1953 Appointments Made Monday Evening As Reeve and Councillors Begin New Year

Members of the village council were sworn in Monday and in the evening held the first meeting of the year. Present were the reeve, Chas. McMillan, councillors Lannin, Page, McMillan and Turner. The clerk-treasurer was in his accustomed place.

Discussion centred for a lively while over the parking problems in the village. A member of the community, Mr. Milton Shay, waited on council with a plea for a clear drive- and walkway on Victoria St. He pointed that in the winter paricularly, it was most difficult to leave his property when his walkway was blocked by snow and cars. He told of the numerous occasions he found the laneway blocked to his garage and had experienced much difficulty in finding the car owners to have the offending vehicles moved. Mr. Shay made it emphatic that he was not asking for anything other than an entry to and from his house and garage. Council took up a wide-ranging discussion of parking throughout the village, using the case at hand as the starting point.

Suggestions were put forward for revising the parking by-laws to ease the penalties assessed for first offender of parking violations. The clerk was insructed to investigate the matter and report at the next meeting. Many of the controversial parking areas of the town were surveyed again, but not too much conclusive opinion could be arrived at at the meeting.

It was finally concluded that enforcement of the Victoria St. section of the by-law could be carried out. Signs were to be erected in accordance with the law to close the north side of Victoria from the extension of Main to George Street to the west to all parking on that side day or night. On motion the decision was unanimous.

The first meeting of the year saw the appointment of the various officers of municipal government. The maintenance man of hydro will again be Chas. Marcell at the same salary. Clerk-treasurer H. C. Hummel was reappointed with the remuneration the same.

Fire Chief Sydney Morris will have charge of the Vounteer Fire Brigade as in former years. Assessor E. B. Lynch felt the collection of the dog tax was not a job for the assessor but an increase of $25 in the annual stipend placed the matter in a different light, and with the assurance of council he could use the additional money to delegate the onerous collection end of the job, he accepted the responsibility.

Commissioners were appointed for Community hall, Carl McMillan and Gord Lannin; Streets and Sidewalks, Marshall Page and John Turner.

The weed inspector will be Robert Ouderkirk; auditors, R. A. F. McFadden, Toronto.

Public responsibility as official poundkeeper falls on the capable shoulders of Erwin Merkley and sheep valuator will again be Fred Smith. Garbage collection will be looked after by Andrew Harper who is doing an excellent job in council's opinion. Appointment was made to the Public Library Board of Mrs. B. W. Campbell for a further two years. Robert Ouderkirk was named as Hall janitor for 1953.

Reeve E. B. McMillan and councillor Eric Barclay of the township waited on council to renew the fire protection agreement between the village and township. Terms and details of this were quickly passed by mutual consent. The township will continue to pay the usual levy of $5 per fireman present at a township fire with an additional small charge for use of the equipment.

Representatives of the Hospital Auxiliary waited on council to renew the checkroom agreement in the Auditorium. Council agreed readily to the petition of the ladies and left them the option of making their own agreements with other bodies who might wish to operate the room on special occasions.

A new schedule of assessments was presented by the clerk for Workmen's Compensation on the fire brigade. It was passed. Council will meet the first Monday of each month at 7.30 in the evening in the clerk's office.

After joining the Rural Municipalities Association, raising the insurance coverage on the fire hall and completing the borrowing by-law, the meeting was adjourned.

Attach no Blame To Bus Driver In Girl's Death

A 76-year-old school bus driver, David Hoy, was completely exonerated of all blame at an inquest into the death of Nancy Murdock, a Hallville schoolgirl, who was crushed beneath the rear wheels of the bus last November 12.

The little girl was run over when the bus backed up for her after it passed by the lane of the Murdock house. She died shortly after the accident.

H. O. Balkwill, foreman of the Coroner's Jury, recommended that in future all school buses be annually inspected by the government and that certificates of their good mechanical condition be issued. He also recommended that no licence be issued any operators of school buses until they produced such certification.

The Two-headed Turtle

(From an Editorial in the Ottawa Journal)

We find ourselves fascinated by that story from Mississippi about Harold, the two-headed turtle.

Seems that each of Harold's two heads controls two of his legs and there is a disconcerting lack of intergration. Sometimes one head demands food and instructs its legs to take it places. But just then the other head is asleep and its legs quiescent, and so the food-hunting part of the turtle just marches 'round and 'round in a futile and foolish circle. A turtle could find that sort of thing mighty annoying.

