Barns at Cannamore Burn On Sunday Evening

Sunday evening about seven o'clock fire of unknown origin destroyed the large barns of Lennox Baker, just east of Cannamore, together with the season's crop of hay and grain, the latter having been threshed and with the straw stored in the buildings. Shortly after part of the family had left for church at Morewood, Mr. Baker, who was at home alone, discovered his buildings ablaze and on giving the alarm was joined by his neighbours in an effort to save them, which were successful after a strenuous fight. The wood shed adjoining the house caught fire but was saved. The whole water supply, augmented by all the whey and milk at the cheese factory a short distance away was used in protecting the outbuildings. The lack of rain throughout the district has left everything as dry as tinder and sparks and burning embers carried to the barns of William Crowe threatening them for a while.

Bowling Club Doubles Provide Keen Contests

Last Friday with conditions almost ideal, Chesterville Lawn Bowling Club's eighth annual doubles tournament proved one of the best in the history of the club when sixteen rinks battled for four sets of prizes, resulting in A. Dixon and Hutton, of Ottawa South, carrying the main prize, with McDonald and Lalonde, of Alexandria, the runners-up. In the second event, after failing to get going in the first, Casselman and Hanna, of the local club, cleaned up everything as they went along by big margins. At the commencement of play Connors and Duncan, of Ottawa, put Casselman and Hanna out of the big event only to be met by the same pair in the semi-finals when the tables were reversed and the Ottawa pair threw up the sponge before the game had run its full number of ends.

Coons and Johnston, of Winchester, and Dr. McCartney and Tory, of Ottawa, staged a real battle in their game in the afternoon when, after playing nip and tuck through fifteen ends, Tory won with his last bowl in the concluding end, putting him into the semi-finals in the second where he was eliminated by Gemmel and Algie, of Brockville, who took second place when Casselman and Hanna rolled them into submission.

Harvey Shaver Passed Away Formerly of Goldfield

The funeral of the late Harvey Shaver was held at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Roland Droppo, Goldfield, on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. In evidence of the high esteem in which he was held by the community in which he formerly lived numerous friends, relatives and acquaintances were present from far and near. The service was conducted by Rev. G. N. Maxwell, B. A., B. D., of the United Church, Finch, assisted by Rev. Mr. Blanchard of Ottawa.

The late Mr. Shaver had reached the ripe age of eighty years. He was born near Northfield and resided in this community until his second marriage fourteen years ago, at which time he moved to Ottawa where he resided until his death. During the past year he has suffered much from Hodgkins disease—a rather rare malady in this country.

He leaves to mourn his passing his widow, formerly, Miss Fraser; three children by his first marriage, viz., Manley Shaver, of Aultsville; Mrs. J. C. Wolff, Cummings Bridge; Mrs. Roland Droppo, of Goldfield; three half-brothers, Dr. McBride, of Smiths Falls; Isaac McBride, of Northfield, and George McBride, of Dunbar.

Mr. Shaver during his active years was always interested in the work of the church and ever ready to render any service possible for the good of his fellowmen.

Interment was made in the family plot in the Goldfield cemetery.

Munro contributed a reading and Mrs. Geo. Merklev two solos accompanied by Mrs. Boyd. Refreshments were served by the committee in charge: Miss Harrison, Mrs. Alford, Mrs. Colquhoun, and Mrs. Fred Merkley, Mrs. Helmer.

Popular Chesterville Girl Weds Ottawa Man

St. Mary's Church was the scene of a quiet but pretty wedding ceremony yesterday morning, of Miss Mabel Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Barrett, of this place, to William M. Unger, L. Ph., of Ottawa, son of Mrs. Unger and the late Mr. Frederick Unger. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. Unger, O. M I., brother of the bridegroom, with Rev. John Salmon, of New York, cousin of the bride, officiating at mass. The assisting priests were the Very Rev. Fr. P. Keaney, P. P.; Rev. Fr. J. Stanton, O.M.I., and Rev. J. J. Leech, O.M.I.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended by Miss Lyola McCann as bridesmaid. Mr. Fred Unger, brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

A pretty gown of pastel blue made on Princesse lines was worn by the bride. It was designed with a lace jacket and she wore a felt hat of the same shade and carried pink roses. The bridesmaid was in pink with hat to match and carried a dainty bouquet of summer flowers.

During the ceremony, Mrs. M. Gillissie presided at the organ with Miss Marion Casselman playing the violin and Mr. Leonard Krill, brother-in-law of the bride, singing an "Ave Maria."

Mrs. Barrett, mother of the bride, was charming in brown crepe with an Empress Eugenie hat to match.

