The November meeting of Elma W.I. was held in the church hall, Dunbar. The meeting was opened by the Ode and Mary Stewart Collect, with the vice-president, Mrs Egerton Barkley, in the chair, assisted by the secretary, Mrs George McIntosh.

The roll call was answered by 23 members. The business and correspondence was read including a letter from Geo. Challies, of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Committee, asking for articles to be placed in a museum along the new shore-line of the St Lawrence.

A rummage and food sale will be held in Community Hall in the near future.

A resume of the life of Agnes McPhail was given by Miss Gertrude Barkley.

KEMPTVILLE VOTERS FAVOUR SALE OF LIQUOR, BEER

Longtime opponents of the retail sale of liquor and beer in Kemptville are ready to accept the convincing decision of voters there last week to swing Kemptville "wet."

Rev W. A. Bowler, minister of the Pentecostal Church, who headed the "Citizens League Opposed to Liquor Outlets," said:

"We did all that we could to prevent the change and now that the people have spoken we are going to make the best of it."

He was particularly gratified at the heavy turnout which saw nearly all of the 1,076 boters go to the polls.

Reversing their close decision of three years ago, voters polled 612 to 381 in favour of the sale of liquor at a government store and 597 to 383 for establishment of a retail beer store. A 60 per cent vote was required to legalize the sales. Sale of beer or liquor by the glass was not on the ballot.

Shop at Home — It Pays

Just a little more than four weeks remain before Christmas will be on us. In that time many thousands of extra dollars, carefully saved in some cases, will be spent to make the season joyful and happy. It is the time of presents and remembrances and in nearly every case costs someone some money.

We like to think the stores of Chesterville offer as good or perhaps a little better line of merchandise as any town in the eastern end of the province. Variety is great enough that in nearly every case a shopper can shop at home and fill his or her needs. All through the year day by day needs are filled by your merchandiser; year after year he has the disheartening experience of seeing many of his customers troop to the cities of Cornwall or Ottawa and buy the same merchandise he offers, at the same price, just because habit dictates that city stores must have a better selection of goods, at a certain time of the year.

Week by week the Record carries the advertising of the merchants of Chesterville. It has done so for the past 62 years and has grown with them to the point where our columns carry four times the advertising they used to. Advertising must be paid for and evidently it is because we are still in business; the wherewithal to pay is made in the community, and when the businessman can afford to double his ad budget, it must mean he has a message that is getting across.

If your day by day purchases throughout the year demonstrate a belief in the ability of your favourite merchandiser that he can supply your needs, give him a chance at the golden harvest of holiday time. If he can supply it, he will; if you get it at home, you are helping yourself in your own home town—not the impersonal shareholders of a mail order house or a big-city department store.

The World As It Is

It is a sad fact that even the most altruistic theories do not always work out as we might hope, or as our theories might suggest, says Stelco Flashes this month. Recently Dr Clarence L. Barber, associate professor of economics at the University of Manitoba, rather startled the annual meeting of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce by arguing sturdily for a reduction of trade bariers. Indeed, he contended that "even in circumstances where foreign competition threatened to wipe out the Canadian industry entirely, it may be desirable in the interests of efficiency to let this take place. If certain manufactured goods can be produced more cheaply in other countries it may be in our interest to buy them there and to shift our activities to other goods."

Surely Professor Barber must have been speaking of some economic utopia of his own dreaming where friendly folk traded goods for goods on even terms for the benefit of a completely united world free of enmities and varying ideologies and social prejudices.

Unfortunately we cannot pretend to be part of such a world, nor is there any immediate suggestion that we might be, and to operate merely "in the interests of efficiency" might end with the country with the high living scale changing places with one of a lesser scale. In the interests of efficiency we might turn our atomic development to Soviet Russia, which presumably, with the aid of indoctrinated scientists and huge resources of slave or similar grades of labour, might be able to produce comparable goods at a lower price. We might turn over most of our manufacturing to the Germans or the Japanese who, along with technical skills, have a pool of low-cost labour, which, happily, we cannot equal. Even the teeming millions of China or Russia could possibly be taught to produce wheat and other grains at a price we could never hope to match. When we come to study such distant possibilities we must recognize the possibility that with too much emphasis on doing things "in the interests of efficiency" we could price ourselves out of our world.

In the interests of common sense, then, might it not be wiser to admit that we are not one great, generous-hearted family? We know the argument that we must buy from others if we would sell to them. But might we not argue in return that foreign counties that will not buy our wheat, or other products, at our price, should not expect to have it made easy for them to compete with our industries with commodities produced under conditions we cannot hope to meet?

