon her. The prize-winning peck, she explained, were sorted out of a crop of beans which she had developed and improved for several seasons, and the seed for which she had originally borrowed from a neighbour.

White Popular for 1931 License Plates

White is the favourite colour for the new 1931 auto markers in Canada this year. Six out of the nine provinces are using it, while Ontario and British Columbia are only provinces adopt black figures on their license plates. New Brunswick has plates with red letters on a dark blue background. Manitoba is using white figures on a green background; Saskatchewan, white against a purple background; and Alberta, white against a light blue background. Quebec and Prince Edward Island have a certain similarity in their markers, with both favouring white letters and figures on a maroon background. Nova Scotia reverses this year's colour scheme of Ontario and has white letters and figures on a black background.

Lots of Friends.

Layoff actor approached Benny Ryan, saying:

"Hello, pal, lend me a nickel, will you? I want to call up a friend.."

Disasters At Wedding

Phillipsburg, N. J.—Several things happened before, during, and after the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. William Koch.. They were approximately as follows: The bridegroom's father fell ill and could not attend. The flower girl fell from a piano stool and broke her arm. The bride's mother fell down a flight of steps, receiving severe bruises. A party of friends drove ahead of of the bridal automobile and stopped quickly. There was a collision. A passing motorist stopped to inquire if his assistance was needed. As he stepped from his automobile a fourth car hit him and knocked him down.

The teacher was trying to explain to the class the significance of white. He asked:

No one answered.

Small Boy: "But why does the man always dress in black?"

He went dressed as a Roman, but soon found the short, airy robes very draughty. Feeling thoroughly disgusted, he sat out in a corridor.

A bright young thing, anxious to air her knowledge of Roman historical heroes, said brightly: "Ah! You are 'Appius Cladius'!"

"No. I'm not," he retored . "I'm miserable as hell."

Will Put Farm School In Every County

Agricultural schools, modelled on the same plan as the vocational schools found in the cities, will be established by the Ferguson government in every county and district of the province, Hon. T. L. Kennedy, provincial minister of agriculture announced in Brampton at a congratulatory banquet tendered by his constituents in celebration of his elevation to the Ferguson cabinet.

These rural vocational schools, as Col. Kennedy called them, were announced by him as the initial step in a great drive by the Government in co-operating with the county councils for the reduction of farm production costs.

At these schools, said the minister, the boys and girls of the province will take an annual three months' course. The girls, under the guidance of the Women's Institutes, would be taught dress-making, cooking and housekeeping; the boys would be shown what real farming constituted.

Col. Kennedy pointed out that whereas Kent County led the province in low cost potato production, growing potatoes for 50c a bushel, a Pennsylvania grower was producing 500 and 600-acre crops at 20 cents a bushel. "There is no reason why we in Ontario cannot grow potatoes for much less than we do now," he asserted.

Taking Pay in Wheat

Pioneer days are recalled by conditions now existing on the Prairies. Field Staff of the Federal Department of Agriculture report that, having no money with which to purchase flour, farmers are hauling their grain in some instances as far as seventy-five miles to the country mill. Mills are finding it difficult to cope with the demands. About ninety per cent of the flour milled is put through on a gristing basis of around twenty-five cents a bushel, which is usually paid for with wheat. The farmer is paying his store bills with the flour and taking the bran and shorts home to feed. In many cases small farmers are helping their more prosperous neighbours and taking their pay in wheat.

Cheaper to Advertise

A West Wawanosh farmer was fined $500 and costs for harbouring cattle not his own. A similar charge against a brother of the accused was withdrawn. This case has been hanging since last July, the original charge having been that of theft. To this charge the accused pleaded not guilty and elected jury trial. In the interval, however, the charge was amended from theft to harbouring, and at summary trial accused pleaded guilty. Two allegedly stolen steers were found on the premises of the accused, who claimed they had strayed there. So far as it is known, this is the heaviest fine ever imposed for this offence in this country, and it can be taken as a warning to all and sundry that this familiar old "pastime" will not be tolerated in this day and generation.

Prospector Back With Gold But Girl of His Choice Gone

Jan Stnashevsky, Polish prospector and lumberjack, who recently "struck it rich" in the north and sold his claim for $75,000, hurried to Montreal to lay his fortune at the feet of Janetska a young girl of his race, mistress of a local boarding house, who had befriended him and aided him ever since he came to Canada ten years ago. But during Jan's last stay in the north woods the demolition work in connection with the Canadian National Railways' terminal scheme had transformed the district in which Janetska lived into a vast, yawning excavation. Stanishevsky did not know Janetska's full name, nor the name or number of the street, always finding it on his trips to Montreal by woodsman's instinct of direction and location.

