FIRST GERMAN RADIO-CON TROLLED TANK CAPTURED BY BRITISH IN ANZIO BEACHHEAD.

The German radio-controlled 'tark' used for the first time against the 5th Army at Anzio, has been solved by a British recovery crew and examined by Allied experts.

The vehicle—really an explosive carrier--is 12ft long, 6ft wide, 4ft high --slightly smaller than a Bren carrier. A driver takes it as far as he dares, then gets out and the "tank" with its load of about 800 lbs. of explosives continues along, guided by radio. At the target, the explosive charge is dropped or slid to the ground. and a time fuse is fired (should this fuse fail, the charge can be exploded electrically). The "tank" is then backed to its driver, by radio control, he gets in and drives back to his own area. This speciman was recovered with great difficulty, under heavy enemy fire, by Lieut. Colonel Gormen, REME, and his crew named on picture No. B NA 14052. (WN).

We trust as you daily use them your memory will often times revert to this happy event, and your friends here.

May kind providence so guide your life, that health, happiness and a long prosperous wedded life be yours.

F. P. GALBRAITH

F. P. Galbraith, publisher of the Red Deer Advocate and newly elected President of the Canadian Weekly Newspayers Association, has despatched the following message to all publishers of weekly newspapers in Canada as the Seventh Victory Loan campaign opens:

"It is from the rural districts that Canada draws her strength. Again and again governments and businesses draw their leaders from the farms, the villages and the towns and in this war the farms, the villages and the towns have proved their quality. Now the 7th Victory Loan faces us. Once more boys overseas are asking for our financial support. This time it is more important than ever for us to give it. The enemy is reeling but not out. We need to put in that knockout punch that will finish the fight. Buy more this time than you've ever done before and help finish the job."

AIRPORTS FOR TOWNS

Ontario municipalities as a progressive civic move are to be asked to co-operate in a scheme for the building of 300 inexpensive autoplane airports designed to handle both light airplanes and automobiles. This post war project is backed by the Cub Aircraft Corporation and is aimed at creating jobs for returning Air-force pilots and mechanics. The plan as outlined is designed to accommodate easy-to-fly light planes and feeder line aircarft. The airports will consist of simple landing strips of turf or concrete together with stations. The 300 airports will be allocated at least one to each town and city of more than 2,000 population. The strips will be located as close to towns and cities as possible, adjacent to important roads or highways in most instances, and will be at least 2,000 feet long and 200 feet wide, with provision for expansion to 3,000 for larger feeder line aircraft.

AFTER-THE-WAR EMPLOYMENT

There has been much talk and a corresponding amount of wishful thinking in respect to the adjustment period in employment after the war. A reconstructive expert declares that the problem is not going to be solved overnight by waving a magic wand. In addition to a reconversion of industry, there must be a reconversion of workers. Relatively few people intend to withdraw voluntarily from employment after the war. But most people are thinking in terms of the same job in the same place at the same pay, and in many cases this will not be possible, since so much of the present employment centres around war needs. People will have to be prepared to take other jobs, at perhaps less pay, in order to move with the times. About 335,000 persons in Greater Toronto are working, and there are about 100,000 from the same area, in addition, enlisted in the forces. About 56,000 intend to withdraw from employment at the end of the war, according to survey made recently, and about the same number returning from overseas may be expected to seek employment. War plants in Hamilton, Brantford, St. Catharines Welland and other centres present adjustment problems. The task after the war is to supply jobs for as many people as are working today—but not necessarily the same people, not necessarily the same jobs.

MUNICIPALITIES SHOULD TAKE UP REFORESTATION

Having co-operated wholeheartedly in the exploitation and denudation of the countryside, the Secretary of the Ontario Conservation and Reforestation Association contends, urban and rural people should help in solving the problems of conservation and reforestation. He holds the view that every college and university in Ontario should maintain a forest of 500 or 1,000 acres as standard equipment, and suggests that community forests be planted and developed by urban municipalities for the protection of their watersheds, to create recreational opportunities, to provide employment for their citizens and to furnish fuel and timber on a short-haul basis. Community forests could also be developed by municipalities to serve as training and recreational centres for Boy Scouts, Rangers and other youth organizations.