Parks Commission Plans Colonial Hamlet

A small colonial hamlet made up of historic houses and other buildings in the path of St. Lawrence project flood waters will be located on Crysler's Farm, east of Morrisburg. The site is the locale of an historic battle during the war of 1812-14.

Details of the centre have been disclosed by George H. Challies, chairman of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Parks Commission. It will be a part of a 1,500-acre park which will be completely equipped for recreation. A dominant feature of the village will be the Crysler's Farm monument, which will have to be moved from its present site to higher ground.

T. A. Heinrich, curator of the Royal Ontario Museum, has promised the development commission assistance in establishing a museum to house historic relics.

Many relics are needed for plans are to furnish a home completely with pioneer items and equip a barn with implements of the era. An early blacksmith shop is planned, to be honoured in a log building. Some of the salvaged houses will serve as administration buildings for the St. Lawrence Parks Commission.

A colonial style church is planned, where non-denominational services will be held during the tourist season. However, this will have to be a replica, perhaps, built of field stones from historic buildings being demolished for the seaway. A study was made of rebuilding Trinity Church in the path of the flood waters, two miles from Crysler's Farm, but it has been decided to keep the church active and it will be moved to a site near the centre.

The colonial community will have its own graveyard containing the tombstones of graves in the flooded area. Included will be the monument to Sir James Whitney, premier of Ontario from 1905 to 1914.

Native Indian relics will also be displayed, if plans are carried through. Evidences of early Iroquois camps have been seen in the area to be flooded. Ontario artists have been commissioned to do paintings to be hung in the centre. These will be of various rapids in the area so a permanent record of the river before its changes can be kept.

Light Along The Way

The greatest problem that faces man is the problem of sin. Sin is an insidious, ever-present thing that the Bible rightly likens to a serpent. Reptile-like it creeps into life until, unbeknown to him, man finds that the good he assumes has been in him, is gone, consumed by the evil.

Sin has been variously defined, and no definition is completely satisfactory. The contention that it is anything in the life of man—thought, word or deed—that in any way adversely affects his relations with God and his fellow man, is perhaps the most inclusive definition. According to this point of view the hand, the tongue, and even the mind, must be controlled lest, wittingly or unwittingly, they commit evil.

This suggests that man has sufficient control of himself to avoid sin. Unfortunately this is a delusion. The very suggestion is sinful, for it implies that man has the ability to judge between good and evil—and that was the sin that Adam suffered for! Man has some knowledge of good and evil, and this he must exercise to the best of his ability, but in the sense that he sets himself up as a judge of good and evil he sins; for this is the prerogative of God only.

Therefore as well as his reason man needs faith with which to fight sin. He must find God, and put his trust in Him. He must recognize the demands God makes upon him, however they may reach him; and follow in His way whatever the cost, if he is to find any freedom from sin. Reasonable though this may seem it is the most difficult thing for man to accept. Man carries with him the delusion that his way is God's way, and he commits evil long before he realizes that he has been blind to reality and that his blindness is of his own creation.

The only choice for him, therefore, is to recognize himself for what he is, a sinner; and to come humbly into the presence of God seeking the help that He so willingly offers. Of what worth man is to God God alone knows, but there is no doubt that the meek and lowly in heart are among those whom He blesses. Somehow they find worth in His sight, and the means to follow the footsteps of Him who was without sin among men.

CUTE SONGSTRESS — Joyce Hahn has been in show business since she was four, touring with her family in the West on a rough grind of honky-tonks, and in New York with Major Bowes. For some years now she has been heard on "A Date with Fred Hill" on CBC Dominion, and is now featured on television's "Cross Canada Hit Parade." This variety programme has Austin Willis as emcee, Bert Niosi's orchestra, vocalist Wally Koster and a well-knwn guest. The series is weekly on the CBC-TV network.

TWO-HEADED TURTLE HAS TOUGH TIME

Ditto doesn't agree with the old saw that two heads are better than one.

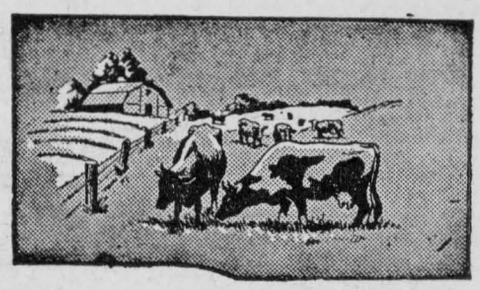

Ditto is a two-headed turtle at the Boston Museum of Science. He finds life a bit bewildering.

"His independent brains will never learn to co-operate" said Norman D. Harris, director of education at the museum. "They will instinctively continue making independent decisions that can never be efficiently carried out by a common body."

