High Prices are Predicted For Eggs and Poultry, owing to Export Demand

We Export to Great Britain direct.

It will pay Farmers handsomely to feed and care for their Poultry Flocks.

Farmers of Canada lose millions of dollars annually from bad methods of producing and handling eggs. Considerable loss is preventable because it is due to partial hatching of the fertile eggs which have been allowed to become warm enough to begin to incubate.

Heat is the great enemy of eggs both fertile and infertile. Summer heat has the same effect on fertile eggs as the hen or incubator. Farmers are urged to follow these simple rules, which cost nothing but time and thought, and will add dollars to the poultry producers' returns.

- 1—Keep the nests clean and provide plenty of clean straw in and around the hen house.
- 2—Gather the eggs twice daily.
- 3—Keep the eggs in a cool, dry room or cellar until the collector calls for them.
- 4—Market the eggs at least once a week.
- 5—Sell, kill or confine all male birds when the hatching season is over.
- 6—Make application for membership in the Dundas Co-operative Association, Limited, and participate in the profits on the sale of your eggs and poultry.

(Ogdensburg News.)

Col. J. Wesley Allison of Morrisburg was elected president of the Morgan Chemical Corporation which is soon to commence operations in the Arnold brewery building in Main street at a meeting of organization held at Sprat & Van Kennen's law office this week.

The concern was recently incorporated with the secretary of state and it is expected to get the plant in operation early in December.

The following are the officers: President, J. Wesley Allison; vice-president, Neil E. Morgan; secretary, Frederick V. Moore and treasurer, Hon. James E. Kelly.

The board of directors will be composed of the following gentlemen: R. J. Donohue, W. M. Stephens, Herbert L. Wallace, Herman; Harrison O. Meredith, William S. Moore, Hon. James E. Kelly, Hon. Julius Frank, Neil E. Morgan and J. Wesley Allison.

The personnel of the board indicates a very strong, sound and substantial organization which gives promise of becoming a humming live wire industry for Ogdensburg.

His connection with the corporation brings a fine gentleman into the business life of Ogdensburg and is an incident which will surely rebound to the benefit of this splendid municipality. Associated with him are some of Ogdensburg's best known business men and financiers such as R. J. Donohue, James E. Kelly, Julius Frank, W. M. Stephens and others.

The concern manufactures insecticides, disinfectants, bactericides and fungicides which are used to prolong animal and plant life.

LOCAL BOY GETS HIS REWARD

Just what sports mean to a town, can only be told to one who understands the possibilities of advertising. That a town has no better asset along this line (better even than its newspaper), one realizes, when he picks up a city paper enjoying the large circulation of the Ogdensburg News, to be told therein that Morrisburg has been brought into the limelight through one of its athletes. The "News" in handing out the rewards to its "All-Star City Baseball Aggregation," features the work of Mr. Ray Mallen, as follows:

"Mallon, the Morrisburg boy, is perhaps one of the greatest semi-professional twirlers in the north today. He could be depended upon, if given the proper support, to win nine games out of ten. The control and curves he had were marvelous, and although he lost a few games during the season it was because the support cracked and let the opposing team through. He is a pitcher who has the rare ability of outguessing the batter and on more than one occasion demonstrated that he was a player of exceptional ability. Mallon took part in ten games."

BODY FOUND NEAR

CORNWALL COAL DOCK

The body of William Swan, aged fifty-five, formerly of the vicinity of Alexandria Bay, was found on Tuesday in shallow water near the Cornwall coal dock at that resort. The body was discovered by C. N. Hunt, caretaker of the yacht Sport, who found it standing upright in the river, the face four inches below the water's level and one hand thrust upwards above the surface.

Swan had come from Syracuse to settle some business affairs. It is believed that while descending some steps at the coal dock to get aboard his brother's houseboat he stumbled in the darkness and fell into the river. Overcome by the shock of the cold water, and confused in the darkness, it is thought, he waded into deeper water and was drowned.

OBITUARY

MRS. HARRIET SMITH

As briefly announced in these columns last week, Mrs. Harriett Smith, wife of Mr. Wm. Smith of Mariatown, died at her home, Mariatown, on Sunday morning, Nov. 6th, in her 71st year. Although somewhat advanced in years, deceased had enjoyed fairly good health until the last few months. She was of a particularly bright nature, and consequently enjoyed a large circle of friends, who learned with much regret of her demise.

The late Mrs. Smith was born in Winchester township; fifty-two years ago she was united in marriage to Mr. Wm. Smith of Mariatown, where they had since resided. By this union there were born ten children, seven of whom survive, viz: Mrs. W. J. Smyth, Morrisburg; Mrs. Dill, Mariatown; Mrs. Wilkins, Mariatown; Mrs. LaBelle, Montreal; Miss Addie Smith, Montreal; Miss Grace Smith (at home); and Alex. Smith, Mariatown.

The funeral service was held at her late home on Saturday morning, November 8th, at 10.30, Rev. Miller officiating. Interment was made in Hanes cemetery.

All the children were present at the funeral.

PREMIER EXTOLS

WORK OF WOMEN

Something Should Be Done to get Women on School Board, Says Premier Drury.

(The Mail and Empire)

Hon. Ernest C. Drury made his first appearance on any platform, after taking the oath of office, when he visited the meeting of the Women's Institutes of Ontario at Technical School yesterday afternoon. He was accompanied by Hon. Manning W. Doherty, Minister of Agriculture, and as the two members of the new Government made their way to the platform, the large gathering of women stood at attention in their honor. The Premier and Mr. Doherty arrived at the hall during the presentation of an educational moving picture, and were witnesses of the second act of the picture until its completion, when a break was made in the proceedings to allow of their addressing the meeting.

The Premier made apology for not having visited the convention earlier, and pleaded stress of business as his excuse. "I want to tell you," he said, "how in the past I have appreciated the work done by the Women's Institutes, and do appreciate the importance of the work they will do in future. Our Government which has come into power on the crest of a moral wave, will stand behind you in your work," he said. In speaking of the work accomplished by the women in the interest of child welfare, Mr. Drury said that the most important product of the country is the children; there were five at his house, and they were the main object of his maintaining the house as it was. He said that in the past there had been too much effort spent in securing wealth as compared with the effort put forth to secure happiness to the individual, and there was never a time when the proper training and education of the child was of so much importance as now. He did not think, he said, that men knew nearly as much about an educational system as did women, and he was convinced that SOMETHING SHOULD BE DONE TO GET WOMEN ON THE RURAL SCHOOL BOARDS. In future the Women's Institutes would be granted the broadest freedom in order that for one thing, the women might prepare themselves for the fullest responsibilities of citizenship. The women's work for child welfare was a noble and valuable one, said Mr. Drury.

FARMERS TO TAKE OVER

ONTARIO CREAMERIES

In an Ontario report, sent to the Western Council of Agriculture, Winnipeg, submitted by J. J. Morrison, R. W. E. Burnaby and R. H. Halbert, it was pointed out that while there are only 40,000 in the United Farmers of Ontario, the vote in support of their members at the recent election totalled more than 116,000, showing that the election was more than a mere class movement among organized farmers. He estimated that 55 per cent. of the support given farmers was old Conservative backing.

A telegram from Ontario was read reporting a decision on the part of dairy farmers to launch immediately a large co-operative company to take over and operate creameries and cheese factories throughout the province. More than a thousand plants are involved.

