THREE MEN KILLED IN MOTOR CRASH NEAR PRESCOTT

Endeavoring to pass another car at the C.P.R. overhead bridge crossing Provincial Highway No. 2, at the entrance to Wexford, one mile east of Prescott, at about 2.30 o'clock Saturday morning, a party of four Prescott young men collided with the abutment of the bridge, three of its members receiving injuries which brought about their death and the fourth being seriously hurt. The dead are:

Joseph O'Reilly, aged 24, of Prescott, driver of the car, instantly killed.

Francis Black, aged 19, Prescott, died shortly after the accident.

John Easter, aged 17, Prescott, died in St. Vincent de Paul hospital Brockville, at 7.20 o'clock of the morning following the accident.

The fourth member of the party is John Kelly, aged 21, of Domville, a patient in St. Vincent de Paul hospital, suffering from several fractures and other injuries, but expected to recover.

The party was returning from a dance held in Kemptville Friday night and were making use of the Prince of Wales highwway to Johnstown and thence to Prescott by Provincial Highway No. 2. As they approached the C.P.R. overhead bridge approximately one mile east of Prescott, they overtook a Chandler eight owned and driven by S. Brint, Toronto, and endeavored to pass it after having entered the subway, where there is just room for two cars to pass. In the narrow roadway they were unable to accomplish this feat and crashed into the north abutment, the Dodge car owned and driven by O'Reilly being demolished, while Brint's car was forced into the south abutment. Brint, however, was not injured. Dr. R. A. Patterson and Dr. C. F. McPherson, Prescott, were summoned and found upon their arrival that both O'Reilly and Black were dead. Easter was rushed to St. Vincent de Paul Hospital, suffering from severe injuries about the chest and head. He died at 7.20 o'clock. John Kelly, also in the hospital, is expected to recover.

Dr. McPherson, as coroner, opened a preliminary investigation in Prescott.

The triple funeral was held in St. Mark's Church on Tuesday morning. Requiem High Mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Carty, curate. Rev. Father Fleming, pastor, and Rev. Father Byrne, of Spencerville, were also present in the sanctuary. The edifice was filled, many being unable to gain admittance. The children and teachers of the separate schools were present in a body. Hundreds of automobiles were in the cortege. The body of Joseph O'Reilly was interred in Throoptown Catholic Cemetery, and those of Francis Black and John Easter in Prescott.

LIBERALS MEET

The meeting of the Liberal Association for the County of Dundas was held in the Hamilton Hall, Chesterville, on Tuesday afternoon, with a good representation from all parts of the County. The meeting was presided over by the President of the Association, Mr. Wesley Hamilton, Reeve of Chesterville. Several fine addresses were given, upholding the Liberal Cause, and resolutions of confidence in the King Government, and in Mr. Sinclair, leader of the Ontario Opposition, were endorsed with much enthusiasm. Two other resolutions of great importance were passed as follows.:—

Moved by J.H. Meikle, seconded by W. Hamilton.

That owing to the death of the late lamented His Honor Judge O'Reilly, there is a vacancy in the County Court Judgeship of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, the Liberal Association in the County of Dundas take pleasure in recommending W.B. Lawson, Esq., K.C., of Chesterville, Ontario, for the position made vacant as aforesaid, by reason of his eminent fitness for that position. He is a capable lawyer, a leader of the Bar of said counties, fair-minded, and very judicial, one who will hold the scale of justice in an even balance.

Carried unanimously.

The other resolution was as follows.:—

Resolved.: That this Association requests the Prime Minister of Canada, the Honorable MacKenzie King, to use his influence for the protecetion of the existing settlements and population of the County of Dundas along the St. Lawrence frontier against destruction by flooding or otherwise in connection with the proposed improvement of the St. Lawrence River for navigation and the development of power.

Resolved: That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Mr. King with a memorandum setting forth more fully the views of this Association with respect thereto.

Mr. Wesley Hamilton, Chesterville was re-elected president, and Mr. K. Helmer, Winchester, Sec'y-Treas.

WELL-MERITED PROMOTION

We are pleased to know that Mr. Merle Deeks, formerly of Morrisburg who has been assistant manager in charge of Brockville branch of Metropolitan life Insurance Co., for the past two years, has been promoted to the district office in Smiths Falls, this being the third promotion since Mr. Deeks started with the company.

On Saturday evening, the members of the staff gathered with their wives at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Deeks, Bartholomew St., Brockville, for a farewell social evening, which was pleasantly spent in games and music followed by dainty refreshments. During the evening Mr. Barkley read an address, and on behalf of the staff, Mr. Hinton presented Mr. and Mrs. Deeks with a handsome walnut chesterfield table, as a slight token of the esteem in which they are held. The recipients made suitable replies and spoke feelingly of the severance of pleasant business and social ties, occasioned by their departure from Brockville.

The address was as follows:—

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Deeks:

It is with mingled joy and sadness that we, a band of co-workers of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, meet here this evening.

First, we are pleased, because of the fact that your new field of labor is one of a larger scope and greater responsibilities, a field that needs a strong, efficient and capable assistant manager. Therefore we rejoice to know that the old Brockville section of the Smiths Falls district can produce such a man. Second, our hearts are sad to see you and your family going from our midst. It has always been a pleasure for us to work with you and to meet with you in your home in a social manner. You and your good wife have always given us a royal welcome in your home. We will miss you very much. Your kind disposition and genial manner has endeared you to us all. Our loss will be Smiths Falls' gain. We wish you and yours Godspeed, and all success in your new field of labor.

Therefore on behalf of Brockville staff, we ask you to accept this small gift as a token of our esteem for you and your valued services.

Signed on behalf of Brockville staff,

Mrs. Clement, Sec.

CONGREGATION BID FAREWELL

(Alliston Herald)

That the church work of Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Armstrong during their five years' residence in Alliston has been appreciated, was clearly evident last Monday evening when the congregation of St. Andrew's church met in the parish hall to bid them farewell and present to them as a parting gift a dark walnut mantel clock with Westminster chimes.

Advantage was taken by many who were present, of the opportunity to eulogize the honored guests in a series of speeches which were together congratulatory and reminiscent. The rector, who acted as chairman, laid stress on the fact that Mr. Armstrong, while doing much good work for the church that had been evident, had also accomplished a mountain of good deeds which the congregation had never seen. His place, said the rector, would be hard to fill.

During the social hour which followed the presentation, Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong received the personal felicitations of the members of the congregation, who also expressed their pleasure that Mr. Armstrong had received his promotion to be manager of the Bank of Montreal at Aultsville. One and all were delighted with his prospects although sorry that he was leaving.

The text of the address, read by Mr. Trueman Asaph, rector's warden, was as follows.: To Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Armstrong—With mingled feelings of regret and joy, we meet together to bid you farewell. We are sorry to lose any of our people, more especially those who have been in office and committee with every branch of the church, such as you have, but at the same time we rejoice at your promotion, which we feel is well deserved. As a member of St. Andrew's church you have always shown the deepest interest, while your untiring, willing and cheerful assistance has been deeply appreciated by the wardens. We therefore ask you to accept this token of appreciation with assurance of kind wishes from the members of St. Andrew's church. We trust that the future for yourself, Mrs. Armstong and family will be bright and prosperous, and hope some time to have the pleasure of seeing you back amongst your friends in Alliston. Signed on behalf of St. Andrew's church, the rector and church wardens.

Sunday School Lesson

May 12. Lesson VI—The Early Ministry of Jeremiah—Jeremiah 1: 6-10; 26: 8-15. Golden Text—We ought to obey God rather than men.—Acts 5: 29.

ANALYSIS.