A little girl found ditto on the shore of Sandy Pond at Ayer, Mass., last May Day and brought him to the museum.

After studying Ditto and his eating habits, museum staffers worked out a technique of simultaneous hand feeding. And now Ditto, the size of a quarter, gets his meal worm mash rolled in bone meal three times a week.

FRENDLEE FARM CHATS

By Lillian Allison

Sunday night we were invited out after church to watch TV. And of course we accepted. Since we're still among the minority who haven't got one of those magic boxes of our own TV for us is still quite a novelty.

"If we hurry," our hostess said, "we'll be home in time for some of the Ed Sullivan Show." So we hurried. Some guy was spouting out something that seemed to be a monologue when Mrs Hostess switched on the power. It was funny too but by some fluke we got only his voice for a while and he finished speaking about the time his picture flicked in.

A number by one of the old-time vaudeville performers was fine, even though he did have to sneak a pretty girl into the act for some unknown reason. But I'll forgive him for that.

As a final number Mr Sullivan introduced a disc jockey and some talent from Harlem.

Now I dare say some of you who saw the show think I'm using the word "talent" rather loosely. But I'm not. The act required talent. The only thing I regret is that those coloured folk hadn't done with their talent what the man in the Bible did with his—buried it somewhere.

Of course, I realize I was born about twenty years too soon. But I'm thankful for it. I'm glad I never developed a taste for all the rock-and-roll jive that those Harlem people presented there on TV. We saw the original "Tweedle-dee" girl. We saw a young coloured chap with an electric guitar sing in what must be the language of Lower Slobovia. And all the time he emitted his painful cries three or four coloured guys in the background shook things and blew horns and practically turned themselves inside out. A show like that can set music back about 4,000 years and for me I wish they'd take it back to the African jungle where it belongs and where civilized people won't have to listen to it.

Well about the time the sounds of this wild, primitive rhythm died away and we got our ears readjusted the next programme was on. It was "The Devil to Pay" and for my part I'd have gladly paid him and left him off the screen. But the acting was good even if the plot was trash.

We decided to stay and see Shirley Harmer. She's a cute, little kid—sings well too. But something I've often wondered is this: On TV do they ever let someone with a good voice stand and sing a song, Do they always have to dance while they sing? Do they always have to have a bevy of long-legged girls and young men ballet or tap while the star tries to get in on the show? Sometime I'd like to see a singer that sang because she had a voice and a song to sing.

We had about decided to come home when the story of Leonardo de Vinci came on. And with the risk of being called a "Long-hair" I'll pronounce that show tops. I enjoyed it thoroughly. It was gratifying to know that it was written by a Canadian, produced by a Canadian and acted by Canadians.

The acting was superb. The settings were beautiful. The story was fresh—original. I watched bug-eyed. The clock went on and on. Without a single commercial we sat an hour as the story of that great painter, engineer, sculptor, philosopher, nature-lover, humanitarian unfolded itself before us. I'll lose an hour of sleep any time to see drama like that.

We'd stayed so long we thought we might as well see the interview with Hon. L. B. Pearson which was scheduled for 11.10. That was good listening too. From the visual side it lacked the glamour of the Harlem show of course, for the camera merely focused on the questioner and Mr Pearson alternately.

But it does a thinking person good to see a programme like that. The information our Minister of External Affairs handed out concerning his impressions of his round-the-world trip was priceless. His opinions of Russian leaders and of conditions in central Asia were of great interest.

And it made us ordinary people think when we realized the burden that men such as Mike Pearson carry. It made us feel pretty grateful when we realized that he carries them on our behalf. Then when we saw the competent, straightforward manner in which our Minister of External Affairs answered the many questions that were fired at him it gave us confidence that our world affairs are in good hands.

You know sometimes I think I wouldn't want a TV set on the farm. Then other times I think it would be wonderful to own one.

Outdoor Roundup

with Joe Foster

It was the late Teddy Roosevelt, history book statesman and one of the greatest hunters and outdoorsmen of the Twentieth Century, who penned this philosophy: "In hunting the finding, killing of game is after all but a part of the whole. The free, self-reliant, adventurous life, with its rugged and stalwart democracy, the wild surroundings, the grand beauty of the scenery, the chance to study the ways and habits of the woodland creatures—all these unite to give the career of the wilderness hunter its peculiar charm."

How Right He Was!

Hunting is not all killing, at least not for the majority of hunters, or so I like to think. Of course there will always be the so-called sportsman, who feels that he can only prove his masculinity by shooting at everything in sight, it doesn't matter what, so long as it moves and has life. This is the fellow that David McCord must have been thinking about a few years ago when he wrote his satiric poem called "The Sportsman." After spending years pursuing every sort of furred and feathered creature, right down to the humble crow.