Following the ceremony, a wedding breakfast was held at the home of the bride's parents. Later Mr. and Mrs. Unger left for Cleveland, Ohio, by boat. They will take up residence in Ottawa upon their return.

The out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Carey, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Krill, and Mr. Ray Barrett, of Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. S. Metcalf, Mr. and Mrs. A. Fisher, Mrs. J. J. McCann, Mr. E. O'Meara, Dr. and Mrs. F. G. Gollop, Ottawa; Mr. and Mrs. A. Campbell.

Elderly Connaught Lady Dead

On August 15th there passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jno. Donihue, Crysler, an old and respected resident in the person of Mrs. Mary A. Devanny. The late Mrs. Devaney was born in Connaught eighty-three years ago and is the last member of the family of the late William and Sally Spotton, who were descendants from dear old Ireland. Two brothers, James and Thomas Spotton, passed away some years ago and an only sister, Mrs. J. D. Grady, died in 1922.

In 1874 the deceased married the late Jno Devanny who passed away thirty-three years ago. To their union three sons and six daughters were born: William, on the homestead; John, of Chesterville; Mary, Mrs. John Donihue, Crysler; Cassie, of New York City; Annie, Mrs. Ed. Carroll, Limerick; Margaret, Mrs. Thos. Demo, of Toronto; Bridget, Mrs. Alfred Beehler, of Crysler; Sadie, Mrs. Brian Hutchingane, of Ottawa; Thomas, deceased, and eighteen grandchildren.

The late Mrs. Devanny was of a charitable, loving disposition, making friends with young and old regardless of nationality or creed which thoroughly manifested itself in the large number that visited her bedside during her illness.

The funeral was one of the largest held in Crysler for some years. The spiritual offerings and floral tributes and letters of condolence also testified to the high esteem in which the deceased was held. High mass was chanted by Rev. Father Leahey, assisted by Rev. Father Resleau, her grandson, Bernard Donihee, assisting.

Interment took place in the family plot at Crysler. The pall bearers were her two sons, William and John Devanny, three sons-in-law, John Donihue, Ed Carroll and Alfred Beehler, and her nephew, Jno. Grady.

May she rest in peace.

P. R. A. A. of Montreal coming along second and third. This is the third time Bill Tate has won the Frank Lafortune trophy which now becomes his personal property. He ran under the colours of the Roamers Athletic Club and brought to Ottawa about the only glory they got out of the meet.

New Minister Gets Acclamation

Hon. George H. Challies was elected member for Dundas county in the Ontario Legislature by acclamation at the nomination meeting held Saturday afternoon at Winchester Springs. There was no other name put forward. The nomination was made necessary by his appointment to the position of Provincial Secretary.

Chesterville Boy First In Pole Vault at Toronto

Friday afternoon in the annual Ontario schoolboy track and field meet in Toronto, Hubert Harper, representing Chesterville Public School, won the pole vault event for Separate and Public Schools with a mark of nine feet ten inches and in the running high jump was second, when the winner, W. Groves, of Toronto, cleared 5 feet, 8½ inches, breaking the record by almost four inches.

Allan Tate, running in the mile in the senior High Schools class, landed just outside the charmed circle of prize winners when the time was 4 min., 36 4-5 seconds.

Miss Helen Beehler Wins High Prize at Graduation

The St. Lawrence State Hospital, Ogdensburg, N. Y., held its graduating exercises on August 23rd in the Curtis Hall, which was most artistically decorated in the class colours, blue and gold. The class motto "We finish to Begin," so apropo to a graduating class, was also arranged in blue and gold, extending across the stage.

At 8.15 p.m., the orchestra broke the monotony with a march to which the graduates immediately responded by taking their places to the right of the stage, while the faculty, doctors, clergy and ladies' board of managers were seated on the left.

Dr. P. G. Todiken, superintendent, most ably introduced the speakers of the evening, first calling upon Rev. William C. McIntyre to deliver the invocation.

The friends ,relatives, and especially the parents of the following young ladies from Chesterville vicinity—Misses Eldred and Ruby Edgerton and Helen Beehler, have every reason to be proud of their daughters for their success in obtaining diplomas from such a worthy alma mater. Again, when we stop and consider that Rev. William C. McIntvre, a Stormont boy, is one of the leading men in Uncle Sam's domain, we surely should be convinced that our standard of education deserves no criticism.

Miss Helen Beehler succeeded in obtaining the largest prize for making the most of her opportunities during the three years of training. While in Bellevue Hospital, New York, she acted in the capacity of health sponsor, president of her class, and also was elected affiliating representative to the Bellevue Students' Association. She secured the appointment on Aug. 21st of head nurse and instructress in the training school office.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Weekly Crop Report

Harvesting through Ontario is practically completed and fair yields have been reported through the greater part of the province, although yields of oats and barley are not of as good quality as last year. Throughout the eastern portion of the province it has been very dry and there has been a decided falling off of milk, butter and cheese. Eggs are becoming scarce and the price is advancing. Hogs and lambs are taking a decided slump in price. Alfalfa and red clover seed threshing has been in fair progress and very fair yields are reported. Prices for all farm produce are exceptionally low.

