The owner claimed that he had ordered his farmer to kill the calf, and regretted greatly that it had not been done. The calf was killed without further delay.—Ogdensburg Advance.

CRYSLER'S FARM CENTENARY

One Hundred Years of Peace Celebrated on the Historic Battlefield—Speeches by the Premier, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux and Others—A Vast Gathering of People.

It was not alone the glory of the victory of Canadian arms that marked the celebration of the centenary of the Battle of Chrysler's Farm on Wednesday and Thursday last: rather was it the hundred years of peace that has existed between Canada and the United States. Only friendly sentiments toward our Southern neighbors were expressed by all the speakers.

On Wednesday, at early morning, over five thousand farmers with their wives and children, from the United Counties, had gathered at the historic field. Of the entire crowd on the first day of the celebration, probably one-half were people whose ancestors had fought on that same field for the honor and the glory of Britain.

The grounds were dotted with refreshment tents, and Provincial men were there to see that the lemonade handlers did not hand out anything stronger.

The speakers on the first day were Mr. Andrew Broder, M.P., and Hon. Geo. P. Graham. Mr. Graham in his speech addressed himself particularly to the children, who to the number of over one thousand, sang patriotic songs, under the direction of Mr. Finker, of Smith's Falls. He began by saying that it was a proud day for the people of Dundas, who were celebrating an event of such significance in the history of Canada. In 1763 Canada had become part of the British Empire. Since their several attempts to separate it had been made by the United States, as for instance in 1776, when they tried to get the French Canadians to secede. The French-Canadians, however had remained loyal, thus earning the undying gratitude of Canada. The Battle of Chrysler's Farm had shown the United States and the world forever that Canada would remain part of the British Empire for all time.

Mr. Broder, who followed Mr. Graham, said the danger in Canada today was that the people were leaving the land, and he gave immigration figures to prove this. He paid a high tribute to farming profession, which to be successful required a high degree of intelligence, and thanked the assemblage for the hearty support accorded him in organizing the celebration. He concluded by leading three cheers for Mrs. E. C. Whitney of Ottawa, a grand-daughter of John Chrysler, whose name was made famous through the battle; it was through the kindness of Mrs. Whitney that over five hundred children from the three counties were able to be present, she paying their railroad fares.

A detachment of twenty-five members of the 23rd Battery, Ottawa, under Lieut. H. Bick and H. F. Whitly were present. A royal salute of twenty-one guns was fired from 6-pounders over one hundred years old. Much credit is due the ladies of the Women's Institute in the successful undertaking to look after the feeding of over a thousand school children. To the Women's Institute also is due entirely one of the best features of the celebration—the exhibition of historical relics, which was on display in the Agriculture Office. The collection gave a better idea of the early settlement of Ontario than could be gained by any other means. There were old muskets, swords, cannon balls (not casted by John Dain), shells, powder horns, old uniforms, bugles, as well as wool carders and everything used by the farmer and his wife in the early days. One of the most interesting contributors to the exhibition was one loaned by Mr. Samuel Rogers, of Cardinal (an American, but withal, when he "goes to Rome" he "does as the Romans do"); his collection consisted of pistols, bayonets and old flintlock rifles. Mr. J. M. Munro, Registrar of Deeds at Port Arthur, a grandson of Col. John Chrysler and the son of the late J. C. Munro, of Grantly, made his first visit to Morrisburg in twenty-five years. His contribution to the exhibit was a record of the war in 1837, as kept by the Dundas Militia. Thirteen pence per day, with one pound of meat and one pound of bread, was the daily allowance to each soldier.

Of the documents relating especially to early Canadian history, there were on view a receipt for oats, supplied by Major Merkley, of the Royal York Regiment (a British regiment that retained its name after the American Revolution), dated May 30th, 1813. There are three crown deeds of grants of lands near Morrisburg to early settlers, one of which is still owned by the Merkley family; an agreement between Major Merkley and neighboring farmers for the supply of white pine masts for use on gunboats on the river and lakes.

Among the many visitors at the celebration were Mr. Edwin M. Chrysler, of Brooklyn, N.Y., great grandson of the John Chrysler, of "The Farm," and his wife and son. Mr. Chrysler's father has been for years in the newspaper business, having started the New York Sportsman. He left Canada sixty years ago. He brought with him the marriage certificate of John Chrysler and Miss Weagant, a century old.

The second day of the celebration saw about ten thousand people on the grounds. The estimated number of people in town in the evening was about fifteen thousand.

The troops on the grounds were detachments from the 59th (Stormont and Glengarry) Regiment, with Highland Pipes; the Governor-General's Footguards with their peerless band; Rifles, from Brockville and Ottawa; Fusiliers from Kingston Infantrymen, from Perth and Lindsay.

The first speaker on the second day was the Right Hon. R. L. Borden, Premier of Canada. The applause from the vast assembly which greeted his rising was not only a tribute to his popularity, it was an expression of the confidence which every person present felt in Canada's first minister. After paying a graceful tribute to Mr. Broder, he expressed his gratification at seeing Mr. Lemieux on the same platform with him. They had always been great friends since they had come to the House in 1896, in spite of slight variations in political opinion. They were doubly indebted to him, coming as he did such a distance for the purpose of the celebration, and representing as he did the grand old Province of Quebec, which stood shoulder to shoulder with Ontario in the stirring events of one hundred years ago. It was not to be forgotten that the race of which he was a worthy and eloquent son was the pioneer race in Canada, and they had contributed in no small degree, both in the War of 1812-14 and the American Revolutionary years as well, to keeping Canada under the flag which now waves over it. From the welcome which he would receive there he hoped that he would carry back to Quebec a message of welcome, brotherhood and friendship from the people of Ontario.

In speaking of the Battle of Chrysler's Farm, Premier Borden also directed their attention to the gallant and heroic conduct at Chateaugay of Colonel de Salaberry with his band of three or four hundred French-Canadians. Mr. Borden called the War of 1812 that "unhappy and unfortunate war" and the rest of his remarks even when devoted to the heroism displayed in that war never missed showing his conviction that war between two kindred races, speaking the same language and enjoying the same institutions, was the most regrettable of all things. However, the task thrown on the two provinces of defending their homes and their soil and their territory and their flag and all that they held most dear against the people of the neighboring republic, had had the result of drawing closer together the two peoples.

