Native of Chesterville Dies In Winchester Aged 93

Following an illness of two years, a former Chesterville resident, Miss Mary Elizabeth Hanes, died in Winchester, Monday evening, being one of that village's oldest and highly esteemed citizens.

She was born in Chesterville 93 years ago, a daughter of the late George William Hanes and his wife, Nancy Maria Meeker, both United Empire Loyalists. As a young woman she was a tailoress and had won fame as a needlecraft worker.

She left Chesterville for Winchester 50 years ago and had resided there since. She was a devoted member of the United church and prior to her illness had taken an active part in the work of its organizations.

The funeral was held from her late resident yesterday afternoon, the service being conducted by Rev. W. S. Atchison, pastor of the Winchester United Church. Interment was made at Maple Ridge cemetery.

One sister, Miss Minnie Hanes, and a brother, James M. Hanes, both of Winchester, survive.

WEDNESDAY PROCLAIMED CIVIC HOLIDAY BY COUNCIL

Next Wednesday, May 17, has been proclaimed a civic holiday by Chesterville Municipal Council in honour of the visit to Caada of Their Majesties King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. Many expect to visit Ottawa on that day to witness the arrival in the Capital of Their Majesties. It is hoped that homes and places of business in Chesterville will be fittingly decorated in honour of this occasion.

Miss Johnston was a life-long resident of the district and her passing is regretted by a wide circle of friends.

She was a devoted member of St. Paul's Presbyterian church and took an active part in the work of its organizations.

She leaves two sisters, Mrs. Margaret Moffatt, of Winchester, and Mrs. George L. McLean, of Finch; two brothers, James A. Johnston, of Chesterville, and T. S. Johnston, Ottawa.

ROYAL TRAIN RUSHES PAST LARGE CROWD OF FOLKS HERE

Chesterville residents got a fleeting glimpse of the Royal Train as it flashed through the local C.P.R. yards Monday night about 10.45. A trial run was being made from Montreal to Smiths Falls, two stops having been made at Monklands and Finch to check equipment, but Chesterville was not so favoured. It is estimated that nearly 300 persons crowded the platforms to view the train that will carry the first reigning monarch and his queen ever to visit this Dominion.

DAM REPLACED IN NATION.

Workmen of Nestlé's Milk Products this week replaced the dam in the Nation River here this week and a fine body of water has again been backed up. Advantage of the water has already been taken by some of the daring youngsters ready for the first dip of the spring, and by those having boats.

Dunbar Goes on Air Map Dick Fawcett Buys Plane

Dunbar is scheduled to go on the air map next week, when R. H. "Dick" Fawcett, the flying cheesemaker, will have a plane delivered to him on Monday. Dick has been a member of the Ottawa Flying Club for a couple of years and since acquiring his pilot's license has many hours of flying to his credit. He has circled over this area, Dunbar and his home town of Avonmore many times in the club's machines but now he will be handling his own ship and will be able to go aloft whenever the urge overtakes him. He has a field near his factory cleared of obstacles which will become the first field used for regular landings in this area.

The new plane is a Taylor 40 Cub, a high wing monoplane. It is painted silver with black trimmings and bears the letters CF AWF, and is a two-seater model.

The writer took a flight recently with Dick from the Ottawa Flying Club airport, which is, incidentally, the same field used by Trans Canada at Ottawa, and was given a demonstration of how a plane is handled by a good pilot. In spite of a strong wind with frequent splashes of rain, the trip was smooth and ended with a perfect three-point landing.

The machine, of the same model as the one to put Dunbar on the map, behaved nicely as Dick piloted it at about 1,000 feet in a circle route that went over the Morrisburg-Ottawa highway, to Ottawa, and over the Hog's Back and the Rideau back to the landing field. Other club members kept the six planes of the club in the air all afternoon and a large crowd of spectators was on hand to see the planes in action. A large machine of Laurentian Airways was in action also carrying sightseers over Ottawa.

The high wind of the early afternoon kept the students grounded, but with a change in the wind direction, and a drop in the velocity, the instructors started their work with the would-be pilots, and the activity was thrilling to a landlubber.

Membership in the club is worth $10 a year and when his license is obtained, a member can secure a plane at a very nominal rental, but of course he may not land anywhere but at the airport. Mrs. Fawcett is also air-minded, being an associate member of the club.

Trans-Canada's huge aerdrome is near the clubhouse, and twice a day, at noon and 10 at night the huge Lockheeds land to discharge passengers and mail.

The club possesses two Avions, two Taylor Cubs, a 40 and 50; an Aeronca and a new Fleet. The latter's behaviour is synonomous with its name, as it easily outstrips the other machines owned by the club, and is a favourite with the pilots.

Reports of Rotary Conference Given by Representatives

Inspiration received at the annual District Conference of Rotary Clubs in Binghamton, N.Y., was passed on to the members of the Chesterville club on Tuesday evening by Rev. R. C. Tait and L. H. Doering who attended as representatives of the local body.

Announcement was made that Dr. S. H. Hutt had been chosen as president of the local club by the Board of Directors, his term of office to begin July 1. An appeal from Adrien Newans, Governor of the district, for aid for the newly formed Alexandria Bay, N.Y., club that lost all its equipment in a recent fire, was read to the club and heeded by a motion to send financial assistance.

L. H. Doering was the first speaker and told of the trip to Binghamton which was made by way of the Thousands Islands Bridge, Watertown and Syracuse, starting at Chesterville on Sunday night, April 30. Rotarians and their "Rotary Anns" were royally entertained for four days, with addresses of exceptionally fine quality being heard on Rotary principles.

The incident that touched him most, said the speaker, was the musical numbers given by a group of crippled children who are under the care of the Binghamton club. Since 1912, the Rotarians have taken charge of all crippled children in that city with remarkable results being obtained.

One of the speakers, said Rev. Mr. Tait, who used the subject of "Youth Service," in given instances of where proper youth training could have been used with great success, stated as his belief that if Adolph Hitler had been given a fair chance as a boy, his policy today in Europe would not be so ruthless and his word would be respected. He was raised in poverty by an autocratic father and suffered reverses all during his youth and young manhood. Comparing Hitler with Charlie Chaplain, he said the comedian of the screen preferred the silent drama to the talkies, and comedy to tragedy, while der Feuhrer was directly opposite.

Rotary was described by another speaker as a "Group of big boys having a good time doing good." Speakers known to Chesterville Rotarians included Governor Adrien Newans, Geo. B. Cummings, Jas. H. Thomas, and Cecil T. Meddlar, of Westmount, who was named as the first governor of the new 170th district which will include Chesterville.

A letter was read from Chas. M. Dyer, of the International Headquarters in Chicago, congratulating the local club on the completion of its first year in Rotary International.

Harry Rae, Former Resident, Passed Away in Ottawa

The death occurred in the Ottawa Civic Hospital, on Saturday, of a former Chesterville resident, Harry Rae, at the age of 41 years. He was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rae of Chesterville and has been a resident of Ottawa for some time.