After enlisting the services of a noted detective agency, Jan sadly turned toward Buffalo, N. Y., following up for himself a slender clue he had picked up among acquaintances.

Janetska, now about 35, had befriended her fellow countryman when he came to Canada ten years ago, penniless and ignorant of the English language. She had been his adviser and banker and he had always sought her boarding house on his occasional trips to the city. When good fortune came his way he immediately thought of Janetska and hurried to her. He will spend it all if necessary to find her.

MEASLES

Of all the communicable diseases with which the human race has to contend, measles is the most easily spread. It is essentially a disease of childhood, and very few escape it. Rarely seen under five months of age, it reaches its greatest incidence between the sixth and seventh years.

The younger the child, the more serious is the condition. Among the communicable diseases of childhood, measles ranks second as a cause of death, and approximately ninety per cent of death from measles occur in childhood under five years of age.

Because measles is a common disease it is generally not taken seriously by parents, many of whom seem to regard it as an annoying experience which has to be gone through, as has the cutting of teeth.

This attitude of regarding measles as a trifling incident is not justifiable. True it is that the vast majority of children who contract the disease recover with no apparent ill effects. It is also true, however, that measles destroy many lives. It may not appear that the child died of measles; in many cases it will be said that death was due to brocho-pneumonia. This is correct, but, the child would not have developed broncho-pneumonia if he had not contracted measles.

Among the children who recover from an attack, there are many who will have some permanent injury done to eyes, ears, lungs, heart, and other parts of the body. It is also observed that the general loss of resistance due to an attack of measles seems to favour the development of tuberculosis, and so we not infrequently see that measles gives tuberculosis a chance to establish itself in the child.

This serious picture of measles is presented in order to cause parents to realize why measles should be regarded seriously. The younger the child, the more serious the condition, so we should make every effort to prevent young children, particularly those under three years of age, from coming iin contact with anyone suffering from the disease.

It is a well-established fact that if children suffering with fever or acute colds are put to bed, and the condition later turns out to be measles, such childen, because they have been kept warm and at rest in bed, are more apt to escape the serious complications. This suggests that bed is the place for the child who is sneezing, or who has a running nose and watery red eyes. The condition may not be measles, but it very often is because measles begins with the same symptoms as the common cold and, in both cases, the child should be put to bed.

Keeping Idle Horses

The annual report of the Cap Rouge Experimental Station of the Dominion Department of Agriculture contains an item of special interest at the present time with respect to keeping idle horses over the winter.

Superintendent Langelier of this Station finds that horses taken off work gradually in the fall not only may be kept cheaply but will actually gain in weight on a daily ration of 1 lb. of mixed hay, 1 lb. of oat straw, and 1 lb. of swede turnips for every one hundred pounds of weight. Energy and vitality are maintained. Idle horses on such a ration, however, should not be worked. The change from work to idleness and vice versa should be made gradually over a period of about two weeks. Other interesting and useful information will be found in the report, which is now being distributed.

He was a rough and ready son of Erin, and had but recently obtained a job as a taxicab driver. The very first day he happened to whizz by a very distinguished looking individual, and the man yelled: "Hey you, do you knowyou came within an inch of hitting me?"

Pat looked around, and smilingly yelled: "That's all right—Oi'm coming back."

UNPUBLISHED LOG OF GREAT SEA FIGHT

Battle of the Falkland Islands was fought this day sixteen years ago. Here is what Tom Nutter, A. B., of H.M.S. Cornwall, 800 men, saw and heard, as recorded in his "rough log" hitherto unpublished "After a four months, 18,000-mile, criss-cross vigil of sea-scouring for enemy craft between South America and the West African coast, during which time several of the crew tried to hang themselves from 'war depression' common at this time with no shore leave 'piped' in four months, H. M. S. Inflexible and Invincible, Dreadnough battle cruisers, direct from Devonport, joined us off Brazil, November 28, 1914. Next day Vice Admiral Sturdee, having flung this thrilling message to the breeze, 'We are going south to avenge our brothers of the Monmouth and Good Hope,' off we started in battle formation, each unit ten miles apart, and on December 7th arrived at the Falkland Islands, the weather meanwhile growing very cold as we were within 300 miles of Cape Horn.

The Germans Flee.

