One For Ripley

Thomas Asquith, the genial greenskeeper of the Chesterville Lawn Bowling Club, dropped into this office the other morning, and as Tommy has quite a penchant for figures, told a rather remarkable coincidence in regard to the totals of three lots of figures which occurred at his boarding house the other evening. A young school pupil asked one of those present to give her some sums to do for practice in adding, and she was given three sums each containing six rows of five figures given at random, but when the correct answers were arrived at they were all exactly the same, each set of figures adding up to 333,330.

Council Organizes Public Welfare Board

A meeting of ladies of the village called by the council gathered on Friday evening, October 7th, in the welfare committee rooms, to re-organize for the coming winter. Mrs. H. H. Casselman presided and called for a report for 1931-32. This report was read by Mrs. P. S. Boyd who moved its adoption, seconded by Mrs. McAvoy.

Chesterville Welfare Committee Report for 1931-32

The Chesterville Welfare Committee was organized in August of 1931 with officers as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Mr. Ault,
President—Mrs. H. H. Casselman,
Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Tate,
Sec.-Treas.—Mrs. Boyd,
Executive Committee—Mrs. McAvoy, Mrs. Doering.

The primary purpose of the organization was the clothing and care of under-privileged children of the village. As the need arose the work was expanded to meet the requirements of unemployed families. The executive appealed to the ladies of the village for second hand clothing and for assistance in sewing and making over wearing apparel for needy children. Sewing meetings were held once a week in the rooms provided by the council. The ladies are grateful to Father Keaney and to Mr. Marshall who kindly loaned sewing machines. No definite record was kept of the number of articles sewn and distributed but a very considerable volume of work was accomplished, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that that many little hands and feet were warm and comfortable which would otherwise have been very cold.

We were also successful in placing several children in comfortable homes. Cash donations were received from interested friends amounting to $68.60 . This money was handed to the village treasurer to comply with government regulations and in order that we might receive the government's refund of two-thirds of all money spent in direct relief. This $68.60 therefore accomplished much more than it could have done through any other channel.

At the Christmas season a special effort was made to provide toys for all the children of the village and a substantial Christmas basket of food was sent to each unemployed family. The expense in connection with the community Christmas tree was met entirely by special subscription for the purpose.

There is on hand at the present moment $8.82 which has not been handed in to Mr. Nash and $5.00 donated by Father Keaney to commence this year's work.

Chesterville, Oct. 7, 1932.

Following this report, Mrs. Casselman vacated the chair and asked Mr. W. H. Casselman to take charge of the election of officers for 1932-33. Mr. Casselman explained the new government regulations and recommendations, making it clear that in order to take advantage of the two-thirds of all money spent in direct relief which the government agrees to refund to the municipality, it is absolutely necessary to organize a public welfare board. This board must consist of seven members, two of whom shall be members of council.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Mr. Ault, Cornwall;
President—Mrs. H. H. Casselman,
Vice-Pres.—Mrs. McAvoy,
Sec.-Treas.—Mrs. L. H. Doering,
Executive Committee—Mrs. O'Connell, Mrs. Clayton, Mr. W. H. Casselman and Mr. F. Merkley.

This committee will endeavour to carry out the regulations and suggestions made by the provincial government and asks that the following rules be carefully noted:

1. All requests for food, clothing, shelter, fuel or any form of relief must be made at the committee room on Wednesday or Saturday afternoons of each week between the hours of 2.30 and 4.30.

2. Transients will in future apply to Mr. Nash for meal tickets.

The committee is again appealing for second-hand clothing and especially for used quilts or blankets. These will be called for if the committee is notified or parcels may be left at the committee room on Wednesday or Saturday afternoons from 2.30 until 4.30. The ladies will meet each Monday evening at 7.30 for sewing and ask the help of everyone who can be present.

Chesterville United Church Scene of Pretty Wedding

The wedding was quietly solemnized at Chesterville United Church at nine o'clock Saturday morning of Ida, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Baker, Crysler, and John Alfred, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Morris, of town. Rev. R. E. Newman officiated with the young couple unattended, the witnesses being their mothers.

The bride wore a Lelong model gown of beige crêpe georgette and lace with hat and shoes to match and carried a bouquet of pink and white carnations and maidenhair fern. She wore the gift of the groom, a pearl necklace, and her gift to the bridegroom was a gentleman's wedding ring.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the groom's parents, Water street, to the immediate relatives and a few friends. The rooms were attractively decorated with white, pink and mauve asters and dahlias and mauve and white streamers. Mrs. John Sutherland and Mrs. F. K. Smith assisted in the serving.

At the noon hour Mr. and Mrs. Morris left by motor for Montreal, the bride travelling in a henna brown swagger suit with shoes and hose matching and taupe hat, gloves and purse.

On the return Monday evening a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents near Crysler. Dinner was served to thirty guests and afterwards dancing was enjoyed until midnight.

The young couple will reside in Chesterville where the groom is employed on the staff of The Chesterville Record. Until of late the bride has filled the position of postmaster's assistant at the local office. They received a number of beautiful gifts.

United Church W.M.S.

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Chesterville United Church was held at the home of Mrs. Melvin Durant. After the singing of a hymn, Miss Merkley lead in prayer. Mrs. W. N. Fulton was appointed leader for the Mission Band Mrs. Chas. Graham gave a few very interesting thoughts which she brought back from the sectional meeting in Montreal. Members of the society were asked to pledge themselves in prayer daily in the interest of Missions.

The devotional topic, "The Woman of Tact," was read by Mrs. W. N. Fulton. The introduction of Dr. Oliver's book was taken by Miss B. Merkley, assisted by Mrs. C. Graham, Mrs. G. Reaburn, Mrs. Helmer, Mrs. M. Durant, Mrs. Cass and Mrs. W. Casselman.

The history of the early church was most interestingly given by Miss Ella Harrison.

W.C.Hetherington, Cannamore

On Saturday morning, October 1st, there passed away a life-long resident of Cannamore in the person of Walter C. Hetherington, postmaster.

The deceased was the eldest son of the late Christopher Hetherington and his wife, Jane Johnstone, and was born at Cannamore on December 13th, 1878. He was united in marriage to Emma Hetherington, Eardley, Quebec, and to this union there was born one daughter, Beryl, who with her mother are left to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband and father. The deceased also leaves one brother, Brooks Hetherington, of the Ottawa Police Force, a returned soldier; and five sisters, viz.: Ethel, wife of John Ross, Moose Creek, Ont.; Catherine, wife of Elder Dillabough, Kenmore, Ont.; Margretta, wife of Chas. Sweetapple, Olds, Alta.; Emma, widow of J. Faulkner, Bellingham, Wash.; and Maude, wife of F. Merrille, Laurel Springs, N. J.

The funeral took place on Monday, October 3rd, to the Anglican Church and cemetery at Crysler, where a very impressive sermon was delivered by his pastor, Rev. D. F. Weegar, of Russell and Crysler parishes. The choir rendered "Abide With Me" and "Peace, Perfect Peace" very nicely. Mrs. Wiseman sang a couple of solos which were very appropriate for the occasion. Other clergymen present were Revs. Wiseman, Ottawa; Nimmo, and Smith, of Morewood. The funeral was conducted under the Orange Order, Crysler, L. O. L. No. 428, the pallbearers being six of the brethren.

Friends from a distance were: Mr. and Mrs. Elder Dillabough, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Ross, Mr. and Mrs. Brook Hetherington, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Graham, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Coulthart, Mrs. David Coulthart, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Wiseman, of Ottawa; Mrs. Ella Johnstone and Clinton F. Point, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Gravelle, Aylmer, Que.; Mr. Duncan Munro and Thos. Seymour, of Cornwall, and many others.

The floral offerings were many and beautiful: Sheaf, wife and daughter; wreaths—Mrs. Sarah Johnstone and family and Mrs. Mary Glasgow and family, the Cannamore R. B. P. No. 428 and Crysler L. O. L. 528; sprays —Mrs Ella Johnstone and Clinton, Mr. and Mrs. Brook Hetherinton, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Sweetapple (Gretta), Mr. and Mrs. W. R. HONEST YOUNG MAN

Recently a Belleville gentleman lost in Perth a purse containing over $50 in bills, a money order for over $5, three "shin plasters," and some car licences, and advertised his loss in The Perth Courier. Master Allan Babcock later found the purse caught in a seat in the Perth Theatre, and handed it over to Chief of Police Donovan, who returned it to the owner who sent a reward of $5 to the honest lad.

Thug Shoots Taximan In Ottawa Suburb

Ottawa police are engaged in one of the most intensive man-hunts in years, searching for an armed thug who, on Saturday night, shot and critically wounded Vincent Haughian, 20-year-old taxi driver, in Eastview, a suburb of Ottawa.