But it all goes to show that Nature knows best. Millions of years ago Nature may have played with the idea of giving turtles two heads each, so that one could keep watch while the other retired within their common shell and slept in safety, but perhaps discarded the idea for the reasons now all too clear to the belated Harold of Mississippi—the difficulty of assuring co-ordination when four legs obey two masters.

When there is a problem to be solved, or a grave decision to be made, or a situation to be studied, we often hear it asserted as a matter of cold fact that "two heads are better than one." That rule does not apply to turtles, but then there are exceptions to most rules.

BABIES ARE BORN NUDISTS SO DON'T OVERDRESS THEM

Kicking around without clothes, uninhibited and carefree, babies may be the picture of contentment—until they learn about civilization and cold weather. Breaking them in to grown-up ways comes early, and the magazine "Health" offers some tips for the guidance of the newborn's nearest relatives:

Don't overdress the baby. Keeping a child too warm is apt to make him cross and uncomfortable. It may cause him to lose his appetite and affect his ability to adjust himself to temperature changes.

Tight clothing is not recommended for infants either indoors or out. Besides its tendency to restrict circulation and thus make it harder to keep warm, restriction of movement may bring with it psychological reactions as well.

Glowing pink is the right colour for baby's cheeks. If he loses his natural colour it may be a result of his feeling cold; and if his face becomes flushed when he's lying outside in cooler weather it is well to bring him in and check up. Flushed cheeks can be a sign of trouble.

',Remember," adds the Health League of Canada magazine, "the individual needs of no two youngsters should be expected to be identical, and this applies to clothing just as it does to other parts of living. Every child should be dressed according to his or her own needs, and not according to what the neighbour's baby has on or what a mother-in-law or fussing aunt may think."

ELYSIUM FOR WORKERS

We've heard it said that it's pointless to compare the standard of living of a man in Russia with his counterpart on the North American continent—that the only comparison a Russian worker cares about is how he lived once and how he lives now and that, in fact, he's better off now than he ever was.

If that is true, and for all we know it may be, it's a fair point, though how on earth the Ccarist overlords ever managed to keep their serfs breathing on a lower standard of living is beyond our comprehension.

However, Czechoslovakia is another matter. Beween the wars, Czechoslovakia was a democracy, politically stable and economically prosperous. Since the war, it has come under the domination of Moscow. Here are some figures we believe to be authentic, which throw light on the standard of living in Csechoslovakia today.

Note first that top workers in Czechoslovakia earn about 2,000 kronen a week and that a kilogram is an or two over two pounds. From that you can see just how long a man must work in order to command the bare essentials of living. Here are the figures: Bacon, 480 kronen per kg.; bread (rationed), 16 kronen per loaf; bread (non-rtaioned), 32 kronen per loaf; butter, 490 kronen per kg.; margarine, 260 kronen per kg.; good sausage, 1000 kronen per kg.; dry sausage, 600 kronen per kg.; very ordinary sausage, 230 kronen per kg.; 1 egg, 12 kronen each; men's shoes, 500-1000 kronen per pair; men's suits, 7000-12,000 kronen.

This is no comparison with the standard of living on the American continent. It's not a comparison at all, but it still adds up to an awful lot of work for precious few goods. The Czech housewife doesn't worry about the cost of living—to her it's the cost of staying alive.

CANADA DISCOVERS NEW NYLON FURS

Successful research by the Canadian Defence Research Board has provided Britain with the nucleus of a new industry that already is finding an outlet in the export market and earning dollars. Canadian scientists in seeking a low-cost material that could be as easily fashioned as an army shirt, and yet be as warm as fur, discovered a satisfactory fabric in nylon fur. It was developed for the use of the military in the Arctic.

The Canadian product aroused interest in Britain, a British company bought the patent, and has since gone into production in a plant at Durham in northern England.

Does nylon fur really resemble fur, Sylvia Grey attended a display of the nylon fur worn by mannequins in a Lodon showroom and she comments in London Calling that it was not possible to tell the new "fur" coats from clipped sheepskin. The texture of the deep, white fur was there. This coat had a deep fashionable collar and half-belted back. It sold in Britain for about $55.

