HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

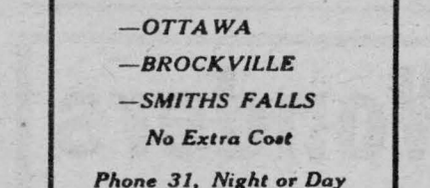

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Teachers Entertained

The teachers attending the convention last week were entertained to a delightful afternoon tea by the members of the Women's Institute. The Library Hall was prettily decorated with quantities of fall flowers and bright coloured foliage and berries.

The tea table looked very attractive centred with a basket of petunias and was presided over by Mrs. R. E. Newman and Mrs. C. W. Casselman.

During the afternoon, Miss Dolly Smith, of Morrisburg, sang two numbers which were very much enjoyed, Miss M. Smith accompanied her sister on the piano. Mrs. Bronskill and Mrs. Geo. Reaburn contributed musical selections which added very much to the enjoyment of the occasion.

Mr. William McLean Died After Brief Illness

The death occurred Monday morning after a very brief illness at his home on South Main street of Thomas William McLean, at the age of seventy years. Saturday last, while motoring a short distance south of the village he complained to Mr. David Beckstead, who was riding with him, of feeling unwell and decided he should at once return to town where he was found to be dangerously ill, having suffered a stroke, from which he failed to recover.

He is survived by his widow and four daughters, Mrs. Wilburn Edgerton and Mrs. Thos. Loucks of the Grantley district, Mrs. Harry Edgerton and Mrs. H. S. McMurray, of Chesterville.

The funeral was held yesterday afternoon in St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, where service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Sproule, interment following in Maple Ridge cemetery.

Chesterville Hockey Players Leave for Pro Try-Out

There has been a considerable exodus of hockey players with a hankering for big money from this district this week when Francis Plantz, Ralph Hummel, Bill Gamble, and Marshall, formerly of the Chesterville club; and Wilfrid Dextras, of the Cornwall Colts, and Grenville Preston, of Finch, left for Galt for a try-out with the New York Americans.

Morewood Women's Institute

The regular monthly meeting of Morewood Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Will Thomas on Tuesday, October 14th. The meeting opened with the Ode, followed by the Lord's Prayer. The minutes were read and approved. The roll was called, to which 15 members and 4 visitors responded. Plans were discussed for service on Armistice Day on the monument square.

Mrs. W. Barrington was appointed delegate to the convention in Ottawa this month.

A paper was read by Mrs. B. Loughridge on Fall Bulbs, which was very interesting to all interested in this subject.

A paper was given by Mrs. J. W. Bogart, entitled "Renewed Energy."

Mrs. A. Swerdfeger then favoured the meeting with a solo. The collection amounted to $1.42.

The meeting was closed with the National Anthem, after which Mrs. Thomas and daughter served lunch. It was then moved by Mrs. Olive Craik and seconded by Mrs. A. Swerdfeger, that a vote of thanks be given Mrs. Thomas for the delicious lunch which she served.

Allen Feeley, Cannamore, Killed By Train

Tuesday morning about nine o'clock Allen Feeley, a well-known farmer of Cannamore, was instantly killed when his car was struck by the southbound motor train on the Ottawa & New York line, at the St. Joseph road crossing between Cambridge and Embrun. Just why the deceased did not see the approaching train is hard to understand as the view is clear for a very considerable distance and the track is higher than the roadway. With the impact the braking power of the train was very considerably reduced as a distance of more than three hundred yards was covered before it came to a standstill, with the wrecked automobile and the injured man on its front end.

Mr. Feeley had just sold a load of hogs to a butcher from St. Onge and was following some distance behind the truck in which they were being taken for weighing when he met his death.

Mr. Feeley was 48 years of age and lived with his mother on the homestead near Cannamore. Three brothers and two sisters survive. The funeral this afternoon will be under the direction of Morewood Lodge I. O. O. F., of which the deceased was a member.

Presentation At Berwick

On Thursday evening. Oct. 9, the many friends and neighbours of Miss Margaret Hunt, Riverside, gathered at the Community Hall, Berwick, to bid her au-revoir, when a very enjoyable evening was spent in dancing. She goes in training for a nurse at Brockville and is leaving the vicinity for a short time.

Miss Hunt was called to the floor where Miss Theresa Kearns read the following appropriate address, and Miss Mary A. McPherson made the presentation of a purse.

Dear Margaret,—We, your friends and neighbours, gather here this evening to express to you very cordially the appreciation we all feel of your many kindnesses toward us in our community. We do not mean to say farewell as we hope to still see you often, but to spend a social evening with you as the nature of your profession you are choosing will cut off to a certain extent such functions.. We found you a genial companion and trustworthy friend, every ready to give a helping hand in the different activities of life. As a token of our esteem we ask you to accept this purse, not for its intrinsic value, but hope as time passes you will be reminded of the well-wishing friends you are leaving. New friends can never take the place of those proved by time and fresh attractions never efface the days of Auld Lang Syne.

The dancing was then continued.

Crows By The Thousand

One evening last week, just at dusk, a resident of Nation Valley was attracted by the great number of crows in flight to their roosting place and began to count them, as one might count the mythical sheep to induce sleep, and in half an hour had counted 1114 crows making the homeward flight for the night after having been feeding to the south.

Chesterville United Church Cradle Roll Party

A very delightful cradle roll party was held in the United church Wednesday afternoon, October 15th, at 2.30 p.m. There were 24 mothers, 31 babies, and 18 helpers present, Mrs. Newman, superintendent of the Cradle Roll Department receiving the guests.

The programme was made up of literary and musical numbers with the Rev. R. W. Armstrong, of Morewood, as the special speaker.

Special notice was taken of the birthday of one of the members, little Miss Lorna Smith, and her cake with four lighted candles decorated the children's table.

During the afternoon a photo of the party was taken in front of the Sunday school rooms. The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Grant B. Beckstead received the sacrament of baptism.

Dainty refreshments were served and a hearty vote of thanks was tendered to the committee in charge and their helpers.

Our Thanks

The Record, through the generosity of its friends, has this week materially added to its stores for the winter, when J. B. Merkley presented us with an immense head of cabbage, one of the finest we have seen this year, which tipped the scales at fourteen pounds. Harry Allison, recognizing the editor's fondness for vegetable marrow, presented us with two very fine specimens.

Caught In Heavy Storm

Last Sunday when Mrs. W. G. Barkley, of Nation Valley, was motoring with her son, Colborne, returning to her home after a visit to the latter, they had the experience of having their trip brought to a standstill in snow drifts which could not be negotiated in the vicinity of Watertown. Many cars were stalled in the snow and could not proceed, but had to back for more than a mile before they could turn and go in the opposite direction. Mrs. Barkley and her son returned to the latter's home at Syracuse and waited for better weather.

