Chesterville District Shocked By Dr. Casselman's Death

Native of Chesterville Was Beloved by Many.—Death Occurred Monday In Montreal Hospital.—Aged 45.

Yesterday afternoon one of the largest crowds in attendance at a funeral in this place for many years did honour to the late Dr. H. H. Casselman, whose death occurred in the Ross Memorial Pavilion in Montreal early Monday morning. As the service was conducted by Rev. R. C. Tait, pastor of Trinity United, assisted by Rev. R. S. Smith, Elma, and Rev. W. D. Atchison, Winchester, the auditorium of the church and the Sunday school rooms were filled to capacity and many could not gain admittance.

It was a touching tribute to a native son who did receive honour in his own village. A great many private citizens and public bodies symbolized their feelings in floral tributes. Whether of a simple spray or wreath, or more pretentious pieces, all expressed the same feelings of love and loss sustained when the grim reaper lays his heavy hand on those of their own homes. The deceased would possibly have been the most surprised of all could he have realized he held such a place in the hearts and homes of those to whom he ministered during the past 15 years since he came to his home town after practising in London, Ont., after his graduation from McGill University in 1922. Dr. Casselman was in his 46th year.

Herbert H. Casselman was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. C. Lee Casselman, his mother before her marriage being Mary Beckstead. He received his early education at the local Public and High schools, where he was a clever and earnest student, and where he developed those qualities of headt and head which led him into the profession where he gained such a conspicuous hold on the affections of the entire community.

Dr. Casselman's illness first became serious last spring when his heart became overtaxed, and while he recuperated at times and had hopes of returning to active practice, the trouble was progressive and led to the inevitable end. Sunday last he was reported to have had one of his best days but the improvement was not lasting, and within a short time the end came before the break of the following day.

After settling in his home town, he took active part in all of its activities, serving as chairman at different times on the boards of the High and Public schools, was Medical Officer of Health, and was one of the charter members of the Rotary Club when it was instituted early last year, becoming chairman of the Crippled Children's Committee; and he was a member of the Chesterville lodge A. F. & A. M.

Dr. Casselman took as his wife, Miss Marjorie Wernicke of Montreal, in 1922, who survives her husband and mourns his loss with her four sons, Douglas, Richard, Malcolm and Bruce. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Casselman, of Wincheter, also surive, as well as his only brother, Murray Casselman, of Montreal.

The honourary pall-bearers were Messrs. O. D. Casselman, Melvin Durant, W. H. Casselman, W. Hamilton, Dr. Ed. Brown and J. Howard Fulton, while the active bearers were Messrs. Murray Casselman, Frank Cody, Jack Wilton, P. S. Boyd, J. Slosser and H. Hamilton.

Following the church service, the procession to the grave side in Maple Ridge cemetery was under the direction of the Masonic Order, with Dr. S. H. Hutt, past district deputy grand master, conducting the last rites.

High School Board Meets With Little Business on Hand

Accounts Passed, Members Subscribe To Cost of Wreath Honouring Former Chairman.

The High School Board met in the Bank of Montreal offices on Tuesday evening with little business before the members. Accounts passed were, Aikenhead Hardware $7.95, H. S. McMurray $25.40, National Stationers $2.15, C. W. Casselman, for insurance premium $26.05.

Members of the board subscribed to the cost of a wreath in memory of Dr. H. H. Casselman, who was a former chairman of the board.

The Board decided to grant an increase in salary of $100 each to Principal W. P. Markle and J. H. Willard. This is in line with salary increases made earlier to other members of last year's staff.

Dr. W. H. Lloyd Appointed Medical Officer of Health

Appointment Made at Tuesday Evening's Session of Village Council.—Dr. Casselman's Death Regretted.

At the October meeting held in the Community Hall office Tuesday evening, the Village Council acting on the application of Dr. W. H. Lloyd, appointed him Medical Officer of Health, subject to approval by the Provincial Board of Health. Dr. Lloyd's application stated the salary of $50 would be turned over to the Red Cross for the duration of the war.

The Council passed a resolution of regret at the death of Dr. H. H. Casselman who had served for 10 years, and a copy of the motion was ordered sent to The Record. This appears in another column.

The following accounts were passed Wm. Plantz, labour $14.10; Wm. Allen labour $25.40; R. G. Smith, Dundas Reforestation Plot $45.34; Thos. Parker, Ref. plot $14.40; Archie Harper, Ref. plot $15.45; H. C. Hummel, September salary $22.50; Public School Board, requisition $600, High School Board, requisition $800; A. Harper, Labour with team $1.00; A. Lalonde, labour $1.00; Allison & Gillard, cement tile $34.00; Dr. W. H. Lloyd, V.D., $48.39; Municipality of Morrisburg, relief $5.98; H. M. Henderson, transporting indigents $16.00; United Counties' grading $141; R. J. Lovell, stationery $1.30; T. Labre, labour $13.50; H. S. McMurray $31.49; S. Morris, gravel $3.00; Mrs. H. H. Casselman, for M.O.H. $50.

New Tax on Hydro Applies Only on 18 Days' Consumption

October Bills of Chesterville Consumers Will Be Small With 10 Per Cent Rebate Deducted.

Hydro customers will not have to pay the full eight per cent sales tax on their bills due October 20 in town, it has been announced by the head office, as the tax became effective only on September 12, which leaves but 18 days' consumption to be taxed. This works out to 2½ per cent of the two months' bill.

Hydro users in Chesterville will receive very small bills this month, as a rebate of 10 per cent of the 1938 bills is to be given. Even with the sales tax added, the amount of the bills will be very small.

The new sales tax on Hydro, to be applied to the cost of the war, applies only to dwellings. To designate such an installation, the regulations state "a dwelling shall include business premises where the supply of gas or electricity for both the business and the living quarters is metered through a single meter or where a flat charge is made to cover both the business and living quarters."

Standard hotels are exempt from the tax, as well as all other business places on separate meters.

OCTOBER MEETING OF C.W.L.

The monthly meeting of the C.W.L. of St. Mary's church was held last evening with a good attendance. The minutes of the September meeting were read and approved.

Correspondence was read which included a letter from Mrs. Raney of Prescott discussing the Diocesan convention to be held at Belleville, Oct. 16, 17 and 18. It was moved by Mrs. Thos. Flynn, seconded by Mrs. Allison, that the president, Mrs. Norman Cameron, represent this sub-division of the Red Cross.

The first vice-president, Mrs. J. T. Campbell, sent a letter of resignation, and on motion of Mrs. Carr and Mrs. Dan MacMillan, Mrs. Thos. Flynn was appointed to fill the vacancy.

C. W. CASSELMAN ILL.

C. W. Casselman, well-known Chesterville resident, suffered a stroke at his home on Tuesday and is reported in a serious condition.

Employees of the Provincial Highways Department this week made badly needed repairs to the roadway of the Nation river bridge in town.

PRESENTATIONS AT MOREWOOD

A very pleasant evening was spent in the Presbyterian Hall at Morewood when the members of the Ladies' Aid Society and other ladies of the village gathered to bid farewell to Mrs. Andrew Moffatt and Mrs. Chesley Marcellus who will leave shortly for their new homes in Ottawa and Chesterville.

