Mrs. P. Allison brought a message from the Temperance department and Mrs. James Smith gave a paper "How to Obtain Our Objectives." A very pleasing feature of the programme was a vocal solo, "Thank God for a Garden," rendered by Miss A. Campderros, accompanist, Mrs. G. Reaburn.

A most interesting and instructive glimpse of the work in the home and foreign fields was included in the study period. Mrs. Dixon was in charge and assisting were Mesdames Johnston, Cross, Fulton, Barkley and Tait.

Shay-Beckstead

Miss Alice D. Beckstead Wed to Mr. Stanley J. Shay on Tuesday at High Noon.

On Tuesday, at high noon, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon E. Beckstead was the scene of a very pretty wedding when their younger daughter, Alice Dorothea, was united in marriage to Mr. Stanley John Shay, elder son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Shay of Chesterville. Only immediate relatives of the bride and groom were present.

At the appointed hour, Mr. Fred Beckstead, uncle of the bride, played Mendolssohn's Wedding March on the piano and as the last strains faded away, Rev. Kenneth Woodwark ,pastor of Elma United church, escorted the groom to his place under a beautiful canopy of evergreen, trimmed with pink and white asters, while the bride, on the arm of her father, descended the staircase and was escorted to her place beside the groom.

The bride looked very charming in a long gown of white French organdie. She was unattended.

During the signing of the register, Miss Eilen Beckstead, cousin of the bride, very ably sang "I Love You Truly" by Carrie Jacobs-Bond, accompanied at the piano by her father, Mr. Fred Beckstead. Immediately afterward the guests were seated in the diningroom by Mr. Fred Beckstead and Mr. Burton Beckstead, and a very sumptuous dinner was served by Mrs Wilfred Carruthers and Mrs. Burton Beckstead. The bride's cake was very large, being of three square layers laid up in diamond form, elaborately decorated. At the close of the wedding dinner, Rev. Mr. Woodwark briefly addressed the newlyweds and proposed the toast to the bride.

The decorations throughout were in charge of Mr. Fred Beckstead, and the colour scheme of pink and white was carried out with a profusion of gladioli and asters.

In the early afternoon ,amid showers of confetti and good wishes, the bride and groom left on their honeymoon trip by motor to Batavia, N.Y., Buffalo and other western points. The bride travelled in a swagger suit of brown crêpe with accessories to match.

The groom's gift to the bride was a marquisite necklet, while the bride's gift to the groom was a gentleman's set of military brushes. The gift to the soloist was a set of silver salt and pepper shakers with tray, and to the pianist a tan leather belt with silver mountings.

J. A. Simpson Transferred To Brampton, Peel County

Popular and Successful Agricultural Representative Will Take Up His New Duties in Three Weeks.

Much regret is felt throughout this section of Dundas and West Stormont counties at the news of the departure of the agricultural representative at Morrisburg, J. A. Simpson, who leaves in three weeks for Brampton, Ont., to take over similar duties in Peel county.

Since Mr. Simpson came to Morrisburg in June, 1929, his efforts have been unusually tireless and Dundas and West Stormont produce and stock has increased in grade many degrees and prizes galore have been brought to this section by farmers who have benefited from his assistance and training. Organizations and societies have sprung up throughtout the two counties under his supervision.

Dastardly Attempt To Wreck Corn Blower

Stones Are Found in Sheaves of Corn After Blower Knives Wrecked at Farm of Hugh Smith During Silo Filling on Tuesday.

Tuesday a very malicious attempt was made to wreck a corn blower owned by Mr. Ingram Cross ,operated at the farm of Mr. Hugh Smith, two miles north-east of Chesterville Shortly after work had commenced, a stone concealed in a bundle of corn went through the blower with a second following a few minutes later, destroying af $50 set of knives. Immediately an inspection of the bound corn in the field was made and it is alleged that 20 stones were found in as many different bundles, hidden in the corn where the sheaf was bound.

Enjoyable Evening Spent in Games, Singing and Charades at Close of Aid's Business Meeting.

A vote of thanks was tendered the ladies on motion of Mr. P. G. Hewitt, organist and choir leader.

Competition Keen At Mountain Cheese Exhibit

42 Cheese From 24 Dundas Factories Were Entered at Mountain Fair Last Week.—Judges Had Difficulty in Picking Winners.

The exhibit of cheese at the South Mountain Fair on Thursday and Friday was outstanding in quantity and quality. Forty-two cheese were exhibited representing 24 factories, all located in Dundas County. Messrs. Geo. H. Barr and Freeman Brown placed the awards and experienced some difficulty owing to uniformity and high quality. The nine highest scoring cheese in each, white and coloured, were exhibited by the following makers ,in order of highest score:

White Cheese — Wm. Coleman, Mountain; John Cameron, South Mountain; K. Weir, Winchester; G. Martin, Hallville; G. H. Summers, Winchester; R. Wright, Winchester; A. H .Bolton, Winchester; M. Barr, Brinston; A. Gauthier, Brinston.

Coloured Cheese—Wm. Coleman, Mountain; Cecil McIntosh, Winchester Springs; R. Wright, Winchester; A H. Bolton, Winchester; C .H. Clark, Mountain; John Cameron, South Mountain; S. Collison, Inkerman; R. H. Grant, South Mountain; Geo. Martin, Hallville.

It is interesting to note that in the total exhibit, 17 cheese scored maximum points in finish and 21 maximum points in colour. Much credit is due to the interest and service rendered by Mountain Agricultural Society. Instructors J. W. Cobey and J. W. Bolton, and cash contributors to prizes in addition to the society as follows—J. W. Bolton, A. H. Bolton, Bank of Nova Scotia, Royal Bank, H. Lannin, W. Moffatt, M. F. Beach and Co , Geo. Fraser, Ernie Summers, Winchester; Bank of Nova Scotia, H. Richardson, Mountain; Bank of Nova Scotia, Chas. Patton, South Mountain; McMaster Lumber Co., Limited, Kemptville; C. A. Moses, Osgoode Station; D. Carkner and Co., Kenmore; Wm. Beggs, Heckston; W. Lacey, Prescott; C. Richardson & Co., St. Mary's; H. McIntosh, Perth; Storey & McMullen, Iroquois; J. A. Sanderson, Oxford Station; Ex-Presidents Winchester Group Cheesemakers, 1934 President Winchester Group Cheesemakers, making total of prizes approximately $150.