WOMENS INSTITUTE ORGANIZE IN WINCHESTER

At a meeting of the Women of Winchester, called on Nov. 7th, Mrs. Gollan, the District Organizer of the Women's Institute of Morewood, gave a very interesting and helpful address on the work of the Institute, and it was decided to organize a branch in Winchester. Thirty-two members were obtained and the following officers were appointed:

President—Mrs. Ritchie.
1st. Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Suffer.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Earle.
Sec.-Treas.—Mrs. Eagleson.
Directors—Mrs. McCormick, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Carr, Mrs. Faith.
District Directors—Mrs. T. O. Keyes.

Program Com.—Mrs. Suffer, Mrs. Cartwright, Mrs. Boyd, Mrs. J. W. Ault.

ARE WE SINCERE?

It was with a great deal of pride that we viewed the actions of the Women's Institute some months ago when they put themselves on record as being in favor of spending $10,000 towards a monument to commemorate the noble deeds of the dead. We have never since questioned their sincerity in the matter, but their complete silence and failure to put themselves on record as being opposed to certain undesirable local conditions has jeopardized their sincerity in the eyes of the public, as champions for morality.

Social betterment, we understand, is the fundamental basis of this Society, and we learned some time ago that there was a certain amount of magnetism about this organization which could get them pretty nearly anything they wanted. Then, if conditions as they existed lately is what they want, we have been highly deceived in their sincerity.

Women seek, and enjoy, the same rights as men do, and therefore must assume, to a certain extent, the same responsibilities. Failing to discharge their duty, they must expect criticism through the same channels as men get theirs.

"PARTY 16"

A Romance of Dartmoor.

The great prison at Moorlands wakes early, and the chill, autumn sun was barely above the rim of the tall towers to the eastwards, when Warder Holt, coming out of the steel gate at the entrance of B Hall, met his friend, Assistant-Warder Pridham.

"Morning, Holt!" said the latter, with a smile. "You're looking uncommon cheerful! Anyone left you a fortune?"

"Better than that, Pridham!" replied Holt, beaming. "Jessie and I settled it last night."

"I'm glad to hear it, Martin!" said Pridham, heartily. "Jessie Drake is the sort to make any man a good wife, and she'll get a first-class husband too. But, I say, what about Crump?"

"I thought he was in the running?"

"I'm afraid he was," answered Holt. "But Jessie took me, so that's all there is about it."

"I hope it is," said Pridham doubtfully. "All the same, Crump's not the sort to take it lying down."

Holt shrugged his shoulders.

"Oh, he won't be ass enough to bear malice. But I can't stop here yarning. I've got a new party this morning. They've given me No. 16."

"I wish you joy," said Pridham. "You've got that beauty Fagan in it?"

"Sixteen was a farm party. Their job was ditching a piece of reclaimed moorland, and the ground was full of rugged blocks of granite, which had to be dug out one by one."

Most of the rocks were too heavy to be lifted by one man, and often three or four were needed to tackle a big lump.

Holt was busy showing two men how to get a stone out of one of the trenches, when a sharp cry made him turn quickly. Jupp, a miserable little rat of a man, was rolling on the ground hugging his foot, his face twisted with pain.

"Fagan let the stone fall on my foot on purpose!" moaned Jupp.

"He lies!" growled Fagan, towering, black and forbidding, above the injured man.

Bowen, Martin's assistant-warder, came striding up.

"Jupp is quite right. I saw it myself."

Holt turned on Fagan.

"I'll have none of this in my party," he said. "I shall report you."

Holt was as good as his word, and Fagan got two days' cells, with "A" diet, and lost a number of marks. He looked as dangerous as a caged gorilla when he came back to work, but Holt, being no fool, kept watch on the fellow, and for a time all went well.

Then came a thunderbolt. Returning to his quarters one evening, Martin Holt found a letter from his mother, who lived at Coombe Stanton, in North Devon. Never dreaming for an instant of the terrible news it contained, he opened it eagerly. The shaky, tear-stained writing was almost illegible, and it was only by degrees that he gathered that his brother Russell was in goal on the charge of killing a gamekeeper in a midnight affray.

The blow was heavy enough in all conscience, but there was worse to follow. Russell was committed to the Sessions, tried, and sentenced to five years' penal servitude.

Martin told no one, not even Jessie. Nor did he tell the papers anything, for poor Russell, in order to save his family from disgrace, had chosen to be tried and sentenced under the name of Drew.

Fate had not yet done its worst to Martin Holt, for Russell was sent to Moorlands, and, by a refinement of unconscious cruelty, drafted in Party 16.

The poor fellow was utterly loyal. Not by a word or sign did he betray his relationship. Martin would have given worlds to apply for an exchange, but to do so would mean leaving Jessie, and that he simply could not do.

Russell was married, and, of course, his wife was left without support. Martin did his best for her, but this stopped his saving to furnish the house which he and Jessie were hoping for.

One night Martin, coming back from a call on Jessie, met Pridham, and the two fell into step.

"When are you going to be married?" asked Pridham.

"We haven't settled yet," answered Martin.

"Well, don't be too long about it," advised Pridham. "That beggar Crump has been saying that you're only playing with the girl."

"I'll break his neck if I hear him!" exclaimed Martin, with sudden anger.

"He'd be the better for a good hammering," admitted Pridham, turning away towards his cottage, which was outside the prison. "But be careful, Holt! Don't do anything foolish."

In spite of Pridham's good advice, Martin was boiling as he strode towards the bachelor quarters, which were in a block by themselves, close to the prison gate.

As he entered he met a man coming out, a tall, dark man with a sallow face, thin lips, and dark, deep-set eyes. It was Oliver Crump.

Both pulled up short.

"I hear you've been blackguarding me behind my back," said Martin hotly. "Crump smiled unpleasantly.

"Your conscience must be troubling you if you believe everything you hear!" he sneered.

Martin became cool—dangerously cool.

"Never mind my conscience. If you've anything to say about me, say it to my face; that is, if you're not afraid to."

Crump lost his temper.

"Afraid of you! I'd hammer you into a cocked hat as soon as look at you."

"Suppose you try," suggested Martin softly.

Crump's answer was a heavy blow aimed at Martin's jaw. Martin swung his head aside, and as Crump lurched forward, hit him under the ear. Caught off his balance, Crump crashed against the wall, then falling heavily to the floor, lay still.

Martin waited a moment. There was no one about. With a great effort he picked up his enemy, swung his body over his shoulder, carried him into Crump's quarters, and dropped him on the bed.

Next moment Crump's eyes opened, and never had Martin seen anything like the malevolent glare in them.

"You swine!" he said hoarsely. "I'll be even with you if it takes me a year. Get out of my room!"

Martin shrugged his shoulders.

"If that's the way you take it—" he said, and went out.

One fine, cold morning Party 16 was busy, as usual, at the ditching, when Martin noticed Fagan edging out of his place, and at once ordered him back. Fagan sulkily obeyed, and Martin passed on to the end of the line.

Suddenly he heard his assistant-warden, Bowen, cry out Fagan's number in sharp tones. Wheeling round, he saw that the giant had rushed forward right out of the line, and snatched up from under a great boulder something which glittered in the pale sunshine. It was a half-pint flask full of some yellow liquid—spirit, no doubt.

"Put that down, Fagan!" he shouted.

For answer, Fagan defiantly plucked the stopper out of the bottle, and flinging his head back, began pouring the fiery stuff down his throat.

READY TO SERVE AND GOOD TO EAT

CLARK'S CANADIAN BOILED DINNER

Next instant Martin had snatched the bottle from the great, brown, brawny hands, and shattered it on a rock.

