Armed Robber Holds Up Cornwall Store

An armed robber walked into a downtown branch of Dominion Stores, Limited, at Cornwall Monday afternoon and calmly demanded the contents of the cash register.

"Hand over the money," he ordered covering the lone clerk with a revolver. The clerk had no alternative but to comply. As he started toward the till a woman customer entered the store, the robber promptly pocketed his gun but kept the muzzle toward the clerk.

"I'll be in again to-morrow" he declared and left hurriedly. City and provincial police combed the neigbourhood but failed to locate the hold-up man.

Noted Author Appreciates The Home-Town Paper

Mrs. Amelia McMillan Lambkin, of Brooklyn, a former Chesterville girl, widely known as the author of "Buckskin and Ermine," in renewing her subscription, writes:

"Since I had intended being home this summer I have not sent in my renewal before, but as I am now not sure as to just when I will be back, I think it best to just send it on that I may know it is settled for, as I should be entirely lost without my "Record." I look for it as one does for a letter from one who always tells much news, and through its columns I have been able to keep in touch with the many dear, old neighbours and friends back home who otherwise would have moved away, married and been lost to me. I can always see just who of the old-timers are visiting back home and who are gone and of the young folks it is a great pleasure to note their success in school and college. In fact the old homepaper is really one of my pleasureable-necessities.

The weather here has cooled off a bit, but it has been unbearable at times.

I hope to see all the old friends sometime this summer.

I am enclosing M. Order for two years' subscription, Mr. Lacey.

One of the old-home-town,
Amelia MacMillan Lambkin.

Huge Picnic Planned For Cornwall Kids

The biggest thing in the way of a free community picnic ever put over in Cornwall is to be staged at Stonehouse Point, a few miles east of the town, on Dednesday, July 22nd, when all the children of the town who sellom have an opportunity of enjoying a day at the beach are to be given a day's treat. Mayor Horovitz evolved the idea and at a meeting at the Council chambers local committees were formed to carry it into effect. George D. Gillies was appointed chairman of the event, W. Mack Alguire will have charge of the water sports. W. A. Houston arranged the responsibility of arranging for autos to carry the boys anr girls from Central Park to the picnic grounds and the Daughters of the Empire are to provide 3,000 sandwiches. There will also be 1,000 half-pints of milk for the kiddies, donated by local dairies, 50 pounls of peanuts, 20 gallone of ice cream and many other nice things. R. J. Craig, owner of the property, has placed the grounds at the disposal of the mayor and those associated with him, and if the youngsters do not have oneg rand and glorious feeding it will not be the fault of those who have charge of the outing, which will be the first of its kind ever held here. The kiddies are looking forward to the event with great glee.

Sunday Fire at Winchester Causes $4,000 Loss

Fire, believed to have started from an electric stove, almost completely destroyed the duplex residence of Mrs. Jay Nesbitt, located on Victoria street, Winchester. The blaze started about 11.40 a.m. but was not noticed until about 12 o'clock as most of the neighbours were at church. The occupants of the east side, Mr. Pierce and family, had just left on a motor trip to Smiths Falls, and it was on their premises that the fire started. It made such headway when noticed it took almost an hour with three steady streams of water being played on the burning building before it was brought under control. The west side of the residence was occupied by Harvey Nesbitt and practically all his household furnishings were carried to safety, but Mr. Pierce, the other occupant, lost everything.

Alfred Bostock, one of the fire fighters, was severely cut on the arm by a broken window. He was taken to Dr. Malloch's office. The gash required several stitches and the man was left in a very weakened condition due to loss of blood. The other fireman was W. E. Ridout, who received a bad cut in the leg when he was cut by a piece of flying glass.

Mrs. Nesbitt estimates the total loss at about $4,000. Fortunately, both tenants had everything well insured. In addition to the building and contents being damaged several neighbouring gardens were trampled by the crowds that gathered.

Relief Committee Organizes

Realizing that during the coming winter there may be many instances where local relief work, particularly for children, will be found necessary and helpful, a number of ladies have organized a Relief Committee for the purpose of rendering voluntary assistance in the way of clothing, etc., same to be distributed where the committee feels the need is greatest. Mr. Wesley Fulton has kindly given the use of rooms for the purpose of carrying on this work, and all those interested are invited to attend a meeting on Saturday afternoon at 2.30 in the rooms adjoining Dr. Dodd's office, over the Post Office.

Anyone having old clothing or other donations, will materially assist the committee by arranging to have some sent to these rooms or by notifying one of the following committee who will arrange to have it collected.

Mrs. H. H. Casselman, Pres.; Mrs. J. G. Tate, vice-pres.; Mrs. P. S. Boyd, sec.-treas. Committee—Mrs. L. H. Doering, Mrs. Jas. McAvoy.

While Working in Field Struck by Stray Bullet

A stray shot, believed to have been fired by a bird-hunting neighbour, seriously wounded Patrick Houlehan, 18, while he was at work on a farm near Toyes Hill on Saturday. Young Houlehan is a patient at the Brockville General Hospital and is reported to be recovering.

Houlehan was hoeing turnips in a field when something struck his left shoulder. At first, he believed that he had been struck by a stone, as no shot was heard, but soon discovered that a bullet had lodged in his flesh. He was taken to Brockville where X-ray examination revealed the slug, deeply imbedded in the shoulder.

Provincial police learned that two neighbours had been shooting sparrows on a nearby farm at the time that the accident happened. One shot was fired from a .32 calibre gun and it is believed to have been this bullet that struck the boy.

Young Newington Girl Shot By Companion

Margaret Rupert, 16-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Rupert, Newington, was in a critical condition at Cornwall General Hospital as a result of a week end shooting accident. The girl is reported to have a chance for recovery.

On Saturday afternoon, Miss Rupert was playing about the farm of John McLaughlin at Newington with Harold Steele, aged 14. The children chanced to enter a milk house where young Steele saw a .22 calibre rifle hanging on the wall. Taking it down, he is stated to have pointed it at the girl and pulled the trigger, unaware that the weapon was loaded.

The shot entered the girl's breast, passing within an inch of her heart, and lodged in the left shoulder, about an inch below the surface. Dr. J. M. Pollock, of Avonmore, was called and had the child taken to Cornwall hospital where the bullet was extracted.

$1,600 Shortage In Tax Returns

Pembroke, Ont., July 15.—A special audit of the books of the Townships of Ross, Buchanan and Wylie has revealed a shortage of $1,600 in returns of the tax collector, Patrick McCarthy, of Wylie. The shortage is over a period of five years.

When the last regular audit of the books was made in February, council was not satisfied that everything was right, and it was suspected that there was a shortage in the collectors returns. Accordingly, M. J. Howe, of Pembroke, was engaged to make a special audit of the books, and when this was completed a few days ago, it was found that the collector was short $1,600.

While admitting that he knew there was a shortage McCarthy claimed that he did not know where the money went to. A special meeting of the council was held yesterday, and it was decided to take no action against the collector, to retain his services and allow him to make up the shortage.

After making the audit, Mr. Howe was strong in his criticism of the township's method of bookkeeping, which he claimed is very slipshod. He strongly advocated installation of a better system of bookkeeping in order to avoid a recurrence of the present situation. McCarthy's salary is $150 a year, payable when the tax roll for the year is turned in completely collected. A few days ago he was paid for his work on the 1925 tax roll, but for his work since that year, has received no remuneration from the township.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Sixteen countries have already announced their intention of taking part in the World's Grain Exhibition and Conference to be held at Regina from July 25 to August 6, 1932.

The importance of Eastern Ontario in the dairying industry of the province is indicated by the fact that over 650 cheese factories are operating east of Toronto as compared with 85 factories west of Toronto. These figures were recently compiled by Geo. H. Barr, Director of the Dairy Branch of the Department.

The Ideal Exhibit

Addressing the annual convention of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, recently, L. H. Newman, Dominion Cerealist, summarized the essentials of the ideal exhibit as follows: "The ideal exhibit might be defined as one consisting of kernels typical of the variety and as nearly alike as possible in size, shape and colour. The whole exhibit should present a sound, vigorous, lustruos, vital appearance, and should be free from all impurities and all evidence of disease or unsoundness."

It is also of interest to note that Mr. Newman strongly advocates the application of the growing test to determine the true worth of the seed sample before prize awards are finally made.

