SERIOUSLY BURNED WITH ACID

Sunday afternoon last Mrs. Ross M. Young was quite seriously burned by muriatic acid which spilled from a container when lifted from a shelf above a window where it possibly had been placed without a stopper. The acid spilled over her forehead, face and eyes causing much pain which was much alleviated when Dr. Justus took prompt action.

ATTENDS BIG LEAGUE GAME

Mr. Clinton Armstrong of town, while spending part of his holidays visiting his brother in Cleveland, Ohio, had the pleasure of attending an American League baseball game in that city. The great pitcher Bob Feller was not on the mound that particular day, but it was a real sensation to be one of the more than 65,000 spectators who saw the home team win in a shut-out 1-0.

WAR BRIDES WELCOMED AT SOUTH MOUNTAIN

Members of South Mountain Women's Institute to the number of 23 with three guests motored to Osgoode, where dinner was served. Mrs. D. L. Berry was in charge of the business session.

The program was in charge of Mrs. Roy Graham and Miss Ruth Harper. Sports included a ball game.

At a previous meeting the members were hostesses to "war brides" of the community, Mrs. James Chester, Mrs. H. Baldwin, Mrs. Verne Montgomery. Mrs. D. L. Berry welcomed the brides and each was presented with a teapot.

Tour of the South Nation Will Start From Chesterville

The Ontario Conservation and Reforestation Association plans to tour a part of the South Nation Watershed on August 29th, 1946.

Delegates will meet beside the Chesterville dam at 9.00 a.m. and follow the course of the river through Crysler, Casselman and Plantagenet to the mouth of the river. They will turn north at Wendover and, after passing through Bourget and Cheney, they will visit a small portion of the 10,000-acre, Larose Forest. It is probable that there will be a short address by Mr. A. H. Richardson after the noon meal and by Mr. Watson Porter after the evening meal.

The purpose of the tour is to give to representatives and outstanding citizens a first hand picture of the conditions which exist in the South Nation Watershed and an illustration, Larose Forest, of how the problems of proper land use can be met. Visiting delegates will see the extremely low level of the river in summer-time and some of the difficulties which the failing water supply presents. They will also see marks left by the ice in flood time, high up on the telephone poles in the extensive flood areas. They will see great stretches of land which are now unproductive, although they formerly supplied a great industry and they will be asked to consider how such land should best be managed.

The Department of Planning and Development will give a moving picture entertainment illustrating Conservation measures to the touring delegates and the local citizens in the evening at Bourget.

Embrun Bank Manager Gets Extended Leave

J. A. Cloutier, bank manager at Embrun, Ont., reportedly seeking a transfer following two attempted bank hold-ups there within five months, conferred with bank head office officials in Montreal and left shortly afterwards for an un-named destination on indefinite leave-of-absence.

Said by bank officials to have been at Embrun for 20 years and to have experienced only two-hold ups in that time, Mr. Cloutier could not be reached for comment.

He underwent his first hold-up last April and had just returned from a leave-of-absence to recover from the affair when a similar attempt was made last Friday. In foiling the hold up, Mr. Clouthier wounded a taxi-driver whom he had mistaken for the bandit and who was placed under a doctor's care.

Bank officials said Mr. Clouthier would take an extended rest and return "to talk things over" when he felt like it.

WILL DUNDAS BE IMMUNE TO BANG'S DISEASE

A ready response is being made by the farmers of Dundas county to the appeal of the Federation of Agriculture to free Dundas from Bang's disease among its herds. The township of Matilda appears to be leading in the effort with more than two thousand calves already lined up for the veterinarians to administer the serum which will make them immune to the inroads of Bang's disease. Mountain township has nearly all been organized, while Winchester and Williamsburg are now in the course of organization.

That all calves from five to seven months of age should be vaccinated is a vital necessity if advantage of the great market presented by the border states is to be retained. It will be only a matter of a few years when other than calfhood vaccinated cows will not be allowed to enter Bang's disease free areas. This will cut off a fine cash market for those with unvaccinated cows to sell.

Arrangements have been made with veterinarians to do this service at a nominal price per calf for all who have signed up for it.

FROM FOREST TO COAL BIN

Where the next ton of coal is coming from is a problem about which hundreds of people are forced to worry even during the heat of August. The Royal Ontario Museum cannot help to obtain that much needed fuel product, but it can demonstrate, by means of its varied collections, many interesting facts relating to the age in which most of the world's coal supply was formed.

Three hundred million years ago vast swamps covered much of the land. In the swamps dense forests flourished, although the trees were different from those of the present day. There were giant club-mosses, huge horsetails, and towering seed-ferns. Great dragon-flies with a wing spread of nearly three feet flew in and out among the trees. Cock-roaches six inches long scampered over the ground. Millepedes crawled sluggishly over the sodden logs.

When the trees died, they fell into the swamps and some were quickly covered over by muddy waters thus preventing their decay. As millions of years went by, layers and layers of buried forest were changed into coal through heat and pressure, and other agencies.

A TIME TO KICK

The Canadian Veteran—One of the most co-operative persons in the world today is the Canadian taxpayer. Cheerfully (almost) he reaches deep into his pockets and pulls out the dollars required to finance veterans' rehabilitation, baby bonuses, film boards, consumer subsidies, broadcasting stations, and hundreds of other national expenses, to say nothing of a mighty host of civil servants. For all this he expects nothing more than reasonable adequate government by the men who recently voted themselves a $2,000 tax-free increase while salaries were still frozen.

However, there comes a time when even the most patient of mules considers the advisability of lashing out with a good, healthy kick. The time would seem to be long overdue for Mr. Taxpayer to wind up his hind leg for some kicking.

DAIRY COWS TUNNEL

The Australian News reports that one of the items in the set-up of a newly completed modern dairy at Whyalla, South Australia, is a tunnel in which fans are installed to create a 50 mile-an-hour wind. The cows are trained to go through this tunnel and go straight to the milking machines in a concrete milking shed. All flies are blown off the cows in the tunnel so that milking proceeds in comfort.

THE PARLOR ORGAN IS GONE

Hanover Post—Apparently the old-fashioned parlor organ has gone to join a lot of other things that stand for an outmoded way of living.

A generation ago the parlor organ was a treasured part of the family and no family was complete until the organ was acquired, often with considerable sacrifice and hard work. It brought happiness into the home and also a certain social status for which nothing else had just the same standing. On a cold Winter's night or on a Sunday afternoon or evening, mother or sister would sit at the organ and play all the old favourite tunes—"Sweet Genevieve", "Seeing Nellie Home", "Nearer My God to Thee", "Rock of Ages", "Silver Threads Among the Gold", and so on and on.

It may not have been the great music we hear on the radios of today, but the family sang the old folk songs, beloved Christmas carols, the tender hymns and here was Home Sweet Home and everything and everyone seemed safe and secure. The radio typically represents modern living, the old parlor organ something fine that we have lost—and no one cares but the tired old hasbeens who are just as "queer" as the old organs.