The evening was spent in music, games and contests. Mrs. J. H. Nadeau was called on to read an address, and Mrs. James Moffatt, Mrs. Henry Smirle and Mrs. Tom Moffatt presented each lady with a beautiful kimona and electric bed lamp. Both made suitable replies and invited all present to visit them in their new homes. Then refreshments were served.

CONSCRIPTION OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE IS INSTITUTED

AFTER MONTHS of bitter discussion throughout Canada concerning the extent and type of conscription which should be carried out in the event of war, we now have the arresting fact that within the first month of war, the government has instituted conscription and the first move has been against industry and finance.

Swiftly and quietly, the government has taken over compete control of all foreign exchange business and an absolute management of imports and exports made by Canada's industrial organization.

To those of us on the outside, the full significance of this step wasn't at first apparent. Not until an Ottawa observer pulled back the curtain did the drastic nature of the government move become obvious.

Briefly, here's what happened:

The Government instructed the Bank of Canada to create the Foreign Exchange Control Board.

The Foreign Exchange Control Board then called to Ottawa all the foreign exchange executives of Canada's chartered banks, and, in conference, drew up regulations which took away from the banks every last vestige of control of foreign exchange business.

And at this point, according to our Ottawa informant, Canadians who take pride in this country's form of democracy can take time off to cheer. For he reports that although this move meant that the banks immediately lost a source of profit, they lost little time in co-operating with the government.

Just how much revenue the banks lose by this necessary government step cannot be ascertained, but the total is said to be quite large.

After receiving the hearty thanks of the government for the patriotic manner in which they accepted this sacrifice, the banks went further, it is said, setting up a committee to continue the co-operation.

It is interesting to note, too, that under the new regulations, the banks continue to conduct foreign exchange transactions, but they do it for the Board, at prices set by the Board—and do it for nothing.

To get the true picture of the new situation, it must be realized how the Control Board by its control of foreign exchange controls imports and exports. In other words, the Canadian business man has to apply to Ottawa for a permit to export or import, with all transactions passing through the hands of the new Control Board.

ONTARIO GIVES LESSON TO DUPLESSIS OF QUEBEC

DOMESTIC NEWS highlights of the moment are provided by the arranged conference between Premier Mitchell Hepburn and Prime Minister Mackenzie King on way by which Ontario can most efficiently co-operate with the Dominion in war effort.—and by the provincial election in Quebec.

The first development affords a measure of satisfaction that in times of national emergency public men can sink personal differences for the common good.

But the move of Premier Duplessis on the other hand is casting a certain amount of gloom throughout official circles. At a time when the country should be united, Ottawa is faced with a short but ugly controversy in Quebec. On the one side will be Duplessis shouting "Provincial rights," and on the other the Quebec Federal members, led by the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, declaring that a vote for Duplessis will be a vote against Canada's war effort.

There is almost a smile, however, in one phase of this Quebec election—and that is the sorry plight of the Social Credit group in that province.

What with W. D. Herridge's expression for conscription, and similar views by John Blackmore, recognized Social Credit spokesman in the House, the Quebec contingent has been working feverishly to show that they are not under the same cloak with Social Crediters in other parts of Canada.

Says the president: "The League (Quebec Social Credit) having always maintained full and complete autonomy, has therefore never been subordinate to the provincial or federal political leader and consequently the statements of Messrs. Aberhart, Blackmore or Herridge do not express the opinion of Social Crediters of Quebec."

But in spite of this statement, political workers in Quebec will be surprised if any one Social Credit candidate gets back his election deposit.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT SORE SPOT FOR ONTARIO

IT HAS BEEN the fate of the Canada Temperance Act to fall between two stools. A Federal enactment, it was left to the provincial authorities to provide the machinery of enforcement, and such equipment has never been adequately forthcoming. In the face of the avowed hostility of the Hepburn government, the Ontario Court of Appeal has ruled that the Act applicable to Peel, Huron and Perth Counties and to the district of Manitoulin is constitutionally valid, which falls in line with a previous judgment of the Privy Council.

This rather complicates matters, as beverage rooms have been set up in Huron and Perth. And Attorney-General Conant now feels that the only course open is to appeal to the Privy Council with a view to arriving at some finality. Failing in this, one of the learned judges suggests Parliament should be asked to enact legislation repealing the Act.

In view of the decision of the appelate division of the Supreme Court, trouble looms in Huron and Perth Counties. A number of convictions have been registered under the Liquor Control Act. If the appeal verdict confirming the validity of the Canada Temperance Act during the past thirteen years may be applying for remission of fines and for compensation for having wrongly served jail sentences.

WHO WILL BE THE NEXT VICTIM

LAST YEAR the Fire Demon numbered among his victims in Canada 263 men, women and children. In 1937, 105 children lost their lives by fire, while in 1938 118 children's lives were claimed. This is a staggering admission and the responsibility for such tragedies can in many cases be laid directly to the negligence of parents who far too often leave their helpless little ones alone in the house while they visit neighbours or go to a show. These holocausts frequently occur in rural districts where neighbours are long distances away and the parents are unable to reach their burning home in time to save their children from a horrible death.

Every parent should realize that it is his duty to teach his children the principles of fire prevention. They should not be allowed to play with fire, matches should be kept out of their reach and the paying with celluloid toys should be discouraged. By a strict adherence to the use of common sense, parents can thus save themselves the bitter anguish and life-long when a child perishes by their neglect.

WIRE ROPE 1¼ MILES LONG

For World's Deepest Mine Shaft in India.

TWO SPECIAL steel ropes, each over 1¼ miles long and about two inches in diameter, have been made in Britain for a winding hoist at the Champion Reef Mine in the famous Kolar Goldfield, Mysore, Southern India.

Although the maximum load hoisted by each is about 25 tons, the guaranteed breaking strain for each rope is more than 150 tons.

The ropes are for the primary vertical shaft known as the Gifford Shaft, 6556 feet deep, part of a big expansion scheme for which additional capital of £230,000 was raised in 1936 for deepening the main shaft and installing new plant and equipment which will give India the distinction of having the world's deepest vertical shaft.

The consulting engineers who evolved the scheme are a London firm (John Taylor and Sons) and the manufacturers of the ropes (British Ropes Ltd.) supplied salvage ropes for lifting the German Fleet at Scapa Flow, as well as the mooring ropes for the "Queen Mary" and "Queen Elizabeth."

The ropes for the Champion Reef Mine each weigh 20¼ tons and will cost £3,000. They will be installed about April, 1940.

Facts About Canada

CANADIAN WHALING.

THE LITERATURE of adventure is rich in stories of whaling; and the ships sailing out of Dundee for our northern waters on the Atlantic side of the Dominion used to provide most of the romance. Incidentally many of these old skippers on their journeys learned to like this country and eventually settled in the Dominion with their families. Indeed, some of them entered the Canadian public service and rendered most efficient aid in the development of the Dominion's navigation projects. One of these former Dundee whaling shipmasters died only a year or so ago, Captain G. E. L. Robertson, who became Commissioner of Pilotage.

But today the greatness of the whaling industry has departed from northern waters to southern waters and the Norwegians seem to have taken the place that was once held by the Scots. For these Norwegians are still as great sailors as their Viking ancestors were.

