SERVICE, to Us IMPLIES MUCH

Among the things that characterize our service are personal attention to every detail of the funeral arrangement, and little acts of thoughtfulness that serve to lessen the trying strain of the hours before and during the funeral. Quiet efficiency and smoothness are the result. That, we believe, is the kind of service that wins approval.

HENRY'S Shorthand School Ottawa, Ont.

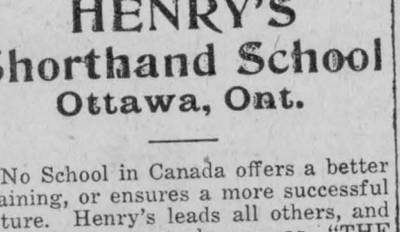

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Durant---Ford

In the presence of the immediate relatives the marriage took place at the Manse of the Hallville United church on Saturday afternoon, June 9th, of Stella Mae, youngest daughter of Mrs. M. B. and the late Rufus P. Ford of Mountain, to Haldane Armstrong, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Durant of Chesterville. The marriage was performed by Rev. Donald MacLeod.

Following the ceremony a dainty supper was served at the home of the bride's brother, Mr. D. L. Ford, of Mountain. The dining-room was prettily decorated with lilacs, tulips and lily-of-the-valley.

The guests included Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McIntosh and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Leroy, Ottawa; Mr. Robert and Mrs. Charles Whittaker of Morrisburg, Mrs. Elma Ford of Syracuse, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Durant, Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Bronskill, of Chesterville; Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Kerr of Mountain, Miss Clarys Ford of Detroit, and Mrs. J. C. Hamilton of Russell.

Amid showers of confetti and good wishes, the happy couple left on the evening train for Toronto and Niagara, returning by boat to Montreal. The bride travelled in a smart suit and fawn moire hat, with shoes and purse to match, and wore the gift of the groom, a handsome green gold wrist watch.

Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Durant will reside in Chesterville.

BOWLING CLUB OPENING

Reaburn, Sec., Dr. Clayton, Treas., or to the Greens Committee Friday night.

Berwick Home Bereaved

Our little town was cast into sadness on Thursday morning, June 7th, when the Angel of Death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Hepburn and claimed their eldest daughter, Gladys Margaret, aged 6 years and 4 days after an illness of only two days.

Gladys was a bright little girl and was a great favorite with old and young and will be sadly missed not only by her loved ones at home but by all who knew her, as she met everyone with a loving smile. All that medical skill and kind nursing could do was done but it was to no avail, the grim reaper spared her not, and that precious, sinless soul took its flight. We trust He who received her will shortly let fall upon her loved ones the gentle dew of divine peace. As people gazed upon her beautiful white casket they were surely impressed that the hands of the Most High had touched her. The dear child's favorite hymn was, "Jesus Loves Me." The funeral took place Friday afternoon to Morewood Presbyterian church and cemetery. Rev. Dr. Nimmo of Morewood, conducted a short solemn service at the home of the deceased, afterwards finishing at the church. When the remains were laid to rest four young men of Morewood acted as pall bearers. A spray was given by the teachers and pupils of Berwick school which Gladys attended; spray from Mr. and Mrs. Eddy Hunt, a wreath from Mr. and Mrs. Angus McDermoid, spray from Mr. and Mrs. Chesley Marcellus, Morewood; bouquets from Mr. and Mrs. Jack Searle, Mrs. George Barrigher, and Miss Belle Legg. Gladys leaves to mourn her loss her parents, one brother and three little sisters, namely: Herman, Eva, Irene and Pauline, twins one year old.

The heart-felt sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved ones in their great sorrow.

Harry O'Connell Held Insane

(Wednesday's Mail & Empire)

Harry O'Connell, the 33-year-old printer and bank janitor who shot his wife in their apartment at Dundas Street west and Lansdowne Avenue on March 16, was adjudged insane by an Assizes jury, early last evening.

The jury brought the verdict at 8.05 o'clock. Though the jurors had been in retirement for nearly two and a half hours, they had reached their decision some time before their return and were prevented from an earlier deliverance by the customary dinner recess.

Prisoner is Silent.

"Not guilty, on the grounds of insanity," announced the foreman. Every eye turned upon O'Connell. He sat in the middle of the dock, his eyes almost closed and his head bent forward. He seemed almost inert. Nor did he quicken as he arose to hear Mr. Justice Wright read the court's commitment.

A mere handful of the spectators who had filled the courtroom during the trial remained for the verdict. The McCarthys and O'Connell's sister, Hazel, all of whom were witnesses, were among the few friends and relatives who remained. They heard the verdict calmly and departed without expressing any opinions on it.

"I don't think that any serious fault can be found with your verdict," said His Lordship to the jurors as he thanked and discharged them. "It is open to you to find insanity on the evidence, although others may have a different opinion."