On Friday evening a meeting was held in the Agricultural Hall under auspices of the Winchester Cheesemakers Group with 25 members in attendance where Messrs. G. H. Barr, Freeman Brown; Instructors J. W. Bolton and J. Mitchel, J. A. Sanderson and R .Carter spoke very complimentary and offered practical suggestions on continued improvement in quality and style of Canadian cheese. It was very evident that this exhibition was quite educational and admired by many of the visitors to Mountain Fair.

Local Shipments Are Up Barley, Grass Seed, Milk

Farmers Benefit Materially From Increased Shipments of Produce.—Barley Sold at 60c Bushel, Grass Seed at $15 Hundred.

Business at the local C P.R. station has been picking up considerably during the past week or two. It is many a day since grain was shipped from this point but this week two cars of barley of the malting variety have been shipped for which 60 cents per bushel was paid the farmers at their barns. A carload of grass seed was also shipped for which $15.00 per hundred was paid, a very high price for this season of the year. The demand is said to have come from the dried-out areas of the Middle Western States. On top of these shipments, six cars of milk have gone out as well as one load of stock, which means the distribution of a sizeable amount of cash throughout the farming community.

Tourists who have made considerable mileage in their travels this summer, marvel at the green pastures and wonderful fields of standing corn in this section of Dundas county.

It is now the property of Fred Hunt of Galetta, who is a great-grandson of the original settlers. The re-union took the form of a noonday picnic luncheon which was presided over by George J. Hunt of Chesterville, the president of the association, and this was followed by a programme of sports in the afternoon.

Ontario Farmers' Relief To Be Available At Once

Hon. Duncan Marshall Makes Declaration Three-Fold Programme Will Be Launched At Once—Education, Lower Interest, Markets.

London, Ont.—Ontario farmers will have relief of very promising proportions immediately, Hon. Duncan Marshall, Ontario Minister of Agriculture declared here to-day. He was addressing the directors' luncheon, officially opening the Western Fair.

"We can't fiddle away while Rome burns," declared Mr. Marshall. "If the famer is to have relief he must have it right away or it will be no use to him."

"There are three things I am desirous of accomplishing," he said. "One is agricultural education for all the young of farming areas; the second is lower interest rates, and the third is more and better markets for the farmer.

"The farmer must have lower interest rates, and right away. It is time the money lender took a share of the loss, and he is going to have to take it within a few months."

Dr. D. Johnston, Iroquois, Died After Long Illness

Graduate of University of Toronto, He Was 73 Years Old.—Practice Was Widespread.—Active in Interests of Town.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon of Dr. David Johnston of Iroquois, 73, from Knox Presbyterian church attended by large numbers of sorrowing friends. The late Dr. Johnston died at his home in Iroquois on Monday evening after 47 years practice in that town. He was 73 years of age on July 28th, and was in poor health for some months, being confined to his room for the past twelve weeks.

Dr. Johnston was born on the Johnston homestead, Williamsburg township, attended Morrisburg Collegiate, University of Toronto, then followed his medical course at Toronto Medical College. His practice was widespread and most successful.

He is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Emma Larue; two stepdaughters, Mrs. C. P. Shepherd, of Campbellford, Ont., and Miss Marguerite Harkness at home; two sisters and a brother.

Dr. Johnston was active in town affairs, serving on the High School Board and on the municipal council. He was senior elder of Knox Presbyterian church.

Young Clergyman Killed Gun Accidentally Goes Off

24-Year-Old United Church Pastor Was Hunting Partridge With His Brother-in-law.—Fell in Attempting to Climb Wire Fence.

St. Henri de Mascouche, Que.—When his rifle discharged as he tripped and fell over a fence while hunting partridges in the nearby woods at 2.30 o'clock Monday afternoon, Rev. E. Baskin Froats, 24-year-old minister of the Ste. Therese de Blainville United Church, was instantly killed. The bullet penetrated his right temple.

Rev. Mr. Froats, who was married exactly three weeks ago Monday and ordained minister one month ago, was hunting with his brother-in-law. Both were walking through the woods in the afternoon when they saw a partridge a short distance away. In order not to scare the birds both hunters tried to hide themselves in the bushes. Mr. Froats was in the act of climbing a wire fence when he suddenly lost his balance and fell to the ground. There was a shot and the minister lay still.

The brother-in-law rushed to Mr. Froats' assistance and found that he was shot through the right temple. Dr. Gerard Mathieu ,the district coroner, was immediately summoned. He examined the body and pronounced the minister dead, stating that he had been killed instantly by the bullet which had discharged from his 22-calibre rifle.

NEWS AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Winter Food Supply for Bees.

Every colony of bees when ready for the winter should have at least 40 pounds of food stored in order that they may have sufficient to carry them through until new nectar is available the following spring. Only the best clover or buckwheat honey should be used for this purpose. Failing this, use the required amount of pure can sugar made into syrup at the rate of two parts of sugar to one part of water.

Indigestible Poultry Feeds.

Of the slaughter house by-products for the feeding of poultry, meat meals or meat scraps are by far the most commonly used and are the standard animal protein supplements to poultry rations. They vary greatly in analysis according to the amount of bone material they contain but are usually purchased on a guaranteed analysis. The poorer grades containing quantities of hoof and horn should not be tolerated as poultry feed as these products (hoof and horn) are practically indigestible to poultry. With a little experience, it is possible to tell at a glanc whether the brand is suitable for feed or not, but, if in doubt, pour a little boiling water on a sample, and the smell arising should settle the matter even with the inexperienced If the odour is foetid the sample is unfit for food.

How Livestock Producer Loses.

In its latest issue, the Live Stock and Meat Trade Review again returns to the attack on the uneconomical habit of overloading the livestock markets on Mondays. "Unfortunately," says the Review, "the foolish practice of offering the bulk of the week's supply on the Monday market was again very strongly in evidence, with a more or less disastrous effect upon prices paid, and certainly increasing the cost of marketing to the producer through daily holdovers. During the hot months, buyers' needs in big meats are mostly quite moderate and often the result is that out of a big Monday run they will pick required qualities here and there, and the bulk has to be sold as best it may. A large percentage of the poorer end of the stock has small commercial value, and in recent months a considerable volume of thin cattle of good type and conformation, very suitable for feeding, has gone to slaughter because of the lack of country demand."