However, whaling is still an important business in our northern waters, even though the corsets of the ladies are not shaped with whalebone ribs any more, but the scene has changed from the east to the west. Our whaling is now done on the Pacific Coast.

At the two plants on Queen Charlotte Islands, whaling was again actively carried on during 1938. Though actually seven fewer whales were taken than in 1937, the catch was a comparatively large one or in all 310 whales. Divided as to species, there were 252 Sperm whales, 50 Finbacks, four Humpbacks and four Sulphur whales.

Because it is a much larger whale and in consequence produces more oil and meal and so brings a better return to the whalers than any of the above species, the Sperm is, of course, most sought after, as the catch figures indicate.

Six steam whaling vessels, three based at Naden, and three at Rose Harbour, operated during the summer and fall. Fog somewhat hampered the whalers, making it difficult at times to locate the big mammals, but in general the season was regarded as successful. Shades of New Bedford and Captain Slocum still stalk on the Pacific Coast and whaling is an active division of the sea industries.

Doubtful Comfort.

Racing Magnate: "Sam, I've been told I'm about to die, so I've sent for you to give you a present for being a straight lad, and, of course, to say good-bye! You'll not see me again—I'm going on the long, long journey."

Sam (desperately anxious to say something consoling): "Never mind, sir! Buck up; it's orl down hill."

Trip to England is Prize For Two Winning Plowmen

A new feature of the International Plowing Match which will be held at Brockville this year is the Trans-Atlantic Class, sponsored by the Salada Tea company. As a result of the generous contribution of that company the Plowmen's Association plans for the first time in its history, to send Canadian representatives overseas to compete in matches in the British Isles. Consequently, much new interest has been aroused among farmers throughout the Province. In addition to the trip and gold and silver medals to the two Trans-Atlantic winners, Salada is donating 12 cash prizes for this event totalling $150.

Furthermore, branches throughout the Province will each have a Salada special event, the first prize being $10 in cash and the right to compete at the subsequent International Match.

The Spendthrift.

Wife: "Could I have a dollar?"

Husband: "What in the world did you do with the last dollar I gave you?"

Wife: "I spent 37 cents in 1937, 33 cents in 1938, and 30 cents last Easter."

Quite Different.

The doctor stopped Mabel's young man as he was leaving the house.

"You've been calling on my daughter for six months, young fellow. What are your intentions?"

"Well, sir," replied the suitor, "I hope to become an addition to your family."

Dundas Plowmen's Match Attracts Many Competitors

Ideal weather conditions prevailed for the Dundas County Plowman's Association annual plowing match, held on the farm of Thomas Annable, north of Winchester, Thursday last. Contestants from several points provided some keen competition, which was witnessed by a large crowd of spectators.

J. J. Duffus, M.P., of Peterborough, was the judge of the plowing, while Wm. Irven, of Chesterville, judged the horses.

In the evening, a banquet was tendered the prize winners, in the Winchester town hall, with Weldon Beckstead, vice-president of the association as chairman. Reeve T. O. Keyes welcomed the plowmen in a brief address. The main speaker was Mr. Duffus who delivered an interesting address on "The Fundamental Principles of Match Plowing."

During the evening the prize winners were announced by H. W. Graham, agricultural representative, of Morrisburg.

Results of the Match.

Walking plow, single furrow, plain or jointer in sod, open to residents of Dundas county, four prizes: Fay Shaver, Chesterville; John Falshaw, Brinston; Bruce Barkley and Broder Barkley, Iroquois. A special prize for the best crown and finish in this class was awarded to Fay Shaver.

Damage Action is Lost; Sequel to Funeral Crash

Sequel to a crash which took the lives of three when a gasoline truck became involved with a funeral cortege, damage action of Leopold Sauriol, Montreal, against Harry Summers, Winchester, was dismissed with $600 costs by Mr. Justice McFarland at Fall Assizes of the Supreme Court in Ottawa, Monday.

Named third-party defendant in the suit was the Shell Oil Company, whose truck struck a car driven by Glenn Summers, brother of the defendant, who was its owner and a passenger at the time. The former was killed.

The plaintiff told the court he was unable to secure evidence to prove negligence on the part of the driver. Two others died in the crash, which occurred April 1 1937 on Highway 31 just at the southern end of Winchester village.

Jacques Cartier

This daring navigator won the proud title of "Discoverer of Canada." In 1534 he made his first voyage and landed at Gaspe where he planted a 30 foot cross and claimed this new land for François I of France. The following year he sailed up the river to Stadacona—now Quebec—where he spent the winter of 1535-6, sailing home in the Spring, carrying glowing tales of this new land of great promise.

NEW MARKETS

THE courage and vision of Cartier opened up a new world. In the same spirit of adventure and enterprise, Canadians, assisted by this Century-old Bank, are continually making voyages of discovery in business. As new products are developed and markets found, the experience and facilities of this Bank are playing their part in Canada's March of Progress.

FOR DESSERT

By:
KATHARINE BAKER

FALL WEATHER calls for a change in diet. It means forsaking light, cold dishes for hot, nourishing food. Here is our suggestion of the main dishes for a chilly fall day—Beefsteak and Kidney Pie.—It has everything: flavour, body and plenty of nourishment.

This recipe calls for quick-cooking tapioca as a binder and if you've never tried it you'll be surprised at the results. It gives the pie just the right consistency but does not intrude on the flavour.

BEEFSTEAK & KIDNEY PIE.

- 4 lamb kidneys
- 1 lb. round steak, cut in pieces
- ¼ cup sliced onions
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 3½ cups boiling water
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- ⅛ teaspoon thyme
- 1 bay leaf
- 3 allspice berries
- 2 cups mushrooms, cut in pieces
- 1½ tablespoons quick cooking tapioca
- ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
- 1 cup sifted flour
- 1 teaspoon baking powder
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 3 tablespoons butter or other shortening
- 6 tablespoons milk (about)

Soak kidneys in salted water 1 hour. Brown steak and onions in 1 tablespoon butter; add water, salt and pepper. Tie thyme, bay leaf, and allspice in small cloth; add to meat; cover and simmer about 1 hour ,or until nearly done. Remove bag of spices. Slice kidneys and sauté with mushrooms in remaining tablespoon butter. Add to meat mixture; then add tapioca and Worcestershire sauce and bring to a full boil, stirring constantly. Turn into greased casserole. Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again. Cut in shortening. Add milk gradually, stirring until soft dough is formed. Turn out on slightly floured board and knead 30 seconds, or enough to shape. Roll dough ¼ inch thick; with sharp knife make slits to permit escape of steam. Fit over meat mixture in casserole. Bake in hot oven (450 deg. F.) 30 minutes. Serves 6 to 8.

Arson Criminals Have Little Show

Fire Marshal's Office Deals Swiftly to Combat Fire Bugs' Menace to Ontario Property.

DURING the third quarter of this year, the Fire Marshal's office was successful in over 90 per cent of the criminal prosecutions launched as a result of their investigations, with convictions resulting in the three quarters of the year to date in over 80 per cent of the prosecutions for arson and allied crimes. In the past quarter one of the longest sentences and one of the shortest sentences in the history of the Fire Marshal's Office were imposed by the courts in arson charges.