Anglican S. S. Conference Met at Aultsville

The Sunday School Association of the Deanery of Stormont held its annual meeting in Aultsville on Wednesday, October 22nd. Delegates from the various parishes in the Deanery attended the meeting. The day began with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist in St. Paul's church at ten a.m., the rector of Aultsville being the celebrant, while the Rev. Canon Netter addressed the association. After the service, the meeting opened under the chairmanship of Rev. E. W. B. Richards, rector of Wales. Lunch was served in the basement of the church at 12.15 by the ladies of Aultsville parish and the meeting reassembled at 1.45. An excellent paper was read by the Rev. Cecil Roach, assisttnat Priest of All Saint's church, Ottawa, on the specific purpose of the Sunday school and its part in the development of churmen and church women. A discussion followed this and the Rev. D. B. Rogers, general secretary of the General Board of Religious Education, Toronto, gave a very practical address on the "Details of Sunday School Work." Much was learnt from the answers to the various questions that wereasked of the speaker. The meeting was one of the best of the Association's many gatherings. Tea brought the meeting to a close.

Many Young People Attend Ottawa District Conference

The members of the Young People's Society of the Chesterville United church showed stout hearts Friday when 35 of them left here in the face of the gale then raging, for Ottawa to attend Ottawa District conference in Stewarton United church which was addressed by Rev. E. Crosley Hunter. The Chesterville branch had the distinction of having the largest representation from any individual society.

Elma Couple Honoured

Following their recent marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Lewis were welcomed home by their neighbours when the following address was read by Mr. Reginald Barkley and a presentation made.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Lewis,-

We have gathered here this evening to welcome you on your recent marriage.

To you, Mr. Lewis, we might say that we have watched with neighbourly interest and have observed your conquering of many obstacles and misfortunes. You have had your share of trials and sorrows and we all hope this will be a point where only fortune will smile upon you and give the best that she has for you and yours.

To you, Mrs. Lewis, we ask that, although you are not entering another community, you come among us now in a slightly different position, which we hope will be to our betterment and your everlasting joy. The road of married life is not always a path of roses, there will be some thorns. We hope, however, for you there will be much happiness.

In token of these good wishes we are asking you to accept this gift as a remembrance of this gathering.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbours—Alvin McIntosh, Irvin McKenzie.

Russell Farmer Loses Buildings and Crops

Fire which broke out Saturday afternoon from some unknown cause destroyed all the out-buildings on the farm of Russell Eastman, three miles from Russell, causing a loss of $8,000. With the buildings was lost the entire season's crop and most of the farm machinery, including a new corn blower. Part of the loss is covered by insurance.

The outbreak was noticed by a small boy about 4.30 p.m., when the flames were seen through the cracks in the large barn. Spreading with great rapidity, the fire was soon beyond control. The house alone was saved, owing to its distance from the burning barns and sheds. The buildings included two barns, sheds, a hen house and a tool house. The entire season's harvest, stored in the barns, was lost.

U. S. Socialist Candidate Shows 'Em How

Vancouver Sun.—Heywood Broun, columnist and writer for the more liberal of American publications, is running as Socialist candidate for the United States Congress from New York City.

In a recent speech he shouted, "I am the wettest of the wets."

He took a flask from his pocket and drank. "A heckler shouted, "Arrest that man!' 'But the police refused to act.

This piece of platform vulgarity may have been entertaining to his audience and convincing to his supporters. But the only effect on the outside observer, beyond a measure of disgust, is to indicate very clearly that spirit in the United States that is making prohibition impossible of enforcement.

The man who drinks in a country where liquor is not prohibited regards his liquor as a incidental beverage to be taken when stimulation is desired just as food is taken when feeding is desired.

Fifty per cent of those who drink in the United States drink as a gesture of independence, just as Broun flaunted his hip flask as a gesture of defiance to his dry opponents.

The prohibition issue has become not so much the drinking of liquor as the tolerance of a sumptuary law.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Had A Bumper Yield.

An outstanding yield of blue grass is reported by one farmer in Haldimand County. His field was eight acres in size and from seven loads taken from the eight acres, 2900 lbs. of seed were obtained. This, at the rate of 14 cents a pound, yielded better than $400, or more than $50 per acre. A pleasing feature of this is that the straw is still good as a high-grade hay.

Norfolk's Tobacco Crop.

The greater part of Norfolk County's nine-million pound crop of flue-cured tobacco has now been sold at prices ranging between 30 and 40 cents per pound. The average will be about 35 cents. It was estimated that about 13,000 acres were under tobacco in Norfolk this year and, while the crop was injured by drought and hail, it escaped frost and most of the growers will be well rewarded for their season's toil. The new half-million-dollar grading and packing plant at Delhi swings into operation this week.

District Ploughing Matches.

Dates of remaining district ploughing matches have been announced as follows by J. Lockie Wilson, superintendent:

Caistor	Nov. 26

Marketing Geese.

The time to prepare geese for market is when the weather turns cold in the fall. They should then be taken off pasture and those selected for market should be placed in small penned enclosures, provided with plenty of water and grit and kept clean. They should be fed heavily on whole corn, the best medium for the fattening of geese, and about two weeks' heavy feeding should fit them for market. Twenty-four hours before killing geese should be starved, but given plenty of water. Care should be used in plucking, the dry or steam methods being recommended, for the reason that the feathers are particularly valuable, bringing as much as sixty cents per pound. The dressed bird should be rubbed over with a damp cloth and set aside to cool. The tweve-bird box makes a desirable market package.

Current Crop Report.

Fall wheat is looking fairly well throughout the whole province, according to reports received, and the fine weather of October enabled the farmers in the southwestern peninsula to do late sowing. Many farmers report the poorest crop of turnips in years, while sugar beets will yield about the same as other seasons. Considerable stocker cattle are being purchased, due to large yields of grain and low prices offered for same. There are indications of a good supply of Canadian seed corn for 1931. Dairy Cattle are in keen demand in the restricted T. B. areas, and many outside buyers are invading these districts for accredited cattle.

New School Wing Opened.

The new wing of the Vocational Agricultural School at Ridgetown was officially opened on October 20 by Acting Premier George S .Henry and Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture. About $85,000 has been spent on the new building which is equally as commodious as the first building erected in 1926. The new wing includes two large classrooms, a physics laboratory, a room for teaching various agricultural subjects such as field crops, bee keeping, poultry and veterinary science, a stock judging ring, four large forges with anvils for blacksmith work, eighteen manual training benches for woodworking, a machinist's bench and a space for motor mechanics. The Ridgetown institute is now the most complete of its kind in Ontario and will be in a position to give a superior type of all-round training to the farm boy and girl.