PIONEER HOUSEBUILDING PROBLEMS

The summer months see much activity in the building trade, though not nearly enough to supply the needs of our communities today. The feats of our pioneer ancestors in Ontario, who hewed their homes out of the forest with the simplest of tools are all the more remarkable in view of present difficulties.

It is a far cry to the log shanty which constituted the first home in the early days. The pioneer models of Mr. J. McN. McCrea in the Royal Ontario Museum ably demonstrate the progression from the rounded log to the forerunner of the modern plank. In the first shanty, notched pine logs wer used, the spaces between being filled with moss, bark or clay. No nails or screws were available and the roofs were of shooks, bark, or were 'scoop' roofs, formed of basswood logs split in two, hollowed out and laid concave and convex. Neither were iron hinges to be had. Hinges in those days were square pieces of wood, through a centre hole of which went a long pin. Models demonstrating squaring or "making" timber and shingle making show the progress to the time when a settlement has grown up and a schoolhouse is being built. Improved technique is evident; for the logs are flattened on the inside and outside and the space filled with wood and lime mortar. The roof has been shingled and an unfinished portion shows a board lath and plaster ceiling.

From these beginnings have sprung the neat cottages and pleasantly hospitable larger frame houses of today.

FOR PROLIFIC EWES

Cross-breeding of sheep for the production of strong, healthy, prolific breeding ewes and first class market lambs at the Animal Husbandry Division, Experimental Farms Service, continues to attract considerable attention every year, not only as a means of increasing lamb production but also as a possible basis for the organization of the sheep industry for years to come.

THE HAWK AND THE FISH

By R. J. DEACHMAN

COME with me for a few minutes to Metis Beach. It's a brief period for so long a trip but in imagination one travels far in a short time. Metis is a little burgh, about four hundred and seventy-five miles northeast of Ottawa, perhaps fifty less as a duck flies, if a duck ever does fly straight. Now get your geography right. This place is situated on the south bank of the St. Lawrence about forty miles east of Rimouski which is the last port of call for out-going steamers on the St. Lawrence, the first place they touch on their return journey.

The town and its neighbour Les Boules is about three miles long and one street wide, with straggling houses on a higher level. The population is three hundred all the year round with perhaps seven hundred more during the summer season. People come here for a holiday, throw their worries to the winds, drink in the salt air, enjoy the sea breezes, the tang of Spruce and Cedar trees and then go back home feeling like a million dollars, wonder ever after why they felt worth less.

Of course Metis Beach isn't on the sea shore it's on the St. Lawrence River. Strain your eyes as you will you cannot see land on the other side. The tides come in as regularly here as they do on the ocean shore. The water is salt. There are gulls and fish and rocks. Shortly after sun-up the breeze moves in from the water and all day long you have a warm sun and cool breeze, you feel very happy about it. Temperatures in the West were running from 90 to 97, in Ontario, from 85 to 90 odd degrees while down there, on the shores of the St. Lawrence, 50 and 75.

It is strange how quickly people in a place like this forget the troubles of the world—also their own. They sit and watch the moods of the river and the tides, they play golf, do it with enthusiam, quite impossible in less moderate climates. They make side trips to other places, boats to the North Shore, drives in the country to other towns.

Agriculture, in the Gaspe, is a rather peculiar task. Spring comes late. There is little growth until about the middle of June, then it comes with a rush. In that way it reminds me of Northern Alberta. I stood in a garden at Metis a few days ago where rows of garden peas stood eight feet high, there were all the common vegetables and flowers, also small fruits, and gooseberries, the largest I have ever seen, they looked like plums.

One day I watched a sea-hawk, an osprey I think, plying his trade. Never before have I been so close to one in action. At Metis there are two or three small islands lying a short distance from the shore. They are called the Boule Rocks, they shelter the waters inside the barrier and present to the sea-hawk a fine fishing ground. He patrolled his territory at a fairly low level, moving from side to side watching for fish. Directly opposite to me not 200 feet away he backpaddled in the air and came almost to a dead stop.

He had seen something he wanted in the water below. He went up a little higher still watching. I saw him stretch his feet out to full length, he flexed and unflexed his claws as you have seen a cat stretch its claws while sitting before a fire. Suddenly he moved out in a circle, straightened out, hesitated again, and then went down like a plane shot out of the sky, his body cutting the water like a knife. He was up again in a few brief seconds, a fish in his claws. There was something wrong, the fish may have been too heavy for the hawk or his grasp was not sufficiently tight, he flew at a low level finding it difficult to rise higher with the burden he carried. His hold weakened the fish fell back into the water.

His temper was rising now, he circled again and again, hesitating from time to time in mid-air, turning his head on one side looking down. He stretched his legs, he opened his claws then he saw what he wanted and with more power in his dive because made from a higher level he flashed in and out of the sunlit waters, this time with a fish held tightly in its claws. Outwards he winged towards Boule Rock, again he dropped his fish but this time it landed safely. Once more he circled to see if there were enemies who might dispute possession. There were none. A fish which a few moments before seemed secure from almost every enemy but man became dinner for a fish-hawk. Security is not enough, intelligence is needed, without intelligence security is of little value to either fish or man.

A friend of mine remarked one time that youth should take its holidays in the mountains age should go down to the sea. There is inspiration in the one, there is comfort in the other. Fortunately in Canada we can make wide use of both. The seas and the mountains are assets of ever increasing value to the nation in the years which lie ahead.

"Methuselah ate what he found on his plate
And never as people do now.
Did he note the amount of the vitamin count?
He ate it because it was chow.
He cheerfully chewed every species of food,
Unaffected by fancies or fears
Lest his health might be hurt by some fancy dessert;
And he lived over nine hundred

SARDONYX FOR AUGUST

A poetic legend tells us that the August-born must wear a sardonyx to achieve conjugal felicity. This stone is a member of a very large family in the mineral kingdom—the quartz family. The mineral, which is composed of silicon dioxide, grows in layers of uniform thickness. An attractive looking formation is produced through one layer having the brown colour of Sard interspersed with white layers of Chalcedony. In small caves in volcanic or sedimentary rocks one could expect to find this mineral.

By occurring in uniform layers, Sardonyx is easily adapted to cameo engraving, where the cameo has the base of one colour and the figure of another. Added to this feature, Sardonyx, because of its porous nature, can be artificially coloured in order to deepen the paler shades. A cameo is displayed in the Royal Ontario Museum, as well as specimens of quartz with its many varieties, including Sardonyx.

KEEP REGISTRATION CARDS IF PLANNING U. S. VISIT

C. A. Foltz, officer in charge of immigration at the Rainbow Bridge, Niagara Falls, today advised Canadians planning to visit the United States to keep their registration cards despite the abolition of national registration regulations.

He said registration cards were a good means of identification for people seeking to cross the border and in doubtful cases supplemented birth certificates and other identity cards.

MOON AFFECTS PLANT GROWTH

Expression, "the psychological moment," has become a stock phrase, and yet the gardener realizes that there is a time for all things. For instance, don't be like the gardener whose lawn was over-run with dandelions. He waited until they had bloomed, gone to seed and the seed blown away. Then he started digging up the plants or killing them off with 2-4D. But what about the million seeds that the wind had scattered over not only his lawn but his neighbor's lawn as well, to make much work the coming year.