I. TITLE OF THE BOOK AND STORY OF THE PROPHET'S CALL, ch. 1: 1-10.

II. HIS MESSAGE OF WARNING AND OF SORROW, chs. 6: 10, 11; 8: 18; 9: 2.

III. HIS SPEECH IN THE TEMPLE COURT, ch. 26: 1-24.

INTRODUCTION—Jeremiah has been called a "moral enthusiast," but that name might have been given to any of the great prophets. They were all moral enthusiasts Jeremiah has been called also, more appropriately, "the prophet of personal religion" (see Gordon—Prophets of the Old Testament). He saw perhaps more clearly than any of that age that true religion enters deeply into the minds and hearts of men and controls the whole life. To him religion and morality, religion and righteousness, were one and inseparable. It is a mistake to call him the "weeping prophet." While it is true and altogether to his credit that he could and did weep over the sins and misfortunes of the people whom he loved, it is also true that he could blaze with indigation against foul iniquities, and, shrinking and sensitive though he was, could stand like a rock of adamant for what he held to be right.

Jeremiah's prophetic ministry began in the reign of Josiah, about B.C. 626, a little more than one hundred years after Isaiah, and continued for more than forty years Like Isaiah his lot was cast in a period of great and tragic change. He saw the decline and fall of the Assyrian empire, the triumph of the rising power of Babylon, and the end of the kingdom of Judah, together with the captivity and exile of multitudes of her people and the destruction of their beloved holy city and temple. He felt most keenly the miseries of his time, and they are reflected in many passages of his book of prophecy.

I. TITLE OF THE BOOK AND STORY OF THE PROPHET'S CALL, ch. 1: 1-10.

Verses 1-3 give title and late and tell us of Jeremiah's home and parentage. Anathoth was only a short distance to the north of Jerusalem, a city of priestly families (Josh. 21: 18), to one of which eJremiah belonged. It was to Anathoth that Abiathar, the priest, the friend of David, was banished by Solomon, because he had conspired against him, 1 Kings 2: 26. We may assume, therefore, that Jeremiah was well brought up and instructed in the religion of his fathers. The thirteenth year of Josiah's reign was B.C. 626. His ministry continued until the eleventh year of Zedekiah, B.C. 586. For the contemporary history of Judah see 2 iKngs, chs. 22 to 25.

Jeremiah is presented to us as the child of destiny, known and ordained before his birth to be God's prophet unto the nations. And yet, in the fulfilment of his destiny, his own consent and obedience have a part, vs. 5, 6. Gordon (Prophets of the Old Testament) writes, "Jeremiah's call is more of the nature of a spiritual birth, in which the gracious influences of bygone years come to their fruition. As he walked through the fields of Anathoth in quiet communion with his God, the meaning and purpose of his life lay suddenly unveiled before him; and with a full sense of responsibility he accepted the divine commission, and went forth as Jehovah's prophet." At first he shrank from the task. He was young—a child—how could he speak the words of God? Then comes to him the divine commission, the encouraging assurance of the ever-present help of God, vs. 7, 8, 17-19. It is a high commission, indeed, that is given to the young prophet, to speak words of authority and of power over the nations and over the kingdoms, to break down and destroy the evil, to build and to plant the good. How faithfully and how truly he performed his task, history abundantly shows.

II. HIS MESSAGE OF WARNING AND OF SORROW, chs. 6: 10, 11; 8: 18; 9: 2.

Very faithfully and very earnestly the prophet has warned the people and urged them to turn from their evildoing into the way of righteousness. He has pointed to the Scythian hordes from the orth, which at that time were spreading themselves far and wide over the territories of the now weakened and helpless Assyrian empire, as the instruments of Jehovah's punishment. His warnings and pleadings are unheeded. Shameless iniquities are still practiced, ch. 6: 7. He breaks forth in 6: 10, 11, in furious protest. The inevitable penalty of their sins in the just judgment of God, will have to be borne both by them and their children, by husband and wife, by young men and old together. These verses show clearly the difficulties which Jeremiah had to face and the passionate intensity of his message. His heart is faint with sorrow, and there were moments when he would fain have abandoned his thankless task and sought the rest and peace of the wilderness. The whole of the passage, chs. 8; 18 to 9: 6, should be read.

III. HIS SPEECH IN THE TEMPLE COURT, ch. 26: 1-24.

This speech appear to be the same as that reported in 7: 1-7, but with the events immediately following described at length. The reign of Jehoiakim began in B.C. 608 and continued to B.C. 597. Although a son of the good king Josiah, he proved to be one of the worst and wickedest of the rulers of Judah (see 2 Kings 23: 36 to 24: 7, and Jeremiah's strong words in 22: 13-19).

Shiloh (v. 6.) had been destroyed by the Philistines in Samuel's time, after having been long recognized as a national sanctuary, 1 Sam. 4: 10-12; Psalm 78: 60; Jer. 7: 12-14. This declaration of Jeremiah aroused the anger of the assembled people, and they would have condemned him to death. The priests and the prophets accused him before the council of princes. For Jeremiah's denunciation of the evil-doing of these false ministers of religion see chs. 2: 8; 5: 30, 31; 8: 10; and 23: 13. Jeremiah's answer to the accusation was fearless and bold, and made a strong impression upon his judges (vs. 12-15). His one desire for them is expressed in his earnest exhortation, Amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God. By repentance and amendment of life the calamity which he foresees may be averted (see also vs. 3, 19 and 18: 7-8).

The words of the prophet Micah were recalled by ne member of the court (Micah 3: 12). Urijah or Uriah (v. 20) is nowhere else mentioned. Jeremiah on this occasion had staunch friends who stood by him and protected him from the king's wrath, else his fate would have been the same as that of Urijah (v. 24).

Music Competitions at Toronto Exhibition

The syllabus of the music competitions to be held at the Canadian National Exhibition, at Toronto, from August 23rd to September 7th, has been issued, and shows that this year's competitions will be on an even larger scale tha nthose of previous years.

Competitions are divided into 46 classes, not including the classes for bagpipe and harmonica and for old-time fiddlers. There are eight classes for choirs and choral societies,—three of them graded according to the population of the places from which they come. Six classes are given to quartets and duets, male, female and mixed; thirteen classes are given to vocal solos, which cover nine different kinds of voice and two classes each for boys and girls. Piano and violin solos have each four classes,—under 9 years of age, under 12, under 16 and open; there are three classes for piano duos and one for 'cello solo. In the brass department there are two classes each,—under 18 years and open, for cornet, trombone and brass quartet. There are further three classes for harmonica, one for mouth organ band and two for old time fiddlers. The bagpipe competitions are divided into three classes and the professional championship of North America will be competed for.

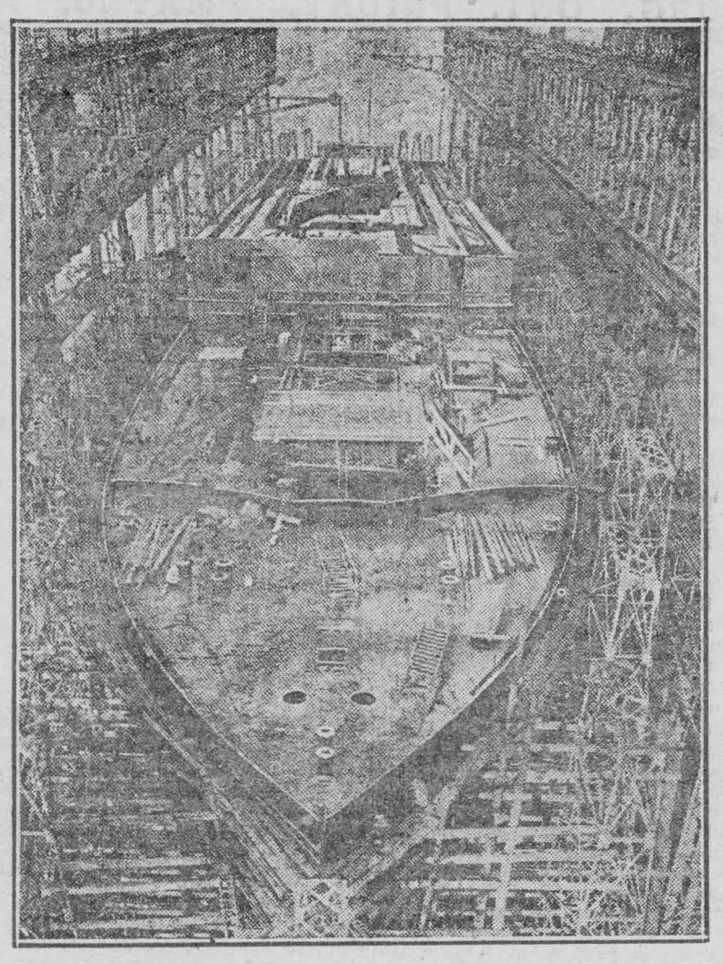

In addition to the ordinary prizes, which are medals, with a challenge shield for choir, four scholarships of $75 will be awarded,—one each for woman's voice, man's voice, piano and violin.