The longest sentence resulted when a man was sentenced to twelve years imprisonment by the District Judge, Parry Sound, in July, who found him guilty of arson resulting from the burning of a summer cottage in October, 1938, in order to cover up any incriminating evidence that he or his companion might have left after they had broken into the building. One of the shortest sentences was imposed by a magistrate at Cobalt who sentenced a man to ten days' imprisonment in July after finding the accused guilty of arson following a deliberate attempt on the part of the accused to burn a pile of cordwood situated on property opposite his father's hotel and which he felt was detrimental to his father's business.

In the magistrate's court, Sault Ste. Marie, in July, one man pleaded guilty to charges of false pretences and another pleaded guilty to arson in charges arising following a fire which destroyed a log cabin that they had contracted to build but which they knew did not conform to the contract. Both were sentenced to one month's imprisonment.

In another interesting case, a juvenile was placed in custody of the Salvation Army by the Juvenile Judge at St. Thomas late in August, after being found guilty of causing several incendiary fires in one of the hotels in which a number of fire chiefs stayed while attending the Dominion Fire Chiefs convention, St. Thomas.

In September two teen-age youths were sentenced to two months' imprisonment or setting fire to a warehouse in St. Catherines. The boys, when questioned by the officer from the Fire Marshal's office, admitted setting the fire for excitement.

Proof Positive.

"I tell you," said Pat, "the ould fri'nds are the best after all, and, what's more, I can prove it."

"How are you goin' to prove it?"

"Where will ye find a new fri'nd that has shtud by ye as long as the ould ones 'ave?"

COUNCIL PASSES RESOLUTION IN MEMORY DR. CASSELMAN

At Tuesday evening's session of the Village Council, a resolution was recorded expressing the regret of the passing of Dr. H. H. Casselman, who has served Chesterville 10 years as Medical Officer of Health, which reads as follows:

Moved by Thos. Allen, Seconded by R. J. Barrie:

THAT we, the members of the Municipal Council of the Village of Chesterville, having learned with the deepest regret of the death of Dr. H. H. Casselman, desire to express our sincerest sympathy to those who mourn his passing.

During the past ten years or more of his services to our Municipality as Medical Officer of Health, we have good reason to recall with gratitude, pride and admiration the efficient manner in which he discharged his duties.

His willingness to fully co-operate, to offer kindly advice, and to give freely of his services, will ever be remembered as characteristic of his tenure of office.

Truly has this Municipality lost an efficient officer, a good citizen and a faithful friend.

Passed unanimously in open Council this Third day of October, 1939.

W. H. Casselman, Reeve; Geo. H. Barkley, Thos. Allen, R. J. Barrie, R. G. Smith, Councillors; Harry C. Hummel, Clerk.

HOLY TRINITY GUILD PRESENTS GIFTS TO BRIDE-TO-BE

At the October meeting of Holy Trinity Guild, held at the home of Mrs. Richard Fawcett, Dunbar, Tuesday afternoon, Miss Gladys Fyke, whose marriage was today, was presented with a number of beautiful gifts by the members.

Following the business session, Miss Fyke was asked to start a treasure hunt, rolling up lengths of streamers which led, after various detours, to a table behind a screen piled high with presents. Mrs. Earle Gordon, president of the Guild, made the presentation, the bride-to-be thanking the members for the honour.

At the close, refreshments were served by Mrs. Fawcett, assisted by some of the ladies.

ALONG THE AIR WAVES

BY "ETHERITE"

THE Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in formulating plans for its programme schedule on a war-time basis, has set aside regular daily and Sunday periods, devoted to the spiritual life of the nation. On Sundays, the "Devotional Service" at 2.30 p.m. and the "Church of the Air" at 5.00 p.m. are conducted as closely as possible along the lines of the full church service of the various religious denominations participating. Also, these services are bringing to the microphone the leading men of the laity and clergy throughout the Dominion, including representatives of every branch of the Christian faith. The daily "Devotional Service" over CBO at 8.15 a.m. and similar periods in other CBC regions are designed as intimate family periods of worship.

According to Don Fairbairn, of the CBC Agricultural Division, the inclusion of Canadian Press News on the Ontario Farm Broacast over CBL (daily except Saturday and Sunday at 12.30 to 1.00 p.m.) is of great importance in keeping the farmer up-to-date on the marketing of agricultural products under war time conditions. Such items as the recent announcement concerning the Dominion Government's purchase of two million barrels of apples from British Columbia and Nova Scotia for processing, for instance, are of interest to farm listeners. In addition to the practical services, the broadcast includes such human interest features as "The Craigs," a serial depicting everyday life in rural Ontario. Frank Paddie, Grace Webster, Alice Hill and George Murray are the actors who regularly portray these real-life farm folk.

Quentin Maclean, noted British organist, who sailed for his first visit to Canada two days before war was declared, has decided to prolong his stay until London's black-outs are "eased a bit." Mr. Maclean, who served with distinction in the last war and whose injuries prevent him from participating this time as a combatant, has for years been one of the best known cinema organists in London. National network listeners had an opportuity of hearing him from Toronto on September 28 and it is expected that he will appear again in the near future as guest artist with the CBC. Mr. Maclean is accompanied by his wife, a Canadian, who has not been home for 15 years. They hope to tour the Dominion.

Phyllis Marshall, the charming little coloured girl who made her radio début as a high school senior at Toronto two years ago, has grown into a lovely young lady and is now featured in one of the regular weekly novelty programmes originating in the studios of CBC. It is her voice which complements the smooth musical presentations of Albert Pratz's ensemble in "Cameos in Swing," on Saturdays at 7.00 p.m. Phyllis has another string to her bow—she is industriously studying dress designing and hopes to make this her profession when and if her love for singing blues songs subsides. Right now, she says, she can't imagine when that will be. But, just in case!

George Young stepped back into his best-known rôle with the beginning of the new CBC fall schedule. Mr. Young has been Regional Representative for the Corporation in the Maritimes for the past two years, but for several years previously he was the presiding genius of "Let's All Go To The Music Hall" and in 1937 he toured the Dominion as director of "The National Sing Song." Now he is leading the weekly songfest from Halifax, heard Wednesdays at 8.00 p.m. Last week, George had a giant choir made up of men from the Royal Canadian Regiment, stationed at Halifax. This week, the civilian population took over the challenge and on October 11 the navy will swing into the old refrains with characteristic gusto. Not since the days of the last war, when George took time off from ferrying airplanes across the English Channel to sing with lads at Folkstone, has he enjoyed himself so much. He admits, off the record, that he hopes the rivalry between the navy and the army will not centre collectively on him when the boys find out he is an ex-R.A.F. man.

Dave Davies is back from a summer season at Banff to join forces with Jimmy Namaro's novelty group in the CBC's "Musical Cocktail" presentations. Tuesday at 7.00 p.m. Dave's individual style of presenting popular song hits has made him a great favourite with listeners all across Canada. He made his radio début in Winnipeg, the home town, came to Toronto two years ago and scored a big success on Percy Faith's "Streamline" presentation from Toronto. This summer he was invited to the Banff Springs Hotel as featured vocalist, but reports are that Dave's popularity was not confined to the realm of music—he was as big a draw on the golf course, and his ability in the swimming pool made him a popular pinch-hitter for the resident swimming instructor.