The funeral service was held Tuesday from Radmore Stewart's funeral parlors, Ottawa, by Rev. Mr. Good of Erskine United church, with burial at Beachwood cemetery.

Several beautiful floral offerings were received, including Osgoode St. School and St. Alban's Church Boys' Choir, of which his son Donald is a member.

GLIMPSE OF THE ROYAL TRAIN

IF KING GEORGE VI and Queen Elizabeth had only been on the Royal train Monday evening when it passed Chesterville, what a welcome they would have received. Half of the population of the village waited at the station for an hour or more to glimpse the cars which make up the train to be used by Royalty when they pass from one side of the Dominion to the other. When you figure it out, Cornwall, Brockville, and other ten-minute stops will only have it on us to the extent of about nine minutes and fifty-seven seconds. The train was perhaps within the limits of this thriving burg for the space of three seconds while the entire throng breathed a breath of amazement.

While the railway company has secured a world of advertising for its steamship and rail lines, in these days of declining revenues it overlooked a good thing when it did not stop long enough at the smaller points to allow the populace to pass through a car or two at so much a pass.

ALL WILL HAVE OPPORTUNITY TO SEE THEIR MAJESTIES.

MANY PEOPLE express the opinion that it will be almost useless to go to Ottawa with the hope of seeing the King and Queen, but we believe the crowds will be so handled that all will have their desire fulfilled. The Royal pair are not visiting Canada to look at prettily decorated streets and handsome buildings, but to see us—the everyday ordinary citizens of a great country—as many of them as can possibly be gathered together at the different stops in the long journey. Those who are not among those present need not worry at not seeing Their Majesties, but rather that they have not given Their Majesties an opportunity of seeing them.

MOTHER NATURE TAKES A HINT

THE WEATHER MAN must have whispered something in Mother Nature's ear at the week-end, intimating that it was time to think of a new dress with distinguished visitors almost at our front door. What a change a couple of really warm days and a spot of moisture can do in rigging the landscape in all its seasonable finery.

FIFTY YEARS OF PROGRESS

WHEN ENJOYING the broadcast of the departure from Portsmouth of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, Saturday last, on their voyage to Canada, thoughts of what has come to the world in less than fifty years ran through our head. Of course we mean the world of Chesterville. The telephone had not arrived locally, hydro had not been thought of as we know it now, the great banks had no branches here, talking movies and the radio were not known to be possible. Bicycles were seen occasionally as the high wheeled variety was being chased to the discard by the low pneumatic tired machine. About thirty-five years ago horses almost attempted to climb trees when the occasional automobile hove in sight. When the first autos were operated locally it was suggested that the trade of the village was being ruined because farmers would not come to town to trade for fear their horses would be frightened and run away.

Women's Intuitive Sense Lauded by Family Judge

Those who scoff at the notion women gain knowledge "by intuition" will get no encouragement in their skepticism from Judge H. S. Mott, head of the Toronto Family Relations Court.

Speaking at the dinner of the Canadian Ceramic Society convention at the Royal York Hotel, which was attended by members and their wives the peacemaker in a hundred family battles warned husbands that however quick they themselves are at reasoning, their wives' power of intuiton is "a great asset in the home."

"I want to say to you men," he declared, "that while your wife doesn't perhaps seem to reason, she appears to have been given a special sense of truth that can look forward to what's going to happen, and get closer to it than all man's reasoning."

Recalling that in the course of his work he had "seen a lot of humanity's mistakes," Judge Mott said that a sense of being appreciated was the motive that led women to go through much of the drudgery of the household.

Fathers who want to manage their teen-age daughters will also have to appeal to their love of appreciation, because "authority will antagonize," he said, whereas the confidence of sons at the same time of life can best be gained by encouraging their natural impulses toward "doing and planning."

ST. ANDREW'S LADIES' AID ENTERTAINED BY MRS. FLEMING

The monthly meeting of St. Andrew's Ladies' Aid was held at the home of Mrs. John Fleming on Wednesday last. After the opening hymn, 374, the scripture reading was taken from Psalm I, then the Lord's Prayer was said in unison. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. Business discussion followed and the meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction.