Nutritional Deficiency In Cattle

When your cows start chewing the rail fence or cleaning up on the old shoes, it is time to look into the food supply question and find out just what makes them want to fill up on wood and leather when hay and chop are available. A recent survey of Ontario conditions by members of the O. A. C. and the O. V. C. staffs makes clear that nutritional deficiency diseases are very evident especially in the counties of Bruce and Grey.

Phosphorus and calcium are the two most important mineral elements in the animal body since they greatly influence muscular movement, the clotting of blood and the digestive processes. Iodine is also important in that it affects the thyroid gland and hence the growth of the animal.

Depraved appetites and stiffness are sure symptoms of disease, which can be combatted only by supplying the necessary mineral elements.

Roughage of a leguminous nature, such as alfalfa and clover hay are excellent for this purpose as is the feeding of iodized salt. Exposure to sunlight is essential, while clean and sanitary conditions combined with regular brushing and combing will do muc hto stimulate the porduction of vitamins connected with mineral absorption.

Preserve The Woodlot

Steps will be taken to conserve the woodlands of Middlesex County. I. C. Marritt, Ontario Forestry Department, visited the county recently to arrange for giving farmers of the county assistance and advice in regard to preserving their woodland, which is now only ten per cent of the acreage of the county.

"There is too strong a tendency for farmers to sell their wood, and particularly at the present time without any regard to the preserving of their woods for the future," stated Mr. Marrit. One thing that is done consistently and which is not looked upon as any great harm to the woodlands is allowing cattle in he stated. Cattle eat the small trees and do considerable damage to the source of the forest of to-morrow.

Get Rid of the Roosters

Many farmers, through sheer force of habit, still keep too many roosters in the flock during the summer season. A farmer who keeps 100 or 200 hens for laying purposes has no need to allow any roosters to run with them. The farmer who is producing eggs for market will be well advised if he will pick out the cockerels or year old roosters or others if very valuable—which he expects to need next spring—and segregate them. Keep them away from the hens, most of the time at least, until next February or March, according to the time when he intends to start hatching again. Keeping roosters, now that hatcheries are used so generally is a needless expense after the hatching season closes.

Red Clover and Alfalfa Seed

Reports from field representatives show that red clover came through the winter in excellent condition and has made unusual development since. The stands are exceptionally strong and thick. From a seed production standpoint this condition is not wholly desirable, since strong, sappy plants of legumes do not usually seed well, and the best seed fields are procured in moderately dry seasons when growth is less rank. Evidently the best hope for seed of either red clover or alfalfa this year is in the second cut, as fields which are cut for hay early, not later later than the last week in June, should be fairly promising of a seed crop. Farmers should use home-grown clover seed because of its superior hardiness and adaptability to native conditions. Besides home-grown seed of red clover and alfalfa usually commands a substantial premium over imported seeds of these kinds. Imported red clover and alfalfa seed is known by the presence of green or red stained seed required by government regulation to identify it as foreign seed.

Weekly Crop Report

Reports submitted by district representatives would indicate that all over Ontario farmers are going to reap bountiful harvests. A bumper crop of fall wheat is practically assured. Barley and oats are heading out heavily. Cutting of a heavy crop of alfalfa and clover is general. A good crop of peas for canning is assured, while early potatoes are in bloom and promising, and root crops generally are showing satisfactory growth. Early beans suffered from the weevil, but those sown later are doing well. Tree fruits are promising. The cutworm has been active in the tobacco fields and a small percentage of the crop will be spotty. On the whole the warm weather with occasional showers has been most favourable for the growth and the outlook is most encouraging.

Watch Effect of Fertilizer

If you applied fertilizer to your lands last spring much can be learned by watching their effect on growing crops. Experience has shown that properly chosen fertilizers produce six important results: (1) They increase stalk or straw growth, (2) They strengthen the crop to resist disease, (3) They hasten the growth of the crop so that it ripens days earlier, (4) They increase yield, (5) They improve the catch of grasses and clovers, (6) They improve the quality of product. Whether these results are obtainable depends upon the condition of the soil, as to drainage, soil reaction,supply of organic matter and wisdom in the choice of fertilizers. They must be chosen to suit the special needs of the crop and make up for soil deficiencies. Here are some things to watch as the season advances: Is there a stronger growth on the fertilized than on the unfertilized lands? Has the fertilized crop ripened earlier? Has there been more or less disease in the fertilized crop? Has there been more or less insect injury? What was the comparative yield per acre? What difference in quality of product do you note? Assistance in your troublesome fertilizer problems will be gladly given by your agricultural representative or by the O. A. C.

Swine Work at O. A. C.

Speaking before members of the Ontario Swine Breeders' Association at the O. A. C. recently, Prof. R. G. Knox, swine specialist at the college, outlined some of the work which had been going on in his department. One of the leading problems which had been studied recently was pernicious anaemia of young pigs, a disease which accounts for the death of a large number of young pigs every year in Ontario. In co-operation with the staff of the Ontario Veterinary College much progress has been made and a reasonably sure remedy is under test at the present time.

The policy of using pure bred stock in the breeding industry was justified by the results of a five-year experiment with a number of pure bred and cross bred hogs kept under similar conditions, the pure bred stock coming out on top owing to their extra quality.

Mystery of Vitamins Discussed by Doctors

Vancouver.—Medical science still knows comparatively little about the necessities and supply of vitamins, although it recognizes that they "produce profound changes in growth," Dr. F. F. Tisdal, of Toronto, declared in a scientific session of the Canadian Medical Association.

"Everyone in the world seems to know all about vitamins but the medical profession," he remarked. After demonstration by slides the results of experiments with vitamin diets he concluded by stating that, as a practical application of what is known, a diet of milk, meat, eggs, vegetables and fruits should go a long way in supplying the essentials to proper nutrition.

Fifty per cent of our diet to-day is made up of refined flour and sugars, he said, which is lacking vitamins and almost lacking in proteins. The problem lies in seeing that the amounts necessary to make up this deficiency are found in the remainder of the diet.

"The deficiency of a vital element cannot be made up by taking an excess of another," he added. Experiments had proved this. It had also been demonstrated that when fed on special foods children had reached greater growth than those fed on a "normal" diet.

The difference in vitality between the Oriental and the Occidental people had been traced to diet by an authority, he said.

At least ten minerals are essential to life, said Dr. Tisdall, ,but all except three are found in sufficient quantities in our normal diets. The three are calcium, iron and iodine.

Former Winchester Girl Killed In Motor Accident

Kemptville, Thursday, July 9.—While proceeding to Kemptville to pay a visit to her mother and sister Mary, who was to have had a minor operation to-morrow, Miss Laura Shaver, a nurse in the Civic Hospital with the last dav of her course tomorrow, was hurled to her death this afternoon from a roadster which a friend, John England, 277 Cooper street, Ottawa, had loaned her.

Miss Shaver was alone in the car at the time of the accident; but, according to an eye-witness, R. E. Moffatt, of Carsonby, Miss Shaver was trying to take a curve at a dangerous rate of speed and was unable to straighten the car onto the stretch, with the result that after crossing the road several times, the car turned over in the west ditch, throwing Miss Shaver into the ditch and causing a fracture to the base of the skull.

She died about ten minutes later without regaining consciousness and before medical aid arrived. The remains were removed to Ottawa, where an inquest was opened this evening, being adjourned until next Tuesday.

Miss Shaver was the elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Shaver of this town and was born in Mountain 21 years ago and moved with her parents to Winchester where she resided for several years prior to coming to Kemptville about six years ago. Besides he parents, she is survived by two brothers, Levius, of Montreal, and Jack at home, and one sister, Mary, also at home.

AVOIDING LOSSES FROM SOUR MILK

Experimental Farms Note

EVERY WARM SPELL sees hundreds of farmers lose money through milk being sour on arrival at the milk plant. How can such losses be avoided?

Nowadays it is generally realized that souring of milk results from excessive bacterial growth. Consequently the first step is obviously to protect the milk from contamination with bacteria, especially from the main sources—dirty cows and unsterilized utensils and equipment. Milking machines in particular add large numbers of bacteria when not properly cared for. The shipping can, although generally leaving the dealers in good condition, when next used often contains enormous numbers of bacteria growing in the traces of moisture remaining inside. For destroying this growth, as well as for sterilizing the other metal utensils, a hypochlorite rinse is most effective, as tests conducted by the Division of Bacteriology, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, have shown. For directions, see Circular No. 64, "The Washing and Sterilizing of Farm Dairy Utensils."