Three bullets were fired into the taxi-driver's back by the gunman, but Haughian was able to fling open the door and throw himself out of the vehicle.

The would-be murderer then climbed into the front seat and drove away. The police are in possession of a pair of woman's gloves, a man's glove and a woman's hat, obtained from the taxi which was later found ditched about a mile from the scene of the shooting. The police believe that after the crime the thug picked up a woman companion.

Confirmation of this appeared from Chief Constable Richard Mannion, who, apprised of the shooting and of the stolen car having been seen on the Cyrville Road, about six miles from Eastview, went in pursuit. He met the taxicab returning, and, swinging about, he gave chase.

The desperate pursuit led him over twisting roads and back streets on the outskirts of Eastview. On one occasion the chief was close enough for a revolver shot, but his gun jammed.

Finally the thug drove into a ditch, and made his escape into a thick bush. Two persons were in the car on its return, the chief said; but whether one was a woman he did not know. Searchers distinguished the footprints of a woman's shoe in the bush into which the thug had fled.

Later in the night the would-be murderer was sighted and followed by an Eastview citizen but again made his escape in the darkness.

In the hospital Haughian, who is a native of Perth, Ont., was given two blood transfusions and two bullets were extracted. His condition was serious, but his chances of recovery were declared by the doctors to be good.

A THOUGHT FROM YE HOSS EDITOR

Willows Journal

A PAPER cannot exist without advertising.

A merchant cannot do a profitable business unless he advertises in the newspaper.

Merchants quit advertising. Go broke.

So does the newspaper.

On the other hand:

During times of depression a wise merchant increases his advertising.

He prospers. So does the newspaper.

The merchant and the newspaper are Siamese twins. One cannot exist without the other. Each is necessary to the other's prosperity. They are a great pair when pulling together. They make or unmake a town. Right now both are badly "shot," but they have hopes..

Morrisburg Council Taxes "Tourist Homes"

As a result of recent action by the local council, 86 homes in Morrisburg are being assessed this week for a business tax, as they are engaged in the business of accommodating tourists. This brings the number of homes to be taxed well over the 100 mark.

The owners of the larger tourist homes in Morrisburg protested last week that, since they were paying for their light and power on a commercial basis and being taxed for their business of accommodating tourists in town, the operators of smaller rooming houses should be brought under the same ruling.

As a result, the smaller homes are assessed from $100 to $400, to be paid for four months out of the year, the approximate time they are engaged in the tourist business.

Brockville Minister Presbyterian Moderator

Rev. Dr. Norman McLeod, Brockville, was unanimously elected moderator of the Montreal-Ottawa synod of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. The synod began its 1932 annual sessions with a large gathering of clerical and lay delegates in attendance.

The retiring moderator, Rev. Dr. William Merrilees, of Iroquois, Ont., preached at a service held in the First Presbyteiarn Church, scene of the sessions. He pointed out a mistaken trend in the organizations of the churches to-day, declaring they seemed to cater to purposes of amusement rather than for spiritual ends and called for some effort to alter this.

Business was confined to selection of the new moderator and a number of nominations were read. Rev. Dr. A. M. Gordon, of Quebec, who had been nominated by the Montreal and other Presbyteries, asked that his name be withdrawn in favour of that of Dr. McLeod. This was allowed and the meeting swung to an unanimous vote for the Brockville minister. On taking the chair his first official act was to put a motion expressing a vote of thanks to his predecessor for his work as moderator during the past year.

PROTECTING WILD LIFE

A GAME COMMISSION official, observing mangled remains of wild animals on many of the highways sees an indication of the "lust to kill," and wonders what kick a motorist gets in running over a helpless animal blinded by headlights. Motor car drivers, we claim, are as humane as anybody else and few of the wild things are deliberately destroyed on the highways. On the other hand, the motor car helps the normal hunting instinct inherent in man and enables the real sportsman to reach his shooting grounds each Autumn in comfort and without loss of time. The man who frequently gets away in his car for a day's shooting is the very man who would stop his car on the road rather than destroy a rabbit or woodchuck.

WHEN THE BOWLS WERE STOWED AWAY

There is a sadness round the club house,
As the closing day draws near,
When our shoes will be discarded,
And our bowls will disappear;
We will miss each other badly,
But we'll ne'er forget the day
When we closed our little lockers
When the bowls were stowed away.

May we pledge this happy gathering
That we'll always be the same,
With the Sisters and the Brethern
We will strive to play the game;
With no snobbishness prevailing,
Still we must presume to say,
There is always someone wailing
When the bowls are stowed away.

May we meet again next summer,
When the season starts again,
And the roll is called, none missing
'Mongst the Women or the Men,
When we'll hear the well known voices
Each one eager for the play,
Flocking round their little lockers
Where the bowls were stored away.

Daughter: "Dad, what is your birthstone?"

Father of Seven: "My dear, I'm not quite sure, but I rather think it is a grindstone."

Jack: "How can I beat my income tax?"

Pott: "What's your income?"

Jack: "Ten thousand dollars."

Pott: "Mary a widow with eight children."

Jobs For 4,000 Single Men Preparing Aviation Fields

Unemployment relief throughout Canada this winter will be an elastic programme, predicated upon the necessities of each province.

The necessities of the province will be determined after consultation with the municipalities, but there will be no interference by the Dominion with the principle that, under the British North America Act, the burden of providing relief remains with the province.

Premier Bennett declared that useful public works to which the Dominion might contribute were largely exhausted. While in no sense, he added, could his Government be held to be initiating the dole, it was determined no Canadian citizen should be deprived through inability to secure employment of the necessities of life for himself or his dependents.

There is not, it appears, to be any official change in the basis of providing direct relief contributions. Where the municipality and the province are unable to meet the situation the federal authority will accept it or will make it possible for the municipality to do so, with the Dominion finally discharging the former percentage of the obligations.

At the same time the Government is co-operating in the matter of public works that may usefully be undertaken. Foremost among those of the moment is the establishment of aviation landing fields throughout Canada under the direction of the Department of National Defence.

The work is to be concentrated chiefly upon three stretches of territory: Montreal to Halifax, Ottawa and Toronto to Winnipeg, and Lethbridge to Vancouver. Generally speaking, the surveys took place some time ago and plans for the fields will be drafted. It is intended they shall be cleared and put into fitness by single young men, for approximately 4,000 of whom the enterprise will provide winter work.

Mrs. Smythe (at jumble sale): "What's the matter with Miss Jones? She seems very annoyed about something."

Mrs. Browne: "Yes, she laid down her hat while she was helping at a stall, and somebody sold it for two shillings."

Industrial Empire's Record Breaking Smash

J. V. McAree in Mail and Empire

IT WAS LEFT for Samuel Insull, an Englishman by birth, to show the American slickers just what a failure was. He and the industries he developed have produced the greatest collapse in modern history. Estimates of what he and his associates have lost vary from a quarter of a billion dollars to a billion. Mr. Insull is now in Paris living on a pension of $18,000 a year voted to him by three companies which he had served. His brother was living with his wife in an Ontario village paying $20 a week for board and lodging prior to his arrest last week. The insull collapse was a clean one. He threw every dollar he owned into the balance to save his companies. When he failed finally he was stripped to the bone, penniless save for the pension which the companies voted him. Even his famous black taxicab was sold to a man who had it armour lined as a protection against gangsters. Undoubtedly in the last months he could, had he been that kind, have provided comfortably for himself. But the idea never entered his head. He was hopeful until the last. That was the direct cause of his ruin.

The London Clerk

Samuel Insull was born in London, England, on November 11th, 1859, and was privately educated until he was 14 years old when he went to work in the office of Vanity Fair, a London magazine. He studied shorthand at night and this accomplishment won him a position with E. H. Johnson, London representative of the late Thomas A. Edison. Later Johnson went to the United States to confer with Edison, and instructed Insull to send him weekly reports of business matters in which Edison was interested. They were so well done that they attracted Edison's attention and when the time came and he needed a private secretary he took the young Englishman over. One evening in 1881 Insull arrived in New York and began immediately working for Edison, staying at his task until 4 a.m. This habit of working long hours he retained to the end and was usually in one of his offices hours before and hours after the rest of the staff. He remained with Edison for 11 years and in that time helped to form several companies. But he did not advance with the speed he thought his due and looked about for an opportunity for independent expansion.