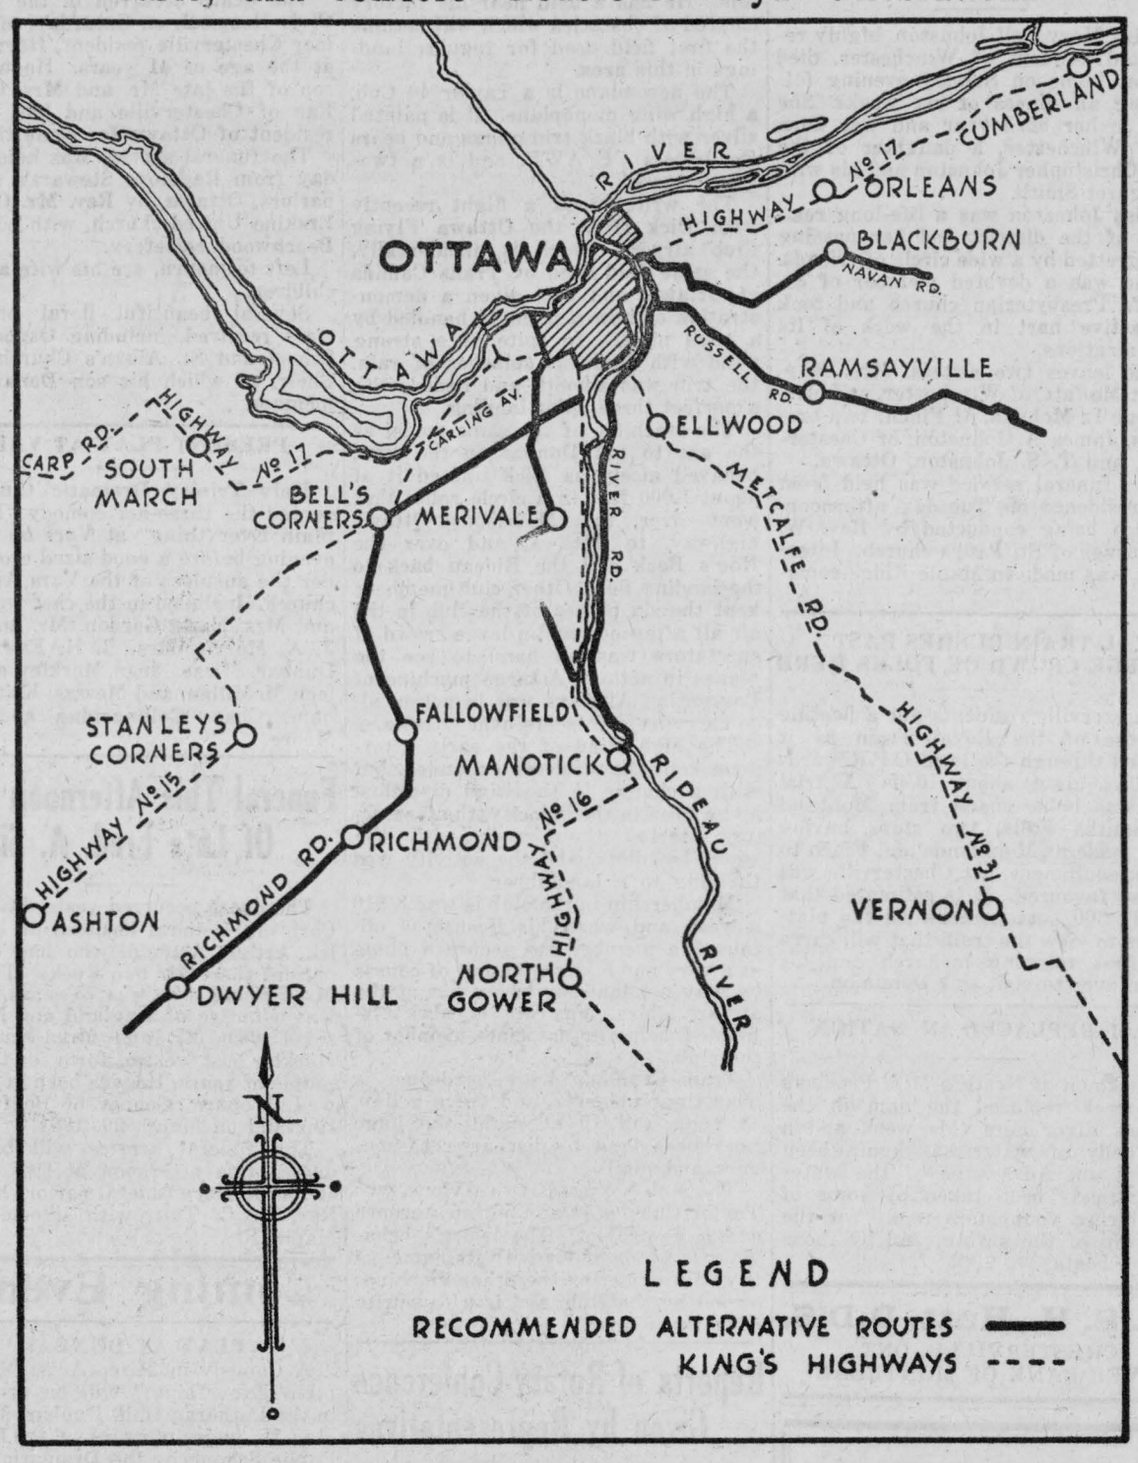

A vote of thanks was tendered to the hostess for the dainty lunch, moved by Mrs. C. McIntosh and Mrs. Crump.

The newlyweds had just gotten off their train.

"John, dear," said the bride, "let us try to make the people think we have been married a long time."

"All right, honey," was the answer, "you carry the suitcases."

"Safety and Comfort" Routes to Royal Celebrations

With the arrival of Their Majesties King George and Queen Elizabeth less than a week off, Minister of Highways Hon. T. B. McQuesten today reinforced his programme for reducing highway accidents through Ontario during the Royal visit.

Mr. McQuesten said every effort was being made by his department to avoid any serious traffic mishaps that might mar the pleasure of Their Majesties' tour. The programme was designed as a tribute to King George and his keen interest in accident prevention.

The highways minister urged all motorists to co-operate in attempts being made to prevent heavy congestion on roads leading to cities where the Royal party will pay formal and extended visits.

Mr. McQuesten pointed out that the King's Highway system near these cities will be heavily congested with motor traffic coming from distant points. He felt that motorists who lived comparatively close to these cities might reach their destination with much more comfort and convenience if they used the many good secondary roads available to them.

He also suggested that many motorists coming from distant points would find these secondary roads a means of avoiding congestion and delay.

To the end of promoting traffic safety and motoring comfort, department of highways engineers have mapped out alternative routes which, if followed, will relieve some of the pressure on the main routes and help to avoid some of the heavy congestion. The map above emphasizes the roads, apart from the principal highways, by which motorists may travel safely and comfortably to see the Royal celebrations in the Capital.

AN HONEST MAN.

Windsor Star.

MR. JAMES DUNBAR, of Huron County , is a poor man with a minimum of education. Yet he is possessed of an advantage that money cannot buy nor education acquire. He is honest.

This characteristic stood Mr. Dunbar in good stead in a Goderich court when he attempted to break his uncle's will. The story briefly is that, in 1913, the uncle made a will bequeathing his farm to another nephew. Then 23 years ago, Mr. Dunbar went to live with his uncle, on the promise that the farm would come to him. He took with him his life's savings, $1,200, worked without pay since then, and spent his savings. The uncle evidently intended to make over the will, but failed to do so.

Breaking a will is no easy thing to do. But Mr. Dunbar did it. How? By convincing Mr. Justice Godfrey of his absolute honesty; that the uncle had intended changing the will. Furthermore, he had 24 neighbours to testify to his honesty.

Mr. Justice Godfrey said he had never been more impressed by any man than by this 67-year-old weather beaten farmer, dressed in a 34-year old suit, and without money or education. It is a high tribute.

Propose Tunnel to Link Prescott to Ogdensburg

A large engineering syndicate have commenced investigation into the construction of a combination traffic and railway tunnel under the St. Lawrence from Ogdensburg to Prescott. The Prescott Chamber of Commerce received a request from the American International Engineering Syndicate of Boston, for an accurate chart of the river at that point, together with the information regarding the geological formation under the river.

Colonel Hugh Hodsdon, trustee and treasurer of the concern, which maintains offices in London, Eng., New York, Montreal, also asks for accurate distances across the river, the location of present railway lines at Prescott, and the principal highways entering the town, also the nature of the terrain in the vicinity of the town.

The plans, according to Colonel Hodsdon, are for a transportation system that will bring about a great improvement in rail and traffic facilities and would also be an important arm of international defence.

450 Rural Girls Attending Conference at O.A.C., Guelph

Some 450 rural girls averaging in age from 18 to 20, from all counties west of Prince Edward and Peterboro and north to Muskoka and Parry Sound, will attend the 14th annual girls' conference at the O.A.C. and Macdonald Institute, Guelph, May 10 11 ad 12. Such is the fame and popularity of this conference sponsored by the Women's Institute Branch, Ontario Department of Agriculture, that applications were received from 710 girls, but accommodation is unfortunately limited so that only the first 450 applications could be accepted.

The majority of the girls are being sent by the senior women's institutes and the United Farm Women of Ontario, while others are scholarship winners in girls' homemaking club work. It will be the first trip to Macdonald Institute for most of the girls and a well-prepared and balanced programme has been arranged by Miss Mary A. Clarke, Superintendent, Women's Institute Branch, and Miss Florence P. Eadie.