And what about the municipalities? They send notices to the property owners to cut the weeds on their lots, or cutting will be done at the owner's expense. The owner, especially on vacant lots, does not mind paying for this work, if it is done at the psychological moment, before seeds are set. But action is only taken, if it is, at the end of the season, when all the damage is done, spoiling the gardens of the conscientous owners and charging the others for a useless job.

Moonstruck Well

This psychological moment should also be considered in seeding and planting. Dr. De Lury, solar Psysicist at the Dominion Observatory commented about the actions of the "Moonstruck Well" on the Alaska highway, which dries up with the new moon and develops into a near gusher at the full moon. Many of my horticultural friends know from my lectures that I believe in the action of the moon on plants. If there are tides in the earth's crust which are pulled by the action of the moon and sun, as Dr. De Lury said, then it is only natural that there is a psychological moment for seeding and planting corresponding to the waxing and waning of the moon. The forces of the moon are guided along the paths of the water, and by studying the water conditions in connection with the moon one begins to understand this statement.

Therefore I have already advocated these simple rules: Vegetation which produces its yield above the ground should be planted during the first and second quarters of the moon, the nearest the full moon the better, and in a fruitful sign, but not later than two days before the full moon. Why? If we want the plants to benefit by the maximum full moon effect, they must be placed into the main stream of the waxing moon forces. If we should plant the day of the full moon itself, the process of germination comes under the waning moon forces.

Monthly Fluctuations

Vegetation which produces its yield under the ground, should be planted during the third and fourth quarters, but just after the full moon is preferred, and also in a fruitful sign.

As Dr. De Lury says: Fluctuations in rainfall and barometric pressure usually occur every 28 days, corresponding to the waxing and waning of the moon, as shown again the beginning of this week, and this water is absolutely needed.

So here again the psychological moment must be taken into consideration. However, if at full moon the soil is dry the forces of the moon cannot develop their effect in the plant, because the conducting medium, water, is lacking, and then water must be applied.

When we have an exact science of these relationships between the moon and all that is watery on earth, it will be possible to sow every year plants in such a way that the most favorable results can be obtained.

SABBATH STILLNESS

I felt a solemn silence. This Sabbath day of rest. I entered the green forest by a lane that I loved best. 'Twas like a great cathedral, the aisles were emerald green. With little dots of cardinal fit for the loveliest queen. Of heavenly blue the ceiling, made by the Master's Hand; all nature hushed and listening, as though waiting for God's command. Be still and know that I am God: these words the silence taught, and all the birds and flowers and insects heard me-thought. The Lord my shepherd is, green pastures all around. By waters still He leads, in blessings I abound. His kindly love surrounds me, how can I be dismayed? I left the silent forest, in spirit unafraid.

Looking Backward — 20 Years Ago — From The Record Files

Thursday, August 19th, 1926

Miss Sybil Carruthers and Mr. Jas. Watson were married in Morewood United Church, August 14th, when Rev. Stewart of Finch officiated. Miss Greta Faulkner played the Wedding March.

Wm. Hodgson, a life-long resident of Bethune Bush passed away last Wednesday morning unexpectedly, having been in apparent good health up to the previous evening.

Silver cups were on display in the window of Bolster's store, one from Nation Valley Public School, won for the most attractive school grounds in the province. The Higgins cup emblematic of lawn bowling supremacy in the St. Lawrence Association and the W. O. Dixon cup won in singles competition among club members. Baseball was also in the picture with a cup won many years before.

BURIED TREASURE

When you have a small area like the British Isles packed with the relics of teeming centuries of history, it's not surprising that some of them come to the surface in the most unexpected places. A recent instance caused no small excitement among philatelists, and, incidentally, proved a very pleasant windfall for the Duke of Buccleuch. The Duke's secretary was tidying up in the library and found an old leather writing case. Inside was a sheet of forty-eight two-penny stamps. Not so exciting, on the face of it, but those stamps happened to be two-penny blues of 1840, which are the sort of thing that hopeful stamp collectors dream blissfully about. And that eight-shillings worth fetched six thousand guineas. Colin Wills mentioned this little flutter in the stamp world in a talk he gave from the CBC about discoveries of treasure in Britain.

Another recent find was even more valuable, both historically and materially. A framer, ploughing near Mildenhall in Suffolk, stopped his plough when the share grated on something metalic. Just below the surface was a hoard of Roman silver, at least 2,000 years old. There were dishes, bowls, cups, spoons, of magnificent quality and great beauty, and all in practically perfect condition. It was obviously the household treasure of some Romano-British family, but for what reason—possibly an invasion scare—the owners buried it may never be known. In accordance with English law, a coroner's inquest was held on the find, which was declared treasure-trove.

Bank Manager At Embrun Exchanges Shots With Bandit

Thomas Ritchie, 32, no address, was arrested Friday by police scouring the area surrounding nearby Russell following an unsuccessful attempt to rob the Royal Bank Branch at Embrun. Ritchie was taken to Ottawa and held in the police jail on a charge of vagrancy.

Ritchie was taken into custody on the farm of Emile Thibeault, three miles southwest of Russell, by Constables Donald Nicol and Ralph Edge, of the Ontario Provincial Police, after Mrs. Thibeault had reported spotting a man on the farm. He was unarmed, police said, and offered no resistance.

At Ottawa, however, Ontario Provincial Police reported finding of a gun in the course of the man-hunt. They said Ritchie would be formally arraigned Saturday morning, and further charges, if any, would be laid then.

Driver Wounded

Harold Malette, 38-year-old Ottawa taxi driver, who was wounded in the gunfight between the bandit and Bank Manager J. A. Cloutier, was in Ottawa General Hospital in a serious condition. Hospital attendants said a bullet had entered his body under the right kidney.

Although earlier reports said the would-be bandit had been wounded in the left leg during his flight from police. Ottawa authorities said the man they had taken into custody was not wounded.

Earlier, a posse of 150 district residents and police were reported to have surrounded a man in a patch of bush at near-by Russell.

In a wild series of events, a taxi-driver, 38-year-old Harold Malette, was taken to an Ottawa hospital in serious condition with a bullet wound in the back; his taxi was wrecked in a ditch near Russell and a policeman's dog was killed.

Provincial police, some with submachine guns, RCMP with bloodhounds and district citizens, armed with shotguns and pitchforks, joined in throwing a cordon around the 18-acre patch of bush in which the bandit took refuge after firing three shots at John Buchanan of Russell, high county constable.

Driver Used As Shield

First reports were confused, but this sequence emerged:

Early Friday morning, Malette, a veteran of 15 years with an Ottawa taxi firm, was engaged there to drive a man to Embrun. Shortly after noon he was forced at gunpoint to enter the bank and was used by the gunman as a shield as he shouted: "This is a hold-up—we mean business."