Without any dramatics, Mr. Maher in a calm, steady voice, presented an eloquent plea for O'Connell's life. He described the accused as a good, clean, hard-working young man who unfortunately had lost his mental balance. There had been no evidence of intoxication—there had been nothing to show that he was of anything but clean, industrious habits. Not content with working long hours in a printing plant, he took on the extra duties of being caretaker at the bank branch.

"There is no evidence of any reason for this slaying other than this, call it what you like, I call it insanity. This insane delusion that his wife was deceiving him and was unfaithful to him.'

Cites Old British Tradition.

Mr. Middlebro asserted that O'Connell's every action was consistent with that of a sane but very jealous man. "We are not going to acquit people on evidence of brainstorms and so-called uncontrollable acts," he continued. "We want to stand by the good old British tradition that if a man is to be excused it is because he did not know what he was doing."

The Crown counsel questioned whether Victor McCarthy and Miss Hazel O'Connell told the whole story with respect to what occurred on the night before the tragedy when, responding to Mrs. O'Connell's call, they had gone downstairs only to be ordered upstairs again by O'Connell.

"Do you think that what they have told us was sufficient to make Hazel telephone Ottawa and tell Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy to take the night train for Toronto, not to wait even for the morning train? Do you think they have told us everything? Do you believe that, as they have testified, after Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy did come, nothing was said all day about what had caused them to be called?

"Do you think that Harry made some threat against his wife on that night before the shooting? Do you think he left work early next night and got that bottle of liquor to have something to brace him up for what he was going to do?"

He sketched the details of the shooting, how O'Connell had come home and shaved, then gone downstairs and got the revolver and then returned and shot his wife. "Can you say there was no premeditation there? It was done because of something that happened on the night before when Hazel went downstairs and found Mrs. O'Connell crying and Harry walking up and down beside her.

"That poor woman was a slave in that household. She had those four young children to take care of and two boarders besides. She kept house by herself and cooked all the meals. Then, in addition, he says to her, 'Come on down, you've got to help me clean the bank.' Do you think we have all the facts?"

Jealousy, said Mr. Middlebro, was among the most powerful motives in the world. "If you think this man was genuinely insane, say so, and he goes to the asylum for the criminally insane, but if you think he was just a jealous, bad-tempered man who was used to dominating his household and who, in a fit of temper, killed his wife, then he is guilty of murder."

(A summary of the evidence of the first day of the trial will be found on page 3.)

Chesterville Defeats Morewood At Home

Chesterville won its first game of the local season away from home at Morewood Tuesday evening by the score of 13 to 8. The game was a closely played and exciting affair up to the end of the 6th inning with the score tied four all. In the first half of the seventh Chesterville, led by the heavy bat of Bob Loveless, who owes allegiance to the same flag as Babe Ruth, and bats exactly like him, fell on the offerings of Tab Johnston and won the old ball game in no uncertain manner, the whole team batting in this inning. In Morewood's half of this inning Cecil Gillissie had to be relieved after pitching six innings of good ball, at one time he turned back two batters with the bases loaded. The relief hurler, Stan Craig, using a fast ball pitched the seventh without extending himself.

The teams—

Miss Mabel Todd, Gallingertown

There occurred at her home in Gallingertown, on Saturday morning, June 9th, the death of Miss Mabel Todd, aged thirty-seven years, six months and twenty-one days, after a lingering illness of many years.

Those who remember her in her chilhood days will remember what a bright and kindly disposition she had, endearing herself to all with whom she came in contact, until in her early 'teens when she became stricken with a body racking disease, which after having all the care that loving hands and skilled physicians could do, it was learned she would never fully recover, which finally culminated with her death. She bore her long sufferings with much fortitude.

She leaves to mourn five sisters, namely, Mrs. Robert Kanoff, and Mrs. Chas. Russell, Massena; Mrs. Diana Irelan, Watertown; Mrs. C. W. Merkley, Grantley, and Mrs. Arthur Russell on the homestead, with whom she had lived since the death of her parents a few years ago.

The funeral was held on Sunday at her late residence, at 1.30 p.m., Rev. Russell of Williamsburg, conducting the service, speaking impressively of the life of the deceased and kind words of comfort to the sorrowing sisters, after which the remains were conveyed to the Williamsburg cemetery for burial in the family plot.

Floral tributes were sprays from sisters, Mrs. Chas. Russell, Mrs. Robert Kanoff, Mrs. A. N. Baxter and Mr. George Todd.

The sympathy of the community goes out to the bereaved ones.

Peacefully sleeping, resting at last,
Her earthly trials and sufferings are past.
In silence she suffered, with patience she bore;
Till God called her Home, to suffer no more.

TWO LARGE BARNS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Fire of undetermined origin destroyed two large barns owned by C. Deprato, near Alexandria, early Sunday morning, causing damage estimated at $5,000. A valuable horse was also burned to death. Several hundred feet of hose had to be laid in order to combat the blaze which had made considerable headway before it was discovered.