Western New Pear Markets

Owing to new tariff conditions, Canada is clamouring for Ontario Bartlett pears, according to C. W. Bauer, secretary of the Growers' Markets Council. Orders have already been received and Ontario's large Bartlett pear crop will find profitable outlets in the West as well as in Great Britain, where, according to Andrew Fulton, growers' representative, the market for Bartlett pears is unusually good this year. The crop in England and Europe is short and likewise in many of the American producing sections. The canners' requirements are limited and growers are advised to take full advantage of exporting Bartletts to the West and to the Old Country. For export purposes, Bartlett pears should be shipped in barrels and half-barrels, and for Western markets the standard pear box should be used.

Fair Grants To Be Cut

Hon. Thos. L. Kennedy is serving an ultimatum upon Fall Fair Associations that unless they discontinue their practice of looking chiefly to Queen's Park for financial assistance, the usual Government grants will not be forthcoming in 1932. He is convinced that many fairs show too little pride in themselves, that they would sooner ask the Government for help than their own municipalities. Consequently, he is taking steps to alter that attitude. This year the usual grants will be made, but next year the Government will give a fair no more money than the fair's municipality gives. On the present basis of contribution, several fairs at least would have to suspend operation. The Government contributes between $80,000 and $100,000 a season in supporting these fairs. Under the new policy a considerable part of the expenditure will be saved, which is in line with the general policy of retrenchment in the department.

Ontario is by far the largest producer of tobacco among the provinces of Canada, having contributed 28,600,000 pounds of a grand total of 36,700,000 pounds for all Canada last year. In all, 32,805 acres were devoted to tobacco raising in Ontario last year.

Central Canada Show

A record number of 294 entries was made in the judging competitions in live stock at the Central Canada Exhibition in Ottawa last week. Competitors in this department as well as those in the Household Science Judging Competitions numbering over 400, were entertained at dinner by the Ottawa Kiwanis Club, when Dr. G. I. Christie was guest speaker. Junior features of the programme were judging grain and roots and also showmanship competitions. A total of 66 young men entered in the former competition, while about 90 young men demonstrated their skill in handling live stock. Keen interest was taken in competitions in inter-county pens of market lambs and bacon hogs.

Fruit Crop Prospects

Canadian commercial apple prospects indicate a yield of 3,629,000 barrels, an increase of 218,300 over the 1930 figure. This is six per cent more than last year and eleven per cent more than the five-year average. Pears show a considerable increase in British Columbia, while a 30 per cent decrease is expected in Ontario. Peaches show an increase in both provinces and the total commercial crop of 904,000 bushels is a 20 per cent increase over the 1930 yield. Plums and prunes indicate a reduction of approximately 17 per cent, while grapes show an increase both in Ontario and British Columbia.

Beans in Elgin

Elgin County Bean Field Day was held recently on the farm of J. J. Johnston, Wardsville. On this farm several fertility demonstration plots are located under direction of the Department of Chemistry of the O. A. C. Fertility tests on beans showed a large difference in yield and maturity between the best fertility plot and the check plot. Speaking of beans, Professor Cæsar was in Elgin County recently investigating what proved to be a serious outbreak of green clover worm on field beans. This insect is of theNoctuid type, but differs in habit from the common cutworms. Many fields were found infected with this worm and in many cases the entire field destroyed. It also attacked turnip fields and in the latter plantings especially it did immense damage and practically stripped away all the leaves and ruined entire fields. The inroads of the little green worm were found as far north as Lake Huron and few patches of turnips and no fields of beans were found to be immune. No further damage is expected as the larvæ have begun to pupate.

Baled Hay

Good quality baled hay is quite extensivly used in Eastern United States centres and the demand appears to be increasing. Ontario farmers who can grow good crops of alfalfa may expect to find a fair market for their surplus in this way. Other types of hay well put up will also find a certain trade demand.

It has been brought to our attention that a large amount of the Canadian hay meets with considerable disfavour upon arrival in United States centres. The chief complaint is the size of the bale and tightness of pressing. Bales of from 140 to 190 pounds are not uncommon.

One of the largest exporters has definitely instructed his buyers to give preference to farmers who put their hay up in looser bales of from 110 to 140 pounds. As a matter of fact, bales of from 90 to 110 pounds are preferred by certain trades on account of their ease of handling. Bales that are too tightly pressed tend to become matted and are difficult to tear apart. Musty bales are found also in some instances and are quite out of place in any good trade.