Since even the most carefully handled milk contains some bacteria, it is necessary to check their growth by cooling to below fifty degrees, Fahrenheit, and holding below that point. Promptness in cooling helps to conserve the natural "bacterial growth restraining" property of freshly drawn milk, which is of real protective value where milk encounters high temperatures during shipment. Probably the greatest single aid to cooling is a well-insulated covered tank. Such a tank, with either electric refrigeration or an ample supply of ice, is far more efficient than the old-style open concrete tank, saving an enormous amount of ice and labour, besides cooling the milk more rapidly and thus improving the keeping quality. The provision of such a cooling tank is good insurance against losses from sour milk.

Central Canada Exhibition Will be Big Show

Announcements were made by the Directors of the Central Canada Exhibition Association in connection with their 44th annual exhibition opening in Ottawa August 24th, and continuing through August 29th indicate that the directors have made no curtailments through fear of hard times. In fact the directors feel that exhibitions make for better times for all classes of the community and so the programme for this year, it is confidentially promised, will set a new standard for excellence.

Live stock and agriculture continues to be the backbone of the exhibition and this year augmented prize lists and new features will appeal to rural visitors. Innovations include boys' and girls' calf clubs, colt showmanship, domestic science judging, and various other factors in the junior agricultural department. Extra purses also have been offered for the trials of speed, horse racing appealing to both rural and urban visitors.

For some time the free concerts by an outstanding band have been features attracting thousands of music lovers. This year the directors are spending more money than ever before to get the best band available, Cavallo and his Band of 58 artists. This musical organization will be the feature band for the Toronto Exhibition, the directors of which very kindly allowed the band to accept the Ottawa engagement before going to Toronto.

"Sensations of 1931" will be the premier offering in front of the grandstand. This is an Edgar I. Schooley production, a musical and dance revue with Broadway stars, pretty girls, gorgeous stage setting, elaborate lighting effects, bewitching costumes, clever humour, tuneful lodies, and snappy dances. The production will be presented from a large outdoor stage and amplifiers will ensure the enjoyment of the music and comedy. The other numbers on the grandstand programme are the pick of the offerings by the New York booking agents. This will be the strongest programme ever assembled for the exhibition is the claim made by the directors.

Balloon ascenions and parachute drops, aerobatics, a new, bigger midway, Dominion and Ontario Government exhibits, live fish, wild animals and game birds from the Ontario Government, a pair of Buffalo and a calf from the Dominion Government, automobile show, pure food show, horticultural displays, dog show, child welfare, hobby show, exhibits by merchants and manufacturers, live stock, poultry and pets, grain exhibits, horse show programmes in the Coliseum and a hundred and one other factors will combine to make the exhibition such that visitors no longer can count on seeing it in one day.

Reduced rates are offered by all railways for exhibition week and for those who travel by automobile special parking areas inside the grounds have been provided.

Any information as to entries, prize lists or any feature of the exhibition will be cheerfully given. A card to H. H. McElroy, Manager & Secretary, Central Canada Exhibition, Journal Building, Ottawa, will bring an immediate response.

A woman scientist, Miss Florence Buchanan, D. Sc., of Museum road, Oxford, England, who suffered from failing eyesight and eventual blindness, directed in her will that her eyes should be saved for science. She stated that she wished her eyes to be removed as soon as possible after her death and preserved with a view to examination. She left $1,250 for this examination and for the publication of its results, and she also left her own account of the state of her eyes compiled from observations since 1922. She died last March and left property of the value of $58,645.

Steinburg Hanged at Toronto For Murder of Nephew

Toronto, July 14.—"Go ahead and hang the Jew," were the last words of Abraham Steinberg as he paid with his life on the scaffold here to-day for the murder of his nephew, Samuel Goldberg.

The trap was sprung at 8.03 and at 8.07 death was pronounced instantaneous. The coroner's jury customary in such cases will be sworn in to-day and Steinberg's body delivered to his family.

Cool to the last, the prisoner kept repeating in his last march from the death cell to the gallows "Christ was the first, The Jew was the second. They hang the Jew for someone else."

Before he left the death cell he repeated the declaration he has made repeatedly during the long fight waged on his behalf, "I am innocent."

The case of Abraham Steinberg brought to an end to-day by his execution has been a centre of legal and popular interest for more than a year. Accused of the murder of Samuel Goldberg, his nephew and partner in business, two trials, appeals to the appellate division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, to the Supreme Court of Canada, and finally to the Governor General in Council failed to save Steinberg from the gallows.

Friends of the condemned man rallied to his assistance and, when appeals to the courts failed, circulated petitions. More than 30,000 persons signed the petitions urging the exercise of executive clemency on the Dominion Cabinet.

The ever perplexing problem of circumstantial evidence lent hope to the sponsors of the appeal to the last. Another factor casting doubt on Steinberg's guilt, it was claimed, was the admission of James Creighton, an inmate of the Don Jail, who claimed Steinberg confessed the crime to him while he was in jail awaiting trial.

The body of Goldberg was found on the premises where he and Steinberg had carried on business together. He had been killed with a revolver bullet and the building had then been set on fire. In the back yard was found the revolver and evidence that this belonged to Steinberg was produced. Further Crown evidence was to the effect that a man with a gray coat had entered the shop where thee murdered man was later found. Other witnesses swore that Steinberg had worn a gray coat on the night of the murder.

At the first trial the jury disagreed. At the second trial the Crown produced a new witness, the jail inmate, who recounted Steinberg's alleged admission. Defence counsel sought to attack the credibility of Creighton's evidence by showing that he was mentally abnormal, but the trial judge ruled this out that it was made at the wrong point in the trial.

The appeal to the appellate division turned on the propriety of the judge's ruling and a majority of the judges upheld it. It was a two to three decision with Chief Justice Sir William Mulock and Mr. Justice Grant favouring a new trial. The division of opinion in the Ontario appeal court entitled Steinberg to an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. This court, however, by a unanimous decision upheld the conviction and nothing was left but a plea to the Dominion Cabinet to exercise the powers of clemency reposed in it, which transcend even the law and the courts.

The appeal was pushed with great vigour, Col. T. Herbert Lennox, K.C., M. P., and I. F. Mellmuth, K. C., laid the case before Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, and presented the petition bearing the thousands of names Full and careful consideration was given by the Cabinet to all factors in the case but the decision was that no interference with the course of the law was justified.

During this long legal battle from the time of the murder in March, 1930, until to-day, Steinberg has been in prison. The certain knowledge that he was to die came to him only a single day before his execution. The decision of the Cabinet became known Sunday night but the condemned man's spiritual adviser did not advise him of it until Monday morning.

ALL-GLASS HOUSE BUILT

A THREE-STOREY glass house—first of its kind to be inhabited for domestic purposes—has just been completed in the Rue St. Guillaume, Paris.

The owner-tenant is very enthusiastic about it, and prophesies many more for the future.

The building is constructed of translucent glass—ordinary St. Gobain unpolished glass—and at this time of year is naturally lighted from 6 a.m. until sunset.

Its situation commands the maximum benefit of the day's sunshine and the light rays penetrating through the glass walls give a wonderful diffused lighting effect which is delightfully restful to the eyes.

The architect, M. Pierre Chareau, claims that glass houses will be the dwelling of the future. He says the walls are solid as brick and unbreakable, and for permanency brick and stone buildings cannot be compared with them.

It is not possible to see inside from the outside of the house, not even the shadows of persons moving about being visible.

Max Schmeling Claims Injury Plans Terminated for Bout

Max Schmeling, heavyweight boxing champion of the world, can do no training or boxing for at least two and probably three months, because of the left eye he injured in his fifteen round title defence against W. L. Stribling in Cleveland July 3rd.

Eye specialists, called in by the champion within 24 hours after his return home from the fistic wars, warned him that he must take a complete rest for several months. Their decision probably puts an end to negotiations in New York leading up to another championship match in the United States in September with Primo Carnera, the Italian giant, as the contender.

