Six Keys to Beauty

BY LILLIAN TAFT MAIZE.

PART I.

With wistful eyes Loretta Morse watched the dapper young man in gray who was five places ahead of her in the line.

He was laughing jovially at something the ticket seller had said. As he turned from the window his casual gaze swept the long line that was forming, and passed unseeingly over Loretta's expectant face.

The eager smile with which she awaited recognition still trembled upon her lips; her quick ush still burned her face as he sauntered on through the turnstile into the fairgrounds and mingled with the crowd.

It was always like that, Loretta mused ruefully. Men just didn't seem to see her, though they never failed to note the pretty girls. They were polite enough if they met her face to face, but they showed all too clearly that they were not interested.

Now here they were, she and Sam Warrant; two young—or near young—people who had journeyed down from the same town to attend the fair, and they could have had a wonderful day together if fate had given Loretta half a chance. She could talk as interestingly and had as ready a wit as any of the Lockboro girls, but nobody ever talked with her long enough to discover this fact.

In the Chamber of Romance which was Loretta's heart there was a pedestal upon which she placed, from time to time, the image of the one who most nearly approached her Ideal of Manhood. A handsome motion-picture actor had reigned for a season, but for several years Sam Warrant, the leading druggist of Lockboro, had unknowingly held this exalted position. He was a likeable man and very popular with the girls, though he was nearly forty now and getting rather stout—to stout for an Ideal of Manhood, Loretta reflected whimsically.

She dismissed her disappointment with a shrug as she entered the grounds. She did not intend to let Sam Warrant spoil her first fair in seventeen years. She loved fairs, but had been too busy to attend them, for until lately life had been just a succession of invalid relatives to care for. Even now she would not have taken the fifty-mile trip from Lockboro had she not been commissioned to enter Miss Amy Bannister's famous quilt for the annual prize.

From her meagre savings Loretta had drawn five dollars to celebrate her holiday. She did not intend to spend it all, though she was prepared to go nearly to the limit. She planned to dine in state that evening at the Lake Shore Hotel, where they served a wonderful chicken dinner for a dollar. She would take the quilt to the needlework section. Then she would take in all the sights.

The fragrance of countless flowers enveloped her as she entered the main building. Most of the ground floor was given over to the exhibit of choice blooms. They gave a festal air to the bleak, unpainted walls.

She mounted the wide stairs to the mezzanine floor, disposed of the precious quilt, then joined the throng that was moving slowly around the balcony, stopping for a time at each gayly decorated booth.

Iceless refrigerators, tile roofing and washing machines; player pianos, kitchen cabinets and fluff rugs, each received its full share of Loretta's attention. It was all fresh and fascinating, and she entered into the spirit of it with the zest of a child.

Around one of the booths a large and attentive group of women had gathered. It was a very attractive place, Loretta observed, as she insinuated herself gradually nearer. Richly colored autumn leaves covered walls and ceiling and framed mirrors, cunningly placed, that reflected the countenances of the spectators. A buxom demonstrator harangued the crowd.

"We are giving a free facial massage to-day, ladies," she was announcing, as Loretta finally reached the front row. "A free facial to-day with every jar of our wonderful Cleo Orientola Cream. It brings youth and beauty to the plainest face, and leaves the skin as smooth as the petals of a rose."

She stopped for breath and smiled alluringly at the curious faces that were pressing close. Beyond her, in the recesses of the booth, two uniformed girls were attempting to restore youth and beauty to the visages of two elderly women.

"The greatest charm of womanhood is a perfect skin," intoned the lecturer. "Look, ladies, at your reflection in these mirrors. Are you satisfied with your appearance? Why not be attractive, sought after, admired? Buy a jar of this magic cream—price only one dollar—and you will have in your possession one of the most essential keys to beauty."

Loretta's fascinated gaze was upon the women who sat, with grim determination, in the chairs devoted to the restoration of beauty. They were both very plain, and one of them had a fatally large nose. Loretta instinctively raised her eyes to a mirror which reflected her own face. She looked at it critically.

She had thought she looked at least five years younger than she was, but the face staring at her from the leaf-framed mirror seemed to show every day of its thirty-six years. It was long and thin, with startled-looking gray eyes and a sensitive mouth that drooped wistfully at the corners. The eyebrows were faint and the skin colorless. The hair that was combed smoothly under Loretta's hat was of a nondescript shade of brown, and dishearteningly straight. No wonder men failed to notice her. She was as unobtrusive as a dead leaf.

"Are you admired?" the soul searching voice of the demonstrator asked. Have you had your share of popularity?"

"No!" sighed Loretta.

She had not intended to speak the word aloud. It was but the echo of a storm of rebellion that had swept over her. She jumped as the woman leaned closer.

"No?" the suave voice questioned, tenderly, confidentially. "Then why not? This is your opportunity. Seize it while the impulse is upon you. Learn how to cultivate the beauty that has been so long neglected."

Loretta was suddenly possessed of a wild desire to accept the invitation; but she tingled with the consciousness that all those curious eyes would be upon her if she entered the booth. Then she reminded herself that they were all strangers. This was the first day of the fair. Seldom did anyone come down from her home until the second day, which was Lockboro Day. Sam's was the only familiar face she had seen, and he had gone in the direction of the automobile exhibit.

"It is the duty of every woman to make the most of herself," urged the tempter. "Is a paltry dollar too high a price to pay for beauty?"

"Here!" jerked Loretta.

From her hand the demonstrator blithely plucked a dollar bill.

"One jar, lady? Here you are. Will you kindly let this lady through, please? Step right in, lady. One of our beauty culturists will be at liberty in a moment."

When Loretta emerged, fifteen minutes later, she took with her not only the jar of cream, but a bottle of Aromatic Skin Rejuvenator, a box of Medicated Complexion Powder and a tube of Orientola Hand Lotion. She had severely declined to purchase a box of Orientola Rosebud Tint, explaining that she did not approve the use of rouge.

The attendant, agreeing politely, had proceeded to use a bit of the Rosebud Tint as a finishing touch to Loretta's "facial," and winked wickedly at her associate when Loretta commented upon her improved appearance.

"Now if you had your hair bobbed, madam," the girl had volunteered, "you'd certainly look swell." And added: "They're giving a free bob at one of the booths on this floor."

Loretta laughed at this absurdity as she again merged with the moving throng. Her skin felt pleasantly cool, and she was experiencing a sensation of independence that was new and most exhilarating. She was thrilled with her own daring in this unheard-of act.

Down on the main floor a band was playing a waltz, and Loretta's slim body swayed to its rhythm. She had always longed to dance. She hummed the tune as she approached another booth and joined the onlookers.

A very large woman hid from Loretta the attraction that was absorbing the attention of the crowd. She touched the woman's arm.

"What're they doing in there?" she questioned.

"There's some girls havin' their hair marcelled," the woman explained.

Real Estate.

"Your friendship to me this summer has meant a lot."

"Well, then, all we need now is the house."

The Diplomat.