Highlights of this programme include a cross section of Homemaking club work by the girls themselves; a clothing demonstration "What Shall My Wardrobe Be?"; physical education review, "What We Eat, We Are"; "A Comedy of Errors in Eating," all by Macdonald Institute students; "The Family's Health," by Dr. Helen MacMurchy, C.B.E.; "Reading for the Family," by Miss Ethel M. Chapman; banquet address by W. R. Reek, deputy minister of Agriculture for Ontario; illustrated lecture on Farm Home Beautification by Prof. A. H. Tomlinson, and an address "Fears and Foibles" by Dr. G. E. Reamon, Toronto. There will also be several round table conferences led by the staffs of Macdonald and Women's Institutes. It promises to be a wonderful three days for the girls.

Elma

A very fine play, entitled "Sailor Take Care," was given in the church hall at Elma last Wednesday by the Y.P.U. of Williamsburg and was enjoyed by a fine audience.

On Sunday morning, a service of unusual interest was held in the United church, A young man, Mr. J Basil Adams, of Winchester Springs, was recommended to the Dundas Grenville Presbytery of the United Church of Canada as a suitable person to be received as a Candidate for the ministry of the church. Instead of having a separate meeting of the Official Board as is usual, the minister convened the board at the time of the usual service, and in place of preaching a sermon, the minister gave an address on the doctrines of the church to which all ministers must subscribe. The candidate was examined in the presence of the congregation, and the members of the Official Board voted unanimously to recommend the candidate to the Presbytery. If the Presbytery, which is to meet at Hainsville on Wednesday, passes favourably on this recomendation, then this pastoral charge, of less than 100 families, will be honoured by having three of its young men in training for the ministry.

A salesman was passing through a small village and had several hours to while away. Seeing one of the natives he inquired: "Any picture show in this town, my friend?"

"Nope, nary a one, stranger," was the answer.

"Any poolroom or bowling alley?"

"None of them, either," came the reply.

"What form of amusement have you here?" asked the salesman.

"Wall, come on down to the drug store. Thar's a Freshman home from the university."

GENERAL MANAGER OF BANK FORECASTS CANADIAN BOOM

A. E. Arscott, Toronto, general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, declared Canada was all prepared for one of the most prosperous years of its existence, as he landed in Winnipeg en route east after a western tour. He said industrialists in countries near the Nazis group have taken steps to liquidate their holdings with the intention of migrating to another country to start business anew. Canada, Mr. Arscott, said, is looked upon as being particularly attractive.

Queen Invites Former Playmate Of Glamis Castle to Meet Her

Queen Elizabeth, by her own desire, will meet in Toronto the former shepherd's boy with whom she romped the estates of Glamis Castle as a little pig-tailed girl.

All was joy and confusion in the household of David Williamson, 172 Rushton Road, when a letter came from the Lieutenant-Governor's aide asking David to appear at Queen's Park on May 22 for a personal meeting with her Majesty.

First intimation that the Queen remembered the little shepherd's boy of her childhood came about a month ago when David received a personal letter from Her Majesty suggesting that she would be pleased to receive him during her visit to Toronto. And on Monday the invitation to see her in the Lieutenant - Governor's personal chambers came as a bombshell in the modest Williamson home.

"I've been so excited I haven't done a stroke of work all day," said Mrs. Williamson, a pretty young woman who hails from Sussex. David himself, a lean, quiet war veteran who won the French Military Medal for heroism in the war, beamed with delight as he told of happy times about the ancient estate of the Earl of Strathmore.

Born in "Home Farm."

David's father was the chief shepherd on the estate for fifteen years. David was born there in the old "home farm," a white thatched cottage in which shepherds have lived for centuries.

"There were few children on the great estate in those days," he said. "My three brothers and I were the only ones, so when Elizabeth came to the castle she often used to come and play with us. Of course, I had no idea she would be Queen of the whole Empire. I suppose she didn't either."

David remembered little Elizabeth quite well, he said. "She had very black hair, braided and hanging down her back. She used to come frequently to the dairy at the home farm with her brother. Of course her governess, Miss Knight, I think her name was, was always with her. She never went out alone."

At 41 David could not recall many incidents of his early boyhood at Glamis (pronounced Glams) as he left there and came to Canada when he was 10. His brother, Walter, also a resident of Toronto, remembers more of their life there as he was a little older. Walter, a blinded war veteran, who is an instructor at Christie Street Hospital, did not know the Lady Elizabeth so well as David, and was not born on the estate.

David's best story, which he tells only reluctantly, is of the fishing rod that his father was given by Elizabeth's grandfather, the old Earl. When he was a barefooted boy fly-casting across the River Deen, Elizabeth came by with her governess one day and asked to use the rod. "She tried her own luck," he says, "and caught a little brook trout. I think that was the first fish she ever caught."

The four Williamson brothers have been widely separated since their boyhood at Glamis. Alex is still in Scotland, in business at Dumbarton; Robert is an engineer for the Portuguese Government in the Cape Verde Islands off Africa; and David and Walter are in Toronto.

"I was a helper in the Glamis Castle gardens," Walter recalled. "Dozens of times Elizabeth came there — it was about a five-minute walk from the castle — and sometimes we used to steal some grapes. Those Glamis grapes are the best I have ever tasted.

Knew Queen's Family.

Walter was more familiar with other members of the Bowes-Lyons family than with the little girl who was destined to become Queen. I knew her brother, Fergus, who was killed overseas, and I knew her father, Lord Glamis, very well.

"The day of a hunt he used always to send for me to carry his cartridges and seat cane. Those were wonderful times, although I guess I thought I was really working then. The twelfth of August was always a great day at Glamis, for that was the day that the grouse season opened, and always there was a big shoot, with the gentry invited from all parts of Scotland. Lord Glamis was a wonderful shot, a crack shot, and he was a real man to his tenants, too.

"On Sundays often we went to the castle chapel, where the Earl would read a chapter of the Bible. The whole family was usually there, including Elizabeth, and any of the people on the estate were welcome."

Walter and David both went to school in the tiny village of Glamis, about a mile from the castle. The home farm was about half a mile away.

"I can't quite remember about the ghosts," said David with a grin. "But there were lots of legends about spooks. Glamis Castle, of course, is the place where Macbeth is said to have murdered King Duncan nearly a thousand years ago."

Royal Engine for Record Run

Engine 2850 of the Canadian Pacific motive power fleet — semi-streamlined Hudson type, last-minute word in locomotive construction—will haul the Royal Train from Quebec to Vancouver and 25 Canadian Pacific engineers, each selected for his record and ability, will in turn handle the throttle during the coast-to-coast run. From the time the royal train leaves Quebec City May 16 until it arrives in Vancouver May 29, the engine will provide the power for the trip of more than three thousand miles, a run not heretofore carried out by any one engine on the North American Continent.