Premier Borden quoted a great poem written after the war between the north and the south, which showed how they had been able to bury their animosities in an event taking place on one of the battlefields. The poem, spoke of the valiant dead, those dressed in the blue and the gray, alike awaiting under the sod and the dew, the judgment day. The broken-hearted mourners came from all parts of the union bearing flowers in their arms alike for the blue and the gray. It was this spirit that the Premier wanted to impress on them.

The ancestors of those present had fought not only against invaders, but they had conquered the wilderness as well, and today, with education, the railway, telegraph, telephone, and all with which the progress of science and art had graced modern life, they should remember the debt they owed to these men in the past, who had so combatted the hardships and difficulties of their time. He had no doubt but that the people of Canada are as ready to day as then to spring to arms to repel the invader, but he wished them to remember that they had also a part to play that would make them worthy of those ancestors. The soil of their country was scarcely scratched agriculturally, and he was assured by Mr. Andrew Broder that, man for man and acre for acre, Dundas County was better developed than any other in Canada. But they had to conquer material conditions as their forefathers had done. But the greatness of a nation never depended on material prosperity alone. "A nation like this going through trials and tribulations, whose ancestors hewed their homes out of the wilderness, must look after higher considerations as well. Men and women must see that social and moral standards in the public and private life of Canada are what they should be, and in keeping with those from whom we have sprung."

In introducing the Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Mr. Borden expressed regret that Sir Wilfrid Laurier could not be present on account of a previous engagement. The Hon. Mr. Lemieux won plaudits from the first by his courteous response to the nice things said of him by the Premier and the chairman. The latter, he said, while his confreres in Parliament had been building battleships throughout the last session, had been building friendships, and there was no use for the Liberals of this county to think of ousting. If Mr. Borden did, as he should certainly do, send him to the cool retreat of the Senate, then there would be some chance for the Grits of Dundas. He spoke in the highest terms of Premier Borden whom he was glad to be associated with on an occasion like this, because he was more than the leader of a party, he was the leader as well of a great country.

He also referred to the events of the war of 1812, saying that the names of Colonel de Salaberry and Colonel Morrison rose above all others in that conflict. "In the name of Colonel Morrison you have an example of what British pluck, British courage can do on any battlefield in the world, and in the name of Colonel de Salaberry, the hero of Chateaugay, you have an example of what the courage and the gallantry of the French can do on any battlefield in the world."

The speaker spoke of the causes of the war of 1812, but the effects of the conflict were greater than the causes, for French and English Canadians were then brought together through mutual tribulations to build with mutual faith and respect the Canada of today.

Hon. Mr. Lemieux concluded by referring to the Premier's sentence that said victory of the hundred years of peace was the greatest.

For the blood that was shed at Chrysler's Farm, let us resolve, ladies and gentlemen, with all of our kinsmen in Canada, that our ideals henceforward shall be ideals of peace and not of war, ideals of justice and not ideals of greed and devastation." Prolonged cheering followed, with three cheers, led by Mr. Andrew Broder, for Mr. Lemieux.

Owing to illness, Sir James Whitney was unable to be present.

After the proceedings at the battlefield had been concluded, a march of the massed hands was made from the G. T. R. depot (to which point a special train had been engaged to transport them from the battlefield). Led by the Governor-General's Footguards Band with the Pipers of the 59th, who with the skirl o' the pipes, seemed to make Morrisburgers to imagine they were in old Edinburgh, or in Aberdeen.

On the two nights, the pyrotechnic display, under the direction of Professor Hand, of Hamilton, were the finest display of fireworks ever seen in Morrisburg—and this is saying something. Trooper Mulloy, the blind Victoria Cross hero of the Canadian contingent in South Africa, was among those on the platform, and among others, all of whom received their meed of cheering, were an old man of upright soldierly appearance, but halting, Arch. Macnaughton, of Cornwall, ninety-two years of age; Mr. Duncan Monroe, one of the most widely known veterans of the Cornwall district, resplendent in uniform.

strangely enough, the girl—a street singer—seemed shy and reluctant; the color came and went in her face, and her lips quivered with timidity; but Elisha struck the chords again, and looked up at her with faint surprise and interrogation, and bonnet and gaily covered kilt of his clan; Dean Starr, of Kingston cathedral, a military clergyman who retained command of his regiment for some time after he entered the ranks of the Church militant; and Hon. Dr. Reid, as well as a large number of veterans of past battles and descendants of Cryslar Farm heroes.

On several residences nearby the field could be seen the Stars and Stripes. Someone remarked the fact to Mr. M. D. Willard, who replied: "I have one over the door. We have the best of relations with our neighbors across the river. As a matter of fact, we did not fight against them for they were against the war. The opposing forces were made up almost entirely of men from Virginia and farther 'south.' One day previous to the battle, he said, the American soldiers had raided one hundred acres of bees belonging to Adam Bouck, who had a farm just east of Cryslar's Farm, and had eaten so much honey that they had been almost entirely incapacitated for action and scores of them nearly died of surfeit. A ravine at this point was dotted all over with soldiers rolling on the ground in agony. Mr. Willard also had interesting tales to tell of acting picket duty during the Fenian Raid and of hearing the guns of the Battle of Windmill Point in the rebellion of 1837.

Mr Broder read a list of the men who took part in the Battle of Cryslar's Farm, who met together on Aug. 19th, 1875, and signed the roll from which the names are taken. The names are given with the age of each at the date mentioned. They are as follows:

Among the entire crowd present, perhaps none was more interesting than a stalwart Indian youth Johnson Podash, of Hiawatha, a great-grandson of Beld Eagle, faithful ally of the British, and a great grandson of George Podash, who fought and died at Cryslar's Farm. Podash also had two grand uncles killed in the same battle. This descendant, who is a successful farmer of the district, and who was invited to the platform by the committee, might, except for the piercing Indian black eyes and slightly prominent cheekbones, pass for any swarthy complexioned son of the soil. Messrs. Bordu and Lemieux had a long chat with him, and found him an interested and well-informed spectator of the incidents taking place.