"Then suddenly, for no conspicuous reason,
He up and shot himself—well out of season."

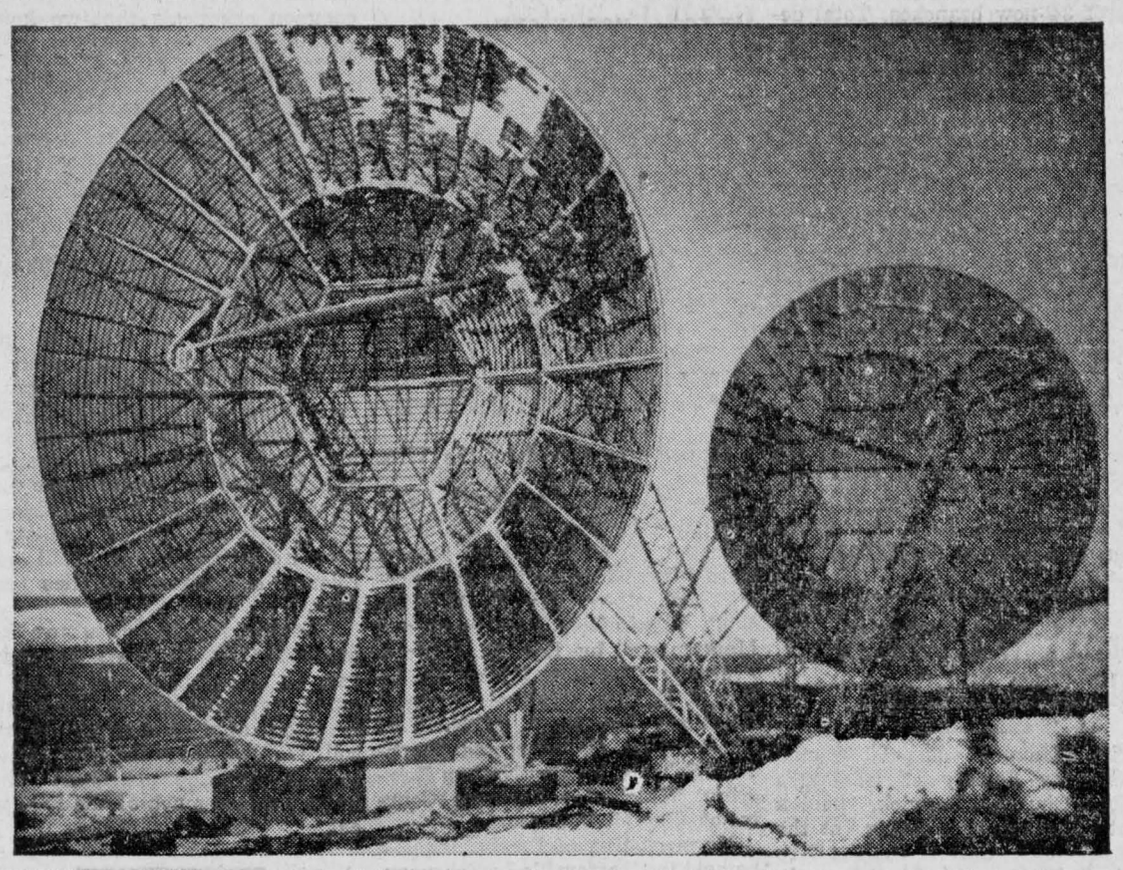

Trophies Aren't Everything

If there's a moral, it is that the end of outdoor recreation is not the kill. It is not the dead bird in the game bag, the moose head dangling its dewlap over the diningroom sideboard, the stuffed duck on the desk in the den. These things have a certain significance as trophies, yet no more than a rare wildflower pressed between the leaves of a book, or a good colour photograph of some beautiful and inaccessable waterfall. For most who live in city or town there is undoubted physical and mental lift in just getting out into the country. Another value of outdoor recreation is the solitude we can find only in wilderness environment. The opportunity to know and enjoy this solitude shrinks steadily for the simple reason that wilderness itself has shrunk almost to the vanishing point. Nor is this due only to population growth and the increased need of human beings to use the land. Even when we discover some bit of untouched wilderness and set it aside for preservation, the instinct to exploit it at once comes to the fore.