Every cmpetitor must be an amateur—that is, a person whose principal means of livelihood is obtained from non-musical work and who does not receive for musical services more than $150 per annum.

Information, entry forms, etc., may be got from J. S. Atkinson, 407 Ryrie Bldg., Toronto, or the Canadian National Exhibition, Lumsden Bldg., Toronto.

It was the evening after the night before. "How did you find yourself this morning?" asked one wan participator of another. "Easily," was the reply. "I just looked under the table and there I was."

NEW WHITE STAR MOTOR SHIP

The new SS. Britannic, of which the first announcement containing details of this new White Star motor ship, were received recently.

The steamer will be launched in about two months' time and will enter the Atlantic trade in the fall. Her length, between perpendiculars, will be about 680 feet, 80 feet longer than liners of the type of the Doric and Regina which are in the company's service on the St. Lawrence route during the summer season.

The Britannic will have a gross tonnage of 27,000 tons. The motive power to drive this latest motor ship will be supplied by two 10-cylinder Harland B and W double acting motors, while throughout the ship the fullest use will be made of electricity, for navigating and controlling the ship, for cooking, ventilating, and for operating the enormous amount of service machinery necessary in a ship of the size of the Britannic.

Designed to carry cabin, tourist third cabin and third class, the Britannic will have a passenger capacity of 1,500. One of the outstanding features of the passenger accommodation is the provision of a large number of single rooms.

The steamer will be used on the Liverpool-New York route, but during the winter of 1930 she will make two cruises to the Mediterranean.

PATRICK BURNS

Patrick Burns, of Calgary, outstanding figure in western range and ranch life of Western Canada for many years and founder of the great packing business which bears his name, is here seen on the steps of the Empress Hotel at Victoria, during a recent trip to the coast.

Since the war 1,230,000 new houses, with accommodation for more than 5,000,000 people, have been built in England and Wales.

A few days afterwards the reply was inserted:—"The 'recognized' gentleman who picked up a purse in the High Street requests the loser to call at his house."

Cars Do Not Run Better at Night

Research Engineer Points Out Fallacy of Popular Impression

Many motorists are under the impression that automobile engines function more efficiently in the damp of evening or rainy days than at dry times, but this idea is erroneous, Arthur W. Gardiner, research engineer, says.

Tests made under standard laboratory conditions show that engine power decreases with increasing humidity of the air, and that a large increase in spark advance is required to obtain best power at high humidity. Similarly, in damp air the spark advance for incipient detonation may be considerably increased, compared with dry air conditions.

What happens is that under conditions of high humidity the combustion rate is slowed up, resulting in apparently smoother engine operation, which the car owner is likely to mistake for improved power. In spite of this, however, water vapor is relatively ineffective in suppressing detonation.

A further indication of the influence of humidity on engine operation is the fact that approximately 8 per cent. more heat is dissipated through the radiator when the air is dry than when its relative humidity is 100 per cent.

LIMERICK CORNER

Here are a few more letters from readers, some offering suggestions, some asking that the contest be continued as before. We want a real concensus of opinion from those interested and will be glad to hear from others.

Dear "Limerick Corner" Editor:—

Will you excuse the pencil? (Baby filled the ink bottle with water).

Something urges me to answer your appeal in the "Thamesville Herald" for opinions. It sounds so "friendly like".

I for one was immensely interested in the Limerick Contest and judging by the way answers poured in upon you "there were others".—It was something definite to fill up those hours "in the stilly night" when "slumber's chain" had unloosed one for an hour or two.—Let us have more or sumpin' else by all means.

How about some real little verses—altho' it's harder thus to strike a funny vein. My failing was to be too serious even in the Limericks. I can see it now. . . . . .

There was a fine lot of jingles in this week.—Verses—any metre one wished, seems to be my only suggestion this morning—or a continuation. How about it?

Sincerely,
Mrs. Joseph M. O'Neill,
Kent Bridge, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

As I have been following your "Limerick Corner" in the "Milverton Sun" with much pleasure and some good "grins". I was wondering how the "idea" of giving a prize to the best "ad" sent in would appeal to you. Either written or drawn. Have a certain size space to work on or limited to so many words.

Yours truly,
(Miss) M. L. Bell,
Plattsville, Ont.

Editor, "Limerick Corner":—

As I sent in some Limericks some time ago and have been following the Limericks up in the paper and enjoyed them so much I would like to see them still continued. The Limericks I sent in could not have met with your approval but I did not get discouraged. Hoping to see the Limericks continued.

Yours truly,
Mrs. Wm. M. Love,

Dear Sir:—

In the "Athens Reporter", from week to week, I watch for the interesting Limericks submitted, many of which are very clever and interesting.

Hoping that this feature may be continued indefinitely, and thus develop much latent talent.

P.S.—This one is sent for fun and good measure.

Dear Sir:—

I received my limerick dollar last night and wish to thank you for it.

I am sorry to see that the contest is closed. I hope you will open it again, however as I enjoyed both reading and writing limericks. I think its a splendid way to advertise.

A Bird of the Hills

A fisherman on a moorland stream sees a black bird suddenly start up from nowhere, and, chippering a few sharp, metallic notes, fly swiftly above the water until it vanishes round a bend in the stream. If a novice in bird-lore, he probably dismisses it as a blackbird, and thinks no more about it; but a discriminating eye would note, even when on the wing, its shorter tail and stockier appearance. True, one of its country names, "water-ousel," suggests "the ousel cock so black of hue," and in Somerset both dipper and blackbird are called "colley," a good Shakespearean adjective which means "black." But the two are not very closely related, the one being a thrush, and the other a member of a distinct family, the Cinclidae. Nor is the dipper really black, for his head is a delightful tawny-brown and his back mottled grey. And a front view of him will show you that he sports a neat, white shirt-front, below which a cinnamon cummerbund, usually brighter in the male than in the female, partly encircles his lower breast.

Pennant, as appears from one of Gilbert White's letters to him, confused the dipper with the ring-ousel, but, although this bird also wears a patch of white on his throat, he is really a thrush, while the dipper is closer kin to dunnock and wren Wren-like, indeed, he is in shape, and in some of his habits; both have the trick of cocking the tail up and bobbing the body up and down, and it is this amusing trick of curtsying or "dipping" that gives the dipper his name. He resembles the wren, too, in his ceaseless activity; both are ever prying and peering, the wren in hedgerow and brake and often at the water's edge, but the dipper in and out of and under the water. . . .

My happiest memories of the dipper are linked with the swirling, tumbling streams of the moors and mountains; it is these that he loves most, and among them he is seen at his best. I saw a pair swimming and diving in the Tummel at Pitlochry on a day of dismal and continuous downpour, depressing to us, but to them supremely enjoyable. If you are as happy in or under water as out of it, it matters little what the weather may be. And there was a morning in March when snow had moulded the abrupt peaks of Capel Curig to smooth, sweeping curves; we saw no birds above the snow-line except a lonely kestrel, but there was the dipper, diving headlong off a boulder into the spate, and emerging on the opposite bank unperturbed and with every feather unruffled.

Everywhere in the hill country you find him—throughout the length of the Pennines, in the ghylls of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire, by the scars of Yorkshire, up and down the Derbyshire dales. He is at home among the mountains of Wales and in the border Marches of Herefordshire and Shropshire. The clear-eyed streams amid the Cotswolds know him also, and he adorns Mendip's limestone coombes.—E. W. Henry, in "The Nineteenth Century."