A visitor at the celebration was Miss Gilkison, vice-president of the Brant Historical Society, Brantford whose grandfather, Capt. Wm. Gilkison, was in the Battle of Cryslar's Farm. He was appointed Field Quartermaster-General by Sir Isaac Brock and carried off the field a wounded officer, Major Duncan Fraser. Capt. Gilkison was living at that time in Brockville. He had two bateaux of goods plundered by the enemy at Hoople's Creek, at Mrs. Stuart's farm during the war. He built the first house in Prescott. Miss Gilkison's father, Col. J. T. Gilkison, was born at Johnstown, Ont. (then the county town), March, 1814. He forefathers were all in the wars of Canada. The Gilkison at Cryslar's Farm 1813, and Thomas McCormick at Queeston 1812 and 1813. They were all acquainted with the Chief Brant and others. Miss Gilkison was adopted by the Six Nations, at their Council House, Oshkewen, with the name Gah-wi-wiss, meaning 'one who makes a research'.

FAMOUS WOMEN AVIATORS

A SWISS WOMAN FIRST TO ASCEND IN AN AEROPLANE.

There Are Many British Women Aviators, Wife of a Novelist One of Them.

The issuing of a manifesto the other day by the Women's Aerial League of Great Britain initiating the national crusade for the provision of aerial weapons, recalls the fact that the first woman who ever ascended in an aeroplane is believed to be a Ghent woman who accompanied Henry Farman on a flight outside her own city in 1908.

The first certificated woman pilot in the world was the Baroness de la Roche, who, after breaking her shoulder by running into a clump of poplar trees during practice, obtained her brevet at Heliopolis, going thence to Saint Petersburg, where the Czar personally congratulated her upon her skill. In July, 1911, while she was leading in a big race in France, her machine suddenly dropped to earth like a stone. Her life was despaired of, but after a long convalescence she began flying again in February, 1912.

Exactly who was the first Englishwoman to fly in an aeroplane is uncertain, but the honor lies between Mrs. S. F. Cody, wife of the late aviator, and Miss Bacon, daughter of a balloonist. The former made several flights with her husband during his earlier experiments, and the latter at Rheims in 1909 made her initial aeroplane trip.

Glorious Sensation.

"It is," says Miss Bacon, "a glorious buoyant sensation without a parallel and, therefore, indescribable, but it is delicious beyond words."

Prominent among British women aviators is Mrs. Maurice Hewlett, wife of the popular novelist. Mrs. Hewlett holds the record of being the only mother in the world who has taught her own son to fly. He is Lieutenant F. E. T. Hewlett, R. I., who gained his brevet last year. Mrs. Hewlett holds the view that in a few years women will be starting off in their aeroplanes just as unconcernedly as they do now on their motor cars.

"The first time I went on an aeroplane," Mrs. Hewlett says, "I quite imagined it was stationary. The sensation when I realized the motion was the most glorious I have ever experienced. At first I was a little bit afraid, but the performance actually has the effect of strengthening my nerves."

To the mere man in the street such a view might at first appear Quixotic, but Miss Trehawke Davis, who has crossed the channel in an aeroplane more often than any other woman, pays aviation a similar compliment.

"I could hardly bear to look over a precipice," she confesses, "yet I find my cross-channel flights particularly excellent nerve bracers, the only thing sometimes troubling me being the intense cold."

So far as is known, the only Scottish woman who has yet flown in Scotland is the daughter of Professor Biles, a founder member of the Royal Aero Club. During the Lanark meeting, Miss Biles had a passenger flight with Drexel.

The Sensation of Motion

she described as "almost that of floating, with the air and the earth rushing by at a tremendous speed," the motion downward being "like descending a long toboggan."

One of the best-known French aviatresses is Mlle. Helen Dutrieu, who, as the human arrow, performed daring leaps of 45 feet through space on a bicycle in the music halls till the police prohibited the feat as dangerous.

Mlle. Dutrieu rejoices in the nickname of the bantam of aviation. She weighs only as much as a small boy.

Unique in its way is the entrance of Miss Mathilde Moisant into aviation. According to all traditions this charming American should dread the very thought of aerial navigation, as her brother was dashed to death in her presence while flying in December, 1910.

Though small in stature, Miss Moisant is big in spirit. Some time ago the police were informed that she had been flying on a Sunday, and set out to apprehend her for contravening a state by-law. But they had reckoned without their host. Just as the representatives of the law hove in sight Miss Moisant started her engine and cleared off into the air, out of their jurisdiction.

Of course, experience is valuable, but nearly every man you meet is willing to swap some for money.

She—"I've just heard the story of a man out West who bartered his wife for a horse. You wouldn't swap me for a horse, would you, darling?" He—"Of course not. But I'd hate to have anyone tempt me with a good motor-car."

BABY'S GREAT DANGER DURING HOT WEATHER

More little ones die during hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera infantum and stomach disorders come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the home where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

VALUE OF GOATS.

Butt of Our Jokes One of the Most Useful of Animals.

Somewhere the legend exists that the goat was created by the devil, which, perhaps, is justified by the animal's pernicious activities and his fondness for things not enjoyed by any other living creature. In ancient times the honor of being sacrificed to Bacchus was conferred upon it, and in modern times the goat, no matter how venerable, is honored, when presented on the dining table, by being given the name of one of the most docile animals known. From time immemorial has the animal been used as the butt for jokes in comic papers, and there have been few who have shown a willingness to espouse the cause of this really useful but malingering member of the animal kingdom.

At last a champion has been found, one who comes forth boldly, without fear of criticism, and tells of the unsuspected value of the goat and proclaims that the animal is more satisfactory and profitable as a milk producer than a cow. A physician of Buffalo, with the appropriate name of Dr. W. Sheldon Bull, roused by the base insinuations and injustice done the "poor man's cow," says that instead of having our cows tested for tuberculosis or worrying ourselves to death for fear our dairyman, despite his solemn oath, has not made the tests he should have made, why not obtain our milk from an animal that could not have tuberculosis if it tried. He calls the goat "the only dairy animal immune to tuberculosis." He believes the virtues of goat milk and the ease of obtaining it are too little known in this country, and he is applying himself to the task of filling this need long existent, but apparently not sufficiently felt.

Anybody can keep a goat, Dr. Bull tells us, and everybody ought to. From a hygienic point of view it is argued that the owners of these hardy little creatures may enjoy greater advantages than does the possessor of a pampered, pedigreed cow of the most fashionable breed. It is well known that goat's milk is richer, more nutritious and more easily digested than cow's milk, and as a diet for children and invalids it is stated by the most eminent physicians to be unsurpassed.

STOPPED SHORT

Taking Tonics, and Built up on Right Food.

The mistake is frequently made of trying to build up a worn-out nervous system on so-called tonics—drugs.