The Chicago Empire

It came fhen the head of the Chicago Edison company died and Edison despatched Insull to look about for his successor. Insull went to Chicago, made an admirable impression upon the bankers, and when he applied for the post he had their good will and also the hearty recommendation of Edison himself. That was in 1892, and thereafter his life centred in Chicago although in later years his electrical interests spread as far east as the Atlantic. How a man starting on a salary becomes a millionaire has always been a sealed mystery to us. Nor are we enlightened by a remark Insull made in 1930 when he was guest of honour at a great banquet of the Chicago Stock Exchange. Smiling modestly he said: "Gentlemen, the first million was the hardest. After I got that the rest was easy." We presume it was on the principle of the rolling snowball. As soon as a man gets more money than he can spend on himself and his family, it is plain that there must be a surplus which can be invested.

A Great Dream

Insull's first great coup was the amalgamations of the public untilities serving Chicagofl He kept on buying small companies, scrapping their outmoded plants and installing modern machinery which earned greater profits. He got control of the gas franchise and later of some of the street car franchises. His only interests outside of his business were in a stock farm which he equipped lavishly and the Chicago Grand Opera of which he was a liberal backer. His companies paid dividends and it was easy for him to find investors for new ventures. His last dream was something like that of Henry Ford's. It was the universal distribution of cheap power so that small communities could compete in various forms of manufacture with large cities. Probably he hoped eventually to establish some such control over electric power in the United States as the Rockefellers had established over oil.

He Can Sleep Now

If it had not been for the business collapse he might have been far on the road to the goal to-day. The companies over which he presided had an estimated value of $4,000,000,000. His personal fortune was supposed to be about $100,000,000. He was a director in 85 companies. Perhaps that was part of his trouble. What man can direct 85 companies with any intelligence. "Nothing serious," said Mr. Insull when the crash came, talking like the big business man that he was. He continued to issue securities and expand his operations. Then came a time when he needed $10,000,000 cash. A year earlier he could have had the money by telephoning one of a dozen bankers. But he had to travel to New York. He came back empty-handed. It was the end. It was he who deliberately threw one of his great companies into bankruptcy by causing a subsidiary company to enter suit for a small printing bill which the huge corporation was unable to pay. "I'm glad it's over," he said to a friend. "I haven't slept for weeks."

"Yes—we're both feeling fine"

Joe Thompson and his wife were glad when Gwen finished Business College and got a good position in the city. But Gwen was the last of the family and the house was pretty lonely.

Then they found they could call her on Long Distance telephone for as little as 30 cents. So now, every Friday evening, Gwen waits for their call and the weekly talks make them all feel better.

Long Distance is easy to use, dependable, and surprisingly inexpensive.

Coolidge Sees Business When Hoover Elected

New York, Oct. 11.—Former United States President Calvin Coolidge, on the stump to-night for President Hoover, said "assurance that the pending Democratic raids on the treasury would be defeated by a Republican victory in November would no doubt" have the effect of reviving all kinds of business.

After crediting the leadership of Mr. Hoover with averting a "calamity," which he said would have resulted from Democratic proposals for bonus payments, Mr. Coolidge voiced direct criticism of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, opposing Hoover in the November 8 elections. He spoke before a Republican rally that all but filled Madison Square Garden's 22,000 seats.

"An early and timely word from the Democratic candidate for President," said Mr. Coolidge, "that he would reject the proposal to increase the national debt by $2,300,000,000 to pay a bonus would have been a great encouragement to business, reduced unemployment, and guaranteed the integrity of the national credit. While he remained silent, economic recovery was measurably impeded."

After the defeat of the greenback bonus proposals and the adjournment of Congress, Mr. Coolidge said, "confidence began to return until at present the country knows that its worst troubles are probably past and economic recovery is beginning."

Some fellows marry poor girls to settle down; others marry rich girls to settle up.

Mrs. Cricket: "There goes Mr. Firefly. He was once in love with you, wasn't he?"

Mrs. Beetle: "Oh, yes. He's an old flame of mine. I fired him because he got lit up so often."

"Do you know, darling," he sighed, "you are so clever and so charming and so brilliant that at times I feel almost embarrassed in your presence."

"But, dearest," she replied soothingly, "you mustn't, really, you mustn't."

"Oh, I dare say I'll get over that feeling when I know you better," said the boy.

IT'S EASY TO TALK
Grenville Kleiser

It's easy to talk
Of the place you would fill,
If someone should push you along;
But the task now for you
Is the work you can do,
To idle and grumble is wrong.

It's easy to talk
Of the money you'd spend
If you had a few dollars ahead;
But it's better to give
A bit while you live
Than a million after you're dead.

It's easy to talk
Of the good you have planned
As soon as you feel fancy free;
But talk does not count,
In any amount,
To meet a real exigency.

It's easy to talk
To tell and to boast
Of the things you some day will do;
But the world will appraise
Your work and your ways,
And pass its own judgment on you.

TACT IN THE ARMY
Banffshire Journal

WE ALL KNOW what tact is. One who found it difficult to define it briefly enlarged his explanations of the term by declaring that it certainly would not be tactful to start a conversation with St. Peter on the subject of poultry. The Major in the club the other night also found it necessary to give at some length an explanation of what he meant:

"Speaking of tact," he said, "the best way to explain what I mean is to tell you of a simple little happening that befell a regiment I had the honour to be connected with in France in 1916. We had been taken out of the trenches and were ordered to billet in a little French village from which the Boche had just been ejected. After his beastly manner he had destroyed everything that was destroyable in that unhappy town. Well, the first thing we did was to take stock to find out if anything had escaped his notice. The two most desirable things were a milk cow and a patch of strawberries in a neglected corner of an orchard. Naturally the colonel took the milk cow and the adjutant the strawberries, and everyone was satisfied. You've got to be in the British Army. Next morning the adjutant, as the senior subordinate officer, had to go out with the men to the outskirs of the village leaving the colonel at home in possession of the whole show. When he came back he went down to the orchard to look at his strawberries, but found someone had been there. Now, you can't call your colonel a thief—at least not in the British Army, and so he had to use tact. So he put up this notice: 'Anyone taking strawberries form this patch will have his cow shot.'"

THE OLD GARDENER SAYS

Some persons avoid paper-white narcissi for forcing indoors because they are highly perfumed. Others, however, find this fragrance one of their chief virtues, and delight to have them scattered about the house. They are the best bulbs for the beginner to start with, as they are not at all particular about the care they receive. Moreover, it is not necessary to keep them in a dark cellar for the formation of roots, as in the case with most bulbs. They will come along quickly if set in a corner of the room or under a table where the light is not too strong for two or three weeks. This will be sufficient time for the roots to start good growth. Then the bulbs may be moved to a lighter and warmer place where the tops will soon develop.

The jury in a Los Angeles court had found the negro prisoner at the bar guilty of the offense as charged, and the judge proceeded to sentence him to serve six months in the penitentiary.

As the prisoner was led out of the courtroom he hesitated for a moment as he passed the judge's bench, and said in disgusted tones: "Some folks is awful careles with other people's time."

"It's strange that Mrs. Crabbe objected so strenuously to her married daughter bobbing her hair when she later did the same thing herself."

"Not so strange, Mrs. Crabbe said she wasn't going to have her daughter look young enough to be her granddaughter."

Calls Canadian Doctor "Gift From Heaven"

Garden City Girl, Paralyzed by Poliomyelitis, Runs and Plays Tennis After "Magic Touch" by "Miracle Worker"

Brooklyn, N. Y., Daily Eagle

Out of the small Village of Wiliamsburg, in Ontario, had come amazing stories of a "miralce worker," a "pain killer," a middle-aged doctor, M. W. Locke, by name, to whose wilderness home came thousands daily of the crippled and the hopelessly sick, and whom he cured by a sort of laying on of hands.

And in a dentist's office on the eighth floor of the Temple Bar Building, overlooking Borough Hall, Dr. Frank Winthrop Cook sat in his office chair the other afternoon and told with a gleam of tears in his eyes, of one such cure that he had witnessed, of one such miracle he had seen performed.

A quiet, self restrained figure is Dr. Cook, who had practiced his dentistry for a quarter of a century in the same office, to whom pain and the removal is no novelty. You would not call him a man of easily aroused emotions.

To the interviewer, who came to question him, he was at first reluctant to speak. At last he spoke.

"Gift From Heaven"

"This man," he said, "is a gift from heaven. His touch and his technique —they are rather an astounding thing. Unless one has experienced what he does there, one can hardly believe it."

He hesitated, seemed to be ordering his thoughts, and continued:

"I heard about Dr. Locke for the first time last January. I heard of him from a boy I was treating, a boy I knew, whose brother was a cripple. He was crippled by arthritis—he was a war veteran—arthritis incurred in the war. He had had the best advice and the best treatment available here. It did no good.