A Tremendous Success.

By far the greatest success in its history was achieved at the 1930 International Ploughing Match staged last week off Highway No. 7, near the city of Stratford. Two new records were set on the second day of the match, when an estimated total of 40,000 people passed through the gates and when the entry list numbered 153, surpassing by 44 the list for a single day in any previous year. The final two days of the event were equally successful, and the directors have every reason to be proud of their achievement. Competitors came from every part of Ontario to take part in the various ploughing contests. A departure this year was a competition for women, who made a remarkably fine showing. The site of the match was a picture with hundreds of horses and tractors pulling keen-edged ploughs through perfect soil to reveal row upon row of furrows, straight, and true, and crowned to perfection.

Ontario Nuts Win.

Kent County has recently been in the limelight as a nut producing county by reason of the victory scored by one of its farmers, Harold English, of the Chatham district, at the Nut Growers' Conference at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. His exhibit of Japanese walnuts was declared the best ever seen by those in attendance at the conference. Large size, good cracking, extraction quality, and fine flavour were the points on which the experts based their decision. The tree from which these fine nuts came is a beautiful specimen and has made rapid growth. It is only six years old and has borne two good crops. The Chatham man's victory is expected to stimulate the growth of nut trees in Kent County and elsewhere throughout the province. There is no other factor which enhances the value of a farm at so little expense as nut trees.

Proper Ration Needed.

A hen may lay a few eggs early in the spring without receiving much feed or attention or she may lay at the end of the season when feed may be picked up in the fields but the hen has not yet been developed that will lay without the proper ration during the fall and winter months. A good mash is important ir the hens are to lay, and it should be before the birds all the time. If any one of the necessary elements required for the making of eggs is absent, production is impaired. Pullets require a little different mash than the old hens and it is a mistake to house them together and have them feed from the same hopper. Home-grown feeds with the addition of some purchased concentrates may be mixed, or a commercial mash may be purchased that will supply the necessary ingredients to the bird. Chickens will pay dividends if properly housed and given the right rations.

When to Apply Lime.

A test of the soil should be made to make sure that it requires lime. If the soil proves to be acid then the answer to the question when to apply lime might be "when you have time." Lime is for the benefit of all crops in rotation, but particularly to benefit legumes. The best time is possibly just before sowing a grain crop that is seeded down with alfalfa or clovers. Liming land ploughed for fall wheat which is to be seeded with clover in the spring is a convenient and satisfactory pracice. Lime is not a fertilizer, but simply neutralizes the acidity of the soil and should be thoroughly worked into the soil during the preparation of a seed bed to become efficient. It is poor business to farm land that is lacking in lime and strongly acid in reaction. The productive power of the soil is reduced when it becomes acid. Correcting this condition with the use of ground limestone increases the efficiency of the manures and fertilizers applied, and therefore contributes to the cutting down of costs of crop production.

Tea and Cooking Sale Was a Real Success

The home of Rev. R| E. and Mrs. Newman was the scene of a happy event on Saturday afternoon, October 11th, when the Young People's Society of the United church held an autumn tea and homecooking sale.

The spacious rooms were beautifully decorated with autumn leaves. Mrs. Newman, Mrs. L. Marcellus, Allan Tate and Jean Fulton received the guests.

The programme committee consisting of the Misses Elsie Hewitt, Madge Campderros, Helen Hamilton, Betty Bolster, and Hubert Dixon, delighted the guests with their various numbers.

Miss Orlean Johnston, Mary Maloley, and Clifford Olsen were in charge of the home cooking and candy.

Dainty refreshments were served in the diningroom which were in charge of Miss Helen Lacey and Miss Lillian Tate, assisted by Miss Irene Hamilon and Foster Fulton. Miss Rae Dixon and Miss Enid Barwick poured tea.

The returns ,amounting to $38.15, were most gratifying and were received by Miss Audrey Beckstead and Miss Gwen Hummel.

White Light Not Enough On Wagon Court Rules

Brantford.—William Knill, a Falkland farmer, discovered in the county police court that a red light has to be shown on the rear of vehicles after dark. His wagon had been run into from the rear by William Gibbs, a motorist from London. The farmer's son was leading two horses at the rear of the wagon. One of the team had to be killed after the impact, and the other was badly injured, and the boy holding the horses had two teeth knocked out. Knill was not put in the box when the court ascertained that no red light was shown from the rear, although a white light was on the side of the wagon. Magistrate Blake thought it was a case for civil action.

THE T. B. TEST

To the Tune of Yankee Doodle

There are few farmers in Dundas
Who favour accredation;
To others it is, I sure must say,
An awful irritation.

We've argued the whole thing up and down,
We'll have to face the crisis.
Oh, ruin, failure, and despair,
We hope that you will miss us.

So, let the testers come right in
And look our cows all over.
I think next year about this time
There'll be a lot of clover.

I had a cow and she was grand,
She flowed two pails right over.
The Inspectors came along one day,
I gave her to the drover.

They said she had tuberculo
Tuberculo-s-o-sis;
I surely knew it by the time
They gave her those three doses.

I had a cow and she was thin,
And raw, and lean, and boney,
This cow was not diseased at all,
I think the test is phoney.

They drove the kine before the plough
Back in the time of Moses ;
Who was the man who told them that
She had tuberculosis?

A sick man is the farmer now,
And so is agriculture,
Some beef will go within the can
And some to feed the vulture.

It isn't just the test we fear,
But sanitation lacking,
We'll have to dig down in our jeans
For the price of barn-ransacking.

So, fare thee well, my noble cow,
Begone from me forever,
And go before some other men
Your jugular they will sever.

"Hello, old top ,new car?"
"No; old car, new top."

Damages Awarded

Kingston.—A can of paint was left by a careless workman on the roadway, in front of a store occupied by Eva Wartelsky. The can was struck by a passing automobile was broken open and the paint covered the front of the store and goods were also destroyed. She sued the corporation for damages and Judge H. A. Lavell has handed down his judgment, awarding the plaintiff $350 and costs for the harm sustained.

"Backward Flying" Ship

German and foreign press representatives and a crowd of aviation fans flocked to Tempelhorf airport and watched a new "backward flying" monoplane apparently chasing its tail through the clouds. Actually, it was not flying backward. It was the latest Focke-Wulfe "Ente" which carries its tail where an ordinary monoplane carries its engine while its forward stabilizer protrudes 21 feet in front.