But the mere taste of the stuff had already done its deadly work, and transformed Fagan into a raging wild beast. With a howl of fury he hit out with all his might. His great fist smashed into Martin's face, and as the latter went down the huge convict pounced upon him.

"I'll square it this time!" he hissed, with an oath. Holding Martin by the throat with one hand, with the other he snatched up a great, jagged chunk of sharp-edged granite.

The whole thing had happened so quickly that only Bowen was near enough to interfere. Losing his head in the excitement, he dropped his rifle, and, seizing Fagan by the arm, tried to pull him off. He had not reckoned upon the maddened convict's enormous strength.

Fagan dropped the stone, swung round, still on his knees, caught Bowen round the waist, and hurled him to the ground with such frightful force that he lay there as still as poor Martin himself.

Another instant and Martin's brains must have been dashed out, when a yellow-clad figure shot from the ranks of the staring convicts, and flung himself, barehanded, upon the maddened giant. So fierce was the force of his rush that Fagan lost his balance and went over sideways, Russell Holt—for it was he—on top of him.

For a second or two there was a wild and frantic struggle; then came a snap like a dry twig breaking, and Fagan, with a snarl of fury, had rolled the plucky convict, now almost unconscious, on his back, with a broken collar-bone.

Once, twice the gnarled fist descended upon the unlucky Russell's face, smashing it out of all semblance of humanity. Then the first of the guards reached him, the butt of a rifle thudded on the brute's head, and Fagan keeled over and lay like a log.

Colonel Peyton's face was grimmer than usual as he took down the details with which Martin furnished him.

Presently he looked up.

"This whisky—who left the flask out in the open field? Have you any idea?"

"None whatever, sir."

"How came it that you did not see it?"

"It was under a rock, sir."

"You are supposed to have eyes for everything of the sort," Colonel Peyton's anger made him even more severe than usual. "How can I trust an officer who fails to see a flask of spirit left right among his men?"

Martin's heart sank to his boots. His throat went dry. Was he going to be degraded? If so, good-bye to all his hopes.

"Well, what have you to say?" asked the colonel harshly.

Martin did not answer.

Before Colonel Peyton could speak again there was a knock at the door.

"Come in!" said the governor.

Pridham entered, and with him Jupp, Fagan's miserable victim.

"This man has a communication to make, sir," said Pridham. "He says he knows who left the flask in the field."

The colonel stared at Jupp.

"Who was it?" he asked, more mildly.

"It was Mr. Crump, sir—Warder Crump. It's the truth I'm a-telling, sir," went on the little lag earnestly. "You see, I ain't in Party 16 no longer. I helps with the cows. I were a-taking 'em out after milking just after sunrise, when I seed Mr. Crump a-crossing that there newtake, and I watched him a-laying something down under that very stone. The light was on it, and I seed it glitter."

The colonel questioned Jupp keenly, but the little man stuck to his story. "Send for Crump," ordered the colonel. There was a long delay. Then the messenger returned.

"We can't find him, sir. They say he took the fast train to Plymouth."

Crump had somehow got wind that his plot had been blown upon, and had bolted.

Prison governors sometimes know more of what is going on than warders suspect, and the colonel had probably heard something of the rivalry between Crump and Martin.

At any rate he said not another word about punishing Martin.

What he did say was that "Drew" had behaved with great gallantry, and that he meant to lay the facts before the Home Secretary.

Martin went away much cheered, and resolved to let Russell know as soon as his brother had recovered consciousness.

Ten days later word flew round the prison that an order had come from the Home Office that in consideration of his gallantry the rest of Drew's sentence was remitted, and that as soon as his hair was grown again he would be released. Martin was the first to wire the good news to his mother.

A month later Martin married Jessie Drake.

Woman's Sphere

An Eight-Hour Day for Babies.

An eight-hour day for babies. Why not? Everybody else has 'em. This is an age of uplift and organization. There are societies of every sort for preventions, benefits and rights; laws governing the time and conditions under which men and women may work; laws insisting upon a proper treatment of bow wows, horses, donkeys, pigs, and even lobsters. Complacently the old world rubs its hands and inquires, "Everybody happy?"

Decidedly not! What about that unclassified morsel of humanity, neither man, woman, minor nor animal? What about the baby? This is, I repeat, an age of uplift, but the only uplift he gets is a playful toss in the air. What of his rights, benefits and preventions? He has about as many at the present time as a Chinese goldfish—the right to live, be fed and to be displayed to the greatest advantage.

He has raised his voice in his own behalf many times, but the trouble is he speaks a foreign language variously interpreted and but indifferently understood. If he cries, according to parent parlance, he is either hungry, uncomfortable or in a temper, more supposedly the latter.

It is no use. He has raised his voice—now I raise mine. An eight-hour day for babies, shorter hours, longer naps; away with social duties and visitings.

Gaze upon him. There he lies, crumpled down in an exhausted heap upon a hard and corset-proof lap, or dangling in head-rolling impotence over a rough-coated shoulder with a mouthful of fur for a pacifier, a spectacle of speechless infelicity.

I have often caught these little travelers regarding me with an expression of morose resentment. Peering out of their lace bonnets, always askew, the accusation in their eyes is unmistakable.

"Give us our right," they signal gloomily. "Down with train rides, sleigh rides, shopping, movies and visits. An eight-hour day." Uneasily I avert my eyes and reflect anew upon "man's inhumanity to—babies."

Added to the late-hour habit is the exhibition evil, largely the outgrowth of parental pride. At all hours of the day and night the baby is rudely awakened and brought out like a new hat or bonnet for inspection, made to laugh and look at pretty pretties and be jostled up and down.

Just what is a baby, anyway? A side show or an ornament? Frankly, it is hard to tell. From the manner of handling they get from grown-ups one would think they were labeled like certain bottles of medicine: "Shake before taking." That is another thing to be considered along with the eight-hour day, a society for the prevention of shaking. No wonder so many babies look rattled. They are.

And while we are on this subject,

I may as well suggest another uplift, namely, the elimination of marketing from the baby coach. In many coaches the visibility of the baby is nil. The coach itself might be an Italian pushcart and the mother a vegetable vendor, for all the passerby may know. Moreover, it is a sacred invasion upon infant right. Ignominiously the poor baby is trundled along with the family dinner on top of him—forced to view the scenery through celery tops and salad leaves—to say nothing of the weight of potatoes and other sundries upon his small toes.

If, truly, this is an age of uplift, let it include our littlest citizen. Let the right of the baby be looked into and his voice be heard and understood. Away with grown-up excuses and reasons. His first two years should be of uninterrupted tranquillity; his place, in the home. An eight-hour day for babies. Who will join their voices to his and to mine?

Farm Management Factors in the Cost of Crop Production.

The cost of production of farm crops is determined by a group of factors which depend on the ability of the farmer as a manager to organize in such a manner that the crops are produced with a minimum of labor and expense. These factors are:

1. Arrangement of Fields. It is not always possible to have the field arrangement of the farm exactly as one wishes. There may be some natural formation that necessitates an arrangement far from the ideal but this condition can often be improved to the extent that working the farm is much more efficient and easier.

An ideal arrangement would include the following features: All fields easily accessible to the buildings, no angles in the lanes or driveways where turning with heavy loads would be necessary, and as little land as possible taken up in lanes and division lines. With this arrangement we can save time by shorter trips to the barn, draw larger loads by avoiding short turns, utilize all the land for crops that is possible, and eliminate waste places that harbor weeds and plant diseases.