The Lame Walk

"That boy couldn't work, he couldn't walk. He went up to Williamsburg and stayed a month. He came back, with the understanding that he would return, for additional treatments if necessary. He has not returned yet. But three months after he got back here from Williamsburg he threw away his crutches and walked with a cane. A month after that he discarded the cane. He is now back at work. He is just about normal.

"That story interested me. It interested me particularly because of what I had to deal with in my own family. I had a young daughter, Joan. In August of last year she was taken down with infantile paralysis.

"She got the best treatment available. After three months ,she had an uneventful recovery. But she couldn't walk. Her arches had dropped as a result, the diagnosis was, of muscular weakness caused by the infantile paralysis. Her posture was bad. She had a stoop and she had a limp. We resorted to every possible sort of treatment locally, but there was no change. She couldnt walk and of course she couldn't go to school and she couldn't play games.

Last Resort

"As a last resort, we decided to take her to Dr. Locke. I wrote him and he wrote back that he'd be glad to see the child. He would see what could be done. We left our home in Garden City. Mrs. Cook, Joan and I, and we went up to Williamsburg. We got there on August 6th, that's less than two months ago. I was prepared to stay at least two weeks. And if he could help her at all, I thought, of course, that it would take many years before the girl would be anywhere near normal.

"I took the girl to Dr. Locke. He gave her an examination. He said the whole difficulty was in her acrhes and he was sure he could help her. While he talked he gave her a treatment, that is, he manipulated her feet with that marvellous technique of his. He ordered, also, a special shoe for her to wear. And he told her to come back.

"She went back the next morning. She took her place in the open circle in front of his home, along with about 1500 others.

"After that second treatment, she was told to return in the afternoon. She did. And to my surprise, he dismissed us. 'I'm dismissing you now,' he told Joan. 'Run along, now, you've got million dollar arches.'

Now She Plays Tennis

"That was early in August. To-day that child is a new being. She plays tennis. She walks and runs. She holds herself erect. She has still a slight drag in her walk and we are going back for another treatment about that—he said that might be necessary. But otherwise she is an active, healthy girl.

"I don't know. What he seems to do is to put the arches back into place. He does it without an operation, without medicine, purely manual manipulation . Why, you know—"

And here Dr. Cook's eyes became shining-moist.

"He gave her a series of exercises to do when she got back home. At first she couldn't do any of them. Couldn't get up on her toes for instance. Nature has to help in the cure, and it takes a little time. Then one morning I heard her calling from her room:

"'Daddy, look what I can do. I can rise up on my toes!'

"It was like a miracle—a miracle you had to believe, because it had taken place in front of your eyes."

Horse Shoe Pitching Championships at the Royal

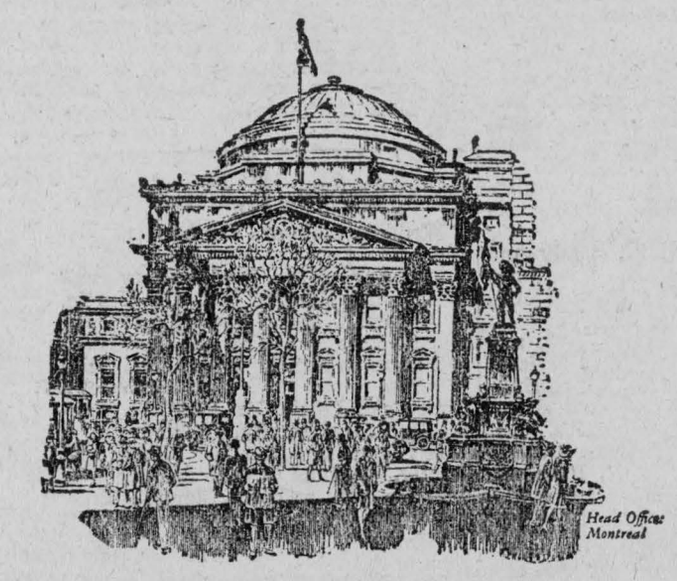
Horse shoe pitching is on of the minor Canadian "industries" that is not worried by economic conditions and doesn't know the meaning of that funny term "depression." It is going stronger, doing a brisker ding-dong business even than in the boom year of 1929. The merry clank of the shoes in friendly contests for local honours is more familiar in rural Ontario and Quebec than at any time within the five years. The record is worth while proclaiming aloud to a listening world.

The championships for all Canada will again be one of the drawing cards at the Royal Winter Fair in Toronto on November 22, 23 and 24. In the open singles' championship the awards are a challenge trophy offered by the Dominion Calk Horsesnoe Co., Limited, and $25.00 in cash; 2nd prize, $12.00, and 3rd prize, $8.00, with consolation prizes in addition. In the open doubles the first prize is a challenge trophy offered by T. A. Murphy, M. P. P., with $50.00 cash; 2nd prize $20.00, and 3rd prize, $10.00 also with consolation prizes.

Besides the Canadian championships, the final competitions to decide the championships for the county and rural fairs in Ontario will be held at the Royal ,open only to winners at agricultural fairs in 1932.

MAKING LEATHER AT HOME

IN THESE DAYS when advantage has to be taken of every possible economy interest is revived in the home tanning of leather. A number of enquiries have been received by the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture, and to meet the need a special circular has been prepared. This deals with the several processes of fleshing, liming, dehairing, tanning, testing, softening and finishing leathers and hides of different kinds. While the old tanning bark method involved a long period of time and a lot of work many new methods make the home tanning of leather fairly easy.



"I Feel That The Bank of Montreal Has A Distinct Personality"

Said an old customer of the Bank recently: "In my opinion a bank has a personality just as positive and distinct as that of an individual."

The personality of the Bank of Montreal, created by its founders and perpetuated by their successors, is reflected in the substantial character of the clientele the Bank has drawn to it, and expresses itself through more than 600 Branches, which are so many points of contact with the people and the commercial life of Canada.

The elements which have gone into that intangible but very real thing —the personality of Canada's oldest bank—include the Bank's unwavering strength and conservatism, its helpful, efficient service, and its thorough knowledge of local conditions wherever it is represented.

When This Chap Calls Do Not Buy Anything

Still another "racket" for extracting money from unsuspecting Ottawa people has been revealed in a complaint made to the detective bureau. Employees in uptown office buildings have been the victims this time.

A canvasser representing the "Manufacturers' Distributing Company" of Toronto, after displaying samples of shirts, ties, socks and other men's wear, has been offering to sell a man's outfit consisting of a shirt, tie ,pair of socks, garters and braces for $2, a minimum of 40 cents to be paid down and the balance on the delivery of the articles.

It has been discovered now that the Toronto address given does not exist and letters complaining about the delay in the despatch of the garments to the purchasers have been returned by the Toronto Post Office, which states that no such company exists.

Some of the victims paid the full amount of $2 when giving the order, while the majority paid varying amounts from 40 cents up.

Dundas Conservatives Met In Annual Session

"The condition that Canada is in to-day is due to past Liberal policies," stated Hon. G. H. Challies, Provincial Secretary, speaking under auspices of the Dundas Liberal-Conservative Association at the annual meeting of the organization held at Winchester Springs Tuesday afternoon. A. C. Casselman, M. P., Dundas-Grenville, who was with Mr. Challies on the platform, affirmed his belief in the practicability of the St. Lawrence waterways scheme and eulogized the work of Premier Bennett in connection with the Imperial Conference.

Mr. Challies emphasized that the Ontario Government, under leadership of Premier Henry, has stripped all expenditures to the bone and that this economy drive had resulted in a saving of $5,000,000.

In stating that the condition in Canada to-day was due to past Liberal policies, he claimed that between 1924 and 1929 Canada's purchases from the United States had been $240,000,000 in excess of what that country had purchased from the Dominion. He also scored the Liberal Government in connection with Beauharnois, which he termed one of the outstanding scandals of the Liberal regime.

"Let me point out most emphatically that while the Liberal party and the Progressive opposition have been muck-racking with unreasonable anti-Hydro propaganda and petty charges against Hydro, the Henry Government with a vision looking to the future worth and prosperity of the province, has been making steady progress towards solving the big problem of the St. Lawrence river development for power and navigation." he said. In holding that the project would be a tremendous boon to Ontario and the Dominion generally, Mr. Challies affirmed that estimates to safeguard property owners in Dundas county alone totalled from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000.

He stated that a survey of the penitentiaries in the province had revealed that convictions in 1931 were down more than 15 per cent. This, he thought, was a striking criterion, that despite abnormal conditions the moral fibre of the province continued at a high level.

The speaker stated that Ontario was already benefitting through the Imperial Conference in her exports to overseas markets and he praised Premier Bennett for his work in making the gathering of statesmen in Ottawa a success.