Fish Meal for Poultry.

The results of an experiment conducted for five years at the Dominion Experimental Farm show that fish meal is an excellent substitute for other protein feeds for poultry, and that it is as good as beef scrap or beef meal for the poultry ration. During the test there was no complaint from consumers as to any fishiness or off-flavour in the eggs.

The Bumble Flower-Bee On Fruit and Corn

At the present time a considerable number of inquiries are being received from farmers about a beetle—the Bumble Flower-Beetle or Brown Fruit Chafer, which is attacking corn and ripening fruit. This insect is a yellow-brown beetle, one-half inch in length, with its wing covers sprinkled all over with small irregular spots. In late summer it is found every year in greater or less numbers, feeding on the pollen of flowers, on ripe fruit—peaches, pears, grapes and apples—and also on corn, but it is rarely responsible for serious damage. It has not been observed that the insect has caused commercial injury in Ontario and consequently the Dominion Entomological Laboratory at Vineland Station, Ont., has never had occasion to advise the adoption of any control measures, other than handpicking of the beetles.

Farmers Must Produce.

To the man in the street, any attempts to increase production in these days of depressing world surpluses seem a waste of time, or even worse. He forgets, says Mr. L. H. Newman, Dominion cerealist, that the problem of the individual farmer differs vastly from that of the nation as a whole, in that the capacity of the farmer to carry on and pay his way is measured in no small degree by the yields he realizes per acre. To the farmer, the acre is his unit of production. If his average yields per acre, whether converted into milk, mutton or beef, or disposed of in their raw state, are not sufficiently high to enable him to meet his obligations, he must either succumb entirely or be forced to adopt a standard of living which removes him as an important factor in the problem of keeping the wheels of commerce moving.

Current Crop Report.

Dufferin County report that with plenty of straw and a fairly good crop of roots, especially turnips, available, maintenance rations for livestock are assured. Severe frosts have reduced the potato yield materially in the Dufferin district, while buckwheat, late corn and garden crops have also suffered damage. In Grey County too, frost has injured the same crops. Bean fields in Huron will not yield as well as indicated in the early season. In Oxford there are 107 farmers listed with smut-free wheat for sale, the bulk of which is Junior No. 6, with some Dawson's Golden Chaff and O. A. C. No. 61.

Although farmers in Peel have only one-third the hay of last year, the present high prices will prevent many dairymen from purchasing. Straw and molasses, alfalfa straw and corn will provide the roughage this winter. Turnip aphids have injured the crop in Waterloo, while cattle are in thin condition due to poor pasture.

Frost for four nights in succession damaged crops in Wellington, with the heaviest loss in late corn. Yield of oats running up to 100 bus. per acre have been reported there. Turnip aphids have also been active in that district. Essex County reports a great scarcity of feed, with winter feeding the rule for two months on scores of farms. Yields in Haldimand are much better than anticipated. Potato growers in Lambton are trying to establish a price of 50c a bag for potatoes. Frost in Middlesex injured tender plants such as cucumbers, squash and melons while hundreds of acres of late sown buckwheat were ruined, and corn and potatoes were also affected. Due to hail and frost, Norfolk's tobacco crop has been reduced from 20 to 14 million pounds.

Crop yields have exceeded anticipations in Wentworth. Peaches are commanding a price ranging from 50 to 75c for six-quart baskets. Corn, roots and buckwheat have shown much improvement in Northumberland and the prospect of fooder is much improved. Peterborough reports the heaviest grain yield in five years, with barley runing around 40 to 45 bushels per acre and oats 45 to 60 bushels. Barley is a good crop in Carleton and a heavy shipment for malting purposes is taking place, over 65 cars having been shipped to date. Frontenac has had a dry season and buckwheat and ensilage corn will be poor crops. Yields of grain are much better than last year in Lanark, though corn is a failure in some sections. Leeds has also felt the ill effects of drought. Over 200,000 pounds of certified timothy seed will be produced in Prescott and Russell Crops are better than expected in Renfrew County. Temiskaming district has experienced a very short growing season, with frost taking a heavy toll recently.

Milk Prices Are Legalized Throughout Quebec Province

Farmers Must Be Paid $1.60 For 100 Pounds, 3.5 Milk, at Dealer's Place of Business.

Standardized legal prices for the supply of milk in various parts of the Province of Quebec goes into effect on September 15th, under orders issued by the Dairy Industry Commission of the Province of Quebec.

The first area comprises the town of Drummondville and the municipalities of Grantham and St. Joseph de Grantham. The producers must be paid $1 60 net for each 100 pounds of milk, on a 3.5 per cent butter fat basis, f.o.b. at the place of business of the dealer. The price is subject to increase or decrease, depending upon the increase or decrease in the butter fat content of the milk.

Within this region no milk may be sold or delivered at any home for less than four cents a pint or eight cents per quart. The rate for milk sold to restaurants, groceries or any other business establishment is four cents per pint or seven cents per quart.

Will Rogers Thinks English "Smartest White People"

Cowboy-Showman Comments on Hyde Park Demonstrations Where Anyone Can Talk His Head Off.

London, September 10—"The English are the smartest white people there is," was Will Rogers' comment on Sunday's tame Hyde Park session when 5,000 Fascists demonstrated and 5,000 Anti-Fascists counter-demonstrated with 6,000 police to keep order.

"They will never have Communism, Fascism, Hitlerism or Nudism," the United States cowboy-showman declared, according to the Evening Standard. "They have a park here, Hyde Park, which was just built for people that are ag'in somethin'.

LARGE HOST OF LITTLE GIRLS ARE NAMED ELIZABETH ANNE

London. — The list of Christian names compiled from public school records shows rather surprisingly that the name John is a very easy winner in popularity. Seventy years ago John was only fifth in the list, but now his total nearly doubles that of his runner-up, Peter. Thirty years ago Peter did not appear in the lists of more prominent names at all. This, of course, was before Sir James Barrie lifted him out of obscurity. With him came Michael, who now ties with Anthony, well up in the lists but a long, long way behind John.