New Alphabet In Turkey Confusing

Adoption of Latin Characters Causes Worry to Natives

PHONETIC SPELLING

Names of Many Well-Known Cities Are Altered

Constantinople.—As a result Turkey's adoption of the Latin alphabet, the ability of the average Turk has fallen to a rating somewhere in the neighborhood of minus-zero on the basis of grade school classifications.

When the Government ordered all shop and office signs to be changed to new Latin letters the official spelling dictionary had not been issued. The only principle on which the people could go upon was phonetics, and the result was that many signs bear Turkish versions of English words, written in ways that would bring tears to the eyes of the last also-ran in a spelling bee.

Phonetic Spelling.

Over the door of a physician will appear a sign bearing the word "Dokdoru," or "Dogtor." Apartment was spelled variously "Apartamani" or "Apartman," while club appeared as "Kulupu" or "Glubu."

All, however, soon will be changed. The official dictionary has been issued, and Government officers are marching through all the streets in towns throughout the nation tearing down misspelled signs and instructing owners in the correct spelling.

Meanwhile, the language commissioners fixed the spelling of the names of the 64 provinces of the republic.

The chief changes are that Stamboul, the Turkish name for Constantinople, must be written Istambul; Angora becomes Ankara; Brusa becomes Burso; Trebizond turns into Trabzon; Adalia into Antalia; and Smyrna into Izmir.

Foreign names will be left in their foreign spelling except when they contain letters not in the new Turkish alphabet.

"How do you know it was a stork and not an angel that brought your little brother?" "Well, I heard daddy complaining about the size of the bill, and angels don't have bills!"

Americanization of Canada

Toronto Globe (Lib.): The Dominion of Canada would be much better off if at least 50 per cent. of the reading matter flowing in from the United States were cut out. . . Even the best of these magazines and periodicals are produced by Americans, and primarily for the people of the United States. Even when questions of general interest are dealt with, or subjects of particular importance to the British Empire discussed, the point of view is American. It is this continued Americanization of Canada that, if not offset in some way, may raise vexing and important problems in the future. If the National Council of Education can find ways and means of changing this condition it will perform a splendid public service.

A GREAT PUZZLE TO CAREFUL PARENTS

One of the greatest puzzles to the careful parent is to know just what medicine to give the little ones. When the child falls ill with griping pains; is seized with cold or fever, refuses food or vomits what he has taken, when he cries a great deal and cannot get the sleep so necessary to the growing child, the parent is in a quandry. What is to be done on such occasions? As often as not there is not a suitable medicine in the house. The puzzle is what to give him to set him right quickly.

It is to meet such emergencies that Baby's Own Tablets were designed. These pleasant little Tablets quickly reduce fever, break up colds, relieve constipation and indigestion and allay teething pains. They quiet the nerves and promote restful health-restoring sleep. They are guaranteed absolutely harmless and safe for even the youngest and most delicate baby.

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Duke of Norfolk Assumes Estate

Heir of the Howards on Coming of Age Take His Place as Premier Duke of England

With the coming of age on May 3 of the Duke of Norfolk, who is the Premier Duke and Earl of England, a gleam from a historic past is shed on the life of to-day. The titles of the sixteenth Duke of Norfolk and the family name, Howard, recall a thousand years of British history. A youth of 21 is Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Arundel, Surrey and Norfolk, Baron Fitzalan, Clun, Oswaldestre and Maltravers, Earl Marshal and Hereditary Marshal of England, Premier Duke and Premier Earl of England. Besides, he is chief heir to "the blood of all the Howards."

The young Duke has held his titles since 1927. Being a minor, however, he could not assume legal control of his vast properties, landed and personal. His age would have prevented him, also, from exercising the chief duties of an Earl Marshal, if fate had brought a new King to the throne of England. First among the duties of an Earl Marshal are those pertaining to the direction of a coronation, with all its traditional and colorful ceremonies. The father of the present Duke was Earl Marshal at the coronations of King Edward VII and King George V. Had the Prince of Wales ascended the throne during the minority of the young Duke, his uncle, Viscount Fitzalan, would have officiated as Earl Marshal.

According to Burke's Peerage, the "ducal and illustrious Howards" (of whom the Duke of Norfolk is chief) "stand, next to the blood royal, at the head of the peerage of England." It is said that the first Howard (or Hereward) of note lived in the reign of King Edgar, a century before the Norman Conquest. For centuries the Howards have played prominent parts in the drama of English history. They have fought in all wars from the Wars of the Roses to the World War, and have distinguished themselves in the Church, in statecraft, in art, in literature and in science. They have been Dukes of Norfolk since 1483. Sir Esme Howard, a kinsman of the Duke, is now British Ambassador to the United States.

The late and fifteenth Duke served in the South African War, and was also Postmaster-General of England. By his first marriage he had a son, who bore the courtesy title of Earl of Arundel and Surrey and who died unmarried. The Duke later married the Baroness Herries, holder of one of the few titles in the British peerage which are heritable in the female line. If she dies before her son, the Duke, her title will be merged with those of the Dukedom.

"How much should mothers tell their daughters?" asks a preacher. Not much, say we, if they don't want to display their ignorance.—Border Cities Star.

Wouldn't it have been great had we but known in time that all that was needed to win the World War was the right brand of cigarettes?—Marion Star.

Australian Development

London Financial News: The annual value of the output of Australian factories amounts to about £400,000,000. But, though certain idealists aim at the clouds of making Australia entirely self-contained, the majority of the people realize that the great undeveloped rural and mineral resources are a menace to Australia's territorial integrity. And, however keen some people may be to develop their secondary industries (out of a sense of national pride of good economy), agricultural and pastoral expansion must remain their primary consideration, until the Commonwealth has a population sufficiently large to ensure her strategic safety.

The "I'm Alone"

Halifax Herald (Cons.): The simple truth, of course, is that this is a British affair; that despite all the vocalizing of the "extreme autonomists," it would be monstrous to suggest anything else. The "extreme autonomists" may "play at counsellors and kings" in the press, on the hustings and on the floors of Parliament, but when a ship of British registry (for Canada is British) is sunk by shell-fire, it becomes the business of British statesmanship and British diplomacy.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation, or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

Indigestion

What most people call indigestion is usually excess acid in the stomach. The food has soured. The instant remedy is an alkali which neutralizes acids. But don't use crude helps. Use what your doctor would advise.

The best help is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. For the 50 years since its invention it has remained standard with physicians. You will find nothing else so quick in its effect, so harmless, so efficient.

One tasteless spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in acid. The results are immediate, with no bad after effects. Once you learn this fact, you will never deal with excess acid in the crude ways. Go learn—now—why this method is supreme.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

The Council adjourned to meet again in Froats Hall, Village of Williamsburg on Saturday June 1st 1929 at 10 oclock A.M. as a Court of Revision on Assessment Roll and other business.

M. S. BECKSTEAD, Clerk.

MRS. WILLIAM BARKLEY

One mile east of Elma, and near Spruce Grove, there passed away to her heavenly home Roetta Utman, beloved wife of Mr. William Barkley, in her seventy-seventh year.

Mrs Barkley was the eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Utman of Dunbar.

She had been in failing health, but to a greater degree since the New Year. She was aware that she could never be well again in this world, and was quite happy and content to resign to the will of God, bidding farewell to friends and acquaintances who came to see her. She planned her own funeral, chose the hymns she wished to have sung, asked some of her friends to sing the hymns, of which she thought so much, all of which was done just as she requested. She passed away on Sunday evening, April 21st, with all her very near ones by her side.

She leaves to mourn her loss her aged husband, one daughter, Miss Lucy A. Barkley of Winchester, Ont. and two sons, Alva on the home place and Mackenzie on an adjoining farm, and one sister, Mrs. Martha Miller of Dunbar. One aged aunt, Mrs. C. S. Barkley of Madrid, N.Y., the only remaining sister of her father, also survives.