Mr. Challies expressed his faith in the Eastern Ontario Conservative Association and said he hoped to have another gathering of representatives of the various municipalities in the county at Winchester to discuss legislation they were interested in.

He referred to the loss suffered by the Conservative party through the death of Col. Lorne Mulloy, who had always been a staunch worker.

Mr. Casselman, who followed Mr. Challies, stated that conditions in Canada were by comparison better than in any other country in the world to-day and he felt that events of to-morrow would show that the farmer in Canada had gained as a result of the Imperial Conference. In affirming his belief in the practicability of the St. Lawrence waterway scheme, which he hoped would be ratified by the United States Congress, Mr .Casselman stated he was satisfied the rights of Canada had not been affected by the treaty.

The organization passed resolutions expressing faith in the leadership of Prime Minister Bennett and Premier Henry and the principles of the Conservative party.

Officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, Robert Ball, Winchester Springs: county vice-president, William Tinkess, Inkerman; lady county vice-president, Mrs. W. W. Reynolds, Hainsville; vice-presidents of municipalities: Arthur McRobie, Iroquois; Mrs. Oliver Irvine, Brinston, Matilda Township; Ira Ennis, Inkerman; Mrs. Walter Weaver, Mountain, Mountain Township; Delbert Casselman, Winchester Springs; Mrs. Ingram Cross, Chesterville, Winchester Township; Robt. Whittaker, Williamsburg: George Hill, Boucks Hill, Williamsburg Township; J. F. Casselman, Miss Elizabeth Gillespie, town of Morrisburg; J. Everett, Mrs. P. P .Everett, town of Iroquois; L. Suffel, Mrs. James Robertson, Winchester: Lawrence Doering, Miss Elizabeth McGee, Chesterville.

Oscar Beckstead, retiring president, was thanked for his services during the year and Ralph J. Thompson, of Iroquois, secretary, and J. J. Payne, Brinston ,treasurer, were reappointed.

He Thought Nobody Wanted a Stammerer

Toronto.—Yesterday friends buried Milton Hadley, a young man who came from the West Indies a few years ago.

His end came pitifully, but was not less pitiful than his life, which had been burdened by stammering. To him it had been a tragedy whose seriousness was not realized by any of the few friends he made in Toronto. He had withdrawn himself from every helping hand because, he said: "Nobody wants a stammerer."

Possessed of a dogged courage that enabled him to say of his work, "I never made mistakes," and yet made one that cost him his life.

Poor, he had only distant hope of overcoming the impediment in speech which to him was so terrifying. Public schools have training classes for stammerers, but none in the evenings, and Milton Hadley had to work. Private schools offered training, but at fees far beyond his resources.

So when, at the age of 22, he obtained the only job he ever had, it was a victory, although he made only $10 a week.

Times grew hard, the work became less; others, working alongside him were discharged.

On a Saturday he was told it would be necessary to lay him off for a time. Again arose the monstrous thought that "no one wants a stammerer."

On the Monday his body was found in a quiet Willowdale field. His courage had failed.

On the Wednesday arrived a cable from a brother in Trinidad.

Milton Hadley had made a mistake and fate had played him its last and cruelest joke on him. The cablegram placed at his disposal $200.

New Dominion Loan

Within a very short time a new Dominion of Canada loan will be issued for quite a large amount and no doubt will be taken up so quickly that those who may wait to file their applications will find that the price has risen from the issue price, or that it has all been taken up in a few hours and the lists closed, and they will not be able to get their requirements. I have already made arrangements to take care of all subscriptions placed with me at once. If you have surplus cash which you wish to invest this is a splendid chance to secure better than four and a half per cent for your money in a Dominion of Canada bond.—G .C. Warning to Farmers

At the present time reports are coming in to the Department that oats for which fabulous promises are made are selling at $1.60 to $1.80 per bushel, while the finest registered seed oats grown in Ontario can be purchased at less than half the price.

Farmers should take warning from the experiences of others. Losses caused by this form of exploitation by unscrupulous firms probably run into thousands of dollars yearly.

Not so many years ago salesmen actually sold wheat represented to be from King Tut's tomb to Ontario farmers at prices ranging from $3 to $6 per head. If this grain had actually come from the tomb of Egypt's famous king it would have been several thousand years old, and even the common mustard, which is credited with being the most retentive life of all seeds, cannot hold life within the seed more than fifty to seventy-five years.

In February, March and April of 1932 nearly a carload of a little-known and inferior variety of oats was sold in a well-known section of Central Ontario at $1.35 to $2 per bushel. These oats were marked Grade 3, which is the lowest grade that is permitted to be sold under the Federal Seeds Act, and a grade that is not suitable for seed at any price, let alone at prices four to eight times higher than the ordinary market price for good Ontario No. 1 oats of recognized standard variety.

Government institutions, such as the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, the Kemptville Agricultural School, the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, the Ridgetown Experimental Farm, and the Experimental Station at New Liskeard, test out all the known varieties of all kinds of grain commonly grown in Ontario and recommended for planting only those varieties proved to be high yielders and adapted to Ontario soils. Farmers who follow the results of experiments of these institutions do not as a rule give away hard-earned cash to smooth-tongued salesmen who are full of promises and never operate in the same district twice.

Time and again these "too good to be true" new varieties have been investigated by Government officials and have been found to be some standard variety sold under a new name. This scheme of exploitation is very old. Perhaps a word of warning to the unwary will very largely check the practice and save the farmer thousands of dollars.

THE PEDDLAR NUISANCE

Kincardine Review-Reporter

HOUSEWIVES have a grievance. They are compaining and pleading for relief. Their complaint is against the peddler and house-to-house canvasser, and relief is in their own hands.

It is the everyday lament of the housewife that after answering the door bell ringings and knocks of persons with something to sell she has no time for doing her housework. For surcease from these interruptions and annoyances she must play possum or go shopping, and if she chooses the former alternative some neighbour is certain to start the gossip that she is dodging bill collectors.

Not only the housewife suffers from the growing invasion of canvassers They rob established business of its legitimate trade and carry from the community money that would otherwise bs used for its own upbuilding.

Peddlers do not render an indispensable service. They purvey nothing not obtainable in stores, and their "bargains' are too often fraudulent. Extravagant claims are part and parcel of their profession ;their fly-by-night commerce holds them to no guarantees. And in this day of telephones and quick delivery the argument of accessibility does not hold.

For the present plethora of door-step merchants the housewives alone are to blame. Without patronage they could not ply their pestiferous trade, and judging from the wear and tear on doorbells they do not lack patronage.

Magazine canvassers are noteable among these pest and are often times hardest to get rid of. Italian lace saleswomen, brush peddlers, book agents, hosiery salesmen and made-to-order suit representatives as well as any circulation or any other canvasser, if not employed by a local firm should come under the transient trader's by-law. It is the duty, in our opinion, of an authorized person to protect housewives from these pests.

AT CHURCH NEXT SUNDAY

If I knew you and you knew me;
How little throuble there would be,
We pass each other on the street,
But just come out and let us meet
At church next Sunday.

Each one intends to do what's fair
And treat his neighbour on the square
But he may not quite understand.
Why dont' you take him by the hand
At church next Sunday?

The world is sure a busy place
And we must hustle in the race
For social hours some are not free
The six week days, but all should be
At church next Sunday.

We have an interest in our town,
The dear old place must not go down.
We want to push good things along
And we can help if we are strong
At church next Sunday.

Don't knock and kick and slam and slap
At everybody on the map,
But push and pull and boost and boom
And use up all the standing room
At church next Sunday.

ST. LAWRENCE CANAL TREATY AND ITS PROSPECTS

THE Speech from the Throne forecast approval by the Canadian Parliament of the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty as soon as the United States Senate has ratified it. Commenting upon this announcement by Lord Bessborough, tne New York Times notes that both political parties in the United States are pledged to the ship canal and that whichever candidate is elected president will have reason to favour it, "although Roosevelt, as Governor of New York State, has had definite views as to the proper allocation of costs between the federal and provincial governments, which will be weighed before the states vote can be brought to its support."

The Foreign Relations Committee will have to pass upon the treaty before the Senate votes upon it. The presidential campaign has interfered with the investigation of the treaty, which this committee had hoped to carry on during the Summer and Autumn months. The Times thinks that when the Senate convenes in December it will have other and more important business to handle, and that the treaty will very likely not come up for formal debate until after March 4th.

In the meantime the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York and other Atlantic coast interests are conducting a campaign against the treaty. These interests have placed in the forefront of their arguments the fact that the railways are already suffering for want of business and the proposed deeper St. Lawrence waterway would add to their difficulties. This attitude might be defensible if it were admitted that the present world-wide business depression would continue indefinitely. Of this there is no likelihood. The chances are that the coming year will see the whole continent well on the road towards improved economic conditions. It may fairly be added that if an improved St. Lawrence waterway would add to the general prosperity of the two countries it would bring fresh traffic to the railways instead of taking traffic from them.

