Henry's Shorthand School
Ottawa, Ont.

On the May Civil Service Examination, this year, we passed more stenographic candidates than the other local business colleges combined.

It is a common occurrence for Henry-trained students to get 100% in Shorthand 100% in Typewriting, and 95% in Composition.

These subjects being the most difficult on this examination, our record of FIRST, SECOND and FOURTH places for the whole of Canada, is at once explained.

During the past two years, more than 235 students have come to us from other local business colleges.

Does it not prove that we have a superior school?

Our instruction being individual, you may start at any time.

Confirmation in St. Mary's Church.

Confirmation was solemnized in St. Mary's Church on Tuesday, Oct. 19th, by His Grace, Archbishop Spratt of Kingston. 51 children and 4 adults were confirmed at 10 o'clock mass. After mass His Grace delivered an eloquent sermon, impressive, appropriate and instructive to both children and members of the congregation. The children took a solemn pledge to abstain from any intoxicating drink except as medicinal purposes.

With Miss McCloskey as organist the singing was well rendered. Miss Murphy of Regina sang beautifully the favorite solo "Ave Maria."

Rev. Fr. Crowley, pastor, was assisted in devotions and masses by Rev. Fr. Halligan of Kingston, Sec. to His Grace, Rev. Fr. Meagher of Kemptville, Rev. Fr. O'Gorman of Spencerville, Rev. Fr. Keeley of Mountain, Rev. Fr. Meeghan of Morrisburg. His Grace returned to Kingston on Wednesday.

We congratulate the Sisters and Rev. Fr. Crowley on the efficient teaching and training of the children.

Merkley, and Mr. Craig, bank clerk of the Bank of Ottawa, leaving for Fort Colounge, also an address and leather hand bag by Mr. W. J. Cass, B.A., and the pastor, Rev. H. E. Warren. An instrumental and vocal programme was given by Miss Marion Casselman, Mrs. Whitney, Mrs. Cass, and Messrs. K. Lawson and McMillan. Refreshments were served at the close, followed by the expressions of the best wishes of the numerous circle of friends for the future of the young men.

Madill—Merkley.

A very pretty but quiet wedding was solemnized Monday evening, Oct. 11th at Watertown, by Rev. Kaster, when Miss Margaret Jane Madill, daughter of Wm. E. Madill, 722 Holcomb St., Watertown, became the wife of Ross Lorne Merkley, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Merkley, Woodruff street. The bride was becomingly attired in a blue broadcloth suit trimmed with sable and wore a black picture hat and carried a bouquet of bride's roses and maiden hair fern. Mr. and Mrs. Merkley left immediately for their future home in Ottawa where Mr. Merkley has a position as head waiter in the Chateau Laurier Hotel.

Took a Header.

Just how easy one may bump up against serious difficulty was shown on one of our streets last week when a lady was proceeding homeward with her purchases in the front of a buggy, drawn by a quiet and sedate steed. A passerby drew her attention to the fact that the motion of the buggy was causing oil to jolt from a can over her other articles. As she stooped forward to rectify matters the horse wandered to the side of the street where the shaft of the buggy struck a pole, instantly stopping the rig, while the horse walked right out of the shafts and the lady did an acrobatic turn landing in the street where the horse had just stepped from. She was unhurt and matters were soon righted by willing hands and she proceeded on her way.

And the Car Failed to Ramble.

A valued subscriber of The Record's who lives not a hundred miles from Elma, has had many a quiet chuckle to himself during the past few days over the vagaries of an auto that didn't "keep rambling right along" and to him it looked like the swift visitation of a judgment on the driver. The auto contained, besides the man at the wheel, three or four young ladies on their return trip from the Teachers' Institute meeting at Iroquois, and apparently they saw much cause for merriment, when a farmer, who was driving a horse that has never become reconciled to the horseless vehicle, was preparing to unhitch and let the car by. Just in front of the horse was a considerable mud hole and it apparently struck the chauffeur that it would add to the gaiety of the party if the farmer and his horse were given a good splashing. It didn't work out good, however. The car skidded and shot to the ditch where it landed wrong side up. Fortunately nothing worse happened to the occupants than a bad "mussing up," and which the driver of the horse did not begrudge them.