The deceased was a member of St. Lukes Evangelical Lutheran Church, Dunbar, where her forefathers all worshipped before her. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, April 23rd, her pastor, Rev. Mr. Cronmiller, of Williamsburg, taking for his text the 9th verse of the 6th chapter of 2nd, Corinthians. Mr. M. A. Barkley of Morrisburg, and his son, Mr. G. F. Barkley, of Elma, and Mrs. G. F. Barkley, and Mrs. Clifford McIntosh of Williamsburg sang very sweetly the hymn best loved by deceased, "Going Down the Valley". Mr. G. W. Brooks of Chesterville sang a solo, as Mrs. Barkley had requested. The choir sang "Asleep in Jesus", a hymn spoken of several times by deceased. Her casket was covered with beautiful flowers from near and dear ones.

The pallbearers were named by the deceased: Mr. W. Barkley and Mr. W. McKenzie of Spruce Grove, Mr. W. A. McMillan and Mr. I.N. Dillabough of Elma.

She was laid to rest in Williamsburg cemetery near her parents, where she awaits the Resurrection Morn.

NO HEAT IS LOST

It Must Go UP!

HERE'S a point to remember: When you buy a Happy Thought Electric you give your kitchen a range that cooks in the most economical way possible. The elements (burners) are provided with "KEISELGUHR" insulation which throws the heat up to the cooking surface. There is no leakage of the heat into the lower parts of the range.

The Happy Thought Electric simply teems with important features like this. We wish you could see how the elements (two open and two closed) have been arranged on the cooking top for your convenience.

If you were to inspect the spotless, roomy oven, you would say to yourself, "Here's an oven that would give real satisfaction." The beautiful enamel finish and boltless construction of the range make it so easy to keep clean.

The range can be supplied with WILCOLATOR OVEN HEAT CONTROL if desired, at slightly higher price.

Inspect the new Happy Thought Electric at local headquarters, or write Happy Thought Foundry, Co., Limited, Brantford, for full information.

THE RECORD BREAKING NEW NASH "400"

A Great Sales Swing to Nash

The leadership of the new Nash "400" in quality and value is asserting itself in rapidly growing sales leadership.

Offering a group of outstanding new advancements possessed by no other car—completely equipped at the factory except for spare tire, the new Nash "400" models are winning a welcome from buyers that is emphatically reflected in the monthly sales gains pictured above.

To know how far the new Nash "400" surpasses any other car of similar price, you must learn for yourself all the advantages of Twin Ignition—22% more power than from the same motor with single ignition, 5 miles per hour more speed, and 2 extra miles from every gallon of gasoline.

You must experience the pleasure of turning and parking the Nash "400"—the world's easiest steering car.

You must learn the simplicity, certainty and economy of Nash-Bijur centralized chassis lubrication.

And finally, you must compare the delivered prices of Nash "400" models with other makes in the same field.

You will be amazed to find how much more other cars have added to the factory price before quoting a delivered price to you. Right here Nash will often save you from $50 to $150.

The New NASH "400"

Leads the World in Motor Car Value

"It is so nice of you to come here, Miss Ethel. Mrs. Cullen will be so pleased when she hears of it." Mrs. Wain always spoke as though Agnes was certain to return. "I was wondering yesterday if this might mean you were soon to arrive."

"This" was a letter which the housekeeper was offering—a square, firm, well-filled envelope with British stamps and with the British strip, "Opened by the Censor." The address was written in bold, vigorous handwriting which Ethel observed with a start.

The letter was from Barney's friend of the Canadian battalion who had written Barney of her father's attempt to speak to him, who had told Barney to hasten to Resurrection Rock and had foretold that he would find some one named Bagley and another person named Carew there. The letter read:

My dear Ethel Carew:

I am addressing you without the usual prefix of Miss or Mrs. because I do not know which to use.

I am writing you to report the substance of a communication meant for you and which was received from a person who is dead.

This afternoon, when sitting with Mrs. Brand, Philip Carew once more was present and wished to speak. Perhaps because it was earlier in the sitting and the medium was not tired, I received several perfectly clear and coherent messages. What I had done in regard to Barney Loutrelle was wrong. When I asked how wrong, I received the reply, "Not so much wrong as incomplete."

I then asked what I should do to make it complete; and I got the reply:

"It is no use, really, at all. Earlier it seemed so; but not now. It is no use without Quinlan."

When I asked for Quinlan's whole name and address and who "she" was, I got the reply, somewhat impatiently, "James, of course; James Quinlan, Chicago." And he said that "she" was Ethel Carew and requested me to write her at once all about it. I will quote this verbatim since, though it was meaningless to me, it was clearly, most important:

"See Quinlan and tell him not only I but Robert, who is here beside me, says to do it. That is the only way, and he will be happy when it is over. It must be done. Tell him the cost there is nothing."

Very sincerely,
HUSTON ADLEY.

CHAPTER X.

Bennet Cullen, oldest son of Lucas Cullen, Junior, was a hearty young man who considered that whenever he had something particularly difficult to do with anybody, it always made matters easier to give that person a good dinner; and in his cousin "Eth" he found he had an obstinate proposition.

The big room in the Blackstone was clearing as groups departed for the opera; the nearest tables all were deserted. Bennet paid his cheque and lit a cigaret; he leaned easily upon the table.

"Do you know any one named Quinlan?" she asked.

"Old Jim Quinlan? Surely. Father used to have him about the south side yards for old time's sake."

"Why?"

"He was with grandfather years ago."

"Oh; was there some one connected with him named Robert?" Ethel asked.

"Bob Quinlan? He was his grandson."

"Was," Ethel repeated. "He's dead?"

"Shot down in flames near Cambrai, he was," Bennet said. "He got into aviation as observer and machine gunner. Old Jim—I hear he went sort of nutty not long afterward. It seemed that Bob was all he had left. Lost most of the rest of his family in disasters, some one said; then the war took Bob."

"How long ago was he associated with grandfather?" Ethel returned. "Where was it?"

"Why, back in the old pine days," Bennet replied impatiently. "Old Jim was head sawyer of one of grandfather's mills. Lost his fingers then; has only half his fingers on his right hand. Why?"

"I came back here because—" Ethel began, looking steadily at her cousin. "The trouble I had with grandfather at St. Florentin, Ben," she made another start, "was over a man whom Kincheloe killed on Resurrection Rock."

"Killed a man?" her cousin was repeating in a whisper, looking about swiftly and then bending further across the table.

"You mean—murdered him?"

"Oh, Ben, I odn't know; but I'm afraid so!"

"What—what the devil—" Bennet scolded. He glanced about and shifted his feet as though to rise.

"Give me all of this," he commanded. "Straight."

So she told his quietly and without passion as "straight" as she could.

"You say you accused grandfather," he assailed her hotly, when she had finished, "of killing this Loutrelle pick-up of yours!"

"That's true. I said I was mistaken. It wasn't Barney; it was—"

"You—you fool," he said to her in pitying disgust. "You little fool."

She sat back, quite white and quivering under the constraint of controlling herself against Bennet's anger.

* * * * *

Before writing to Barney that night, Ethel reread the letter from Huston Adley. Her immediate course of action had become quite plain to her; yet she reconsidered thoughtfully before recording her purpose.

"My dear Mr. Loutrelle," she addressed Barney. "Last night I had a remarkable experience—" and she detailed how she had confirmed, through her cousin, the existence of James Quinlan and Robert and the history of James Quinlan's associations with her grandfather and his recent disappearance.

"Before I met you and you told me of your experience with the Philip Carew who wished to speak with you, and before this letter about my father came to me, I might have visited a medium without thinking so much about what I was doing.

"I want to be very sure that, when I try, it will be through some fitting person—that nothing about my approach to him will degrade him or lead me into danger of offending or losing or every misunderstanding him. For that reason I would be very glad if you could write me whatever you think will help me; you know how little I know about these matters; and I do not know whom to approach here. It would be far better for me if you could happen to be here. Oh, I am not asking that. But if you find we've nothing more to gain by remaining near the Rock, come down here and I'll wait for you.

Your friend,
ETHEL CAREW."