WHAT THE BIG GRAIN CROP MEANS

CANADA'S GRANARY this year holds 163,000,000 bushels of wheat more than last year, as well as 94,000,000 more bushels of oats and greatly increased yields of other grains. Business generally in every province of the Dominion will feel an impetus as a result of the transporting and marketing of the big grain crop, but the effect in the Prairie Provinces can hardly be estimated One Western writer says Saskatchewan, because of its 227,000,000 bushels of wheat, has staged a "90 per cent comeback" in one short year.

"Is Goldberg a hard man?"

"I should say so. Did you notice his eyes?"

"Yes. One seemed to have a more humane expression than the other."

"Well, that one is made of glass."

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Western Ontario Leads

The County of Wentworth now leads Canada in the production of high-quality hogs. For the past seven months, 90.6 per cent of all the pigs marketed from that county graded "select" or "bacon," the two top grades.

The seven leading counties are in Ontario. Waterloo was second with 89.8 per cent, Brant 89.1 per cent, Perth 88.2 per cent, Huron 87, and Wellington and Oxford both 86. Perth County, well up in quality, was the heaviest producer with 54,708 head in seven months.

The Buckwheat Crop

Buckwheat is assuming greater importance as a crop in some counties in Ontario, particularly in the central and eastern districts. This grain is sown later than others and thus escaped the effects of dry weather in June this year, while growing conditions in August were good. Statistics show that in 1931, Simcoe, Northumberland, Ontario and Durham counties each had more than 10,000 acres of buckwheat. Southern counties such as Essex, Lincoln, Wentworth and Halton, where truck gardening and fruit growing prevail, have relatively small acreages.

Soy Bean Factory

Machinery for the soy bean factory at Chatham has been obtained from Kansas and operations will begin shortly. According to a special concession by the Customs Department at Ottawa, this machinery is entering free to help establish the new industry. At the outset the plant will have a capacity of 300,000 bushels. About 5,000 acres of soy beans have been sown in Kent county which should provide about 100,000 bushels.

Heavy rains and flood damage in North Manchuria has reduced the soy' bean crop prospect to 70 per cent of the 1931 crop in that country. The production will be in the neighbourhood of 4,000,000 tons, compared with 5,760,000 tons harvested last year. This may result in a demand for soy beans from the United States.

Ontario Farm Products Week

High expectations are held for the Ontario Farm Products Week which begins October 17th and continues until October 22nd. Mr. James B. Fairbairn, Deputy Minister, and his assistants have been working hard to ensure its success and no stone has been left unturned. Merchants and business houses in all towns and cities are co-operating splendidly, with the result that Ontario farm products will be displayed as never before. The slogans being used are: "Ontario Farm Products are Freshest and Best," and "If the Farmer Can Sell He Will Buy."

Weekly Crop Report

The mangel and turnip harvest in Bruce, Dufferin and other counties is reported to be decidedly above normal. Most fall wheat now has a good top and is in promising shape, the numerous rains having been helpful to its growth. The sugar beet crop in Middlesex will yield a high tonnage while potato acreage and yield per acre is down this year. Durham has mangels so large in many cases that the keeping quality may be affected. On the whole the root crops are excellent. York County has had a good crop of corn. Lambs are in excellent condition in Lanark and should grade higher than ever this year.

A Street Parade

Arrangements are under way for a street parade in Toronto during "Ontario Farm Products Week," October 17th to 22nd. This was the announcement of J. B. Fairbairn, Deputy-Minister of Agriculture, who is personally directing the activies of that week.

Mr. Fairbairn said that the date of Wednesday, October 19th, had been decided upon. Also ,that the parade will be made up of trucks entered by farmers in the Toronto district, retailers including chain stores, wholesalers ,dairies, bakeries, and others having a connection with the farm products industry.

The thought was expressed by the Deputy Minister that little persuasion was necessary in getting individuals and organizations to enter the parade all of these being more than willing to co-operate in any movement designed for the general welfare of Ontario.

White Grub Outbreak

White grubs at the rate of from 300,000 to 1,000,000 per acre are present in fields of timothy sod and threaten serious damage to crops in 1933 throughout the northern half of the counties of Glengarry, Stormont, Dundas, Grenville, Leeds and the southern portion of Prescott, Russell, Carleton and Lanark according to a forecast by Mr. G. H. Hammond of the Federal Entomological Branch.

The prospect of crop losses from white grubs in infested districts in 1933 is extremely serious, according to officials, who state that cropping of infested land during next season must definitely take white grubs into account if losses are to be avoided. At the best there is bound to be some damage but if the known information is utilized the probable loss can be reduced to a small portion of that assured by the numbers of insects in the ground in many districts.

The losses can be cut down: 1, by reducing the numbers of grubs in the land, and 2, by selecting the crop to be grown upon a given piece of land with its resistance to injury and the white grub population of the field in mind.

Apple Crop Down

Recent estimates of the commercial apple crop show a decrease of 10 per cent in production throughout Canada as compared with 1931. This means a decrease of approximately 360,000 barrels. The British Columbia crop alone indicates an increase about 28 per cent above that of last year. The greatest decrease is shown in Ontario where the crop is expected to be 30 per cent lower than in 1931. The number of barrels last year was 975,000 barrels ,while only 680,000 barrels are expected this year in this province.

A high-handicapped golfer sat disconsolately in the club house.

The secretary went across to him and tried to cheer him up.

"I think, after all, I'll give up golf," said the member after a while. "Swimming's more in my line."

"But you can't compare the two," said the secretary.

"Perhaps not," said the golfer; "but you can take as many strokes as you like when you're swimming and you've no need to lie about it."

LIKED OUR ICE CREAM

Edinburgh Scotsman

IT IS A PITY, with all these negotiations at Ottawa, that something could not be done about ice cream. A friend, just home from Ottawa, tells me that we hardly know the meaning of the words on this side. He gave a mouth-watering account of the slabs of delectable ice cream with which he was served at every meal. Maybe he exaggerated, but it is a much more frequent item on the Canadian menu than it has ever been with us. "And it is real ice cream, mind you"—none of your condensed milk mixtures. It is like silk on the tongue, he says, and factory made. At 25 cents a pint, it is a palatable, economical, and nourishing addition to the diet. What I begin to visualize is an ice cream flying corps. Picture a band of girl flyers in white uniforms sailing across the skies in a silvery flying machine, bearing quarts upon quarts of rich ice cream to waiting customers on this side of the water. "They'd eat it all on the way over!" suggests someone—an unkind criticism of a really bright proposal.

"I have been to the auction of railway lost property. It is incredible the number of persons who carelessly leave things about."

"Did you get a bargain?"

"No, I left my umbrella there."

The motorist was just emerging from a cornfield by the roadside, bearing a dozen handsome roasting ears, when he saw a man approaching. Guiltily he reached for his pocketbook and as the man came up he asked in an embarrassed manner. "How much?"

"One dollar," replied the other promptly. The motorist passed over the money and drove off.

"Might fine corn, that," mused the stranger gazing over the field. "I wonder who it belongs to."

Miss E. Grant

THE TRAIN GROANED and shook itself and pulled slowly out of the station. Ellen Grant realized that the next stop was her destination and with her usual methodical care began to collect her neat belongings, doing everything with precision and a certain exact little manner. Just twenty-four and obliged by a set of untoward circumstances which have nothing to do with this story to earn her own living, she had been for several years a governess and was now on her way to undertake the duties of that position for the grandchildren of a friend, who wanted all the accomplishments and all the virtues combined, at a moderate salary.

She was too well poised and too sure of herself, without being exactly conceited, to have any especial fear of what lay before her, but she could not help wondering about the details of her new home, of which she was quite ignorant.

Meanwhile in the parlour car sat another young girl, who also bore the name of Grant, and whose first name was Eva, but who was as unrelated to Ellen Grant in blood as she was in life's surroundings. Bound to pay her first visit to the family of her fiancé, her pretty face wore a most worried look.

What could have been more unfortunate than the news in the telegram just handed her at the junction where she had expected to meet Tom. The fact that she could not see him until four hours later was in itself an affliction! but at the idea of facing his family without him Eva could only shudder in despair. She regretted now that during the few weeks of their engagement she had not asked him more about his people.

She was most afraid of his mother, of course. His father Tom had always described as being "awfully jolly," and she knew that his sisters would have the same interests as herself. But she wished she had asked Tom which of them were at home just now, for she knew they were often absent from their New Egnland town. Then she remembered that he had said vaguely that they were "all" to be home for Thanksgiving to-morrow. Did that include his married brother Louis and his family?