2. Size and Shape of Fields. The shape of the fields is equally important. Rectangular fields with square corners are the cheapest to handle. Uniform shape and size of fields permit efficient use of large team units and modern machinery. Large fields decrease the cost of every operation and also cost very much less to fence. If possible it is advisable to have the number of fields the same as the number of years necessary to complete a cycle of the rotation. For example, for a rotation of corn, oats and barley, wheat and clover, requiring four years for a single field to produce all those crops, an ideal arrangement would be to have four uniform fields or, if very large, eight.

3. Rotations. The rotation determines to a large extent the distribution of labor on the crops. If the proper crops are chosen there is a sequence of operation throughout the season. This enables us to care for the crops with a minimum amount of labor at any one time. Since labor is from forty to fifty per cent of the entire expense of growing a crop, economy in this respect influences cost of production. A properly planned rotation will also keep the land in the best of condition and larger yields will be secured from a given amount of money and energy expended.

4. Efficient Use of Labor. The efficient use of labor is the most important of all the factors limiting the profits on farm products. This factor is dependent on practically every other factor involved and is of such importance that we will deal with this phase of farm management in another article.

5. Farm Equipment. The cost of production is also dependent on the equipment of the farm. It can be decreased if we do not confuse proper equipment with over-equipment. It is not the number of machines nor the money invested in equipment that counts, but machines that are adapted to the specific needs of the individual farm. It is the size of the farm, the shape of the fields, the number of horses kept, the number of men working, and the crops raised, that determine largely the equipment needed to produce the crops at a low cost of production. In an article of this description it is impossible to make specific recommendations but these general rules and principles apply in practically all instances.

6. Arrangement and Plan of Buildings. Well arranged and properly planned buildings make the storing of crops much cheaper. The crops can be stored much more quickly and easily. If the buildings have been located so that they are convenient to the fields and the interior so planned that it is easy to get the crops in and out, valuable time is saved. The storage space in the barn should be arranged to meet the needs of the particular crops of the rotation so that each crop is stored in its respective space. Granaries should be so located that putting the grain in and out can be done without heavy and wearisome lifting. The roofs should be so constructed that hay slings and horse forks may be used, and many other conveniences that go to make the handling of the crops less burdensome. All of these things tend to reduce the cost of production. A great deal of thought can be given to this subject that will yield good returns in time saved and satisfaction to the manager.

7. Marketing. Marketing, although not a factor in production is very important since the crop does not actually yield a profit until disposed of. The cost of marketing is often an expensive item and depends, to a large degree, on the farmer as a manager to co-ordinate this with the other work so that the transportation of the crops to the market will not interfere with other farm activities.

"Do you think it pays us to raise oats?" asked a thinking young farmer the other day after he had figured out the yield per acre on his oat crop for this year. "We have threshed out only twenty-eight bushels per acre and really that won't pay us as much wages as if we had worked on the road." He was right. The oat crop was very light and when he expected a yield of sixty bushels he got less than half that amount. It seemed like a losing proposition but he was thinking in terms of growing oats only. Had he been thinking in terms of his whole rotation or the whole farm business his remark might well have been, "Of course, oats have been a poor crop this year but our corn crop has offset this so that on the average we have a normal yield. We can't do away with the oats entirely. They serve as a good crop to balance the rotation and we need both the grain and straw for the stock. There is little else for us to do just at the season that we are working on the oats so we are getting some returns for the time when otherwise our team might be idle. The machinery necessary for the crop is just the same as we use for the wheat and barley, so the oats help to lower the overhead on that. After all, we should not be discouraged because of a poor yield once in a while, the yield this year is the lowest it has been in twelve years and only twice in the last fifty years has the average been so low."

Such a remark would have been evident proof that the young man was applying the principles of good management to his farm operation, considering each crop in its proper relation to the other crops and the farm business as a whole.

Buying Pure-Bred Pullets.

A poultryman recently told me that he figured on pure-bred pullets being worth at least seventy-five to one hundred per cent. more for breeding purposes than for market. This may be true but there is a great variation in the value of pure-bred pullets and the birds are not of much value as breeders just because they are pure-bred. It is fundamental that the birds be pure-bred as a foundation. Then their value is built up according to their other characteristics.

One reason that some farmers are prejudiced against pure-bred poultry is due to some poor quality pure-breds they have seen. Some farmers who have culled their grade stock for years and kept only the best will never cull the pure-bred birds but keep them all. A pure-bred flock should receive a culling and birds of inferior vigor sold on the market. Such birds are not worth seventy-five per cent. more than scrub stock just because they are pure-bred.

When buying pure-bred pullets we figure the value of the birds by the birds themselves. Some pullets are a poor investment at any price. Others might be a bargain at five dollars each. There can be no set rule for purchasing pure-bred poultry and no set price that will accurately determine their value. A pure-bred flock that has been bred for many years for either fancy points or egg production or both, is apt to produce pullets of great breeding value. They are worth more money than ordinary stock because of the blood lines. The qualities for which they are noted have been stamped on them by many years of careful breeding operations and they are able to produce progeny of like qualities.

A flock of pure-bred poultry might be carelessly bred with no effort made to select the best and most vigorous birds for reproduction. At the end of a few years the stock might be pure-bred and yet worth no more than the market value of scrub stock.

We do not like to buy pullets in large quantities as some poultrymen do. Usually it is the beginner who wishes to purchase a large number of pullets so that the dream of a large egg production can begin promptly. Frequently the pullets purchased do not come up to expectations. If pullets are purchased it is better to sacrifice quantity to quality and buy a few first class birds as foundation stock for the larger flocks which are to be raised at home.

The poultryman or farmer who raises his own pullets can cull them rigidly and keep the best. The others can be sold on the market if they are of little value as breeding stock. It does not pay to sell the cull pullets where they will be used for breeders, as too often it causes disappointment. When buying pullets, care should be taken not to purchase the culls from another breeder. Examine the pullets carefully. Find out their age and see if their development corresponds to their age. If possible study the breeding stock from which the pullets were produced.

Pure-bred pullets as foundation stock for poultry flocks should be worth at least seventy-five to one hundred per cent. more than scrubs. But do not stop there. It also pays to classify the pure-breds and not buy foundation stock just because it is pure-bred. It must have other points of value to make it a profitable investment.

Good walks between the buildings on farms add greatly to the ease and comfort with which farm work can be done.

Chick coops can be made during the bad weather and stored away, so they will be ready to set up when the time comes.

Field, Stream and Road

How strange the old-time pictures of sport would look today—baseball teams boasting at least half-a-dozen sets of whiskers—full-bearded cricketers—champions of the scull with their chins concealed.

Today the athlete knows the importance of the well-shaven chin. He is conscious that he is most keen when he is well-groomed—just as is the business man and the soldier.

For men who love outdoor life and sports, men of virile minds and active bodies, we have designed a Gillette Safety Razor with an extra stocky handle—the "Bulldog" Gillette, shown to the left.

Not that the Gillette needs a sturdy grasp. A light touch, with the angle stroke, removes the most stubborn beard with surprising comfort.

The "BULLDOG" Set includes oval Morocco Case with two blade boxes to match, and 12 double-edged blades.

But there is a certain appeal in the thicker handle of the "Bulldog". Ask to see this special set and appreciate the point for yourself.

The case, you will notice, is almost as compact as the famous Pocket Edition Gillette, and the price is the same, $5.00.

Sold by all dealers catering to men's needs.