CONFUSION EXISTS ABOUT BACON

With the ration as to bacon in the Old Country increased and for troops in the United Kingdom jumped from nine ounces to twenty-one ounces per week, there has come an urgent appeal for more hog production for the Dominion. The Meat Board has set a 1944 export goal of 678,000,000 pounds, a figure 1,000,000 pounds in excess of last year's record mark. The exports to Britain to date have reached 535,000,000 pounds as against the minimum agreement of 400,000,000 pounds, and despite diminished reserve stocks it is believed that an average of 11,000,000 pounds per week can be secured for export during the balance of this year. An Ottawa correspondent writes that in the department there is a conviction that confusion still exists in the public mind over the United Kingdom "bacon contract". Many consumers, they believe, still think of it in terms of breakfast bacon when, in fact, the entire sides are exported. But this is emphasized. In a time of shortage, every pound of breakfast bacon that is consumed in Canada, providing it is of export quality, affects adversely the quantity that can be shipped to the United Kingdom and to the troops dependent on Canadian supply. This is so because the breakfast bacon cut from the belly automatically ruins the carcass as an export side and, therefore, the entire carcass, shoulders, hams, etc. is circuited to domestic consumption.

HOW EMPLOYMENT STARTS

Ever since it became clear that, in time of War, Canada could find employment for all willing workers, there has been a determination that, at any cost, the same conditions must exist in time of peace. "Full employment" is in the platform of all political parties. We now have to face the problem of full employment in time of peace, for it is quite clear that "port-war," which used to look like dreamland, is now just around the corner. This problem of unemployment has little to do with measures to remedy distress. Public opinion accepts measures of this sort as both desirable and inevitable. There may be doubts about the wisdom of some of those which we are planning Only Socialists appear to favor the recommendation in the Beveridge Report, that unemployment relief should be given only to those who do not accept the jobs which the government unemployment agencies choose to find for them. These are all interesting and important matters, but they do not go to the root of how we are to obtain full employment.

It might be a good thing to stop and remember that full employment starts in the stores and other business establishments in every community across this country. We hear so much about the mistakes of big business that we are apt to forget big business is only a small part of business. The bulk of the business of this country starts when someone goes into a store to buy something. The amount of employment in Canada will depend more on the people's being willing and able to find and buy what they want, at prices which they like, than on any other factor in our economic life.

Factories can run only if the goods which they make are sold. Most of the goods are sold over the counter in small businesses throughout the country. Socialism, public ownership of utilities, new financial and monetary plans are all matters which we shall probably be discussing forever, and they have little to do with the real business life of Canada. That is determined by people walking into stores and buying goods. As long as we are going to have any liberty in Canada at all, this will not be something with which governments can interefere very much. It depends on the willingness of the people to buy, the money they have to spend, and what they think of the goods which are offered. The people of Canada want lots of goods, and, as a result of the war, a great many have lots of money. If you want to find out whether there will be full employment in Canada, you might ask the storekeepers if they are going to be able to buy goods the people want and sell them at prices which will capture the market.

CONTENTED COWS GIVE MORE MILK

Contented cows give more milk. Cows are like factory workers. If conditions are bad and the workers are discontented, production will drop. Here are three suggestions for cow comfort, designed to make cows give more milk: (1) In the late fall and winter, protect the cows from wind, cold rains and snow. Do not force the cows to remain out of doors in cold weather more than is necessary Provide a dry, well-drained yard. If the yard is muddy they cannot even lie down without discomfort. (2) A cow whose feet hurt cannot work efficiently. Examine each cow's feet, and treat any existing wounds, and trim the hoofs when necesssary so that she can walk in comfort. (3) Cows that have to spend their time rubbing and scratching cannot concentrate on milk production. Check the animals for parasites and treat if necessary.

So, So

It is possible to come out on top and still be a loser, as many a bald-headed man will testify.