The factory in Shildon in Durham has brought employment to miners who were out of work when their pit closed down. These men, with their wives and daughters, have rapidly become skilled in the new process. The cloth is being cut and fashioned as carefully as real fur. The working force, now totaling 400, is being increased. Training is provided by skilled furriers sent from London.

The new product has been so well received that plans are being shaped for considerable expansion and by the spring there should be available coats of nylon mink, nylon ocelot and nylon Persian lamb as well as sheepskin. It is anticipated that some of the fabric will be used on Coronation robes. The factory, too, is turning out clothing for troops operating in cold climates.

All the nylon furs are washable, will not burn, are moth proof and will not rub. Consignments are now going into shops in Britain but there is a keen demand already on the export market and interests in the United States have asked for the factory's entire output.

LONG SNAKES

The longest snake in the world is the regal python found in Burma, Indo China Philippine Islands and the Malay peninsula. Although there have been many exaggerations which describe sixty foot snakes, the plain unvarnished truth is that the regal or reticulated python has never been known to reach a greater length than thirty-five feet.

The South American Anaconda rates second with a length of twenty-four to twenty-eight feet, while the Indian rock python tie for third with lengths of twenty to twenty-five feet.

The diamond python of Australia and New Guinea, comes fourth with a twenty foot maximum measurement.

The boa constrictor of Southern Mexico and Central and Southern America is usually overrated as to his length for he loses out to the venemous king cobra. The king cobra of India, China and nearby areas is the longest poisonous snake in the world with a recorded body length of eighteen feet, four inches.

Boa constrictors have never been known to reach a length of more than sixteen feet.

Merchants in many cities of India boast of their failure to obtain college degrees just to let the public know that they attended college. A sign in Lahore, for instance, reads: "Mohandas Lal Nawa, rug merchant, failed B.A."

Along The Way

By Stylus

Dear Neighbour, you may recall that before all this Christmas and New Year interruption we had strted on a little trip together. We only got as far as Montreal. I suggest we go a little farther today, and that in spite of the snow and ice that now covers the green fields and blue waters I'll be mentioning. But perhaps there's some satisfaction in recalling warm pleasant summer days these wintery times, n'est ce pas?

We left Montreal for the "good old" (?) U.S.A. We didn't find things a great deal different there. There were no Mounties or Smugs. The ladies used lipstick which appeared to be much the same shade as we see over here (perhaps they put it on differently, I couldn't tell). The countryside was no lovelier than our own, though more mountainous, for we were by then in the Green Mountains of Vermont. We slipped unobtrusively into the pretty little city of Newport, on the end of Lake Memphremagog, (one of the most beautiful lakes in in the eastern townships) just about lunch time one rainy day.

Lake Memphremagog (lake of clear water) is about two thirds in Canada and one third in the United States. It is the scene of many international exploits. There is the story of Uriah Skinner, for example, who did a profitable smuggling business from 1812 to 1815. One night he was nearly caught by revenue officers. They found his empty boat when daylight broke, but they never found him. Some years later a fisherman discovered the entrance to a rocky island cave, and when he entered it he found a human skeleton. Evidently this had been Skinner's hideout, and having lost his boat he had starved to death for want of a way out. The cave has since been called "Skinner's Cave", a dubious compliment, don't you think?

Another murderous incident happened about 1848. A Vermont man crossed the border and travelled up the lonely shore of the lake with $3,000. in his pocket. He was never seen again, but eventually his body was discovered floating on the water. He had been murdered and robbed, his body being weighted and thrown in the lake.

The lake, in spite of these gory anecdotes, is a very lovely one. It is surrounded with summer camps for most of its shoreline. There now stands a beautiful Roman Catholic abbey on the north shore not far from Owl's Head Mountain. In 1857 a Masonic Lodge held a meeting on the top of the mountain which marks the deepest part of the lake, a depth of about 100 fathoms.

We left Newport for Island Pond, and by crossing the Connecticut River entered the state of New Hampshire. The northern part of this state juts up like a thin wedge between Vermont and Maine as far as the Canadian border. It is the land of the White Mountains. We crossed these mountains at Dixville notch, climbing to an elevation of 1870 feet. Dixville notch is a very lovely drive. The road winds up and up through thickly wooded hills, which are broken here and there by lonely farmer's cabins.