Oh, well, she must do the best she could, and Tom would be there early in the evening. Here was her station, and she set her teeth and followed the porter with her dressing-case and her umbrella out to the door. He helped down into the bustle, and she felt herself adrift.

Surely some one would come to meet her, and she scanned anxiously the faces of the people who had been awaiting the incoming train. But they all seemed to find those for whom they were seeking, and in the midst of the confusion of laughing welcome and the hurry of the silent business-like travellers who went sturdily off by themselves she stood uncertain and forlorn. Finding herself jostled by the crowd, she yielded to it and, wandering vaguely through the station, went out on the opposite platform, beginning to think she must hail a cab.

Then she suddenly saw a large old-fashioned barouche, now so rare, with a pair of fat, black horses and an aged, old-fashioned coachman who was leaning down from his box peering at the passers-by. As she glanced uncertainly at him, he touched his hat and said inquiringly:

"Beg pardon, miss. Are you Miss Grant?"

"Oh, yes!" exclaimed Eva joyfully. The man looked as relieved as she felt and, asking for her check, suggested that she should "get in" while waiting for the trunk, for which he despatched a porter.

Eva looked eagerly out of the windows, trying to see as much as possible of the city which was to be her future home, but the dusk had already settled down thick and gray, and she could only see the outline of the house when, after a short avenue of lonesome firs, they stopped at a dark, forbidding-looking porch. The door was opened by a taciturn maid, who, saying only, "This way, m'm," led Eva through a hall cavernous in its gloom and up a long flight of black-walnut stairs to a large, square bedroom.

"Dinner will be ready in a half an hour. Would you like some hot water, m'm?" asked the maid, not even trying to hide the fact that she was taking a careful survey of Eva's dress.

"Yes, please," said Eva meekly.

Shut in at last alone with her trunk she felt a strong inclination to embrace it as a piece of home and weep. But, finding by her watch that three minutes had gone by since she consulted it last and that therefore Tom was so much nearer, she refrained and began slowly to dress for dinner.

The house seemed large and handsome, but somehow it was different from what she had expected. Perhaps it was only because it was so still and silent, she thought, trying to be impartial. But Eva suddenly decided that she hated black-walnut furniture and thought heavy, green rep curtains of old-fashioned and expensive make hideous. Anyway she could not help feeling deserted at no one's coming to greet her.

Just then there was a knock at the door. A nurse entered leading two little girls of eight and twelve, and, if Eva had not been absorbed with other matters, she would have been surprised at the woman's apparent air of defiance.

"Here are the children, miss," she said shortly.

"Louis' children, of course. How stupid of me not to know their names," thought Eva as she stooped to kiss them.

"Have you brought us any candy?" asked the younger suddenly, and then, overcome by her sister's scandalized "Why, Pussy!" hid her face shyly in her nurse's skirts and emerged only on Eva's assuring her mysteriously that, if she would come back at the same hour to-morrow, there would be some on the table brought perhaps by the fairy with golden wings who had been her—Eva's—constant playmate when she was Pussy's age.

"Shall we see her?" asked Pussy, shaking her soft hair out of her eyes, wide-open with delight. Eva sat down on the floor with an arm about each girl to describe the dress of rose petals which perhaps the fairy would wear.

The nurse sniffed with her scorn at such trifling as audibly as she dared, and soon dragged away her mutinous charges.

After their departure Eva put on her simplest evening dress, a white mull embroidered in light blue, out of deference to the evident quietude of the house. A chime of Japanese bells rang before she was quite ready, and, much flurried at the idea of being late, she hastily finished and skurried down stairs, arriving at the drawing-room door breathless and almost in tears, at the thought of the ordeal which lay before her without Tom's encouraging presence.

She had a confused idea of a spacious, heavily furnished room dimly lighted, by the empty fireplace stood a portly gray-haired lady of an aspect singularly severe—at least so it seemed to Eva as she went forward to Tom's mother.

"I hope you had an easy journey, Miss Grant," said that majestic personage. "My husband," and Eva turned with a start to where a red-faced little old gentleman was sitting half lost in a huge armchair which did not succeed in looking soft for all its upholstery.

By a series of jerks he got himself slowly to his feet, less to shake her hand, Eva decided, than because he was in haste to start for his dinner. Once seated at the table he paid no more attention to her save by an occasional grunt, but, as that seemed to be the extent of his conversation anyway save when he complained eloquently and bitterly of the cook, she tried to be content.

The mistress of the house divided her time between trying to anticipate her husband's querulous demands for everything which was not on the table, and a strenuous inspection of Eva, which the latter distressfully felt was disapproving.

"What a delicious soup," she murmured; "it is the kind Tom likes so much—" and then jumped, as the old man brought his hand down on the table with a bang, exclaiming fiercely that it was just like women to say a thing was delicious which wasn't fit to eat. His voice died off into incoherent mutterings, interspersed with occasional resentful glances at Eva.

For some time there was silence. At last Eva summoned up her courage and, feeling that she really must talk a little, remarked weakly:

"It was such a pity about Tom's train. But I suppose the night before a holiday everything is late and crowded. Do you know, I am so glad to spend a Thanksgiving in New England, for I have always heard so much about its customs."

It was apparent that Thanksgiving meant turkey to the old gentleman, for he became quite purple at the contemplation, and Eva had a miserable vision of how he would gorge himself on the morrow.

"Most of the good old customs of the season are lost" remarked the old lady pompously, "but I am glad to see you would keep them with us, Miss Grant."

"Yes ,indeed," exclaimed Eva eagerly. "I think nothing is so nice as a jolly houseful, all having a gay time over the holidays with games and—" But before she had finished her sentence she feared she had blundered again, and became quite sure of it when she was answered by a cold stare and a short, "That is hardly what I mean."

Decidedly it was no use, and Eva finished her mutton with the wretched conviction that she should never get on with Tom's people.

As the pumpkin pie was placed upon the table she made one last effort, and, turning to the old gentleman said timidly, "Tom expects to get here about eight, doesn't he, sir?"

Then the skies fell, for the old gentleman banged his fish down with a force that made the glasses hop and roared:

"Who in thunder is Tom?"

As Ellent Grant stepped from the forward end of her car, bearing a most tidy travelling-bag which had conspicuously on its sides the initials

Arriving at a beautiful old colonial house, she was welcomed on the door-E. G., she hesitated a little, wondering if anyone had come to meet her. At that moment a young man came up to her, and, taking the bag from her hand, said, "Miss Grant? This way, miss," and plunged into the crowd.

She followed, her check was taken and she was ushered into a smart little sedan car, and whirled away, before she had time to look about.

"Dear me," she thought, as she sank back on the springy cushions, "how pleasant it is to go so fast." step by a stream of light and gay voices which all poured out together into the cold twilight and surrounded her with a pleasant atmosphere of home. The house seemed full of young people, and she was at once drawn into a vortex of confused laughter and greetings and escorted into a cheerful drawing-room where she felt herself embraced and kissed by an elderly lady with a most charming face who murmured as she did so:

"My dear, I cannot greet you in any other way."

Rather taken aback Ellen stammered a little and was provoked to feel herself blushing.

"What a shame about the train's being late!" now exclaimed a chorus, and, although Ellen was not conscious that her train had been late, she was too polite to contradict.

She was placed in an easy chair, fed with tea and delectable little cakes, her wraps taken, a cushion put behind her back and altogether was made such a fuss about that she was quite overwhelmed. A tall, blue-eyed girl with her mother's gracious manner seemed to make Ellen her especial charge, stooping over her chair to whisper under cover of a more than usually loud shout of laughter:

"None of us went to meet you, for the car is so crowded with more than two. Tom's telegram only came a few minutes ago. And to think after all that he isn't here! It is such a shame, dear, when he has looked forward to this meeting so much."

Ellen smiled vaguely, although she felt a little confused and was relieved when she was led off upstairs to a most attractive bedroom, where the dainty furniture was covered with the freshest and brightest of chintz and where a door stood open into a dressing-room full of every luxury. A gay little fire winked sociably at her from the hearth, and a huge bowl of violets on a low table sent her perfumed smiles.

Madge, as she discovered the blue-eyed girl was called, lingered, chattering in what Ellen considered an extremely frivolous manner. It bored her greatly, too, and, making up her mind that she must at once take a decided stand against such foolish wasting of time, she replied to an enthusiastic account of a proposed starlight and bonfire skating party with a chilly: "How nice."

Then, as Madge was for a moment comparatively subdued, she followed it up by asking primly: "Can I see the children to-night, or have they gone to bed?"