Indications point to a somewhat draggy market for baled hay this year. It is quite apparent, therefore, that the better quality, suitably baled material will find better sale than poorer quality, tightly pressed, badly matted hay in heavy bales.

Premier's Message

"You must put your hands to the plough and solve this problem for yourselves by raising greater crops and finer livestock such as will command the markets of the world," was the advice given to the people of rural Ontario by Premier Henry in his opening address at the Central Canada Exhibition, Ottawa. He urged them to be patient with their municipal representatives at this time in regard to the load of taxation caused by improved educational facilities and good roads expenditure. Speaking of rural hydro expansion, the Premier stated that this year the Hydro Commission would construct an additional 2,000 miles of rural power line, doubling its mileage. A flat service charge not to exceed $30 a year was made possible to the farmer through Government assistance in hydro development, without which a prohibitive charge of $100 a year at least would have to be made.

Osnabruck Centre Wiped Out In $100,000 Blaze

More than 30 persons were rendered homeless by fire which wiped out more than two-thirds of the village of Osnabruck Centre, 15 miles southeast of Chesterville Saturday afternoon. In all, 33 buildings were destroyed, including two churches, the Osnabruck township hall, a lodge hall, two stores, a warehouse and many dwellings and barns. The property loss is estimated at $100,000. Two persons suffered serious injury.

Two children, George Ware, aged five, and David McBain, aged four, are believed to have been responsible for the most disastrous fire which ever occurred in this district. Shortly after four o'clock Saturday afternoon they were playing with matches in a barn at the rear of the home of Jas. McBain at the western boundary of Osnabruck Centre.

The McBain child had two matches, one of which ignited and fell in a pile of straw. Flames shot to the rafters of the frame barn and almost before the children could run to safety, the entire building was a mass of flames.

James McBain was in the home of a neighbour when the fire broke out. Noticing a cloud of smoke breaking through the wall of his barn, he rushed to the scene and met the children in the doorway. Learning from the frightened children of what they had done, he attempted to enter the building but was driven back by the intense heat. In the meantime Mrs. Maria Neville, a neighbour, had spread the alarm through the village.

McBain, who has been an invalid for the past year, suffering from heart disease, saw that it would be impossible to extinguish the barn fire and that it was inevitable that the house would catch fire. He immediately saw to it that his seven children reached safety.

"I knew that nothing could save the house, and that it would be only a matter of seconds before my home would be in flames,' McBain declared. "Six of my children were in the house at the time. I had no sooner got out the last one to safety when the flames began to break through the walls. We saved little or nothing. When I got outside, my heart was causing me severe pain, due to the excitement, and I lay down in a nearby field. When I came back to consciousness sometime later, it seemed that the whole village was in flames. Buildings everywhere were on fire and the heat was so intense that one could not pass along the street.

"Even trees some distance from the burning houses were on fire. As the roof of each house crashed in myriads of sparks filled the air, these flaming embers were carried along by a strong west wind and ignited almost everything in their path. Hundreds of men were on the scene, but they could do little. They lacked water and ladders, and were helpless to prevent the blaze from spreading."

Saw Mill Burned

Sparks from the McBain barn first ignited a large saw mill about 300 yards distant. This building, being of light frame construction, and surrounded by lumber, slabs, and piles of saw dust. burned very rapidly and efforts to keep the fire under control were of little avail.

Within 25 minutes of the outbreak, seven dwellings, two stores and the sawmill were blazing. At this juncture, a shifting of the wind carried the sparks straight east, instead of northeast. Although this change of wind undougtedly saved the business section of the village, which is in the north half, it resulted in a wide destruction of property. The two churches, the township hall, fraternity hall and almost every building within half a mile of the McBain barn to the eastward were in the path of the stream of glowing coals.

Smouldering ruins alone mark the sites of fine residences, churches and business places in south Osnabruck Centre. So complete was the destruction of the various buildings that every vestige of combustible material was burned. Crumbling foundations and and occasional sidewalk are all that remains in this section of one of the oldest and most beautiful communities in Eastern Ontario.

Of the 30 persons who were rendered homeless by the fire, about half were accommodated in homes in the northern half of the village which escaped destruction. The remainder were scattered throughout the surrounding district, making their homes temporarily with friends and relatives. The majority are without money and even without clothing. In one or two cases, cash, which had been kept in the homes, was lost, forgotten in the excitement.

At the township hall, voluteers succeeded in saving a piano and a few benches. Some furniture was removed from the churches, but most of the more valuable contents were destroyed. Four hogs and about 500 chickens were burned to death in the destruction of a barn owned by Aden Swerdfeger.