J. A. Cloutier, the bank manager, who returned to work only a day after a three-month leave following an attempted bank robbery last April 29, raised one hand and walking toward the man, reached into an open drawer for a heavy automatic and fired. Then he ducked behind the counter as the gunman raised himself on a ledge to return fire. Mr. Cloutier said there was a sharp click as the gunman's revolver misfired.

Sure He Hit Bandit

As the two retreated, Mr. Cloutier fired twice more and the taxi-driver fell to the floor wounded in the back while the gunman raced for the taxi which was parked outside with the engine running. The bank manager said he was sure he wounded him in the left leg.

The taxi sped away, tires screaming as it gathered speed. It was going so fast as it reached the outskirts of Russell that the wounded driver failed to negotiate a sharp turn and the machine turned over in a ditch.

Buchanan, who was tying a bull to a fencepost on his farm near by, said he watched the wounded man climb from the machine. Buchanan had a rifle cradled in his arm and as the man straightened up, he fired a shot which struck the fencepost beside him.

"Enraged Frustration"

"The bandit climbed the wire fence and came running alongside of it toward me," High Constable Buchanan related. "He fired a second shot at me and I heard it whine past my head. He yelled to me to stand still and then, in what was a fit of enraged frustration, shot my dog."

He said the man, "wild and sweating", asked if he had a car. When told he had one at the farmhouse, the fugitive replied: "Then damn well get it quick, I've just held up a bank, there's been shooting and people hit and unless you get cracking, there'll be more killed."

Buchanan said he walked slowly toward the farmhouse with the bandit following. When near a patch of bush, he side-stepped quickly behind a tree, and with that to shield him from fire, raced into a thicket. While crawling on his hands and knees, he heard the bandit running around in a panic, swearing violently.

He made his way to the farmhouse and telephoned Provincial Police, but, by that time, cars began arriving from Embrun as the manhunt began.

Provincial Police from Casselman, Rockland, Cornwall and Ottawa converged on the scene, some 12 miles north-east of Chesterville and five Ottawa city police as well as RCMP bloodhounds were brought from Ottawa.

The patient with stomach trouble was told by his doctor that he had been drinking too much and would have to stop. "But," said the patient, "what shall I tell my wife is wrong with me?"

"Oh," said the doctor, after a little thought, "tell her you are suffering from syncopation. That should satisfy her."

The patient did. "What is syncopation?" asked the wife.

"I don't know," he rplied, "but that's what the doctor told me."

When her husband had gone, she looked the word up in the dictionary. "Syncopation", it defined: "'Irregular movement from bar to bar."

OATS FOR PASTURE

During the past ten years it has been proved at the Division of Forage Plants, Experimental Farms Service, that oats are among the most important species for summer pasture in Eastern Ontario. Because of that fact, a large number of varieties and strains of oats are tested for that purpose every year. The main characteristic considered are early growth, leafiness, recovery after grazing or mowing, and total annual production. The Roxton and Ripon varieties of oats were outstanding in the production of pasture.

FEATHERED PROCRASTINATION

Although August is the month in which most of the bird world lazes in comparative retirement while growing a new winter coat, two species, the goldfinch and the wax-wing are at the peak of their activtity. Their courtship period is prolonged, and it is not until well into summer that they settle down to the serious business of building a nest, with the result that the young are not hatched until August. Possibly one might deduce a certain amount of shrewedness in this procedure, as these birds are able to take advantage of the blooming thistle for their nest-building, and also their nests are free of the eggs of the parasitic cowbird.

Disadvantages are also evident, however. Almost every year the bird experts at the Royal Ontario Museum receive evidence that goldfinches have been too dilatory about raising their families, and the parent birds have gone south leaving their young to fend for themselves.

FARMER "CLIPPED" $10 FOR PARKING

Who is the self-appointed "policeman" collecting parking fines on Sparks street, Ottawa?

That is what a stranger to Ottawa —a farmer from Kinburn—would like to know. Tuesday afternoon he parked his car at the corner of Sparks and Kent. There was a sign nearby forbidding parking but he did not see it.

A man in a blue uniform came along, pointed to the sign and said, "That will be an $8 fine and $2 costs --which you can pay right now."

The farmer hauled out a sawbuck and paid the "policeman". But he was no member of the Ottawa police force.

Now the $64 question is what uniform was he wearing? Was he sailor, streetcar operator, postman, elevator operator or street cleaner?

Mother and Daughter Murdered Near Harrisons Corners

Township police searched the rough woodland country around Harrison's Corners Friday night for 49-year-old William Earl Lama, after his wife, Mary Jane Lama, 39, and daughter, Mary Elizabeth Lama, 9, were found stabbed to death in their tin-covered shack.

Bodies of the two victims were found by Frederick Lama, 17, and his brother, Daniel 12, who told police they found their mother in a pool of blood in front of their home and their sister lying across a cot in a blood-spattered bedroom. Both had apparently been stabbed repeatedly with an eight-inch home-made knife found near the door of the shack. The knife had been made from a file for pig-sticking.

Position of Mrs. Lama's body indicated she had collapsed outside her home after a struggle with her assailant. Ontario Provincial Police and Cornwall Township Police joined in a search for the father after Frederick Lama told them his mother and all members of the family had suffered frequent beatings at the hands of his father with a harness strap.

The youth told officers there had been frequent family strife over a long period.

"My sister Gertrude was sent to England to live with my mother's sister when she was 7 years old to escape the beatings," she said.

The bodies were discovered about 5.40 in the afternoon when the two boys returned from working on nearby farms.

Police found a note said to have been written by Mrs. Lama's husband contents were not revealed.

Mr and Mrs. Lama had been separated for three months, it was learned. During that time Lama has worked on a farm about a mile from the scene of the slaying.

Police quoted Lama's sons as saying he had a bad temper and often had beaten his wife and children. They described their father as being 4 feet, 11 inches tall, weighed 103 pounds and was "very wiry". They said their mother weighed almost 200 pounds.

Frederick said he had been the main support of the family since Lama left home.

The boy told police his father had visited the home three weeks ago and had argued with Mrs. Lama at that time. The father's most recent visit had been last night, when an argument had taken place about the removal of a board from a shed at the rear of the home, Frederick said.

When they left the house early in the morning, the boys said, they saw Lama near the house.

Dr. C. A. Stewart, coroner, said the mother had been dead six to eight hours when the bodies were discovered.

Mrs. Lama's body was at the front of the house apparently the whole day. A county road is only 100 feet from the doorstep. Mary Elizabeth was stabbed twice and both wounds went through her body.

"THE PEOPLE OF CANADA HAVE BEEN SO KIND TO US"

Almost daily at the Ontario Division Headquarters of Red Cross in Toronto, letters of warmest appreciation continue to arrive from Britain expressing the thanks of those who have received shipments of infants food. These, including tomato and orange juices and vegetable puree, were purchased with funds originally raised for the Jam-for-Britain project which last year had to be abandoned because of lack of available sugar.