"Next morning, December 8, memorable in British naval history, while busy coaling, out lookout reported five strange men-o'-war in the offing. They proved to be Von Spree's battle squadron Scharnhorst (flagship), Gneisenau, Leipzig, Dresden, and Nurnburg, who, unaware of our presence, began to shell the town. Presently, the Germans, discovering our heavier ships, turned tail and took to their heels. At once Admiral Sturdee sigralled "Give chase,' and you can bet Nelson's men at Trafalgar never cracked on speed better'n we did, for we all knew the champion event of our lives had come—ships, weather and visibility perfect for a real battle. Our squadron comprised Inflexible, Invincible, Carnarvon, Cornwall, Glasgow and Kent, and once outside the harbour we could see the German squadron, with masts and funnels just above the horizon, 22 miles away, going like scared cats. Six British ships chasing five German ships—ye gods! what a sight, for all hands knew these very ships had sunk the Monmouth and Good Hope five weeks before and never tried to save a man.

Picked Their Prey.

"Meanwhile, lunch hour came, but everyone was too excited to eat, and at one o'clock, the Inflexible, after a furious chase, got near enough to hit the Dresden a dirty smack which caused us to cheer as though all hands were at a football match. After this the ships of both fleets scattered and fastened to their own particular prey—the Cornwall and Glasgow together hunted the Leipzig as their meat, and at 3.40 the bugle sounded 'action.' With a mighty cheer all hands rushed to their stations, and at 4.07 we fired our first shot. Range started at 11,000 and ended at 4,300 yards, and during this running we fired 1,080 shells. At 6.23 we 'ceased fire' because the Leipzig was a roaring furnace and her ensign shot away—though another was quickly hoisted. Then we reecived a wireless that Invincible and Inflexible had sunk Scharnhorst and Gneisenau. This news brought more cheering, and though a sailorman has little to do with poetry, from somewhere came these lines 'One glorious hour of crowded life is worth an age without a name,' and the fellow who wrote them must have been in some sea fight like this one.

An Admiralty Order.

"At seven o'clock the Leipzig opened fire again, and as it is an admiralty order to fire until an enemy's ensign is down, we replied with lyddite, and by 7.50 she was a mass of flames and not a gun left. As we knew she was doomed, all hands wished she would strike her colours. After the action, a survivor told us this was impossible as the ship's deck was red hot. By this time it had grown dark and rainy, and the Leipzig, aflame from stem to stern, was a ghastly sight. Then, after several explosions, she sent up distress signals and both our ship and the Glasgow lowered boats—14 survived the fight out of 303. At 9.25, with ensign still flying, she heeled over and went down, a small splash alone telling us a great ship had once been there. So ended our action with the Leipzig. A canary died aboard the Cornwall of fright, but no one was killed or injured, though we had 42 holes in our funnels and 80 other holes due to flying iron. After we got the survivors aboard all half dead from the icy water we darkened ship and headed for the Falkland Islands, now 115 miles distant.

Iron Burned Like Wood.

"One survivor, who could speak English, turned out to have been a London barber for nine years, and had married an English girl. When war broke out (being a German reservist and anxious to avoid it all) he embarked for Australia, but at Valparaiso was seized by the German consul and sent aboard the Leipzig. He told us that after the Cornwall began to fire lyddite it was worse than hell itself, as it made iron burn like so much wood; that when all guns were out of commission the captain mustered the 18 still alive, told them each must look after himself, but that he would go down with his ship. He did. 'After that we jumped from the white hot deck into the icy sea, and I am thankful to be safe aboard a British ship after seeing arms and legs flying about me like leaves in Autumn.' Two hundred were killed on the upper deck alone.'"

Seaman Nutter concludes with this observation: "In sinking those ships to-day we made a good job of it because we knew England looked to Sturdee's men to do it shipshape. We hated those ships, and it was strictly an affair of honour if we ever met them. Now Cradock and our pals are avenged. I hope they know something about it."

Offers Self For Sale

Baltimore, Md.—Out of work for the last three weeks, H. L. Griffis, Canadian war veteran had recourse to a newspaper advertisement. It read:

"For Sale: A human being to the highest bidder. Am a strong physically fit man. I offer myself to doctors, hospitals, etc. as a living specimen upon which to experiment. I will also go anywhere or do anything legitimate to earn a living for my wife and children."

Griffis, 44 years old, he said, is a painter and his wife and two children have been here more than a year. He said he had never before been out of work. A native of this country, he enlisted in the Canadian army in 1915 he said, saw service in France with the first Canadian cavalry brigade, and was discharged April 11, 1919, as a sergeant.

"If a doctor wants to experiment on me by jagging germs into my arm with a neeedle, I am willing," he said. "If I can sell my blood for transfusions I'm willing to do that. I've got to get work.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

It was wonderful to be engaged but it was miserable too because Dick was out on the road all week and letters were difficult when he moved around so much.