There were several remarkable features of the fire. A schoolhouse, located on the main street and lying between St. Peter's Anglican Church and the township hall, was undamaged, despite the fact that every adjoining building was destroyed. The shool was situated about fifty feet to the rear of both the church and the hall.

Weeks of dry weather had dried up almost fifty per cent of the wells in the village and very little water remained in the others. These were speedily exhausted by bucket brigades and the fire fighters were left without means of checking the spread of the flames. Only one or two hand extinguishers were available in the village. A lack of ladders was also a serious handicap in fighting the fire. Only one ladder of sufficient length to reach the roof of a house could be found when the fire broke out. Farmers from the surrounding district brought several ladders to the village and many of these were lost when the fire fighters were forced to abandon them near burning buildings.

Two persons suffered serious injury during the fire. One of these was Jonah D. Laporte, aged harness maker, and one of the best known residents of the village. He was taken to Cornwall General Hospital where he was suffering from burns about the hands, face and neck. Doctors have strong hopes of his recovery.

The second victim was Irvin Neville, of Bunkers Hill, a 23-year-old farm hand. Neville noticed that sparks had alighted upon the roof of a house owned by Mrs. David Rutley and voluteered to extinguish the blaze. He clambered to the roof and was engaged in tearing up the shingles when he lost his balance and slid to the ground, alighting on his feet. Bones in both ankles were broken and he is reported to have suffered other injuries.

Aden Swerdfeger, who was probably the heaviest loser in the fire, was interviewed. With the stolid courage characteristic of his German forbears, he is facing the future with confidence.

"I lost two houses, two barns, and practically everything else I had in the world," Swerdfeger said. "Fate must have been against me. After my home in the village had burned, I thought I had at least another home to go to on my farm, east of here. Then they told me that the other house and barn had been destroyed. It was a hard blow." Swerdfeger is a blacksmith, and still has his shop. His wife and child will remain with friends until he has reëstablished his home. Several years ago, Swerdfeger's house in the village was burned, but rebuilt.

Clifton Shaver, one of the first persons to reach the McBain barn when the fire broke out, declared that the village might have been saved, had sufficient water and ladders been available.

Glenn A. Shaver, reeve of Osnabruck Township and ex-warden of the United Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, was of the opinion that the disastrous fire might mean the end of Osnabruck Centre.

"The village has been going back steadily in recent years and this fire may end it," he declared. "More than two thirds of the village has been wiped out and it is doubtful if many of the buildings will be rebuilt."

Osnabruck Centre is one of the oldest villages in the province, having been established by United Empire Loyalists in 1784.

DIVIDE LILIES OF VALLEY NOW

ALTHOUGH the lily-of-the-valley is an accommodating plant, and seems to thrive with but little attention, it will graually run out unless the plants are occasionally taken up, separated and reset. The soil where they are growing needs plenty of humus, so that it will retain moisture, and can be improved by digging in pulverized peat moss. Lily-of-the-valley grows best in partial shade, and autumn is the time for dividing old plants or for setting out new plants. If good plump crowns are selected, there will be a good crop of flowers the first year. If the gardener waits until spring and then digs up the plants, there will be no flowers that season.

IN MEMORIAM

Pollock—In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. J. Pollock, who departed this life August 26th, 1930.

We mourn for you, dear mother,
But not with outward show;
For the heart that mourns sincerely,
Mourns silently and low.
The silent grief within our breast
No human eye can trace
For many an aching heart is hid
Behind a smiling face.

Gentle in manner and patient in pain
Our dear mother left us, Heaven to gain;
With action so tender, nature so kind,
Hard in this world her equal to find.

HEALTH SERVICE of the Canadian Medical Association

ADEQUATE EARLY TREATMENT

A great many letters come to us in which the writers explain that after having tried all sorts of self-prescribed treatments, without success, they would now welcome advice as to what they should do about the condition they describe.

There is one thing which should be realized by every one, and that is, that proper treatment can not be prescribed unless the condition which requires treatment is understood. In other words, a diagnosis must precede treatment.

You may think that when you go to your doctor because of a pain in your head or your abdomen, what you want is to get rid of the pain and you may think also that you do not care what causes the pain as long as you are freed from suffering. You do care, however, because while relief from pain and other distressing symptoms must be secured, if treatment stops at that point, then it is not proper treatment; it is not the treatment you require.

The pain in the abdomen due to appendicitis can be relieved very easily but treatment which gives only temporary relief will not save the life of the patient. Distress after eating may be overcome by the use of baking soda, but if that distress is due to cancer, the baking soda treatment is obviously not what is needed. The cough may be stopped, but if it is due to tuberculosis, merely stopping the cough will not cure the tuberculosis.