Plowmen Brave Steady Rain To Compete at Berwick

Although a steady drizzle of rain made conditions for the competition anything but good, between 30 and 40 plowmen competed in the West Stormont Plowmen's Association annual match held near Berwick on Saturday.

The match was originally scheduled for last Wednesday, but was postponed after a downpour of rain during most of the morning. The weather was little better on Saturday, but the plowmen went ahead in spite of the cold rain and the thick mud. Competition was surprisingly keen in view of the conditions, and some good exhibitions of plowing were seen.

The postponement on Wednesday and the rain Saturday considerably reduced the entry list at the event, which ordinarily attracts 50 or more plowmen. Most of the large crowd of spectators which usually attends the event was also driven away by the rain.

The competition was held on the farm of Donald Henry, three-quarters of a mile south of the village of Berwick. In the evening, the plowmen gathered at Berwick for a supper where prizes were awarded and brief speeches were made.

Winners of Events.

Walking plow, single furrow, high cut in sod, open to all—J. W. Caldwell, North Gower; Robt. McCormick, Russell; Colin Thomson, North Gower; C. B. Armstrong, North Gower.

Walking Plow, single furrow, plain in sod, open — Fay Shaver, Chesterville; Ivan Eamon, Wales, who also secured the special prize for the best crown and best finish open only to plowmen in West Stormont; W .W. Henry, Berwick.

Walking plow, jointer in sod, open—Gordon Carson, North Gower; Roy Shaver, Finch, who also won prize for crown and finish for plowmen in West Stormont; J. W. Paul, Crysler; Percy Sadler, North Gower; K. W. Walker, Berwick.

Walking plow, plain in sod, open only to residents in West Stormont who have never won a first prize at a match before other than in a boy's class — Arnold Watson, Lunenburg, who won prize for best crown; Claude Meldrum, Berwick; Freeman Miller, Berwick; Walter Woods, Lunenburg, who won the prize for best finish.

Walking plow, single furrow, plain in sod, for boys under 18, residents of West Stormont — Melville Ouderkirk, who won best crown and best finish prize; Beverley Meldrum, Berwick.

Walking plow, no handling, single furrow in sod, plain or jointer, open—L. Crites, Richmond; Fred Eamon, of Wales, who won best crown and finish, open to West Stormont: Clare Leitch, Cornwall; Wilfred Carson, of North Gower.

Tractor plow in sod, open — Raymon Beehler, Crysler, best crown, Aden Casselman, Berwick, best finish; Elwyn Pollock, Berwick; Bernard Beehler, Crysler; Bruce McIntosh, of Berwick; E. H. Conklin, Prescott; A. R. Conklin, Prescott.

Special.

Best plowed land — Fay Shaver, Chesterville.

Best ins and outs—Fay Shaver.

Oldest plowman—Robt. McCormick, aged 51 years.

Youngest Plowman — Melville Ouderkirk, Berwick, 17 years.

Junior Farmer's special—Fred Eamon, Wales.

Judges—Plowing, Colonel J. J. Duffus, M.P., Peterborough; Horses, Robt. McNaught, Summerston; Phil Casselman, Finch.

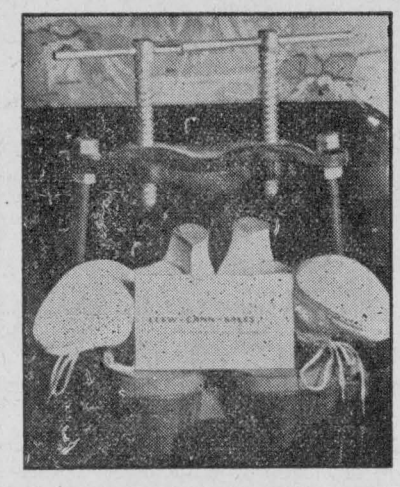

Members of the Women's Institute provided an excellent menu for the banquet in the evening, in Berwick Hall. The chair was occupied by Ivan Eamon, Wales, vice president, in the absence of the president, Dougal McMillan, Berwick. Speakers were Geo. Pollock, reeve, Berwick; Colonel J. J. Duffus, Peterborough; Herbert W. Graham, agricultural representative, Morrisburg, who presented the prizes.

A NEW SERIAL COMPLETE IN THREE ISSUES OF WHICH THIS IS THE FIRST INSTALMENT.

The Tweed Coat - - -

SHE WAS very gentle and very quiet. Indeed, you would have been surprised at some of the books she read.

"I like books," she once told herself, "that make the breath come faster; books that lift you out of yourself and throw you all around."

You wouldn't have thought it if you had known her only by her name and appearance. Her name was Miss Abby Bronson, of Bronson's Cove—a village consisting of a store, a church and a dozen houses, near the Connecticut shore of Long Island Sound—and she belonged to the D. A. R. and was always picked upon by the central committees of New London whenever a drive was organized that took in the southern counties. But if you had known that her forefathers had not only been ministers, but had been captains and whalers as well, with at least one generation carrying on a snappy side line of privateering against the peace and majesty of King George III you might have guessed that this had something to do with her choice of current literature.

Adventure — that was what Miss Abby craved between her book covers; adventure and action, with a heavy villain thrown in for good measure; a villain who was always sure to get beaned before he was through. And if the hero was a private, say, she didn't think any the worse of him for that; or if he killed a few of the cardinal's men in fair duels; or even if now and then whole countrysides trembled and babies crawled under the beds at the mere mention of his name.

"If Henry only had a bit of that in him," she sometimes told herself with a touch of wistfulness, "he'd get along a whole lot better than he does now."

At the time our story opens, she was thirty-five years old; and a party of tourists, passing her flivver in the road, winked at one another, and one of them said, "Did you ever see such a precious little old maid in all your life?"

And, truth to tell, Miss Abby did look a bit thoughtful that afternoon as she turned her car out of the Bronson Road and headed for New London.

On the seat beside her were a number of papers tied together with ribbon—among them a printed prospectus of the Pan-Oriental Oil and Rubber Company and a letter addressed in Miss Bronson's own writing to that same company, and stamped by the Post Office Department, "Fraud Order. Return to Sender."

"I'm sure there's some mistake though," she told herself as she jogged along. "He had such a good face. And if Henry just writes them a letter on his legal letterhead ——"

It was a quarter to five when she reached New London and turned up State Street—an hour which she had chosen in the hope that she and Henry might have dinner together and go to a movie before she started back home.

"But at that, I'll probably have to drop him a hint," she thought as she climbed the stairs and rapped upon a door which bore the sign, "Henry J. Farnsworth, Attorney."

"Come in!" cried a deep voice inside, after a pause which might be described as ponderous.

Miss Abby did two tricks then which she had gleaned from literature. She bit her lips to make them red, and then rubbed her cheeks to make them pink, and then—feeling that quickening of the breath which was always like the wine of life to her — she opened the door and quietly stepped inside.