Then one night, when he was specially lonely, he telephoned her from his room in the hotel. It was the nicest present he could have given her and it cost less than the price of a movie.

It was so easy and it made them both so much happier that they arranged regular visits by telephone every Tuesday and Thursday evening — moments of affection to remember and look forward to. The weeks seemed only half as long.

Telephoning is the next best thing to being together. Out-of-town calls are simple, dependable, inexpensive — and quicker now than ever before.

AT TWELVE TWENTY-FIVE

Any general-office clerk of the Pacific Trunk would have told you that sooner or later Russ Rankin would have an accident. They had been saying that for a long time, but the proverbial "Rankin Luck" had guarded him, and he was yet as healthy as a young man of twenty-four can well be. Everyone liked Russ—especially the construction chief who had dangerous jobs of inspection to dole out. But this was one of the "safe" jobs.

The railway was building at its Pacific terminus a magnificent Central Station, and on it, plumb with the street wall of the station, had erected a two-hundred-foot tower. In the top of this tower workmen were setting up mammoth clock dials in the four walls. They had already put in three of the faces; only the side on the street was open.

The day was as dismal as a steady downpour could make it. A heavy fog shrouded the city, and just above the building tops hung a mass of leaden clouds. As Russ walked from the hotel to the station, vans slushed along the streets, and a scattering of pedestrians, mere bundles of rainproof garments topped with umbrellas hurried on their errands He had planned to inspect the clock during the noon hour, so that he would not bother the workmen.

"Some weather! Some weather, Rankin!" the station master greeted him.

Russ shook the water from his raincoat. "Yes—for ducks, and you webfooted natives," he said laughingly. "But say, Grant, you have a key for the regulator, haven't you? I m going to set it and start it off to see how it runs."

The men walked to a small iron box that was fastened to the wall and opened it. Inside were a number of electric switches and the dial of a small timepiece. Russ closed two of the switches, and then turned the hands of the tiny clock to the correct time.

"Handier than climbing up there and dragging the hands round, eh, Grant?" he said jocularly. "Now I'll see if it's the real thing or a counterfeit. See you later.

From the top of the elevator he climbed a corkscrew stairway. As he ascended, a steady "click-clack" told him that the electricity had done its work. Soon he entered the top storey of the tower, a rough, gloomy little room, entirely closed except for a huge round opening at one side where the last dial was to be fitted. A rough pair of beams inside the room quartered this opening and through their junction protruded a large shaft on the end of which—three or four feet out in space—were fastened the giant hour and minute hands.

Big machines never failed to win Rankin's attention; and so he gazed at the twelve-foot hour hand that was just beginning a circle from the apex of its round, and at the longer bar of steel that had traversed about one sixth of its journey.

"Whew, what a monster!" he ejaculated admiringly, and turned to inspect the reducing movement and the escapement, which based in the centre of the room.

He had finished this task and had started to descend the stairway when he thought of the union between the hands and the shaft. He decided to inspect those of the one face that had not been dialed. After a good deal of trouble he got upon the horizontal beam of the cross that quartered the opening. Just below him the shaft protruded; at the end of it the hands stuck out like huge lances; and below, so far as to seem part of another world, ran the narrow line of wet pavement, with its black borders of umbrellas.

A new problem confronted Russ, for it was impossible to see the unions from where he stood; and to add to the difficulty, the rain was slanting into the opening.

"This will never do!" he muttered. "I'll get wet here in no time."

And with that he did what he always did in similar circumstances—he took a chance.

Still grasping the upright, he stepped boldly out on the smoot, wet, slippery shaft.

Violating a cardinal rule of his work he cast a glance downward; and it nearly unnerved him . At his side the wall dropped away for two hundred feet to the umbrellas below.

But he did not finish the sentence. With a suddenness that caught him unawares his feet slipped upon the shaft, and the weight of his body as it lunged outward tore his fingers from the upright. There was a moment of falling. Thowing out his hands, Russ clutched desperately at the minute indicator of the clock, which was just below him. His fingers closed upon the immense steel bar, and he brought up with a jerk. For some time he hung there with his eyes closed.

A quiver ran through the bar, and he slid an inch or two downward. His eyes snapped open. At first he could not understand the cause of this new danger, but in a moment he realized the desperateness of his situation. It was now almost twenty minutes after twelve. As the minute hand moved downward toward half past, his fingers would slip more and more rapidly over the wet glossy steel.