Death Of Mr. Jas. Horan

It is with deep regret we announce the death of Mr. Jos. Horan, which took place at his late residence, 312 West Third street, Tuesday, June 5th, after a lingering illness of nearly three years. The deceased was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Horan, and was born near Chesterville. He followed the brick-laying trade from his youth, and practiced his trade for many years in the United States. For the past nineteen years he made his home in Cornwall. He was a veteran of the Spanish-American War. A man of sterling character, of kindness to children, of a quiet, conservative demeanour, he won the high esteem of all his acquaintances by whom his passing is deeply regretted. The funeral took place from his late residence Thursday morning, June 7th, to St. Columban's church, Rev. Father Baker officiating. The pall bearers were Messrs. H. W. Bowman. Chas. McTiernan, Oral Fetterly, Russell Helmer, Frank Roberts and Herbert Roberts. Interment was made in the family plot at Chesterville. Mass cards were received from Mrs. A. Helmer, Oral Fetterly, Miss H. Fox, wreath from The Boys, and spray from Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Carter and family. An aged sister. Rose Carroll, and several nieces, of Ludington, Mich., owing to illness they were unable to attend the funeral. They have the profound sympathy of a host of friends in their sad bereavement.

Mrs. Helmer desires to thank all the kind friends of Mr. Horan for the great kindness and assistance shown during his illness and after his death.

Farmer Murdered Near Alexandria

Going out to call his father for breakfast in the cold grey dawn of 6.15 a.m., Sunday, Elgene Laflamme, 12-year-old son of Albert Laflamme, 42-year-old prominent and respected farmer of St. Raphael's, near Alexandria, found his parent's dead body lying on the ground with what was later discovered to be a bullet wound in the neck. Much mystery shrouds the killing that has stirred all Glengarry county.

Police authorities are seeking Raoul Laflamme, missing brother of the dead man for an explanation of his movements over the week end and who, they contend, may be able to shed some light on the death which at the present has a number of puzzling angles.

The last seen of Laflamme alive was when he left his home to go to the farm barns. He had been looking after a horse. Earlier in the morning he had been to the barn and returned to the house. About 5.45 a.m. he is presumed to have left again to attend to the cows as was his usual morning practice.

Finds Dead Body.

A half hour later, the son, Eugene, stepped outside the house to call his father to breakfast. When his father failed to answer the calls he went in search of him and about 75 yards from the house found him lying on the ground.

A hasty examination convinced the son that his father was dead and running to the house he aroused other members of the family. Scrutiny of the body revealed a bullet wound through the neck and from this a large quantity of blood had flowed staining the ground. The victim's hands were in his trouser pockets, when he met death.

The police officers in making an examination could detect nothing but a single hole in the back of Laflamme's neck. No gun or weapon of any kind was found near the body and this showed, together with the fact that his hands were in his trousers' pockets, that he had not taken his own life.

Killer in Ambush.

From the position of the bullet hole it was supposed that he had been shot from the rear evidently from a woodpile ambush near where the body was found. No part of the man's clothing or the contents of his pockets had been disturbed so robbery is not considered a motive for the crime.

On being notified of the death of Laflamme, J. G. Harkness crown attorney of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, ordered a complete investigation.

The bullet, as revealed in an autopsy conducted by Dr. E. J. Dolan and Dr. E. Charbonneau, was located in the muscles on the left side of the neck and had traversed the spinal column.

Immediately following the autopsy, police officers in the Eastern Ontario district were notified of the crime and while identity of the murderer is suspected, positive proof of this is not yet available.

Mr. Laflamme, a highly respected resident of St. Raphael's is survived by his widow, his parents and two children.

THREE SENTENCED TO PENITENTIARY

Three young men, Henry Bergeon, Paul Bleou and Paul Beauregard, each claiming Motnreal as their home, were on Saturday sentenced by Police Magistrate Milligan to serve two years each in Kingston Penitentiary. They were arrested Friday night at Summerstown by Sergeant T. W. Cousans and Constable Berris of the Provincial Police and were charged with breaking in and entering and stealing silverware and other articles to the value of $1,000 from the summer home of Madame Casgrain, of Ottawa at Glenwalter, a few miles east of Cornwall. The boys had slept in the cells in the Cornwall police station two nights before they broke into Madame Casgrain's home. The trio had no money and most of the stolen articles were recovered by the provincial officers.

Winchester Township Boy Will be Head Of O.A.C.

Dr. George I. Christie, B.S.A., at present director of the Experimental Station and director of Extension at Purdue University, Indiana, will be the new president of Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, in succession to Dr. J. R. Reynolds, who recently resigned after eight years' service in that capacity. The appointment was announced by Hon. John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture, on Saturday. Dr. Christie, who is a native of Ontario, and was a student at the O.A.C., obtained his B.S.A. degree from Toronto University. He went to Iowa State College in 1903 for post-graduate work, and thereafter engaged in a wide range of activities across the border, but is well known in agricultural circles on this side of the line, and has a very high reputation in his chosen calling.