Girls' names, in particular, seem to come in cycles so that in time it begins to be possible to guess to within a year or two of the ages of the owners. At one school there is a junior certificates class to-day in which nine out of 13 children are called Joan. A year or two later came Rosemary, Pamela and Penelope, following in close succession by an innumerable host of little girls called Elizabeth Anne. And now, just emerging from perambulators to walk unsteadily down the garden path come Jenifer and Lillian. So the cycles go until we are back again with the Sallies and Mary Janes that our mothers shrank from, but which our daughters fall on with glee.

A delightful evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John T. The first part of the evening was spent in dancing and card playing and was much enjoyed by all. Music was furnished by Messrs. Arbuthnot and Hillis. At twelve o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Servage were called to the platform and presented with a wicker rocker chair and other small gifts. The following address was read by Mr. Harry Allison:

In appreciation of your past friendship we ask you to accept this small gift, not for its value but as a token of the high esteem in which you are both held throughout this community.

We not only welcome you among us but extend to both of you our best wishes for a prosperous future and many years of happy married life.

Signed on behalf of your many friends and neighbours, Delbert Hummel, Floyd Edgerton.

BOWLING ::::: Club Notes

Thursday, September 6th.

Did anyone hear Doc Hutt bragging about his animal collection? Doc Clayton presented him with one of those striped kittens. Cheer up, Doc, you are now eligible to that select group consisting of Jim Hanna and Art Robertson who thought they had the whole menagerie to themselves.

Doc Clayton took home the prize when he won three games straight: 6-2 from Hanna, 6-2 from Cass, and 8-0 from Hutt. Hanna's bunch started to go places but dallied too long with Clayton, as after that bad first game got off their chests they won from Hutt 5-3 and Cass 7-1.

Dubbie was the goat all night as every one took it out on him. Hutt beat him the first game, Clayton the second and Hanna nearly whitewashed him in the last. Hamlen had a bag all ready to take his home but they managed one lone end and the thing got away.

The line-up:

Merkley	David
Flynn	Wales
Woods	Robertson
Clayton, skip, 6-6-8—20	Hanna, skip, 2-5-7—14
Hess	Senn
Waldorf	Harper
Hamlen	Lacey
Cass, skip, 3-2-1— 6	Hutt, skip, 5-3-0— 8

Tuesday, September 11th.

Tuesday night Art Robertson's gang collected the china when they defeated Doc Clayton's rink 6-2 and Doc Hutt's 7-1 but were turned back by Jim Hanna 5-3. Jim tried hard to tie things up but Art got the break, and held his lead. Hanna trimmed Doc Hutt 7-1 but Clayton took six points off Hanna which was enough to keep Jim out of the money.

Score and line-up:

Merkley, Senn, Casselman, Robertson, skip—16.

Hess, Wales, Lacey, Hanna, skip—14.

Flynn, Waldorf, Woods, Hutt, skip—6.

Harper, Olsen, Shay, Clayton, skip—12.

COST OF PORK PRODUCTION

(Experimental Farms Note.)

PORK is one of the products that year in and year out seem to offer a fair return to the producer over and above the cost of feed consumed.

At the Dominion Experimental Farm, Nappan, N.S., data have been compiled for a number of years on the feed cost of raising young pigs from birth to weaning age (six weeks); also from weaning until they are ready for the market.

The eleven-year average feed cost to raise young pigs to six weeks of age. The $3 18 plus the 11-year average feed cost to grow and finish the hog ready for market was $7.81 per hundred pounds live weight.

The average market value per 100 pounds live weight for the same period was $9.41. This left a spread of $1.60 per hundred or $3.20 on a 200-pound bacon hog.

In computing the feed cost to produce 100 pounds of pork, all feeds are charged up at market prices and home-grown feeds are charged at cost of production, which includes rent of land, use of machinery, labour, etc. Therefore taking into consideration that on the average farm the bacon hog is carried as a side line and consumes many waste products otherwise unmarketable, the above figures would seem to demonstrate fairly conclusively that on the average the bacon hog is a fairly profitable cash commodity for the average farm to have.

The greatest success will be realized from the well-bred hog, for when properly fed it will make the best use of feeds consumed and give a higher percentage of selects than will the nondescript-bred hog.

"The burglar held me up and demanded my money, but he only took ten shillings on account."

"What do you mean—'on account.''

"On account of that was all I had."

"I'm surprised your mother consents to your marrying John when she dislikes him so."

"That's just why. She wants to be his mother-in-law."

Ben Webster related how on one occasion he was addressing a meeting in a large hall, and half-way through his speech, which he thought was going rather well, a voice cried out at the back: "Speak up, mister; we can't hear you!" Instantly a man sitting in the front row shouted back: "Sit down, then; and thank heaven you can't."

PAINLESS.

THE severity of pain is to many people a fair measure of the severity of the disease or abnormal condition responsible for the pain. Pain is one of nature's danger signals. Nevertheless it is most unfortunate that the public are apt to believe that if pain means danger, then the absence of pain assures safety. That this is not true is evident when we come to consider how many of the major tragedies of illness which undermines health and endangers life, occur without causing a twinge of pain until it is too late to do much about it.

Ask the woman who comes to her doctor with a cancer of the breast why she did not come sooner, and almost inevitably the answer given is to the effect that she did not think the lump in her breast could be anything serious because there was no pain. It should be cried from the housetops that, in its early stages, cancer of the breast is painless; indeed it does not cause even tenderness. There are exceptional cases, but no woman has any justification for thinking that she can neglect a lump in her breast just because it does not give rise to pain or tenderness.

There is another popular misconception concerning cancers of the breast, namely, that cancers rarely occur in women under forty. It is quite true that the majority are found after that age, but it is equally true that a large number occur between the ages of thirty and forty, and that quite a number develop in women in their early twenties, occasionally even earlier.

This simply means that a woman cannot say to herself: "I cannot have cancer of the breast because the breast is not painful and I am under forty." Cancer of the breast occurs at all ages, and at all ages it is usually painless in its early stages.