Wildland Husbandry

A final value of outdoor recreation is the thing we call wildland husbandry in which is developed the sense of perception and the understanding and appreciation of nature which create something rather than consume it. Compare the satisfaction that comes from making it possible for ten instead of two families of ruffed grouse to be raised in the local woodlot with that which comes from bagging a day's limit. The first involves many things—the willingness to set aside land for food and cover, to learn what constitutes food and cover, to work with your hands providing these things, to understand the COMMUNICATIONS history has been made in Canada's sub-Arctic with the setting up of the world's first full-scale installation of over-the-horizon microwave transmission equipment, using the "tropospheric scatter" principle. The installation, employing huge dish-like antennae such as these, was built by The Bell Telephone Company of Canada's special contract department.

Canadian Experts Make Communications History
Microwave Transmission Equipment Installed in North

Up along the wild and rocky coastline of eastern Canada's sub-Arctic, communications hitsory is being made by a team of Canadian experts working on a vital continental defence project.

According to the November issue of "The Blue Bell," Bell Telephone's employee's magazine, members ofthe company's special contract department have set up the world's first full-scale installation of "tropospheric scatter" microwave transmission equipment. With this installation an accomplished fact, Bell's special contract people are now devoting their energies largely to the Mid-Canada Line.

In this new and advanced concept of over-the-horizon radio relay transmission, antennae resembling giant dishes are used for gathering in the tiny microwaves.

Before the development of over-the-horizon microwave transmission, microwave towers had to be located within line-of-sight—or not more than 30 miles apart— because microwaves do not follow the earth's curvature, and tend to eventually diffuse into space.

On the new "tropospheric scatter" installation, however, Bell crews were able to locate their antennae many times more than the conventional 30 miles apart, because engineers had discovered that, given sufficient power, the microwaves tend to bounce back to earth again in little pieces. The huge dishes can collect enough of these pieces to produce an effective signal—hence the term "scatter."

The voice channels used on this type of installation are so high-grade that two people located a thousand miles apart could converse as though they were in the same room.

"This construction job was no mean challenge," the Blue Bell article discloses. ,'The over-the-horizon transmission principle had been tried out on small test links set up in the southern United States and in our own country. But no one could foresee all the difficulties ahead in setting up and maintaining a high fidelity radio communication system in the frozen north.

"When plans for the project weredrawn up, swift decisions had to be made on slim facts, because our people had little to go on other than the precise paper calculations of the experts. Bulky, book-size files of detailed specifications had to be drawn up, double-checked, transformed into factory-built equipment and transported to the scene of operations in the north.

"Buildings and tower structures had to be completely designed, with the aid of consultants, translated into materials, transported by sea and air to the northern bases, and erected by sub-contractors. Shortly after they had received their contract, the special contract people had moved $10 000.000 worth of construction materials and equipment into the north and were busy setting it up. To get it up there they had the European market scoured for ships available for chartering. They used everything from the d'Iberville, pride of the Government's icebreaker fleet, to small sealers and landing craft, and from flying boxcars to helicopters."

The Bell Company's special contract department is a top-level contractor in defence communications and associated construction for the Trans-Canada Telephone System and the Government of Canada.

Its personnel consists mainly of technicians and engineers recruited from within the Bell, from other telephone companies, or from outside industry. They operate over a sweep of territory stretching from Baffinland and Greenland to the borders of British Columbia.

CANADIAN PLOWMEN ABROAD

by WILL C. BARRIE, Manager 1955 CANADIAN PLOWING TEAM

W. C. Barrie

Ed. Note: W. C. Barrie, of Galt, a past president of the Ontario Plowmen's Association and manager of the Canadian plowing team at the third annual World Plowing Match in Sweden, has sent home on-the-spot reports of his trip with team members Joe Tran, of Claremont, Ont., and Ivan McLaughlin, Stouffville, Ont. Here is the first of his reports.

LIVERPOOL—We never knew we had so many friends in eastern Canada until shortly before we set out on the first leg of our journey, from Toronto to Montreal.

Perhaps I should explain that by "we" I mean our party of five: Joe Tran, who won the 1954 Canadian plowing championship at Ballantrae, Ont.; Ivan McLaughlin, who also qualified for the trip by finishing second; Mrs McLaughlin, Mrs Barrie and myself, who was lucky enough to be appointed team manager.

Ivan McLaughlin

The first indication was a most enjoyable luncheon given for us by Imperial Oil, which was sponsoring the team's trip to the World Plowing Match. The luncheon was held in Toronto, and we met many friends there, new and old.

Next, at Uunion Station, we met a party of York County Council members and their wives, who were just returning from a Canadian Good Roads Association convention at Banff. One of my plowmen, Ivan McLaughlin, who is reeve of Whitchurch and a member of the county council, of course knew them all.