"Dr. Christie," said Hon. Mr. Martin in announcing the appoinment, "is regarded as one of the most brilliant graduates of the Ontario Agricultural College. He has made an outstanding contribution to American agriculture, and it is most gratifying to have him back to his native province at this time."

The career of the principal-designate has been one of continuous progress. He was born in 1881, on a farm near Winchester, Dundas County, in Eastern Ontario, the son of David and Mary Ann (Howes) Christie. After education in the local schools he attended the O.A.C., obtaining his degree of B.S.A. from the University of Toronto in 1902. He went across to Iowa State College for post-graduate work and received the degree of B.S.A. from that institution in 1903. After many years of splendid work in the States, Iowa College conferred upon him in 1925 the honorary degree of Doctor of Science. While, therefore, he has been engaged across the line for many years, he has kept in touch with his native province and is well known here. He has been much in demand as a speaker, combining unusual powers of thought with vigor and graceful expression.

Harry O'Connell On Trial Charge Of Murder

(Tuesday's Mail & Empire)

Harry O'Connell, the printer and bank janitor who shot his wife in their apartment at Dundas street west and Lansdowne Avenue on the evening of March 16, suffers from a delusional insanity, according to Dr. W. T. Parry, surgeon attached to the Toronto jail, who testified yesterday afternoon in the Assizes where O'Connell is now standing trial on a charge of murder.

Dr. Parry usually testines as a Crown witness but yesterday he was the first witness called by the defence. He declared that O'Connell's whole mentality had been warped by an intense jealously of his wife. This jealousy, said the doctor, was based on a delusion and O'Connell admitted that he knew that he had no cause to be jealous. Dr. Parry submitted that this was, in his opinion, an unfailing symptom of delusional insanity.

Stories of "Queer" Behaviour.

Even before the calling of Dr. Parry who was the first witness of the day, it became apparent that Defence Council Aubrey T. Maher was building up a defence of insanity. Stories of the "queer" behavior on the part of the accused during the three or four weeks preceding the tragedy were told, at Mr. Maher's questioning by Miss Hazel O'Connor, sister of the accused, and Victor McCarthy, a second cousin, both of whom lived at the apartment at Dundas and Lansdowne. Moreover, Edward McCarthy of Ottawa, great-uncle of O'Connell, who was wounded in the hip by another bullet fired by the accused on the night of the slaying, testified that the prisoner's maternal grandfather and a brother of the latter had both died in asylums.

Mr. Maher ran into a snag, however, when Mr. Justice Wright ruled against the admission of evidence relating to O'Connell's war experiences. The prisoner was a first contingent man and spent more than two years in German prison camps. Apparently, Mr. Maher wished to show that his experiences affected his mentality but the Judge ruled that evidence of such would be hearsay.

Expert medical advice will be called to-day by Mr. Maher and though Crown Prosecutor, W. S. Middlebro, K.C., announced the conclusion of his case yesterday afternoon, he too will summon alienists. As is customary, these witnesses will give their evidence in rebuttal when the case for the defence is finished. It is not likely that the case will go to the jury before to-morrow.

Dr. Parry Testifies.

Neatly dressed in a blue pin-striped suit, O'Connell sat throughout the day seldom raising his eyes. His head remained bent forward.

Dr. Parry stated that he had examined him in March, about a week after his admission to the jail. "It was not his actions, but what he told me that led me to believe he was insane," said the doctor.

O'Connell had told him that soon after he was married he had left his wife and gone to Cleveland for six months to learn the printing business. He said that his wife's letters had made him jealous of her. When he returned, his jealousy had increased. He said that it came upon him periodically, and during these times he was distressed, worried and could not eat or sleep. He would repress the feeling, but it always would recur.

"This delusion may seem insignificant to the layman but it is most significant to the doctor. It showed that his whole mentality was warped. He told me that he had not been drinking, that the drink he had on the night of the shooting was the first since a year ago last Christmas."

His Lordship declared that O'Connell's mental state at the present time or at any time subsequent to the shooting was not material. The question was whether he was insane when he shot his wife.

"Uncontrollable Act."

"Judging from the history of the case, I think he was insane at the time of the tragedy," said Dr. Parry. He admitted, however, that O'Connell would have known that he was shooting his wife and killing her.

To Mr. Middlebro Dr. Parry averred that it was not jealousy that made O.Connell shoot his wife—jealousy had merely been the starting point. In time it had become the delusion that put him out of his mind, and this had been the cause. Witness thought it was an uncontrollable act.

"An uncontrollable act resulting from ill temper or an actual disease of the mind?" asked Mr. Middlebro.

"I think it was from an actual disease of the mind," Dr. Parry replied.

Mr. Middlebro contended that O'Connell, in leaving the apartment and going downstairs to the bank and getting the revolvers, had had ample time to meditate the act. Further, nothing had happened in the apartment while he was there to excite jealousy.