New material from which to rebuild wasted nerve cells, is what should be supplied, and this can be obtained only from proper food.

"Two years ago I found myself on the verge of a complete nervous collapse, due to overwork and study, and to illness in the family," writes a young mother.

"My friends became alarmed because I grew pale and thin and could not sleep nights. I took various tonics prescribed by physicians, but their effects wore off shortly after I stopped taking them. My food did not seem to nourish me and I gained no flesh nor blood."

"Reading of Grape-Nuts, I determined to stop the tonics and see what a change of diet would do. I ate Grape-Nuts four times a day with cream and drank milk also, went to bed early after eating a dish of Grape-Nuts before retiring."

"In about two weeks I was sleeping soundly. In a short time gained 20 lbs. in weight and felt like a different woman. My little daughter whom I was obliged to keep out of school last spring on account of chronic catarrh, has changed from a thin, pale nervous child to a rosy, healthy girl and has gone back to school this fall."

"Grape-Nuts and fresh air were the only agents used to accomplish the happy results."

"BUFFALO BILL" CODY.

Made Over a Million Dollars With His Great Show.

What boy's heart—boys up to the age of fifty, we mean—did not sink as the owner of it read that Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show had been forced to close up shop, and that the sheriff was in possession? But it is a relief to know that Colonel William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill" himself, is not seriously affected by the disaster to a once great show which still bears his name. He retired from the business a couple of years ago, having acquired a neat fortune of over a million dollars. A few weeks ago there was a rumor that he was dying in Knoxville, Tenn., but happily it was not so. He is only 75 years of age, too young to pass in his checks yet.

The most picturesque figure of American frontier life never knew the education of the schools. Three weeks of regular school training was all he ever had, and his wide knowledge of the world was gained by travel.

His early life as a child was spent in the freighting business. He crossed the plains many times as a boy. He filled every post of occupation in the border life. He has been freighter, mule-driver, pony express rider, trapper and hunter, stage driver, scout, ranchman, mine-owner, justice of the peace, member of the Nebraska Legislature, an actor in a border play written by Ned Buntline, and later one of the most successful showmen of modern times.

When he was a boy of 11 he killed his first Indian. He and a party of other wagon drivers were being pursued by a band of Indians, who had broken up their caravan. The whites were making their way along a river bed to a fort. Here is how he tells it:

"Being the youngest of the party, I became somewhat tired, and without noticing it I had fallen some little distance behind the others. It was about ten o'clock, and we were keeping very quiet and hugging the bank closely, when I happened to look up to the moonlit sky and saw the plumed head of an Indian peering over the bank. Instead of hurrying ahead and alarming the men in a quiet way, I instantly aimed my gun at the head and fired. The report rang out sharp and loud on the night air, and was immediately followed by an Indian whoop, and the next moment about six feet of dead Indian came tumbling into the river. I was not only overcome by astonishment, but was badly frightened, as I could hardly realize what I had done. I expected to see the whole force of Indians come down upon us. While I was standing thus bewildered, the men, who had heard the shot and the warwhoop and seen the Indian take a tumble, came rushing back. 'Who fired that shot?' cried Simpson. 'I did,' replied I, rather proudly, as my confidence returned when I saw the men coming up. 'Yes, and little Billie has killed an Indian stone dead, too dead to skin,' said one of the men, who had approached nearer than the rest. From that time forward I became known as an Indian killer. This was, of course, the first Indian I had ever shot, and I was then not more than eleven years of age."

He served as a scout in the American Civil War, and subsequently in the same capacity against the Indians who made life miserable for settlers in the South-Western States.

When asked how he gained the title of Buffalo Bill, he replied:

"It was in 1867, the time that the end of the Kansas Pacific track was in the heart of the buffalo country, and the company was employing about twelve hundred men in the construction of the road. As the Indians were very troublesome it was difficult to obtain fresh meat for the workmen, and the company therefore concluded to engage the services of hunters to kill buffaloes. Goddard Brothers, who had the contract for boarding the employees of the road, made me a good offer to become their hunter. They said that they would require about twelve buffaloes per day. They used

RASH ON FACE HANDS AND ARMS

Skin Would Cope Over and Peel. Spots Large. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Has Not Had a Mark on Her Since. They Also Cured Mother of Pimples on Face.

578 Gladstone Ave., Toronto, Ont.—"My baby's trouble began as a rash and the skin used to sometimes peel off and look as if it were going to get better, but would just cake over again and peel. The spots were large and it used to make her face very red and inflamed all the time. It came on her face, hands and arms, and it used to make her restless at night. She got the rash in March and how I hated to see it on her little face and hands! I tried a lot of different things after that but nothing did any good. I saw the advertisement and sent for samples of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and it started to get better right away. I used them only about once a day, and in little more than two weeks she hadn't a spot on her anywhere. She had it three months before I used the treatment. She has not had a mark on her since and she is two and a half years old now. Cuticura Soap and Ointment also cured pimples on my face."

(Signed) Mrs. McKnight, Jan. 8, 1912. For treating poor complexion, red, rough hands, and dry, thin and falling hair, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have been the world's favorites for more than a generation. Sold throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 25¢ Skin Book. Address post card Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. 34D, Boston, U.S.A.

only the hindquarters and the hump of the buffalo.

"As this was to be dangerous work, on account of the Indians, who were riding all over that section of the country, and as I would be obliged to go from five to ten miles from the road each day to hunt the buffaloes, accompanied by only one man with a light wagon, for the transportation of the meat, I, of course, demanded a large salary. They could afford to remunerate me well, because the meat would not cost them anything."

"They agreed to give me $500 a month, provided I furnished them all the fresh meat required, and I immediately began my career as a buffalo hunter, and it was not long before I acquired considerable notoriety, and was given the name of Buffalo Bill."

"During my engagement as a hunter for the company—a period of less than eighteen months—I killed 4,280 buffaloes and had many exciting adventures with the Indians."

HER PRIZE GOES BEGGING.

Woman Leaves $20,000 in Will for Planet Research.

A prize which will perhaps never be awarded is among those offered by the French Academy of Sciences for the encouragement of research. Twenty thousand dollars lie in the coffers of the academy and will be paid to the first astronomer who puts the earth in communication with any planet of the solar system other than Mars.

This curious prize was instituted by a woman named Guzman, who died in 1899, and left the money for founding it in her will. The reason why Mme. Guzman excepted the planet Mars is not explained. She may have thought this task too easy of accomplishment to be rewarded with $20,000.