Canadian Pacific engineers, firemen, conductors and trainmen to a total of 110 men will man the Royal Train on the Company's lines, and an equal number selected with equal care will handle the Pilot Train which has been provided for newspapermen, police and accompanying officials. The honor of being first engineer to pilot the locomotive of the train bearing Their Majesties King George VI and Queen Elizabeth when they visit Canada, however, goes to Eugene Leclerc, (inset) quiet-spoken French-Canadian locomotive engineer who has 48 years' service with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Nearly 38 years ago when the late King George V and Queen Mary, then Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, visited Canada, Eugene Leclerc was fireman on their train from Quebec City to Montreal. This time he will be engineer for the same run.

Comparison of the above pictures of the new locomotive of the same series as 2850 and old No. 360, which powered the royal train on the 1901 tour, and which was one of the best in service at that time, shows the great strides made in engineering in the past four decades.

Locomotive 2850 is one of the new semi-streamlined engines built last year for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It weighs 363,900 pounds, more than four times as much as the original 90,000-pound engine, and has a tractive effort of 57,000 pounds as compared to the 13,400 pounds of old 360. No. 2850 is being carefully checked for the trip and will be beautifully painted in royal colors for the tour over Canadian Pacific lines.

Western Rebels Force Government Revise Wheat Policy Again

THE number of western rebels against the Government on the budget would have been much larger but for the hurried intervention of Ministers Gardiner and Euler with notices that the Agricultural bonusing bills which have been before the House for several weeks will be withdrawn and revised measures substituted.

MIRROR OF THE NATION

By "Commoner"

These notices were interjected as the House of Commons was dealing with the budget in order to assure western Liberals that the Government was prepared to once more alter its decision about the guaranteed minimum price. Devision of the bills was resorted to only after efforts of the party whips, and private assurances in caucus, had failed to persuade a number of western Liberals to remain loyal to the ministry on the budget.

AGRICULTURARL Minister Gardiner's repeated changes of front on the wheat question, in response to successive applications of conflicting political pressure, has had the effect of greatly lowering his prestige. His chance of being a strong contender for the Liberal leadership in the event of the retirement of Mackenzie King has been decidedly weakened. Western Liberal members who realize that they are facing defeat in the forthcoming general election are blaming him. His frequent shifts in position on a single issue, in the space of less than three months, set a new record for Parliament.

But the cabinet has been divided from the outset on the wheat question and Mr. Gardiner's position has been most unhappy. His announcement in February that the guaranteed wheat price was a mistake which the country could not afford to continue, and that the Government was getting out of the wheat business and would abandon the guaranteed price, was the result of one group in the cabinet having its own way. This group was opposed to the guaranteed price because of eastern demand for reduction in the cost of government. The revolt in the West which followed Mr. Gardiner's announcement persuaded the majority of the cabinet that a political mistake had been made. Mr. Gardiner was allowed to attempt a compromise, with a guaranteed price lowered from 80 to 60 cents, and legislation to this effect was introduced. It was not proceeded with because it was quickly evident that the policy of appeasement would not work. Later the word went out that the basic price would be set at 70 cents. This was unacceptable. Mr. Gardiner saw his supposed strength in the prairies rapidly diminishing. The bills were allowed to stand on the order paper until Liberal members began announcing their intention to vote against the Government on the budget. This defection had to be stopped so the move was quickly made to recall the wheat bills for revision.

Political rather than economic in its inspiration, the government's agricultural programme has been altered during the last ten weeks with every change in the strength of political winds. Conflict in the cabinet on the question continues because it is now recognized that this display of vacillation precludes any possibility of saving Liberal seats on the prairies even by reversion to the 80 cent minimum price. Some of the ministers think the Government would do better to write off its prospective losses in the West and make an economy play for Eastern support by cutting out the guaranteed price altogether, as Mr. Gardiner at first proposed.

* * * *

THE political character of the Gardiner Euler agricultural legislation is further revealed in connection with the concessions to eastern agricultural interests. Soon after it came into office the Mackenzie King Government reversed the Bennett Government's policy of encouraging high grade cheese production in Ontario and Quebec by the payment of premiums. When they were in opposition the Liberals had opposed such premiums. Mr. Euler denounced the policy as "paternalism gone mad." The complaint of the eastern farmer that he was Canada's forgotten man has compelled the ministers to forget their former attitude and revert to the Conservative policy which they had denounced and rescinded of encouraging the dairy industry by premiums on cheese.

ARRIVAL OF THEIR MAJESTIES IN CANADIAN WATERS TO BE BROADCAST BY CBC NETWORK

FROM "somewhere in the Gulf of St. Lawrence," the CB C on Saturday will bring to its Canadian listeners the first word-picture of the Royal visit.

When the lookout on board H.M.C.S. Saguenay signals that the Empress of Australia is sighted on the horizon, the voice of W. E. S. (Ted) Briggs of the CBC Halifax studios will tell thousands of loyal subjects from sea to sea that Their Most Gracious Majesties the King and Queen have arrived safely in Canadian waters.

At his microphone mounted on the Saguenay's bridge, Mr. Briggs will describe the thrilling scene as the gleaming white liner draws near.

Listeners will be able to hear the rush of the ocean as the Saguenay, with Commander Houghton at the helm, ploughs through the waves to meet the Empress and her Royal Navy escort. They will hear the voices of the ship's officers as they give orders. They will hear the sound of the bosun's pipe and the words of command as the crew is ordered to man the ship's side. Facing outward, the crew will form a chain around the deck.

On H. M. C. S. Skeena (Commander Grant) which will accompany the Saguenay, a similar ceremony will be carried out.

When a signal comes from the Empress to "form up," the white ensigns flown by the Canadian destroyers will be dipped in salute to the liner carrying Royalty.

"Shipshape" is the word for the the ships of His Majesty's Canadian Navy, but in the Halifax dockyards during the last few days the Skeena and Saguenay have been gone over from truck to keel receiving just the few additional touches that befit such an occasion. The paint has an added lustre, the brass a new brilliance. They're going to meet the King and Queen!

Canadian naval officials have given every co-operation to the CBC in permitting special transmission equipment to be installed on the Saguenay and allowing the CBC commentator and engineer to travel aboard.

H.M.C.S. Skeena, while not playing an important rôle in the initial ceremony as far as the broadcast by the CBC is concerned, is the senior vessel of the two and as such has been equipped to carry Their Majesties from Cape Tormentine to Prince Edward Island on return from their cross-Canada tour, and later will take them to Nova Scotia.

It is expected that both destroyers will put to sea from Halifax May 10 in order to meet the Empress and her escort ships off Newfoundland on the thirteenth. The time of the first broadcast of the history-making Royal series is not definitely known, but it will probably take place some time in the later afternoon or early evening of that day. It will be of 15 minutes duration.

With commentator Briggs at the microphone, the second broadcast will be given on Sunday, May 14. This will probably take place at night when a word-picture will be brought to the people of Canada of the inspiring sight as the five vessels, aglow with lights, approach Rimouski.