Flying near an ordinary monoplane the new ship looked almost like its companion except that it seemed to be flying backward. Only when taxiing along the field did the reason for its name "Ente," meaning duck, become apparent.

221 Cases Occur Under New Auto Law

During the four weeks that the financial responsibility law has been in effect, there have been 221 cases where proof of financial responsibility has been required to be filed with the Ontario Department of Highways by reason of convictions registered for offences against the act, Hon. George S. Henry, Minister of Highways and acting Prime Minister, announced yesterday in making public the working of the new law.

"The department has experienced no difficulty with regard to the enforcement of the act and it has been very well received by the general public," said Mr. Henry. "Of the 221 cases, 84 were for driving without a license. When a motorist commits this type of offence, he immediately comes within the provisions of the act and his license plates are confiscated and remain in the possession of the department until proof of financial responsibility is filed. That, of course, is in addition to th- nne the magistrate may impose."

The minister of highways stressed the seriousness of motorists driving without licenses.

"They are laying themselves open to serious trouble for this is now considered a major offence," he declared.

During the month that the act has been in operation, 54 motorists ran afoul of the safety responsibility law on account of reckless driving while their offences were speeding, leaving the scene of the accident, driving while intoxicated, theft, and criminal negligence.

"Sixty-three motorists, so far, have voluntarily filed proof of financial responsibility and by so doing they have protected themselves against possible inconvenience," continued Mr. Henry. "When a motorist runs afoul of the law, his license plates are taken away until proof of resposibility is filed and attested on the prescribed form. I have had several cases where motorists have telephoned, stating the individual concerned had the requisite insurance. But that is not sufficient. The law says that proof must be filed with the department. Until that is done, the offending motorists must put up with the consequences. Motorists would be well advised, therefore, to spare the little extra time needed and voluntarily file proof of financial responsibility."

The minister declared that possibly the general public was not aware of the provision made for filing voluntarily proof of financial responsibilty because if they were, he said, they would be eager to take advantage of it.

Make Mile-Long Belt At Bowmanville Plant

The largest belt ever made in the Dominion of Canada is now being manufactured in the Bowmanville plant of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. When completed it will be well over a mile in length and will weigh 20 and a half tons. It is being made in six pieces, each of which will weigh about three and a half tons and will, when completed, be consigned to a South American mining firm where it will be used as a conveyor belt in a mine. The belt will make a full carload when shipped and will be the largest belt in the world, it is believed. It will take some two weeks to manufacture.

Champion Milkmaid

Miss Dorothy Milhelm, of Cornersville, Ind., holds the title of "champion milkmaid of America," a $200 cash prize and a silver loving cup that went with the title.

In winning the "milkmaid marathon," a daily feature at the National Dairy Show, Miss Wilhelm had a slight advantage over her nearest opponent, Miss Mary Ferguson, of Glencoe, Mo. For two brief periods each day during the show, the contestants demonstrated their ability to milk a cow. Miss Wilhelm's record for 51 minutes was 203.83 pounds of milk. Miss Ferguson had a record of 197.02 pounds in the same time and won $100. Third place went to Miss Gloria Miller, of Pacific, Mo., whose record was 196.63 pounds.

Horse Shoe Pitching At the "Royal"

Two all-Canadian championships for horse shoe pitching will be staged at the Royal Winter Fair next month and, according to the opinion of the Committee in charge, of which Thos. A. Murphy, M. P. P., is chairman, interest in the farm yard sport is keener than ever and the quality of pitching seen at local centres is of a higher level than ever before in the recollection of Ontario sportsmen. More local clubs are in existence this year and the members of the committee, meeting at the Royal Winter Fair offices, were enthusiastic about prospects for the championships' meetings. The competitions will be played on the round robin plan.

The Canadian championships consist of an open singles for a championship trophy and $50.00, a second prize of $15.00, and a third of $10.00; and an open doubles for the champion shiptrophy and $50.00, a second prize of $25.00, and a third of $15.00.

In addition, a special competition will be conducted at the Royal Winter Fair open only to winners at local agricultural fairs for which the prizes are 1st. $25.00; 2nd, $15.00, and 3rd, $10.00. Entry forms may be obtained at the Royal Winter Fair offices, 217 Bay street, Toronto. The rules of the Dominion of Canada Horseshoe Pitchers' Association will govern all competitions. This competition was established to encourage and build up entries for horse shoe pitching by local societies and it is hoped that the Royal competition may be provided with a local winner from every section of the province. Two of the teams will, in any event, reach the semi-final round in the championship competition.

The committee of the Winter Fair Horseshoe Pitching contest consists of Thos. A. Murphy, M. P. P.; Albert Berscht, Wellesley; E. K. Hampson, Hamilton; Walter Kane, Sarnia; Jas. Labbett, Toronto; Geo. Ostrander, Brampton; H. W. Pearson, Belleville; Harry I. Price, Toronto; H. C. Shipman, Ottawa, and Carl Sawnstrom, Toronto.

Rubber From Golden Rod

That versatile genius, Mr. Edison, is 83 years old, and yet he is hard at work as ever. He is now attempting to secure a possible emergency supply of rubber from plants which can be grown on this continent, and his attention is at present being given to the golden rod, and the invention of machinery which shall be able to extract the rubber from this very common plant. It is intended to set out large areas with this rubber substitute, and Edison says that he is confident that in five years he will be able to extract enough rubber from it to enable the United States to carry on if the foreign supply should be for any reason cut off. He says that a large variety of golden rod has been discovered which attains a height of fifteen feet, and he asserts that by careful breeding they can produce a plant which will give no less than eight per cent of fine grade rubber, and this will at least be valuable as an emergency crop. One great advantage is that a crop can be produced in one year, whereas it takes some years to produce a rubber plantation.

"Well, why don't they take it off the train, then?"

Our Ottawa Letter

OTTAWA, October 22nd.—Premier Bennett's plan to find a permanent market for Canadian wheat and other agricultural products in Britain, together with his statement of policy to promote inter-Empire trade was made public through the Imperial Conference at London, just two months after he took office as Prime Minister of Canada.

The twenty-minute speech, in which he made clear Canada's position and pleaded for mutually beneficial preferences as the only lasting foundation of Empire Trade development has been proclaimed in Britain as one of the most important declarations ever made by an overseas statesman.

Mr. Bennett took the question of Empire preferences out of the realm of vague platitudes and placed it upon the ground of definite realities. In other words, the Canadian Premier abandoned after-dinner speaking and made a concrete practical offer to Britain and the other Dominions. If they will buy our wheat we will give them better preferences for their goods. There was no beating about the bush in what Mr. Bennett had to say. He did not set himself up as a saviour of the Empire and made no pretense that he was not animated first by a desire to help Canada. The primary concern of Canada, he declared, was to find a profitable market for her wheat.