—v—

It was the candidate's first great speech, and he wanted to make it tell, and wished to end with a warning. He could have couched his warning in the old proverb about locking the stable door after the horse was stolen, but that was too commonplace. He wanted something original.

He quickly thought of something better. Then he shouted:

"Don't fellow countrymen and citizens, I beg you—don't wait till the house takes fire before you summon the firemen."

—V—

"Charles," said the teacher, "do you know what the word 'celerity' means?"

"Yes'm," said Charles. "It's something you put hot plates down with." without blinking an eye.

A DANGEROUS GUESSING CONTEST.

The probable date when cease fire will sound in Europe is important to us because almost every one in this country has a vital interest in the ending of hostilities. Given the approximate date, families of men overseas can begin to estimate the time which must elapse before they receive their loved ones back home again. Labor has an additional interest in the date, in planning for the transition period overlapping war production and the new production of peace time goods. Businessmen, who must plot the future of their establishments with great care are especially keen to have some one give them an approximate date of the conclusion of hostilities in Europe.

Thus, when at various times Mr. Churchill, General Eisenhower, General Montgomery, Admiral Halsley and others have attempted to give the public an idea of the length of time it would take to finish up the military campaign, their words have been read avidly.

But in the wake of such statements there has been a wave of other predictions from ten thousand minor and less informed circles. Especially since "D" Day, almost every man in the street has been taking a guess at the date of "V" Day.

SEA FOOD SAGA ..

Many of the well-known sea-foods, including the oyster and scallop, flourished here long before man was here to appreciate them. The fossilized remains of these shell-fish occupy a conspicuous place in the vast and varied collections of the Royal Ontario Museum.

The scallop, like the oyster, belongs to the group of molluscs known as "bi-valves", a name which has reference to the two shells which enclose and protect the soft animal. The mode of life of these two creatures is very different. The sedentary oyster is fastened to rocks or other objects in near-shore areas. The active scallop swims freely in coastal marine waters as deep as two hundred fathoms or more. Its power of movement is seated in a single muscle that closes the shells. This hard-worked muscle is the part we eat—the white and tender bit which tastes somewhat like lobster meat. The other soft parts within the shell we cast away. Strange though it may seem, the inactive oyster has so tough a muscle that we discard it, but regard the remainder as a delicious morsel.

Unlike the oyster, the scallop is in season the year round. Many species are known and are widely distributed Multitudes of individual scallops assemble in restricted areas to form "scallop banks" from which they are dredged. Two species in particular frequent Atlantic waters, notably from Labrador to Cape Cod. Nova Scotia waters, especially those in the Bay of Fundy, provide quantities of scallops for markets in Canada and elsewhere.

The farmer decided to give special attention to the development of his poultry yard, and he undertook the work carefully and systematically. His hired man was instructed, among other things, to write on each egg the date laid and the breed of the hen. After a month the hired man resigned. "I can't understand," the farmer declared, "why you should want to leave.'

"I'm through," the hired man asserted. "I've done all the mean jobs and never kicked. But I draw the line on being secretary to a bunch of hens."

An Authentic V-mail letter written by a Tennessee lad. "Dear Pa: I'm in a tight spot—cooped up here on this ship with guns and ammunition, submarines and dive-bombers and Yankees all around me. Tell Ma not to worry."

On the fighting front our men are still "slugging it out". Each advance . . . each new sector . . . each mile that the battle front is extended . . . is hard going. Much fighting lies ahead.

There's more to be done on the home front, too. More money is needed to enable our country to carry her share of the war's cost.

Our duty is clear . . . we, at home, must provide the money. Canada must get this money from Canadians.

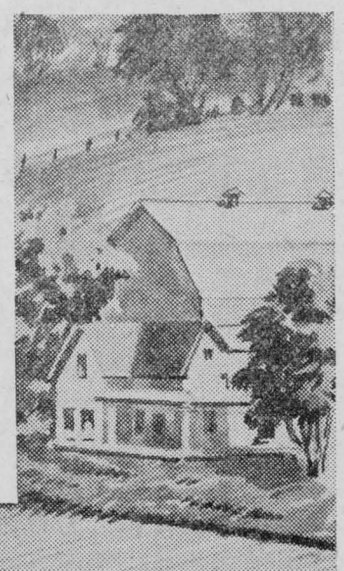

for EVERYBODY

Fortunately, most of us have good incomes. We can do our share.