Athough Schmeling attributed the injury to the fact that Stribling stuck his gloved thumb in the champion's eye in the first round, the flesh about the eye was swollen and discoloured from right hand punches landed by the southern challenger in the first four rounds. Until the champion found his fighting stride, Stribling hit him freely on the left side of the face with jabs.

The flesh about Schmeling's left eye was swollen during the fight and the next day a deep discolouration about the eye was the only outward mark of battle the champion bore.

Girls Enjoy Fine Outing At Broder Island Camp

About 65 girls, with their ten leaders, enjoyed the outdoor life at Broder Park last week, and broke camp on Monday. Under the expert guidance of Miss Genevieve Brock, who was sent to the Broder Island Girls' Work Camp this year by the Board, comes from Toronto and has had much experience in camp leadership. The girls found the camping one round of pleasure. Even tedious duties take on a sporting air when they are done in the camping spirit, and everything was run off with the smoothness that experienced guidance allows.

The staff assisting Miss Brock was Mrs. J. S. Saunder, Prescott, acting as Camp Mother; Miss Helen Forward, of Chesterville, camp nurse; Miss Jean Nelson, of Keene, Ont., swimming instructor, and herself a master of the arts of swimming and diving; Miss Mabel Waddell, of Winchester, handled the land sports; Miss Eva Thorpe, of South Mountain, taught handicraft; Miss Mabel McKay, Arnprior, taught literature and poetry; Miss Florence Waddell, of Brinston, instructor on world friendship, or Race Relations, and business manager, Mrs. J. C. Gildrer, of Iroquois.

An outline of a day's work follows: It must be understood, of course that every day has its own ,variations which makes camp life liveable. The whistle is first heard through disturbed dreams at seven a.m., and the girls are awakened by a short work-out on land and then a dip in the St. Lawrence. The morning watch follows at 7.15 with flag raising soon after. Breakfast is welcomed by eight o'clock, after which the girls tidy up their tents and the camp for the day. At 9.30 a worship service is held, followed by Bible Study. A camp council is then held at 10.15, and after that come games and sports Interest groups hold attention from from 11.15 until 12.30 when dinner is next on the programme.

Dinner is over at 1.30 p.m., and handicraft classes are held, being necessarily divided due to the size of the class. Tuck is distributed at this time to those not busy at classwork. At 2.45 a general free time is given, with games, swimming, and hikes being partaken of by the campers. At 4.15 the whistle bows for more interest groups, being mostly world friendship, handicraft, dramatics and literature and poetry. At 5.30 comes supper followed by a vesper service. Then games sports and the campfire close the day's activities, and "lights out" comes soon after 9.30.

For interest, as well as convenience sake, the camp was grouped in seven Indian tribes, with Indian names, chiefs and big chiefs. They were named Onandago, Blackfeet, Mohawks, Wanakita, Kitchikiwana, Keewaydins and Cheewah, and Tuesday night the groups took turns in initiating each other. An Indian ceremonial initiation was held, and included a treasure hunt over the island. The tribal idea is a help in several ways.

Features of the week were marshmallow roasts, parties, sing-songs, and singing of new songs and old-timers. Upon arriving, the girls spent some time filling their ticks with straw from the island, and many an uncomfortable time was spent that night locating the thistles and sticks that managed to get in unawares. Each morning a tent inspection was held with honourary awards for the first, second and third best tents in the camp.

At the 1931 camp there were numerous good swimmers and divers, and at swim time in the afternoon the water at the island was crowded with enthusiastic mermaids in suits of all colours and designs, and not one letting the other do a trick without trying it herself. Consequently, backward somersaults, jack-knife dives and the flops and splashes of beginners were always to be seen, and heard, during the swim hour. If appearances count, the girls this year had one swell time in Broder Park.

CUTTING DOWN ON TIME

London Advertiser

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT is turning from the airship to the airplane for overseas use. It is building a flying boat larger than the German DO-X, with a speed of 145 miles an hour and accommodation for forty passengers. Such a boat could fly from Ireland to Newfoundland in less than half a day, and from Quebec to Liverpool in 17 hours.

A man had been standing in front of the clothing store for about an hour. A brisk young clerk, scenting a sale, stepped out and spoke to him.

"What time is it?" asked the man.

The clerk looked at his watch and replied:

"Five-five."

"Well," was the answer, "I'll stick around a little longer; I'm waiting for them pants," and he pointed to a pair of trousers bearing the sign: "Given away at 5.20."

Grantley Bride Honoured In Shower by Friends

On Thursday last about fifty friends and neighbours gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Taylor, Grantley, at a shower in honour of their daughter, Mrs. James Merkley, formerly Miss Helen Taylor.

About three o'clock Mrs. Merkley was called to a chair decorated in white under an arch of evergreens and ferns. An address was read by Miss Marion Gordon and Mrs. Merkley was presented with a full-sized dinner set and an Egyptian vase.

Mrs. Merkley then thanked all present and invited them to see her in her new home.

A dainty lunch of salad, jello, cake, sandwiches and iced drinks was then served.

Following is the address:

Dear Helen,–

On this, the occasion of your marriage, an important milestone in your life, we, your Grantley friends and neighbours, have gathered here this afternoon to wish you bon voyage on the sea of matrimony and to show in a tangible way our esteem.

We ask you to accept these gifts and hope that you and Jim will enjoy them as the poet Longfellow says:

For two alone, there in the hall,
Is spread the table round and small;
Upon the polished dishes shine
The evening lamps, but, more divine,
The light of love shines over all;
Of love that says, not mine and thine,
But, ours for ours is thine and mine.

Signed on behalf of those present—
Marion Gordon, Hazel McMillan.

New Fashions Bring Hatpins Back Again

Hat pins—mother will remember them—are coming back in the wake of new hat styles.

Bobbed hair put hat pins on the shelf; bobbed hair and the fact that the long points were invariably jabbing people. New millinery is bringing them back.

The pins will be of junior size; short and useful for anchoring the new little hats. Coiffures will undergo changes, too. Women will either permit their hair to grow or use tricky false curls and even switches.

The modern bonnets "roost' half on, half off the head.

French milliners have introduced a band of ribbon which ties across the left side of the head. American designers have amployed an elastic bandeau to keep the hat on.

The ribbon and the bandeau, women have found, are a nuisance. In lieu of something to keep the bonnet clamped tight women are renewing their friendship with the hat pin.

Among the train passengers were an elderly Highlander and a young lad. The former was holding a watch in his hand and was studying it with intense interest. Suddenly he seemed satisfied and he beckoned the conductor to him.

"What is it?" the latter asked.

"I want to pay the rest of my grandson's fare," replied the Highlander; "he has just become twelve years old."

Mothers May Have Holidays Same as Other Workers

A lot is heard about Mother's Day when flowers are for sale. Afterwards too often the home-keeper is forgotten. But she is really the busiest member of the household, and is entitled to consideration more than once a year. We are glad to find that a London magistrate has taken this view of woman's rights. A mother with three children appeared in the Marleybone police court and stated that they all had an opportunity of taking a fornight's holiday in the country. But she complained that her husband objected and refused to allow her to go. What, she asked, was she to do?

The London magistrate immediately decided that a mother is entitled to a holiday just like any other worker, and that the husband was unreasonable in trying to prevent his wife from enjoying such a rest. Moreover, he advised her to take the holiday "and its consequences." But there are not likely to be any consequences except in a welcome sense. That man will be so tired of what is called "baching it" that he will receive her with open arms on her return. The magistrate's decision will set a precedent for all time.

More immediately important is it that this wife will be encouraged to take another holiday in the country when she feels like it—much to the advantage of herself and family, and probably also to her husband. Moreoves the glad tidings will spread and other mothers will make bold to claim the respite from constant toil legally and morally due to them. The decision of the London magistrate is worthy of all the publicity which we can give it.

W.M. S. Rally at Iroquois

A very enjoyable W. M. S. rally of the Dundas–Grenville Presbyterial was held at Point Iroquois Summer School on Wednesday, July 8th, under the leadership of Mrs. J. I. Murdock, president of the presbyterial, and was largely attended.

The president led the responsive reading of scripture after which prayer was offered by Mrs. Irwin Hilliard, of Toronto.

A beautiful solo was rendered by Mrs. W. Reynolds, of Hainesville, Miss Mabel Parkinson, of Kemptville, presiding at the piano.