Hints on the Farmer's Advertising

Farmers are awakening to the need of better marketing methods, and have begun to recognize the value of judicious advertising in marketing farm products. Much advertising is done without results in proportion to the cost in many cases, not only by farmers but by all classes of advertisers, and so complex is the advertising game that advertising experts are in demand and make their employers good money if the business is a large one that justifies the outlay. Most farms would not justify this, but they will justify a careful plan of advertising worked out by the farmer. Too often advertising is looked upon as the spreading of a little ink on paper or chalk or paint on a board that anyone who takes the time to examine it may know what it is there for. Advertising is a whole lot more than that. Its purpose is not only to carry a message but to attract attention to that message, and to give confidence in the one that sends the message and the thing the message refers to. If it does less than all this it falls short of its duty.

First we want to attract the notice of all who want the article or would be at all interested in it, so something in the advertisement must give this information so plainly that it cannot be overlooked. Then one or more enticing qualities should be emphasized so briefly that a glance will convey them to the mind of the reader. This will insure the interest of anyone who has any desire for the article and then the selling argument will be read, but it should be definite and positive. General rambling praise of an article will not have any selling value, but positive statements of definite qualities will.

Plain conservative advertising with a dignity and reserve about it will carry conviction of the reliability of the advertiser and his goods to far better advantage than exaggerated descriptions and bare statements of the seller's honor and honesty, or even an attempt to prove these things by testimonials from people equally as unknown as the advertiser. People look upon the ordinary testimonial as worth less than the ink it took to print it—they're too easy to get and carry too little of the giver's true opinion with them in too many cases.

The selection of an advertising medium should be made in accordance with the kind of article to be sold. Something that a local demand will be likely to be enough to take the lot should be advertised in the local paper, but a good lot of seed corn, a pure-bred animal, eggs from a large pure-bred flock of hens, or other things that the local demand would not be likely to take any amount of, we should advertise in the more widely circulated farm papers or city dailies, and for farm products the farm papers have every advantage. The man who quotes prices when possible sells when others with like goods fail.

Health Talks

Foreign Bodies.

What would happen if a person swallowed a needle or a common pin? is a question asked me in a letter.

Foreign bodies, even needles and pins, when swallowed by infants and very young children seldom cause harm, except when choking appears to be impending. Be sure this accident has occurred, and then send for the doctor. Don't give a laxative. Give some starchy substance, such as oatmeal or potato or cornmeal mush, which may form a semisolid mass in the intestine, so that the object swallowed may become imbedded in the mass and be carried forward.

Small foreign bodies may become lodged in some crevice of the mouth or throat; or, if sharp, they may penetrate the mucous membrane and thus resist the patient's efforts to eject or swallow them. A fish bone, a splinter, or a fragment of straw may cause the trouble. In such cases the doctor must act. A morsel of food or some harder substance may be lodged in the gullet or oesophagus. The symptoms vary all the way from a slight irritation and discomfort on swallowing, to complete strangulation and intense pain, depending on the shape and character of the substance and the particular position which it occupies. The patient's efforts—coughing, gagging and vomiting—may expel the foreign body; or it may be extracted by the patient's finger passed well down the throat. If these simpler means are not sufficient, the doctor must extract it with forceps after examining by means of his throat mirror. Even when the symptoms are not alarming, such substances as artificial teeth, coins, portions of bone or of meat, should be removed as promptly as possible, in order to save the patient from the inflammation which is likely to follow its presence, and which may by its swelling, completely stop up the air passages. In the latter event tracheotomy (opening the wind pipe) may have to be done, by the doctor, of course. The X-ray has become an invaluable means of locating foreign bodies in serious cases.

Questions and Answers.

I am a young lady of good education, intelligent and ambitious, but I am handicapped because of self-consciousness, particularly in the presence of the other sex. This makes me very unhappy. Is there any cure for my timidity?

Answer—The cure for any healthy person such as you seem to be must lie entirely within oneself. Young women are not thus usually afflicted; young men are more so, at least more young men are than young women. It is your social duty to face the situation until you become self-possessed. It is indeed the duty of any charming and naturally amiable young woman to impress her gifts upon her social circle. Comfort and fortify yourself with the reflection that the young men you meet are, most of them, more self-conscious than you.

Poultry

This is the time of the year when the farmer, as well as the poultryman, markets his surplus fowls. The writer has observed the many crates of chickens as they sit upon the trucks at different railroad stations over the province. What he has seen leads him to write a short article on the subject.

What do these chicken crates contain? Nearly every one is crowded with old cock birds, cockerels, or old hens. Usually not a pullet is to be seen, or, if any at all, there are but few. This in the main is correct. Do not overcrowd the henhouse in the fall, winter and spring. Cull out the ones that should go to market. Keep only those that will improve the flock next year and those that will yield an income over and above the amount of food consumed.

Many a cock bird is sent to market that should be kept to breed from next year. Many a cockerel that would improve the egg or meat producing power of the hens next year if sold in the neighborhood, is sent to market. So, also, there are hens that should be kept. On the other hand, many pullets are kept that should be sold for table use.

What, then, are some of the points that should be observed in culling down the flock?

First, the cock bird. If he is pure-bred and from a good laying strain, if his progeny are quick to mature (that is, if his cockerels feather quickly, grow their combs early, and commence to crow when six to eight weeks of age), if he is vigorous and healthy, if he crows often during the day, if he is a bit scrappy, if his feathers are of good lustre, if he moulted early and grew his new feathers quickly—keep him.

Second, what hens should be sold? Send to market those hens that moulted in July or in August. If a hen is carrying her old feathers at the time this is being written, keep her. A good laying hen moults late in the year. She drops all of her feathers at a time. If a hen laid well last winter, no matter what her appearance is now, keep her. She will improve the flock. Market the hens that are in full feather—that have those brilliant yellow shanks and beaks. Market the hen that stole her nest and hatched a brood of chicks in August. Market her brood with her. She is trying to fool you. She, like some people, gets busy at the eleventh hour. She has fooled away the spring and summer, preening her feathers and admiring her own fitness and comeliness.

Third, what about those cockerels? Market the ones that were slow to develop. Market the ones that are poorly feathered. Open the wing and if the primary feathers are long, narrow and pointed (the chick feathers) market all such cockerels.

Fourth, we come to the "lug of war." The busy housewife wishes to keep about so many pullets for the year. She dislikes to kill or market a pullet. This temptation is great with her. Often she reasons this way: "I want about so many pullets next spring. They are young; they will grow, and it will not cost much to keep them, for I will let them pick their living."

Remember, dear reader, this is all wrong. A pullet should be fed heavily in order properly to develop a constitution that will combat the drain upon her heavy egg production. It costs too much to keep over a poor lot of undeveloped or constitutionally weak pullets.

Pullets that are to be good layers should show signs now of maturity and should be about ready to commence laying, or should be laying early in November.

Sheep Notes

For the man who keeps a small flock of sheep a shed may already be attached to the barn for providing shelter. If none already exists, one may be built at comparatively small expense that will be perfectly adequate. I have sheltered twenty-five sheep in a shed sixteen feet by thirty feet in size. This gives room, too, for the feeding racks.

But bad as cold is, wet ground is fully as dangerous to the health of the sheep. Sheep are not an animal for damp ground. It is death to them. For this reason the sheep barn or shed ought to be built on dry ground. Some sites may be drained by ditches so that the land will be dry. Wherever it seems advisable to pasture or yard sheep on ground that is naturally wet, drains may be put in yet this fall. All sorts of diseases may follow wet feet.