Elsie, aged three, was fond of playing telephone, but hated to take a bath. Thinking she would use a little strategy, her grandmother picked up the toy telephone and said. Hello, is that Elsie?"

The child was delighted and said: "Yes, grandma."

"Well, come and have your bath."

"Wrong number," said Elsie, dropping the receiver.

The Flowers of Kingsway.

Great cities are always being rebuilt. They are never finished. London is no exception; it is never out of the builders' hands. One of its most famous thoroughfares — Kingsway — has in recent years been carved out of an area of mean streets and shabby buildings. In the place where they stood are rows of fine buildings, with the great Bush building looking up the Way and by its sculptured motto, "Friendship between the two nations," reminding those who pass of the common interests of America and Britain.

The transformation took many years. The district was for long a mass of hoardings and scaffoldings. For a long time much of the land was unbuilt upon, after the building-wreckers had done their work.

It was during that time that a strange thing happened. Nature began to turn those vacant spaces into gardens. Strange flowers appeared here and there, flowers for which it was difficult to account, for they were not native blooms. Expert naturalists were called in and decided that they were Italian flowers. They said that the ground there had not had a drop of moisture or a ray of sunlight on it since the days when the Romans occupied London and built on that site. For the first time for all those centuries, the ground had been opened to the ministries of sky and of cloud, and these flowers were the result. Buried, they had had no chance. When at last the opportunity came, those long buried seeds were not slow to respond to the sun and the rain, and to bring touches of loveliness to that stretch of waste land.

There are surprises like that in human life. Buried in many a life are potential virtues, things of loveliness, that have never found expression. They are in the most unlikely places. Sometimes they only get their chance after an experience that resembles a demolition. The overcrowded ground of life has been cleared and the buried things are at last exposed to those ministries of God's grace which can turn the wilderness into a garden.

The Chipping Sparrow.

Brisk little chirp bird, from our window narrow,
Your busy way we watch;
You are a kinsman of the English sparrow;
Perhaps you're Scotch?

Yes, doubtless, for your nest is built—how thrifty!—
With wisps from Dobbin's mane;
You're canny, too, evading Puss the shifty,
Time and again.

And when we hear your little song insistent,
Limited, changeless, sure,
It proves you are a Scot but inconsistent,
A wee bit dour.

If still we doubt, there is a little matter,
That proves the point, mayhap;
Nature has given you—the wise old hatter!—
A brown Scotch cap.

—Robert Gilbert Welsh, in "Azrael."

A Good Fan.

He—"Now we are at the ball game, we'll sit by my friend Jones and keep cool."

She—"How can we keep cool?"

He—"He's a good fan."

Explained.

A little girl who was trying to tell a friend how absent-minded her grandpa was said:

"He walks around thinking of nothing and when he remembers it, he then forgets that what he thought of was something entirely different from what he wanted to remember."

Where Hills Arise.

Take a hill before a rain,
Dust upon the yellow plain,
And the sombre waiting firs:
Take a hill when rain has passed
And the serried pine are massed
Spear points where a breathing stirs.

There is something in a hill
Ever eager, always still.

In the deep heart of the hills
Are a hundred hidden courses,
And their plunging waterfalls
Are like silver running horses,
While on windy days above,
Though the valleys have no sound,
Where the gentian holds the light,
Movement seems to till the ground.

I was born where many waters are,
I have sesen them at their source, and later,
Watched them when the floods were high,
Crossed them when the geese flew by;
Many a sea I've known, but never
Water like a hill-born river.

—Struthers Burt, in "When I Grew Up to Middle Age."

Making Use of a Paisley Shawl.

The fortunate possessor of a Paisley shawl has a charming decoratfon for the wall. While these shawls, so popular in the last century, were woven in Scotland, the Oriental colorings and patterns make them delightfully harmonious with period furnishings. The famous palm-leaf pattern, for example, is a decided "find" to hang in the fashion of a tapestry or other decorative textile, on neutral walls. It makes a "point of interest," as interior decorators say, when hung in a dark corner needing more color. It may be hung above book shelves, above a mantel, a console table or a couch. It can be fastened directly to the picture molding, or hemmed at the top and a stick run through the casing. Then a cord must be tacked to each end of the casing and hung with a tassel like a picture or mirror upon the wall.

Sometimes a treasured Paisley shawl may be too worn to be used entire. Then a strip cut so as to make the most of the pattern is attractive as a straight table runner. It should be lined with sateen and the edge may be finished with a narrow metal gimp. A strip cut diagonally from a shawl may be used either in a runner or as a centre panel in a soft cushion. Contrasted with black satin, paisley is very effective in an oblong cushion. Where it joins the satin the seam may be covered with gimp to match the table runner.

One more use for this colorful shawl is to drape a couch with it. Plain cushions should be used. A room furnished in Colonial or Queen Anne style, especially when the Oriental note is present, will be interesting with this picturesque cover.

Colors to set it off best include dull green, gold and black.

Winter Warmth.

Twinkling flames danced beneath the mantelpiece. Bronze andirons carry the figures of dormant lions, symbols of soft subservience to the flames, asleep like gentle cats under the spell of the fire. Lichen-covered logs, colored a sage green, with young moss and earthy smells clinging to their round and knotted surface, crackle merrily in the wide fireplace, etched with polished tiles. Grandmother sits contentedly in a Windsor chair and reads.

This is a modern home! Transplanted beauty of the ages abounds within the four walls of the living room whose hardwood floors radiate from the Chinese design on the taupe Wilton rug. The fireplace is only evidence of old-fashioned enjoyment of winter in northern lands. The blaze is bringing anew a blush to grandmother's cheeks. As the living flame leaps from the log a glowing atmosphere is left, which forms the essence of the foyer to the French; the hearth, without its cricket, to the English.

The fireplace is the link with winter days of yore. Memories and dim pictures are in the fireplace frame—pictures that live and breathe and vanish with the ever-changing music of the crackling logs.

All pervading is the warmth, the winter warm which bears no kin to the vagabond days of summer. Outside, the lawn is snow strewn, lit by the glow from the window where fringe of shade leaves a bar of flickering light and shadow above the sill.

Odors of the forest fill the living room. Phantasies of spring leap from quickening logs, as the rich aroma arises from red and purple flames that make only one step to the vanishing point in the somber shadows of the chimney and go out over the roof top into the night as a veil of smoke.

Removing the Sting of Loneliness.

Radio has been of untold benefit to Canadian farmers, and no doubt it is fully appreciated by them. Bringing into their sphere all the advantages of educational and entertainment programmes, radio has removed much of the handicap under which the rural resident suffers and has provided him with means to offset the loneliness sometimes experienced by those who are pushing forward the Canadian agricultural frontier.