Mrs. Murdock then introduced Dr. Margaret MacKellar, who was the special speaker and was particularly interesting. Her address on "What the Women of the United Church of Canada Are Doing in Central India," and conditions when the pioneer W.M. S. women entered India brought vividly before her audience a picture of the wonderful opportunity for Christian missions in that land.

Rev. J. H. Miller, of Huntingdon, Que., closed the meeting with prayer and the benediction.

A picnic luncheon was the unique way in which the executive met at the noon hour and discussed the immediate business.

EGG COST OF PULLETS

WHILE the current year is one of essentially new values both with respect to cost of feed and prices at which eggs sell, there should be much of useful interest to farmers keeping poultry flocks in the figures supplied by the Dominion Experimental Station at Lennoxville, P. Q., with respect to the number of eggs it takes to pay for the cost of feeding a bird during the pullet year.

Records at this station, which are continuous over the period of the past eleven years, show that it takes an average of 57.7 eggs to pay for the cost of feeding a bird for a period of one year. The highest individual year in egg cost for feed was 1925 when it took 63 eggs to pay for the cost of feed, while in 1920 it only took 53 eggs to foot the feed bill.

This report also shows that it costs on the average the price at which 15.1 eggs will sell to pay for the cost of feeding laying birds during the four winter months.

From this it will be seen that only those eggs laid over and above what are required to pay for cost of feed can be counted as profit. In presenting these figures cost of feed only is taken into consideration as practice shows that in building up a flock of laying pullets the cockerels sold as broilers or dressed poultry will more than offset cost of buildings, interest and depreciation on plant.

GOOD CANNED GOODS

SUMMER is the season in which the camper and tourist hold sway throughout the length and breadth of the land. It is also the time of the year when, perhaps more than at any other, canned goods are in demand. It is during this season that the travelling and camping public come to realize the true worth to them of the commercial inspection service supervised by the Fruit Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Under this service all canned products of the field, orchard and farm are put up under close inspection, and each individual container in addition to conforming with a specific size must be clearly marked with the true quality of the product it contains. There are three grades of quality defined by statute. These are—"Fancy" which is the highest grade and as nearly perfect as possible; "Choice," which, while not quite so perfect in appearance, is, as the term applies, a real good quality for the product; and "Standard," for use where appearance is not the principal consideration, and which produces high food value and good flavour at little cost.

SUMMER PLOUGHING AND WEED ERADICATION

IT IS ONLY in comparatively recent years that the farmer has realized the tremendous importance of weed control, and has attempted in a systematic way to undertake the scientific destruction of these enemies of his crops.

The Dominion Experimental Farms system has for many years undertaken investigations as to the most satisfactory rotational and cultural practices to follow in crop production. Of late years, however, more particular attention has been paid to the actual effect of these methods of culture upon the eradication of weeds. Those practices which provide the best conditions for high crop yields can in a general way be depended upon to destroy a large number of most harmful weeds.

At the Dominion Experimental Station, Lennoxville, it has been damonstrated that the summer ploughing of sod land, and the subsequent cultivation of the soil until fall, very materially assists in the control of weeds, especially of perennial plants such as couch grass. For eight years an experiment has been underway in which timothy sod in a rotation of corn, oats, clover, timothy, oats, is prepared in different ways for the oat crop following. It has been found that ploughing the sod land in July, and cultivating at approximately ten-day intervals until the fall freeze-up, almost entirely prevents the growth of couch grass and other weeds, whereas ploughing once in late fall or early spring with no subsequent cultivation, except preparing the seed bed for the oat crop, has practically no effect on the weeds. Corn follows the oat crop and it has been found that hoeing the corn on the areas ploughed for oats in the spring and fall requires for to five times as long as the hoeing on the summer ploughed land, due to the greater weed infestation on the former treatments. Re-ploughing the soil ploughed in July or ribbing it in the late fall has no apparent beneficial effect.

It would appear, therefore, that one of the most practical methods of combating couch grass is to plough the land as soon as crops are removed in the summer, and cultivate it at intervals sufficient to prevent it from becoming green with weed growth.

THINK FIRST

ONCE UPON A TIME children used to be taught that recklessness, when there was no need for it, was merely ignorance, and if someone was discovered in foolhardiness, well—he or she was usually sorry for it. Parents who encouraged courage, generally spanked the unfortunate who imagined that taking risks was rather smart, or who neglected the precautions which had been ordained. We sometimes wonder when we hear of fatal accidents that seem to have been avoidable, whether parents take the trouble to teach their boys and girls where fearlessness and courage end and silly risk-taking and carelessness begin. We wonder if they make their children understand that to jump, red-hot, into cold water, is something that no one who is a good swimmer will do, unless the risk is necessary in an attempt to save life. We wonder if they insist in a way that will not be disobeyed, that the blood must be cooled gradually before a swimmer goes into the water. We wonder if the father points out that it's the fool (and not the interesting dare-devil) who rocks the boat and does all the other silly things that are understood by that phrase.

MR. PEASLEE'S LEMONADE

"DIDN'T I see Clayton Briggs treatin' you to lemonade or some such thing down at the drug store this mornin'?" demanded Deacon Hyne as he stopped at the stone wall where Caleb Peaslee was rolling a loosened stone back into place.

Caleb fitted a thin wedge under the stone and surveyed it with satisfaction. "I guess that'll stay there now," he said. "Way it was b'fore a sparrer'd unbalance it, it was so t't tleish." He turned his eyes on the deacon. "What was it you was askin' me, Hyne?"

"I was askin' you,' 'said the deacon inaccurately, "What Clayton Briggs was treatin' you to lemonade for this mornin'? It ain't a habit of his, fur's I've noticed."

Caleb grinned happily. "Clayton got into a little dispute with me this mornin'," he said, "and in the course of talk he got het up to the p'int where he said, if I'd prove him wrong he'd treat me to whatever I give a name to; and I did prove him wrong, that's all."

"'Tain't all, neither," objected the deacon stubbornly. "I want to know how he happened to make any such offer as that. It ain't like him!"

"He wouldn't have done it," said Mr. Peaslee, "if his mem'ry had been as good as mine is, thought it ought to be better, seein' he's more'n twenty years younger'n what I be.

"Since Clayton got to be fust selec'-man," Caleb went on, "he's took a connsid'able stern view of young folks pranks; he can't see any sense of their goin' across the village green, and he was for punishin' 'em when some of 'em rung the church bell the night 'fore the Fourth, only he could't seem to put finger on the right ones. All such things as that that boys have done all their lives seemed to thorn him past bearin'.

"What seemed to be the capsheaf of Briggs' trouble come this mornin'. I happened to be goin' down to the store middlin' early for me and down by the church I come on Briggs smitin' his hands together 'sif he was madded over somethin' and talkin' to himself; so I stopped to find out what the matter was with him.

"'It's the boys in this village,' he busted out. 'Nothin' seems to be safe 'nough, no matter if it's a sanct'ary, to keep 'em from disfig'rin' it some way. Look at those steps!' he says, p'intin' down at 'em with his finger.

"Well, I took a look at 'em." Mr. Peaslee said placidly, "and all I could make out to be the matter was where somebody'd wrote his 'nitials on the granite of one of the treads—scratched it on with a kind of slate stone, looked like to me. 'Well,' I says, 'what of it? Take the fust rain we have, with folks goin' in and out of the church," I says, 'and them letters'll all be gone so's't you can't even find 'em out by huntin',' I says.

"He flared right up at that,' said Caleb tranquilly, "and took to tiradin' me 'sif I'd been a party to doin' the writin'. I let him run on a spell, and fin'ly he says:

"'Tain't the writin' so much but it's the way boys act nowadays. I don't know what the world's comin' to, the way boys are let go now!' he says.

"That kind of started me a little—I don't know why. Says I, 'Boys now are jest about the same as they was when I was a boy and as they was later when you was a boy,' I says, 'and if you let your mind go back and speak honest rec'lections, you'll say so too,' says I.

"He shut his mouth tight and shook his head 'sif he kind of pitied me for bein' so childish and f'gitful. 'Never!' he says, 'I can remember pretty well, and I can't call to mind one boy when I was growin' up that'd be vandal 'nough to mar public prop'ty this way,' he says.