He had grasped the minute hand about three feet from its hub. He must reach the shaft that turned the hands. What a tantalizingly short distanct it was! Tightening the fingers of his right hand over the top of the bar, he slowly worked his left upward along the steel slope. Another quiver shook him down a bit farther, in spite of his grip. The chill of the iron seemed to work down his arms and through his body. He tried again—and failed; then again, and again.

Gradually the bar was shaking him farther away from the hub—and down. Drops of water began to trickle down his arms. The bar had dipped downward until an occasional slip became a steady descent, slow and unavoidable. Russ locked his fingers over the smooth surface and clutched at it until lines of red began to show on the steel, but the effort only served to weary him. He shouted at the top of his voice; but he knew that the roar of the street drowned his cries. Then an unforeseen check gave him hope.

About three feet from the end of the hand there was a flare, or bulge, as on the hands of ordinary clocks. That temporarily halted his downward course and gave him a moment's respite. But he realized that the flare would not save him when the hand should approach the half-past mark, for the bar was so large that he could not encircle it with his hands; and human flesh and bone could not hold the grip above that flare, wet and slippery as it was, until it should rise on the other side. A numbness began to steal over him.

It was now about twenty-two minutes past twelve, and the hand was circling toward the bottom of the opening, which was just out of reach of his foot. Within the opening there stood a sawhorse, against which a long scantling was leaning, with one end slanting up toward Russ. He was half determined to give the useless thing a kick, when a plan came to him.

Within the tower, ten feet away, he could see two small cog wheels that were busily turning into each other. If he could get the scantling in one hand and thrust it into the wheels, he might stop the clock. That would give him a few minutes of grace, for he could cling longer if he could prevent the steel hand from pointing straight down. Summoning his strength, he released one hand and reached for the board; but it was six inches too far away.

The suspense of the next few minutes was the worst that Russ experienced. As the moving hand brought him nearer and nearer to the scantling, questions tortured him: at the greater angle, would he be able to hold with one hand above the flare while reaching for the stick with the other? If he did get the piece of board, would it clog the works? And could he cling to the slippery metal until help came?

Carefully, carefully he felt for the scantling, and gripped it. Raising his prize, he balanced it a moment, then thrust an end between the teeth of the whirling cogs. There was a grinding crunch, a shrill snap; then the steady click-clack of the huge clock ceased and Russ knew that the hand would move no more!

A faint call came to him from below; then he could hear many calls and much bustling about.

After minutes that seemed hours, white faces appeared in the opening. A large plank was slid out to him; and when he had straddled it, the men worked him back into the tower—to safety!

An awkward silence followed. Old Maisie, grizzled railroader that he was, spoke first, and of course his remark was matter-of-fact.

About twelve twenty-five," he said, glancing at the idle hands; and, with a wink to the bystanders, "What time have you, young feller?"

Russ smiled rather weakly. "Well, since you ask, I'll tell you. This is just the time when 'Rankin luck' is to be discarded, once and for all; and if you don't understand what I mean by that, ask any clerk from the general office."

Talks Round The World

The British Post Office is taking pride in a recent round-the-world telephone call, which was made at the request of a Melbourne subscriber who wished to speak to Los Angeles, Cal. The call passed over the land line to Sydney, then by radio to London via the Anglo-Australian service, again by radio to New York via the transatlantic service, and from New York across the continent by telephone wire to Los Angeles. The call was effected within an hour of the request and speech both ways was clear. The accomplishment may be marvellous even in this day of radio, but such feats may soon be regarded as commonplace. The only question is that of cost to the caller.

Etiquette—"Never mind, my dear," said the mother gently.

"But, mamma," objected the little girl," suppose I don't know the name of the thing?"

"Then let the salesman show you all he has until he comes to the article you want."

STORY FOR THE CHILDREN

"I Can't"

By Elsa Gorham Baker

"Oh, I can't! I know I can't!" said Mabel.

"Yes, you can," said her cousin George. "Why, it's just as easy! Look!"

And he ran back and forth several times on the big log that made a bridge across the stream.

Mabel's home was in the city, and she had never been in the country until that summer. Cross that stream on a slippery, mossy log? She never could do it, she knew.

"I can't," she said again.

"Just try it," coaxed George. "You want to see that big rock I've been telling you about, don't you? Then come on."

"Well, I'll try," said Mabel slowly. "But please carry Florine across first and, oh, do be careful of her."

Florine was Mabel's best loved doll. Indeed, she was a doll that no little girl could have helped loving, for she had curling yellow hair, rounded rosy cheeks and big blue eyes that could open and close. Even George said that for a doll Florine wasn't "half bad."