Then, too, scab does a great deal of damage to our flocks when it once gets a hold in them. We cannot be too careful when buying sheep or otherwise acquiring them, to see to it that they are free from this terrible disease. No scabby sheep ever should be brought on the farm, for it is apt to spread and infect the entire flock. It spoils the sheep that is affected by it and the wool becomes "tagged" or glued together. Even to come in contact with one of these tags from infected sheep is apt to convey the disease to well sheep. The disease may also be transmitted by healthy sheep touching posts or trees against which scabby sheep have rubbed. As a source of real suffering scab is a fearful thing.

Trees are being systematically planted along the great wall of China. Good for China!

Powdered charcoal is good material to mix with potting soil. It affords good drainage, retains moisture and tends to keep the soil from becoming acid.

CORRESPONDENCE

To the Editor of The Leader.
Dear Sir,—The writer is not a member of the Women's Institute. The reason is not material—but has always had a great respect for that Society and its aims.

In Morrisburg that Institution numbers among its members ladies with progressive ideas and earnest endeavors, and as a body, have not in the past, hesitated to put themselves upon record as being opposed, (to put it mildly) to the custom of soliciting votes for municipal honors. They have always taken the initiative in matters pertaining to the beauty and cleanliness of our village, but when it comes to a matter of far more importance to the community at large because of its far-reaching effects upon the moral cleanliness of our children attending the Collegiate Institute, they are as dumb as oysters.

If our Women's Institute are really sincere in their aims, they will get busy along these lines.

TUBERCULOSIS SUNDAY

With the co-operation of the Clergy of all denominations and endorsed by the Department of Education, Sunday the 23rd, and Monday the 24th inst., will be observed as Tuberculosis Sunday and Tuberculosis day in the schools.

Literature has been prepared by the National Sanitarium Association, setting forth the nature, giving valuable facts regarding the nature and treatment of consumption. Only through a wide-spread understanding on the part of the public of how this disease may be avoided, how it may be served, will this great plague be overcome.

Drastic measures were taken last Fall in the "Flu" epidemic this Fall we have an outbreak of small-pox, which is receiving the anxious and careful consideration of our Medical Officers of Health. Consumption is a more dangerous disease than any. More deaths occur from this cause than from all other contagious diseases combined.

Every one is urged to acquaint themselves regarding tuberculosis. Ministers and Teachers have a special opportunity to instruct those under their care.

FAREWELL SOCIAL AT WALES

The Congregation of St. David's Church, Wales, gave a farewell social last Monday night to the Rev. John Fisher and Mrs. Fisher prior to their departure for their new home at Eganville. After refreshments had been served, the Warden presented an address expressing their high esteem for the Rector and his wife, and their appreciation of their splendid work during the period of the war, and also expressing their deep regret at their departure. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher were also presented with a generous purse as a tangible token of the affectionate regard of the congregation. Mr. Fisher, on behalf of himself and Mrs. Fisher, thanked all, not only for the address and purse, but also for many acts of kindness performed during the past six years.

KEEPING COOL

To get things done and to do them right, should be a gent's endeavor; and he will keep that scheme in sight, if he is sane and clever. To do things right he needs his head, and all the cog wheels in it; and he will move with steady tread, nor waste a golden minute. He knows that vain and frantic haste is evermore a blunder; its energy that's gone to waste, and effort gone to thunder. Each man is gifted with a head, although he didn't choose it, and if with winners he would tread, he's simply got to use it. And he should keep it calm and cool, so he can see things clearly; his head should be a man's trusty tool, and not a hat rack merely. The horse that paws around in pride too often proves a fizzle, while Debbin, with his steady stride, goes on through sleet and drizzle. Keep cool, whatever be the stunt that is your toll demanding; keep cool, if you would reach the front, and have a "Who's Who" standing.

—Walt Mason.

IN MEMORIAM

In Loving Memory of my dear son, Stephen, son of H. A. Merkle, who died at Morrisburg, November 18th, 1916, at No. 3 Casualty Clearing Station, France.

In ever glorious France
Near the unending sea,
They laid my son to rest,
Far, far from me.

Kind were the strangers' hands,
That bore my soldier son
To his last bivouac
To rest well won.

They placed the lowly cross,
Diest sign to all who weep,
And then, with other boys,
Left him asleep.

Wild birds sweet requiems sing,
Wild poppies radiance strew
Above these boys who died
For me and you.

They fought their inward fight,
They conquered mortal fear,
Then flung away sweet youth,
To them so dear.

Oh son! my son, my son,
The heart aches ever anew;
But oh! I am so proud,
So proud of you.

CREW OF TWENTY FEARED LOST IN LAKE SUPERIOR STORM

Steamer H. E. Runnels Pounded to Pieces by Waves but Crew Rescued—John B. Owen Believed Foundered.

A despatch from Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., says:—The steamer H. E. Runnels, loaded with hard coal for Lake Linden, was pounded to pieces on the beach at Grand Marais on Friday, and there is every indication that the steamer John B. Owen, with its crew of twenty, has foundered off Manitou Island in the storm which is raging over Lake Superior.
The storm is declared by marine men to be the fiercest of the year, and snow, with wind, is adding to the perils of the graveyard of the lakes.
The Runnels, which left the Soo westbound last Monday, went to pieces at 10 o'clock Friday morning shortly after coastguards had rescued the fourteen men of her crew. The crew came ashore in a coastguard lifeboat after battling with the waves, which had rolled over the ship steadily for hours.
One of the crew was hurt in the rescue work, but the exact extent of the injury is not known by coastguardsmen.
The Owen, it is thought, lost out in a battle with death after her hatches had been blown off and giant waves filled the ship. The number of men in her crew is said to be twenty. Her Captain was George E. Benham. Word of the probable destruction of the Owen was brought to this city by the steamer Wilgen, which passed the locks downbound at 3.15.

Civil Service Employees to be Asked to "Punch Clock"

A despatch from Ottawa says:—Civil servants employed in the Departmental Offices here may soon find themselves called upon to "punch the clock" on their arrival at and departure from work. Of late Government employees have been required to report the times of their comings and goings by signing books, of which the deputy heads of departments are custodians. Now the Civil Service Commission has reported in favor of the installation of time clocks in Government offices, and an order-in-Council has been passed by the Cabinet instructing the Public Works Department to make enquiries as to the cost of the necessary clocks.

GOVERNMENT STOPS EXPORT OF CANADIAN COAL

Steps Taken to Protect Public Utilities and Essential Industries—Conditions in Western Canada Aggravated by Unusually Severe Weather.

Ottawa, Nov. 16.—Such are the possibilities for Canada of the situation arising out of the strike of miners in the bituminous coal fields in the United States that the Dominion Government has revived the organization formed to conserve fuel during wartime. C. A. Magrath has again taken up his duties as Fuel Controller. The Canadian Trade Commission has taken control of exports. The Provincial Governments have been asked to bring their fuel administrations into existence again and the public is being urged to exercise the greatest possible economy in the use of bituminous coal.
Supplies of bituminous coal are below normal and, it is stated, are being depleted, and may not be replenished for some little time to come. No soft coal has come to Canada from the United States since November 1st. Although the soft coal miners have been ordered to return to work, many of them are reported to be refusing to do so. The probability, therefore, is that coal production in the bituminous fields will be below normal for weeks, and the possibility that it may not regain the normal for months. In the meantime, the United States can only provide fuel for Canadian requirements in proportion to production. The quantity of coal received between April 1st and October 31st this year is the smallest recorded for the period since 1915. In those seven months in 1914 imports of bituminous coal amounted to 6,859,000 tons; in 1915 to 5,850,000 tons; in 1916 to 9,289,000 tons; in 1918 to 12,120,000 tons. In the seven months of 1919 only 8,600,000 tons were received or only 70 per cent. of the demand of last year.