"Whilst he'd been carryin' on like that," Caleb went one, "I'd been doin' a little thinkin' and wonderin' where I could find a certain thing, and by that time it'd come to me; I remembered all that was needful. I took him by the arm. 'You come 'long,' says I. 'I'm goin' to prove to you that boys nowadays are a good deal the same as when you was one—mebbe not quite so bad now as then, but we'll let the shades of diff'rence go and give you that advantage,' I says.

"I led him along with me down to that old tumbledown barn of Wesley Porter's, where they stored the old school seats out of the schoolhouse more'n thirty years ago when they built the new one.

"'What you cal'latin' to do?" Clayton wanted to know.

"'I'm goin' to prove you're wrong,' I says, 'in your notion of boys now and boys in times past; and I'm goin' to do it so you'll say you're wrong too!' I says.

"'If you do,' says he, stubborn as a mule, 'I'll treat you to anything say, if it's within my means!'

"Well," said Caleb, "it took some pawin' over, but I knew what I wanted must be there, and after a time I found it. Briggs stood there lookin' at it, but not offerin' to touch it. I took holt of the seat—it was one of the old seats out of the old schoolhouse—and turned it over and dusted some of the dirt and dust off'n it, so we could see the top part. And there, cut into the top of the seat with a jackknife, letters a quarter of an inch deep, was 'C. B. and V. A.' with a heart carved round both initials.

"'There,' says I, 'How long ago do you s'pose them letters was cut, and who do you reckon cut 'em?' But he was lookin' at the letters and didn't hear me; and he was seein' a lot of things besides that old birch seat—things he hadn't thought of before for half a lifetime if I'm anything of a guesser. I jest let him look and said nothin'.

"Fin'ly he lifted up his head, fetched a long breath like a man wakin' up and turned to me. 'Vinie Allen!' he says. 'I can remember her jest as plain! And I remember the very day I cut them letters too—a wild rainy day in the fall. And I can remember —' and then he fetched himself up with a start, and not another word could git out of him; but he made me come down to the sody fountain with him.

"You're right about Brigg's not treatin' very often, Hyne," Caleb concluded, "so I took lemonade 'stead of somethin' that cost more. I didn't want to do anything to shorten his days!"

Health Service

Prepared by the Canadian Medical Association.

BED-TIME

The body works in a rythm of activity and rest. The heart, which is apparently never at rest, does, in fact rest momentarily each beat. We require periods of rest and relaxation and the most complete rest is that secured during sound sleep.

Individuals differ and no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the exact amount of sleep that is required by all. Some require more sleep than others; children, particularly, need a great deal.

We know that a large number of persons would enjoy a greater measure of health, would do better work and would feel better if they had more rest. Too many starve their bodies of the time that is necessary for rest in order that they may have more time for work or play.

Failure to secure sufficient rest is particularly serious during childhood. Lack of rest is one of the chief causes of malnutrition. The child who does not have sufficient rest is not able to digest his food properly and so his nutrition suffers because he does not rest enough.

Parents cannot rely upon the appearance of the child to guide them with regard to his need for sleep. The thin, over-active child who never says he is tired, who is always on the go and wholooks bright and wide-awake at any hour is the very child who is in urgent need of rest. He is burning the candle at both ends, and his general health and well-being will suffer because of his lack of needed rest.

During summer children are often allowed to stay up late with the result that they do not get the amount of rest they require. Sleeping late in the morning does not make up for going to bed late in the evening.

The necessary hours of sleep in a room with open windows are:

Age	Bed-Time	Hours of Sleep	Rising Time
5–6	6.30	13	7.30
6–8	7.30	12	7.30
8–10	8.00	11½	7.30
10–12	8.30	11	7.30
12–14	9.00	10½	7.30
14–16	9.30	10	7.30

Children who are not strong, who are not gaining regularly in weight, need extra rest. They should lie down for one hour at least after the noon meal. They may not sleep, but the rest which they get while lying down is almost as good as sleep.

Rest, fresh air, play and the use of milk, fruits, and green vegetables make children strong and keep them well.

CHERRY'S CHOOSING

"WANT a ride in my limousine, lady?" Cherry Charlton glanced up, and a smile transfigured her thoughtful face. "Grandpap, you darling!" she cried, climbing instantly up into the wagon and seating herself beside him. "Are you going to town, too?' '

The old man in the neat but faded overalls, the checked blue shirt and the incongruous white sailor cap no snowier than his hair nodded and grinned. "Reckon I am," he replied. "I've got to take these punkins in and trade them for chicken feed. You going that a ways?"

Cherry nodded. "I wonder if you are in such a terrible hurry?" she inquired wistfully. "I have two friends coming from the city and no way to bring them home. Would you mind bothering with us on your return trip?"

"You know I wouldn't, Cherry girl. I'd do anythin~ to help you out any time, and I like young folks. Makes an old fellow feel cheerful and young again to have young folks for company. What train they comin' on?"

"The four-fifteen."

"Then I'd better touch up Baldy a bit." With the gentlest of flickers he touched the bald-faced bav on the flank, and he leaped forward with a start that almost dislodged Cherry from her seat.

"Do you know," the girl said thoughtfully when they reached a bit of rough road and Baldv slowed to a walk, "I think I have two of the dearest girl friends on earth, and yet one of them just has to be nicer than the other! The trouble is I can't teli which I like better."

"How's that?" Grandpap's bright blue eyes, undimmed by the years, met hers with lively interest."

"Well, it's like this," Cherry explained eagerly. "Aunt Madeline has invited me to go for a month's trip with her on her lovely yacht. We are going up and down the coast from Mexico to Canada ;we'll visit Catalina Island and ever so many other points of interest, and she says I may invite one girl to go with me. Won't that be wonderful?"

Grandpap nodded in emphatic agreement.

"But the trouble is," Cherry went on, "that I simply can't make up my mind which of the two girls to ask. They are both lovely, and yet I can't ask both of them. I invited them up for a week just so that I could decide, but I am afraid that when the week is up I shall be not a bit nearer a solution than I am now."

Baldy began to trot—the roughness was no longer beneath his feet—and a little while later they came out on a turn of the road above the village.

"There's the train now coming over the bridge," Cherry cried. "Take me right to the station, please, and then we can go to town with you."

Grandpap drove between two shining motor cars and descended as agilely as a boy.

"Come on and meet my friends," Cherry urged him eagerly.

The train had just come to a trembling stop as they rounded the little station. Two girls were descending the steps.

"Yahoo?" Cherry called, and the next moment the three were together.

"Meet grandpap, girls,' 'she said with a loving glance at the old face. "Grandpap, this is Ellen Thurston, and the one with the curls is Madge Kramer. Where are your bags? Oh, I see them."

The grils glanced inquiringly from one of the automobiles to the other as, bags in hand, they returned to the farther side of the station. "Which one?" Madge asked.

Cherry laughed. "Neither," she replied. "This is ours between the two; we are going to ride out with grandpap. But there isn't room for all of us on the seat. What shall we do, grandpap?"

The old man chuckled. "Never you worry ,about that," he replied. "I always bring along a board to put across the top of the sides for an emergency seat. You might set on them punkins, only I have to get rid of them. Guess you wouldn't like such smooth, rolly seats, anyway."

"Would one of you like to sit on the seat with grandpap?" Cherry asked. "Or do you both want to sit down here on this board with me?"

"I for one," Ellen answered, "would like to sit with you, please, for I am dreadfully light-headed in such high places. I guess the honour falls to you, Madge."

Before Madge could speak grandpap settled the matter. "I would be honoured by your company," he said with a bow to her, "but just the same maybe you'd better sit down there with the others. That board seat is kind of shiftin', and three make it steadier than two."

"All right."

The two arrivals had some difficulty in getting up to the wagon even with grandpap's assistance. "You can put your feet on the punkins until we get to town," he said to them.

"You'll get your first glimpse of our little town without delay," said Cherry, smiling. "This is cosy, isn't it?"

"It's fun!" Ellen declared, but Madge after a quick glance at her did not answer.

They drove up the one long street of the village, and it seemed as if everyone along the way paused to look and wave or call out. Cherry waved back and shouted greetings. At the market a young man with a citified air came out to examine the pumpkins. He seemed rather amused at sight of the three girls perched on the extra board seat.

"That's Cliff Huntingdon," said Cherry. "He's been away for a number of years, but has come back to make his home here and to help his father with the business. He used to be the funniest little fat boy; now he has grown so tall and nice-looking."