George carried Florine safe across the stream. Then he ran back to Mabel and steadied her with both hands while she slowly and carefully crossed. There really wasn't much danger of her slipping, for the log was wide, and it was firmly placed; but she gave a big sigh of relief when she stepped on the bank.

"Now show me the rock," she said and, carrying Florine tenderly in her arms, she followed George.

Up a hill they went, across a big pasture lot, over a railfence, along a little winding path that ran through a grove of birches, and then they turned a corner.

"There it is," said George.

Mabel stared in wonder. It was the biggest rock she had ever seen, though it was only twice as high as she was. But the most astonishing thing of all was that trees and bushes were growing right out of its flat top.

"Well, I never!" cried Mabel. "How can trees grow up there?"

"There's dirt up there," explained George. "It's made out of rock that has been crumbling up finer and finer every year for years. Of course there isn't much dirt; but those are cedar trees, and they'll stick their roots down into a crack and manage to live if there's any chance at all. Come on up on top."

"What? Climb up there? I can't!" cried Mabel.

"You said you couldn't cross that log, but you did," said George. "This isn't much harder. Look! I'll show you how to start. Take hold here, then put one foot in this crack and your other one on that little ledge there."

George was climbing as he spoke. In less than a minute he had scrambled to the top of the rock and climbed down again.

"There, did that look hard?"

"No," Mabel admitted.

"Shall I take Florine up?" asked George.

"I guess I'll leave her down here," said Mabel. She might fall off, and I couldn't bear to have anything happen to her."

So she put her to sleep on a soft bed of ferns.

Mabel found climbing the rock hard work. She did a great deal of slipping and sliding, but George did plenty of pushing and pulling, and so she managed to reach the top at last.

They explored every inch of the top. Besides the cedars, there were little wild cherry trees, blackberry vines, big clumps of feathery fern and some columbines. Mabel thought she had never seen anything so pretty as the delicate yellow, lavender and pink flowers.

But when it was time to start for home there was trouble.

"You go down first," said George.

Mabel put one foot over the edge, then she looked down and drew it back quickly.

"I can't," she said.

"Don't be always saying that," said George. "Go ahead."

"I can't repeated Mabel. "This time I really can't. It makes me dizzy just to look down."

George coaxed and urged, but it was no use. He saw that Mabel really was afraid.

"Well," he said at last, "you can't stay here all night. Can you climb down on a ladder if I go home and get one?"

"Yes," said Mabel. "O George! I hate to be such a bother!"

"We've got a short ladder at home that won't be very heavy to carry," George answered.

He climbed quickly down the rock and disappeared along the path at a run.

Mabel sat still for a few minutes. How quiet it was here in the woods! The leaves hung silent in the sunlight; the flowers and mosses seemed asleep. Suddenly there was a loud rustling in the leaves. It sounded near the place where she had left Florine.

Mabel peeped over the edge of the rock. She found that she did not feel dizzy unless she looked straight down; but the ground still looked far away. She could see Florine sleeping soundly in her sweet, ferny bed. Just then the rustling grew louder, and a moment later a big brown dog came walking out of the woods. He was big and brown and woolly.

Mabel watched him as he nosed round here and there. All at once he saw Florine. He stood still for a moment, then, going close, he began to sniff at her. A second more and he had picked her up in his mouth and was trotting away with her.

"Stop it! Drop her!" Mabel screamed.

At the sound of her voice the big dog looked back and wagged his tail in a friendly way . Then he turned and went on again.

Mabel did not wait a second but scrambled over the edge of the rock. She had no thought now of being dizzy or fear of falling. She had only one idea—to save her precious Florine. She did not even try to find the footholds that George had pointed out to her. Half sliding, half falling, she reached the ground in less time than it had taken George himself to reach it.

Catching up a big stick that lay near, she ran after Florine and the dog. The dog looked back again, and when he saw the stick that Mabel was waving in the air, he dropped Florine and broke into a run. His woolly tail was between his legs, and his woolly ears were flapping backward.

Mabel picked Florine up tenderly.

"Oh, my darling dolly! Did the bad dog hurt you? He's torn your dress and mussed up your pretty curls, but I guess that's all."

Suddenly Mabel thought of George. "I must run and stop him from bringing the ladder," she thought. And with Florine in her arms she hurried down the path.

George was just crossing the stream when he caught sight of Mabel running toward him. In his astonishment he dropped the ladder and almost tumbled off the log.

"How in the world—" he begna.

"Really," Mabel broke in, "I was sure I couldn't get down, George, and then something happened."