But it is the extra effort that wins battles and we must be prepared to make extra effort on the home front. Canada's borrowing needs have been increased by some three hundred and twenty million dollars. That's extra effort that we, at home, must make. We must provide the money that is needed . . . more money than ever before.

We must keep faith with our fighting men. We must continue to work and save . . . and lend. We must all lend more.

"Long Distance Telephoning is heavier than it was a year ago"

IT'S TRUE—For the first three months of this year Long Distance lines handled calls at a rate which would represent an increase, over the full year, of nearly three and one-half million calls.

So you see we're not out of the woods yet—and won't be until the war is won. Please continue to keep wartime communication lines clear —use Long Distance for essential calls only. Delays can cost lives!

DOG "WORKS" IN PRESS ROOM

Printer's ink must surely flow in the veins of "Sox" a black and white mongrel dog of beagle-spaniel breed, owned by John P. Pattengill, of Watertown, N.Y. Eight years ago, Sox strayed into the press room of the Watertown Daily Times, liked the atmosphere and the roar of the press, and has returned daily except Sunday ever since.

Every morning Sox follows his master to a certain street intersection and that is the parting point. Here Mr. Pattengill bids the dog farewell for the day and Sox makes his way along several blocks to the Times Office. Though he is now nine years old, he still keeps rigidly to schedule. He arrives in front of the Times Office at 8.15 a.m., always one of the first to report for "work". Upon arrival, he places his paw against the plate-glass window of the press room to attract attention of pressmen who then let him into the building.

The hustle of men at press time fascinates Sox. He is always on hand when it comes time to unload the heavy rolls of newsprint into the warehouse at the rear of the building.

At noon, Sox moves into the stereotype room where some of the men share their lunch with him. On cold afternoons he crawls into an ideal spot in the boiler room. Nobody worries about him, as his routine is known to his owner.

After the paper has gone to press, Sox knows it is time to quit. He usually gets back to the Pattengill residence about 5 p.m.

While the dog is known as Sox, the animal was named "White Sox" because each of his four paws is white.

MANY USES OF CORN IN PEACE AND WAR

Corn has many uses. Some are well known; others are not. Over 600,000 acres are planted to corn each year in Canada. The greater part of the crop is fed to live stock and poultry on the farm in the form of ensilage, fodder, or grain for the production of meat, milk, butter, cheese and eggs, which in turn are vital foods of the nation. The remainder of the corn is used in industry where innumerable lesser known products are made.

Canadian industry requires over 10,000,000 bushels of corn annually, states G. F. H. Buckley, Dominion Experimental Station, Harrow, Ont. First, the grain is steeped and a separation of the germ and starchy portion is made. From the germ is extracted oil which has many uses. Starch is the main product of the kernel, and starch and its derivatives are used in many various ways.

Corn products are everywhere from the supper table to the battle front. On the table they will be found in salad oils, vinegar, cornstarch pudding, corn syrup and confections. Corn is used in the production of soap, laundry starch and baking powder, and also in the manufacture of rayon, leather and textiles. Adhesives and sizing compounds, which are important in the manufacture of cardboard and plywood are made from corn. The hydrolysed starch forms sugar, a portion of which is used in making explosives. The sugars are also converted into alcohol, some of which is a constituent of anti-knock gasoline.

A Dog For Miss Boo

The first time I saw him I was in a car. He was sitting meekly beside the drive of the new neighbours up the road.

"Hmm," I thought. "That'll be nice." My little girl Miss Boo, would have a dog to play with. A child needs a dog.

But soon after I got home, our cook came screaming in through the kitchen door, with her apron pulled around to the back.

"He's ten foot tall!" Lilliam shouted. "He chewed the back outen my dress. He was fixin to chew off my arm, but I ran . . ." She slumped into her kitchen chair.