But, while radio is a welcome companion on the outlying homestead, there are other Canadians in far more isolated positions and to whom radio means much. In Canada's Arctic northland members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and others are occupying posts and carrying on investigational work beyond the region of betterment and beyond all hope of relief or communication with the outside world until the Government steamer again visits them next summer. Practically all of the country north of the Arctic Circle is now in continuous darkness, and the feeling of loneliness must at times be almost overpowering. To these men radio means everything. The Canadian Government has provided each of these northern posts with receiving set and they are reported to be receiving the programs from a number of the more powerful stations, while once a month during the winter season messages will be broadcast particularly to those who are upholding the authority of Canada in the far off northern islands. One can imagine the watchful waiting of these men for the monthly message, and realize what radio means to them. The more fortunately situated grow accustomed to the luxury of radio, but only those who are isolated in the frozen north can appreciate radio to the full.

Better Marketing Helps Sheep Industry.

It is but a few years since the marketing of the lamb crop in many sections of Canada depended almost entirely on the visit of the drover. The lamb fair has changed this to a great extent, at least for the sheep raisers who have taken advantage of the modern teaching in preparing their lambs in such a way as to bring them into the highest market grades. The demonstrations carried on by the co-operative efforts of federal and provincial departments of agriculture, have been well received and it is now becoming the rule rather than the exception to find the lamb flocks showing the results of the advanced practices in being able to turn out a high percentage each year of Number One lambs.

The better practices, becoming more and more common on the farms where market sheep are raised, are preventing the flooding of the market during a short period in the fall, and the consequent depreciation of prices paid for stock as was the case some eight or ten years ago.

The marketing of the lambs is being year by year spread over a wider period and with it has come the increasing consumption of lamb and the building up of the sheep breeding industry.

Aunt Sally Banks, who is a member of the League for the Prevention of War, saw her first football game the other day. "This is terrible!" she exclaimed. "Why don't they arbitrate?"

KEPT AFLOAT BY LUMBER CARGO

The schooner Edward J. Farrar had a narrow escape from being sunk when she collided with the tanker, Miller County, six miles off Scotland Lighthouse on the New York coast. She was kept afloat for 18 hours by using the lumber cargo to fill the gaping hole in the prow.

Whistler and His Mother.

Few modern pictures are more familiar to the general public than Whistler's portrait of his mother. The subject of that famous portrait, Anna M. Whistler, was a gentle, affectionate and deeply religious old lady, conventional in her habits and outlook upon life, and not at all the kind of parent one would have expected to belong to a brilliant, eccentric, sharp-tongued and belligerent genius. But the relations between mother and son, as depicted in some of Mrs. Whistler's letters recently published in the Atlantic Monthly, were of the happiest. The fine old American, though she had some natural doubts of the solid value of her son's artistic London friends, gifted and charming though they were, endeavored to prove herself adaptable and understanding, and acted successfully as hostess for her beloved "Jemie" when he entertained them.

She tried hard to understand and appreciate his art and took a true mother's pride and delight in his success. Of the famous portrait itself she wrote:

"Just now a neighbor and friend interrupted my writing. She has just told me what some of Jemie's friends said of the portrait of my unworthy self. An artist said to her, 'It has a holy expression. Oh, how much sentiment Whistler has put into his mother's likeness!' Your sister will tell you how wonderfully the three cases of portraits were preserved from fire on the railroad train, though many packages of valuable luggage were entirely consumed. The flames had reached the case in which my portrait was; the lid was burnt, a side of the frame was scorched, yet the painting uninjured."

Suppose the picture had been burned. Could or would Whistler have replaced it? It was a narrow escape indeed for one of the really great art works of our time.

"It is more encouraging to my hopes of Jemie," continues his mother in her leter, "that at this time, when the World is offered him, he should confided in me voluntarily his desire to unite with me in the highest of all attainments. His is natural religion; he thinks of God as the diffusive source of all he enjoys, in the glories of the firmament, the loveliness of flowers, the noble studies of the human form. The Creator of all!"

FARM BOOKKEEPING PAYS

Start the New Year Right by Keeping Records of the Farm Business.

BY EARLE W. GAGE.

The merchant who tried to carry on a business without bookkeeping failed. The farmer, who is producer, merchant, and trader, carries on an extensive business enterprise without a record of any sort, save the unfaithful memory. Too commonly, he lives on the raw edge of failure without even knowing it. A set of simple books would permit the farmer to cut out certain lines which do not pay, and develop more extensively those returning a profit.

The farmer for his own comfort and satisfaction, wants to be certain how and where his business is paying or losing. But, by no means are all farmers born bookkeepers, and an intricate set of double-entry or loose-leaf books would be beyond the ability of many to manage at all.

There are now available on the market simple bookkeeping systems made up especially for the farm use, covering all items that should go into a record. These books will not be found difficult to understand by anyone who can read and write, so that the records can easily be kept by the boy or girl.

A young man returned from a short course at the college of agriculture, with many new ideas. He had discovered new possibilities in farming, and also made some discoveries which led him to believe he had been cultivating crops not adapted to the particular soil on the old farm. He had a slight suspicion that they might have been conducting the business wrong. He believed keeping records to determine these things just as important as keeping accounts to determine the earnings of a bank.

So, when he took hold of the farm work again, he opened a set of books, and before the season was over was able to tell his father and other experienced neighbors some facts about farming they did not know. For example, on such land as he was cropping, worth from $50 to $60 per acre, he found that it cost, including labor and interest at six per cent., $5 to produce a ton of hay.

He also found that it was costing fifty-one cents to grow, thresh and put a bushel of oats in the bin. Before that time they did not know which paid the greater profit for the expense and labor involved, or whether any of their operations were really paying.

Guided by the first year's accounts, this young man set about cultivating certain crops he knew would return a profit, and which were adapted to the soil in which they were planted, and for which there existed a profitable market in that region.

This young farmer believes that farm accounting offers advantages to the farmer in these rather difficult times to make both ends meet. "And no farm record is complete," he advised, "without an accounting of the labor expended by both men and horses in terms of hours. Only in this way, can the labor cost of producing different crops be determined.

"I learned from my account books that cattle gave a ready sale for rough feeds at home, at about their market value, and besides, helped maintain the fertility of the land. Records on rate of grain and feed consumed, show that, after deducting the cost of other feeds, etc., calves fed for awhile after weaning, paid about one dollar a bushel for their corn. Hogs following the calves also gained some.

"I computed the cost of producing pork in terms of pounds, and found that, counting feed, labor, interest, equipment and depreciation, the cost was about 9.8 cents. Each bushel of corn fed to the porkers produced 12.5 pounds gain, or eight bushels of corn were required to make 100 pounds of gain. For each bushel of corn fed into the hogs, we received about $1.85, after labor, cost of other feeds, interest, depreciation, and other just and reasonable expenses, as they appeared at the time, were deducted."

On all farm operations a strict account should be kept. Bookkeeping pays, because it helps the farmer to know what he has done, and is doing. Also, farm accounting compels the farmer to study his business and use his judgment.