Minard's Liniment Cures Colds, Etc.

Oh, Woman, Thou Art Vain!

Berlin's (Germany) daily use of face powder, cold cream, scented toilet water and other toilet accessories has been set forth in tons and pounds by a local newspaper, and the results are striking. Three-quarters of a ton of face powder, and 350 pounds of black and brown eyebrow pencils are used daily in the city, according to these statistics. Seven hundred pounds of cold cream are the figures for one day, and the Berlin women—one assumes that it is the women—require 400 sticks of red lip-pomade every twenty-four hours.

He—The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. Don't forget that. She—Then you come in and rule the world awhile. I'm tired.

ABOUT POISON IVY.

How to Distinguish It and How to Ward Off Its Ill Effects.

Pusey says: "Poison ivy is a trailing green vine with handsome, bright green foliage, which turns a brilliant yellow to red in early autumn (and is very tempting, by the way, to collectors of autumn leaves). It is very easily distinguished from other similar looking vines by the fact that its leaves occur in groups of three on a stem, and not five."

"It and other poisonous plants are most irritating when moist, and should especially be avoided in the early morning, when wet with dew."

"After exposure to poison ivy the ill effects can be warded off by prompt removal of the irritating substance. This can be done by vigorous washing with soap and water, preferably using a hand brush, and after that with alcohol. If these measures are carried out before the effects on the skin become manifest, the usual reaction in the skin can, as a rule, be entirely, or in a great part, prevented. And even after dermatitis has begun it can often be reduced to slight intensity and cut short by the same measures."

"Of course, after irritation has become intense, vigorous washing of the surface cannot be done, and sponging with alcohol is painful. To relieve the itching, sponging with cool water or distilled extract of hamamelis (witch hazel), followed by an application of dusting powder, is comforting. Salves, as a rule, are not well borne."

What is a young woman who refuses you?—Much too no-ing.

Why should a teetotaler not have a wife?—Because he won't support her.

Why is butter like a cowardly soldier?—Because as soon as it is under fire it runs away.

Why did William Tell shudder when he shot the apple from his son's head?—Because it was an arrow escape for his child.

Why are birds in spring like a banking establishment?—They issue promissory notes, and rejoice when the branches are flourishing.

Only Joking.

Johnny was rather apprehensively awaiting his father's return from business. He had a curious little feeling that more would be heard about the broken panes of glass in old Grime's glasshouses.

"Take off your coat, my son, and come along with me!" said pa, after he had rested from dinner.

"You're not going to give me a hiding, are you, pa?" inquired young hopeful, with a nervous gulp.

"Didn't I tell you this morning that I would settle with you for your bad behavior when I came home?" queried father.

"Yes," said Johnny hopefully; "but I thought you were only joking, like when you told the grocer you would settle with him."

Dirigible Fleet Expensive.

Most Satisfactory Form of Airship For War, But Cost Is Almost Prohibitive.

For some time past it has been very difficult to make people think in anything but terms of dreadnoughts and super-dreadnoughts, says Chambers's Journal. Now, however, topic of thought, so to speak, is slowly but perceptibly veering, and we are beginning to think in terms of dirigibles. Almost every paper that comes to hand has an article in it pointing out the great value of the rigid airship and the necessity of building a large number of this type of aerial craft. There can be no doubt as to our need of this class of air vessel, but few persons realize the extreme costliness of building the rigid dirigible and keeping it in an efficient state. The price of a Zeppelin is about £50,000, and a hangar to hold two of these vessels costs about £80,000. Then there are repairs, gas, wages and a hundred and one other things which necessitate a large running account to meet them.

To build a fleet of 40 dirigibles, which we should have to do to enable us to get on even terms with the aerial squadrons of other countries, would cost us about £2,000,000, and then hangars must be provided for all of these airships, which means the expenditure of another £2,000,000 at least.

Where these air vessels are to be built and how long they would take to construct are also matters of importance, seeing that we have not as yet turned out any really satisfactory airships of large size. Arrangements, too, have been completed in Germany whereby the sale of Zeppelin and Schutte-Lanz dirigibles to foreign governments is prohibited.

Airship Pilots Scarce.

Then, even supposing that we could buy 40 of these aerial cruisers in the space of a year, we should find considerable difficulty in obtaining pilots qualified to sail them. The official list published by the Federation Aeronautique Internationale shows that, up to December 31, 1912, 32 aeronauts' (balloons) and eleven airship pilots' certificates were granted to persons in Great Britain.

There is no gainsaying the fact that as compared with any other kind of aerial craft, the rigid dirigible is the air vessel of to-day. In carrying capacity and radius of action, in its powers of remaining steady in the air and flying noiselessly aided by the wind, the rigid airship has no rival. It has, of course, its disadvantages—its immense bulk, which makes it a very noticeable object in the sky, and its unwieldiness, which necessitates a host of attendants to grapple with it when it leaves the earth and when it alights. The Zeppelin airships, too, are extremely heavy. The lifting capacity of Zeppelin L. 1 is 27 tons, but owing to its own great weight its useful load is only some seven tons.

As regards the construction of the rigid airship, in this type of air vessel the shape of its envelope is not dependent on internal gas pressure. A huge framework, made of aluminum in the case of Zeppelins, is provided with from seventeen to twenty separate gas chambers. Attached to the framework is a keel which, in addition to serving other purposes, affords communication between the two cars. The latter carry the motors, guns, bomb-dropping appliances, etc. The propellers, of which there are four, are fixed to the frame above the cars. The framework is covered with a rubbered cloth. The Schutte-Lanz dirigible has a wooden framework, as has also the French rigid Le Spies.

The bomb-dropping arrangements carried by the Zeppelins are known to be accurately sighted. Quite recently the Hansa made excellent practice at comparatively small targets on the ground from a height of over 5,000 feet in the air. It is well known, too, that for attacking other air craft the probably machine guns or weapons of small calibre. Two of these guns are carried in each of the cars and the fifth is mounted on a specially constructed platform on top of the airship's envelope. This platform is surrounded by netting and is twelve feet square. A ladder leads from the keel through the framework to its rather airy position. The object of a gun so situated is to shoot at air vessels flying immediately above the Zeppelin, as the fire of the four guns in the cars is masked by the protruding sides of this airship's hull.