NOTES FROM THE TRENCHES.

Extracts from a letter written by Sergt.-Major Ian Macdonald, 2nd Bat. 1st Brigade, to Rev. K. A. Gollan, Morewood

I witnessed a most exciting episode the other morning. An enemy plane crossed our lines a little to the west of where we were bivouacked; our aircraft guns immediately opened fire but without result. Then one of our planes appeared on the scene and after some manoeuvering got above and disabled the German. He at once began to descend but when a couple of hundred feet from the ground he seemed to regain control of his machine and was moving up when a battalion of our men, marching along a road nearby, opened rapid fire and brought it to earth, killing both the German officers. The machine, I understand, is of the latest make and will soon be flying over the German lines with a different mark on the wings. All aeroplanes have a distinguishing mark on the lower surface of the planes. The Germans show a black Maltese cross, while the Allies show their respective national colors in concentric circles. These marks may often be read by the naked eye.

We have our mail delivered daily in the trenches, just as regularly as you have. Our daily rations and mail are brought each afternoon by transport waggons to a comparatively safe point on a road about 15 minutes walk from here (the firing line). Each platoon, about 2 p.m. send out a "ration-fatigue" who reach the waggons via the Communication Trenches and bring back the meat (fresh or canned), potatoes, bread, biscuits, jam, butter, tea, sugar, milk (in homeopathic quantities, tobacco, cigarettes, matches, candles, and what not. We don't, of course, get all these things every day. The communication trenches are narrow ziz-zag ditches, 7 or 8 feet deep by means of which the troops reach or evacuate the actual fighting trenches without exposing themselves to view.

Whilst writing this the usual daily artillery duel is going on, angry shells tearing through the air both ways over our heads. It is nearly noon and most of the boys round me are frying their steak and onions (with chips, please,) as unconcernedly as if they were in the woods of Northern Ontario. In addition Fritz is relieving ennui by having snap shots at an altiscope which is peeping over the parapet in front of me. He has hit the same sand bag twice in the last 15 minutes but so far the glass is safe. An altiscope is, like the periscope, an arrangement of mirrors which show views of the surrounding country, which in time may be enlarged by using binoculars. A bullet striking a sand bag makes a crack louder I think, and certainly more penetrating than the report following its propulsion.

I am living alone in a small dug-out and I do everything myself. I grill my steak on the blade of a broken spade and baste it with dripping previously obtained from superfluous fat or, if lucky, a piece of suet. It is much nicer done this way than fried.

Two of our aeroplanes got a terrific bombardment from the enemy this morning but were apparently unscathed. They must have fired hundreds of shots at them. Every thing is very quiet along our line to day; in fact it is getting quite as monotonous as the Dominion Police! This morning when going out for water I came across a small wooden cross on which is printed "Here lies the body of a German soldier." There are thousands of theirs and ours who have not even that much to show where they are resting.

This is a dreadful country for wasps; the moment one opens a tin of jam they are around in swarms. But in the trenches the wasps are a positive comfort compared to the rats. They are here in millions, and billions and trillions, and lots of them as big as a cat. They are so numerous they can hardly get out of one's way and lots could be killed but one dead rat lying around in this weather would probably cause more discomfort than 50 live ones—once one gets used to them!

BIG CHIEF VAN HORNE

LATE RAILWAY BUILDER WAS A PICTURESQUE FIGURE.

In the Early Days of the C. P. R. Construction Work He Was Known as a Powerful Leader of Men With Cataclysms of Explosive Wrath and Sudden Flashes of Humor.

ON his human side the late Sir William Van Horne was as attractive a figure as he was great in the field of railway management. In appearance he was short and rather corpulent, though his dimensions gave a feeling of massiveness and power. His voice was deep-chested and on occasion strong and commanding.