She was a little quivery as she undressed and made ready for bed. It was difficult, when living among the articles chosen and arranged by Agnes and so expressive of her tireless vitality, to believe that she could have been completely obliterated.

There was a large, flat package from London, tied with cord and stamped with English postage; the censor had opened it, sealed it again and sent it on. The paper bore the legend, "photographs."

She found three photographs, all identical, of a group of young men in uniform who appeared to be officers of the Canadian and of the American armies. The faces were all strange to Ethel until, with a start which stopped the beat of her heart, she recognized Barney Loutrelle. In each of the prints his identity was unmistakable.

Her Uncle Lucas called early the next morning to ask what she was doing about her business matters. When she said that she had failed to obtain help, he told her he had decided to "protect" her interests in the projects under way.

That afternoon she received a letter from Barney in which he reported that upon his return to the Rock he had found affairs just as she had left them.

"I have seen no one from St. Florentin," Barney continued. "But I think that Kincheloe has got out. I have found an Indian who saw a stranger about here three days ago who, I think, is the fellow that slept in that shack opposite Rest Cabin, Miss Carew. From what I can make out from Ozibee, he was an old man who seemed a bit off his head from exposure, perhaps. Anyway he seemed wholly purposeless and harmless, and I think we were wrong in connecting him up with our affair. I couldn't obtain any better description of him than that he was tall and gray-haired and wore a short mitten on his right hand as the ends of his fingers were off."

This determined Ethel to telegraph Barney to come at once to Chicago. But before him, two others took the train from Quesnel for Chicago—Lucas Cullen, Senior, and his wife. And upon the day of their arrival, the first news confirming the assumption of Agnes's death reached the city.

It came to Lucas Cullen, Junior, in a communication not dissimilar to that letter which had awaited Ethel at Scott street; but Lucas's letter, instead of being from an unknown person, was from an English peer of international reputation for his work in sciences. He wrote to report a message which he had received from the other world which stated that "Agnes Cullen," having become cognizant, in the next existence, that uncertainty as to her death was causing confusion in this world, wished it known positively that she was dead.

CHAPTER XI.

Lucas Cullen, Senior, received information of this extraordinary bit of intelligence soon after his arrival at his son's home.

"What are you considering doing?" his son inquired.

Lucas laughed as he liked to laugh when planning a shrewd and clever coup. "Hale Sir Horace Clebourne into court, of course, to swear for us that Oliver's wife is dead! Then when we have our English ruling, we'll carry it into our courts on the verity—is that a good, legal-sounding word, Luke?"

"I think it will do," Luke said.

"On the verity of the death of our dear Agnes, as already presumed by the court—but not proved. So we prove it; witness, Agnes herself; testimony taken and sworn to by Sir Horace Clebourne, Doctor of Science, Baronet and the rest; sworn to by the best brains of England. We'll get 'em. I know it's new, son—it's new; but the old man never had to wait for some one else to show how to do a thing."

Three Parties Finally Declare Against Pacts

Why Conservative. Liberal Labor Supporters Cannot and Will Not Come to Any Arrangement with Each Other Before the Election

"During the week there has been a good deal of talk about a Conservative pre-election pact with the Liberals. We deprecate this talk for the simple reason that the thing is outside the bounds of possibilit.

"Let us consider the facts. Mr. Baldwin is the man who took the initiative in breaking his party away from the Coalition under Mr. Lloyd George; he holds his position as Prime Minister and head of his party in virtue of that action. Is it proposed that this man shall now go cap in hand to the ex-Coalition Premier and ask him for quarter? Plainly the thing is impossible on this ground alone.

"Even were he willing, Mr. Lloyd George would not be. Add to this that the camps are already pitched, most of the candidates chosen, and the battle virtually joined, and the impossibility of th eidea is finally demonstrated. This being so, the less said about it the better, for it is likely to have a bad effect on the moral and prospects of Conservatives by creating the impression that they cannot, and that they themselves think they cannot, win the election on their own merits."—Saturday Review (London).

"The political strategists are busy in giving lavish and contradictory advice to the party at present in power," says the Times (London).

"One school of thought urges them to be uncompromisingly truculent; the other beseeches them to seek allies almost at any cost.

"Yet both these extreme counsels seem to be based on very questionable assumptions. It is really not necessary for them to accept as inevitable either complete victory or utter defeat; nor to ask the Liberal Party, because it has upset the traditional two-party system, either to commit suicide or to become the dictator of national policy.

"Bravado and despair alike forget that, although the Liberal leaders may, with some difficulty, agree upon a distinct Liberal policy, it is by no means certain that its appeal will induce the mass of Liberal voters to vote for Liberal candidates. It is still conceivable, at all events, that the experience of the last election, when large numbers of Lberals refused to waste their votes on forlorn chances, will be repeated; and it is at least premature to ask the Conservative Party to settle its strategy before the publication of the full details of its program.

"The mistaken assumption of the advocates of truculence is that the Liberal vote is not worth considering; but at least equally mistaken is the assumption of the advocates of compromise that all Liberals are more horrified at Socialism than at Conservatism. The truth is that the Liberal Part is very sharply divided into a Right and Left wing, and that, although the former is liable to swoop towards Conservatism, the latter, which is probably also the stronger, is not averse to a flight towards Socialism."

A Liberal Retort

"Your correspondents," writes Professor Ramsay Muir in a letter to the Times, "waste their time and your space in discussing the possibility of an arrangement between the Conservatives and the Liberals for the next election. The Liberal Party would commit suicide if it contemplated any such arrangement, as certainl, as if it were to make a similar arrangement with the Labor Party. Even if the party leaders were to agree (and there is no suggestion that any of them would do so), the rank and file would not follow them.

"Some Conservatives seem to fear that the electoral gamble may give a Parliamentary majority to the Socialists, who are certainly in a minority in the country. They could have made this impossible by a reasonable measure of electoral reform, while they had the power. They threw away this opportunity. Perhaps they will be wiser next time. But they need not fear.

"The revived strength of the Liberal Party ensures the country against a Socialist majority in Parliament based upon a minority in the country; just as it ensures the country against a continuance of minority government by the Conservatives, who were in a minority of votes even in 1924. In short, the Liberal Party is the main safeguard against minority government."

"No one in his senses imagines the Conservative Party could or should make any advances," says the Sunday Times. "The majority of the candidates on both sides are already chosen; few of them would be willing to retire. They are already busy vilifying one another's policies in the constituencies; are they at a given signal to desist, withdraw their accusations, and shake hands as though they had always been in agreement? The electorate would be very quick, we may be sure, to see through so palpable a fraud."

"What possible political morality could attach to a Conservative-Liberal coalition?" also asks the Yorkshire Post. "What answer could be made to the instant claim of the Socialists that they represent the only united, consistent, and politically honest force in the field?"

"What temptation could there be," is the point made by the Daily Chronicle, "for Liberals to mislead the country and misrepresent themselves by joining hands with either of their rivals in the fight that is almost on us? Who that commands a hearing in their ranks would yield to such an unbelievable folly?

"No leader—of that we feel certain; and if any conceivable chance shaped such an opinion, the wind that blows through the party would simply blow it away. Shakespeare's old advice in 'Hamlet'—'To thine own self be true'—is no bad slogan for a party which knows its own mind; and upon the most vital issues of to-day—not least, upon that of unemployment—the Liberal party, thanks to years of unsparing uphill work, has won more of that precious knowledge than any other."

Finally, the Labor Party will have nothing to do with pacts, for the Daily Herald says:—

"If the Labor Party enters the coming fight with the belief that it is not going to win, it will indubitably lose. And one of the best ways of ensuring a partial, instead of a complete, victory spirit is to blether about pacts with the Liberals, or with any other opposing party. The right way to go to work is to stand four-square, without fuss or doubt, against all-comers, and to go all out for a majority over all.

"Harping on hypothetical contingencies, which may not, and, given the right will, need nt arise, is ill-preparation for the greatest political struggle in this country's history."