We stopped for tea by the side of a mountain brook. The children took off their shoes to wade in the water, but they found it too cold to enjoy. Unfortunately the weather wasn't good, although the sun managed to shine out occasionally between showers. Just as one of these showers passed we rounded a bend in the road and there, in front of us, stood a magnificent hotel, The Balsams. We learned that The Balsams comprises a 4,600-acre estate, "The Switzerland of America."

This marked the height of land, and it was like sliding down a toboggan slide to drive down "the other side of the mountain." We slipped quickly through acres of forests, and gradually came again to scrawny, poor settlements, which gave way to more prosperous ones as we descended further.

The ups and downs of the road reminded us of the ups and downs of life, and as we depended upon the power of our car to carry us through the former so we depended upon another Power to help us through the latter.

HELI-HUNTING ISN'T CRICKET

District authorities in Darmstadt, Germany, have protested to the United States Air Force against hunting by helicopter. Heinrich Ahl, a district official, told a Reuters news agency reporter he had looked on for three hours one day while a USAF helicopter cruised over a flood area near Darmstadt. The airmen were reported hovering 30 to 50 feet above the deer, wild duck and hares. They were unable to gather most of the prey because the helicopter could land only on dry hillocks. Ahl claimed this kind of "unsporting behaviour" has been going on for a period of three weeks.

The Presbyterian W.M.S. met for the first meeting of the year at the home of Mrs. L. H. Doering. Officers for the year included: President, Mrs. Orok; 1st vice, Miss Elliott; 2nd vice, Miss Jamieson; secretary, Mrs. A. Wilson; treasurer, Mrs. C. McIntosh; welcome and welfare, Mrs. Orok and Mrs. Craig; supply secretary, Mrs. Barrie and Mrs. Simser; home helpers secretary, Mrs. J. Campbell and Miss M. Hummel.

The Merrill Mission Band got together for a business meeting and appointed their officers: President, Edith Brown; vice-pres., Olive Casselman; recording secretary, Louise Wilson; corresponding secretary, Ruby Fetterly; Mite Box secretary, Buelah Olsen; Treas., Una Colquhoun; Palm Branch sec., Pauline Pomeroy; pianist, Helen Hamilton.

To conclude we quote a quote as it appeared 25 years ago.

"How to name a Chinese baby in honour of Lindberg and still retain the Oriental touch in the youngster's cognomen puzzled Mr. and Mrs. Lee Long of Chicago's Chinatown. Finally they hit on the name, One Long Hop."

PENGUIN CEMETERY

A point and proof in favour of those who believe that an animal like the elephant could have a common burial place is the report of a penguin graveyard by Dr. Robert Cushman Murphy of the American Museum of Natural History, who recently returned from an expedition to the Antarctic. There, on South Georgia Island, he spent many days in studying a colony of penguins. When he first landed on the island, he was met by a deputation of these cute little birds. They stopped some distance from him, and one of their number advanced alone from the group to the human visitor and, bowing, laid a shiny pebble at his feet—as if to say "Here is a token of welcome." This amazing display of human-like intelligence was carried through many of their living habits, but possibly the most fascinating discovery made by Dr. Cushman was that of the penguin's cemetery.

Curious at the absence of any dead penguin remains, the explorer followed a penguin, who, apparently sick, left the colony and made his way up to the top of the hill. There lay a tiny crystal-clear lake of icy water—and on the rim of this pond stood several penguins, who, from their appearance, were about to die. Dr. Cushman looked down through the clear water and realized the answer to his question of the penguin remains for there on the bottom of the lake lay scores of dead penguins—their bodies perfectly preserved by the ice cold water.

Knowing that these little birds have made use of a common burial place, one wonders if an elephant graveyard is in the realm of possibility.

MODERN SALVAGE SHIP MAY RECOVER TREASURE

Treasure which has lain beneath the sea off the Cape of Good Hope for more than a century may be recovered by Britain's newest and biggest deep-sea salvage ship, the Twyford.

Since the vessel arrived in Cape Town from Southampton at the end of November, strict secrecy has surrounded her movements.

However, it's known that she was lent hitherto secret equipment by the British admiralty. The equipment will enable her to operate at depths impossible until now.

The treasure sought by the Twyford was lost when the troopship Birkenhead struck the saw-edged reefs and sunken rocks on February 26, 1852, and broke up almost immediately.

In the immediate vicinity lie three other rich wrecks, which the vessel is also expected to try to reclaim.