Writing in The Canadian Century a couple of years ago of Sir William Van Horne, Mr. C. Lintern Sibley gave these illuminating touches:

"There are many picturesque accessories to lighten the record of such a man as Sir William. I like that picture of him that you hear from the construction bosses, of how, when he was out in the wilderness with his armies of workmen from the Orient and the Occident, carrying to a successful consummation thousands of miles of what were regarded as engineering impossibilities—how, in the starlit nights, in the vastness of the Rockies or the solitary wastes of the plains, there would flow out upon the listening air some wonderful strain of music—the solace of a Chopin nocturne or the deeper melody of a Beethoven tone poem—telling Indian and Orient and European alike that the Big Chief Van Horne had been pleased with the result of the day's struggle with primeval chaos. That music was of the Big Chief's own making; it came from his beloved violin.

And contrasting with this, there is the other side of his nature—the explosive wrath, the cataclysm of purest Anglo-Saxon, the fiery will of the man expressing itself in fiery terms, and the sudden flash of humor that came like mellow sunshine following upon the thunderstorm. It took a big fund of humor, of optimism, of sheer brute strength, and of magnetic, indomitable will to carry on a battle such as he won against forces and discouragements so vast as attended the building of the C. P. R.

Mr. Sibley tells of Van Horne's once being lost in the mountains of British Columbia, and of "how he wandered all day swallowed up in a vast landscape that stretched away in an endless sea of snow and glacier-clad peaks, and how towards evening down among the trees on a mountain-side he espied smoke. How he crawled on his hands and knees to the camp, fearing it might be hostile Indians, and how to this big man with his giant hunger there floated on the breeze the glorious smell of frying beefsteak, betokening the fleshpots of the white man—as, indeed, it was—of his own surveyors.

"When, after the railway was built, he took on the job of letting the world know of its attractions, he got artists to paint pictures of the scenery. These pictures he would criticize in a helpful and instructive manner. More than once when pictures have been brought into his office in the Windsor Street Station in Montreal he has sent out for sandwiches for luncheon and for artists' material, and between mouthfuls of sandwiches he has mixed up his colors and repainted the pictures.

"Sir William's home life is a very happy one. His love for children is one of the lovable phases of his nature. I remember interviewing him once immediately upon his return from one of his numerous visits to Cuba.

"While he was talking his little grandson came into the room — a grandson to whom the great Sir William represented nothing more than a nice, big playfellow, to be ordered about at his bidding.

" 'Come and kiss grandpa,' said Sir William.

"The child came to him, and grandpa and the hope of the family exchanged kisses.

" 'I want you to be horse,' said the little boy.

" 'Want me to be a horse?' said Grandpa.

" 'Yes, I want to ride.'

" 'Come on then.'

"The curly-haired little fellow climbed on the chair, got hold of Grandpa's massive head, clambered up on his shoulders and bestrode his neck.

" 'Gee up!' he said.

"Grandpa shook his shoulders.

" 'No, no, get up and gallop!' cried the autocrat on his shoulders.

"And Grandpa got up and galloped."

Sir William (he received his Knighthood in 1894) was of the type who achieved greatness. He rose from base to top of the railway ladder by sheer grit, organizing resource and brain power. There was no royal road to success with him. The circumstances were none too rosy in his favor, but he rose above them and stamped his impress on what he did in a remarkable way. He was born near Joliet, Illinois, in 1843, a descendant of one of the old patroon families, who laid the foundation of the city of New York under the name of New Amsterdam, and when he had attained the age of 14 the death of his father made it necessary that he face the uphill battle in life. He first acted as telegraph operator on the Illinois Central, then went into the service of the Michigan Central, where he was six years, leaving to be train despatcher of the Alton, and subsequently rising to the position of Superintendent of Telegraphs and Divisional Superintendent. In 1874 he became General Manager of the Southern Minnesota Railway, three years later was President of that line, and in 1880 General Superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway.

TEST FOR SOIL ACIDITY.

Wisconsin Experiment Station Describes a New Method.

The Wisconsin experiment station has recently issued a bulletin describing a new method of testing the acidity of soil. In this bulletin, written by Professor E. Troug, several tests used for determining the acidity of the soil are described as well as the new test. It is claimed by the author that the new test for soil acidity is more reliable, measuring, to a certain extent, the degree of acidity and indicating in a general way the amount of lime needed per acre to make the soil sweet.