"He was probably only trying to be friendly,,, I said uncertainly. But I didn't convince even myself.

I went up the road to see. He heard me coming and he was there to meet me, a charging Goliath and me with no slingshot and a congenial suspicion of dogs.

"Nice doggie nice doggie," I said vaguely, and he took it as encouragement and leaped up to look closely into my face. He was, it seemed to me, the biggest dog I had ever seen. His ears flapped and his red-rimmed eyes glowed and his teeth were an inch long.

The new neighbor, a pleasant chap, ran down to meet me and spoke sharply to the beast who put his forepaws reluctantly back on the earth.

"I see you like dogs," Mr. Marshall said. "He's only a puppy—a little too friendly at the moment, but he'll get over all that exuberance with a little training."

He kept his hand on the puppy's collar and we talked about our town and our families.

"I have a little girl," I said.

"That's great. She's going to like Pointsettia."

"Oh . . . you have a little girl, too?"

He laughed robustly. "No. This big sissy here. You see, his mother was a setter and his father a pointer. The name was inevitable wasn't it?" You could see how much he liked the whole thing. So I tried to.

"You let your little girl come up and play with him all she wants to," he said. "Pointsettia likes children."

I felt like saying, "With salt and pepper, I imagine." But I just smiled as best I could and went home.

I tried to prepare Boo by telling her how dogs never realize how big they are, and how they jump up on you to show they are friendly. But it didn't work. She met him alone on the road one day. A half hour later after I had quieted her sobbing, I could see her heart still pounding by her pinafore ruffle quivered. Something had to be done about it. So I telephoned the Marshalls and said we'd like to come up and see Pointsettia.

"Everybody likes him," Mr. Marshall said confidently. "All you need is to get acquainted with him." And then, in refutation of the silent thing which was screaming through our minds, "He's never actually bitten anybody. He only looks as if he intended to."

I tried to explain that to Boo before we paid our call.

"Yes, but . . ." she kept saying and then stopped, because there is no logical way to explain fear.

The Marshalls took us out to call on Pointsettia in his nice white doghouse. He clanked his huge chain and grinned at us and I even fed him a bone. This was a mistake, for he ground it to powder horribly before our very eyes, and it gave our fear a definite screen upon which to project its pictures.

I thought in the privacy of my own terror, "That was a cow's joint, that bone—and he ate it like a pretzel. A little girl's wrist . . ." When I glanced at Boo, I saw she had put her hands behind her.

When we finally got home again I said, "Now see! There wasn't anything to be afraid of, was there?"

Boo didn't appear to hear me.

"We kin stay home now, in summertime," Lilliam said. "But Miss Boo ain't gwine be able to walk up past that brute eve'y day to the school bus come fall. Jes haf to give up gwine to school, that's what."

But fall was a long way off, and suddenly someone thought of the way to cure the Pointsettia situation. It wasn't Pointsetia that was wrong; it was our terrible fear of him. All we needed was to get to like dogs. Once you love one dog, you're master of them all. It was as simple as all inspirations.

"I've got some wonderful news," I said to Boo. "We're going to get you a little dog of your own.

"A toy dog," she said firmly.

"No, a real dog. A little dog with long, curly ears, and a smile on his face."

"Pointsettia has a smile," she said dubiously.

A gentle little dog that belonged to her! We built him up for days, named him Frosti. He was to be a cocker spaniel, born into the world for no other reason than to follow a child around.

"Nobody can feed Frosti but me, said Miss Boo. "I'll play with him a little before I go to school . . . and then he'll walk to the bus with me. He'll sit beside the road all morning, waiting for me to come home."

The thought was joy unbearable. She had forgotten why she wanted him to walk up the road with her. Not for fear, any more, but for love. Love had cast out fear, just as the promise says.

Then Frosti came. He was the color of honey in sunlight. His eyes were like golden grapes, and his ears rippled demurely down each side of his gentle little face. Nobody on earth could have helped loving him. Miss Boo herself could hardly speak. Her whole little body was pink with emotion.

"He's my very own dog," she said. "He's mine!"