"I would like to thank you most sincerely for the gift of tomato juice and vegetable puree sent to us for use in the Day Nurseries under my care", writes C. M. Ritchie, Maternity Child Welfare Superintendent, Mount Pleasant School, Southampton. "The children love it; and it is good to know we can give them something so beneficial to them. The people of Canada have been so kind and generous in so many ways it gives me pleasure to have this opportunity of thanking them and telling you how much it has meant to us to know you think about us."

CLEAN QUARTERS NOW FOR LAYING PULLETS

The cleaning of the laying pens to house a well reared, vigorous flock of pullets for fall and winter production is an important factor in poultry management. Sanitation helps in the production of a top quality product.

The time of the clean-up will depend upon the plan that the flock owner has for the management of the flock. At the Poultry Division, Dominion Experimental Farm, Nappan, N.S., the months of August and September are most suitable for the flock.

After the disposal of the surplus stock all the litter and house equipment is removed. This allows for the thorough scraping and scrubbing of the interior with a stiff brush and a proper cleaning solution. After the interior is cleaned and drying out, the other equipment is disinfected and when clean and dry is put in place again. The use of a hose with a good force of water is practical for a good cleaning.

Lye is about the best cleaning material. Use one pound (a can) to ten gallons of cold water. Should a stronger solution be needed, one pound to five gallons can be used. This solution should be used carefully as it is caustic and can readily cause burns. Another cleaning solution is any good coal-tar disinfectant and water. Use three ounces to twelve quarts of water or follow directions on the container. This makes a milk white coloured solution.

After all the cleaned house and equipment has become thoroughly dried, the house is now ready to house the birds. Use clean litter, good feeds and proper care for high production and a high quality product.

St. Luke's W.M.S., Finch At Home Mrs Jas. Forsythe

The August meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of St. Luke's Presbyterian church, Finch, was held at the home of Mrs. Jas. Forsyth, with a good attendance. Owing to the absence of the president, Mrs. Robertson Millar, who is away on holidays, one of the vice-presidents, Mrs. George Rupert, occupied the chair. The meeting opened by singing a hymn. Mrs. Wm. McMaster had charge of the scripture lesson which was, "Christ at prayer", which also was the theme of the meeting, followed by prayer by Miss Nell Gillies.

The secretary, Mrs. W. G. Brownlee read the minutes of the July meeting and letters which were received. The roll call was responded to by a verse from the Bible, "Christ at prayer".

Mrs. Rupert welcomed to the meeting Rev. and Mrs. J. M. McCurlie of Hamilton, a former pastor of St. Luke's church; Mrs. Kenneth MacMillan, a war bride, and to former co-workers who were present and are on holidays here.

Mrs. Wm. McMaster, treasurer, the report of the Home Helper's meeting held in July at the home of Mrs. Rupert McIntyre, when the offering was nearly twenty-four dollars. Mrs. A. D. Stewart and Mrs. W. S. McLean of Maxville were the guest speakers.

Mrs. Forsyth, supply secretary, reported she was getting along well with the requested work.

One of the Welcome and Welfare secretaries, Miss Nell Gillies, read a letter from Rev. H. R. Pickup, B.A., with reference to our work and in respect to the Presbyterian war brides who are coming to us from overseas. The offering was received and dedicated by Rev. J. McCurlie.

Mrs. Joseph Cameron gave a reading from the Study Book. Rev. McCurlie was asked to speak and gave an interesting and instructive address on "Service". Mrs. Rupert thanked him for his splendid address. A hymn was sung and Rev. McCurlie closed the meeting with prayer.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mrs. W. J. Brownlee, Mrs. R. Smith and Mrs. D. Henry. A vote of thanks was moved by Miss Nell Gillies to Mrs Forsyth for the use of her home and her gracious hospitality and to the ladies who served.

EARLY USE OF BIRCH BARK

Every holidayer carries a mental picture of the Indians in their birch bark canoes, skimming the waters of our northern rivers and lakes. In wandering through the Indian galleries at the Royal Ontario Museum, one can observe many other beautiful utilitarian objects also made of birch bark. The first moose-call horns were of that material, and under the influence of the French, the Indians of the St. Lawrence valley produced very attractive and ornate luxury articles such as boxes and mats. French settlers early took to the use of birch bark, and often it is difficult to distinguish the work of one from the other. Birch bark later became widely used by the pioneer English speaking settlers because of its waterproof and flyproof qualities.

BANKING CAN BE EXCITING

For the 12 years that Walter R. Bimson has been its president, the Valley National Bank of Phoenix, Ariz., has been changing the face of the state. Bimson has pushed electrification and modern plumbing into lonely desert settlements where children still studied their lessons by lanterns and wives still gathered mesquite wood for cook fires. He has helped to make the "Valley of the Sun" a winter playground for tourists, and has persuaded countless wealthy visitors to stay and buy ranches. He has sent emissaries all over the country to bring new businesses, branch factories and other wealth-producing operations into the desert. He has set up thousands of wage earner in business and nursed them along. He has encouraged hundreds of tenant farmers to become independent.

All of which is unorthodox banking, but profitable. This amazing bank now has 20 branches throughout Arizona; its deposits have multiplied 25-fold since Bimson's arrival, and now stands at $171,000,000. The bank is the largest in the Rocky Mountain states—which include such financial centers as Denver and Salt Lake City—and each year ranks as one of America's top banks in percentage of growth.

Bimson arrived in Phoenix on January 1, 1933, when the depression was blackest. He was then 41—surprisingly young to be a bank president. He had put himself through the Universities of Colorado and Chicago, plus the Harvard School of Business Administration; enlisted in the Navy in 1917; worked as a special assistant to Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, and finally spent 12 years with the Harris Trust and Savings Bank in Chicago, where he climbed to a vice-presidency.

In that year of nation-wide bank closings Bimson was one of the few unfrightened bankers in America. Banks everywhere were refusing to lend money to anyone. But the Valley Bank's newly arrived president announced to his staff:

"Let's go into mass production on small loans. Plain people need to borrow for all kinds of useful purposes. For years they've paid heavy interest to loan sharks because the banks wouldn't lend to them. Let's convince those people that we're here to help them."

This was banking heresy. Even today Bimson meets bankers who tell him it's immoral to encourage small-income people to go into debt. "Immoral to show a man how he can buy his wife a washing machine so she won't break her back over a washboard?" Bimson counters. "Immoral to show a couple how they can afford to have a baby? Immoral to get a man started in a business of his own? Nonsense."

The bank compounded its heresy by plunging into lively advertising of its new small-loan services. Arizonans who had been overawed by the mausoleum-like atmosphere of banks ventured into the redecorated, inviting-looking quarters of the Valley Bank to ask about its loans. Soon there were scores a day—businessmen, cowboys, truck drivers, desert rats, housewives, ranchers, and even school children. Anyone who could show a good record for paying his bills, and a good reason for borrowing, was promptly handed the cash he asked.

From October 1934 to date the Valley Bank has made 198,000 installment loans—more than most banks would make in 500 years. Losses on these loans have been slight—two tenths of one percent. And Bimson has had the satisfaction of seeing thousands of customers climb onto a firm financial foundation.