"I'll provide you with a better footstool," Cliff said as he brought out the sacks of grain and lifted them easily over the high side of the wagon. "How's that, now—everything fine?"

"Fine as can be," Cherry answered and introduced her friends. "Goodbye. Don't forget to come up and get better acquainted. Madge and Ellen will be here a week."

Cliff Huntingdon promised to make them a call.

"What's the matter, Madge?" Cherry asked when they were a quarter of the way home. "You've scarcely said a word, and you are generally a regular chatterbox. Don't you feel well?"

"Yes, I feel all right, only I don't feel much like talking."

"Tired, I guess. Train rides make some people that way, although I love them. When we get home you can have a good hot bath and lie down. Don't make poor Baldy go so fast up this hill, grandpap; he's so fat his wind isn't good."

"Shucks!" the old man said a moment later as the horse stumbled. "I believe he has lost a shoe." He peered inquiringly down. "There's one just coming off. I'll pull to the side of the road and fix it before he gets lame."

Cherry beamed. "This is the nicest place I know to stop," she said to her guests. "Right beyond that knoll there's a slope with thousands of yellow poppies. Let's run over there."

"Oh!" Ellen exclaimed as they came out on the slope. "Doesn't it remind you of the golden fleece? Was anything ever so beautiful!"

"Well, the world is so full of beautiful things it is hard for me to decide," Cherry replied, laughing as her fluffy hair blew about her face. "I'm always saying that about so many things. You girls pick some, and I'll get some maidenhair fern. I know a spot where there is a regular riot of it below here, but it is quite a climb for—for tenderfeet." She laughed good-naturedly.

"Run right along," said Ellen. "This tenderfoot is perfectly content right here."

Cherry filled her hands with the maidenhair fern and returned by a different path. As she stopped a moment behind a gray boulder to pick up a spray that had fallen she heard Madge's voice. "Did you ever in your life hear of such a thing?" she was saying. "Cherry was always talking about their motor cars and their lovely home, and now she meets us with that awful-looking grandfather of hers in that terrible bumpy old rig!"

Cherry's face flushed, and, drawing quickly away in order not to hear the answer, she made haste to return by the other path. She had barely time to greet her friends before a whistle proclaimed that all was well with the bay horse, and they ran back to the road.

After they were on level ground again a blue roadster overtook the wagon, and the smiling face of Cliff Huntingdon looked up at them. "Father sent me for some eggs," he said. "Any of you want to ride with me?"

"There isn't room for all of us," replied Cherry, but perhaps you could squeeze the girls in and drop them off at our house. Mother will be looking for them."

"I'd rather stay with you," Ellen said promptly, "you and—"

"I'll go," Madge interrupted her; "I'm afraid I'm not accustomed to this mode of conveyance. That is, I'll go if Cherry doesn't mind."

"Not at all," Cherry answered. "It will be be pleasanter and quicker."

The blue car disappeared, and Baldy jogged along again. Presently they came upon a large touring car at the side of the road. Cherry shook her fist at it. "That's as far as I got," she said. "I thought everything was all right, but you can never tell. It just balked right there. I had to run down to that white house among the trees and telephone, and then I discovered what I had forgotten—that our garage man doesn't work Saturday afternoons. They promised to send up a mechanic Monday morning. The boys will have to come here and tow it home when they get back tonight. They went over to a baseball game."

"I had a lovely ride and enjoyed every bit of it," Ellen declared as they drew up before a big house set in acres of lawn and shrubbery.

"Reckon you got bumped good," said the old man, chuckling.

"Oh, Mr.—" Ellen hesitated.

"Jest call me grandpap; everyone around this country does. Glad you enjoyed the ride. Guess I'll be going on, Cherry."

"You get right around to the barn with Baldy and come in to dinner first," said Cherry, pretending to frown severely. "I heard mother say Anne was going to have hot apple shortcake."

Ellen stared in astonishment. "Isn't he your grandfather?' 'she asked as the wagon lumbered away round the pebbled drive.

"Dear me, no," Cherry answered with a shake of her head. "I wish he were, he's such a dear! He's the best-loved old man in many a mile. Oh, there's Madge and mother."

Madge came out. She seemed to have recovered the use of her tongue. "Well, it is a joke on you," she said. "I thought that old fellow was really your grandfather. Why didn't you explain?"

"I didn't see anything particularly to explain," Cherry answered calmly, kissing her mother. "Wasn't it lucky, mother, that grandpap came along? We had a lovely ride."

"Indeed we did," added Ellen, and her face glowed. "Do you know, I hate to acknowledge it, but that is the first time I ever rode behind a horse in my life. I never saw the scenery so intimately before. I don't wish you a bit of ill luck, Cherry, dear, but I can't help being just a little glad that your car broke down."

"I'm glad too," Cherry said, turning to look deep into her mother's gray eyes. And Mrs. Charlton, reading the message, knew that her daughter had made her choice.

A CHAMPION BUYER

WHEN the Poultry Division of the Department of Agriculture sent a shipment of 22 hens to represent the industry at the recent British Empire Trade Fair at Beunos Aires, it made a careful selection of the best available birds, whose performance was known under record of performance or registration. There is more than usual interest in the fact that 16 of these birds were purchased by Luis Angelo Firpo, erstwhile pugilistic champion of the Argentine, and familiar to all Canadians as the fighter who knocked Jack Dempsey out of the ring in their memorable encounter. The suitability of Canadian pedigreed birds for breeding stock was quickly recognized by poultry fanciers in South America.

Two little girls were deciding upon their choice of marriage. One was going to marry a doctor, for "when I am sick, I can be well for nothing." And the other a minister, for "when I am bad I can be good for nothing."

Young man (dancing with very attractive young lady at a dance): "Do you know that sap, the manager? He is about as dumb an egg as I ever saw."

Young Lady (gradually finding her voice): "Young man, do you know who I am? I'm the manager's wife."

Young Man: "Ohoh—do you know who I am?"

Young Lady: "No."

Young Man (leaving hurriedly: "Thank God!"

JOYFUL JAMS AND JELLIES

By ETTA BITTA PYE

SO YOU are about to make jams and jellies?

Did you ever stop to think just why you do certain things? Why, for example, you put sugar with the fruit juice? Because, naturally, the fruit juice is not sweet enough.

But there are other elements, in addition to sugar in which many fruits are deficient. Pectin, for instance. Just as some fruits require more sugar than others, so some need more pectin to give body to jams, and to make jellies jell. And now, with bottled fruit pectin, it is as easy to supply the needed pectin as it is to supply the proper amount of sugar.

Here are two recipes which include its use. They assure certain, easy, and rapid jam and jelly making.

CHERRY JAM
(Any kind except wild cherry or chokecherry)

4 packed cups (2 lbs.) pitted, crushed cherries
¼ cup water
7 cups (3 lbs.) sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

Use only fully ripend fruit. Pit cherries, crush thoroughly, and measure into large kettle. Add water, stir until mixture boils, cover and simmer for 15 minutes. Add sugar and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 3 minutes. Remove from fire and stir in fruit. pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just 5 minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Cover hot jam with film of hot parafin: when jam is cold cover with ⅛ inch hot parafin. Roll glass to spread parafin on sides. For stronger cherry flavour, add ¼ teaspoon almond extract before pouring. Sweet cherry jam sets slowly. Requires 2½ pounds of fruit and makes 10 to 11 eight-ounce glasses.

Sour cherries may be pitted and left whole. Pack cups solidly, flooding with juice. Whole cherries will float, and the jam may be soft on top for several days. Crushing is recommended.

RASPBERRY JELLY

4 cups (2 lbs.) juice
7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

Use only fully ripened berries. Crush thoroughly and drip through jelly bag. Do not drip over night as uncooked juice ferments quickly. Measure juice and sugar into large saucepan, stir, and bring to a boil. At once add fruit pectin, stirring constantly, and bring again to a full rolling boil and boil ½ minute. Remove from fire, let stand 1 minute, skim, pour quickly. Cover hot jelly with film of hot paraffin; when jelly is cold cover with ⅛ inch of hot paraffin. Roll glas to spread paraffin on sides. Black raspberry jelly sets slowly. Requires about 3 quarts berries. Makes about 11 eight-ounce glasses.

Something To Tie To

The lights in a crowded bus had failed.