* * * *

"This market we want, and for it we are willing to pay by giving in the Canadian market preferences for British goods.

"I offer to the Mother Country and to all other parts of the Empire a preference in the Canadian market in exchange for like preferences in theirs, based upon the addition of a ten per cent increase in the prevailing general tariffs, or upon tariffs yet to be created."

That is that. If the people of Britain are really anxious for a preference in Canada's market, if they really want to sell us more goods, if, in other words, they are concerned in a practical way with the matter of Imperial trade, their chance is now before them. Mr. Bennett is not interfering, nor trying to interfere, with their domestic fiscal policy. He has merely taken hold of something that everybody has been talking about, and professing to want, reduced it to an offer, to a plan.

The advantages of the proposition are obvious.

It avoids the clear impossibility of what is known as Empire Free Trade.

It gives British manufacturers an advantage in Canada's markets without endangering the position of our own manufacturers.

It provides for still high duties—in some instances needed—against countires like the United States.

It in no way interferes with the policy of adequate protection for all Canadian industries.

It provides for the best of all permanent markets for Canadian wheat.

By providing this wheat market, profitably, it should reconcile the western farmer to a policy of protection for industry.

Whether the British people are prepared to accept Mr. Bennett's offer remains to be seen. It may, indeed, take some time to find out. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and Mr. Phillip Snowden, traditional free traders, may well raise the old cry about taxing British food, but while Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Snowden are presently the Government of Britain, they are not the people of Britain. And a lot of water has run down the Thames since the days of Joseph and Chamberlain.

Nor is it at all sure that Mr. Bennett's proposal would tax British food or, to be more specific, make British food dearer. Why should it make it dearer if the Empire has enough food to supply its own needs, supplies at a reasonable price? The rest of the world is not anxious to sell wheat at less than a profit.

* * * *

The compensation which Mr. Bennett offers Britain in return for a preferential market for Canadian wheat is the regular employment of thousands of British workmen in industries which will be granted a concrete preference for their products in Canadian markets. ....

These industries would produce for Canada a large percentage of the $600,000,000 worth of manufactured goods which we now import annually from the United States.

* * * *

The Canadian Prime Minister made it clear that he did not propose any trade agreements that would be harmful to established Canadian industries or to those yet to be created. Apart from such industries Canada will be compelled to import from three to four hundred million dollars worth of goods every year which cannot be economically produced in Canada. It is in the supplying of such goods that Mr. Bennett is ready to extend material preferences to Britain against foreign countries provided that Britain is ready to establish a permanent and reasonable profitable market for Canadian agricultural products.

Mr. Bennett suggested that the various units of the Empire devote six months to a definite and detailed study all the angles of his plan and then meet in conference in Ottawa early next year to proceed with the consideration of its adoption.

Thus far the reaction amongst the British public may be considered favourable. It will, however, take probably two months to accurately gauge sentiment and it may take a longer period and momentous political developments in Britain to bring about any definite acceptance of the scheme.

In the meantime Canadians, together with the rest of the world have, with characteristic promptness, been placed in possession of Mr. Bennett's policy for dealing with one matter of vital interest to Canada—marketing of wheat.

If Britain is not disposed to embrace his general policy it may be expected that Canada's Premier will find other solutions of the problem.

THE TOWEL

Most people realize that because our hands come into contact with so many objects they become soiled and contaminated with bacteria or germs. Many of the germs which our hands pick up are harmless, but some of them belong to the disease producing group.

If the disease germs present on our hands are to cause trouble, they must gain entrance into the body. Food or drink may be contaminated by the hands, and so the germs are taken into the mouth along with food or drink. Hands may be carried to the face, and the soiled fingers touch the lips or nose. In this way disease germs are transferred to the interior of the body.

It is for these reasons we teach that the hands should be kept away from the face and that they should always be thoroughly washed before food is touched. There is no doubt that clean hands afford one of the most practical safeguards against disease which we possess.

When the hands are thoroughly washed we get rid of the gross dirt and a large percentage of the germs lying on the skin. The hands are not sterilized by washing. By that we mean that all germs on the skin are not destroyed as they are when, for example, we boil objects in water.

Practically, this means that when the hands are wiped on the towel some living germs are left on the towel. If the towel is frequently used, or if it is kept in use for some days, the number of living germs on the towel increases.

If the same towel is used by more than one person, then each user not only leaves some of the germs off his hands on the towel, but also, as he uses the towel, he picks up on his hands some of the germs that other users of the towel have left on it.

It has been proved that this is what actually happens. Our reason for bringing it to the attention of our readers is that it has a practical meaning for each one in his daily life.

It is obvious that the common towel, whether in the home or elsewhere, may be responsible for the spread of disease germs. This means that we should have our own towel and never use one belonging to another person. Above all, we should shun the public towel just as we avoid the common drinking cup.

Ideally, a towel should be used but once. In any case, towels should be frequently changed, because they do become heavily laden with bacteria. True, most of these bacteria are relatively harmless, but we never know when there may be some disease producers among them.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Preparing Turkeys For the Christmas Trade

Experimental Farms Note.

Turkeys which have been held over from the Thanksgiving Festival with the intent of preparing them for the Christmas trade should be put on a fattening ration about the middle of November. Birds which have been on the open range during the growing season should not be confined to pens during the fattening period. When properly fed they will take no more exercise than is necessary for good digestion, whereas, if they are confined in pens there is great danger of the birds going off their feed, developing digestive disorders with accompanying loss of flesh, and quite frequently the loss of a number of birds.

When the weather is cold the birds will not flesh as rapidly as earlier in the autumn, and at least five weeks' feeding will be necessary to get them ready for Christmas. As it will take one week to dress and ship them to market, fattening should commence at least six weeks before Christmas. If the birds are very thin even a longer period may be required to flesh them properly.

Feeding should be started gradually, in fact the birds should be fed regularly twice daily from about the last of September. The birds should receive just what they will clean up nicely with two feedings daily, morning and early evening during the third week in November. After that time feed three times daily until killing time.

The feeds should consist both of mashes and whole grains. Feed mashes morning and mid-day and whole grains in the evening. The birds can digest more food when it is fed in the form of mash but the feeding of whole grains in the evening will prevent them from becoming very hungry before morning as grains are assimilated much more slowly than mashes.