In Western Canada the fuel situation has been aggravated by several factors. Weather conditions in the first place, have been exceptionally severe during October and November. Again, shipments of soft coal from the United States for the territory from Regina eastward to the head of the Great Lakes have been below normal. Those shipments amounted to 2,300,000 tons in 1917, to 1,600,000 tons in 1918. This year they have fallen to 1,400,000 tons. Production in the Alberta coal fields, too, has suffered this year as a result of labor difficulties. The railways, in consequence, hauled from the Alberta mines during the summer months only about 50 per cent. of the usual quantity of fuel.

PRINCE OF WALES CHEERED SICK PRESIDENT BY CORDIAL VISIT

President's Physician Says They Joked and Laughed Together and the Visit Put Mr. Wilson in "Splendid Humor."

A despatch from Washington says:—One of the most cheerful twenty minutes which President Wilson has spent since his illness he thoroughly enjoyed late on Thursday when the Prince of Wales called upon him at the White House. In describing this visit afterwards, Rear-Admiral Carey T. Grayson, the President's personal physician, said the two had "a fine old time."
President Wilson sat propped up in a great old-fashioned bed, in which not only Abraham Lincoln had slept, but in which the Prince's grandfather, Edward VII., had reposed when he visited this country nearly 60 years ago. Even before Prince Edward knew of this his attention was attracted by the great mahogany bed with its towering headboard. He kept talking about it to the President.
The President and his boyish caller laughed and joked the entire time, and Dr. Grayson said afterwards there was no doubt that the visit put the President in splendid humor. It was something of a family party, for the President asked many questions about King George, Queen Mary, and Queen Alexandra, all of which the Prince was, of course, able to answer in detail. He brought the President many personal messages from the Royal family.

Prince Edward displayed genuine enthusiasm over his visit to the United States. He talked with the same boyish charm and lack of affectation that has made so many friends for him here in Washington. Mrs. Wilson and Admiral Grayson remained in the room during the visit, and the Prince also included them in the conversation. Both are friends of his, dating back to the days of the President's visits to Paris and London.
It developed to-day that when the Prince first arrived in Washington President Wilson sent him one of his own books with the President's signature and some inscription written on the foreleaf. The Prince to-day expressed much appreciation over this thought.

The Royal visitor was at the White House about forty minutes in all, half of which time he spent in an informal tea with Mrs. Wilson, Miss Margaret Wilson and Mrs. Frances B. Sayer, another daughter of the President. Only two members of his personal staff, Admiral Halsey and Captain Lord Claude Hamilton, accompanied him to the White House.

Two of Renown's Crew Lost at Sea in Gale

A despatch from New York says:—William Franklin and John Laight, able bodied seamen of the crew of the British battle-cruiser Renown, were lost at sea last Sunday morning when the Renown, ploughing through a gale, was coming here from Trinidad to take the Prince of Wales home.
Midshipman Richard Knight was taken from the big battle-cruiser today to the Presbyterian Hospital with both legs broken as the result of the tempestuous weather.

31 Strikes in Canada in Month of September

Ottawa, Nov. 15.—During the month of September there were 31 strikes in the Dominion, involving 11,010 work people and resulting in loss of 165,949 working days, according to the October issue of the Labor Gazette. The time lost in September while less than in the preceding month, was greater than in the corresponding month last year.

A Singing "Literary."

The people in our community had met regularly in the schoolhouse every Friday night for "literary" during several years, but they seemed to be getting into a rut. The younger folks especially were not very excited about the meetings.

Attempts at brightening up the program helped some, and occasional parties of the usual "bid-for-a-supper-basket" kind had a good effect, but not for long.

The enthusiasm with which the younger people sang on their way to and from the meetings finally suggested an idea. Of course, they had always had some singing at the "literary," but it wasn't of the jovial, spontaneous kind that was needed. At the next meeting they succeeded in getting the idea accepted that they should get hold of the new popular songs and also work up some of the old favorites, and that there should be a song after each number on the program, but the big point of it was that every one must join in, singers and non-singers.

They knew very well that no one would actually feel like joining in when the time came, so they got all to agree that every one should pay a three-cent fine for every song not participated in. To enforce the rule, inspectors were appointed who, themselves singing heartily all the time, watched for people not joining in. It was necessary to choose exactly the right people for this. At first many people moved their lips and merely pretended to sing, but that led them on to singing heartily.

By the fourth week of the new style the thing was an undoubted success. The spirit of the place was entirely changed. The old awkwardness that every one had shared before gave way to a sort of thrill of interest in everything. Perhaps the people were all wondering what the next song would be. Whatever the reason, they took a keen interest in everything.

They had now dropped the "fines" system, and use another method. Some one—generally the school-teacher or the minister, but sometimes a real singing teacher—sits on the platform during all the singing, and after each song marks up on the blackboard a stroke for whichever side of the room sang the best. The rivalry runs very high each week and each month for the highest score, and the room is always divided sharply into the two sections. Moreover, the rivalry is of a particularly merry and good-natured sort. A singing "literary" after this fashion is a sure-fire success.—P. W. W.

TONIC TREATMENT FOR THE NERVES

Neuralgia and Other Severe Nervous Disorders Cured Through the Blood.

In many severe nervous disorders the best remedy is often a tonic. The most active tonic treatment is recommended by the highest medical authority to arrest the progress of such disease. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a tonic that acts on the nerves through the blood, which carries to the nerves the elements needed to build them up and restore them to a normal condition.

Neuralgia, sciatica, nervous headaches and a number of more severe nervous troubles are properly treated by building up the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and are often entirely cured in this way. If you are nervous you can help yourself by refusing to worry, by taking proper rest and sleep, by avoiding excesses and by taking out-of-door exercise. For medicine take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and you will soon notice the beneficial effect of this tonic in every part of the system. Miss Annie L. Johnston, R.R. No. 1, Listowel, Ont., is one of the numerous sufferers from nervous troubles who has found a cure through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Miss Johnston says:—"For a long time I was a severe sufferer from nervous troubles, with the result that I grew very pale and weak. Medical treatment did not help me, and various medicines had no beneficial effect, until finally a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I began their use and took the pills regularly for several months, with the result that I not only gained in weight, but have recovered my full health and strength. I cannot praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills too highly for what they have done for me."

To build up the blood there is one remedy that has been a household word for a generation, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. They tone up the entire system, make the blood rich and red, strengthen the nerves, increase the appetite, put color in the cheeks and lips and drive away that unnatural, tired feeling. Plenty of sunlight, good wholesome food and fresh air will do the rest. You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

What is a Tidal Wave?

Much of the storm's terrific damage at Corpus Christi is said to have been caused by a "tidal wave" of great height, which swept away entire blocks of houses.

But what is a tidal wave? It has nothing whatever to do with the tides. Any great onrush of the sea that overwhelms the land is called a tidal wave. In 1867 such a wave threw the United States cruiser Monongahela clear out of the harbor and into the town of Friedrichstadt, on the island of Santa Cruz.