There is only one safe and sure way for a woman to approach this subject. She knows the appearance and the feel of her own breasts If, at any time, she observes or feels a change in her breasts, then she should consult her doctor without any delay. By "change" we mean any discharge from the nipple, or alteration in the appearance of the nipple, or a feeling of thickening, or a lump in the breast.

The reason why we insist upon the importance of the early recognition of cancer of the breast is simply that when the symptoms are recognized early and properly treated, the results are good. Early treatment is the only effective remedy, and early treatment can be given only if there is an early diagnosis, and early diagnosis depends upon the patient's going to her physician with the earliest signs.

Master: "Can you tell me the name of any animal peculiar to Australia?'

Boy: "The rhinoceros, sir."

Master: "Wrong. That animal is not found in Australia."

Boy: "Well, sir, that's exactly why it would be peculiar."

Two farmers had been to the local fair and had a festive time. They had a six-mile drive to get home that night, but the horse knew the way.

Side by side they sat in the cart, which went along at a good pace. They swung round a gate post in an alarming manner, missing it by mere inches.

"Steady, Sam ,steady," murmured Joe. "Take care, old man."

"What!" said Sam, amazed. "I thought you were driving."

A small boy stood in the entrance to a cobbler's shop watching the man at work.

"What do you repair boots with, mister?" he asked suddenly.

"Hide," replied the cobbler sharply.

"Er-e-er, eh?" asked the boy.

"I said hide," said the cobbler impatiently.

"What for?" the boy insisted, somewhat surprised.

"Hide! The cow's outside,' sighed the man."

"Don't care if it is. Who's afraid of a cow, anyway?" said the youngster defiantly.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Conducted By
MISS HELEN LACEY, B. H. Sc.

SHIRLEY SAUCE.

24 peeled tomatoes
4 onions chopped
4 green peppers
3½ teaspoons salt
2 teaspoons mustard seed
1 teaspoon celery seed
2 cups brown sugar
3 cups vinegar

Boil all together until quite thick. Seal in hot sterile jars.

GRAPE PIE.

1 quart of blue grapes
¾ cup sugar
Pastry

Remove the skins from the grapes and heat the pulp until the seeds are loosened; press through a sieve to remove the seeds. Combine pulp and skins. Add sugar and pour into a pie tin lined with pastry. Cover with a top crust and bake in a hot oven, about 425 degrees Fahrenheit, until the crust is browned; then lower the heat and bake until the fruit is tender.

If you like this pie very much, which I am sure you will, you can have it at any season of the year by preserving the grapes in glass jars as follows:

Remove the skins from the grapes and heat the pulp until the seeds are loosened, in the same way you did for the pie. Press through a sieve to remove seeds, combine the pulp and skin and sugar and cook together until the fruit is tender. Pour into sterilized quart jars and seal.

Grapes prepared in this way will be ready for pie at any time.

While on the subject of grapes, why not make your own grape juice? It is delicious when combined with other fruit juices.

GRAPE JUICE.

5 quarts grapes
1 quart water
3 pints of sugar

Cook grapes and water until the grapes are coft. Drain in a jelly-bag and add sugar to the juice; bring to a boil and bottle. This recipe will make five pints.

GRAPE WINE.

150 grapes
1 cup sugar

Place in a quart jar and cover with boiling water. Cover tightly. Turn jar every day until sugar is all dissolved. When wanted, strain out the grapes.

BAKED PEARS.

Pears may be baked in the same way as apples. Wash the pears and remove the blossom end. Place in a baking dish. Cover the bottom of the dish with water and add one tablespoon of sugar for each pear. Bake slowly until tender.

Ginger cookies are nice to serve with pears or with applesauce. Pears and apples have a somewhat bland flavour and the contrast provided by serving highly spiced ginger cookies or gingerbread with them makes an appetizing combination of foods.

GINGER SHORTBREAD.

½ cup butter
2-3 cup brown sugar
1 egg yolk
1 1-3 cup flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
¾ teaspoon ginger
⅛ teaspoon salt

Cream the butter thoroughly, add the brown sugar slowly and mix well. Beat in egg yolk. Sift and measure flour, re-sift with baking powder, ginger and salt. Work dry ingredients thoroughly into the butter and sugar mixture to make a soft dough which may be handled. If too soft, more flour may be sifted into mixture, or allow mixture to stand in a cold place for an hour before rolling.

Roll into balls about the size of a marble and drope one inch apart on a greased sheet. Press out with the floured tines of a fork to ¼-inch thickness and bake in a hot oven (400 degrees F.) until a pale brown.

The teacher was impressing on her pupils the importance of honesty.

"Now, Tommy," she said, "if you found half a crown what would you do with it? Would you keep it?"

"No, teacher," replied Tommy readily.

"Good!" said the teacher. "What would you do with it?"

"Spend it," replied the boy.

CRISP GINGER COOKIES.

2-3 cup sugar
1 cup molasses
1 cup shortening
1 teaspoon soda
2 teaspoons ginger
¼ cup vinegar
Flour to mold.

Mix sugar, molasses and vinegar. Add melted shortening. Sift soda and ginger with one cup of flour and add mixture. Add enough flour to roll thin. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) watching carefully as they burn very easily.

HOT WATER GINGERBREAD.

4 tablespoons butter and lard
½ cup brown sugar
2 eggs
½ cup molasses
1½ cups flour
½ teaspoon soda
⅛ teaspoon salt
1½ teaspoon ginger
½ cup boiling water

Cream the butter and lard and add the sugar slowly. Add beaten eggs and molasses, then mixed and sifted ingredients. Add boiling water the last thing. Pour into a greased pan; bake in a slow oven 50 to 60 minutes at temperature of 300 to 325 degrees Fahrenheit.

The success of this recipe depends on getting the mixture into the oven as soon after adding the boiling water as possible The reason for this is, that as soon as the hot water is added it at once combines with other ingredients to form carbon dioxide gas, which is the gas that causes the cake to rise. If the cake is allowed to stand before baking this gas will be lost and of course the gingerbread will be flat, heavy and unappetizing.

Pour applesauce over individual squares of gingerbread, top with whipped cream and serve for dessert.

* * *

Gingerbread served with white cream or cottage cheese is a tasty dish to serve for dessert.