His office is just inside the main entrance to the bank; its door is always open. Anyone can walk in unannounced; there is no secretary to bar the way. A would-be borrower gets an earful of good advice, whether or not he gets a loan. If he's not living within his income he's shown how to set up a budget and stay solvent. If he wants to borrow to make an unwise investment, he's shown what's wrong with his plan. If he asks for a loan that will be too hard for him to carry, he's shown the ruinous hole it would put him in.

Wherever Bimson's men go in Arizona—and many of them roam continuously—they are welcomed by service-station owners, small restaurant operators, young doctors, grocerymen and the like, who announce with a proud grin, "Your bank set me up in business a few years back."

The bank takes an almost fatherly interest in the borrower. It shows him statistical studies of his kind of business—what locations will prove most profitable, how much to spend on advertising, what insurance to carry, where to do his purchasing how much capital he'll need. And after the enterprise is under way the bank often sends in an expert to make sure it's progressing smoothly.

Six years ago a day-wage house painter borrowed $220 to paint and print souvenir post cards; he now owns an art-products store, has branched into the hotel and cafe business, and shows a net worth of $41,000. A tuberculosis patient who borrowed a small sum in 1940 to start a one-man music store now sells $30,000 worth of musical instruments a year. A bakery-route driver borrowed enough to buy a tiny grocery in 1940, and today owns two grocery stores and three restaurants.

"If you had asked any financier to pick out the least-promising state in the whole United States for building up a mass small-loan business," Bimson says, "he might easily have picked Arizona. Pennsylvania, for example, has 220 people per square mile, while Arizona has four."

But Arizona's deserts and mountains are no longer as barren as they were. Farms and ranches have been started by the hundreds. Irrigation canals, power lines and new roads have been thrust out across the wastelands. Vast expanses of one-crop land have been enriched by scientific crop rotation.

Bimson sent emissaries to the small hardware merchants in these areas, offering to lend them money with which to put in a line of plumbing, refrigerators, electric ranges and other modern conveniences. And from 50 miles around the farmers came to buy the new merchandise—many of them with borrowed Valley Bank money.

Schoolboy loans are one of the chief interests of both Bimson and Keith Taylor, manager of the bank's Agricultural Service Department. Taylor helped found the Saturday Morning Bank, a unique project which finances boys and girls who want to raise dairy animals, bees, poultry, alfalfa, vegetables, or anything else they can grow and sell. Every Saturday morning he and his assistants chat with a procession of youngsters who have traveled to Phoenix to borrow money.

"We usually start by lending a boy the money to buy one dairy cow, Taylor explains. "He earns enough by selling its milk to pay us back in a year. Then we finance a second one for him. With the milk of two cows paying for one, he cleans up the loan in about eight months. By the time he's finished high school he owns a herd of ten or 15 cattle, all paid for."

Perhaps the most startling success story of this Saturday Morning Bank is that of a boy with asthma and heart trouble, too ill to continue in school, who borrowed $20 four years ago to buy a pair of blooded parakeets. At 21 he owns the largest aviary in the state, is worth about $5000, and was recently offered a position as curator of birds at the San Diega Zoo.

The Saturday Morning Bank keeps in touch with the youngsters, tells them what to do if an animal takes sick or the crop doesn't flourish. And it has never lost a dime. One boy came into Taylor's office, struggling to hold back the tears, and blurted out that his cow had died. He had borrowed $125 to buy it only three days before, and it represented his total worldly wealth.

Taylor grinned at the boy. "You're in a bad fix, aren't you, son?"

The lad nodded, and burst into sobs. Taylor continued swiftly, "The only answer I can see is to lend you money for two more cows."

Taylor said later that he had never seen any face as radiant as that boy's. The youngster eventually repaid the debts on all three cows, and built up a herd which he sold for $1500 when his family moved away.

"I would have torn up his note on that first cow," Taylor says, "only I figured it wouldn't be any favor to the boy to let him think the world would ease up on him whenever he had tough luck."

Bimson has long been a powerhouse in Arizona's drive for tourist trade. On all the bank's out-of-state letters, stickers remind the recipient that "The Sun Is Shining Today in Arizona." Each month the bank mails the state's richly printed promotional magazine to 500 wealthy Easterners. Now that the war is over, Bimson expects an influx of visitors, and believes many will want to settle in the state. He and his bank are ready for them—whether they're interested in buying a business, a ranch—or just a home.

Managers of branch banks have been given this postwar project: "You are to survey that area from hell to breakfast," says Bimson. "We want to know the name of every rancher, farmer and businessman, and how he's doing; how many head of cattle there are, how much copper is being mined, what land needs irrigation, what business opportunities there are. We're going to study every square foot of this state, and you're going to help us figure how to make it the best state of all the 48 United State."

What ambitious young man could resist the challenge?

She was one of those nagging wives.

One night she attended a lecture on "A Smiling Face Wins Through". The lecture so impressed her that she decided to try an experiment. Consequently, when her husband came down to breakfast the next morning he was met by a beaming wife—and no nagging words for being late.

For a moment he stood dumbfounded in the doorway, then collapsed. "Holy Cow!" he mumbled weakly. "She's got lockjaw!"

NO BIRDS; MANY BUGS

The value of bird life to agriculture has been illustrated in Lord Howe Island, which lies 440 miles northeast of Sydney, New South Wales. In 1917 birds abounded on the island, states the Australian News. By 1927 not a bird was left. Rats from a shipwrecked vessel destroyed them, even climbing trees to get the birds. As a result, a flourishing palm seed industry was wiped out by weevils, which the birds had formerly controlled.

An actress came off the stage after a successful first night and was surprised when the manager handed her a bunch of flowers and a packet of marigold seeds.

"The flowers are from a gentleman in the stalls, and the packet of seeds from a Scotsman in the gallery," was his explanation.

Pigtails and Talent

Now eight, Margaret O'Brien made her entry into movies when she was only four. Since then a dozen pictures, including hits like Journey for Margaret, Lost Angel and Meet Me in St. Louis, have established her as one of the dozen top female box-office attractions in the United States.

Miss O'Brien earns about $50,000 a year from her movie contract and as much again from infrequent appearances as guest star on the radio, recordings and miscellaneous side lines. The O'Brien nursery is decorated by a statue of St. Bridget awarded her by the Gaelic Society, two medals for selling war bonds, a diamond ring from Jimmy Durante, and a signed photograph from General Marshall. She is a Brownie and an honorary princess of two Indian tribes. She gets more fan mail than anyone else at M-G-M except Van Johnson and June Allyson. All these testimonials to her success make her easily the greatest child star since Shirley Temple, with plenty of time to be even greater.

Margaret O'Brien differs from most other child stars in two important respects. She is not beautiful and she has no accomplishments such as singing and dancing. She has, however, one invaluable asset: her ability to act, a department in which she literally starts where the others stop. Margaret is a skillful comedienne, an expert in dialect and a virtuoso in simple child appeal.

A rule-of-thumb emotional test even for grown-up actresses is the ability to cry real tears on demand. Margaret's first appearance in Journey for Margaret was a scene in which she whimpered and howled sincerely for four and a half minutes. Her personality dismays grown-up actors who work with her in a way which was best described by Lionel Barrymore: "She is the only woman except my sister Ethel who has made me take out my handkerchief in 30 years."