A good mash can be made by a mixture of equal parts of ground oats, barley meal, cornmeal, and wheat bran. Ground buckwheat is also good and can be used instead of cornmeal or barley meal if necessary. To this mixture add about 10 per cent beef meal and 5 per cent ground charcoal. Mix thoroughly before moistening. Fattening mashes should be fed in a moist condition but only sufficient should be moistened for one feeding. It is good practice to have the morning feed moistened the night before so that it will become thoroughly swollen before feeding. By adopting the practice of moistening mashes a few hours before feeding time many digestive orders can be overcome. Water or sour milk can be used for moistening the mash and at feeding time it should be fairly solid, not sloppy or watery.

Feed all mashes in V-shaped troughs which should be thoroughly clean. Remove any food from the troughs which may be left over after the birds have satisfied their appetites.

Whole corn which has been properly ripened is about the best grain for fattening purposes at this season of the year. It is palatable and the birds take kindly to it. New corn or corn which is not ripe should be fed sparingly. Give the birds only what they will clean up nicely before going to roost. Fresh water, grit, and oyster shell should be kept where the birds can help themselves.

Where the turkeys can be induced to eat a mixture of whole barley and buckwheat with a little corn added for the evening meal the cost of the ration can be considerably reduced. Home-grown grains should be used wherever possible.

Turkeys for the Cristmas trade should be sent to market dressed. Starve the birds for twenty-four hours before killing, during which time they should be given all the fresh water they will drink. The water aids in cleaning out the intestinal tract and also aids in improving the quality of the flesh.

Bleeding is done by sticking in the mouth. Hang a can on the lower part of the beak to catch the blood. By passing the knife up through the roof of the mouth and giving it one turn, thereby piercing the brain, plucking is made much easier. The birds can be cleaned of feathers, or, in some cases, the flight wing feathers and the main tail feathers may be left on. Plucking should be done just as soon after killing as possible. The head and feet are left on, and the birds left undrawn.

The birds should be thoroughly cooled before packing for shipment. Packing may be done in barrels or boxes, the birds being arranged closely together so as to prevent moving in transit.

He (ardently): "Have you ever met a man whose touch seemed to thrill every fibre of your being?"

She: "Oh, yes, once—a dentist."

—o—

The plumber worked and the helper stood helplessly looking on. He was learning the business. This was his first day. "Say," he inquired, "do you charge for my time?" "Certainly," came the reply. "But I haven't done anything. The plumber, to fill in the hour, had been lookin at the finished job with a lighted candle. Handing the two inches of it that were still unburned to the helper, he said, witheringly: "Here, if you gotta be so conscientious, blow that out."

"Father, son's letter from college is very short."

"So is son. That's why he wrote it."

—o—

Irritable husband (to wife driving a nail): "How do you ever expect to drive a nail in the wall with a clothes brush? Why don't you use your head?"

"Ten cents' worth of bicarbonate of soda for indigestion at this time of night," cried the infuriated druggist, who had been aroused at two a.m., "when a glass of hot water would have done just as well."

"Well, weel," returned MacDougall, "I thank ye for the advice ,and I'll no bother ye after all. Good-night."

Imperial Conference Delegates Sail

The Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Australia might almost have served as a Cabinet Council room during its last voyage to England with the Prime Minister of Canada and several members of his cabinet as passengers. There was so great a crowd at the pier in Quebec that photographers had to go to Father Point to get pictures of the party.

Above are several groups made while the ship was on her way. I. The Premier and his sister Miss Mildred Bennett shake hands with Captain R. G. Latta, commander of the Empress of Australia. II. Prime Minister G. Howard Ferguson of Ontario and Mrs. Ferguson. Mr. Ferguson said that while he was not attending the Imperial Conference he "hoped to listen at the keyhole." He will open the Ontario Building in London during his visit. III. Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is an official delegate. IV. Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, also a delegate.

• THE EYE MAN •

In southern Illinois, where the drab flats of the Mississippi bottoms spread drearily, they called him the "Eye Man." Up in the northern city, where his office and reception rooms were crowded with patients, he was known by more formal titles. Down there, where words were somewhat scanty and where they were used to express simple thoughts, he was just the Eye Man.

He climbed lightly into Patton's buggy, and as he settled his two hundred pounds on the seat, the springs bulged and groaned. Patton shook the reins and the buggy lurched forward.

"How'd he come out?" asked Patton in a hushed voice.

"Fine."

"Do you think he's goin' to see?"

"I know it."

Patton carefully adjusted the instrument case that the doctor had dropped into the bottom of the buggy. He nodded with patronizing dignity to a half a dozen men by the roadside who were looking curiously at the Eye Man.

Patton considered that a big honour had befallen him when he was chosen to drive the Eye Man back to the station. Great as the present glory, it paled before the future, when he should tell them that the great man himself had said that the colonel would see—old Colonel Stuart, after years of darkness.

"Seems a pity then, when it's as easy as you say that everyone who is blind hasn't got the money to have it done. It's a hard thing to let money stand between you and daylight. I suppose it costs a good deal."

"Were you thinking of anyone in particular?"

"I was thinkin' of Silas Pettingill—'Si,' we all call him. I've known him twenty years, and I've never known him to have a peep of light. I don't suppose he'd know what to do with it if he had it. He lives over there." Patton pointed with his whip to a dark roof on the horizon. "He's the patientest, he's the most feerfulest—sits there all day with his canary birds. He's got no money and no relations. It's queer how little a person can get along with if he has to."

The doctor took out his watch and looked at it. "We'll just about make that train, won't we?" he asked.

There was another irregular line of watchers on the station platform, and the station master himself came out to say, as Patton and the Eye Man got out of the buggy, that the train was four hours late.

The line of watchers curved about them. and then closed in a little; they hoped that the Eye Man would speak. He did speak.

"Four hours. Well, let's drive over there."

"Over where?" asked Patton, vaguely.

"To Si's. Isn't that what you called him? I'll have a look at him."

"He hasn't got any money."

"Drive over and we'll take a look at him."

Silas Pettingill was in his armchair by the open window—where he had been for the greater part of twenty years. His little, ill-nourished body was huddled forward; his pale face was bent toward the window. He sniffed the odour that the warm breeze bore through the window.

"Somewhere,"—Silas said aloud—"somewhere there is a lilac nearly out. I thought I smelled it yesterday. I got it again just now. There ain't more'n one—or two, maybe—they're just bustin' at the top—that's when the smell gets out—just as they bust at the top. By Sunday here ought to be a lot of them. They're earlier than last year. I believe I'll go out to the door and see if I can get that smell again."

He felt for his cane at his chair arm. It was not there. His big knotted hands felt about the floor, the edge of the window—in all directions. It was not there. Tommy, Si's grandson, had mislaid it again. The old man sighed; it was tiresome to have your few things mislaid in the middle of a big black world. So he dismissed the idea of going to the door and sat by the open window.