But a survey would show that the farmers of any given community keep few records. For this the farmer cannot be blamed too hard, for, at the time when the things which it is most important to record are happening, the tiller of the soil is too busy and his hands and mind too tired from toil, to make a record. Besides, in too many cases the farmer feels that, since a record of his operations does not change the results, books are not worth keeping.

However, the business man in town might make the same excuse with as much reason of getting away with it. In making such assumption, the farmer overlooks the fact that a well-kept and carefully studied record of each year's operations will change substantially, the result. In such a record the farmer will discover the principal leaks in his business, and the means of preventing these wastes in the future will suggest themselves. The record will disclose the principal sources of income, and give the farmer the opportunity of further developing those departments of the business.

At any rate, an inventory should be made at the end of the year and studied in connection with the cash balance, and in comparison with the inventory of the year preceding. This will show clearly in which direction the business is headed.

The inventory sheet, listing the machinery owned, live stock, grain, hay, vegetables, etc., will prove most valuable in the case of a fire, as this would be the basis of adjustment. The same holds true of the possessions in the farm home. Also, the inventory will materially aid the farmer to show his banker what his resources are, as against his liabilities. If he be a fortunate farmer, who does not borrow money, then there will still be some satisfaction in knowing how much he is, or is not, worth!

Booming Sweet Clover.

Sweet clover has become the most popular legume in Manitoba; its value as a soil builder has been definitely proven; it fits well into the common rotation system of Manitoba; it can be depended upon for good yields of hay under almost any conditions of soil and climate; as a pasture sweet clover has a carrying capacity unequalled by most crops; it is an abundant seed producer; Arctic sweet clover has been recognized as a standard variety and has given favorable results; sweet clover can be made into silage, but is apt to become slimy unless care is taken to reduce the moisture by further maturity or mixing with some dry roughage; early seeding is recommended; when a nurse crop is used 10 to 15 pounds of clover seed per acre is a satisfactory rate of seeding; shallow seeding is preferable, provided the seed bed is mellow and firm; seeding with nurse crop at slightly less than the normal rate is most economical; cutting the crop in the early bud stage, leaving a 4 or 5 inch stubble will make the most palatable hay and allow for a second growth; harvesting with the binder and curing in the sheaf will preserve the maximum amount of leaves and reduce the cost of handling the crop; in a mixture with sweet clover, brome grass has advantages over other grasses; growing sweet clover in inter-tilled rows for seed production is recommended; inoculation of the seed is inexpensive and is advisable in the newer fields. Such are the conclusions reached by Mr. Derick of the Brandon, Man., Experimental Farm in his pamphlet on "Sweet Clover" published by the Dominion Dept. of Agriculture.

My Kitchen Windows.

The sills of my kitchen windows are narrow, so I had my husband fit a nine-inch-wide board into each of the two east ones, fastened to the sills with a small nail at each end. I finished the boards with varnish stain to match the woodwork and placed several plants on each. They make the kitchen a much more pleasant place.

Under the other window, at the back of the room, we placed a good-sized wooden box with hinged cover, finished also in the varnish stain, and the children keep their rubbers and goloshes inside. I find this box, which is on the level with the window sill, to be a pleasant and convenient seat when doing some of the little sitting-down tasks.—J. S.

LUNCH IN RURAL SCHOOLS

Young citizens can best receive the full benefits of free education when their small bodies are well nourished. The wise teacher not only practices health habits herself and teaches health habits to her pupils, but also finds out by weighing and measuring—the exact state of nutrition of the boys and girls in her charge, and she uses all the influence at her disposal to see that a hot school lunch is made available for every child. If she thinks that in her case conditions are too difficult to control and she can do nothing, she will be glad to hear that many teachers have achieved the seemingly impossible.

As a matter of fact the school lunch, or at least one hot dish to add to a cold lunch brought by the children, is becoming more and more a matter of course in our schools.

When a teacher notices that Jacob and Alice are restless and inattentive, she is more apt to inquire whether these two had tea or coffee for breakfast, or perhaps no breakfast at all, than to scold them.

Whatever may be the conditions at home, children can learn at the school lunch to like unaccustomed foods and to take this lesson away with them. Careful educational features accompanying the school lunch make the experience doubly valuable to the child. He learns readily what combinations of food are good for children, and why. Sometimes the teacher has the satisfaction of an early visit from his mother.

"What's that brown stuff Jacob gets at the school lunch? Kind o' sweet, he says."

"That's cocoa."

"Well, he says he wants that at home. I guess if you show me, I can make it."

A lesson ensues which assures Jacob his cocoa at home from that time forth.

Sometimes the mother has a different way of acquiring knowledge of valuable foods taught to her child as a health lesson.

"Say, isn't there anything but spinach that will put iron in my boy's blood?"

"Of course there is," and the teacher explains in a word or two the value of leafy vegetables.

The school lunch helps the teacher herself, as well-fed pupils are good-natured and attentive.

The rural school teacher sometimes finds difficulties in seeing that school lunches are provided. That these difficulties are not insurmountable is shown by the results of an investigation in country schools where hot lunches are supplied.

The hot lunch at school is not meant to take the place of the lunch at home, but to supplement that lunch. It is to give every child who must carry a cold lunch at least one hot dish each noon.

The following is listed as necessary equipment:

Stove (heating stove or kerosene stove).

Goods box (to be used as table and cupboard).

Kettle with cover (large enough to hold one cup of cocoa or soup for each pupil).

Dishpan.

One saucepan.

One large spoon.

Ladle or cup for serving soup.

One knife.

One fork.

One teaspoon.

Measuring cup.

Each child provides his own cup, spoon and plate.

With the equipment in hand the problem of food supplies comes up. These answers to questions showed how teachers were obtaining food.

"Each child brought something."

"Took turns in bringing the whole dish."

"Each brought his own."

"Teacher supplied it."

"Parents supplied food."

"Children brought money."

"Kept some supplies on hand—perishable food brought each day."

"Interested woman in the district sent it."

The hot dishes served at the schools were cocoa, cream soups, and cream vegetables.

The preparation and the serving of the dishes were variously accomplished.

"By groups of students." (Easily done and most desirable.)

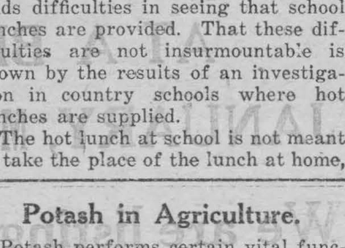

"Entire dish prepared and sent by one family in turn with others."

"By teacher alone."

It is now a generally accepted fact that a child's mental condition depends largely upon his physical condition, so that progress in school requires a consideration of health factors which in the past have not received their due share of attention. It is as much the duty of school authorities to make thoughtful provision for the physical well-being of the child as to provide a proper schoolhouse and intelligent teacher. The long and sometimes extremely cold winters, and the great distances some pupils live from the school, make the noonday lunch one of the most vital problems to be considered by all. This problem can be solved only by the co-operation of the home and school authorities. The children are and have been practically always eager and ready to take up and successfully carry along the hot school lunch, but their enthusiasm alone can not make success.