II

IT WAS a large, old-fashioned office in which she found herself; but for all its size and length of life, there was an unmistakable flavour of failure about it. The safe in the corner, for instance, was too small for prosperity; and one could see that the name of the previous owner had been painted out and "Henry J. Farnsworth" lettered in its place. And instad of overlooking the street, the windows opened on a bricked-in court—an office without anteroom or offspring—no businesslike beauty tapping industriously at her typewriter—no boy to rise from his interrupted labours of punching holes in summonses and complaints and trying to look as though he were studying law. And the railway map of the United States upon the wall—that was clearing a hang-over from a former tenant; and so were the cupboards and possibly the old-fashioned copying press in the corner. In fact, only the desk looked successful — an opulent, flat-topped affair in dull oak; but if you had been there, you might have guessed that the effort to acquire the desk hadn't been far from exhausting. At least the chair didn't match it, but was an ancient swivel effect in imitation walnut, and it had a decided list to starboard whenever relieved of its human ballast.

And yet, again if you had been there you might have thought that the occupant of the chair could easily have graced a better office; that far less likely looking lights of the law had whole bevies of beauties tapping away like so many bright-eyed woodpeckers in Athenian groves; whole schools of boys to bob up before you in the outer passage and bar the way to the inner precincts. For even when he was seated in the walnut whatnot, one could see that Henry J. Farnsworth, Attorney, was not only tall but was well calculated to impress, having the Websterian forehead and that austere touch of dignity which is generally associated with those who have rubbed the back of fortune and have acquired the golden palm. High forehead under an arch of hair, dark brows and rather sombre eyes, firm chin and tightly closed lips; and having learned that last item of the catalogue, you may possibly wonder whether this was the reason why Henry in his fortieth year had been outdistanced by many a legal chatterbox who had not yet turned twenty. All his life he had practiced that silence is golden, so that now, when he tried to spread a little silver, he generally found that his tongue was stuck behind his teeth and that younger squirts of the law with the gift of gab were putting it all over him.

"Hello," he said, gravely rising when Abby entered and shifting one of the other chairs for her.

"Hello, Henry," she said in a low voice, her breath still coming fast as she drew near to him.

But he neither strongly crushed her in his arms nor held her hand and muttered in trembling tones, "if you only knew how good it is to see you!"

Instead—he kissed her—kissed her, it might be said, legally, on her cheek, looking all the time as though he were thinking of the definition of "torts" and the time required to file demurrers in an action in the Supreme Court.

So, seeing this was all, Miss Abby sat down, her breathing now nearly normal again, and told of her experience with the Pan-Oriental Oil and Rubber Company. Henry listened austerely; and after he had read the papers, he briefly delivered himself:

"Guess you've been stuck," said he. "I'll look it up—these people, I mean —and let you know in a few days for sure."

She would probably have defended her judgment more eloquently if it hadn't been for the manner of Henry's dictum — which might have reminded you of a pail of cold water thrown on a robin. So, bit by bit, her chirping grew feebler.

"How did you come to do it?" asked Henry, again speaking austerely when she had quite shut up.

"Because I needed the money so," she said. "The Bronson church has got to have a new steeple, and we're 'way behind in our foreign missions, and I've got the loveliest idea of fixing up the old Pennypacker place and making it a sort of a camp for city children—you know—one of the fresh air funds. And—and ——"

She didn't finish that, because, you see, she couldn't very well tell him she had invested her own seven thousand in the Pan-Oriental Oil and Rubber Company, hoping that in a few months —perhaps even in a few weeks—she would be able to go to Henry and say, "You, dear, loyal, faithful old thing, you, waiting for me all these years because you don't feel that you are making money enough yet to get married on! See this fortune which I have made — through a miraculous stranger who was guided by Providence to my door- Well, now there is more than enough for both of us; so please don't let's wait any longer, dear, because every year now I am getting a year older; and if we don't look out, we shall wait so long that—well, you know what I mean."

So instead of saying that, she said, "Well, anyhow, I hope it'll turn out all right. I don't know why, but I do not feel the least bit worried." And perhaps to chide him, because he did look so dour and quiet, she said quite gaily, "It hasn't taken my appetite either. I think I'll have dinner in the city tonight for a change."

Of course he asked her then to have dinner with him; and later, as she had hoped, they went to a movie. But not once all evening did Henry make her breath come faster; not even in the darkened theatre did he once touch her hand or even lean over so that her shoulder touched his in that heartwarming contact which has been known to lovers since long before the human race could sing or speak.

"Poor Henry," thought Miss Abby as she rolled for home alone, along toward half-past even. "He seems so worried lately, and so awfully quiet. And when he paid for the dinner, I noticed he only had a few dollars left. Of course he's always been quiet, like a nice big St. Bernard; but tonight—oh, I don't know, he didn't even wag his tail!"

A dark thought, and a rather dreadful thought, came to her then—one of those thoughts which sometimes come to daughters of Eve when they first begin to picture themselves as left on the shelf.

"I wonder if it was because of the money," she thought, staring ahead into the darkness. "I wonder if—if I have lost it—if that's going to make any difference to him!"

In the uncertain light of the car, her face looked pinched, as though one of the gentler masks of the tragedy had been slipped over it. It was at that moment that she noticed the car that was stopped by the side of the road ahead.

"Spooners," she told herself. "M'm —I'd like to see Henry."

She left the thought there, her attention attracted by a man who stepped out from behind the other car and lifted up his hand in mute appeal for her to stop.

"Like fun I will!" thought little Miss Abby, drawing from current literature and opening the throttle wide. "You may get a man to stop; but you won't get me!"

But just then, the flivver swerving a little, her headlights shone full upon the man in the road, and she saw that one of his arms hung by his side, the hand streaked with red; caught, too, the pallor of his face, the look in his eyes.

"Of course if you're hurt ——" she thought. And putting on both of her brakes, she stopped—stopped just in front of the man in the road—stopped warily for all that, with her engine running and ready to start it if anything looked like a trap.

III

HE WAS a youngish man—the man with the stain on his hand—that is to say, he was about thirty-five, which, you may remember, was Miss Abby's age too. Moreover, he was tall, dressed in a tweed coat and flannel trousers of a rather precious cut, and a Panama hat woven as fine as a piece of linen. He was standing, half leaning, against one of his front fenders, the light of Miss Abby's car falling well upon him; and underneath his coat she noticed was a green and gray sweater—a lightweight affair with a zigzag pattern — while his buckskin shoes, more dimly seen, had those rakish lines which are vaguely reminiscent of the yachtsman—toe caps cut like fish's tails and side leathers escalloped into waves.

There was also in his features a faint hint of the sea—blonde hair, such as might once have crowned a viking, a keen chin like the cutwater of a cruiser, and an aquiline nose which looked as though it had often smelled the weather when the sea was running wild. His car, she also noticed, was a Penguin Twelve, the length of its hood suggested the speed and the power within.

"I beg your pardon, madam," he said, taking off his hat and swaying a little, "but I wonder if—if you could get me to a doctor. I—you see, I've been hurt."

His voice sounded thick, his words now and then almost unintelligible; and although they were on the lonely stretch of road that led from the main highway to the Cove, Miss Abby straightway abandoned all suspicions of a trap. For one thing, she had just noticed the steady drip-drip which was falling from the injured man's sleeve; and not only that, but there was something in his manner, in the pathetic politeness with which he had removed his hat before he spoke, which had gone straight to her heart.

"Why, of course I will," she said, opening the door and stepping out; and thinking there had been an accident, she continued, "What have you done? Cut yourself on the glass?"

"No," he said. "I think I'm shot. Some—somebody trying to hold me up, but I got away."