"Louis' children. Oh, they're in bed probably. You must see them to-morrow, they are such dears. Cousin Margaret didn't bring hers; it is such a long trip, you know. Now I'll leave you to dress, and send a maid to you. Tom will be here before very long." With an encouraging smile, Madge departed.

"Tom is evidently a favourite brother," thought Ellen.

Luxuriating in the services of the maid, Ellen put on her best evening dress, a very simple one. Then she stood by the fire, looking about on her delicate setting.

"I almost wish they hadn't put so many fragile things in the room," she reflected. "The children will be sure to break them."

Going downstairs to the drawing-room, she was welcomed by another daughter of the house. Soon the room filled with laughing, pleasant people, who greeted her cordially and did their best to make her feel one of themselves. She was awed by their clothes; they made her little black frock look so plain. But these people were far too well behaved to say anything about it, even if they noticed it. Their whole effort, painly, was to make her a member of the family.

Just as dinner was announced a tall, handsome man entered, the father of the family. He led her off to the dining-room with an air of almost paternal admiration which greatly embarrassed her, even while she told herself that it was only meant for good-natured encouragement on this, her first night.

"How wonderfully kind they all are," she thought. "I do hope that after this they will let me take my tea with the children, and not come down evenings unless they want me to play with them."

Tom's name was on everyone's lips as the meal proceeded. And whenever he was mentioned everyone seemed to turn and smile at Ellen. She tried to efface herself into her wished-for attitude of governess, but she was not allowed to do so. Finally there came a lull, and Ellen bent forward a little to catch Madge's eye and said in clear tones: "Who is Tom?"

Had she thrown a bomb on the dinner table, her companions could not have been more startled. They all gave a jump, and then became petrified with astonishment, staring at Ellen; and she stared back at them, equally astounded by the effect of her innocent question.

As they sat thus, there was a sudden commotion in the hall, the portières were flung aside, and into the room ran a lovely girl in evening dress, with a cloak around her shoulders and tears on her cheeks.

"Oh, where is Tom?" she cried. "Oh, Mrs. Jennings, is this you? Is this you? I've had such a dreadful time—I went to the wrong house. Where is Tom?"

As they all started at this new excitement, Mrs. Jennings struggled to collect her bewildered wits.

"There has been some mistake," she exclaimed. Then, turning to her weeping visitor, "My dear, what is your name?" she asked gently.

"Eva Grant."

"And yours?" They all turned toward Ellen, who shrank in her chair.

"Ellen Grant."

"Oh!" cried Eva. "That is the name of the girl they expected where I went—the girl Mrs. Arthur Jennings expected as governess."

A sudden light burst upon everyone present, and they all cried out with surprise and with dawning merriment. But they were not people who would laugh at the distress of a girl. They made Eva feel at home; and then Mr. Jennings turned to Ellen with a twinkle in his eye.

"You must never go to my cousin Arthur's house as governess," he said. "Louis and his wife have been looking for some one just like you. And you are really one of our family now—I insist that you can't go back on us!"

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By Etta Bitta Pye

SERVING THE PUMPKIN

IT'S "PUNKIN' TIME!" Time for pie; time for a new pudding; time for other good things that can be made with the great golden pumpkins.

Pumpkin Tarts

Make your favourite pumpkin pie filling And your flakiest paste. Line small pattay pans with the paste—use shallow ones—fill with the creamy mixture, and cook as you would the pie.

Then for a finish, after the tarts are cold, top them with lightly sweetened whipped cream and scatter over the top the smallest, thinnest possible shavings of candied ginger. (Have you noticed lately that you can buy it, a small and practical quantity at a time, in bags of cellophane?)

Pumpkin Timbale

Add to one pint of mashed pumpkin and the yolks of four egges well beaten, a teaspoon of salt and a saltspoonful of pepper. Mix well and fill in custard or timbale cups. Stand in a baking-pan of boiling water and bake in a quick oven 20 minutes. When done turn carefully and send to the table. Serve with roasted duck or hot boiled ham.

Pumpkin Pie

1½ teaspoons steamed and strained pumpkin
2-3 cup brown sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs
1¾ cups milk

Mix ingredients together in order named and bake in one crust in a hot oven for about 10 minutes (450 degrees F.) then a slow oven.

It is a pity, considering the food value of these monsters of the vegetable kingdom, and the ease of their cultivation—almost none of the latter being necessary—that they are not more generally used in this country. And while there is hardly a better dessert known than a well-made pumpkin pie with or without plenty of spices in it, there are a number of other ways of preparing pumpkins by which they might give variety to the menu and provide a very cheap source of nourishment.

HEALTH

by

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

DEAFNESS

DEAFNESS is a serious matter. It interferes with education when it occurs in early life, and later it is a handicap in business. In addition, the deaf are shut out from much enjoyment in life, and from free and easy communication with their friends.

The ear is divided into three parts. The external ear catches the sound, turns it into a canal about one inch in length, at the end of which is found the ear drum. Beyond the drum is the middle ear, which is connected with the upper part of the throat by a tube. Farther back, encased in bone, is the inner ear.

Deafness is largely preventable. Very few people are born deaf. In order that deafness may be prevented the ears must be kept healthy. The hairs which line the ear canal should never be pulled, as serious and painful infections, like boils, often result. Matches, toothpicks, knitting needles, hair pins, fingertips or other such articles should not be used to clean the ears or scratch them if itching occurs. There is an old saying that "you should never put anything into your ear smaller than your elbow."

Leave your ears alone and leave the children's ears alone. Do not attempt to remove wax, you will most likely press some of it against the drum and so cause harm. The ears are too precious to entrust to unskilled hands. Deafness usually has its beginning in disease of the nose and throat, from whence the disease spreads up the tube which connects the throat and middle ear and sets up inflammation. there; tissues are destroyed, pus is formed, and the ear discharges. It is in this way that the common cold, measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria, diseased tonsils and adenoids are the underlying causes of middle ear disease which leads to deafness in later years.

The nose should not be washed out except under a doctor's direction, as in so doing infection may be forced up into the middle ear. For the same reason, the nose should never be blown violently, and above all never when there is a cold in the head.

The prevention of deafness depends chiefly upon proper care of common colds, adequate treatment of measles and other infections, prevention of diphtheria, removal of diseased tonsils and adenoids, and blowing the nose properly.

Leave your ears alone, keep your nose and throat healthy, secure skilled care if there is anything wrong, and you will retain the use of one of your most valued organs of sense, the ear.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

EAT CELERY FOR HEALTH

IT IS DOUBTFUL if any of the common vegetables can compare with celery as an aid to general health. Most physicians agree that as a blood purifier and for ridding the body of toxic substances this vegetable is in a class by itself.

Like most leafy vegetables, the purpose of celery in the diet is not to provide heat or energy but rather to furnish the vitamins, minerals and other secondary food so essential to good health. As a source of minerals celery ranks high among the vegetables, being particularly rich in lime and magnesium. For this reason it is a great blood regulator and tends to combat any tendency to excess acidity. Celery is also a valuable source of vitamins, being one of the best for vitamin B.—Dominion Fruit Branch.

Many Travellers Know Condr. "Jim" Chalmers

Mr. J. C. Chalmers, for more than forty years a member of the Smiths Falls' Lodge No. 245, of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, was last week awarded his forty-year service pin by the Grand Lodge of the organization. The pin is beautifully engraved and emblematic of his forty years old continuous service in good standing. Mr. Chalmers came to Smiths Falls in 1887 and shortly afterwards entered as an employee of the C. P. R. and gradually worked his way up the ranks until he became a conductor, which position he mainmained until he retired from active duties five years ago. He was generally looked upon as one of the most careful and highly valued trainmen on his division. At the services attendant to presentation of his well-merited long-service pin, Mr. Chalmers showed those present a copy of his first time bill, No. 4, of the Ontario and Atlantic division. At that time trains coming into Smiths Falls from Montreal and Toronto discharged their passengers at the old junction and it was necessary for travellers to take the bus into town as the depot was about a mile distant from the Post Office.

Mr. Chalmers is enjoying the best of health and employs his time during each summer caring for his delightful cottage on Rideau Lake where he finds plenty to do and at the same time enjoys every minute spent there. He has a hobby for saving old and rare coins and has a most interesting collection, some of which go back into the 18th century and we are now in the twentieth. These coins are from several differet countries and most of them are rare to find. Doubtless his collection would be of considerable value were it to be presented for sale. Mr. Chalmers has a host of friends throughout the country who join in wishing him many years to enjoy his honours.

IN MEMORIAM

Long—In loving memory of our dear Lynda and her husband who were accidentally killed on October 18th, 1931.