Even more baffling than her artistry is her technique in such practical matters as learning her lines. She rarely forgets them more than four or five times in the course of a whole picture, while adults frequently do it as many times in a single scene. Last spring, on a radio broadcast, she recited 33 speeches without a single reference to a script. Adults on the same program, who read their contributions, marveled at her memory. Margaret, who learns her lines by having them repeated to her by her mother, was conversely humiliated by being unable to read a script. Assured that reading was not so difficult as it seemed, she begged to be given a concentrated course in it. Her teacher whisked her through the first, second and third readers in 67 days, a process which takes most children two years. Margaret can now read almost any book that she picks up.

Margaret and her mother—her father died before she was born—live in a modest house on a Beverly Hills side street. Margaret goes to the studio about nine every morning and spends the day there, either working on the set, studying roles, or attending for three hours the school which the studio provides for its child actors. Outside of the prescribed hour's rest, the other four hours of her working day consist principally of emotional scenes, Margaret, with or without prompting from directors, thinks of something sad.

Half her net earnings, saved for her by provision of state law, go into Victory Bonds. Most of the rest, administered by her mother, is used for living. Margaret herself gets nothing except occasional winnings at gin rummy, which she plays for five cents a game; $1.20 a week for tidying her mother's bureau drawers, and the proceeds of bets on the Santa Anita races, for which Louis B. Mayer is her tipster.

Margaret's mother, born Gladys O'Brien, spent several years dancing on the Pantages circuit and with the Ringling Brothers Circus. While with the circus she met another O'Brien whose first name was Larry. They were married in 1934. After the appearance of her daughter, Gladys toured the United States, Canada and Cuba for two years with her sister Marissa, also a stage dancer. While her sister danced, Gladys passed most of her time in the movies, often accompanied by her small offspring, who up to that time had spent most of her life cradled in a hotel bureau drawer.

Stimulated by her first glimpses of the great world, which seemed to consist chiefly of a large auditorium and a big screen, and encouraged by the examples of her mother and her aunt, Margaret made up her mind to be a movie actress almost as soon as she had a mind. Before she was three she had perfected half a dozen roles, including Scarlett O'Hara and Lady Hamilton, which were enacted on the slightest provocation. In 1941, then four, she felt that it was time for her to go to Hollywood. Mrs. O'Brien gave in.

Margaret O'Brien's career thereafter was a triumph over stiff competition and hostile circumstances. On Producer Nunnally Johnson's list of "office fees" there appears the following item: "For looking at talented children $500; for talking to same $50,000." This shows how much most producers feel about small fry. Moreover, Central Casting registers 2400 minors yearly, almost all able to sing, dance, roller-skate and ride much better than Margaret.

One way for children to start careers in Hollywood is to have professional pictures taken by the photographer Paul Hesse. In Hesse's waiting room Mrs. O'Brien was discouraged by the swarm of beautiful and accomplished children already on hand and wanted to take Margaret home. Margaret wanted to stay and did so for an hour. Presently Hesse came out of his studio. "There is my model," he said, pointing at Margaret, who was giving him her "look"—a kindergarten version of Bacall's.

Hesse's photographs got Margaret on the cover of several magazines. She also got a bit part in Babes on Broadway, but her real debut in movies attended the casting of Journey for Margaret, of which the heroine was an impoverished London war orphan. Since most Hollywood children are plump, sleek and cheerful-looking, few could even attempt the role. Margaret, with her pinched, sensitive face and woebegone pigtails, would have been a natural even without her acting proficiency. When tests narrowed down to four contenders, Margaret gave a reading which caused Executive Producer Harry Rapf to say, "Stop her, she's killing me," and got her the role. Since then her career has followed a steady upward curve.

Accomplishments like Margaret's would give even a dull child some conception of her own importance. Margaret, being far from dull, appreciates it thoroughly. When Clark Gable came back from two years in the Army, he met her on the lot and naively asked, "Well, little girl, are you in pictures, too?" Oh, yes, I am, thank you," Margaret assured him and then turned to her mother. "He hasn't been around much, has he?" she inquired. Margaret's manner of making such remarks shows not conceit but sympathy with grown-ups. When she first met Gloria Swanson, Miss Swanson said, "You know, I used to be quite a movie star myself." "Did you?" Margaret asked. "What happened?"

Margaret exploits her ability thoroughly. Our Vines Have Tender Grapes, her latest picture, starts with a scene in which she suffers remorse for accidentally killing a little squirrel. Director Roy Rowland explained the scene to her carefully, stressing the pathetic values, and finally asked her if there was anything further she wanted to know about it. "Yes, there is," said Margaret. "Do you want tears just to here," touching her eyelashes, "or do you want all-the-way-down tears?"

MUSIC FROM "LA PLAZA"

Spanish and Portugese melodies are the rule in the little city of "La Plaza" to which Canadian listeners are invited for a radio visit over the CBC Trans-Canada network every Saturday, at 9.00 p.m. EDT. Portrayed here on the outskirts of the mythical town in CBC's Vancouver studios, are David Holman and Irma Lawrence who sing as Pepe and Lolita at La Plaza's Garden Cafe. Maestro George Calangis directs his orchestra in original arrangements of tangos, rhumbas, beguines and rancheros, and narrator Jack Bingham welcomes the tourists to the Latin American dance.

PEACHES PLENTIFUL

Hundreds of thousands of baskets of peaches are now on the markets throughout Canada and British Columbia. The Ontario crop this year is estimated at 1,566,000 bushels, about 350,000 bushels more than in 1945 and about 548,000 bushels more than the 10-year average; and the British Columbia crop at 670,000 bushels is 206 per cent above the 10-year average crop of 219,000 bushels.

With the recent increase in sugar ration it will be possible for more peaches to be canned both in the home and in commercial canning plants than has been the case in recent years. Peaches take less sugar for canning than any other fruit. Peaches can be served on the menu in numerous ways as fresh fruit and they can be pickled and made into marmalade.

Of all the fruits grown none is more luscious or more healthful as food than peaches. Canadian grown peaches have an incomparable flavour and quality. They will be available in plentiful quantities at reasonable prices from now until the end of September and are sold in Canada by grade, the grades in the order of quality and size being; Select No. 1; No. 2 or Domestic, and No. 3. The grade mark is plainly indicated on the basket or other container.

ONTARIO STONE

During the heat of mid-summer, the Royal Ontario Museum remains cool, and inviting to the visitor, probably due to its stone construction. When one seeks to find the source of the stone, the amazing fact emerges that it was all, with the exception of a small amount of Italian marble, from Ontario quarries. Certainly this building is strong proof that fine architectural effects may be achieved by the use of domestic stone. The sandstones used in the exterior walls are from Credit Valley, the Queenston dolomite, used externally and internally, from the Niagara district; the beautiful breccia marble, green serpentine marble, and sodalite are all from the Bancroft area in Hastings County.