* * *

Apple - gingerbread upside - down cake is made by pouring a layer of applesauce into the greased cake tin before adding the gingerbread batter. When baked and turned out, the applesauce will be on top.

* * *

Add chopped onion to fresh tomatoes before stewing and you will be surprised by the improvement in flavour.

* * *

When frying onions, add sliced apples and fry together The onions should be partly cooked before adding the apples as the apples do not require as much cooking as the onions.

Abijah Marsh's "Come-Uppance"

AS ABIJAH MARSH gazed at the ancient horse, he grinned with irritating self-satisfaction. Abijah was always disagreeable; he was pompously sure of himself and never made mistakes.

Mr. Ballin realized that the spectacle was incongruous and under his wrinkled brows quizzically eyed Old Kit, standing beside the black, shiny motor truck. Old Kit's limbs were bald and rheumatic; she trembled when she stood ;she wheezed when she walked. Mr. Ballin was angry with himself, he was angry with Old Kit, and, above all, he was angry with Abijah Marsh, who had stopped on his way to Keene to comment on the ancient nag. With an inauspicious frown Mr. Ballin watched Old Kit settle on her haunches, double her knees under her, and slowly, deliberately lie down in the road in front of the barn. Mr. Ballin's disgust overran the bounds of speech but Abijah Marsh leaned back and roared with laughter until his own great handsome bay stallion pawed the ground impatiently.

Nineteen years ago William Brewster, Mr. Ballin's stout and elderly son-in-law had bought a mare; during all those nineteen years Wildman Brewster had never ceased to brag on his purchase. With sundry winks and much amusement, it was whispered that Old Kit, already entered upon the last of life, had been foisted off upon the guileless Wildman as a colt of promise. Certain it is that, one after another, every known infirmity of a horse had settled upon that senile nag. Yet Wildman Brewster cherished the beast with a love that was blindness personified and, adding injury to insult, housed her in the stable of his father-in-law.

So many years before that the event was more legend than fact, men said Old Kit had travelled from Swanzey Pond to Keene, without artificial stimulus other than a well-directed alder, in the astonishing time of forty-five minutes. Mr. Ballin looked at the bony beast lying in the road and felt that his faith in that greatest feat of Old Kit's youth was wavering

"Whoa!" Abijah Marsh yelled, pulling on the reins until the great stallion threw up his head and arched his shining neck in fierce impatience. "What do ye call it?" Abijah asked, leering at the somnolent Kit, whose blind eyes were closed in sleep.

Mr. Ballin was ashamed of being caught in so embarrassing a situation; he was indignant with Abijah Marsh for commenting on it. He glanced past the barn at Bear's Den Mountain and scratched the back of his neck. It was incumbent on him to make some remark, however hypocritical, in defence of the despised animal.

"Wal," he remarked reflectively, "she used to travel some, now I tell ye. Keene in forty-five minutes is a-hyperin'."

Abijah Marsh laughed long and loud. "I'm kind of s'prised Wildman'll let you keep the critter, seein' she's as valuable as all that. You ain't racin' her, be you?"

Old Kit flapped her ears contemptuously, but Mr. Ballin flushed. "Wal, I kinder mistrust she ain't in shape fer a race jes' now, but I vum, Abijah Marsh, she might s'prise you one of these days. She ain't what you'd call handsome to look at, but she ain't a stay-at-home, not by a jugful."

"Ho, ho, ho!" bellowed Abijah. "Whoa, durn you. Now here, Bill, is a hoss!"

"Purty good, purty good," the old man admitted grudgingly. "But when Kit was in her prime there wouldn't have been no comparison. I'm tellin' you that right now—"

The big bay horse curvetted restlessly.

"Whoa!" cried Abijah. Then a sly grin crept over his calculating features.

"If that old Kit of Wildman Brewster's can get to Keene inside of three hours, I'll—I'll—" The stallion suddenly darted forward in a swirling cloud of dust. Abijah pulled up the reins; then, giving the horse his head, he leaned from his rubber-tired buggy and shrieked in a voice that shook with laughter, "I'll swap hosses—swap hosses, by gosh!"

He was gone. From the pines beyond the bend, above which rose a cloud of white dust, there came loud, discordant laughter.

Mr. Ballin looked at Kit, whose placid unconsciousness of badinage and insult increased rather than assuaged his anger.

"You good-for-othin', no-'count, decrepit bunch of crow's meat!" he cried. "You relict of the flood, you wall-eyed victim of distemper and the glanders, you! If Wildman Brewster had the pride of a meechin' turkey hen, he'd shoot you and bury you so deep that there wouldn't no one remember there ever was such a good-for-nothin', disreputable—"

Silence came so suddenly and so unexpectedly that Kit turned her sightless eyes in the old man's direction with mute interest and curiosity. Mr. Ballin was staring at the truck. Slowly, as the sunlight creeps out of the woods and over the dark meadows, a smile crept over Mr. Ballin's face. His eyes twinkled, his mouth broadened to a grin. He leaned forward and slapped his leg with glee.

"I vum!" he gasped. "I'd like for to give Bijah Marsh his come-uppance, so I would."

Mr. Ballin stumped across the road and up to the shed where his son Edward sat. The old man's face had become very sober, and there was not a twinkle in his eye when he asked solemnly, "Edward, did you hear what Bijah Marsh said ' bout swappin' hosses?"

Edward grunted.

"Edward," said Mr. Ballin, "I kinder thought we might take Bijah up about swappin' hosses. That's a putty good bay he's drivin'."

"What?" demanded Edward in a manner that indicated doubts of his father's sanity. "Swap Old Kit? Good gracious! Old Kit couldn't walk to Keene in three days!"

"Edward," said Mr. Ballin, as sober as a judge, "Old Kit don't have to walk to Keene—all she's got to do is get there." With his hand cupped round his mouth Mr. Ballin whispered five startling words.

Edward Ballin looked at his father, he looked at the truck, he looked at Old Kit, lying peacefully in the dry dust; he thought of the jeers and sneers of Abijah Marsh; comprehension dawned on his face. As for Old Kit, she flicked her ears impatiently and dreamed.

Sarah Ballin, happening to look out of the window, saw so strange a spectacle that her brows arched in wonder; her eyes opened wider and wider.