Such waves may be due to various causes. They may represent a heaving up of masses of water by a hurricane of wind, as at Corpus Christi. Or an earthquake under the sea may be the cause.

Submarine volcanic eruptions are of not very infrequent occurrence, and earthquakes are liable to accompany them. Or a mere slipping of strata in the sea-floor may cause earthquakes. If, incidentally to the volcanic or seismic disturbance, one part of the sea-floor sinks or another part rises, there must be a consequent rush of water, which may assume the proportions of what is called a tidal wave.

The great earthquake that destroyed Lisbon in 1755 was supplemented by a tidal wave which rolled up the valley of the Tagus from the ocean, submerging all the lower portions of the city and destroying thousands of lives. Twenty-five years ago Japan was visited by a series of terrific tidal waves, which ran fifteen or twenty miles inland. They accompanied great earthquake shocks.

The tidal wave above mentioned, at Santa Cruz, also struck St. Thomas, where a wall of water that looked fifty feet high ran up over the land. There were severe earthquakes all night, and the people, believing that the island was going to sink, besought the commander of an American warship (which had survived the wave by a miracle) to take them off. He did carry 2,000 of them to Santa Cruz.

The Time to Cut Timber.

The time of cutting has very little effect upon durability, if timber is properly cared for after it is cut. The method of handling posts, poles and logs at different times of the year, however, does influence their durability.

Late spring and summer cutting: Posts, poles and other rough products cut in late spring and early summer are more likely to be attacked by insects and fungi, because the wood is freshly cut and in the most favorable condition for attack at a time when insects and the spores of fungi are most active. Seasoning also proceeds more rapidly during the warmer months and may cause excessive checking. If the wood is peeled when cut, and piled openly on skids for seasoning, the opportunity for decay will be reduced to a minimum, but checking will not be retarded. In no case should the wood be allowed to lie in direct contact with the ground. Checking can be reduced somewhat by locating the piles in a shaded but dry place. The bark peels most easily in spring. It can be removed at any other time of the year, but the labor and expense will probably be greater.

Fall and winter cutting: Timber cut in late fall and winter seasons more slowly and with less checking than during the warmer months. When proper storage or handling is impracticable, winter cutting is best. Fungi and insects do not attack wood out-of-doors in cold weather, and by the time warm weather arrives the wood is partly seasoned and less susceptible to attack. It is for this reason that winter cutting is advantageous, and not on account of a smaller amount of moisture or sap in the wood in winter, as the popular belief has it. Nor does there seem to be much to the moon theory.

HEALTH FOR THE BABY

The baby of to-day is the man or woman of to-morrow. Thus the success of the future man or woman depends upon the baby's present welfare. If the baby is sickly and ill-nourished it is not to be expected that he will grow into a strong, active man who will hold his own in the business world a few years hence. Mothers, it is a duty you owe the future to keep your little ones well now. This can be easily done if Baby's Own Tablets are kept in the house. The Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which regulate the bowels and sweeten the stomach and thus make baby healthy and strong. Concerning them Mrs. W. Orser, Elginburg, Ont., writes:—"I have a fine healthy boy three years and have used Baby's Own Tablets for him ever since he was a small baby. I certainly think them a splendid medicine." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Biggest Eyes.

The most enormous of all eyes are those of the giant squid, a cephalopod that attains a length of 150 feet, two-thirds of which, however, is represented by its pair of long-distance tentacles.

No specimen so large has ever been captured, but its eyes—circular, lidless and glaring with a horrible greenish lustre—would probably be not less than two feet in diameter. A small fifty-footer in the Smithsonian Institution has eyes with a diameter of twelve inches.

New Zealand Census.

The New Zealand Government statistics relating to the census of 1916 have just been made public. In classifying dwellings by the number of rooms the figures show that out of 229,423 private dwellings in New Zealand 9,000 had one room, 8,380 two rooms, 10,500 three rooms, 49,000 four rooms, 58,000 five rooms, 50,000 six rooms, 22,000 seven rooms and 10,800 eight rooms. Country districts account for most of the small houses.

The overwhelming prominence of wood in the construction of dwellings in New Zealand is shown by the fact that 219,000 were constructed of wood, 7,000 of brick, 1,280 of stone and 1,680 of concrete. In many counties there was not a single dwelling built of brick or stone, but these districts were in the back-blocks of New Zealand, where there are but few houses.

Of the total dwellings and tenements 109,000 are being rented, 12,000 bought on time payment, 55,000 bought on mortgage and 56,860 the unencumbered property of the occupants. In the Auckland metropolitan area 15,000 homes are rented, 16,300 held under mortgage and 5,000 are unencumbered.

General and the Jug.

General Bailloud, who commanded part of the French expeditionary force in the Balkans, was so well liked by his men that nearly every good story that originated in his corps was either about him or attributed to him. Among the most amusing of these is one that has to do with the general and a soldier who was returning alone to quarters near Monastir with a water jug in each hand.

Coming across another mud-stained pole sitting beside the road, the soldier hailed him:

"How goes it, old man?"

"Very well," said the other.

"Can't you carry one of these jugs for me?"

"Certainly," came the answer, and the two men went on together.

"Would you believe it," said the first soldier, "they have chucked me into the grade of corporal!"

"What of that?" replied the other.

"Didn't they chuck me into the grade of general?"

The soldier nearly dropped his jug, then drew closer and made out three faint stars on a mud-stained sleeve. He drew himself up at attention and saluted.

"Walk on, corporal," said General Bailloud, and together they trudged into camp, each bearing a water jug.

His Special Gift.

A school trustee visited one of the schools over which he bears rule, and made something of a speech to the assembled children.

"Now," said the great man, "the thing that you want to keep in mind is that you should always seek to do some one thing better than anyone else can do it. You can begin to do that right now. Tell me—is there anyone among you who can do that one thing better than anyone else?"

A youngster held up his hand.

"And what is it?"

"I can read my own writing better than anyone else can," said the boy.

A college professor who was always ready for a joke was asked by a student if he would like a good recipe for catching rabbits.

"Why, yes," replied the professor, "What is it?"

"Well," said the student, "you crouch down behind a thick stone wall and make a noise like a turnip."

"That may be," said the professor, with a twinkle in his eye, "but a better way than that would be for you to go and sit quietly in a bed of cabbage heads and look natural."

"Just ye sign thim yersel," young man, an O'll make me mark," said the good lady promptly. "Since me eyes got so bad, I've not been able to write a word."

"And—how do you spell your name?" asked the clerk shyly.

"Shure, just whatever way ye fancies," replied Mrs. Donohue, blandly. "Since I lost me teeth, shure it's not a single blessed word I can spell!"

Sure! High Heels Cause Corns But Who Cares Now

Because style decrees that women crowd and buckle up their tender toes in high heel footwear they suffer from corns, then they cut and trim at these painful pests which merely makes the corn grow hard. This suicidal habit may cause lockjaw and women are warned to stop it.

A few drops of a drug called freeze-on applied directly upon a sore corn gives quick relief and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts out without pain. Ask the drug store man for a quarter of an ounce of freeze-on, which costs very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

This drug is an ether compound and dries in a moment and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. Clip this out and pin on your wife's dresser.

Premier Drury in his first address on a public platform after taking the oath of office stated that there was never a time when the proper training and education of the child was of so much importance as now. He did not think men knew nearly as much about an educational system as did women, and he was convinced that something should be done to get women on the rural school boards. Had the Premier been speaking to an audience of Morrisburg women he could not have struck a more appropriate note in delivering an address than the one which he delivered in Toronto.