"Suggestions are made," said Sir Herbert Samuel, "in the press from time to time that we should arrive at some accommodation with one or other of the opposing parties, and that some mutual arrangement should be made to withdraw candidates sometimes. The suggestion is made for an arrangement with Labor and sometimes with Conservatives. The Liberal party has not for a moment contemplated any such understanding. As chairman of the Liberal party organization I say categorically that the party has not made and will not make any such compact with either of its opponents."

A Conservaitve Rejoinder

Mr. Neville Chamberlain, on the same day, was equally emphatic. He stated:—

"There are some who suggest that the Conservative party would do well to enter one of these new combinations. To my mind that would be a policy of cowarice and futility—cowardice because it suggests that we should try to save our skins by sacrificing our principles.

"I speak for myself, but I have no hesitation in saying that not even the pleasure of sitting alongside Mr. Lloyd George in the Cabinet would induce me to support him in putting into operation ideas which I am convinced are utterly impracticable, and, if embarked upon, would involve the country in inevitable disaster."

"You must see I love you. Don't I spend all my time with you?"

"Yes, you're a regular spendthrift—with your time."

Just Early Chick for Next House

Miss Jennie Lee at Home Making Her Maiden Speech

London—Miss Jenny Lee, 24-year-old Labor member of Parliament made her maiden speech in the House of Commons recently and twitted David Grenfell, Labor member from Glamorgan, who is 59, for his "umitigated praise of the budget." She had no praise for it herself.

Miss Lee said the women of the North consider the remission of the tea tax, announced by Winston Churchill in his budget speech, as overdue and merely "a penny thrown to the voters." Miss Lee modestly referred to herself as "the chick of the next Parliament, precipitately hatched."

The Socialist Party

London Times (Ind.): The Independent Labor Party serves at least one useful and honest purpose. Socialist to the core, it has no tolerance of inconsistency or excuses for the recusant who shrinks from avowing the full purpose of Socialism and accepting the consequences. It refuses to turn aside into the byways of Liberalism with certain more easygoing members of the Labor Party. Incensed by every appearance of timidity in those who avow the Socialist creed, it has undetraken the functions of a conscience as well as of a brain to the Labor Party.

Afghan Bandit Monarch Cries For Blood of "Infidel" Enemies

Peshawar, India—A Moslem bandit King, who raised himself to the throne of Afghanistan last winter, cried for the blood of his "infidel" enemies recently as the spring war beyond the Khyber Pass approached a critical stage.

Bacha Sakao, former water carrier and erstwhile brigand, issued a proclamation at Kabul, Afghan capital, offering 40,000 rupees and one gun for the head of Nadir Khan, his outstanding military foe. The same price was offered for the capture of Nadhir Khan. Stirred to high indignation by the "westernization" of his foes, the bandit King charged Nadir and his brothers with the murder of the late Amir, father of former King Amanullah. Amanullah was forced to abdicate by the advance of Bacha Sakao's army. Nadir Khan once was the chief lieutenant of Amanullah.

Bacha Sakao said the "murderers" had migrated to "the infidel land of France."

"I," he continued, "being Amir, took mercy and allowed them to return but because, while in Europe, they partook of ham and bacon, which permeates their blood vessels, they rose against me and instigated the people to rebel.

"Therefore I consider it lawful to take their blood."

As an afterthought, the King added a reward of 30,000 rupees and a gun for capture of each of Nadir Khan's brothers.

Hon. David Tennant To Operate Ranch

Ottawa, Ont.—Hon. David Tennant, nephew of the late Earl of Oxford and Asquith, arrived unheralded in the capital recently and confided to newspapermen that the chief object of his mission was to establish business affiliations in Canada. He stated, however, that he had not yet decided upon the exact nature or scope of these affiliations.

Questioned further, Mr. Tennant admitted that during his stay in the Dominion he would look over some of the ranches in Western Canada with the ultimate prospect of probably becoming a Canadian landowner. He did not desire to operate a ranch for profit, but rather as he put it, "to own it just for the pleasure of being a rancher."

The I'm Alone Case

Canada's national dignity is worthily upheld in the correspondence with the United States over the sinking of the I'm Alone. The terms of the Canadian protest are courteous but firm. . The attitude. of the. United States is equally friendly, but the two governments are so far apart in their conclusions that arbitration is the only possible way out of the impasse. There are two main points at issue—the speed capacity of the sunken schooner and the right of the American coastguard to pursue the ship two hundred miles out to sea and then sink her.

The Canadian Minister has stated the matter very fairly and clearly. He makes a special point of the fact that the deliberate sinking of the schooner afforded proof of punitive intent. The American Note in reply merely said the sea was running so high at the time that boarding was impossible. It failed to make any comment in regard to the putting of the lives of the entire crew in deadly jeopardy in such a case.

The matter wil lnow go to arbitration. A board of three, one representing Canada, another the United States and the third, neutral, chosen by these two, will discuss the matter and issue their decision in due course. In the meantime the pcblic will suspend judgment in so far as the merits of the case are concerned. If out of this arbitration there emerges a clear and incontrovertible interpretation of the present confusing rules and regulations in regard to pursuit at sea, then the case may well turn out to have been a beneficial event to the world.—Montreal Star (Cons.).

Britain, the World's Air Centre

London Daily Express (Ind. Cons.): Only a decade or two hence and airplanes and airships may be leaving British ports for all quarters of the Empire and of the world as regularly as steamers do now. From coach to railway, from sailing ship to the steam and oil-driven leviathans of to-day, from the horse to the car, from the balloon to the airplane, the great job of annihilating time and space goes on. And at each new step, in each successive phase, British inventiveness, British engineering, and British pluck are to the fore. In the air as on the waters Nature has marked us down as the centre of the world.

"One cannot but regard this statement as referring to the threatened tariff-raising policy across the border."

Italy's Dictator Shows Difference

Mussolini On British and Italian Conditions

"Why should you apply your British standards and ideas to Italian conditions?" says Signor Mussolini in an interview with Professor Charles Sarolea, recorded in the English Review. "After all, we in Italy must be allowed to have our own standards and methods, because we have our own traditions and our own difficulties. You have a Parliamentary system which is the outcome of your own experience, and which is the growth of many centuries.

"Our Parliamentary system was a foreign importation; it was the growth of one generation and it had struck no roots in our soil. You are one of the oldest of European States; we are the youngest. You have achieved your national unity in a distant past. Italy within the memory of men still living was a conglomerate of heterogeneous communities, where city was pitted against city, province against province, and the foreigner was master of the situation.

"You have built up a world-wide empire and a world-embracing trade and industry. Our industries are of yesterday, and our raw materials—coal and iron—have all to be imported from abroad.

"Yours is a tradition of law and order. Ours has been a tradition of revolution and aranchy, of secret societies and conspiracies. We are inveterate individualistis. Until the advent of Fascism we felt no loyalty to the State. The main task of Fascism was therefore to inculcate that sense of discipline and loyalty which are the conditions of a peaceful and prosperous corporate life.

"From the school upwards we are teaching every little boy or girl who is donning the 'black shirt', who is giving the symbolical Roman salute, the value of obedience and public service. We make them forget sect and class and party, and we make them realize that they only exist in and through the State."

Money the Peacemaker

Manchester Guardian (Lib.): (American foreign investments, which now exceed $15,000,000,000, are increasing at the rate of $1,000,000,000 to $3,500,000,000 a year.) American capital is a power in every contingent, and in almost every country throughout the world. So much the better. There is much talk about ourselves, indeed al Europe, becoming an "American colony." But if everybody became everybody else's colony (after all, the United States are not the only exporters of capital and, in South America, for example, they are still far behind Great Britain) the peace of the world would be secure.

The Women's Vote

London Daily News and Westminster (Lib.): Women are talking politic sin the factory, the workshop and the office; and they are not talking politics on stereotyped lines. They are eager, direct and resolute. They know precisely what things they want done, and why they want them done. They present, in fact, an unfamiliar and formidable pheonmenon to the average candidate in all political parties. And woe betide the candidate who, through ignorance or levity or stupidity, falls foul of the phenomenon!