And as they walked back to the house, carrying the ladder between them, she told him about Florine's adventure.

"That must have been Joe Lane's dog," said George. "He carries home all sorts of things. He took a cushion from our porch once, and another time he stole one of my rubber boots. First time I ever heard of his running away with a doll, though."

"He didn't get very far with my precious child," said Mabel, giving Florine a squeeze. "I tell you, after this, George, I'm not going to say 'I can't' so much, because I found out this afternoon that if I really have to I can."

"I wondered how long you were going to take to find that out," said George.

Fare Takes Last Dime

New York.—When Louis Cattalli, who is 18, found a diamond-studded platinum wrist watch in the street his first impression was that it looked expensive.

So he set out to try to find the owner, by way of the police. He spent his last dime to get to a Bronx precinct station and had to borrow car fare home.

The watch was set with 85 diamonds and its strap was a double rope of pearls. If it isn't claimed within six months it's Louis' property. And, as he is one of a poor family of ten children, the possibility is intriguing. The bauble is worth, jewellers said, about $2,000.

Mistress: "I'm urprised, Bridget, to see you straining the soup through a table napkin."

Teacher: "What are the two genders?"

Student: "Masculine and feminine. The masculines are divided into temperate and intemperate; and the feminines into frigid and torrid."

Black Eye Worth $170 Montreal Judge Says

Some time ago, Miss Fanny Applebaum, of Montreal, suffered a black eye in a street car accident. She was awarded $170, including $20 on account of the suffering and annoyance arising from her injury, by Superior Court Justice Delorimier. The Montreal Tramways was told by the judge that no one liked to go in public with a black eye. It caused remarks and suspicions, more or less disagreeable. In defence, the company said the eyes Justice Delorimier decided that Miss Applebaum's black eye was worth $170.

Radio Owners Ineligible For Relief In Monaghan

Peterboro. — Through a decision reached by the North Monaghan council, the possession of a radio will debar a resident of that municipality from participating in the unemployment relief scheme. The council decided that applicants for municipal work or relief must turn their liquor permits over to the vendor, stop driving motor cars, allow their home conditions to be officially investigated and get rid of radio sets and similar luxuries.

Familiar Voice.

"Only yesterday," said Jones, who was discussing philanthropy, "I refused a woman a small sum of money and in conequence I passed a sleepless night. The tone of her reproachful voice never left me for a moment."

"Dear me, indeed a kind heart! Who was the woman?"

"My wife."

Requiescat.

A farmer was trying to fill out a claim sheet for damages inflicted by the railway. His cow had been killed, and he so entered it on the blank. All went well until he came to the question: "Disposition of the carcass?—"

He puzzled for a time, then filled in—"Kind and gentle."

A travelling salesman walked into a restaurant, sat down at a table, and said to the waitress: "I want two boiled eggs boiled four minutes, a steak broiled fifteen minutes and some toast lightly browned."

"How many minutes on the toast?" asked the waitress.

They were returning homewards from their expensive week end, penniless and dejected.

"The trouble is," said the husband, "that my next pay day is a month off. Whatever shall we do?"

"Listen, dear," laughed the young wife. "I'll tell you a secret. Before we went away I hid five pounds in the pantry."

"Yes, I know," groaned the husband, "but I found it."

The heckler was making interruptions. Even the audience got tired of it. Shouts of "Turn him out!" were heard. "Oh no," said the speaker of the evening. "Don't turn him out. The poor fellow probably daren't say a word at home." There were no more interruptions.

Captain and mate wrote the ship's log alternately, and mate being drunk the captain faithfully recorded: "The mate is drunk today."

On the following day, the mate, seeing what had been entered concerning himself, faithfully recorded: "The captain is sober today."

"Honey, I'm knee-deep in love with you."

INSURANCE

DRIVE in SAFETY

with an Automobile Insurance Policy to protect you against the hazards of Fire, Theft, Collision, Property Damage and Public Liability.

Every Automobile Owner in Ontario should know about the new Financial Responsibility Law effective since September 1st. The new law makes necessary the abi lity to pay for damage.

In its general application, it requires that the motorist responsible for damage to person or property of others MUST PAY either personally or through insurance OR BE BARRED FROM THE ROAD.

The sensible thing to do is to carry Automobile Liability and Property Damage Insurance. It is better to have this insurance and not need it, than to need it and not have it.

Mainly About People

Mr. Delbert Fyke and Mr. C. Eaton have returned to Rochester, N. Y., after spending a few days with the former's mother, Mrs. M. Fyke, leaving Mrs. Eaton on an extended visit.