To this, Dr. Parry replied that the delusion he had found was only an indication, not the whole material disorder. The presence of the McCarthys in the apartment might have made O'Connell suspicious.

"I suppose you will admit, doctor, that there are thousands of men who are suspicious of their wives without cause?" "Yes."

"But you would not say they were insane?" "Oh, no!"

Victor McCarthy and Miss Hazel O'Connell, both told of the occurrence which had led Miss O'Connell, who was a nurse in the Orthopedic Hospital, to telephone to Ottawa to Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy on the night before the tragedy. They had been upstairs talking, about ten o'clock in the evening, when, Victor said, he had heard O'Connell say to his wife something that sounded like: "All right, come ahead." Mrs. O'Connell had called to Hazel but when the two went downstairs, O'Connell had ordered them back upstairs.

"That was the only difference you had ever known Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell to have, yet it was enough to make you telephone Ottawa?" asked Mr. Middlebro.

"It was his appearance more than anything," McCarthy replied. "He seemed to be staring all the time. He didn't want to talk. Something seemed wrong with him."

The witness then detailed the chase about the apartment which ended with O'Connell shooting his wife and the subsequent struggle in which Victor and his father overcame him.

To Mr. Maher, Victor said that it was not drinking on O'Connell's part that had made him mention the household situation during a visit home two weeks before the slaying. The accused was acting "queerly."

Feared Insanity.

"I was in bed at about 11.30 o'clock one night three or four weeks before the tragedy," he related, "and Harry came to my room. He knocked on the door and I bade him come in. We had a cigarette together. He said 'I can't stay in that room any longer. If I stay in there I'll go crazy.' He was referring to his own room. His eyes were very stary and his whole body was twitching. His hands trembled. Then he said, 'I wonder if Pat Grady had anything to do with me going crazy.'"

The Pat Grady to whom he was referring was the maternal grandfather who, Edward McCarthy had previously testified, had died in an asylum.

On the next evening, said the witness, O'Connell had come home to find the supper table all set. "He walked around the room, then stopped and said 'There is no God!' As he said that, he kicked the table and knocked the dishes down.

"On the same night, he took a cigarette and lit 12 or 13 matches but did not put one to the cigarette. He threw them to different parts of the room. Then he lit the cigarette, but he afterwards struck three or four more matches and held the flames to the cigarette, atlhough it was already going. Then he got up and walked around the room and said, 'I'm going crazy.'"

Witness said O'Connell had been walking about the house and would not talk to anyone. He had also heard him wandering about the house at night.

Miss O'Connell Testifies.

Miss Hazel O'Connell, a pretty dark-haired girl, smartly dressed in navy blue trimmed with red, corroborated Victor's testimony. From the time of the table-kicking incident, he had got so that he would not carry on a conversation nor eat with the others. One Sunday she had asked him to explain his demeanor, but he had not said anything. One night, as she entered the apartment, he had hidden in the pantry.

"He seemed like another person altogether," she said. "He seemed to be watching everything in the house. I knew he wasn't himself, but I was not afraid of him until the night before, when I telephone Ottawa."

Detective Watson produced O'Connell's statement to the police in which the accused said he had no reason for shooting his wife. "I am a little hazy," it read in part. "If you wait until the morning I may be able to remember more, but what in hell I want to remember for, I don't know.

Joseph E. Decker, a fellow-worker of O'Connell's, at the Rolph-Clark-Stone printing and lithographing plant on Carlaw Avenue, testified that he had bought a quart of whisky for the accused at the liquor store at Gwynne Avenue and Queen Street West on the night of the shooting. O'Connell had had no permit of his own and witness had obliged him by buying the liquor for him.

Captain T. A. J. Brown of military headquarters, who was the first witness called by the defence produced military records, showing that O'Connell was pronounced medically unfit when he was discharged from the army in January, 1919. Among other things, he had been nervous and suffered with goitre.

FAINTING FAMILY

Fainting is contagious in the Duncan family of Newton, Mass., it seems. One day recently the father swooned and fell to the floor. Agitated by the sight, his wife did likewise; then the eldest son, seeing the plight of his parents, also passed out; while the younger son when he appeared on the scene was able to call a doctor before keeling over himself. All four were strewn about the floor unconscious when the physician arrived. but were restored quickly and went their way.

Successful Play At Finch

The three-act comedy drama "Yimmie Yonson's Yob," which was put on by the Young People's Dramatic Club of Chalmer's United church, Finch, in Massey Hall, Finch, on June 7th, was a decided success in every way and each player acted his or her part in a splendid manner.