The Investment of Capital Abroad

London Times Trade Supplement: This country has probably less to fear from the investment of American capital abroad than from the attraction of gold to the United States. So long as the speculative fever rages in America and money commands higher rates than here, so long will it be necessary to take steps to prevent the export of gold by financial measures which check commercial enterprise, and the chief cause of anxiety in this country in regard to America is her failure to control wild speculation.

Canadians Mark Long Peace With United States

British Empire Club Honors Good Relations Between Neighbor Nations

Providence, R.I.—That the time will never come when disputes between the United States and Canada will be settled other than peaceably, was the sentiment pervading the recent meeting of the British Empire Club here.

Hance J. Logan, K.C., of Amherst, Nova Scotia, said that, regardless of what differences of opinion Canada and the United States might have regarding such affairs as the "I'm Alone" and the recent discussion on tariff schedules, both nations are, above everything else, desirous of peace.

"Between the two countries," Mr. Logan said, "have arisen many acute differences of opinion. These have been connected with boundary disputes, with fishing rights and interpretation of treaties. Angry words have been spoken on both sides of the line, partiularly in election campaigns, but when the smoke of election battle blows away, judicial arbitration takes the place of the arbitrament of war. We settle our differences as Christian neighbors occupying adjoining farms."

Londoners Mark Founding of Press

First Successful Daily, Started in 1702, Honored in Fleet Street

London—The London press has just been marking the 227th anniversary of the city's first successful daily newspaper. It was named the Daily Courant, and described itself as published by E. Mallet "against the Ditch at Fleet Bridge." Seven years earlier, in 1695, the Postboy had been started as a daily paper, but only four numbers appeared.

The Daily Courant did not mark the foundations of the newspaper industry in Britain—that honor goes to the Weekly News, produced by Nathaniel Butler in 1665.

The Daily Courant consisted of a single page of two columns and professed to give only foreign news. It assured its readers that it would not give any comments of its own "supposing other people to have sense enough to make reflections for themselves."

London's first daily newspaper came to an end in 1735 when it was absorbed in the Daily Gazeteer.

Accused of wearing too thin skirts,
Sis stands against the sun;
Now, any dub can see through this
There's really only one.

First India Air Mail Arrives at Croydon

London—The first India-England air mail plane arrived at Croydon on April 14, two mintes ahead of schedule The air liner carried five passengers and 500 pounds of mail, and negotiated the 5000 miles from Karachi in seven days.

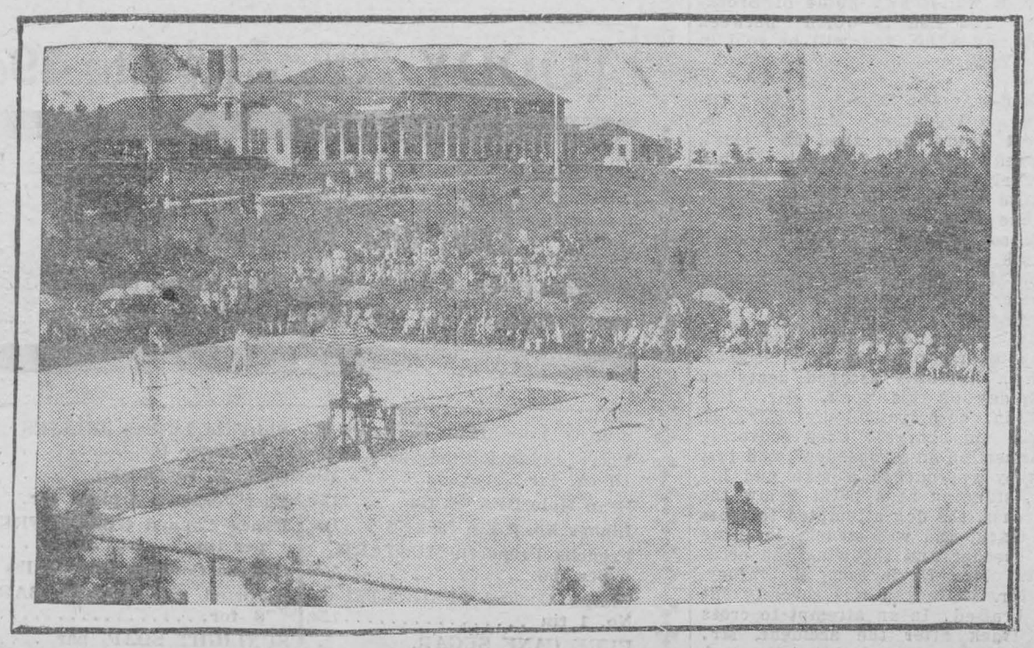

One of the passengers was Vice-Marshal Sir Vieil Vivian, who left Croydon on March 30 on the inaugural air mail trip to India, arriving at Karachi on April 6. He departed on the return flight within 24 hours, having thus covered 10,000 miles in 14½ days.

To India in a Week

London Observer (Ind.): The Air Mail Service to India has begun. Its first cargo of letters left Croydon yesterday, March 30, an dis due at Karachi next Saturday, April 6. . . . It is in the air that we must seek the new sinews of Empire. Beyond those of every other Power, our resources are diffused, and we can hold our place only by employing all the aid that science offers to knit them closer. The Air Mail habit must be fostered by all that authority can do to make the world familiar with its opportunities, and by readiness for instant expansion to accommodate its growth.

Happy marriages usually result when love is mixed with a little common sense.

After an intensive search since Thursday March 21st, Barbara Pitcher, missing McGill student, was found in the Back River, near the Sacred Heart convent at Sault au Recollet, Tuesday morning, May 2nd. Workmen also found the body of a man at the same spot. No significance, however, is attached to this fact. The body of the missing co-ed was found floating in the river by employes of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Co., who were working nearby. The body of Miss Pitcher gave every indication of having been in the water for some time—probably since the day she was missing—and showed no marks of violence.

Mr. Robt. McKeegan, assistant signal operator on the local section, C.N.R., narrowly escaped death on Thursday of this week. Mr. McKeegan, accompanied by Mr. E. Davis, (in charge), were covering their section on a "speeder", and just as they approached a man and his dog, standing at a point below the churches, the dog attempted to cross the track, and was struck, derailing the speeder and throwing the occupants. Mr. Davis escaped injury, but Mr. McKeegan was severely cut and bruised. In an attempt to cross the track after the accident, Mr. McKeegan collapsed from the effects of his wounds, and as the west bound fast train was by this time approaching, he had to be carried to safety by the other two men. It is reported that Mr. McKeegan will probably be confined to his room for several weeks.

STOP! LOOK! LISTEN!
AND WHAT DO YOU SEE?

You will see only what comes within the range of your vision. If your eyesight is defective that range may be reduced to such a dangerous limit that the CROSSING SAFETY SIGNAL may convey no message to you. All because you cannot see it quick enough.

Defective eyesight is responsible for many of the ills of humanity—many of the accidents of today could be avoided if the eyes were performing their proper function.

Insure your own safety by having your eyes examined by a competent Optometrist who is properly equipped to do this work. Modern methods of eye examination leave nothing to guess work; and it does not pay to guess where the vision is at stake.

Your eyesight is your most precious gift—protect it and it will protect you.

McLAUGHLIN BUICK

"In power, ease of driving, and flexibility, the new McLaughlin-Buick outperforms any car I have ever driven." (name on request)

THE owner quoted above has been driving automobiles for 15 years, and has an intimate knowledge of motor car performance and value. Yet his enthusiastic comment merely typifies that of thousands who have turned to McLaughlin-Buick after making their own exacting tests.

Not only have motorists in all parts of the country accepted McLaughlin-Buick's invitation to get behind the wheel and get the facts about McLaughlin-Buick performance . . . but they have entered orders for more than twice as many McLaughlin-Buicks as any other car at or above its price.

Be sure to drive a McLaughlin-Buick! Try it in traffic—on the straightaway—up the steepest hills. The more thorough your tests, the more careful your comparisons—the more inevitably will they lead you to McLaughlin-Buick! M4-5-29C