The doctor examines his patient in order to make a diagnosis, that is, to find out the cause, nature and extent of the condition which is responsible for the symptoms of which the patient complains. He will give treatment to relieve the symptoms but the important treatment which he will prescribe is that which will deal with the cause of the symptoms. Proper treatment cannot be based merely upon a description of the patient's symptoms as contained in a letter, because a personal examination is necessary in order that the doctor may find out the real nature of the condition.

It is in the early stages of diseases that treatment can accomplish the most, because it is then that there is hope of preventing the development of the disease into a more serious stage. In addition, it is easier to correct conditions which have not become chronic.

For these reasons, it is plain that adequate treatment in the early stages of disease is the treatment which should be received. It cannot be received as long as people continue to try and treat themselves and so allow disease to progress and become firmly fixed before they seek help.

It is delay which causes so many cases of tuberculosis, cancer and heart disease to come for treatment only when the disease is far advanced.

Adequate early treatment is the hope of those who are unfortunate enough to require any treatment. Delay often leads to disaster.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 14 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Bandits Attempt Hold Up Former Local Citizen

Montreal Monitor, August 21st.—Taking no trouble to disguise themselves and not even wearing hats, two young men held up J. R. Ball on Old Orchard avenue, as he stepped out of an auto driven by a friend, George Cobb. Mr. Ball is manager of the Supertest station at the corner of Beaconsfield and Sherbrooke street and it is thought that the robbers were after the day's cash.

Mr. and Mrs. Ball and their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Cobb, were returning to Mr. Ball's home and had journeyed south on Old Orchard avenue from Terrebonne at about 11.45 o'clock. They drew up opposite their house and as Mr. Ball stepped from the vehicle a man emerged from the shadows and stuck an automatic against his ribs. He was then ordered to stick up his hands while the robber attempted to take any money he might have on him.

Mrs. Ball and the other occupants of the car took the matter as a joke and Mrs. Ball was about to get out of the auto when the other bandit grabbed her and pulled her roughly onto the street. At this she broke away from him and ran up the stairs of the house where she rang the door bell.

At this sudden turn of events the man who was holding the gun turned it towards Mrs. Ball. Her husband however stepped between the muzzle of the weapon and his wife in an effort to protect her. At this moment the robber reached into Mr. Ball's pocket and as he did so Mr. Ball, noticing that the bandit's arm was between him and the gun, attempted to knock it from the man's hand, at the same time hitting him around the stomach.

While this was going on, the other robber had gone around to the other side of the car and climbed onto the running board but Mr. Cobb took a punch at him and knocked him off onto the road.

Just at this moment, Mrs. Ball's father, who was in the house at the time, opened the door and the robbers took fright. One called to the other to "come on" and they fled towards Terrebonne avenue where they got into a waiting taxi that was circling at the corner without lights.

The four occupants of the car remembered having passed this taxi on their way down the street and had noted that its lights were out. A thorough search of the district failed to reveal any signs of the robbers, however.

Mr. Ball did not lose any money as the bandits were scared off before they could secure the cash that he was carrying.

Mr. Ball, who is the son of Mrs. Mahlon Swerdfeger, is remembered by many in this section.

"So you enjoy seeing your son play baseball?"

"Yes," answered Farmer Corntossel. "If he ever gets into the habit of workin' that hard, mebbe we'll make the farm pay yet."

Motorist's Friend: "I say, what was that place we just whizzed through?"

Motorist: "Winchester."

Friend: "Was it? Good! I always wanted to see Winchester."

First Little Chap: "Do you folks have family prayers in the morning?"

Second Little Chap: "No; we say our prayers at night. We ain't afraid in the day time."

Walk on the LEFT of country roads

. . . Face the Traffic

This rule is important at all times, but especially so at dusk and at night.

At such times, no matter how careful the driver of a car is, he may not see you until he is very near to you and it may be impossible for him to stop in time to avoid inflicting serious injury.

Should he swerve to avoid hitting you, though you may escape injury others may be hurt.

Of the 524 fatalities on the highways of Ontario last year a large number were caused by persons walking with rather than against traffic.

When Ben Came to Rosehill's

AS USUAL, Lally, the freighter, was discoursing on the great things that would come to pass when Ben came to Rosehill's.

"When that kid gets to camp it'll make a different man of me," he unsteadily assured the men at the bunk house. "I ain't seen him since his mother died six years ago, and now he's comin' through from Denver with a Wells-Fargo tag on him. Sure, just like he was a case of canned goods!"

"What'll he do at Rosehill's?" asked a miner. "A nine-year-old and the only kid in camp? You've got the women folks all crazy about him. I suppose he'll play with the coyotes and the horned toads, Jim Lally."