The principle of the test as described in the bulletin is as follows: When zinc sulphide, a white, flourlike substance, comes in contact with an acid a gas is formed which can be detected by the use of lead acetate paper. In a similar manner the acid in soils causes a formation of this gas which is similarly detected.

The apparatus for making soil tests by this method is simple and looks as though it would be a very effective way for the farmer to determine whether the soil needs lime and the approximate amount of lime. The use of lime to correct the acidity of the soil is coming more generally into use as year succeeds year. It has been proved beyond doubt that alfalfa and clover—in fact, all kinds of legumes—will not do well upon an acid soil.

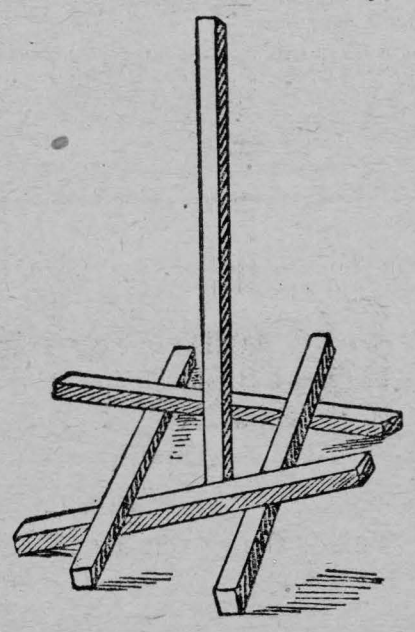

Various methods have been used to determine whether the soil is acid or not in the laboratory, but to get some practical, reliable test that the farmer can use without requiring too much time has taken some years. Blue litmus paper has been used and, on the whole, is quite a satisfactory test, but when inserted into the soil it may turn red from other causes than from the acid in the soil. There is more or less carbonic acid in all soils, and when this comes in contact with blue litmus paper it turns red, yet the soil is not acid in the sense the term is used and may have an abundance of lime. The perspiration on a person's finger very often reddens the paper, and unless care is taken in testing soils with litmus paper results are apt to be misleading.

The muriatic acid test determines not so much whether the soil is acid, but whether it contains any carbonate of lime. This has proved a very satisfactory test, but is not as reliable as could be desired.

The new acid test for determining the acidity of soils recently conducted by the Wisconsin experiment station seems to overcome all the difficulty of the other tests and indicates positively whether the soil is acid and also about how much lime will be required to sweeten the soil. Farmers can well afford to give this subject their attention and determine whether their soil is acid or not.

A Useful Rack.

The rack shown here is used in the peanut regions for curing nuts on the vines and in curing pea and soy bean hay. It is very valuable for curing late cut legumes like cowpeas and soy beans. A hole is made in the ground with a crowbar and in this a sharpened stake is set. This stake is from eight to ten feet high. Four sticks from two to four inches square and two to three feet long are placed around the central stake. This forms a foundation, keeping the hay from the soil dampness and the central stake keeps the hay from blowing over.—Farm Progress.

Potting Bulbs or Plants.

When potting bulbs or plants, always see that there is plenty of drainage in the bottom of the pot. Poor drainage means sour soil and sickly plants.

Farm and Garden

VALUE OF THE SILO.

Adds to Worth of Farm More Than Its Cost to Build.

More and more farmers of the central west are thinking in terms of interest on investment, says the Iowa Homestead. Where there is a shortage of horsepower it is an easy matter to determine the value of a good team, compute the interest on the money required to buy the team and then in turn figure the earning capacity of this extra pair of horses. The same principle applies in the building of a corncrib or a granary. As a rule, small grain hits rock bottom prices just about the time thrashing begins, and the man who has to haul grain directly to the elevator invariably holds the short end of the horn. One can build a combination corncrib and granary that will hold 2,000 bushels of corn and as much small grain for $300. This investment, reckoned at 6 per cent, amounts to $18 a year, and yet every man knows that this amount may often be made up on three or four loads of grain.