The Swede, taken by Erroll Nephew, deserves special mention as the character part, though difficult, was impersonated by him with ease. "Sylvia," taken by Muriel Stewart, though probably the most difficult of all was mastered by her free of effort. The Irish cook, "Peg," taken by Alda Winters. Her sweetheart, "Mickey," taken by Cecil Droppo, was Irish too, by gorry. The father, "Mr. Kent," taken by Silas Farrell, though severe in his dealings with his adopted daughter, "Belle," taken by Alma Kennedy was just after all. "Mrs. Kent," taken by Mrs. Will Johnstone, was loved for her kindness to all. The detective, "Pal," taken by Phil Casselman, was always on the job and captured the thief, "Frank," taken by Roy Shaver, in the nick of time. The cook's helper, "Kittie," was taken by Marion Casselman.

The play, which is of a very difficult nature, was put on by the above amateurs in a professional manner. The players were coached by Mrs. Will Shaver and much credit is due her for the way in which the character parts were impersonated by all the caste and is probably the best play put on in Finch at any time by home talent.

Others taking part between acts were Miss Davidson, who sang sweetly, "Moonlight and Roses," responding to an encore; Miss Jennie Cameron and Margaret Casselman, a piano duet; Miss Jennie Cameron and Ferguson Stewart, a Hawaiian guitar duet, and Miss Jennie Cameron, Ferguson Stewart and Mrs. John Casselman, a trio—banjo, violin and piano.

The hall was packed to the doors with a very attentive audience and the proceeds amounted to $110.00.

THE LOST OXEN

One year a yoke of large six-year-old oxen disappeared strangely from the neighborhood and were never recovered. They were "sparked" oxen; that is, red and white in contrasting patches. Each had widespread horns anl a star in his face. They belonged to Jotham Edwards, who owned the farm next ours.

Edwards was one of those simple-minded, hard-working farmers who ought to prosper, but who never do. It is not easy to tell what the reason was for much of his ill fortune. Born under an unlucky planet, some people said; but that, of course, is childish. The real reason, doubtless, was lack of good judgment in his business enterprises.

Whatever he undertook nearly always turned out badly. His carts and plows broke unaccountably, his horses were strangely prone to run away and break things, and something was frequently the matter with his crops. Twice, I remember he broke a leg, and each time he had to lay on his back for six weeks for the bone to knit. Felons on his fingers tormented him; and it was a notable season that he did not have a big, painful boil or a bad cut from a scythe or from an axe. One mishap seemed to lead to another.

Jotham's constant ill fortune was the more noticeable among his neighbors because his father, Jonathan, had been a careful, prosperous farmer who had kept his place in excellent order raisd good crops and had the best cattle of anyone thereabouts. Within a few years after the place had passed under Jotham's control it was mortgaged, the buildings and fences were in bad repair, and the fields were in bad repair. and the fields were weedy. Yet that man worked summer and winter as hard and as steadily as ever a man did or could.

Two winters before he lost his oxen he had contracted with old Zack Lurvey to cut three hundred thousand feet of hemlock logs and draw them to the bank of a small river where in the spring they could be floated down to Lurvey's mills. For hauling the logs he had two yokes of oxen, the yoke of large six-year-olds that I have already described, and another yoke of small, white-faced cattle. During the first winter the off ox of the small, white-faced pair stepped into a hole between two roots, broke its leg and had to be killed. Afterwards Jotham worked the nigh ox in a crooked yoke in front of his larger oxen and went on with the job from December until March.

But, as all teamsters know, oxen that are worked hard all day in winter require corn meal or other equally nourishing provender in addition to hay. Now, Jotham had nothing for his team except hay of inferior quality. In consequence, as the winter advanced the cattle lost flesh and became very weak. By March they could scarcely walk with their loads, and at last there came a morning when Jotham could not get the older oxen to even rise to their feet. He was obliged to give up work with them, and finally came home after turning them loose to eat up what hay there was left at camp.

News of his act caused sharp comment. The old squire did not often concern himself with the affairs of his neighbors, but he went up to the logging camp with Jotham; and when he saw the pitiful condition the cattle were in he remonstrated with him.

"This is too bad," he said. "You have worked these oxen nearly to death and you haven't half fed them!"

"Wal, my oxen don't have to work any harder than I do!" Jotham replied angrily. "I ain't able to buy corn for them. They must work without it."

"You only lose by such a foolish course," the old squire said to him.

But Jotham was a man who could not easily be convinced of his errors. All his affairs were going badly; arguing with him only made him impatient.

The snow was now so soft that the oxen in their emaciated and weakened condition could not be driven home, and again Jonathan left them at the camp to help themselves to fodder. He promised, however, to send better hay and some potatoes up to them the next day. But during the following night a great storm set in that carried off nearly all the snow and caused such a freshet in the streams and the brooks that it was impractical to reach the camp for a week or longer. Then one night the small, white-faced ox made his appearance at the Erwards farm, having come home of his own accord.

The next morning Jotham went up on foot to see how his cattle were faring. The flood had now largely subsided; but it was plain that during the storm the water had flowed back round the camp to a depth of several feet. The oxen were nowhere to be seen, nor could he discern their tracks round the camp or in the woods that surrounded it. He tried to track them with a dog but without success.