Torpedoed by the German submarines in 1943, they are the Queen Anne, a British cargo motorship; the Agwimonte, an American cargo ship; and the Norwegian motor tanker Storaas.

In one of them, it is believed the salvage company hopes to find a cargo of bullion worth nearly $1,000,000.

The Twyford is operating under contract to an Irish salvage firm. With the aid of her new equipment, divers will be able to work 400 feet below the surface of the water and remain in telephonic connection with the ship.

However, the most likely ship to be carrying bullion is the Queen Anne, now lying at a depth of only 90 to 120 feet.

The vessels in which the Twyford is interested all lie outside of South African territorial waters. This may account for the secrecy of her mission, since she may be expecting competition and has made her quick and secret dash to beat possible rivals to the scene.

Electrical Tips For the Home

In movie comedies and the cartoon strips it's good for a laugh, but in real life only a moron sees something funny in falling downstairs. It can be fatal.

Take cellar stairs in some older homes for example. You'll often find them built with a steep incline because of space limitations, and overbalancing is eas-y. Or try to find your way upstairs in pitch darkness, carrying a heavy, off-balance package. Your feet play strange tricks because without light you must "feel" your way.

Not only on the cellar stairway, but in clothes closets, hallways, and the entrance to the garage, modern home lighting methods call for a switch controlling a pathway of light ahead of you. It's only common sense of course, but how many homes in Ontario still have one or two bare bulbs dangling from the basement ceiling, usually placed where your head collides with a ceiling beam before your hand finds the pull chain. Getting into such a darkened cellar is still one of the best ways to collect accident insurance.

At the head and foot of stairways, a set of three-way switches is always included in a well wired home. These control the lights of the "pathway of light ahead" from either top or bottom of the staircase. Others are used to light up the approach to a garage from the house; they are installed by competent electricians at each entrance of a room with two or more doorways. They are primarily for convenience, but they are also one of the most effective means of preventing home accidents.

Modern home planning of electric wiring eliminates groping for light switches, stumbling over objects in a dark room, and landing in the cellar head first—by the use of adequate wall switches.

OXYGEN IS THE PROBLEM

Mr. Eric Shipton, a Britisher, has been on more epeditions to reach the top of Mount Everest than any other living man. Mr. Shipton says the real problem is oxygen. At 28,000 feet the human body is reaching—or perhaps has reached—the supreme limit of what it can do without oxygen, and Everst is 29,002 feet high!

Mr. Shipton believes that suitable oxygen equipment will yet have to be devised before anyone can reach the top of the world's highest peak.

ELMA W.I. MEETS IN BECKSTEAD SCHOOL

Agriculture and Canadian Industries was the topic of the January meeting of the Elma Women's Institute which was held in the Beckstead School. Twenty members answered the roll call by naming a Canadian food and where manufactured. Several visitors were welcomed by the president.

The committee reported that seven Christmas boxes had been sent to shut-ins. The secretary read several letters of thanks. The president reminded the members that Blue Cross was due and must be paid this month.

It was decided to hold a euchre in the Beckstead School, Friday evening, January 16. Committee in charge is Mrs. Wilfred McMillan, Mrs. Harold McIntosh and Mrs. Bernice Froats.

Mrs. Hubert Shaw, Mrs. Harold McIntosh and Mrs. Bernice Froats are to secure a play to be put on in Dunbar Hall during the winter. Mrs. Egerton Barkley, Mrs. Wray McPherson and Mrs. Melvin Dillabough are to secure a play to be held in Elma Hall.

It was decided that the meetings for February and March be discontinued.

Mrs. Egerton Barkley and Miss Gertrude Barkley were conveners and had charge of the programme, with Mrs. Barkley acting as the chairman. The programme opened with the singing of "Old MacDonald Had a Farm." Miss Barkley gave a reading; "House Plants Need Winter Rest" was read by Miss Jean Armstrong. Mrs. Don Dillabough read "A Plea for Roadside Beauty;" Miss Barkley gave a very interesting lecture on "Gardening and Transplanting Plants." Mrs. Hugh McMillan and her daughter, June, played "Till I Waltz Again With You" and "You Belong to Me."

Dealing with Canadian Industries, Mrs. E. Barkley gave a paper, "Canada As It Is Today."

Mervin Beckstead and David Rice entertained the group by singing "In the Book" and "Life Gets Tedious."