Potash in Agriculture.

Potash performs certain vital functions in plant nutrition and is one of the essential elements of plant growth. Some of the sources of this valuable fertilizer are farm manure, wood ashes, seaweed, and certain chemicals such as muriate of potash, sulphate of potash, sylvanite and kainite, used in mixed fertilizers. A new pamphlet, written by Dr. Frank T. Shutt, Dominion Chemist, and distributed free by the Publications Branch, Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa, gives valuable hints on its use. Its use on clay loams, usually, is not necessary; on such soils it employment is seldom profitable. On sandy and gravelly loams, mucks and peaty loams, which are frequently very poor in potash, the application of potash compounds may be expected to prove profitable. Cereal crops, except barley for malting, seldom require potassic manuring, but it is likely to prove beneficial for crops rich in carbohydrates, such as mangels, potatoes, sugar beets, sunflowers and corn. It is also beneficial to fruits, large and small, and leguminous plants such as clover, alfalfa and peas.

A New One On Her.

Hubby (reading) — "Merciful heavens, here's four more persons killed in a feud!"

Wife—"Never heard of that make of cars."

Her Mother—"I hope you and your little friends behaved like ladies at the party."

Little Elsie—"Well, we didn't. There were no cocktails or cigarettes and we couldn't play bridge, so there was nothing we could quarrel or swear about."

Aurora Borealis.

On winter nights when all the plain is plumed
With frequent trees on silver breasts
  of snow,
With purple trees that shake a crystal glow
As if in them a vital mystery fumed,—

Then, the announcer of grand northern night,
He stimulates upon the polar wall
Opal and rainbow, sun, and even all
Volcanic color in one sumptuous light.

I wonder if the ice-floes take that flame,
That flood of color till their very deeps
Vibrate aurorally, their sterile heaps Spark more than diamonds would, if massed the same,
With flames no thing but eyeless clouds could see,— Clouds, indifferent that such light could be.

—Martha Webster Merrihew.

Elevator Screenings for Feed.

Screenings cleaned from the grain crops of Western Canada are now offered for sale by the elevator companies at the head of the Great Lakes. They are graded as Standard Recleaned Screenings, consisting chiefly of broken wheat and wild buckwheat in varying proportions as well as smaller proportions of barley and other coarse grains, and Oat Scalpings composed chiefly of wild oats with small quantities of domestic oats, wheat, barley, etc., invariably present. Oat scalpings from this year's crop weigh from 35 to 40 pounds per bushel. These recleaned screenings are obtained from the original elevator screening from which the chaff and fine weed seeds have been removed. Referring to this class of feeds, Mr. Geo. H. Clark, Dominion Seed Commissioner, points out that they may be purchased under the security of inspection certificate, if so ordered.

Shipments of Cattle to Britain.

During the year ending March 31, 1925, 53,661 store cattle were shipped to Great Britain compared with 28,500 the previous year. A government feed inspector accompanies each shipment, and it speaks well for their services and for the general health of our live stock that although the cattle came from all parts of Canada not a single animal was rejected for disease by the British officers. The shipments are very closely supervised and the requirements of the British ministry are strictly observed.

Some teamsters make me wish horses weren't so patient.

Cellar Wintering of Bees.

The bee cellar should be well ventilated but not draughty. The best temperature in the early part of the winter, says the Dominion Apiarist in his bulletin "Bees and How to Keep them" that can be had free from the publications Branch, Ottawa, is around 48 deg. F., which towards the spring, as the bees become restless, should be reduced to from 42 to 45 degrees. The air in the cellar must not be too dry, advises the Apiarist, Mr. C. B. Gooderham, but it also must not be damp enough for moisture to condense on the floors of the hives, and the cellar should be well drained. The bees should be kept in darkness and left undisturbed. By boarding off a portion of the house cellar the atmospherical requirements as set forth in the Bulletin can best be secured for a few colonies. Do not winter your bees in trenches dug in the ground or in the upper rooms of homes.

Having to feed bees in the winter one authority terms "bad management." If this has to be done, candy, made as follows, should be placed over the frames: Dissolve three pounds of granulated sugar in one pint of boiling water; after the sugar has dissolved bring to a boil over a slow fire until it reaches 280 deg. F., or when the candy will form hard brittle strings on being dropped into cold water; pour into moulds and allow to harden. Do not disturb the candy after pouring or scrape it from the dish in which it was boiled into the mould. Take care not to burn or scorch the sugar when cooking. The candy should be hard, light amber in color and transparent.

Experiments at O.A.C.

Results of some experimental work conducted during the past year by the Dairy Dept. of the Ontario Agricultural College are reported in brief as follows:

Neutralization of Sour Cream—Sour cream was neutralized with lime to 1, 2 and 3 per cent. acid before pasteurizing. The butter scored highest and kept best in storage from the lots reduced to .1 per cent. acid.

Canadian vs. Imported Salt—Lots of butter salted with an imported salt were compared with lots of butter having Canadian salt added. The lots having imported salt scored highest when fresh, but lost more in flavor while in storage as compared with lots salted with Canadian salt.

Pasteurized Milk in Cheese-making.—Pasteurized milk for making Cheddar cheese produced an average of 4.24 pounds more cheese per 1,000 pounds of milk, as compared with raw milk, but the pasteurized cheese was not quite so good in quality.

Egg Yolk Powder in Ice Cream—The use of "egg yolk powder" in ice cream mixes improved the whipping quality of the mix and shortened the time of freezing, but did not show a constant improvement in the quality of ice cream.

Importance of Sterilizing Cooler—Sterilizing the surface of a market milk cooler with live steam before cooling the milk, reduced the average bacterial content as a result of cooling from 2,500 to 250 bacteria per c.c.

AUNTY HOPOVER'S TWELFTH NIGHT CAKE

Aunty Hopover had quite determined to bake a twelfth-night cake in honor of Eben Corntassel, the schoolteacher. "Because," she said, "I really feel that we owe it to him for that lovely Christmas entertainment. Why, Granny can't talk enough about it."

Aunty Hopover's sister, Ma Cottontail had run in to help prepare for the party, and they were putting the best room to rights, while they waited for Granny Wobblenose, who had gone to Dame Longears' little shop for a pat of butter, a pen and a tiny thimble.

Ma Cottontail had just swept her way into the kitchen and to the open door, when in stepped Granny, her basket on her arm. And she laughed as she said: "Well, daughter Cottontail, and daughter Hopover, what do you think I saw? When I came to the Brownfurs' there was Betsy cutting wood and Benjamin at the window reading 'The Rabbit Journal.' I couldn't believe my eyes. You know, Benjamin prides himself on not allowing Betsy to touch an axe.

"So, I said: 'How's this, Betsy—has Benjamin given up cutting wood?' 'Oh! no,' she said, 'he has a touch of rheumatism, so I told him I'd cut a few sticks myself.' Then she laughed and added: 'I might have known I'd be caught at it.'