Several of Jotham's neighbors assisted him in the search. Where the oxen had gone or what had become of them was a mystery; the party searched the forest for them in vain for a listance of five of six miles on all sides. Some of the men thought that the oxen had fallen into the stream and had drowned; it was not likely that they had been stolen. Jotham was at last obliged to buy another yoke of oxen in order to do his spring work on the farm.

Two years passed, and Jotham's oxen were almost forgotten. During the second winter, after the school had closed in the old squire's district, Willis Murch, a young friend of mine who lived near us, went on a trapping trip to the headwaters of Lurvey's Stream, where the oxen had disappeared and where he had a camp. One Saturday he came home for supplies and invited me to go back with him and spend Sunday. The distance was perhaps fourteen miles; and we had to travel on snowshoes, for at that time—it was February—the snow was nearly four feet deep in the woods. We had a fine time there in the camp that night and the next morning went to look at Willis' traps.

That afternoon, after we had got back to camp and cooked our dinner, Willis said to me, "Now, promise not to tell, I'll show you something that will make you laugh."

I promised readily enough, without thinking much about the matter.

"Come on, then," said he; and we put on our snowshoes again and prepared to start. But, though I questioned with growing curiosity, he would not tell me what we were to see. "Oh, you'll find out soon enough," he said.

Willis led off, and I followed. I should think we went as much as five miles through the black growth to the north of Willis' camp and came finally to a frozen brook, which we followed for a mile round to the northeast.

"I was prospecting up this way a week ago," Willis said, "I had an idea of setting traps on this brook. It flows into a large pond a little way ahead of us, but just before we get to the pond it winds through a swamp of little spotted maple, moose bush and alder.

"I guess it's beaver you're going to show me," I remarked.

"Guess again," said Willis. "But keep still. Step in my tracks and don't make the brush crack.'

The small growth was so thick that we could see only a little way ahead of us. Willis pushed slowly through it for a time; then, stopping short, he motioned me over his shoulder to come forward. Not twenty yards away I distinguished the red-and-white hair of a large animal that was browsing on a clump of bushes. It stood in a pathway trodden so deep into the snow that its legs were completely hidden. In surprise I saw that it had broad horns.

"Why, that's an ox!" I exclaimed.

"Yes," said Willis, laughing. "His mate is round here, too."

"Willis," I almost shouted, "they must be the oxen Jotham lost two years ago!"

"Sure!" said Willis "But don't make such a noise. There are moose here."

"Moose!" I whispered.

"There's a cow moose with two moose calves. When I was here last Thursday afternoon there were three deer with them. The snow's got so deep they are yarding here together. They get water at the brook, and I saw where they had dug down through the snow to get at the dry swamp grass underneath. They won't leave their yard if we don't scare them; they couldn't run in the deep snow."

We thought that probably the oxen had grown wild from being off in the woods so long. However, Willis advanced slowly toward them, calling, "Co-boss!" Seeing us coming and hearing human voices, the old ox lifted his muzzle toward us and snuffed genially. He did not appear to be afraid, but behaved as if he were glad to see us. The other one—old Broad—had been lying down out of sight near by in the deep pathway, but now he suddenly rose and stood staring at us. We aproached to within ten feet of them. They appeared to be in fairly good flesh, and their hair seemed very thick. Evidently they had wandered off from the logging camp and had been living a wild, free life ever since. In the small open meadows along the upper course of the stream there was plenty of grass. And , like deer, cattle will subsist in winter on the twigs of freshly grown bushes. Even such food as that, with freedom, was better than the cruel servitude of Jotham!

On going round to the far side of the yard we spied the three deer and her two yearling cales. They appeared unwilling to run away in the deep snow, but would not let us approach near enough to see them clearly through the bushes.

"You could shoot one of those deer," I said to Willis; but he declared he never would shoot a deer or a moose when it was snowbound in ayard.

We lingered near the yard for an hour or more. By speaking kindly to the oxen I found that I could go very close to them; they had by no means forgotten human beings. On our way back to Willis' camp he reminded me of my promise. "Now, don't you tell where those oxen are; don't tell anybody!"

"But, Willis, don't you think Jotham ought to know?" I asked.

"No, I don't!" Willis exclaimed. "He has abused those oxen enough! They got away from him, and I'm glad of it! I'll never tell him where they are!"

We argued the question all the way to camp, and at last Willis said bluntly that he should not have taken me to see them if he had thought that I would tell. "You promised not to," said he. That was true, and there the matter rested overnight.

When I started home the next morning Willis walked with me for two miles or more. We had not mentioned Jonathan's oxen since the previous afternoon; but I plainly saw that Willis had been thinking the matter over, for, after we separated and had each gone a few steps on his way, he called after me:

"Are you going to tell about that?"

"No," said I, and walked on.