"They are doing that on the Shore Road every once in a while," she nodded. "That's one reason I was in two minds about stopping to help you when I saw you signal."

"Two—two cars went by—wouldn't stop."

"Well, in a way, of course, you can't blame them, can you?" she gently asked. "But, gracious, if you'd stood here much longer ——"

By that time she had seen more clearly how badly he had been hurt—had seen, moreover, that she must work quickly or he might soon be beyond any doctor's power to help him.

"We've got to stop it bleeding," she said. "Let me help you take your coat off and we'll put a bandage on."

The coat slipped easily from his sholders, and the door of her own car being open, Miss Abby threw it on the back seat. She rolled back the sleeve of his sweater then and uncovered a wicked-looking furrow that stretched from his wrist to his elbow.

"We need something long for this," she said. "Now wait a moment, please, and don't look."

Turning her back to him, she tore off the bottom hem of her slip—a stout wide band of silk—and was soon winding it as tightly as she could pull it and finally splitting the end of the bandage and tying a surgeon's knot.

"There!" she said. "That's stopping it, see?"

"You're awfully — good," he said, more thickly than before. "Two—two others. They wouldn't stop."

"Now I'll help you in my car," she said, "and we'll go to Stonington. There's a doctor there and you'll soon be all right. But wait a minute; do you want to lock your own car first? Where are your keys? I'll do it."

"Never mind," he said. "Hole in gas tanfl, I think. Anyhow she—she stopped ——"

He was obviously growing weaker; so without delaying further she helped him in her car by the side of the driver's seat and then slipping under the wheel herself she stepped on the pedal and they started for Stonington.

"Are you all right?" she anxiously asked, as the flivver gained speed. "Are you comfortable?"

"I—you ——" he said in a sleepy voice.

He was beginning to lurch a little, though, as if he didn't have the strength to sit straight; and after a few moments' hesitation, Miss Abby resolutely put her right arm around his shoulders to hold him steady.

"If Henry could only see me now!" she couldn't help thinking.

And then all at once it came to her —the thrill of the adventure—an adventure which needn't take second place to anything which she had either read or seen on the screen. Midnight and a holdup. A wounded man, and the Pharisees who wouldn't stop. And then she— daring much, perhaps too much, stopping on a lonely road, giving first aid, and now riding through the night with her arm around a romantic-looking man with a keen chin who might have died if it hadn't been for her.

"And the funny part of it is," she thought, "just before I saw him, I was thinking to myself that not once tonight had Henry moved me, not once had he made my breath come faster. And then all at once ——"

The injured man settled his head drowsily against her shoulder, one of his hands unconsciously patting her arm.

"Mamma's li'l baby," he murmured. "Mama's li'l brown-eyed lover ——"

"He's delirious," thought Miss Abby and perhaps that was why she tightened her arm around him.

"I love you — love you," he murmured. "Nicest—beau'fuelst — ever lived ——"

"Oh, if I can only get him better!" she thought, with shining eyes.

IV

DOCTOR GRINNELL didn't think much of it—being roused out of his comfortable bed for an accident case, accident cases being proverbially good pay; the patient, as a rule, being more interested in getting damages than paying for the pleasure of being sewed up in a doctor's chair.

"Accident?" he grumbled down the speaking tube. "Who is this?"

"This is Miss Bronson—Abby Bronson—and a man's been shot. I found him by the side of the road and I've got him here in my car."

"All right," grumbled the good physician, knowing quite well by that time that he would never get a cent for it. "I'll be down in a minute."

"Who is it?" asked his wife in a sleepy voice, curious, but not wanting to get too wide-awake.

"Abby Bronson," said Doc.

"What's she want?"

The doctor made a professional jest meaning to get a bit of fun out of it if he got nothing more.

"What?" demanded Mrs. Grinnell, sitting up in bed, wide awake in a moment.

"Well, anyhow, she's got a man in her car," said the good physician. "I'll tell you about it when I come up."

Miss Abby had driven into the doctor's driveway, so that when he opened the door and turned on the porch light he was able to see his prospective patient through the window of the flivver.

"What's the matter with him?" he asked, opening the car door. "Unconscious?"

"Pretty well, I guess."

"M'm—let's feel his pulse."

He seemed to have trouble finding it.

"Shot, you said?" he asked.

"Yes; he was held up. There's an awful gash, beginning at his wrist. I tied it up as well as I could."

"You were with him when he was shot?"

"No, no!" said little Miss Abby hastily. "I was coming back from New London and he signalled me from the side of the road."

"I see. Well, you seem to have tied him up good, and he'll have to go to a hospital anyhow. So why not run him over to Westerly? It'll only take a few minutes; and I'll phone ahead and they'll have everything ready for you. Then if they have to probe for the bullet, they can do it a whole lot better than I can here."

Miss Abby briskly nodded, proud she had made a good job of her bandage and anxious now to get her patient to the hospital as quickly as she could.

"Thank you ever so much, doctor," she said, slipping back under the wheel again.

So with one thing and another, it was pretty late when little Miss Bronson finally reached her home at Bronson's Cove that night. At the hospital they had discovered that the injured man had a second wound—the bullet that had plowed his arm evidently entered the side of his chest as well—and she had waited in the office until the nurse had told her that he was resting comfortably—"everything considered, of course." Indeed, it was after two o'clock when Miss Abby ran her flivver into the miniature garage back of her house, and she was about to turn out the lights when she caught sight of something unusual in the back seat of the car.

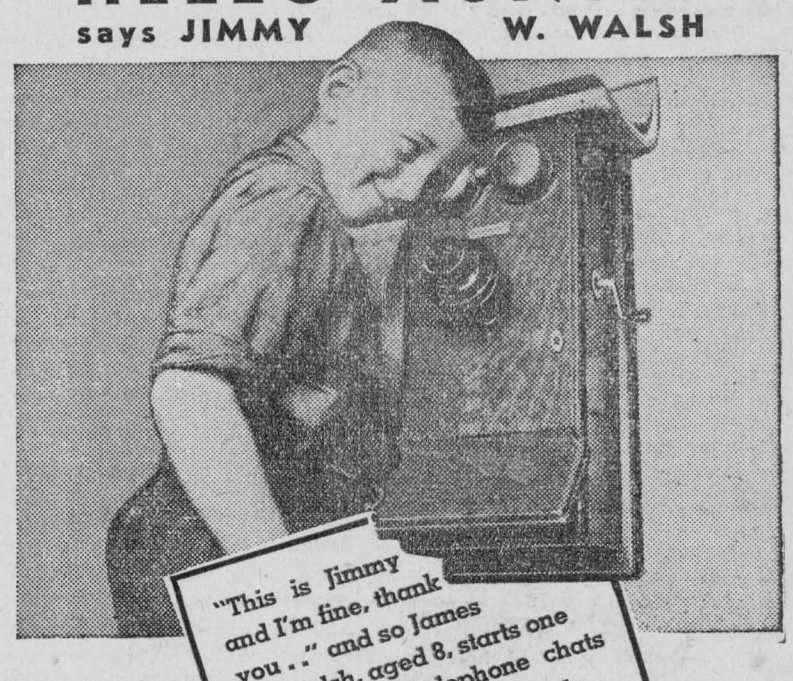

"That's funny," she thought. "What is it?"