"Next I went to the window and told Benjamin that I hoped his rheumatism wouldn't prevent his coming to the party, and he said he'd come if Betsy had to bring him in a wheelbarrow."

"The very thing!" exclaimed Aunty Hopover. "We'll have a little joke at Benjamin's expense. You whittle a little axe out of soft pine wood, and we'll bake it in the cake." And she laughed until the tears ran down her cheeks.

No sooner said than done. Granny produced the axe and then saw to it that the oven was the right temperature, while Aunty Hopover measured sugar and spice and Ma Cottontail beat the eggs.

When the batter was poured into the pan, the axe, the pen, the thimble and other articles were pressed into it. the cake tin was scratched where the axe was placed, so that there might be no mistake.

It was a beautiful sight when finished—iced thickly—and the name of Eben Corntassel written on top in tiny red candles.

The little Hopovers and their cousins, the Cottontails, were sent out to invite all the folks in Bunny Hollow, and they all came very early. Aunty Hopover's parties were famous all over the neighborhood.

After games and dancing they had supper; then the cake was cut, with much joking and laughing. You should have seen Benjamin's face when he discovered the axe. He joined in the laugh that followed, but Betsy didn't like it a bit, and she said to Aunty Hopover: "You know, Benjamin didn't want me to cut that wood."

"Why, my dear," replied Aunty Hopover: "It's only a joke—we all know that Benjamin Brownfur's as good as gold.

Eben Corntassel found the pen in his slice, and I mistrust that also was marked. The thimble fell to Pa Cottontail's lot and Daddy Longears found a broom in his slice.

But Daddy Tarfoot—poor Daddy Tarfoot!—he bit on a ring and the whole party shouted and warned him to be careful from now on. And Daddy dryly observed: "I intend to—or some of the ladies'll get me yet." Of course, that was a joke—for all the Bunny Hollow folks are kind to one another.

When it was time to leave, Eben Corntassel thanked Aunty Hopover for a pleasant evening, and patted the little bunnies on their heads and told how well they were doing at school.

After his departure, Ma Cottontail said: "Never, NEVER have we had as fine a teacher as Eben Corntassel." And they all agreed with her. Also they agreed they had never enjoyed a party more than this one of the Hopovers.

"Eczema on My Face Completely Relieved"

Miss Winifred Ernest, Box 46, Blockhouse, N. S., writes:

"Ever since I was a little child, I suffered with eczema on my face. At times my face was completely covered with large sores, and I tried nearly every kind of medicine that I heard of with no results. This lasted for over twenty years, until one day I asked the advice of my druggist, who bade me give Dr. Chase's Ointment a trial. After using the Ointment for a few days, the sores began to heal, and soon I was completely relieved of the disease."

ANNOUNCEMENT

I wish to contribute these lines to my many friends and relatives, in Williamsburg, to express my gratitude for kindness shown my dear mother, Mrs. Agnes Schell, during her late illness and death.

It is my joy of life to find
At every turning of the road,
The strong arm of a comrade
To help me onward with my load;
And since I have no gold to give
And love alone must make amends
My only prayer is while I live,
God make me worthy of my friends.

MANY LIVES LOST THROUGH FLOODS IN CENTRE AND WESTERN EUROPE

A despatch from Paris says:—The year 1925 may still be remembered in history as "the great flood year" in Central and Western Europe, if the warm winds which have swept the highlands and caused rapid melting of the snows do not give place to colder airs soon. Already there have been many lives lost in Roumania and Hungary, while vast sections of France, Belgium, Switzerland, Germany, Austria and Czecho-Slovakia are inundated. The weather predictions point to continued warmth and heavy rains.

The most alarming conditions are reported from Central Europe. Torda (Thorenburg), Roumania, has been swept by a torrent of overflowing waters that smashed houses by the score. Direct reports from Torda report the loss of hundreds of lives along the Roumanian frontier, with the waters sweeping bodies and debris through the streets; of that city.

In the Bekes district of Hungary more than 100,000 acres are covered with water and the situation is growing worse. Between Vesztoe and Okany the huge masonry dams are threatening to give way and the whole population has turned out in an effort to avert disaster.

The River Sajo has overflowed its banks and is menacing the entire Borod district. At Cluj, Transylvania, fifty houses and factories have been destroyed by the torrents.

Throughout all of Belgium there are serious floods. The riverside quarters of many towns are submerged and people are abandoning their houses. Navigation has been interrupted on the Meuse.

The rise in the waters of the Rhine and Moselle is becoming most disquieting. The Rhine is already over its banks at Kreuznach and part of the town has been evacuated. At Coblenz the Rhine is rising an inch an hour and the situation is considered threatening. The Moselle likewise is over its banks and menacing the railway lines. All the cities in the Rhine and Moselle valleys are taking precautions against further floods and are even preparing barracks for the reception of flood victims.

In Switzerland, Bavaria and Austria avalanches and floods have wrought much damage and are likely to cause much suffering.

In France the Seine is still rising and flooding wharves and piers at Paris, but thus far has not caused much damage. The Marne, Aisne and Oise are slowly mounting and various towns and villages are partially flooded, while many houses have been abandoned at Louvois.

Telegraph and telephone service is being gradually restored, except in Brittany and the southeast.

IS ASTRID TO BE BRIDE OF THE PRINCE OF WALES?

RUMOR SELECTS BRIDE FOR PRINCE OF WALES

Princess Astrid of Sweden to Visit Their Majesties at Buckingham Palace.

A despatch from London says:—Princess Astrid of Sweden is about to pay a visit to the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace, and the newspapers are all agog.

She is a niece of the King of Sweden, and, according to an unnamed Swedish diplomat, she is one of the prettiest girls in Europe. She is just twenty, a keen sportswoman, and a delightful dancer. Moreover, it is pointed out that this will not be the first occasion on which she has met the Prince of Wales, as she stayed in London about a year ago. Whether the Princess has any romantic dreams no official information is available, but if so, she is pitted against an elusive Prince Charming.

London remembers that a year or so ago the late Queen Alexandra had the delightful Swedish Princess as her guest at Marlborough House for months, but the Prince hardly went near her.

Princess Astrid is a daughter of Prince Charles and Princess Ingeborg, being a grandniece on her mother's side of the late Dowager Queen Alexandra.

With the announcement of Princess Astrid's impeding visit to Buckingham Palace, it became known to-day that the Princess and her sister, Princess Martha, were dinner guests of the King and Queen last November, the Prince of Wales and Prince Henry also being present.

Princess Astrid and Princess Martha were also guests of the Duchess of Norfolk during their November visit. When they were entertained by the Duchess, Prince Henry was present, but not the Prince of Wales. This led to rumors in society that Prince Henry also was interested in one of the sisters.

FLOODS MORE DISASTROUS TO LIEGE THAN THE GERMAN GUNS IN 1914

Brussels, Jan. 3.—Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, and Albert, King of the Belgians, are overseeing the relief work in the floods which are devastating their kingdoms.