Just as good an illustration of the principle is obtained when reference is made to the silo. Money invested in a silo that is well constructed is just as valuable an asset to the farm as a good corncrib. It will pay much bigger dividends, all things considered. On a pinch one can pile ear corn upon the ground and yet market it later on in fairly good condition. This is not the case with the material that is ordinarily put into the silo. Cornstalks worth $1 an acre in the field, when put in the silo, grain and all, are worth anywhere from $4 to $7 per ton for feeding to the right kind of live stock. By saving practically the full feeding value of the crop it is often possible to more than pay for the silo in one year, whereas it is well known that even a wood silo will last fifteen or even twenty years if it is given good care. The hollow brick silo, if well built, is permanent, so that in figuring its cost in terms of interest on investment one would be safe in spreading it over a period of fifty years.

Those who have silos are to be congratulated this year. There will be some late corn, and this will be largely wasted when it is not converted into ensilage. Corn that reaches the glazed condition will make good food if put in the silo, and yet every man knows that to husk out such a crop means, in most cases, the piling up of a lot of useless feed. It will mold if put in the crib, and the good ears invariably are rendered worthless by contamination with the soft ears. Corn of the same degree of maturity, put in the silo, will feed out well and can be used to great advantage for dairy cows, stock cattle or fattening steers.

One thing is certain—namely, that a $300 silo built on a farm will always add to the value of the farm more than the cost of the silo. Its erection will invariably start the farmer on a better program of stock feeding, resulting in building up the land, and in this way its effect on production will virtually mean that it will pay for the original cost every year.

Stopped Game to See Duel.

In a letter to W. F. Nickle, M.P., Lieut.-Col. A. E. Ross, commanding No. 1 Field Ambulance, describes a thrilling incident which occurred while Canadian soldiers, including some of his own corps, were playing baseball. Two aeroplanes, one French and the other German, suddenly appeared overhead and began a lively battle, which ended in a draw. The baseball game was stopped while the air fight was in progress.

3,000,000 Men by Next Spring Great Britain's Need

London, Oct. 17.—"Great Britain needs 3,000,000 men by spring." This declaration was made today by Brigadier-General Sir Eric Swayne, director of recruiting in the northern command, in a speech at Hull. General Swayne estimated that Germany has between 9 million and ten million men from the ages of 18 to 45, and that therefore it was useless to talk about wearing Germany out.

In the spring, said he, Germany would lose more men than the allies, which would balance the number of the allies and the central powers, but if Great Britain should raise three million additional Germany probably would recognize that it would be useless to continue. Great Britain, he added, did not want compulsion, but unless three million more men were recruited by spring the military authorities could not be responsible for the war.

A Bommerang.

"James, my lad," said the grocer to his new assistant "who bought that moldy cheese today?"

"Mrs. Brown, sir," was the youth's reply.

"And the stale loaf we could not sell last night?"

"Mrs. Brown, sir."

"Where's that lump of rancid butter that the baker refused?"

"Mrs. Brown bought it cheap, sir," was the answer.

"And the six eggs we could not sell a week since?"

"Mrs. Brown."

"Are you ill, sir?' asked James as the grocer turned green and groaned,

"No, no; only I'm going to tea at Mrs. Brown's tonight," replied the unhappy man as he wiped the perspiration from his face and sank into a chair.

In life she was tender, sympathetic, unselfish, her main pleasure being to promote the happiness of hose around her.

Mrs Becker, who was 77 years of age, was predeceased by her husband, A. L Becker, on the 17th day of August, 1897, and has lived since that time on the old homestead at Elma. She retained a youthful appearance and keen intelect to the very last.

The funeral service which was largely attended, was held at the Elma Methodist church on Friday October 1st, her pastor, the Rev. W. T. Keough, M.A., officiating, and taking for his text St. John 14: 2. After which Messrs. Kyle, Barkley and Carlyle, of the Elma Male Quartette, sang the deceased's favorite song' "The Ninety and Nine."

Ogle Webster, an electrician employed by the Citizens' Electric Company, of Smith's Falls, died Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock in an hospital at Smith's Falls, as the result of a shooting accident Friday afternoon. It seems that Webster was holding a gun across his knees when it rolled off, the hammer striking the side of the buggy with such a jolt that the gun was discharged, sending its contents through Webstes's left arm near the shoulder and into his left lung. The party immediately returned to a farmer's house and phoned for Dr. Gray, who met them a short piece out.