But something terrible happened. Frosti looked at her, and saw only air. He glanced at me, stopped in his tracks with one forepaw lifted, and then wagged all over. He offered me his paw, passing the spot where Boo stood as if she were mere transparency. He looked up into my face as though he had been searching for me all his life. I glared at him. But it didn't matter; he loved me anyway.

"He's not accustomed to children," I said to Boo. "I remind him of the woman who used to feed him." But I could barely keep from weeping at the look on her face.

For days Boo yearned over Frosti, and he never even noticed her. He let her feed him, of course, but she was only the waitress and he practically gave her a tip. When she called him, he turned his head, smiled politely as if she had mistaken him for someone else and went on with whatever he was doing. He was entirely courteous, but he simply had no dealings with her.

It was a new and terrible experience for Boo. Always before love had run out to meet her at all gates, more love than she could possibly use. But here was something, small and curly and adorable, whom she loved with all her heart . . . while he simply ignored her.

Most of the time Boo kept up a gallant pretense. "He's so full of mischief," she said bravely. "He likes to make-believe he doesn't know I'm his mistress."

But one night after she had gone to bed, she couldn't pretend. Her hot little hand held mine, and I could feel it wishing my hand was a furry paw.

"You know what I wish," she said. "I wish Frosti would just growl at me once so I'd know he knew I was his mistress."

But he withheld even his growls.

Then, one morning quite early, I looked out of our window to a little knoll where the sun through the leaves made a spotlight. Frosti was dancing upon it. He was chasing something invisible, touching it with his curly paw and leaping away from it. He was waltzing on his black feet, with his long ears whirling about his head, laughing to himself, like a faun in a ballet, as dogs do sometimes when all alone.

There was an audience to all this. Pointsettia came over and asked humbly if he could play too. But Frosti at once stopped dancing and lay down. Pointsettia, rebuked, went back to a respectful distance and sat down.

"Why he's a beautiful thing." I cried to myself, and I wasn't talking about the ballet dancer but about the tall, gentle watcher. "He's like a silver image sitting there . . ."

It happened several mornings, before the house was awake. Then one morning I saw a little figure wrapped in a pink bathrobe steal out through the trees and stand just as Pointsettia was standing, alert and humble and adoring. But Frosti showed that he could ignore two people as easily as one. He played about by himself, whirling and prancing and snarling at imaginary prey hidden behind clumps of leaves, but when either of the two watchers approached to join the game, he would stop at once.

Boo, her heart obsessed by her hopeless passion, forgot she had ever been afraid of Pointsettia. She sat down beside him, and the two looked very much alike—the bony sti't-legged dog and the wistful, rejected little girl, their faces turned toward something that just didn't care.

When Poinsettia's front legs got tired of being braced, he let them slide out in front of him on the slippery pine needles and then he moved an inch nearer to Boo and put his long head timidly on her lap.

For a second I thought she was going to leap up and run screaming into the house. But then her hand came down and patted Pointsettia's head. She had wanted a dog's head under her hand for such a long time.

Then she bent over and kissed the top of his head.

"Don't you mind, Pointsettia honey," she said. "He's just not used to you yet."

Pointsettia licked her hand. They understood each other perfectly, the two rejected admirers.

When fall came, and Miss Boo started back to school, she had her dog to walk up the road with her, that first morning and every morning from then on. And to wait half the afternoon for her to come back, the proudest thing in our neighborhood, and the most protective.

Boo had her dog at last, to play with and to love. But it wasn't Frosti.

FARMERS & FARM WORKERS

IMPORTANT NEWS

Selective Service Rules Covering Pulpwood Cutting are the same as last year

Pulpwood cutting is still classified as an essential war industry. Selective Service Rules still permit you to keep your status as a farmer provided you already enjoy postponement under wartime laws.

The need for woods workers is as urgent as ever. If you can leave your farm during the winter without causing a reduction in farm production you are urged to take work in the bush.

By doing woods work you will be doing a job for Canada—and you will also increase your own income.

Companies are now signing up workers for this season.