Wilhelmina at Nimeguen, in Gelderland, and Albert at Liege, are trying to stem the tide of desolation which threatens to overwhelm their people.

Liege has suffered more from the present flood than from the German siege guns which leveled her forts in 1914. The entire country surrounding Nimeguen is under water, and the losses mount into millions of florins.

Ten thousand houses are completely isolated, and the residents have been blocked in for three days. One hundred thousand rations are being issued per day, with King Albert and his Ministers personally supervising this work.

The train service in Central Belgium is paralyzed. Great numbers of cattle have perished and the flax harvest has been partly swept away by the flooding of the Lys.

The River Meuse is falling, having dropped six feet at Namur and Liege, but the floods are extending in Malines and Mons districts.

The damage to date for the whole country is estimated at more than 150,000,000 francs, of which 50,000,000 is for Liege alone. The city of Liege is still without public commodities. Altgether over 250,000 workers will be thrown out of employment for a long period by the inundation of numerous factories and the flooding of coal mines.

The situation has become worse in the north, notably in Waesland. Many farmers had to flee precipitately, abandoning their stock, most of which perished. Near Malines a dam burst, letting loose masses of water on the adjacent villages.

London, Jan. 3.—One would need to go back to almost forgotten years to find the whole of Western Europe involved in such disastrous floods as have worked inestimable havoc in no less than five different countries. Holland, France, Belgium, Germany, and England. Graver floods have often been experienced in England, but they were never so widespread in so many countries.

The Rhine inundations in Germany are said to be the worst for over a century, the Rhine rising to a higher level than at any time since the year 1784. Holland and Belgium seem to be in an almost equally pitiable condition.

In Holland and Belgium the disaster amounts to almost a national calamity. The pressure of the rising water has burst dikes, involving great expense when the floods have subsided, and untold misery to the inhabitants.

MOTORIST BACKS CAR OVER NIAGARA CLIFF

Firemen Effect Daring Rescue Up Icy Slope—Slight Chance for Victim's Life.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 3.—Francis Smith, 30 years old, of Cleveland, Ohio, backed his big touring car across River Road and over the cliff this morning, and is in a serious condition in the local hospital, with only a fighting chance for life. His chest is badly crushed. He is suffering from shock and possible internal injuries.

Mr. Smith was backing his car out of the Robinson Garage, and is believed to have put his foot on the accelerator instead of the brake, and dashed across the road and through the railing and over the cliff, landing a hundred and fifty feet below.

The alarm was raised, and police and firemen, with a motor ladder truck, were quickly on the scene. The ladders were lashed to the rails of the International Railway, and Officer Spring and Fireman Jameson climbed down the icy slope carrying an undertaker's basket. They broke open the touring car, tenderly placed the unconscious form of Smith in the basket, and, attaching a guy-rope to it, had it pulled to the top, where Dr. Mundell attended him and rushed him to the hospital. He regained consciousness to-night.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT LEVEL CROSSING

One Dead, Another May Die, and Third Man Seriously Injured at Port Colborne.

Port Colborne, Ont., Jan. 3.—One man is dead, a second is believed to be dying and another is seriously injured as the result of a grade-crossing crash here at noon yesterday. The dead man is Paul Jaworsky, 81 Mitchell St., Port Colborne. The injured are Harry Chandrow, 202 Davis Street, and Nick Billowa, 146 Davis Street, both of Port Colborne.

The accident occurred at the Steele Street crossing of the Canadian National Railways. The three men were riding in a Ford truck when they were struck at the crossing by passenger train No. 218, bound from London to Buffalo.

The crash smashed the truck to matchwood, but the three men and part of the truck were carried a full block on the pilot of the locomotive, the dead man losing his grip and being ground to death beneath the wheels as the train was being brought to a stop. Engineer Paterson, in charge of the train, declared that he never knew he hit the car until a witness of the accident ran toward the track and started waving his arms frantically.

The injured men were removed to the Welland Hospital, while an inquest was opened into the death of Jaworsky yesterday afternoon, being adjourned for one month to allow the injured men to get out of the hospital.

Ancient Estate Claimed by Assiniboia Workman Who Saw Service in War.

Moose Jaw, Sask., Jan. 3.—C. B. Gower, a mechanic in an automobile garage in Assiniboia, Sask., declares that he is the heir to the estates and title of Earl of Granville and Baron Leveson of Stone.

Gower's first knowledge of the fact that he was being searched for in Western Canada and in practically every country in the world was contained in a Canadian Press despatch of Dec. 5 last.

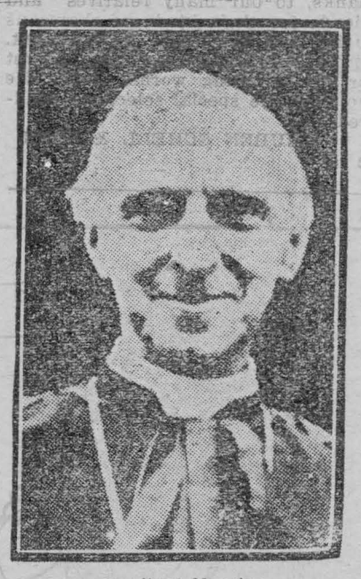

"I saw the news item and cabled at once," said Mr. Gower, "and I am waiting for word. I don't think there will be much for me. You see, my sister, who lives in Sheffield, England, was willed the cash by my uncle, and I the estate. I was born and raised in Sheffield, saw nearly two years' service in the European war, part of which was in the Aviation Corps."

He has been a resident of Assiniboia for three years.

Mr. Gower was married on Dec. 16 at Assiniboia to Miss Hilda Hall of Regina.

METEORITE DROPPED IN OTTAWA DISTRICT

Unusual Phenomenon Witnessed by Rector of Chelsea and Other Residents.

A despatch from Ottawa says:—In the opinion of Ralph Delury, Dominion Government astronomer, an unusual phenomenon witnessed in the northern skies on a recent evening by Rev. E. G. May, rector of the Anglican Church at Chelsea, Que., and other residents of that district, may mean that a huge meteorite has dropped to earth somewhere in this district.

The interest of the astronomical authorities has been aroused by the report, which has been furnished by Rev. Mr. May, and an effort will be made to ascertain if possible where the visitor from the skies landed, and to locate it if possible.

Rev. Mr. May stated that he was seated in his study, the window of which faces the Kingsmere Hills, about 5 o'clock, when he saw a star or comet fully the size of the eastern star, which flashed across the sky in a brilliant illumination and disappeared over the rim of the hills, which were fully lit up by the reflection. After it had passed beyond the horizon formed by the hills, a narrow band of brilliant light remained visible for fully five minutes, to gradually disappear as though dispersed by wind.

Passing of Victorian Era.