Her aged father, with twinkling eyes and shaking shoulders, crept up behind Old Kit and in the gruffest, most savage voice possible said, "Her-r-r-rup!" It was an exact imitation of Wildman Brewster. At the sound of what she was deluded into believing was her master's voice, Old Kit scrambled to her feet.

The old man led Kit up into the barn and over to the south door, used for loading grain, where the sill was about four feet from the ground. Old Kit slowly reposed her bony length on the floor and with closed eyes lay motionless and unconcerned. Edward Ballin heaped the truck with hay, piled Old Kit's harness on the seat, cranked the motor, and backed the truck beneath her.

Then father and son clambered up beside the aged horse, laid ropes along the floor, and pulled them under Kit's rib-marked side They took hold of the ropes, braced their feet against the sill of the barn and pulled mightily. Slowly Old Kit began to move. Inch by inch she was dragged across the dusty floor. Straight out in the air she stuck her four bony legs. She neither kicked nor squirmed as, dragged by the ropes, she slid irresistibly off the threshold and with a grunt of complete satisfaction landed "kerthump! on the soft hay in the truck. Swiftly the old buggy was tied on behind, and the automobile whirled away in a billowing cloud of dust.

At an inauspicious moment Mr. Ballin's son-in-law had decided that that very afternoon was an opportune time for a trip to Richmond. Accordingly, soon after dinner, he had arrayed himself in a venerable black suit, edged with the rusty green of antiquity, put on his gray head his best gray cap, and started in sweaty discomfort on the two-mile walk to his father-in-law's. The weary road round the pond ruffled his temper; the hot sun wrung sticky drops of perspiration from his shiny red brow; long before he had completed half his journey he was thoroughly out of sorts and looking forward with gloomy satisfaction to a soothing, peaceful ride behind Old Kit.

When he came to the bend in the road by the lower end of the pond, he pulled out a bandanna handkerchief to mop his forehead. Startled by the loud "blat" of an automobile horn, he leaped with sprawling arms and legs into the bushes beside the road. It was a close shave, and Wildman was angry. In his petulance he gazed vindictively after the passing vehicle; his eyes opened in incredulous horror.

For thirty seconds he stared after the fleeting car; then he caught his breath, pulled off his black coat and, regardless of the atrocious colour scheme of red suspenders on a yellow-and-green shirt, lumbered down the road through the dust toward's his father-in-law's house. Wildman's grimy face and draggled linen threw into strong relief his trim rubber collar. His breathing was loud and painful when in the last stage of exhaustion he burst in on the bewildered Sarah.

Mr. Ballin had recognized his son-in-law as they passed him, but it had been no time for vain recrimination. His voice was raised to a fighting pitch as he pulled out his great silver watch. "I vum!" he gasped. "Bijah's got near a half-hour start on us. Now, Eddy, lad, go to it and beat him out!"

Up on the road outside Middletown Abijah Marsh was rattling away toward Keene at a spanking trot. If he thought of Old Kit at all, his contempt was blended with pity.

Over the outlet of the pond and round Charlie Marsh's farm Edward Ballin's machine chugged slowly. It was hard going in the sand; old man Ballin chewed his whiskers in fitful impatience; but Old Kit, flat on her back with her four feet curled comfortably in the hay, closed her eyes and, soothed by the gentle motion, fell fast asleep.

Fifteen minutes later, when Abijah Marsh was gently rattling up to Swanzey factory, the wheels of Edward Ballin's car gripped the firm bed of the state road. Abijah Marsh was almost in sight of the church spires of Keene, and Wildman Brewster's Old Kit was still seven miles away.

Edward Ballin pushed a lever, and the machine leaped ahead on the hard, level road. West Swanzey loomed up in the distance. Four minutes later it was at hand. Opposite Hannah's store the wheels of the car struck a "thank-you-ma'am." Old man Ballin yelled aloud; Old Kit awoke from her sleep, snorted and waggled her feet. Men ran into the road and stared. West Swanzey was left behind, but the seat of the buggy had fallen by the wayside and was the centre of an excited group of amateur detectives.

The machine skidded round a bend; Old Kit wheezed and gulped. Mr. Ballin yelled like a maniac; Edward leaned over the wheel with the light of grim determination in his eye. Out of a farmhouse tore a yapping collie. Wondering faces stared from many windows. Trees swept past, all in a blur of speeding landscape. Great pines reached out their branches overhead and clutched at the whirlwind racers; fence rails glided back on the narrowing road in an unbroken line of gray. Dimly the two men realized that strange sounds were proceeding from behind them. The old man turned and uttered a startled shout.

At every jounce of the speeding car Old Kit was tossed six inches from the bed of the truck, only to recline again on the soft hay. Kit was dumb now, but her blind eyes expressed unutterable disgust, and her feet waggled feebly on.

Miles away Wildman Brewster, clad in black trousers, red suspenders and a vivid yellow-and-red shirt was tearing his hair. On a far-off road, Abijah Marsh, with a sardonic smile, was driving past the Hampshire Pottery. Round the bend shot Edward Ballin's machine, and ahead through the rifts between the trees appeared the roofs of Keene. There was no time for delay.

Old man Ballin rose and climbed perilously over the back of the seat. "Go to her, by cracky!" he shouted. "I'll sit on Old Kit and keep her from bouncin'!"

At that unlucky instant a great touring car surged round a bend in the road. The Ballin machine swerved to avoid collision. The old man tumbled almost over the edge of the truck and ,with one wild clutch for safety, caught Old Kit round the neck and hung grimly on. Down the last long mile they went, past the white-washed fences, the old windmill, the schoolhouse and the bridge.

Clinging fast to the bony neck of the ancient horse Mr. Ballin bellowed at the top of his voice, "Faster! Faster!" His long brown duster flapped behind him in the wind; his eyes were blurred by the speed of his progress. The car shot round the corner into Main Steet, up over the railway tracks to the square, whirled round the little park, and stopped in the shadow of the big white church.