"I don't get it now," he fretted. "I can't be really sure. I hope I'm not losin' my smell. I ought to be surer of that lilac."

It was a dull, small, dark room. On one side stood Si's bed, which Tommy had started to put in order, and then apparently forgotten. Tommy meant well and was fond of his old blind grandfather, but the vigor and the vast businesses of thirteen years interfered with his good intentions.

On another side of the room stood the cookstove, cluttered, as was the table beside it. with unwashed plates and cooking utensils. In the only remaining space was the sagging couch where Tommy slept. There was nothing else in the room but the big armchair, another chair, and the big cage where a dozen canary birds were preparing to go to sleep.

The birds went to bed early. That was one of the disappointments of Si's life. In the mornings, when the early sun streaked across the armchair, they sang madly, shook their seeds over the old man, splashed their bath water over him, and answered his chirrups and high whistles with a boiling, bubbling chorus; but when the sun went round the corner and the little room darkened, the canaries went to sleep.

In the midst of his reflections about the lilacs, Silas bent his head quickly. His keen, trained ear had caught a new sound; two people were coming together up the grassy walk from his front gate. Then he recognized Patton's voice.

"I've brought the Eye Man to see you, Silas," Patton said importantly. "He operated on the colonel to-day, and he came out fine. Our train was late"—he emphasized "our" effectively,—"so I thought I'd drive him over to see you."

Silas was instantly alert. He knew, of course, all about the Eye Man. Who did not? Tommy, faithful reporter, brought news to his grandfather as far as his information held, and sometimes farther. Silas forgot to be abashed.

"And the colonel had his operation all right, sir?" said Silas. "I am glad if it came out right. It's been hard for the colonel to be ten years in the dark."

"But you've been twenty years in the dark, they tell me," said the new kindly voice.

"Oh, yes, but I'm used to it. The colonel was not used to it; it takes ten years to know how to live that way. He didnt' learn easy either. Oh, I am glad—very glad."

Firm hands grasped Silas's head and turned it gently toward the window.

"Look up," said the voice.

Then, as Silas looked up and then down in obedience to crisp directions, he heard the voice murmuring with satisfaction:

"Finest I ever saw. As perfect cataracts as I ever saw. Look here, Patton, if you want to see the finest specimen of thickened lens—perfect."

A hand slapped Silas on the shoulder.

"You're a lucky man. You are through with the dark. I can take out those cataracts and give you sight—such as you have dreamed about. Your eyes are in perfect condition for it. I've seen thousands of them—none better for the work. It's a shame that you should have been waiting all these years!"

"Goin' to operate on him?" asked Patton.

Silas tightened his grip on the arms of his chair. What was all this? He did not want to be operated on. That was for rich men like the colonel. And he was used to the dark He could get down to the gate; he could go as far as the pasture fence and lean there and smell the sweet scents and the voices of the men in the distance. He could enjoy the canaries; he recognized them as they moved. That was Dickey moving now. Dickey never liked strangers; he was afraid of them and always fluttered when they came in. "Oh, don't matter about me, doctor," he began in a small voice. I'm used to it I'm learning to do things all the time; and I'm an old man—no talk of operations for me. For the colonel it is different. He's only seventy. He was unhappy, too. Now I am quite comfortable—the front yar—Dickey—" His voice trailed off. Somehow there was a queer feeling in his throat.

"Goodness, man!" said the Eye Man's big voice. "Don't you want to see the sunshine? Don't you want to see the trees? Don't you want to live again?"

The big man was rattling something. Silas clung to the chair with damp hands.

"I can't pay—I have no money—just no money. Operations cost—I can't pay you—there is no one to pay you for me. Better let me alone."

The hands touched him again; but with the sureness of the blind, Silas know that they were kindly hands.

"Money is a good thing," the Eye Man was saying; "but it's not everything. Money gave me the chance to learn to do this thing. I respect it. But where I can give a man back what is more than his breath, it doesn't get in my way. Never mind the money."

Silas heard his own small voice making sounds like words, but they were lost in the strong, clear tones of the other. The doctor was complaining about the light. Silas found himself hoping that on account of the light they would not be able to operate. Then he heard the doctor say:

"No, I can't chance it with any lamp, Patton; but the sun must get into this dark place some time. It's going to be a clear morning—we'll use the first sun's rays in that east window there for light. Ah," with a big, hearty laugh, "they can't down us, Silas; we are bound to have the sun! And when the first ray streaks through that window in the morning, I'll make use of it. We'll get all ready to-night."

"But your train?" Patton exclaimed. "Four hours late, doctor."

"There will be a train to-morrow." The Eye Man's voice was suddenly sober. "Patton, I always thank God when I have a chance to do this thing—to give light where it was not expected, perhaps not even understood. And there are the times I thank God, Patton, when I have my knowledge and my firm hand."

Silas did not speak. He heard what they were saying. He heard them dragging things about and arranging a table upon which he guessed they were to put him.

Then Patton went away and the Eye Man came and sat beside Silas. The old chair creaked warningly under the big man's weight, but what he said was not alarming. The thing that was to come and that had put an icy finger on Silas's heart appeared very unimportant to the Eye Man. He told Silas stories and drowned his small laughs in his own great, clear ones. He told him more serious things: how he had learned to be a surgeon ;how he had worked and studied. He spoke as if his work were of no great importance—as if cutting into eyes were the simplest thing in the world. And Silas clung to this: that always out of clasping, pressing darkness there came light—far-spreading, wonderful.

Silas knew that he was relaxing in his chair. He felt the first touches of confidence in what the strong voice said; the hand that touched him filled him with courage. And when the Eye Man said firmly, "Now, Silas, you certainly must sleep to-night," he answered "Yes," with a corresponding firmness.

The next morning, while there was still grayness over everything, Silas was helped on the strange table by the window. And when the cocaine had done its duty, and Patton stood ready to hand the things to the docto, and Tommy whimpered and peeped in curiously from outside, Silas understood that the doctor was waiting for the first shaft of sun from over the rim in the east. Stiffened and taut, Silas felt that the other was strong and expectant, and he took courage.

A sliver of running light flashed over the hill and ran down the valley to the little gray house where stood the man with the queer shaped knife. And as the strong, clear shaft came like a pointing finger to show the way the Eye Man began his work.

It was two months before the Eye Man came again to the little town. He had sent spectacles to Silas and knew of his recovery, but not until another urgent call summoned him to the village did he come again.

Silas was halfway down the walk to meet him.

"How goes it?" asked the Eye Man.