THE PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY OF CANADA

Son-in-law Writes To Collingridge Family

My Dearest Mother, Father, Charlie and Edith:

It was a wonderful surprise to receive a line from you in Canada. Very pleased to hear everything is going so well, and I think you have all been very industrious and deserve the fruits of your labours, good luck to you all and may God give you health and strength to carry on the good work. Hope Father is still keeping the flag flying. I think you have all been wonderful. There is no shadow of doubt of what Canada's efforts have been to the shortening of this terrible war with the Germans and Japs. The Canadians have been working and fighting in close contact with the British "tommy" so I am saying this from practical experience.

The Canadians and British have had some real tough nuts to crack. In fact it was these lads that really held the might and armour of Von Kluges Army and finally destroyed the very back bone of German resistance in France. "the beginning of the end" of this tyrant of Europe. No doubt you have read about Caen, Faliase, Villiars Bocaze, Tilly, Lisoms and Chambois. We have been through all of this terrible battling and have seen the results of modern warfare, and believe me, I feel proud to have served the old country in 5 years of real hard going and have the satisfaction of knowing we are nearing the end, victorious after some of the narrowest of margins. France would not believe it was true that they were once again able to call their souls their own until we reach Paris. They couldn't just believe that we were beating Germans!!!!—soldiers and armour and that was an impossibility according to the German propaganda. Ha ha. It makes us smile to think of the threats the Germans keep issuing out. The outside world would like to see the "b——ds" as they are retreating. Retreating to their Fatherland in horse-drawn vehicles, cycles with trailers, marching, running, skimming, still doing the filthy things that only this arrogant race could do to humanity. Have seen the best Germans, the very best best!—dead ones—lying sprawled out everywhere, the work of British and Canadian tommies!

When we entered Belgium we'l everybody knew then and the welcome we received was tremendous, flowers, fruits, kisses and handshakes.

Some of the banners and streamers bore these words, "Thanks for the Liberation" "Welcome the English Tommy", "Vive Les Allies" and they were truly meant. These people come and do washing and will not take any pay, a thing we appreciate most, because water has been a problem and time has been our enemy. We have travelled far on the continent and we can be sure of help if in need. Scenes I will never forget while I live, but dear mother. father, Charlie and Edith, "dear old England", with all her battle scars is quite good enough for me to spend the rest of my life home! What I would give to be with my beloved Eve and Angela, bless them! I haven't seen them since January and I'm living for the day when we will be united for all times. Angela has been a real treasure to us, and the sweetest little girl one could wish to have. Sorry to miss the "growing up years" of Angela, but it's for the younger generation that we are battling and that cause is good enough for me. God bless them and keep them happy and well. The day will not be far off now when I will have the pleasure of driving through Germany. a matter of weeks now, and then home for a spell. No bigger reward I need.

I must thank you for sending the cigarettes, expect they are on their way somewhere as I have not received them yet but will be very nice to look forward to. Will have to close now with lots of love to you all in Canada.

Your loving son,
Norm.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD
By Archbishop Trench.

I say to thee, do thou repeat
To the first man thou mayest meet
In lane, highway or open street—

That he and we and all men move
Under a canopy of love,
As broad as the blue sky above;

That doubt and trouble, fear and pain,
And anguish are all shadows vain,
That death itself shall not remain.

And we, on divers shores now cast,
Shall meet, our perilous voyage past,
All in our Father's house at last.

And ere thou leave him, say thou this
Yet one word more—they only miss
The winning of that final bliss,

Who will not count it true, that Love,
Blessing, not cursing, rules above,
And that in it we live and move.

THE MIXING BOWL

By ANNE ALLAN
Hydro Home Economist

Hello Homemakers! Since the children have settled down to scheduled school hours, we have been thinking more about turning on the oven to pop in something that may be fresh and varied from the standard supper dishes of the past month. We can dream about rich pastry cases filled with creamed shrimp and mushrooms, or for dessert fruit and whipped cream—we can still get along without them. There are very suitable substitutes—pop-overs, and plain pastry puff shells. The food that is put into these cases may be hot or cold, plain or sweet.