"Well, if you're not going to feel right about it, ask the old squire what he thinks. If he thinks that Jotham ought to be told, perhaps you had better tell him." And Willis hastened away.

But on reaching home I found that the old squire had left for Portland ing his lumber and was not to return for a week. So I said nothing to anya week. So I said nothing to anyone. The night after he got back I watched for a chance to speak with him alone. After supper he went into the sitting room to look overhis lumber accounts, and I stole in after him.

"You remember Jotham's oxen, gramp?" I began.

"Why, yes," said he, looking up.

"Well, I know where they are," I continued.

"Where?" he exclaimed in astonishment.

I then told him him where Willis had found them and about the yard and the moose and deer we had seen with the oxen. "Willis doesn't want Jotham told," I added. "He says Jotham has abused those oxen enough, and that he is glad they got away from him. He made me promise not to tell anyone at first, but finally said I might tell you, and that we should do as you thought best."

The old squire gave me an odd look. Then he laughed and resumed his accounts for what seemed to me a long while. I had the feeling that he wished I had not told him.

At last he looked up. "I suppose, now that we have found this out, Jotham will have to be told. They are his oxen, of course, and we should not feel right if we were to keep this from him. It wouldn't be quite the neighborly thing to do—to conceal it. So you had better go over and tell him.

Almost everyone likes to carry news whether good or bad; and within fifteen minutes I had reached the Edwards farmhouse. Jotham, who was taking a late supper, came to the door.

"What will you give to know where your lost oxen are?" I cried.

"Where are they? Do you know?" he exclaimed. Then I told him where Willis and I had seen them. "Wal, I vum!" said Jotham. "Left me and took to the woods! And I've lost two years' work from 'em!"

For a moment I was sorry I had told him.

The next day he journeyed up to Willis' camp with several neighbors; and from there they all snowshoed to the yard to see the oxen and the moose. The strangely assorted little herd was still there, and, so far as could be judged, no one else had discovered them.

Jotham had intended to drive the oxen home; but the party found the snow so deep that they thought it best to leave them where they were for a while. Since it was now the first week of March, the snow could be expected to settle considerably within a fortnight.

I think it was the eighteenth of the month when Jotham and four other men finally went to get the oxen. They took a gun, with the intention of shooting one or more of the deer. A disagreeable surprise awaited them at the yard.

At that time—it was before the days of game wardens—what were known as "meat-and-hide-hunters" often came down over the boundary from Canada and slaughtered moose and deer while the animals were snowbound. The lawless poachers frequently came in parties and sometimes searched the woods for twenty or thirty miles below the line in quest of yards.

Apparently such a raiding party had found Willis' yard and had shot not only the six deer and moose but Jotham's oxen as well. Blood on the snow and refuse where the animals had been hung up for skinning and dressing made what had happened only two plain.

Poor Jotham came home much cast down.

"That's just my luck!" he lamented. "Everything always goes just that way with me!"

Fall-Grown Cereals

(Experimental Farms Note.)

The growing of fall wheat and fall rye in Canada is limited to those sections where these crops winter over successfully. The former occupies less than four per cent. of the area devoted to wheat in Canada, while the latter occupies over eighty per cent. of the area devoted to rye. Western Ontario is the chief zone where these crops are grown, while smaller acreages are found further East.

The chief advantage of a fall sown cereal is the extra yield obtained, providing winter killing does not occur. The plants already have a root system developed and begin growing in the spring before the spring crops are even sown. This enables them to do their tillering before the drier weather of summer commences.

Among our heaviest yielding varieties are the white wheats of which Dawson's Golden Chaff and O.A.C. 104 are the best representatives. These are relatively hardy and usually bring the farmer a good return from his acreage. 'About the best known of our red wheats, and which has proven to be quite hardy, is Kharkov 22 M. C. This variety, although it does not rank as high as some of the la productions in winter hardiness, is of our best known high qualit ter wheats in Canada. In Rosen and Petkus have high yields in grain but limited to those areas killing is not serious.

Probably the most s fall sown crops is throu ing. After insuring t variety is being used, i to consider the cultural Selection of well-drained vision for surface draina necessary, for no variety heaving, or smothering and ice in the spring. The be sown early enough in t to insure good growth of ro and the application of arti tlizers (nitrates and phospha s) for greater yields and better quality should be given consideration.

Then again much loss in yield and price is incurred from smut. Stinking smut or bunt makes deep inroads on the returns, which can easily be prevented by simple treatment. The se for the winter wheat crop when properly treated with formalin solution or dusted with copper carbonate before seeding will substantially free the crop from the above smut, especially if care is taken in removing all smut balls.

Winter wheat provides a cash crop for the farmer and is in good demand by the manufacturers of cereal breakfast foods, biscuit, cake and pastry trade, and as a poultry feed. Rye is useful for its grain and also has a place as a cover crop, hay crop, and for fall and spring pasture.