In selecting Ted Briggs as commentator for these two broadcasts, the CBC has chosen one well qualified to handle a marine assignment. Mr. Briggs spent seven years at sea—two on His Majesty's Training Ship Conway, one year as midshipman in the Royal Navy and four years with the oRyal Mail Steam Packet Company in which he sailed to many strange ports of the world. As Chief Cadet Captain of the Conway, Mr. Briggs was presented to Their Majesties, then the Duke and Duchess of York, when the Conway cadets formed a guard of honour for them during a visit to the Manchester Ship Canal in 1923.

Dressing Edny ! ! !

ON A CERTAIN afternoon in August it is doubtful whether there was a happier girl in Centreville than Edna Dorine Weinert, commonly known to her family and associates by the convenient title of Edny. She was sitting in her shiny, new-looking car at the S. & O. Railway station, waiting for the train that was to bring Grandma Cooper on her biennial visit from "Ioway;" and she was engaged in a pleasant dramatization of Grandma's surprise and approval when her eyes should rest on the glossy sides and fenders of the "car." To be sure, Grandma knew that a car had been bought some fifteen months ago, but she did not know what perfection of care Edny had lavished upon it, for the family had been enjoined to hoard this fact as a secret, against the time of Grandma's arrival.

"Why, child!" Edny could hear Grandma exclaiming, "Your Pa ain't been and bought another car!" And then Edny would have her triumph.

"Dhy, no. Grandma," she would say, "this is the same car. I just take care of it right, you see. Nobody touches it but me. I clean it, and I fix it whenever something's the matter. It has never been to the shop but once because I understand machinery just like a man, Grandma. You ask Harv Kelly if I don't."

Then Grandma, after another amazed stare, would bring out in her familiar words, "Child, I've always said it, and I'll say it again: you're a Welch from your toes up. You may look like a Weinert, but that makes no difference. You're a Welch." Such declarations had become an established part of each of Grandma's visit; and Edny found it exceedingly agreeable to hear her own name linked to that of the practical and prosperous Welches.

Moreover, it meant something to be praised by Grandma Cooper; for, as Ma Weinert said, "Mother's so set on not spoilin' folks by sayin' nice things to 'em that it looks as if it'd kill her to give a compliment to your face. She'll praise you behind your back fast enough, but not to your face—excepting, of course, Edny. Now Edny she will praise sometimes. Seems as if she can't help it. Edny, I tell, 'em, is mother's weak spot."

The whistle of the train broke in upon Edny's happy reverie. Jumping lightly down, she hurried along the platform to meet the tall old woman who soon descended the steps of the day coach—for Grandma never rode in a Pullman—and enveloped her in a vigourous embrace. After Grandma's inevitable astonishment at the changes that two years had wrought in Edny's appearance, Edny piloted her through the lounging summer-afternoon crowd explaining meanwhile that Pa and Claudie were still at the shops and Ma had a toothache and couldn't come out in a breeze. Then, following a dramatic pause, Edny allowed the sleek, complacent car to burst upon Grandma's view.

"Child!" she exclaimed, "Your Pa's not gone and bought another car!"

The delightful dialogue that Edny had anticipated now followed with a few unimportant changes. Edny was a Welch! Also, it was quite evident she was Grandma Cooper's "weak spot" and the "weak spot" listened to the oft-heard phrases with frank enjoyment.

Grandma Cooper, in addition to her reluctance to bestow indiscriminate praise, had another peculiarity. She was extremely fond of offering advice. Even that first night, when the family had gathered around the feast that Ma Weinert had prepared for her mother's welcome in spite of the toothache, this second trait was quite in evidence.

"Claudie," she remarked to her tall grandson, "you've no business combin' your hair down across your forehead. It's old-fashioned. Slick it back. You ought to see your Aunt Maria's boys!"

Maria was the daughter with whom Grandma Cooper made her home and whom she ably assisted in the preparing of gallons of cream for shipment daily and in caring for numerous calves and pigs as well as some scores of chickens. For Grandma liked to work. I've been in my prime since I was twenty," she often said, "and I'll still be in it when I'm eighty. And Maria's goin' to be just like me!" She was less confident about the other daughter, to whom she now returned.

"Gussie," she stated, "you're too fat. You eat too much."

Ma Weinert replied humbly, "I know. I'm always so hungry after working hard."

"It won't do, Gussie. First thing you know you'll look older than your mother."

Pa Weinert himself came in for some share of admonition.

"George, I went out to the barn as soon's I got here, to see Betsy. She was only a yearlin' when I was here last. Pretty likely lookin' cow, but her yield is not what it ought to be. I notice you're feedin' her that X-brand meal. Better quit it, George. Maria doesn't use it. It doesn't make milk the way bran and cotton seed do. Speakin' of cows, Gussie, I see you've got the same old pictures hangin' in the sittin'-room."

Ma Weinert looked up bewildered.

"That picture of a scene on a river with a cow in it," Grandma continued, supplying the connection; "that's out of style, that kind of pictures with an animal in it. You ought to see Maria's sittin'-room — livin'-room she calls it. She takes a lot of magazines that have real practical suggestions how to make your home look refined and stylish. Maria says a woman in the country doesn't have to be a back number any more unless she's just lazy-minded. That's your trouble, Gussie. You're lettin' your mind jell!"

At this Pa Weinert hastily swallowed a mouthful of biscuit and gravy and prepared to wrest conversation back to its rightful leadership, but Grandma Cooper, whose mind, unlike her daughter's, was a flowing stream, was now darting up another tributary. "Speakin' of jell," she began, and Pa remained during the rest of the meal in an irritated state of suppression.

It should be noted that in the matter of giving advice, as in her habit of withholding praise, Edny was Grandma's one exception. For her, on this first night, there was nothing but frankly expressed or very thinly concealed approbation. In the week that followed, however, Grandma's eyes rested upon her favourite more than once with a look that might have betokened a slight slackening of enthusiasm. She said nothing, but several times wen Edny was near, Grandma's lips flew open with their characteristic assurance, only to close again with every indication of indecision. Plainly something was on her mind.

By Saturday Grandma was obliged to ask a question. "Child, I've been here most a week now, and I've never seen you wearin' a thing but that dark blue skirt and a middy blouse. Don't you ever wear dresses?"

"Sundays," said Edny, "I wear an all-white middy and a white skirt."

"But," exclaimed Grandma, "don't you ever dress up?"

"I hate clothes," declared she who was a Welch.

Grandma's lips snapped shut, checking the pent-up advice: but she decided to have without further delay a talk with Gussie. Afterward, as she confessed to herself, it seemed that the talk was only a waste of effort. "Somehow you don't seem to get anywhere with Gussie," thought Grandma.

It was for this reason, doubtless, that she took her crocheting on Monday afternoon, leaving Gussie resting from her washing, and went next door to call on Mrs. Casey. She liked to talk with Mrs. Casey. For sixteen years the Caseys and the Weinerts had lived side by side, and with each succeeding visit to Centreville Grandma's conviction deepened that Mrs. Casey was a woman of good, hard common sense, and a mighty good neighbour for Gussie to have.