To say that a crowd gathered in Keene Square would be to exaggerate; but every living soul in sight of that unheralded arrival came to gaze at the portentous phenomenon that had appeared among them. In astonishment and delight four aged men with long white beards recognized the central figure as their friend and contemporary, Mr. Ballin. The assembly cheered lustily and pressed closer. A dozen men stood by to help unload the truck. They caught hold of Old Kit, pulled, hauled and heaved but they could not make an impression on that remarkable brute.

Old Kit, having grown accustomed to the unusual sensation of lying at rest in an automobile truck, was quite content to remain as she was and make up her lost sleep. The hay was soft and comfortable. She grunted, gurgled and slept.

The men looked at Mr. Ballin and grinned. Mr. Ballin looked at his watch; already it was time for Abijah Marsh to appear.

"Get hold, everybody," Mr. Ballin commanded, "and when I say pull, pull like the dickens. We've got to get her off."

In vain did the ancient nag resist the dire necessity of standing again on her own four feet. Mr. Ballin took her by the head, Mr. Edward Ballin took her by the tail; Joe Grogan seized her right forefoot, and Peter Harding got a good grip on her left forefoot. Nine men laid hands on old Kit's anatomy, and three more pulled on a rope. Old Kit came out of that truck, squirming, turned half in the air like a cat and landed on her feet.

Far down the road a big bay horse was trotting briskly under the elms, but no one knew and no one cared. In a trice Old Kit was hitched to the remains of the buggy and the truck was run off to a side street. While one man was splicing a broken shaft, and another was trying to straighten a twisted axle, word of what it was all about spread among the spectators, and the onlookers turned their faces toward a rubber-tired buggy that was approaching far down under the arching elms.

Mr. Ballin was one of the most popular men in the Ashuelot Valley; Abijah Marsh was perhaps the most unpopular, for he had spitefully jabbed with a sharp tongue at least half the citizens in Keene and every man in Swanzey. As the big bay horse came trotting across the railway traccks, a universal grin spread through the assembly. It was a contagious grin; it gained complete control of Joe Grogan's usually solemn face, it twitched up the corners of Peter Harding's drooping mouth, it wrenched sharply at Edward Ballin's keen eyes and firm lips; it even attached itself to the glum countenance of Abijah Marsh, who, when he saw so many smiling faces turned toward him, smiled a rather unwilling greeting and pulling on the right rein, pulled his bay to the other side of the road in order to investigate. Of all the men there present Mr. Ballin, Sr., was alone as sober as the proverbial judge. The crowd opened respectfully before Abijah Marsh. He clucked to his bay stallion and raised his head the better to see what was going on.

Abijah Marsh's face turned red and white in quick succession. He looked first at Old Kit, then he looked at Mr. Ballin, then he looked at Old Kit again. He gasped, felt his throat, looked at Mr. Ballin, looked at Old Kit, drew out a large blue-bordered handkerchief and mopped his shiny brow. He climbed slowly from the buggy, hauled a big silver watch from his pocket and examined it. For a minute and a half there was absolute silence in Keene Square; then some one snickered.

"Wal, Bijah," said Mr. Ballin in a gentle voice, "looks like it's a purty good day for a hoss trade. Now, Old Kit is some hoss, let me tell ye, and when it comes to travelling, wal, you should jest see her go ;it's wuth it."

Abijah Marsh opened his mouth, but not a sound came from the yawning cavern. He swallowed nervously and stared at Old Kit.

A murmur of laughter ran through the crowd. It swelled to a wholehearted roar, and Abijah Marsh cringed; for above all else in the town he feared ridicule, and he knew that long ere sunset the story of that day would have crossed every threshold in the county.

Then Abijah Marsh squared his shoulders. From some hidden recess in his nature came a touch of manhood of which the world had never known. Abijah Marsh faced ridicule, scorn and injured pride; he spoke in a faint, clear voice:

"That's what I said. Yes, sir. I ain't goin' back on a bargain. No, sir—no matter how bad it is, I ain't goin' to squeal." He hesitated, and there was a touch of moisture in his eyes as he looked at the curving neck of the bay stallion. A hush fell on the crowd.

Mr. Ballin had heard the laughter—he knew Abijah Marsh, insolently overbearing, cuttingly vidictive. Abijah's jeers had many times tormented him; his was the right of vengeance; his face flushed, then again grew pale. He leaned forward.

"No, Bijah; I'm right proud of you for comin' up to the mark, but you know as well as me that Wildman sets a deal too much store by Old Kit to let her go. I 'preciate your stickin' to a bargain, but Kit and I are jest out fer a little constitutional, and I guess we'll be goin' hime. So long!"

He climbed heavily into the buggy, and addressed the aged horse, "Git up!" Then Old Kit, who had been for some moments swaying back and forth in apparent indecision, made up her mind. She settled back on her haunches, doubled her forelegs, and, lying down in harness on the main street of Keene, closed her eyes in blissful sleep.

Before anyone had time to laugh or cheer, Mr. Ballin, with twinkling eyes leaned over the dasher and cried, "Her-r-r-rup!" in the gruffest possible imitation of Wildma Brewster. With a startled flop of her ears Old Kit lurched to her feet, swayed undecidedly for a minute, then, recollecting that supper was nine miles away, swung herself forward and procceded slowly on the homeward road.

Mr. Ballin's heart was heavy, for he realized that Wildman Brewster was waiting vengefully at the journey's end, and he knew that he must face his son-in-law alone, for Edward was already whirring away to Jaffrey. But behind him he heard the cheers of a delighted populace; he thought of that wild ride with a reminiscent grin, and when Old Kit actually broke into a trot he settled back on the one remaining seat in placid contentment.

A young woman noted for her outspokenness was on a visit to a wealthy but elderly bride.

"And do you know, my dear, on the third day of our honeymoon George won a first prize in the Irish Sweepstake."

"Good heavens," the girl blurted out. "Three days too late!"

A Melbourne man who was on holiday had been told he would find splendid sport on the lower reaches of the creek and along the lagoons bordering the river.

Gun in hand, he wandered for miles without getting a shot, and was crossing a bridge on the way back to the hotel in the late afternoon when he met a small, freckled boy with schoolbooks under his arm.

"Is there anything to shoot about here?" asked the man with the gun.

The small boy scowled thoughtfully and shook his head. Then his face brightened up. "Here's the schoolmaster coming across the bridge now!" he exclaimed.