A torrential shower came on suddenly, so the woman in the sable coat boarded a street car.

"I don't think I've ridden on a street car for nearly two years," she said to the conductor, as she tendered her fare. "I ride in my own car, you know."

He looked solemn and said: "You don't know how we've missed you!"

Housewives, Don't Forget Issue of New Ration Book

Consumers! Don't forget to get your new ration book. It will be given out through various distribution September 9 to 16.

Residents of Ottawa and district are reminded to watch their local papers as to the date and hours of distribution centres will be open in their locality. This is important because persons not picking up book No. 6 while distribution centres are open may be without the valid coupons for butter, meat, sugar in the new book until September 29, when distribution will start again. During distribution of Ration Book No. 5 in October, 1944, over 15,000 consumers in the Ottawa-Brockville area failed to pick up their books on time.

Process of getting No. 6 book is simple. The application card in the back of book 5 must be completed and with the present book handed in to the distribution centre when application is made.

Some modifications have been incorporated in the new book. It will have a yellow cover and is slightly smaller. Coupon identification is made easier by the letters S for sugar and M for meat and B for butter, printed on the respective coupons. As a guard against possible counterfeiting, special markings have been added to coupons and the coupon design has been made smaller.

D.D.T. BIG BOON TO POTATO GROWERS

Although this is the first year that D.D.T. has been available commercially as an insecticide for the potato crop, the product is now widely distributed, reports R. E. Goodin, potato fieldman of the Ontario Department of Agriculture. Mr. Goodin reports that it is now being used generally by potato growers. In visits to more than 200 potato growers this year, he found that approximately 75 percent had used D.D.T. compounds in spraying and dusting.

D.D.T. has been found very effective for the control of leaf hoppers and flea beetles, which have been responsible for heavy losses in the potato crops during recent years. This insecticide will also control Colorado Potato Beetle and has some effect on reducing populations of potato aphids, particularly when applied in spray form. Fields where D.D.T. has been used can usually be quite easily recognized, as the plants are more vigorous and healthy, the foliage is a deeper green and there is an absence of injury by leaf hoppers and flea beetles.

As a spray, D.D.T. is used at the rate of one pound of actual D.D.T. to each 100 gallons of liquid and may be mixed with the usual fungicides such as Bordeaux to control blight. As a dust, it is used in three percent strength combined with some suitable filler and natural or fixed coppers for blight control.

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN

Hydro Home Economist

Hello Homemakers! Sweet music to many a housewife's ear is a suggestion for dessert. There's a problem the majority of us find difficult to solve, for pudding and pies dig deep into our sugar and butter reserves.

Use an abundance of fresh fruit and serve it with flavoured cream rather than fruit sugar. Learn to judge fruit by its fragrance and appearance. Chill thoroughly before preparing for the table. Never put ice in melons or soft fruit as it destroys the flavour.

Here are a few ideas: Steamed apples; baked pears stuffed with raisins; fruit snow; macedoine of fruit; fruit custard; fruit jelly; fruit sponge; fruit shortcakes; fruit bread pudding; scalloped fruit; fruit sherbet; fruit ice cream.

MACEDOINE OF FRUIT

3 peaches, 3 pears, ½ cup sliced orange, ½ cup diced watermelon, 1 cup raspberries.

Pare and slice peaches and pears, cut orange and melon in small pieces, chill for one hour. Serve in glasses, adding one tablespoon whipped cream to each glass just before serving.

BASIC FRUIT JELLY

1 ounce (2 tbsps.) gelatine, 3 cups fruit juice, 1|3 cup sugar, ½ cup cold water, ½ cup boiling water, 1 cup cubed fruit.

Soak gelatine in cold water until soft. Add to boiling water and stir over hot water until thoroughly dissolved. Add sugar and stir until dissolved. Remove from heat. Add remaining liquids or fruit pulp and mix thoroughly. Pour into moulds that have been dipped into cold water. Chill in electric refrigerator. When partially set, add cubed fruit.

BASIC FRUIT WHIP

Use recipe for basic jelly but leave the mixture in the bowl in which it was mixed until it begins to congeal. Then whip until it becomes light and frothy. Turn into moulds and chill in electric refrigerator. Top with fresh fruit.

THE QUESTION BOX

Mrs. T. C. asks: Why does a chocolate cake develop a dark streak near the bottom?

Answer: This heavy dark streak may be caused by a difference in the chocolate used—some chocolate is richer in fat than others. The temperature used for baking may be the cause or the type of flour used may have altered the texture—a change from all-purpose to pastry flour would make a difference. You use 2 tbsps. per cup less all-purpose flour.

Mrs. B. M. asks: Have you tried bean gravy?

2 tbsps. shortening, 2 tbsps. flour and 1 cup hot bean stock. Stir in a few drops of gravy coloring.

Mrs. J. R. asks: What makes one batch of applesauce white and another dark, using the same kind of apples?

Answer: Peeled apples darken in tarnished kettles and from exposure to air. To keep clear colour, drop pieces in water with lemon juice in it as they are being prepared. Cook in a small amount of water and mash with steel or wooden masher.

Mrs. R. C. asks: What makes eggplant taste bitter?

Answer: The slices have not been sprinkled with salt and weighted down long enough. Press down for ½ hour.

VALLIERES—BROOKS

Saturday morning, July 27th, was the scene of a very quiet wedding, which took place in the St. Savior church, Valdor, Que., when Annie Lavennia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Brooks, was united in holy matrimony by Priest Roy to Joseph Rene son of Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Vallieres of Quebec. While the organist played the wedding march the bride was escorted to the church by Mr. St. Jacques, uncle of the groom. The groom was supported by his father.

The bride looked charming in a brown suit with matching brown accessories. Her flowers were a corsage of pink roses.

After the signing of the register, they proceeded to the home of the groom's parents, where a wedding breakfast was served to about thirty guests. Many toasts were made to the happy couple, wishing them much happiness and luck.

YOUNG MEN GO WEST

It is reported that more than thirty young men have left this neighbourhood for the western wheat fields, where they will work in the harvest. Many of these young men left their jobs with local farmers with very scant notice making the labor problem locally another headache.

HAS INTERESTING TRIP

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Dillabough returned last week from a very interesting motor trip which took them to New York city after a visit with the former's brother, D. J. Dillabough at Schenectady. At New York they were guests of the latter's son who is an official at La Guardia airport and who escorted them about pointing out all the interesting things at that large airport, where on an average planes land and take off every two minutes round the clock, from and to all points of the compass. The trip also carried them into Vermont where they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Hamlen of St. Albans, former residents of Chesterville. Carl is now manager of the St. Alban's Co-Operative Creamery and has recently been appointed president of the re-organized New England Dairy and Food Council, which is taking definite steps to keep before the consumer the advantage of using fluid milk.

While at St. Albans Mr. Dillabough was a guest of Rotary and also had the opportunity of visiting the world renowned Brigham Place, where the finest Jerseys in the world have been bred and raised. It was at the Brigham farm the Rotary meeting was held with Mr. Hamlen, chairman at the luncheon tendered the Rotarians on the lawn.