When she was comfortably settled in a shady corner of Mrs. Casey's porch, Grandma began: "Mrs. Casey, I've had Edny on my mind a good deal since I came. Smart child, smart's a whip. But there's one thing worries me. Now, I'm speakin' frank, Mrs. Casey; you know I'm right out with what I think."

"That's me, that's me." Mrs. Casey moistened her lips and leaned forward eagerly.

"It's a question o' clothes," continued Grandma Cooper. "All Edny wants to do, it seems, is ride around in that car dressed in an old blue skirt and middy. And Gussie doesn't put her foot down. Now, Mrs. Casey, what do you think of lettin' a young girl almost old enough to have a beau grow up that way?"

Mrs. Casey cleared her throat. "I'm real glad you spoke to me about this matter, Mis' Cooper. Fact is, I've already took it up with your daughter, time or two. 'Mis' Weinert,' I tell her, 'what's a girl's future goin' to be if she ain't got a woman's tastes?"

Grandma Cooper busily plying her crochet hook nodded an emphatic endorsement. Mrs. Casey, warming to her subject, drew her chair closer. "And another thing, Mis' Cooper; clothes are awful important for a married woman, too. If you'll excuse me bein' so plain-spoke. You know me. Seems to me Mis' Weinert herself could take some advice in the way of clothes."

"Oh, she could, she could." But Grandma though interested in her daughter, did not propose to allow the conversation to drift away from the matter uppermost in her mind. "That child!" she exclaimed ruminatively. "Smart a child as ever I see. And no taste whatever for pretty clothes. Here I've got to go back to Ioway before long, and the child's mother can't be the least help in the world to her. Gussie's a splendid cook,—beats Maria in that,—but when it comes to dressin' up and bein' somebody—Gussie just hasn't got the idea!"

"You can depend on me," promised Mrs. Casey. "I'll talk to her as I have in the past." But when she stood there watching the old woman take her energetic way homeward Mrs. Casey found herself sighing. "I've worked on Mis' Weinert for a good many years now, and I ain't produced much results, as I can see," she admitted.

Before Mrs. Casey had a chance for further "working on" Mrs. Weinert, Mrs. Weinert herself began to show the effect of her mother's earnest talk with her. It was characteristic of Ma that any new line of action must be preceded by a long period of worrying, and she was still floundering in this painful mental state when she decided to pour her troubles into her son's ears. Pa Weinert was too plainly satisfied with the negligible cost of Edny's clothes to offer unbiased advice. And Claudie, it turned out, was meagrely qualified as an adviser.

"Say, Ma, what do you think I know about how a girl ought to dress? he asked helplessly.

"Don't you know whether boys pay more attention to a girl if she's kinda dressy?"

"I only know how I am myself, Ma. I want a girl to look pretty, but I don't know if it's clothes that do it!"

The chain of interest that Grandma had started added a new link in a day or two, for Claudie was in the habit of talking over all matters, great or small, with his chum, Chuck Maguire. Chuck obviously had not specialized in the problem that Ma Weinert had found so disturbing, but, having no women folks of his own, he had affectionately adopted all of Claudie"s and was in a position, therefore, to sympathize will all three.

"If you ask me," he offered, "Edny looks all right the way she is. And I don't blame Ma Weinert for being upset, for, believe me, she's got enough work to do without makin' a lot more clothes for Edny. But at the same time I'll hand it to Granma; she can't be beat, and, if she says a thing is so, why I guess it is." After which pronouncement of Chuck's Claudie scratched his head in some uncertainty.

Chuck's active brain, however, was never content to leave a problem unsolved. The next day he approached Claudie with a plan that he thought would please Grandma, add no burden to Ma and create in Edny the appropriate hunger for girlish finery.

"Listen, Weinie," he cried impetuously; "you know all that stuff in the papers about suggestion? Well, I got a scheme. There's a peach of a dress down in Blum's window, a pale pink. Say, it's pretty. Now listen; let's you and me buy it for Edny, see? And when she sees herself all dolled up she'll just naturally want some more clothes like that. She'll get a taste for them."

Claudie looked down at him severely. "What's the matter with you, Chuck? You can't give my sister a present like that."

"Aw, you're crazy. Get some sense—"

"Get some yourself, bo. But as for your idea, I'm for it. I'll buy the dress myself."

"But you can't, Weinie. That dress costs real money."

"Oh, yes, I can. I've got some saved up. There isn't much I wouldn't do for the kid, anyhow."

Though Chuck still protested at being left out of the worthy undertaking, the boys were soon on their way uptown. They walked fast, for, since their conversation had taken place as they left the shops, scarcely an hour remained before Blum's store would close. Chuck valiantly led the way into the portals of Blum's Co-oporeative Emporium, but as they made their way down the aisle after inquiring the location of the dress department a bright glow might have been seen creeping up the back of his neck. He was sure that every feminine eye behind the counters was upon him. Claudie meanwhile became acutely conscious of the brown flannel shirt he wore to and from his work. Even in the elevator, two pairs of feminine eyes chose the boys as targets for their attention. "Whew, but it's hot!" murmured Claudie under his breath.

In charge of the "ready-mades" upstairs was a modish young woman with bobbed hair. She was alone. It was almost time for the store to close. But at sight of Claude she came alertly toward them. "Can I show you something?" she asked sweetly.

"Uh—why, we want to look at that pale pink dress down in the window," said Chuck.

The young woman smiled and with eyes still on Claudie, reassured the boys brightly. "Surest thing you know. I've got that very dress in two other sizes. What size you want, please?"

"Size?" Claudie looked his blankest.

"She's — she's smaller than you!" blurted out Chuck.

"I see. Young miss or—what age?'

"Er—fifteen. She's my sister," Claudie explained.

"I see. Party dress you want. That would be sweet, that pink chiffon." She went toward a bewildering array of garments in a glass case, and with a deft wrist extracted the dreamlike creation in shell pink. "Might be a little large," she offered as she again approached them, "but it can be altered."

"Sure is pretty!" remarked Claudie.

"Peachy!" amended Chuck.

"Uh—well—uh — how — how much does it cost?"

She named a figure that for a moment deprived Claudie of his mental faculties. Chuck edged toward him. "Look here, Weinie, you'll have to let me—"

Claudie, recovering, frowned down on his chum. "I'm doin' this," he growled.

With charming cordiality the young woman assisted Claudie with the necessary financial details, then she explained: "It's too late to deliver it today, you understand."

"Ma'am?? Oh! No'm!. Yes'm — I mean Ill take it with me."

"Now, if there's any dissatisfaction just come to me," said the young woman as she handed Claudie a large box. "Miss Murphy. Just call for Miss Murphy." She smiled sweetly.

After a hot wait for the elevator and a hotter walk down the formidable central aisle the boys escaped from the store.