"Can I find you a strap?" inquired a tall strap-hanger of a young lady who had boarded the bus at the last stop.

"Thank, you," she replied, "but I have one already."

"Then, would you mind letting go of my tie?" said he, shyly.

What's In a Name?

"It really is a serious situation."

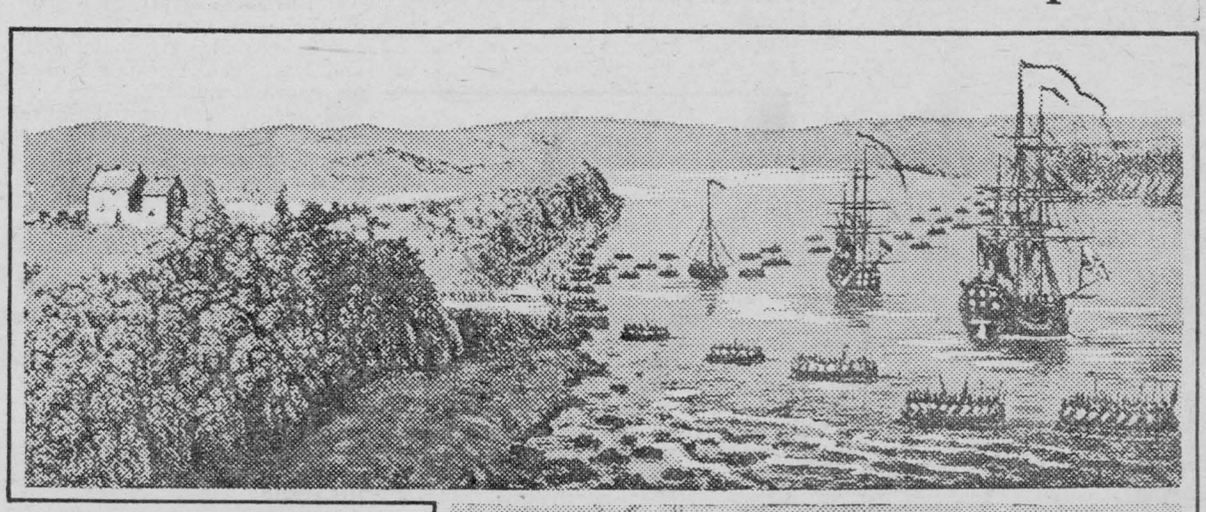

"What is?"

"Why the way the hogs' eyes are going back on them. All I read about nowadays is Blind Pigs."

Teacher: "Can you imagine the arm of the ocean around a neck of land?"

Smart Pupil: "Why not? I've hugged the shore myself."

Historic Wolfe's Cove Assumes New Aspect

The scene of the landing of General Wolfe, under the towering crags crowned by the Plains of Abraham and the City of Quebec, is about to become the setting for yet another important event in the history of Canada. On September 13, 1759, the British forces disembarked at what is now known as Wolfe's Cove, to capture Quebec. On June 2, 1931, passengers from the new 42,500-ton Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Britain", on her maiden voyage from Southampton, will land within a few yards of the same spot and be taken by train, through a tunnel slightly over a mile long, under the historic battlefield on which the English hero lost his life, direct to the Canadian Pacific's main line to Montreal. This new traffic link, which is being completed by the company at a cost of some $2,000,000, will eliminate the present journey through Quebec's terminals and materially shorten the running time from the ship's side to all important Canadian and American centres. A concrete quay-wall, 4,300 feet in length, with 40 feet of water at low tide, will provide berthing space for the new giantess and her sister "White Empresses", and five railway tracks, converging into one at the end of the wharf and thence turning into the new tunnel, will serve to transfer passengers from the bosom of the St. Lawrence to their respective destinations. Disembarkation will be effected through a two-storey shed, with stairways leading down to the trains. The pictures show: (1) Wolfe's army landing to capture Quebec, (from an old drawing). (2) The tunnel mouth near the riverside, now under construction. (3) General Wolfe.

Rooster Croons Duet

Neptune, N. J., July 13.—A Plymouth Rock rooster alleged to have been stolen from Reese Dupre, negro concert singer, crooned a duet with its owner in police court to-day and so established proof of its ownership to the satisfaction of Recorder Peter E. Dodd.

Dupre charged Joseph Scott, local junk dealer, with stealing four chickens. Detective Captain George Jeffries recovered the alleged stolen fowl and brought them into court for identification. The negro concert singer began to croon "Old Black Joe" to one of the four birds, said to be a pet, and before long the rooster joined in the chorus.

Recorder Dodd and Court attendants were amazed. The Recorder decided that when a rooster croons a duet with a man claiming ownership it is time the fowl be given to him.

After the brief business, members and visitors observed two minutes of silent prayer in memory of Mrs. Melvin Marcellus who so ably entertained the Circle in March. The circle girls then served a substantial lunch of sandwiches, cake and lemonade.

The evening was a very successful one,—an attendance of sixty and collection of $8.65.

Point Iroquois Summer School Closes Very Interesting Session

It opened on Sunday, July 5th, with stirring addresses by Rev. Russell MacGillvary, of Ottawa, and Rev. Norman Coll, of Montreal. Regular classes continued each morning from 8.40 to twelve o'clock and each afternoon from two to three o'clock. During these courses the speakers were: Rev. M. Doyle, of Toronto, who gave a series on methods of work in the church school; Rev. H. H. Smith, of India, who told of his experiences among the Bhill tribes in the north of that country, and Rev. J. Coburn, who spoke on many phases of social service work that the church is seeking to do. Bible study this year was taken by local ministers, all of whom gave masterly addresses: Rev. H. B. Campbell, of Hallville, speaking on "Amos;" Rev. H. H. Servage, Heckston, on "Isaiah," and Rev. A. M. Russell, of Williamsburg on "Jeremiah." The devotional period was led by Dr. Margaret MacKellar, of India, who was also the chief speaker at the great W. M. S. rally on Wednesday afternoon under the auspices of Mrs. J. I. 'The Junior school was directed by Misses Esther Gault, of Ottawa, and Mabel Parkinson, of Kemptville, and the closing evening gave a demonstration of their work in the musical play, "The Search for the Wing Wong Jar." On Tuesday evening the annual musical pageant night was observed. Talent from Iroquois, Prescott, Dixon and elsewhere provided instrumental and vocal music, while the young people of South Mountain presented the sacred drama in four acts, "The Rock," a play that centres around the life of Peter.

Each afternoon there was recreation under the leadership of Jas. E. Eastcott, of Dundela, including group games, volley ball, and soft ball. The singing at the evening gatherings was from coloured slides loaned by Rev. D. Smith, of Richmond, while the leader of song was Rev. Thos. Knowles, of Iroquois. The staff has all been re-elected to office as follows: President, Rev. A. L. Siscoe, Cardinal; Secretary, Rev. Jas. C. Claim Trustee Sought Position as Caretaker

Barrie, July 14.—Claiming that, as a member of the school board for S. S. No. 2, Nottawasaga Township, he entered into an agreement with the trustees to act as caretaker of the school, action has been taken by T. H. Anderson, secretary-treasurer of the board, and a number of ratepayers to have Harold C. Day removed from the board. The case was begun in Judges' Chambers before Judge Dudley Holmes, but adjourned indefinitely for argument by counsel. According to the complainants, Day accepted the appointment as caretaker, putting in a bid for $65 at the annual meeting of the ratepayers last December. Day, however, contends that no one would accept the position when bids were called for.

"Eventually I advised the meeting that my son, Alvin Day, would do the work for $65," Day states in an affidavit, "but that if anyone would do the work of caretaker for the school at 25 cents lower, such person could have the position."

Will Buy Wheat for West

Two million bushels of wheat will be bought by the Federal Government, ground into flour in western mills and purveyed through the drought-stricken areas "at a very reasonable price," Premier Bennett announced in the House of Commons.

The announcemet, coming as the first intimation of the plan for relief which the Government is contemplating, was greeted by loud applause on both sides of the House.

"Where distribution has to be made," said Mr. Bennett, "we shall be in a position to do so without delay. This amount of wheat will produce approximately 450,000 barrels of flour, and the bran and shorts remaining will be available if so desired.

"I mention this at once in order that hon. members who may be receiving communications from municipalities and other parts of the west may be able to reassure those who are so directly affected by the drought conditions in their provinces.