With Queen Alexandra of England died the last of the great Victorian tradition. It was a strangely different social world in which the widow of Edward VII. spent her last years. But she maintained to the end the dignity and the prestige of royalty, and she kept to the end the affection of a people which, more than sixty years before, had welcomed the beautiful young Danish princess to England with an almost frantic exhibition of enthusiasm. Curiously enough, the last survivor of the generation of royalty to which she belonged is the unhappy Carlotta, widow of the Emperor Maximilian of Mexico, who has been confined to an asylum for the insane ever since her husband was put to death by his revolting subjects fifty-eight years ago.

Surnames and Their Origin

O'KANE.

Variations—Kane, Kean, Keane, Keen, Kyan, O'Cain, O'Caine, O'Cane, O'Cahane, O'Cahaine, O'Cahan, O'Caen, O'Chane, O'Kean, Cane, Cain, Caine, Cahane, Cahaine, Gahan Gethan.
Racial Origin—Irish.
Source—A given name.

It looks like an index to a whole encyclopedia of family names; but it's just one surname, in its many variations. There are few Irish clan names which have given rise to so many variations of spelling, and even pronunciation, when translated into English, as that of "O'Cathain."

Of all the Anglicized forms, probably the one that strikes the closest to the Gaelic pronunciation of "O'Cathain" is O' Cahaine, or O'Cahane.

But the tendency of the English-trained tongue and throat is to slur, and since it is the second syllable of "Cathain" that is accented, most of the Anglicized versions simply slur out the first vowel sound and the aspirate, and make one syllable of it. Whether spelled with a "C" or a "K," or an "a" or an "ai," the usual pronunciation is "cane" in English, though that of "keen" is not unusual; in which case, the spelling "ea" is used. As a matter of fact, however, this change of "cane" to "keen" is a development in English of comparatively modern times, and even when the "ea" spelling is used it was probably first pronounced in English as "cane."

The clan is an offshoot, an ancient one, of the O'Neills of Tyrone, founded by a chieftain named "Cathan" (meaning "warrior") in the Twelfth Century.

STEWART

Variations—Stuart, Steward, Stewardson, Stewartson.
Racial Origin—Norman-French.
Source—A title of office.

It is one of the tricks of history that this family name, which is distinctly of Norman-French origin, should have become chiefly representative of Scots, and should have become the name of that Scottish clan whose history is virtually the history of Scotland from the twelfth century on, the clan which has furnished so many of the kings of both Scotland and England.

There are, of course, many instances of the title of "steward," an important one under the Norman-French feudal systm, growing into a family name in England but whereas the English formed their family names individually, the Scottish and the Irish formed them on the wholesale basis, an entire clan adopting a name.

The Scottish Stewarts trace back to Alan, one of the first Norman barons of England, who obtained from William the Conqueror the barony of Oswestry, in Shropshire. One of his sons, Walter, sought his fortunes in Scotland, at the court of King David I, and about the middle of the twelfth century was made by him "Steward of the Royal Household," and given large estates. The office of "High Steward" was later made hereditary, and in the course of a very few generations the followers who gathered about the standard of the "High Steward," after the Scottish custom naturally welded themselves into a clan, adopting the name of Stewart. It was in 1370 that the ,rst Stewart to become King succeeded his uncle, David II, and was crowned as Robert II.

GOOD NEWS FOR RHEUMATIC PEOPLE

Now Known That This Trouble Must be Treated Through the Blood.

The most a rheumatic sufferer can hope for in rubbing something on the tender, aching point is a little relief. No lotion or liniament ever did or ever can do more than this. The rheumatic poison is rooted in the blood. To get rid of it you must treat it through the blood. Any doctor will tell you that this is true. If you want something that will go right to the root of the trouble in the blood, take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The whole mission of this medicine is to purify and enrich the blood, and when they do this all blood troubles, including rheumatism, disappear. Among those who have proved the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is Mrs. Annis Wright, Woodchester, Alta., who says: "I was a sufferer from rheumatism for six years, and during most of that time my life was one of misery. I tried several doctors, and many remedies recommended, but never got more than temporary relief. The trouble seemed to affect my whole system and I was badly rundown and suffered from headaches as well. Finally I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and through these I found complete relief and to-day I feel like a new person. I can therefore strongly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to anyone suffering as I did from this trouble.

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Teach the Value of Money.

Why not let the children earn money? One of the first games they begin to play is store and shows, using pins, candies and make-believe money as mediums of exchange. With this tendency so pronounced, it is simple, if one uses tact, to teach the child to do something well enough to earn a reward. Since money is in the world to stay, if we can lead the youngsters to regard it sanely as a means to an end, and teach its proper use, we have helped them to overcome one of the biggest stumbling blocks of their future.

When a child earns by his own labor the wherewithal to purchase little gifts for friends and relatives, no amount of money given him to spend can produce the same feeling of satisfaction and self-respect as do his own earnings. To teach him that money does not grow on bushes, and to develop in him the feeling of independence and self-reliance is to give him invaluable equipment for life.

There are numerous small tasks, according to the environment, that the parents can devise for children to earn money that will be very helpful. It is a mistake to make the child feel he should not peddle his work. Broad-minded folks will respect a child's efforts along this line. The establishment of a regular trade, the keeping of accounts and working to produce a fair profit will teach the value of money in an impressive way.

Of courses, this money earning must not be permitted to interfere with the child's playtime or assume too important a place in the child's daily schedule; neither should it be allowed to deteriorate into the bribing habit. He should be brought to realize that in no way are his money-making ideas connected with the numerous services he can do for mother. Do not permit the "How much will you give me?" to follow your request for help.

We have all visited families where this bribing habit was carried too far. If this pitfall can be avoided, there is nothing more salutory for the child than the satisfaction and self-respect coming through working for himself.

Bright Colors Mean Little to a Peacock.

We may be misjudging the peacock and rooster when we call them vain birds. Dr. H. Erhard, of Munich, who has been experimenting with the eyesight of birds, says that the shimmering colors in plumage probably mean nothing to the feathered creatures. At least, they do not appreciate colors as we do, if indeed they even distinguish one color from another.

Birds that fly by day, Dr. Erhard says, see everything in a bright red, orange light, being very slightly sensitive to the short waves that make up blue and violet. Night birds, on the other hand, never see red, but do see blues and violet. Tiny globules of oil in the retina of the eyes act as color screens and determine the birds' color sense, according to Dr. Erhard.

Minard's Liniment for Grippe.

An angry woman rushed into the Marriage License Bureau. In her hand she bore a license. To the clerks she said:

"Did you, or did you not, issue this license for marryin' me to Albert Briggs?"

"Yes, I believe we did. Why?"

"Well, what are you goin' to do about it?" she demanded. "He's escaped."

The Dearest Are the Auldest.

It's an overcome sooth for age an' youth,
And it brooks wi' nae denial,
That the dearest friends are the auldest friends,
And the young are just on trial.

There's a rival bauld wi' young an' auld,
And it's him that has bereft me;
For the surest friends are the auldest friends
And the maist o' mine hae left me.

There are kind hearts still, for friends to fill
And fools to take and break them;
But the nearest friends are the auldest friends
And the grave's the place to seek them.

—R. L. Stevenson.