Joe Tran

But the most surprising of the events we had came after we were on our way to Montreal. We thought it would be an uneventful trip, but Joe Tran seemed to have at least one relative —and usually several—waiting at every stop on the way. We kidded Joe a lot about having so many relatives all over the country, but the boxes of chocolates, cakes and other things they brought as gifts were most acceptable to the rest of us, as well as Joe.

At Belleville, Mrs Barrie and I got a special surprise, for we were greeted by our daughter and son and six of our grandchildren.

We arrived in Montreal and were half way to the dock to catch the Empress of Scotland, when J. D. Thomas, who was making the trip as president of the oWrld Plowing Organization, missed his cane and declared he had left it in the station. We had one of our taxis turn back, and after I had searched all over the railway station for the cane, Mr Thomas found he had been sitting on it all the time!

Aboard ship, Ivan, Joe and I left the ladies to handle the unpacking in the cabins and we began a tour of the vessel. Suddenly we saw a number of the crew members pointing excitedly to a man who was swimming in the water beside a boat anchored near by. We were told he had jumped out of a window more than forty feet above the water. After swimming around for a while he climbed a rope ladder thrown him by some sailors on the boat. But no sooner was he on the boat than he dived in again. We figured there must have been some easier way for him to sober up!

On returning to our cabin I was pleased to receive a telegram from one of our popular OPA directors, Robert Campbell, wishing our team every success in Sweden.

The first day on the Empress was quite an event for the whole party because, with the exception of J. D. Thomas, none of us had been on an ocean liner before.

The weather was pleasantly warm, and the colouring of the maples on the river banks was marvellous. As the ship steamed under the bridge at Quebec, the crowd on the top deck held its breath because it looked as if the mast and funnels would be swept off. But we sailed through all right, with what looked to be only a foot or two clearance to spare.

On the second day we awoke to find the waves splashing high over the decks and the passengers walking around like drunken sailors. The water in the ship's swimming pool splashed over the sides and sometimes even spattered the ceiling. We decided to postpone our early morning dip, although one bathing beauty seemed to be enjoying herself in rough water.

Many passengers turned up for breakfast but left in a hurry for the rail. That was the morning I discovered I could still run a hundred yards in 11 seconds flat!

The third and fourth days out were even worse, and we figured hurricane Ione must be following us across the ocean.

It was not until the fifth day that we were back to normal and able to take our meals. By this time most of the officers and first class passengers knew the purpose of our trip, and at dinner that evening, we were served Baked Alaska, a special ice cream treat not shared by the other passengers.

Later that evening the captain gave a party which, I'm sorry to say, ended up with a minor disaster. Just when the party got into full swing, the ship lurched violently to the port side, and the 25 couples who were dancing at the time lost their balance and slid to one side of the room. When order was restored, a lady from New Zealand was found to be unconscious, and several other people were badly shaken up and bruised.

The following day, a Sunday, we attended shipboard church services and saw a movie that night.

The trip up the Clyde the next day was by far the most pleasant part of the ocean journey. Such places as Ailsa Craig or Paddy's Peak—that mountain of solid granite which is the source of curling stones used throughout the world—came to view on the south bank of the Clyde. The Sleeping Warrior, a row of hills resembling an armoured warrior lying on the ground, made a splendid background for some pictures we took on deck.

At Greenock we saw a number of foreign freighters anchored in midstream and Mrs Barrie and I remembered that it was from south of there—at Ayrshire—that our ancestors had come to Canada 125 years before.

Our ancestors, of course, made the trip in a sailing vessel, and I'm told it took them six weeks, during which they suffered all sorts of privations and discomforts. And there we were, after making the same journey—but in the opposite direction—in one week, with all the comforts of a modren hotel—even if the "hotel" did heave and rock considerably at times.

Soon as we were preparing to disembark at Liverpool, to begin the third leg of the journey, to London. Needless to say, both Joe and Ivan were pleased at the prospect of getting their feet onto solid ground again.

CHRONIC WRONG NUMBER ANNOYS HOUSEWIFE

Mrs Constance Cooper, of London, finds it's easier to pretend that her home is a movie theatre than to try to explain it isn't.

The trouble began a year ago when the telephone directory listed a theatre number as WAN-0256—which is Mrs Cooper's number.

Mrs Cooper appealed to the telephone system. Officials were sorry but nothing could be done for at least a year and a half. A new directory would be published then.

Calls continued to pour in.

"I've been summoned from my bed, from my bath, from my garden and my TV set," said Mrs Cooper. "I've been called from my kitchen and meals have been ruined. Then I gave up."

Each week Mrs Cooper looks up the titles of the films the theatre will be showing, jots down the starting times and other pertinent information.

"I find its much easier to recite the information than to try to explain the situation," she sighed, "but it does get tiresome."