"His grandma and I got the house all decorated—that is, kind of decorated—with dried bunch grass and a 'Merican flag," added Lally proudly. "Don't you worry about what the kid plays with. He'll play with his dad—when I'm home."

One of the listeners drew a long breath.

"Bergstrom says he's goin' to give him that fool pointer pup he has at the office. That pup sure needs a boy just to keep him from bein' lonesome at Rosehill's."

"Bergstrom can keep his pup," muttered Lally; "we don't want it from him!"

Bergstrom, the superintendent of the gold and copper mines at Rosehill's camp, was passing the miner's bunk house and heard the remark; but he said nothing at all. There was not a man in camp who did not know that Lally disliked him, and also that Lally held his job only because of the superintendent's sympathy for the freighter's old mother, who ran a boarding house at Rosehill's.

Jim Lally had once been engineer for the company, but Bergstrom had discharged him for drinking. The miners had often muttered at the excessive use of liquor by the man who, with his hand on the lever that controlled the car in the shaft and the ore trams in the levels, daily held their lives in jeopardy.

Except at the mines there was nothing for a man to do at Rosehill's. Lally had undertaken the task of freighting across thirty miles of burning Mohave desert, bringing supplies from the railway to the camp near the Providence Mountains. And he held the position solely at Bergstrom's pleasure.

The men wondered that he held it at all, for the superintendent hated drunkards, and Jim Lally not only drank but smuggled whiskey into the camp and sold it to the men. But where Lally was concerned the patience of Bergstrom seemed infinite; the men dimly understood that it was because of the gray-haired old mother who ran the boarding house and who was trying to save her son.

How strange a thing is human nature! The miners who protested having a whiskey drinker in charge of the engine that safe-guarded their lives were yet willing to buy the liquor that the freighter brought to camp. It may have been because everyone liked Jim Lally in spite of his faults. In a desert camp of seventy men, four women and no children at all there was something endearing about a man who for four years had told them all daily what great things would happen when his child came to the camp.

On this trip Lally was to meet his boy at the nearest railway station and bring him to stay with his grandmother. There was not a man who did not live in expectation of that event; Lally had passed round the post card announcing the departure of the boy from the maternal grandparents' home where he had lived, and he had talked with anyone who would discuss the momentous matter—and that was virtually everyone at Rosehill's camp.

So when the freighter's mule outfit did not as usual come toiling up the flinty moutain trail at sunset the people of Rosehill's, who were gathered before the company's store to welcome Jim Lally's Ben, were much discomforted. Stetson, a fireman who led the "fool pup" from Bergstrom's office by a string, ready for Ben Lally's hand, remarked that "Jim must be at it again," and some of the men shook their heads.

The women looked over Rosehill's two dozen dingy shanties clustered on a treeless mountain side that the desert sun had burned as dry as tinder and again expressed sundry doubts they held concerning the suitability of the camp as a home for a small boy. Yet they all turned homeward sorely disappointed that he did not arrive.

At ten o'clock that night a Mexican stumbled into Rosehill's, wild with the delirium of thirst. His clothes were in rags; his feet were bleeding from cactus spines and the nipping alkaline sands. It was an hour before he could talk, for he could not use his swollen mouth. Then with insane laughter and sobs he said that Jim Lally, the freighter, lay injured at the poisonous springs across the Mohave sink. The Mexican, whose name was Ruiz, had started with the freighter and his boy from the railway at daylight.

While waiting for the train Lally had been drinking. He had had a two-gallon demijohn of whiskey under the seat of his wagon; and when they left the foothills across the valley the freighter near the poisoned springs had recklessly turned his wagon down a steep and dangerous cut-off that led to Rosehill's. The mules had turned back in a narrow trail, thrown the wagon down the grade and terribly injured the driver. The boy, Ruiz added, was not hurt.

They had placed the father on a mule and started out upon the desert valley; at the freighter's shack Ruiz had left them and come for aid. He had travelled until his mule had dropped under the extreme heat. At dusk he had seen the lights of Rosehill's in the mountains and had struggled to them. Twelve hours he had gone without water, and in the Mohave a man does not travel long without it and retain his reason or his life.

Before midnight the men of Rosehill's had strapped Ruiz to a horse that he could guide him down the precipitous ravines that lead to the restless sink. It was twelve miles to the freighter's hack. When the dry floor of the desert floor gave place to the hungry, murmuring sands of the vast sink there were some who shrank from that search under the starlight.

The Mohave River, which flows through a lifeless valley, is suddenly choked by sands and, finding no outlet, converts the desert into a terrible morass of reeds and glistening quicksands. The water is deadly from alkalies and other chemicals. And there is no life; neither the thorny fronds of the cactus nor the sand fleas and the desert tortoise can live in the treacherous space of the sink.