Mrs. Hugh McMillan rendered two violin selections. Miss G. Barkley conducted a weed-naming contest which was won by Miss Jean Armstrong.

The president moved a vote of thanks to the school board and the caretaker, Mrs. Whittaker, for the use of the school and for having it so warm on such a cold night.

With the singing of Women's Institute Anthem the meeting closed.

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN

Hydro Home Economist

Hello Homemakers! A meal is half ready before you start when precooked foods are used. Such a wide variety of appetizing dishes can be prepared with a minimum amount of preparation.

When easy to prepare yet tasty foods are enjoyed to the last morsel the recipe should be pasted on a card for further reference. Perhaps you'll clip today's recipes now if your family's taste is anything like ours.

Meat Pie

2 lbs ground round steak
1 can vegetable soup
2 cups rice cereal
1 egg
¼ cup chopped onion
1 tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper

Mix all ingredients and pat mix into a loaf pan. Bake in oven of 350 degs. for 1 hour. Serves 6 or 7.

Onion Pielets

1 pkg. pastry mix
3 cups small onions
3 tbsps. butter
1½ tsps. bottled gravy
1¾ cups boiling water
1 tsp. salt
1-8 tsp. pepper
¼ cup flour
¾ cup grated cheese

Prepare dough of pastry mix. Line bottom and sides of 2 casseroles. Saute onions in butter. Mix gravy and seasonings into hot water. Mix slowly into flour and onions. Pour into casseroles. Sprinkle each with grated cheese. Top with tag ends of pastry. Bake in electric oven of 400 degs. for 35 minutes.

Celery-Pork Casserole

1 pkg. precooked rice
1½ cups water
½ tsp. salt
1 tbsp. parsley
1 cup diced celery
1 can pork loaf
2 tbsps. onion
5 tbsps. dripping
2½ cups buttermilk
1-8 tsp. dry mustard
¾ tsp. Worcestershire

Mix rice, water, salt, dry parsley and celery well. Bring quickly to a boil, uncovered. Fluff rice gently with a fork. Cover and let stand 10 mins. Saute cubed meat and onion in butter; add flour, then buttermilk and stir until thickened. Heap rice on platter and cover with creamed meat mixture. Serves 5 or 6.

TAKE A TIP

1. Cookie mix should be stirred to a smooth batter to prevent mixture from spreading on the cookie sheet. Then too, chill the dough in the refrigerator for 15 or 20 minutes in the bowl or on the cookie sheet to prevent cookies from losing their shape.
2. When you add drained maraschino cherries to a cake mix, cut in halves and let dry half an hour before mixing the batter. Then, too, you may add ¼ cup extra shortening to a mix if you are substituting a packaged material for a cherry pound cake recipe.
3. Be sure to cool cup cakes before removing the paper if cooked in baking cups, otherwise they may stick.
4. Chill prepared pastry mix in snugly wrapped wax paper or aluminum foil for about 20 minutes.
5. When breakfast cereals and crackers lack flavour or become soft spread them in shallow baking tins and place in a preheated oven of 350 degs. for 10 or 15 minutes.
6. Add ½ tsp. of salad oil on top of a jar or tin of olives to prevent mould forming on the top.
7. When you prepare two packages of flavoured jelly powders to make a layered mold, do not grease the tin. You can add the second mix as soon as chilled to lukewarm.
8. An opened can of prepared soup may be stored in the refrigerator successfully. It is always wise to tie a piece of wax paper over the top or press foil over it to prevent evaporation of moisture.
9. When you blend two kinds of soup together, use cream soups together or combine others such as consomme and vegetable.
10. Cheese will not narden if kept in a small glass or porcelain covered jar in which two cubes of sugar have also been stored.
11. Boxes of cake, cookie and pastry mix should be stored in a cool, dry place. Use within a two-month period.
12. Check storage of canned goods at this time of the year. It may be necessary to plug in a space heater for about ½ an hour at night to keep food from freezing. When you do this, turn on the minute minder of the range and this will notify you to disconnect the electric element.

What is the Future Of the Bacon Hog?