But no matter what you use as fillings, you need to make sure the shells are not tough and heavy. The secret of successful pop-overs and puffs is two-fold—proper beating to incorporate plenty of air and careful baking to hold the shape of the pop-over and puff made by expanding the steam inside. The expanding steam causes the mixture to rise and the combination of gluten in the bread flour and the intense, even heat of the oven does the "puffing". Then reduced heat for the rest of the baking allows the puff to cook inside.

We give you the recipe for pop-overs and cream puffs (war-time versions) together in The Mixing Bowl column because they are similar in principal and use. Pop-overs are sometimes served piping hot with butter in the same manner as tea biscuits—to accompany salads or simple fruit desserts. But they are also good split and filled with cream chicken, creamed green beans and carrots. Use a main course accompanied with browned potatoes and a generous serving of salad. The puffs, if made large, are perfect for a company dessert if filled with cream custard, fruit sauce or chocolate mixture. You will find these sweet puffs easy on the sugar and yet a satisfactory substitute for rich cakes.

POP-OVERS

¼ teaspoon salt, 1 cup sifted bread flour, 7-8 cup milk, 2 eggs, ½ tablespoon melted shortening.

Sift salt and flour together. Add milk gradually, beating until mixture is smooth. Beat eggs until light and add to first mixture. Add shortening and beat well. Pour into hot greased muffin pan and bake in electric oven 30 minutes at 475 degrees F., reducing the temperature to 350 degrees F. for 15 minutes. Yield: 9 pop-overs.

CREAM PUFF SHELLS

¼ cup butter, ½ cup water, ⅛ teaspoon salt, ½ cup bread flour, 2 eggs, unbeaten.

Combine the butter, water and salt in saucepan and bring to boiling point. Sift in flour and cook, stirring constantly until smooth mixture forms a ball in the centre of the pan.

Remove from electric element and let stand five minutes. Add eggs, one at a time, beating vigorously after adding each egg. Mixture should be very stiff. Drop by spoonfuls on buttered cookie sheet. Makes eight large puffs or 18 small ones or 24 afternoon-tea size. Bake in very hot oven (450 degrees F.) for 15 minutes. Reduce heat to 350 degrees and bake for 20 to 25 minutes longer. Small puffs will not take quite as long to finish baking. When cool, cut slit in side of puff and fill with cream custard filling, salad mixture.

CREAM FILLING FOR PUFFS.

1-3 cup sugar, 2½ tablespoons flour, ⅛ teaspoon salt, 1 cup milk, 1 egg, ½ teaspoon vanilla, 2 teaspoons butter.

Mix the sugar, flour and salt in a double boiler. Add the milk gradually and cook, stirring constantly until the mixture is thick (3 to 5 minutes). Cover and cook for 10 minutes longer. Add a little of this mixture to the slightly beaten egg, mix well and return to the double boiler. Cook for a minute longer, stirring constantly. Remove from stove.

TAKE A TIP

1. Use sweet cider to flavour gelatin moulds for variation.
2. If cocoa is to be substituted for one ounce of chocolate in a sauce recipe, use one quarter cup cocoa and mix with cornstarch and sugar.
3. Bake beets occasionally. Wash, trim and roast as you do potatoes.
4. Increase the amount of salt in a recipe when you substitute shortening for butter.

AND FARM PROPERTY
WINDSTORM & AUTOMOBILE RISKS ALSO

Prices of Farm Products have advanced but the rates for Fire Insurance in our Companies remain the same and are the lowest in the Province for this class. PEACE OF MIND

Only if you KNOW you are adequately protected by good automobile insurance can you drive with that peace of mind which makes motoring a pleasure. Only in this way can you protect yourself against serious financial loss through bodily injury to other persons or their property.

Because nowadays you are driving fewer miles than you used to is certainly no reason for being without the protection an Automobile policy will give you.

Remember that your car is older and, therefore, less reliable mechanically. And remember that it takes but a split fraction of a second for "something" to happen.

Let us plan your automobile insurance to give you the protection you need TODAY.