One week she answered 200 wrong numbers.

SHE COULD PAY!

A little old lady received treatment for a sore leg at Meadowbrook Hospital recently and was asked if she could pay the $1.50 fee.

"Hand me my suitcase," she directed a nurse.

The little old lady opened the bag, peeled $2 from a $63,000 roll, accepted 50 cents in change and departed.

Hospital authorities withheld her name.

MONKEY BUSINESS

A New Orleans businessman, long at odds with a competitor, turned up at the police station with this complaint:

"It's the limit. You know the kind of things he's been doing all along. Well, it's gone too far now. He's gone and bought a monkey.

"He shaved the monkey's head to make it look like mine. And now he's dressing that monkey to make him look like me!"

The police decided there was nothing they could do about such monkeyshines."

Revives Heroines And Aids Industry

The fragile heroines of old, reputed to have fainted at the slightest provocation, were frequently brought around with a whiff of "smelling salts"—sometimes called spirits of ammonia.

However, one doesn't have to be in the habit of swooning to recognize the pungent odour of ammonia, since it is one of the most common chemicals that we know. In fact, ammonia, alone or in its several compound forms, affects almost everything we use.

Ammonia is by no means a modern discovery. In the middle ages it was obtained by distilling the horns and hoofs of stags—hence its ancient name of "hartshorn." Today, ammonia, is mostly synthetic and is usually made from natural gas or fuel oil.

100,000 tons of ammonia are produced in Canada each year, to be used in products that range from wood pulp to perfume. Housewives keep liquid "household ammonia" on hand as a cleaning agent, while industries use this same chemical in large refrigeration systems. Other industrial uses are in the making of oil, petroleum, explosives, textiles and dyes.

However, it is in agriculture that ammonia has its most important use. It is a major component of many agricultural fertilizers and is often applied directly to the soil. We owe more than we realize to this versatile chemical that helps produce much of the food we eat.

A backwoodsman took the witness stand and immediately was subjected to a merciless hammering by the prosecuting attorney.

"Can you write,"

"Well, yes—sorta."

"What do you mean 'sorta'?"

"Well, said the witness, "I can read figures pretty good, but I don't do so good with the writing."

"What do you mean."

"Well, take the signs along the road when I go places. I can read how far, but I can't read where to!"

FOR THE POULTRYMAN

Even well-grown pullets are not COMPLETELY developed when they begin to lay. They continue to fill out, adding another 1 to 2 lbs. Trying to grow, manufacture eggs, and maintain body condition, all at the same time, puts heavy demands on them, and on their feed. Without feed fortied for this 3-fold job they may lay themselves into a false or partial moult and en expensive rest period.

PURINA BOOSTER CHECKERS are made to supply extra proteins, vitamins, minerals, antibiotics to deal with that situation. Feed 6 lbs. per 100 birds per day, on top of the regular ration.

Disease germs, mites, lice can upset your poultry plans and turn your expected profits into losses. It's sensible to take sensible precautions against them.

PURINA INSECT OIL is a real help. Painted or sprayed on wooden surfaces, it kills germs with which it comes in contact, repels mites for a year, and helps preserve the wood. Apply when the house is empty. (If you have much wood to paint, of earth floors to disinfect, INSECT OIL CONCENTRATE will prove more economical).

PURINA POULTRY INSECTICIDE will help you get rid of lice. Paint it on the roosts just before roosting time. Repeat in 10 days. It's good practice to inspect birds for lice at housing, and after that at least once a month.

nesting habits of the birds through hours and days of observation in the field. These things are, in essence, creative. Bagging a day's limit, on the other hand, involves no more than knowing of a good cover, ownership of a bird dog, a shotgun and a box of shells. It is a pleasant pastime, involving a few hours mild exercise, with the importance of a full game bag diminishing through the years. ,

CAREFUL DRILLING PREVENTS SPLITTING

Boring a relatively large hole in a small piece of wood often causes the wood to split. A careful worker avoids this by putting the wood in a vise, but if a vise is not available you can do it this way: Drill through the wood with a small two-groove ground drill—the type without a screw on it—having the diameter of about half the diameter of the screw on the centre bit you plan to use. Then centering your spiral bit in the smaller hole, you can bore your full sized hole.

As soon as the point of the screw shows on the other side of the board it is well to finish from the other side. This will avoid even the smallest splits at the edge of the hole.

CRANBERRIES AND TURKEY

WHAT IS A CHRISTMAS DINNER without turkey and trimmings? And more times than not cranberries will be one of the trimmings. But we are not going to talk about cranberries and turkey today. There are so many other ways to serve cranberries that they can be of use to brighten our meals all through the winter.