Canada's national "Bacon Hog Policy" was born out of the aftermath of the first gerat war and the disrepute into which the fat, heavy selections of Canadian bacon had fallen onme British consumers were returned to free choice in their purchases. By mutual agreement between producers, provincial and Dominion governments, the processors and all others concerned, the industry endorsed the principle of producing the lean, meaty bacon-type hogs which would make Wiltshire sides comparable to the top Danish product. By various means this objective has been steadily pursued since the start of hog grading in 1922. Compared with the hogs which went through the Canadian plants in 1922, great improvements in type, quality and finish has been affected, although the rate of progress has not been constant at all times and in all areas.

Great Britain has been Canada's traditional customer for our surplus bacon. Prior to 1939 it was shipped to the competitive British market, where it was received readily and priced at its value as compared to other imported bacons. Beginning with 1939-40 the British and Canadian governments entered into firm annual contracts through which, we sent tremendous quantities of bacon to England. After the war these contracts gradually called for less and less bacon, but in general absorbed our entire surplus. But in 1951 Britain, faced with very serious internalfinancial difficulties.
lack of foreign exchange, bought no bacon from Canada. For the first time, our traditional market was closed to us, and it has not since been reopened.

Fortunately, with the help of modest exports to the United States, Canadian consumers were able to absorb the 1951 hog crop, and at very good prices. But large feed grain crops in 1950 and 1951 led to increased hog production which was well on the way to market when the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in Canada early in 1952 closed the American border to all Canadian livestock and meats, except for small quantities of certain canned and cooked products. In an attempt to stabilize the hog market for producers of hogs, the Canadian government, commencing in February of 1952, undertook to support the market by the purchase of fairly large quantities of surplus pork. It would appear, however, that until we again have access to either the British or American markets, or both, the Canadian consumer will be called on to take the bulk of Canadian pork.

In view of the above circumstnces, some hog producers and others have expressed the opinion that as we no longer ship Wiltshire sides to Britain, our whole programme of quality production and grading of hogs and bacon is out-dated, as it was based on the production of Witshires. They have pointed out, probably correctly, that our main future market will be in the United States; that the U.S. market does not pay quality premiums as we have known them; that the Canadian swine industry should now forget production of the more specialized bacon hog and turn its attention to the "easier-produced" fatter hogs such as are sold in the United States.

Obviously those who express such opinions ignore some very basic and important facts. Through the years consumer preference has swung very sharply away from the fatter cuts of pork and bacon, and the use of lard, to the leaner selection of pork, the use of synthetic shortenings, vegetable oils and chemical detergents. Lard, which at one time sold for double or more the price paid for live hogs, now can be bought refined and packaged in cartons for less than half the price per pound which is being paid for the entire hog carcass. Consumers are insisting more and more on proper distribution of lean and fat in their pork products. Formerly entire bellies were graded for quality before being sliced, but now in many cases only the leanest strips in a belly can go into top brands. Almost every packing plant has been experiencing an increasingly large percentage of "returned cuts," such as hams, picnics, butts and shoulders which have been cut and returned by retailers as containing too much fat internally to suit their customers.

In the United States, a future potential market, the same marked preferances for lean cuts and less lard are also becoming clearly apparent. Agricultural leaders and prominent swine breeders have been bending every effort toward the production of a leaner, "meat-type" hog. Official American government market hog classifications have recently been radically redrafted to give preferential rating to lighter, meatier hogs. Our system of hog carcass grading has been studied by American experts with a view to possible adaptation to American conditions.

Fortunately, while we have been building a "Wiltshire-type" hog for the British market, we have, at the same time, produced the hog which now might be turned the "consumer-type" hog, with its minimum of fat. high percentage of lean meat, light shoulders, heavy hams and length of middle from which to cut premium quality chops and breakfast bacon. Before disease control regulations closed the American market to us, most Canadian pork cuts commanded a definite price premium in the United States through those very advantages.

History has shown time and again that if Canadian swine production is to take full advantage of its potentialities (such as in years of heavy feed production and grain marketing difficulties), we must have an export outlet for surplus pork products. The consuming population of the North American continent has been steadily growing ahead of its livestock production. It may well be, and before long, that our entire livestock surplus may be needed in the United States. To enter that market our production incurs certain transportation charges, duties, and other extra expenses. Hog production is the major enerprise on many American farms and under their climatic conditions, production costs seem to have been lower than in Canada. If Canadian pork is to successfully compete on American markets, our higher costs must be offset by continued production of an intrinsically higher value product. We now have that better hog. It has taken a lot of work and improvement to get it. Just as we are on the eve of the sternest competition we have yet experienced, it would not seem wise to deliberately abandon of slacken any of the methods by which that improvement has been affected.