Firing revolvers and seeking the paths of safety with lanterns, the men of Rosehill's dragged themselves through the quicksands and at last came upon the freighter's wooden shack. There they found Jim Lally helpless from a broken leg. He seemed to have just awakened from a stupor of intoxication, thirst and pain; when Bergstrom asked him where his boy had gone Lally shrieked with terror.

"Water, water!" he shouted. "I sent him for water—I was crazy from thirst. Ben came to me at sundown and said he saw a lake of water and would go for some of it. I was crazy for it—I let him go!"

Lally struggled up in the sand under the roof of the shanty, which had been built to shelter his noonday rest. He pointed off to the south where the rising moon showed the glistening deadly stretches of the Mohave sink and then fell back unconscious.

Near him lay the demijohn of whiskey that he had brought for the men of Rosehill's camp. They looked at it with stoney faces and went out to where John Bergstrom was marshalling the searchers.

"He saw the sink shinin' 'way off yonder," said Stetson, solemnly, "and went to fetch water for his dad, God help him!"

The men silently took their orders from the superintendent and spread far along the wide marshes.

In the desert, when the wind does not blow, you can hear voices for miles. According to the old prospectors, it is because there is no air. The searchers fired guns and called loudly; and at times turned back to help one another from the perilous quicksands.

From a spit of dry sand a man would stumble into an apparently bottomless space where the sand floated on a patch of alkaline water that spouted gas bubbles. The dreaded sink is three miles wide in some places, and much of it is impassable—except for birds.

One by one, group by group, the rescuers, exhausted and baffled, turned back to where the mules held the canteens. When daylight came over the gaunt mountains John Bergstrom and two companions, knee-deep in quicksand that seemed to deepen perilously on every side ,staggered back from the great morass. A mile away they saw the rest of the party gathered where Jim Lally lay.

Bergstrom thought of the freighter's mother, who had adorned her cabin for the grandson.

"Let's try it again, once more," he muttered. "Stetson, will you go along with me?"

"Yes," said the fireman; "as far as you go."

"There's no use," said the third man. "It's daylight and the little kid could hear us shooting. The sink's got Jim Lally's Ben."

But Bergstrom and the fireman went back again. The sun burst stingingly hot over the hills. The two exhausted men searched every low, reedy margin of the pools; and after a while they stumbled weakly against each other and sat down in the slowly sinking sand.

"It's no use, Bergstrom!" said the fireman hoarsely. "They are waving for us."

"No!" whispered the superintendent. "Stetson, what's that across the sink in the reeds?"

Stetson leaped up and ran forward. A few hundred yards beyond them a small figure was creeping on hands and knees along a patch of hard sand. When the men shouted, the boy sat up and shouted at them. But even when they came close to him he made no sound; he just stared at them with big hollow eyes, wildly and fearfully.

Bergstrom threw off his clothes, but before he was able to seize little Ben Lally he had to drag his body across ten yards of palpitating, bubbling sand that tried to suck him down. The boy held the lard can with which he started from the shack for the "lake;" it was half filled with bitter water that he had found in one clear space! He had tried to drink it but it had sickened him, and he had fallen asleep on the sands. At daylight he had crawled on, seeing groups of searchers, but unable to cry out to them. In fact, he had not realized that they were searching for him; he had been intent on finding his father.

The other rescuers who came out on the sink at Stetson's signal helped to carry the boy tenderly to the shack and gave him water and, later, food. The freighter who had now recovered his senses, was completely overcome when he saw his boy.

The men of Rosehill's put Lally's broken leg in rude splints and as soon as the heat of the day was past sent for a wagon to carry him and the boy across the desert to the camp.

The mules trotted into Rosehill's with Stetson cracking the whip and with Bergstrom steadying Jim Lally's sore body as the wagon jolted. When the superintendent helped the freighter out he picked up a demijohn from the wagon and the lard can that still held some of the bitter water from the sink.

"Lally," said the boss solemnly, "which'll you have to drink from after this?"

"Mr. Bergstrom," said Lally faintly, "it'll be the water—alkali and all."

"It will be the doctor first," replied Bergstrom. "When the new stamp mill is set up we'll need another engineer—a sober one."

"You won't have to send out of camp for him!" muttered Lally.

Various words were being defined by the class. Finally the teacher turned to Johnny and asked: "What is velocity?"

"Velocity is what a fellow lets go of a bee with," promptly replied the youngster.

A bad actor but a very good fellow, accused a certain critic of having stated that his Hamlet was the worst he had ever seen. "There's one thing,' he commented cheerfully, "next time I play Hamlet you won't be able to say anything worse."

"Oh, yes I shall," said the critic, "I shall say you're not up to your usual standard."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.