All kinds of methods have been devised for attacking the rigid dirigible. It is said that the pilots of certain French aeroplanes are quite prepared, when war breaks out, to fly into the rudders and elevators of rigid airships and thus disable these vessels. Whether this can be accomplished or not remains to be seen; it means certain death for the crew, and sure destruction for the ramming aeroplane. No doubt, some safer and more certain mode of attack will soon make its appearance. The advent of the flying torpedo seems to be at hand. A weapon fashioned on the lines of the steerable Brennan torpedo, leaving a smoke trail or spark after it, would meet the case.

It can be stated with some certainty that the action of the rigid dirigible will be mainly confined to night work in war. The aerial torpedo must, therefore, carry within it some kind of composition which will become lighted on discharge and cause a spark or flame trail to appear, which will enable those using it to see its course through the air. The rigid airship will, of course, be used for reconnaissance duties by day; it will seldom come within the range of any gun, because the occupants of the vessel can see such vast distances by merely going straight up into the sky, but at night the dirigible will be

The Master of the Situation.

Almost all the rigids carry powerful searchlights, but it seems doubtful if these would be often used, because the showing of these lights must necessarily give away their positions. The same statement, too, applies to battleships. A crew that keeps sweeping the skies with their searchlights, looking out for aircraft and torpedo craft, acts very foolishly.

Anyone who has a knowledge of heavier-than-air vessels knows that in normal weather conditions they are always heard before they are seen. This is one of the great disadvantages of the aeroplane for war requirements. But the dirigible, once it has discovered the position of a fleet, can, by maneuvering to windward of the point of attack, approach the ships and float over them without making any sound, and bring into action its bomb-dropping arrangements. When its explosives have been discharged it can quickly get out of range of the ship's guns by its engines being started.

The question is, however, is it possible for the dirigible to discover the whereabouts of battle squadrons at night? If naval warfare be likely to take place in narrow waters, such as the North Sea, the answer must be in the affirmative.

A country that, like Germany, possesses some twelve or more rigid airships must be expected to make good use of them in maritime warfare. The Zeppelins are so constructed that they can come to rest on the sea, but they require special moorings. With even five of these airships searching specified areas from lower or medium altitudes in the air it is difficult to see how the battleship can remain undiscovered. The new rigids being built in Germany will, it is reported, have a speed of nearly 60 miles per hour and a scope of action of 1,300 miles, so that one of these vessels would itself be quite capable of exploring a very large extent of sea and coast line. These aerial cruisers are to carry no less than eight tons of explosives and improved

Bomb-dropping Appliances.

The moral effect of the dirigible in sea warfare of the future is bound to be very great. One can well imagine what an outcry there would be were a dreadnought to be put out of action by the bombs of an airship, and yet such an occurrence is by no means impossible. The man in the battleship has already an anxious time of it, knowing, as he does, that he has to avoid the attentions of the submarine, the mine and the torpedo. But now that the airship has been added to all these terrors, the extra strain that will be thrown upon the sailor's nerves will be almost unbearable. War generally, and war at sea particularly, has become a terrible undertaking, and as the day for turning swords into ploughshares has not yet arrived, it behooves us to acquire such proved weapons of destruction that other powers will think twice before they venture to war with us.

Perhaps the holiday in warship construction, if there is to be a holiday, will mean that we shall have a strenuous term of building airships.

Electrify Prussian Railways.

Prussia's Minister of Public Works expresses himself as in favor of the proposed electrification of the Berlin city belt and suburban railways. The traffic has doubled on these lines within the last twenty years and steam traction is no longer adequate to handle the traffic. Electric drive would give practically double the number of trains each hour, besides securing all the advantages of the electric system.

The Prussian Parliament recently voted a credit of $5,000,000 for carrying on preparatory work upon this important scheme.

THE WORLD REVIEW

Nothing Wrong With Canada.

On his return from England, Sir Edmund Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, expresses himself very hopefully on the money situation, and in an interview stated that there was no need of anxiety among reputable Canadian business men engaged in ordinary business ventures of a sound nature. "There is nothing wrong with Canada," said Sir Edmund. "The whole trouble is with the world supply of money. The production of gold has increased, but not sufficiently to keep up with the world-wide prosperity of the last few years, and the tightness in the money market is due mainly to this cause, though of course the war in the Balkans has also helped by diverting money from commercial channels. The only reason why Canada has been singled out for criticism," went on Sir Edmund, "is that she is the most prominent borrower, and therefore attracts most of the attention when capitalists begin to discriminate in making their loans. Canadian credit is not in the least injured, and interest in Canadian investments has not flagged, but investors in England are obliged to discriminate more carefully and to charge a higher rate."

Widow of Sir John A. Macdonald.

Baroness Macdonald of Emswold is the only Canadian woman, almost the only British woman who holds a title in her own right. The Baroness is the widow of Sir John A. Macdonald, and was created a peeress in 1891 on the death of her husband, in consideration of his public services. She was a Miss Bernard, daughter of the late Hon. T. C. Bernard, of Jamaica. Her marriage to the Canadian statesman took place in 1867, the year of confederation. Lady Macdonald makes her home in England, but continues to take an interest in things Canadian, although she has reached the age of seventy-seven. A woman of intellectual power, Lady Macdonald in earlier years did a service to Canada by writing for the English press of the resources of the country. How many Canadians knew that the famous statesman's wife was still living?

Temperance and Insanity.

One of the speakers at the medical congress now in session in London discussed the remarkable growth of the temperance movement in Great Britain. He referred to the improved habits of army and navy officers, who are now expected to set a good example to the men under them, as well as to the enormous change among the common people, including the working classes.

Other observers, including the chancellor of the exchequer, have been calling attention to the same gratifying phenomena, and the average man, without so much as a glance at statistics, knows the statement regarding the growth of temperance to be true. It is undeniable, moreover, that the progress of temperance is not confined to England. It is world-wide.

Now temperance is a potent cause of insanity, and there should be observable everywhere a decrease of insanity as one of the results of the gradual elimination of the drink evil. Yet, according to speakers at the medical congress, insanity is growing and alarming. The rate in England it has increased 276 per cent. since 1860, although the population has increased only 87 per cent. Is the increase largely apparent rather than real, or is it a better registration and diagnosis of what is actually occurring? are its causes? Conditions of life have improved, and so have conditions of labor. Is it our modern pace that kills the minds of so many? Light is wanted.

The Peach-grower's Life.