Cranberry and Orange Relish

2 cups raw cranberries
2 oranges
1 cup sugar

Grind all together in a food chopper. Let stand 24 hours before using. This relish is so good with cold meat.

Mock Cherry Pie

1 cup cranberries
½ cup seeded raisins
¾ cup sugar
1 tbsp. flour
1 tsp. almond extract
1 tsp. butter

Line a pie pan with pastry. Fill with cranberries, washed and cut in half, mixed with chopped raisins. Sprinkle with mixture of sugar and flour, all almond extract and dot with butter. Cover with second crust and bake in hot oven.

Cranberry Spins

2 cups cranberries
1 cup chopped apples
½ cup water
¾ cup sugar
2 tbsps. butter
¼ tsp. cloves
½ tsp. nutmeg
1 cup biscuit mix

Simmer cranberries and apples in water 10 minutes. Stir in sugar, butter and spices. Put 1¾ cups of mixture in bottom of 8-inch shallow casserole. Mix biscuit mix according to directions on package. Roll into rectangle ½ inch thick. Spread with melted butter. Spread with remaining cranberries. Roll as for jelly roll. Cut in 1-inch slices. Place cut side down on cranberry mixture. Bake in a hot oven 20 minutes. Serve warm with whipped cream, ice cream or hard sauce.

PARENTS DON'T APPROVE GOES TO COURT

No idle she-loves-me-she- loves-me-not daisy plucking for Edward R. Vogeney.

He went to court recently to find out how he stood with his former fiancee.

Vogeney, a 25-year-old engineering firm employee, filed a petition in Chicago circuit asking John and Helen Schrik, of suburban Oak Park, to bring their daughter, Ardis Mae, 24, into court so Vogeney could ask Ardis Mae if she still wants to marry him.

The petition set forth that:

Vogeney and Ardis Mae, recent graduates of Northwestern University, became engaged, obtained a marriage licence and set the wedding date.

They sent out 300 invitations, reserved a church, arranged for a reception, rented an apartment and bought furniture.

Then, the petition said, Mr and Mrs Schrik told their daughter that Vogeney was not good enough for her, that he couldn't support her, that he was blind in one eye, had cerebral palsy and was an albino.

Vogeney contends these are false accusations and says Ardis Mae still wants to marry him.

Three hermits lived in a cave and spent all day staring at the wall, never speaking. One day a stallion ran past the entrance of their cave. Six months later one hermit mumbled, "That was a pretty brown horse." Two years later, another hermit said, "That horse wasn't brown, it was white." A year after that, the third hermit got up and stalked toward the entrance of the cave. "If it's going to be this constant bickering, I'm leaving."

CLOCK HOLDS SKELETON OF MAKER'S HAND

One of the oldest working clocks in Australia—and one with an eerie history—was sold at auction in Hobart.

The 270-year-old clock has the gnarled yellow skeleton of its maker's right hand grimly tucked away in a special fitting.

The clock, part of the estate of the late Misses Charpentier, of Hobart, was built in 1685 by one of the family.

The early Charpentier began building his clock during the reign of King Charles II and, when it was half finished, he was called before the infamous Judge Jeffries, who sentenced him to have his right hand cut off.

Charpentier finished the intricate carving of the clock with his left hand. When he finished it, he hung the skeleton of his lost hand in a special fitting as a grim reminder to his descendants.

"I have no faith in women."
"Why not?"
"I put a matrimonial advertisement in the paper and one of the replies was from my fiance."

Local Bible Society Raises Over $290 In Successful Campaign

The executive of the Chesterville branch of the Ottawa Auxiliary of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Canada, now have the final returns of its annual campaign. It is with a deep sense of satisfaction that the officers are able to announce the most successful campaign in recent years. The total receipts from all sources amount to $291.05, which is an increase of more than $60 over the previous years' donations.

The executive extends its very sincere thanks to all who so willingly assisted in the canvassing of the community, and to all who so generously supported its work. In the face of the great need to spread the Word of God as far and wide as possible, this effort is highly commendable. The following people conducted the canvass this vear: Mrs M. Shay, Mrs J. Loughridge, Mrs S. Barker, Mrs H. Belsher, Mrs M. E. Johnston, Mrs Carl Merkley, Mrs G. Cummings, Mrs G. Gilbert, Mrs S. Fvke, Mrs T. McIntosh, Mrs H. Allison, Mrs H. W. Merkley, Mr C. Collingridge, Mrs L. Marcellus, Mrs M. Pelletier, Miss Eva Munro, Mrs H. Barkley, Mrs S. Shay, Mrs L. Merkley, Mrs Ed Forward, Mrs E.