"What's funny, I'd like to know?" grumbled Claudie. Then, remembering the pleasant event about to take place at home, he asked Chuck to accompany him. Was it not Chuck's idea? It was, Chuck admitted, and, demurring not too vigorously, he fell into step beside Claudie.

The family were gathering in the dining room for the evening meal when the boys arrived with the box partly concealed behind Claudie's back It was fitting that it should remain in his tantalizing position until the women-folks were keyed to an appropriate state of curiosity. That accomplished, the box was laid upon the table, and with much ceremony the beautiful contents were disclosed. All gasped except Pa Weinert, who just grunted, "Say, how much did that thing cost?"

Of the three women no one was quite so delighted as Grandma, who, quickly silencing her son-in-law, snatched the box from the table and hurried Ma and Edny into Edny's room.

Ma's eyes were moist. "Edny, you have the best brother in the world!"

"I know I have!" said Edny tremulously.

Ma and Edny were too dazed to be of much service in the transaction that followed, but Grandma kept her wits. Swiftly she pulled off the middy and the old blue skirt and, gathering up the lovely garment from the box, let it fall gently over Edny's head. Deftly she pulled it down into place and fastened the numerous snaps, then swung her granddaughter about to face the mirror. "Now!" exclaimed Grandma excitedly.

At her first glance Edny started back slightly, but, quickly bracing herself, stepped closer for a better view. Surely she must be mistaken? Behind her she heard Ma and Grandma extravagantly admiring, but her own heart began to feel like lead. She pushed up the shade for light and, bending close, took a long frowning look at her image. No, she had not been mistaken. Suddenly she wanted to cry. In the delicate pink her sunburned skin was like copper. Couldn't they see? And her hair was dull, taffy-coloured. Her nose looked red, stubby — and coarse. Her mouth was too big. It was awful! The filmy, shell-pink garment had brought into high relief all of Edny's somewhat numerous imperfections. "I didn't know I was so ugly!" she grieved miserably.

"Here, you've primped long enough. Come show the boys your grand dress." It was Grandma, pushing her toward the dining room door. Edny winked back her tears and stiffened herself for the ordeal. "She hasn't said a word," continued Grandma, to Claudie. "It's so pretty she's clear overcome."

Claudie gazed proudly and delightedly at his purchase. Then Edny lifted her eyes timidly to Chuck. He had been silent until Ma had prodded him. "Well, Chuck, how do you like it?" Then he answered, "Sure is a peachy dress," but there was no vigor in that "peachy." Edny, meeting his eyes, read the disappointment. Chuck knew that something was wrong. And he knew she knew. She fled back to her room to pull off the lovely, terrible dress. Outside she could hear Grandma explaining: "The child's clear overcome. Claudie, you've done a great thing for Edny, buying her that pretty dress. From now on, mark my word, she'll take an interest in clothes."

When Edny came out a little later to eat her supper she learned the wretchedness of trying to act lively and pleased when she wanted only a lonely pillow. It was harder because Chuck was so quiet, sitting there listening while Claudie loyally told them that it was all "Chuck's idea."

Edna Dorine Weinert, possessed as she was of an alert and practical mind had met few problems in her fifteen years that she had not been able to solve; but the pink chiffon frock presented her by her loving brother had left her in a state bordering on despair. Late into the night she tossed and turned.

"I won't wear it! I won't! But, oh, I've got to! Claudie'd be hurt if I didn't." Then again and again the stormy protest: "But I won't, I won't look like a freak, as if I was trying to look pretty and couldn't. I'd rather wear my old middies. And I know Chuck would rather—" She never quite completed this unspoken thought but it was clear that in some way Chuck was deeply involved in her distress.

It happened in time, for Edny was young and sound, that she fell asleep; but just before slumber released her, a plan had suddenly presented itself that she dangled wistfully before her mental vision, that, moreover, would have solved her difficulty and dealt no wound to Claudie. Wearily at last, however, she gave it up. For the plan carried two insurmountable conditions: the dress must be left untouched and Grandma must be withdrawn from the situation. Hopeless! Grandma was to stay two weeks longer and had, besides, declared her intention of altering the dress the very next morning to fit her granddaughter's figure.

When morning came, cold daylight reasoning told Edny again that there was no way to keep Grandma from rehemming and otherwise altering the the pink dress. Yet in spite of reason she temporized.

"Grandma, I was going to Fannie Bell's this morning? Can't you wait until afternoon to fit me?"

Grandma was disposed to be reasonable, if reluctantly so. "That ain't my way o' doin' things. If I've got a job waitin', my way is to go at it. But I will wait until eleven if you'll hurry back. I'm goin' to see that dress fixed, ready for you to wear. If I leave it to your mother, she'll put it off. And something might happen—"

"Something might happen!" It was a phrase often on Grandma's lips. It betokened, not nervous fears, but merely forehanded Welch prudence. Never had the phrase been uncannily prophetic, as it was to prove on this eventful day.

Edny returned glumly from Fannie Bell's at eleven-fifteen to find Ma Weinert and Grandma Cooper bent in a flurried packing of Grandma's trunk. At sight of her, Ma cried: "Edny, your Grandma's got to go home today! Two o'clock train! Your Aunt Maria's fell and broke her right arm—"

"And it's peach-cannin' time," her Grandma groaned.

"Go right away, Endy," continued Ma shrilly, "and get out the car and go tell Pa and Claudie and bring 'em home and hurry back and help me get dinner; now run!"

Edny stood not upon the order of her going, but on the way out of the house a thought struck her. Now she could carry out her plan about the dress! She crushed down her relief, feeling terribly wicked. It wasn't just right to rejoice about anything when poor Aunt Maria had broken her arm. And she did hate to see Grandma go so soon. And yet—from that moment until train time she was torn by conflicting emotions. But in spite of all her better impulses she waved her last good-bye to Grandma with a sigh that could fairly be called regretful.

Afterward, having taken her father and brother back to their work, Edny drove home with her mother.

"Think I'll lay down for an hour or two," said Ma. "I'm all upset."

"Well! Do you care if I go back uptown?"

"What for, Edny?"

"Well, my library book is due, and —h, I just want to fool around—"

"You and Fannie Bell?"

"N-n'm, I was going alone."

"All right. But be at the shops at five for Pa and Claudie."

Edny did not go at once, however. Having followed her mother into the house she idled about until Ma was safe in bed. Then she walked quietly —one dislikes ot say surreptitiously— out of the house, and under her arm was the large box from Blum's.

The young woman in charge of the "ready-mades" was again alone when Edny timidly stepped out of the elevator that afternoon and asked, "Can you exchange things here?"

"Sure, dearie, if it hasn't been worn or altered."

"Then it's all right!" exclaimed Edny and eagerly helped to untie the box."

"Oh-h! That's that darling little dress I sold yesterday—honey, are you his sister? You've got the sweetest broth— But, hon, you don't mean to stand there and tell me that you don't like that!"