When the city man gazes upon the carmine-tinted peaches in the fruit stores, his imagination conjures a life of pleasure and ease in growing the luscious fruit. The reality is not quite so primrose according to one who has tried it. "The peach-grower's life is a life of anxiety. He watches the clouds, he marks the winds, he studies the thermometer, as another man might the tape from a stock-ticker. He has ploughing to do and fertilizing to do. Back of him are the windmills and the older ones. There are insidious diseases he must treat—yellows, twist blight, leaf curl, black spot. Insects dispute the possession of the orchard—bark beetles, aphids, peach tree borers and an occasional stranger with a different taste for destruction quite as strong. The price of land in the peach growing district indicates that the orchards pay. But there is one thing the peach grower will swear to by the deadliest oath: this is that he earns his money. There are none who can readily dispute the fact."

Canada Will Exhibit.

As the Dominion Government has decided to exhibit at the Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco next summer it will be hoped that a really fine illustration of Canada's resources and products will be given. It is different from anything for Great Britain to take part in this exhibition. The United States and Canada run parallel for over 3,000 miles and yet there are vast differences in their resources and products which can only be gauged by a close comparison. It is unfortunately impossible to illustrate Canada's resourceful climate the products of that climate may be seen. This will be a fine opportunity for the individual provinces to advertise their wares.

A Governor's Downfall.

Only a man without compass could help being sorry for the Governor of New York State who has been impeached, and who may indeed be threatened with criminal proceedings for falsifying the document in which he was required to account for the money spent in his election campaign. In the campaign of 1906, while he was denouncing the corporations and pledging himself to the service of the people, he appears to have been speculating privately in Wall Street with money that had been given him to be used in securing his election, and that of other candidates of his party.

Governor Sulzer has been something of a demagogue, climbing to prominence as a champion of the "plain people," and as the uncompromising enemy of privilege and graft. Since attaining office he has sincerely tried to carry out the promises he made in the course of his campaign, and the reason he earned the enmity of Tammany Hall was that he did try. If he had continued to be a mere show for show, and at the same time an enemy of progress, he would not now find himself at the end of his political career. He has been pursued and ruined not for his faults, but for his virtues. There is reason to believe that responsibility made a new man of Sulzer, that his solemn oath of office drove him to break with his Tammany partners, and eventually to defy them when they desired him to make improper appointments. Not one should sit in his downfall, least of all the people of the State of New York, who will have lost a man who wrecked a brilliant career, though in office he tried to be true to the trust they had imposed in him.

In John D's Class.

"Is he rich enough to keep an automobile and a yacht?" "Yes, he is even richer than that. He keeps a lawyer."

She: "Jack, when we are married, I must have three servants." He: "You shall have twenty, dear—but not all at the same time."

She—There seems to be a strange affinity between a colored man and a chicken. I wonder why? He—Naturally enough. One is decended from Ham and the other from eggs.

IN FAR NORTH OF CANADA

WOMEN PLAY BIG, BRAVE PART IN WESTERN LIFE.

Farmer's Daughter in Newer British Columbia Kills a Bear While Milking.

A bright young woman in the newer part of British Columbia is the heroine of a bear story that is quite true. She is a farmer's daughter, and one of her daily duties is to milk the cows. One evening not long ago she was so engaged when a bear suddenly came out of the bush a few feet away from her. The bucket was partly filled with rich Jersey milk, but the girl left it on the ground and beat a hasty retreat, which was precisely what Bruin wanted. With much relish he emptied the bucket, and then ambled away.

The next evening the milkmaid was better prepared, and when she went to the pasture she carried the bucket in one hand and in the other a shotgun, which she leaned against a tree; this because she looked for a return visit of the milk-loving bear. She was not disappointed. The pail was nearly filled this time when Bruin appeared, coming toward her in a very evident hurry. The girl repeated her flight of the evening before, and the bear again made up to the bucket. When his head was comfortably into the milk, the gun, loaded with No. 6 shot, was very precisely aimed, and a second or two later

Bruin Lay Low.

The point of this story is that the women who live in the frontier country have need of keeping their wits about them. And, as a matter of fact, most of them do. Many tales are told of the bravery, fortitude and remarkable endurance of women settlers in the remote places of the West and North, some of whom have also proved themselves the possessors of exceptional ability and business keenness.

Thus there is an honor roll of at least a half-dozen women in Alaska who played the part of mining prospector so well that they made good stakes and won fame and fortune. They were in their mining days as well posted in the theory and practice of placer mining as any man in the North, and proved it by results. It is told of one of these venturesome six that once, to save her husband's bank at Nome from failure, she travelled three hundred miles in midwinter, alone and by dog-team, carrying a substantial clean-up of gold nuggets from her own holdings. By day and night, through snow and blizzard, she kept to the trail, and reached Nome, with her golden relief, just in time to avert the threatened disaster.

Tramped 1,450 Miles.

Another woman, not a gold-hunter, mushed 1,450 miles from Rampart to Whitehorse, in the Yukon. She did it alone, too, and in the dead of a deadly winter. With her train of dogs she made an average of twenty-five miles a day, and on one or two days covered thirty-five miles. That is good travelling on the winter trail, even for a man, and especially good for a woman when for the greater part of the way she ran, not rode, holding only by her hands to the bars of the dog-sleigh. For on some days it was too cold to ride; fifty and sixty and seventy below zero, which means that one must keep moving.

Just like a man, this woman musher rode and tramped, sometimes breaking a way ahead for the dogs when the zero-fog was too dense for them to see. Just like a man, too, when out of reach of the road houses, she made camp at night-time beside the trail, and slept the deep warm sleep of the outdoor North. A hole in the snow for a bed, a few fir branches for a mattress and her Arctic dog-ropes for bedspreads, she lay herself down to sleep, alone; and at grey dawn she was up and off again. Not many women could have done it, but this woman did it, and suffered nothing more serious than the loss of a few pounds weight in her two months on the winter trail.

Strange honeymoon trips sometimes fall to the lot of northern tribes. A newly-wedded couple at Whitehorse wished to go to Dawson, their home-to-be. But they were too late in the season to catch the last steamer up the Yukon, and for a month they waited in Whitehorse. When the first snow came they set out for home by the overland route. A strange bridal outfit it was; dogs, and grub-box, and a sled big enough for two; and an arduous bridal tour ahead of them, via the winter Yukon trail. But they had a good time. The weather was not too sharp, the going was good, and the numerous road houses along the Dawson train made convenient stopping places. When they reached Dawson they declared that they had not had a dull moment or an uncomfortable experience, and that dog-sled wedding trips in the North were good.