The many friends of Mrs. W. Miles Marcellus are glad to know she is improving nicely after her serious illness.

Mrs. Ora McIntosh

Sunset and Evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

Once more, God in all wise Providence, has seen fit to call to her eternal rest one of his faithful servants, a woman who, in her quiet and unoffensive way, made friends with all those whose privilege it was to come in contact with her, and made enemies of none.

Mrs. McIntosh, nee Edith Mary Allison, was called home on December 5th. The funeral was held in St. Peter's Lutheran church, Rev. Cronmiller officiating.

She leaves to mourn her sad departure, her husband, Mr. Ora McIntosh; their adopted son Master Sam Telford, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Allison, of Dunbar; her three brothers, Mr. Alex Allison, of Wawota, Sask; Mr. Aaron Allison, of Aylesbury, Sask., and Mr. Andrew Allison, of Dunbar; her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Allison, of Cobourg, Ont., besides a host of friends.

The floral offerings were—Husband and Sam, a wreath; Father, Mother, and Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Allison, a wreath; Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Allison and family, Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Allison and family, a wreath; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Allison, a spray; Mr. and Mrs. Peter McIntosh and Miss Beatrice, a spray; Mr. and Mrs. Stanley McIntosh, Mr. and Mrs. Merle McIntosh, a wreath; Mr. and Mrs. Linden Shannette and Mr. and Mrs. Adam Froats, a wreath; Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Loucks and family, a spray; the Misses Aleda, Edna and Master Carmen McIntosh a spray; the Mill-Bunch, a wreath.

St. Andrew's Bazaar

On Saturday afternoon, December 6th, the Ladies' Aid of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church held their annual bazaar and food sale in the Library Hall.

The Hall was prettily decorated and had a real Christmas look. The tables were nicely arranged and looked decidedly attractive with their wonderful assortment of every kind of delicious cooking one could think of.

The candy table attracted young and old with its many beautiful boxes of every kind of candy, which drew comments from every one.

The table where the home cooking was on display from tested recipes, and samples given out with a cup of coffee were in great demand and the ladies in charge received many congratulations.

The home cooking testified to the fact that the reputation the Presbyterian ladies hold for that art still holds good. People were asking for home-made bread an hour after the last had been sold.

Mesdames Baldrey, Shaver, McIntosh, Bailey, Barrie, Campbell, Henderson, Doering and Misses Lila and Gertie Weegar and Miss Rae took charge of the booths while Miss Jamieson was cashier. We wish to thank all who helped to make the bazaar a success.

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. W. Miles Marcellus wish to thank the friends and neighbours who so kindly assisted during Mrs. Marcellus illness, also the Ladies' Aid and the W. M. S. for the beautiful flowers.

Winchester Springs L.O.L. Elects Officers

The annual meeting of L. O. L. No. 580, Winchester Springs, was held in their lodge rooms in the Orange Hall on Tuesday evening, Dec. 2, when the reports of the past year were presented and the officers elected for the ensuing year. Following the election of officers by Bro. Graham, of Kingston, Past Grand Master of Ontario East, and present grand organizer, he gave the members a talk which was approved of by all.

The list of officers is as follows:
W. M.—Bro. Fraser Bolton
D. M.—Bro. Ross Morrow
Chaplain—Bro. Henry McDonald
Rec. Sec.—Bro. Frank Nesbitt
Fin. Sec.—Bro. W. M. Bolton
Treasurer—Bro. Carl Munroe
Dir. of Cer.—Bro. J. M. Bolton
1st Lecturer—Bro. Cecil Casselman
2nd Lecturer—Bro. Archie Bailey
1st Com.—Bro. Ernest Morrow
Inside Guard—Bro. Ross Hess.

The election being over, the installation was proceeded with by Brother Graham.

It was decided to hold the annual banquet the following night, December 3rd in the down stairs hall where the brethren with their wives and children gathered to do ample justice to the well-laden tables which were prepared by the ladies. The evening's programme of songs and music was enjoyed by all. The chair was very ably filled by Bro. Howard Nesbitt. Rev. Morrison, of Elma, gave a very able address on "the Church and the Orange Association in General" which was very much appreciated. Community singing was enjoyed, the accompanist being Mrs. Robert Ball. The singing of God Save the King brought the first part for the evening to a close.

The young folks then enjoyed themselves to their satisfaction by tripping the light fantastic to the strains of the violin played by Brother Cecil Casselman, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Clarence Thompson and Mrs. Frank Nesbitt, until the wee sma' hours. All were well satisfied with this annual banquet and merry time, hoping they would be able to attend the annual banquet next year.