She opened the door of the car and reached it out; and the moment she saw it, she knew what it was—even though she was holding it upside down. It was the tweed coat which the wounded man had been wearing when she had first seen him—the coat which she had taken off so that she could bandage his arm; and just as she was reaching over for the collar to hold it properly, a sumptuous-looking wallet of pigskin tumbled out of an inside pocket — a sumptuous-looking wallet of pigskin with corners of polished gold.

"HELLO AUNTIE"
says JIMMY W. WALSH

"This is Jimmy and I'm fine, thank you . . ." and so James W. Walsh, aged 8, starts one of his many telephone chats with his Aunt in Strathroy.

"Once my husband preferred to go in town to see people — but now does all that on the telephone," says Mrs. Walsh. For $2.05 a month the Walsh's have a private line, occasionally call a brother in Toronto on Long Distance. "It came in mighty handy last winter when my mother was sick. We had to call the doctor several times."

No farm should be without a telephone. It's "mighty handy" to call relations and neighbours — and quick aid if need be!

Problems of Student Flyer Require Courage and Skill

R. H. "Dick" Fawcett Speaks to Rotarians of His Experiences While Learing To Fly His Plane.

Members of Chesterville's Rotary Club learned of the trials of a beginner in aviation when Richard H. Fawl cett, of Dunbar, spoke to the club on his experiences in aviation, at the Tuesday evening luncheon. "Dick" is a licensed pilot and owns his own plane which is often seen circling over the countryside. He learned his flying at the Ottawa Flying Club, having started his lessons just about two years ago.

At the opening of the meeting the members were asked by President Dr. S. H. Hutt, to observe a minute of silence in memory of Dr. H. H. Casselman, whose death occurred Monday in a Montreal hospital. Dr. Casselman had been a valued member of the club since its organization in 1938, having been chairman of the Crippled Children's Committee since the club received its charter.

The speaker told of the routine an aspiring flyer is put through at the flying club and told of the course of instruction until the pilot's license is finally obtained when the examiner of the Civil Aviation Branch is satisfied the pilot is qualified. At the close of his talk, Mr. Fawcett was besieged with questions from club members, which he answered to complete a very interesting talk.

Following a strict medical examination, a student pilot is taken up to 1,000 feet by his instructor and given control of the plane and told to keep the plane level. The controls of an airplane are very sensitive, said the speaker and the beginner usually finds that keeping a ship on an even keel is not the simplest thing to do.

The second lesson takes the student up to 2,000 feet when he practices gliding and climbing and making level turns. When he has completed this, the instructor shows him how to take off and land. Taking-off is much simpler than landing, said the speaker, who told how he bounced his ship on his early trials when the grounds of the Ottawa club were being torn up for the building of the Trans Canada runways.

When the day comes for his first solo flight, the student is watched by his instructor from the ground who criticizes and offers suggestions to correct errors. The tests for a pilot's license come after seven hours of solo flying. This consists of written tests and a stiff test of flying ability.

The student must make four landings from 1500 feet with his motor cut off and stop within 150 feet of a designated mark. Then he must go up to 5,000 feet and land within 300 feet of a specified spot, again without the use of his motor on the way down.

One of the stiffest jobs, is doing five figure of eights around points set about 200 yards apart. To do this, the student has to "set his plane on its wing tips" said the flyer.

Practising tail spins is about the the most gruelling experience for the green flyer. He must shut off his engine and when his plane loses flying speed and falls into a spin he must pull her out after four turns, and not do it too abruptly "or he'll leave his wings up in the air," declared Mr. Fawcett.

The speaker reviewed his experiences since obtaining his own machine which is a high wing monoplane with seats for two and bears the identification letters CF-AWF. He told of a forced landing in a hay field near Vernon while flying to Ottawa this summer when caught in a wind storm and told also of a flight to Kingston which he made above the clouds almost all the way and was treated to a beautiful sight as the sun shone on the cloud banks below him.

O. L. King introduced the speaker, who owns the Dunbar cheese factory, and President S. H. Hutt expressed the thanks of the club.

Leon Marcellus presided over the meeting, and welcomed H. E. Wales on a visit to the club, and also Rev. R. C. Tait who has been in hospital, and Jas. Smith on his return from his vacation.

Cass—Fyke.

A charming wedding was solemnized this afternoon at two o'clock at Holy Trinity Anglican church by Rev. J. A. L. Ellacott who united in marriage Gladys Jean Fyke, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fyke, and Ross Stirtan Cass, second son of Mr. and Mrs. George Cass, both of Chesterville.

The church was prettily decorated with fall bloom. The wedding music was played by Mrs. Earle Gordon and during the service two hymns, "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden" and "O Perfect Love" were sung.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was dressed in a street length tailored frock of wine coloured satin backed crêpe, with her gloves, shoes and hat of the same shade. She carried a bouquet of roses and fern.

The bridesmaid, Miss Irene Hill, of Ottawa, was dressed in a street length dress of crushed grape velvet, with accessories to match, and she carried a bouquet of roses.

Mr. Geo. Olsen was best man, and Mr. Chas Collingridge was usher.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, where a buffet luncheon was served to the immediate relatives.

The young couple will reside in Chesterville.

Dillabough—Craik.

A very quiet wedding took place on Saturday afternoon at 4.30 o'clock at the United church parsonage, in Morewood, when Olive M. Craik, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bogart, was married to Murray Dillabough, only son of Mrs. Annie Dillabough and the late Alex. Dillabough, Rev. John Macaskill performing the ceremony.

The parsonage was nicely decorated with fall flowers. Mrs. Jean Ballantyne was the bridesmaid, and Mr. Jas. Cheney acted as best man.

After the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Dillabough left on a motor trip to Syracuse, N.Y., and other points, and on their return they will reside in Morewood.

Workman—Durant.

The wedding took place Saturday afternoon in MacKay United church, Ottawa, of Miss Glenna Durant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ross Durant, of Winchester, to Mr. Edgar Melvin Durant, of Ottawa, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Workman, of Mountain. Rev. John MacKay officiated

The couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Cornell, of Iroquois, and Mr. Robert Durant, of Mountain, was an usher.

The bride's costume was of pine green wool, with a long-sleeved jacket trimmed with black Persian lamb. She wore black accessories and a corsage of Johnna Hill roses and lily-of-the-valley.

Mrs. Cornell was in tan shade wool in suit effect, with brown accessories, and a corsage bouquet of Talisman roses.

In Honour of Today's Bride.

Friday evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fyke, a miscellaneous shower was held in honour of their daughter, Gladys, whose marriage takes place this afternoon. A short address was read by Mrs. Rene Smith and the presentation of a daintily decorated basket of gifts was made by Mrs. Aden Bowman and Mrs. Garnet Fyke. Miss Fyke made a very pleasing reply. Later refreshments were served.

On Monday evening, a group of young girls held a kitchen shower at the home of Mr. and Mrs. August Olsen in honour of Miss Gladys Fyke. An address was read by Miss Emily Olsen and a wagon with a large basket of gifts was drawn into the room by little Miss Shirley Froats and presented to the bride-to-be, who then graciously thanked her friends. Lunch was served and games and dancing were enjoyed by the girls.