THE WAR CORRESPONDENT

Tells of His Experience in the Balkan War.

"I had been captured some time between ten and eleven in the morning," a war correspondent who went to the front with the Turkish troops writes in the Fortnightly Review, "and about two o'clock I was carried past the halting-place of the 36th Bulgarian Infantry, where I was stopped and questioned. The escort explained that they were taking me to the quartier-general by General Popoff's orders, but the explanation was not enough for the colonel commanding, who ordered me to dismount."

"Before I could comply, the soldiers seized me, dragged me from my horse, thrust a revolver into my face, and searched me again. They demanded what my papers meant, what the pencilled marks were on the map that I carried, and why I wore a Turkish uniform. When they warned me volubly that if I tried to get away I should be shot."

"They ordered me to mount my horse, and strapped my knees to the saddle. In that position I proceeded along the line of marching troops until nightfall, when it became apparent that the guard could not find the quartier-general. Then we rode back along the line until we came again to the bivouac of the 36th Infantry. The officers were sitting in a group as we rode up, and they told me to dismount and sit with them. When I had done so, they bound my knees and ankles with ropes."

"After the men had had their evening meal, the officers took me into a tent, and for an hour subjected me to an experience that I hope may never repeat itself. Without giving the details, I may say that it was proved beyond doubt that I was a true Constantinople Turk. I also learned that a couple of scars on my body, which were relics of the siege of Mafeking, had really been received either in Albania or Arabia."

"When they had concluded that I was a Turk, they told me that I should be shot in the morning. They then took me to a cart, let me sit down, and bound me to the wheel. I think I must have been lying on the ground two hours, when an officer came by. He had seen me during the day, and in reply to his questions, I explained what had taken place. Finally he went to headquarters in my behalf."

"At the end of an hour an orderly arrived from headquarters. He led me across the fields, and showed me into a room where six staff-officers were in bed. One of them got up, had my arms and shoulders rubbed, gave me some brandy, and disappeared into an inner room. When he came out, he was with another officer, who apologized for the treatment I had received, waived the question of identification until the morning, found me a place to sleep, and gave me blankets. In the morning it was decided that I was English, and that my papers were in order."

Always Better To-Morrow.

So long as a man has the courage to face one more day so long will he be a factor in the race for material success. He whose past looms constantly in front of him, who lives in retrospect, has cheated the boatman of the Styx and encumbers the machinery of this world. To live is to be up and doing to-day, not to be counting on the things that were, but to figure on the things that are and will be, not to say that to-day is not so good as yesterday, but to declare that to-morrow will be the best day the universe has ever seen. And to-morrow is always a better day than to-day. We shall all be further along the road, we shall all know more, feel more, approach a little closer the goal which is yet hidden. The man acclaimed as successful never feels his spirits flag, never lacks the courage to face another day, never looks backward except to profit by his experiences.

An Exception.

"So they married in haste. Then I suppose, following out the proverb, they repented at leisure."

"No; they repented in haste also."

Caller—I suppose, Elsie, when you grow up you will be getting married, like the other girls. Elsie—Oh, no; I've decided I will be a widow.

GILLETTE'S LYE EATS DIRT

AIRSHIPS AND AEROPLANES.

They Have Proved Disappointing in Actual War.

Airships and aeroplanes in warfare were tested for the first time in the recent conflict between Italy and Turkey, and the military and scientific critics are still trying to estimate the importance of the role they will play in future wars and to assign to them their proper places as engines of attack and defence.

The Scientific American, analyzing the known facts as obtained from this war—for the more recent one in the Balkans is negligible because there was no organized air service—predicts a much less important role for both airships and aeroplanes than has generally been foretold.

The Turks had no air service. That of the Italians was systematic and well organized, aeroplanes, dirigibles and captive kite balloons being used regularly. They proved of great use in reconnaissance, enabling artillery to find targets and regulate their fire and the staff to correct their maps. But the bomb-dropping did no material damage, whatever effect it had on the enemy being purely moral. Which leads The Scientific American to say:

"In certain limited cases as regards inanimate objects of attack aeroplanes might be effective, as, for instance, for the destruction of railway lines, since sowing a number of bombs, while the machine kept above a length of permanent way, would not be very difficult. As regards the destruction of fixed points, the aeroplane is practically useless, unless large numbers are used, each carrying one or two heavy bombs and coming comparatively close to the ground. Even so, the difficulties in obtaining accuracy of aim from the swiftly moving machine are very great."

"Besides this, the Italians found that even in face of the indifferent marksmanship of the Turks it was imperative to keep an altitude of 4,500 feet in order to remain out of range of rifle fire. There is no cover in mid-air, and if the bomb-dropper should descend low enough to take any kind of aim the attacking aeroplanes would have to run the gauntlet of a fusillade so heavy and sustained as to render sighting difficult and the chances of escape from destruction very slight. Ranging on aeroplanes has been shown to be extremely uncertain on account of their speed, and for other reasons, but the sustained fire of many rifles within say 1,800 feet, and necessitating no special adjustment of sights would eliminate the process of range-taking."

"On the whole the damage likely to be done by aeroplanes dropping the bombs is negligible, the moral effect on good troops most uncertain, and not worth the expenditure of gallant lives and machines which are of much more value for purposes of reconnaissance."

Another One.

"Did she marry for money?" "No. That sort of thing wasn't fashionable in her day."

The love of money, says a humorist, is the easiest of all roots to cultivate.

WALKERTON, ONT., MAY 9th, 1911.

"I have been in Walkerton in business for a good many years and many of my townsmen know that my health, for long periods was precarious. My trouble was extreme Nervousness, brought on by Indigestion and Dyspepsia, from which I suffered in the most severe form. It was so bad that I could not sleep before about four in the morning. I noticed one of your published testimonials of how someone had used "Fruit-a-tives" for similar trouble and asked Mr. Hunter, my druggist, his opinion on the matter and he advised their use. I immediately procured several boxes and I am pleased to say that I now enjoy splendid health and could not possibly feel better. I can eat with every degree of satisfaction and sleep without an effort. I strongly advise anyone suffering from like complaints, to commence using "Fruit-a-tives". ALEX. MCCARTER.