Certainly, regardless of the possible level of world hog prices, the product of the lean, bacon-type hog should continue to command higher prices than the product of any other sort of hog. Given favourable conditions, Canada has produced tremendous pork surpluses and can do so again. But quality pork products, necessary to offset other production advantages of our competitors, can only be made frm a quality hog. On this basis the future of the bacon-type hog seems assured, no matter on what market the product may be sold.

He who forgets his own friends mainly to follow after those of a higher degree is a snob.—Thackeray.

NATIONALITY OF TEAPOTS? —ENGLISH!

The Chinese beat the English to the tea cup by several centuries, but the English were first to make proper use of the teapot.

The early Chinese tea drinkers used to put a few leaves into a cup, pour boiling water over them from a hot water pot and put a cover on to keep the brew hot and retain its fragrance.

Tea was not brought to England until the 17th century, and the English copied the tea service from the seasoned tea drinkers of China. But the hot water pot became a tea pot and the cup cover a saucer. Since the Chinese took took their beverage straight the cream jug and sugar bowl are English inventions. The first Chinese tea cups to reach England were without handles and many served as sugar bowls.

The first English teapots only held half a pint, not because tea was slow to stimulate the popular taste, but because it was such an expensive luxury. A two-pound package of tea was a handsome gift from the East India government to King Charles II of England.

In time the Chinese, who had given England the pleasant tea-drinking custom, began to make their teapots. Hundreds and thousands of them were made of unglazed buff, red and black stoneware. Finely potted of close-grained clay, they came in all shapes and sizes and cost but little. Stoneware is described as pottery fired at an extremely high temperature until it is very hard.

By 1671 the English had started to make some of their own teapots. John Dwight Fulham took the initiative and in his patent speaks of his discovery of "the mystery and invention of making . . . stoneware never before made in England." A few years later the Elers brothers also began to make stoneware, concentrating on teapots .

They gave the English teapot its first glaze. By throwing salt into the kiln when the fire was at its hottest the finish became extra hard and glossy. It was not the right process for teapots, however, for it cracked with the heat.

But the English teapot kept growing in beauty and perfection. The next refinement is credited to a John Astbury. He made teapots that could take the heat by introducing ground flints into the body of the ware. Some years later Thomas Whieldon made some marbled ware pots by mixing clay of different colours. These quickly became famous and in 1756 Whieldon went into partnership with Josiah Wedgwood.

After three years Wedgwood went into business by himself and became the first English potter to win a European reputation.

And so with tea-drinking habits grew the English skills and arts that have given the world some of its most beautiful china.

DON TURNS BACK ON TV AUDIENCE

An Oxford don who "sulked" through the last part of a television programme, after taking offence at opinions expressed in an unrehearsed panel discussion. is being given a three-month rest by the BBC.

A. J. P. Taylor, fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, was one of the regular members of the panel. In a recent programme, however, he disagreed with opinions expressed, turned his back on the speakers and sat silently until the programme ended.

The BBC said Taylor, a member of the Labor party, has been dropped for at least three months, because he has said "privately and publicly" that he dislikes the programmes present pattern.

MIRACLE OF THOUGHT

There is some concrete evidence that when men begin to think, biases and prejudices begin to disappear. Four years ago some U.S. citizens published a book called "The Miracle of America." It was not a partisan document. It had the approval of both labor and management. It simply told the dramatic story of the country's industrial develpoment, without the slightest effort to make any particular case.

But it did make a case. A survey was made of the reaction of student and industrial workers. Among non-readers, only 4 per cent of industrial workers and 10 per cent of students believed that competitive free enterprise was responsible for the country's high and rising standard of living. But among those who had read the story the view was sharply changed. Twenty-four per cent of industrial workers and 42 per cent of the students had come to believe in competitive enterprise as the driving force.

Equally significant was the fact that 66 per cent of readers, both workers and students, recognized that high standards originated from new inventions and machines. Among non-readers only 14 per cent of industrial workers and 36 per cent of students so believed. It is fair evidence that once the case is presented it is too strong for any prejudice to deny.

The hotel manager walked up to a guest in the lobby.

"Your room is ready now," he said, "but because of the shortage of help you'll have to make your own bed."

"Oh, I don't mind making my own bed."

"Fine! Here is the hammer and saw."