They sat together on the doorsill—more like two boys than like a famous busy surgeon and a man whose hair was white with the passing of years. What Silas could see and what he could not see was the topic of their conversation. That he could see the red in the farther field—wonderful! That he pointed directly to the smoke of the far-off train—marvellous! And both laughed aloud in the joy of the great new thing.

"There is only one thing that troubles me," Silas said presently, "and that is that I can't pay. I've always paid my bills; I never owed anyone anything. I always paid as I went, and if I could pay you it would take away this only trouble. What—how—if I could—What's the price of this thing you've done?"

"I don't want you to pay. I am glad to do it; it gives me practice," said the Eye Man.

"No, I would rather pay if I could. How much does it cost?"

"Oh, a hundred dollars."

Silas gasped. "Well there's no hope then. I'll just take it as a gift. I never could pay that, or anything like it, but I wish I could; it would cleared everything off my mind, but that would have made it too good, I guess."

The sun shadows danced, and through the open door came a glad carol of birds.

"I'll tell you," said the doctor. "You can pay me in canaries, if you want to. You've got some fine singers in there."

The old man's shoulders straightened. "Oh, if I could—if I have enough! Yes, they're fine birds. I've had Dickey eight years. He knows my voice. Would I have enough?"

"Let's take a look at them," said the doctor, and they went into the shack.

"Yes, they're all right. I'll take two of those birds at fifty dollars each and give you a receipt in full. I don't want Dickey; I think he's too old. Give me two of the younger ones that yon haven't had so long, and we'll call it square."

The old man's face shone. "Ain't fifty dollars a good deal for a canary?"

"Not at all!" cried the doctor. "Not in the city—for birds like these."

And when the Eye Man went down the walk he carried a small square cage with two twittering young canaries inside. His smile was kindly and quizzical as he waved his hand to Silas. The old man at the gate waved back, and it seemed to him that there was not a flaw in this grand new world that streamed through his big spectacles.

Take It If You Need It.

"Is this the weather bureau?"

"Yes, sir."

"How about a shower to-night?"

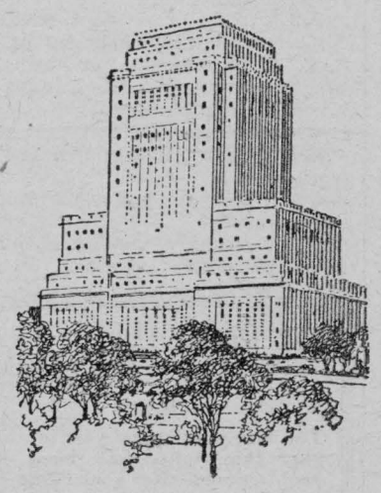

"It's all right with me. Take it if you need it."

—o—

"So your daughter's married, I hear. I expect you found it very hard to part with her."

"Hard! I should think so! Between you and me, my boy, I began to think it was impossible!"

Life Assurance is the Best Investment

A MAN can create an estate for himself of $1,000, $2,500, $5,000, $10,000, or more—all dependent upon his position, income and prospects. Through Sun Life assurance he can be sure of reaching this objective within a specified time, with safety and without loss or impairment of principal.

If death should intervene, Life Assurance will do what no other investment can guarantee—it will make the full intended principal available at once for his family and will carry through the programme that he had planned for them.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

DRIVE in SAFETY

with an Automobile Insurance Policy to protect you against the hazards of Fire, Theft, Collision, Property Damage and Public Liability.

Every Automobile Owner in Ontario should know about the new Financial Responsibility Law effective since September 1st. The new law makes necessary the abi lity to pay for damage.

In its general application, it requires that the motorist responsible for damage to person or property of others MUST PAY either personally or through insurance OR BE BARRED FROM THE ROAD.

The sensible thing to do is to carry Automobile Liability and Property Damage Insurance. It is better to have this insurance and not need it, than to need it and not have it.

People who depend upon their crops should not be without some kind of the above insurance.

The loss of crops and barns, sometimes dwellings, is a serious matter to all farmers.

The claims paid through this office, just recently, have been large.

We aim to satisfy our policyholders, and do our utmost on their behalf.

Possibly you believe that you are carrying enough insurance. Think for a moment what a total loss would mean to you. This, as you will admit, is quite possible.

Information regarding various forms of insurance glady given, you are under no obligation whatsoever, just call or write.

Surprising Results

what effect certain foods have upon the human body, some very surprising facts are brought out by experimenters.

Some time ago, a number of school children, who were decidedly underweight, were divided into four sections or groups. One group was given four fresh figs to eat in the middle of the afternoon, the second group a glass of milk to drink, the third group a whole orange to eat, and the fourth group received nothing at all.

At the end of the experiment period their gains in weight were checked against the group given nothing to eat and it was discovered that the children given the whole orange to eat had gained the largest total number of pounds.

Quite likely most of the children had been obtaining sufficient of most of the food elements, but needed certain minerals salts or vitamins that the oranges furnished.

Mummy entered the nursery: "Good gracious!" she cried, "you're all so quiet! I thought you were going to play trains?"

"Yes, mummy, we are playing trains, but we're on strike."

Ottawa Winter Fair

Formal announcement is made that the 28th Annual Ottawa Winter Fair and Horse Show will be held at the Coliseum, Lansdowne Park, Ottawa, Monday to Friday, December 1 to 5, inclusive, under the distinguished patronage of His Excellency, the Viscount Willingdon, Governor-General. In making this announcement, Prof. W. J. Bell, principal of the Kemptville Agricultural School, who is president of the Ottawa Winter Fair, points out that approximately $25,000 is being offered in prizes—all for the purpose of improving livestock breeds, horses, poultry, pet stock, seeds, etc., and farming conditions generally.

The Ottawa Winter Fair will bring together many of the finest animals in Eastern Canada for the outstanding competitions while the evening horse show also provides a social function of the highest order for the elite of the Canadian Capital and other cities. Because of excellent crop conditions and splendid pasturage throughout the season in the Ottawa Valley, all live stock of the territory is in exceptionally fine form and it is expected that the display will be particularly well finished from the exhibitors' standpoint.

Attention is drawn to the fact that all entries positively close November 22 with the secretary, John W. Brant, 66 Queen street, Ottawa. Co-incident with the Ottawa Winter Fair will be the annual meeting of the Eastern Ontario Poultry Association which will be held in the Coliseum, Wednesday, December 3, at 8 p.m. Incidentally, the poultry division of the Fair is one of the greatest features.

As encouragement for junior farmers there are many important trophies and cash prizes for inter-county livestock judging junior showmanship, seed judging, school fair seed and potato entries and other classes, while there are county competition for agricultural representatives. Copies of the Official Premium List may be obtained from the Secretary, Ottawa Winter Fair, 66 Queen street, Ottawa.
