A. C. CASSELMAN IS AGAIN CHOICE OF CONSERVATIVES

Conservative standard-bearer and member of the Federal Parliament for Grenville-Dundas for over 25 years, Arza Clair Casselman, K.C., of Prescott, was the unquestioned choice of the Progressive Conservatives to again contest the constituency in the forthcoming elections, when the annual meeting of the riding association was held in Spencerville Town Hall Wednesday night. The large auditorium was filled to overflowing by delegates and supporters of the party.

A. C. CASSELMAN, K. C., who was again selected as candidate for the Progressive Conservative party in Grenville-Dundas, at their nominating convention in Spencerville on Wednesday.

In his acceptance speech, A. C. Casselman flayed the Liberal administration for its failure to hold the British markets for Canadian farm produce and permitting costs of farm feeds to be doubled.

"During the war, Canada held 123 various contracts for the supplying of food to Britain. Today that number has dwindled to three, and this year's contract for cheese is at the lowest figure in years", the nominee charged.

The Liberal Government had failed to live up to the 1945 election promises to restore food prices to the 1941 level, Mr. Casselman charged, citing comparative prices to bear out his contention. He also quoted figures to show that cost of feeds had more than doubled in two years.

"If the farmer is prosperous, every other class is prosperous", he commented.

"Our British food markets are being lost because the government has failed to remove the difference between the English pound and our dollar and Britain is buying even from 'Iron Curtain' countries instead of from Canada."

Speaking of income tax reductions Mr. Casselman charged that the tax-reducing budget of the last session has yet to be voted on in Parliament and therefore is not binding. The Progressive-Conservative Party, in its policy, set forth at the national convention last fall, had provided greater exemptions than were allowed in the so-called "Sunshine Budget".

"There are very few farmers in the income tax bracket, but I find they are being bothered continually by 'snoopers' from the Income Tax Department, who comed armed with books, pencils and endless questions that the farmer should not answer", he stated.

Touching briefly on the C. C. F. party, Mr. Casselman, in closing, maintained that the Coldwell-led group were pinning their hopes on being in a position to assist the Liberal government to remain in power.

Hon. Geo. H. Challies, M.L.A. for Grenville-Dundas, addressed the meeting briefly on hydro affairs in the province, and also referred to the government's margarine act, which he said was designed to protect the dairy industry in Ontario.

Another speaker was W. H. Nickle, K. C., of Kingston.

Presiding at the meeting was Mrs. Marion Storey of Kemptville.

LOOK AT YOUR HOME THROUGH THE EYES OF A STRANGER

Could your home do with a good coat of paint and a general 'fix-up'? It's strange how one is apt to notice neglect about someone else's house and overlook it on his own. It's a costly tendency too. For one bit of disrepair soon leads to another. Wood deteriorates when the paint wears off. A broken post undermines the whole fence.

That goes for indoor improvements too. You save money, time and material, by attending to home repairs right away—before the damage gets worse. And every improvement adds to your comfort and to your pride in your home.

If you need more money than you have on hand to pay for the necessary repairs, see Charles Wood, Bank of Montreal manager, about a low-cost loan. Save by paying cash. And save yourself trouble by paying all your repair bills off at once.

Why not make a list of the repairs your house needs today? Then discuss your improvement plans with Mr. Wood in confidence. You'll like his helpful attitude.

RUMOR ABOUT ARMORIES IS BRANDED FALSEHOOD

Most of us have heard some of the wild rumors, which are started by maliciously-minded persons in every election campaign, in order to harm the chances of election of a candidate whom they do not personally support

There is one of those rumors which has been going around in Morrisburg recently, which should be scotched.

Some time ago, interested officials and citizens approached the Department of National Defence to see if it were possible to have an armories built in Morrisburg. A representative of the department came to Morrisburg to discuss the local situation at first hand, and later, while not promising an immediate building, intimated that Morrisburg would be given consideration, as soon as possible after their present projects of furnishing married quarters to forces personnel, would permit.

Certain unkind individuals in Morisburg have recently intimated that the Liberal candidate, Mr. J. Frank Casselman, had for reasons of his own, advised against the erection of any such armory.

Needless to say, this rumor will be treated with the disdain it deserves, by any thinking person. It is a deliberate falsehood, started with the sole idea of taking votes from this candidate.

CORRECTION!

In the report of the Luther League drama contest held at Arnprior, published in last week's issue, the name of Lyn Jackson should have read as "Clare McHaffie". The editor sincerely regrets this unintentional error.

CANADIAN CLUB HEARS AUSSIE HIGH COMMISSIONER

The second meeting of the Morrisburg and District Canadian Club for the season was held in the Club rooms Wednesday evening with a large attendance. The guest speaker for the evening was the Rt. Hon. F. M. Forde, P.C., Australian High Commissioner to Canada.

The meeting opened with the grace said by Rev. G. O. Davies, and the toast to the King. Miss Eva Cassell played the National Anthem.

The Club president, W. J. Cass, in his opening remarks welcomed the many ladies in the gallery and particularly a delegation of young ladies from Iroquois High School.

He gave a brief outline of the distinguished career of the guest speaker, whom he introduced to his audience.

Mr. Forde thanked the president, and also Dr. Davy, for the opportunity of addressing such a fine gathering. He gave an outline of the history of Australia, of the recent progress and present plans of that commonwealth, which he said, was united on at least one point,—that they would always remain within the British Empire. He told of the geography and industries of his country and of their determination to assist Britain to emerge from her present difficulties as an even stronger and greater nation. As two of the greatest food producers in the world, he advocated a united policy by Canada and Australia, to solve their common difficulties. At the conclusion of the address a thirty-minute sound colour film enttitled "Australia Today" was shown. This showed natural scenery, plants and animals and also many of the country's industries.

The speaker was thanked by Dr. Will C. Davy, who gave a brief review of the speakers from nearly all parts of the world, who had addressed the Club in its twenty five years of existence.

Mr. W. J. Cass thanked the ladies of the Anglican Church who catered to the banquet, and the meeting was closed with the singing of O Canada, with Miss Eva Cassell as accompanist

WEST OF THE SUN

A Serial Story
by
JOSEPH LEWIS CHADWICK

SYNOPSIS

The story thus far: Virginia Ames leaves her home in Washington immediately after receiving a letter from her fiance Phil Lawrence, urging her to come to him. Crossing the Arizona plains by stagecoach, and within a hundred miles of Santa Bonita, where Phil has a ranch, the stage passengers are held up and a money box addressed to a man named Barron at Santa Bonita is stolen. A cameo pin is taken from Virginia, but that is all; the bandits let her keep her letter. Lt. Jim Randall, whom Virginia once knew and loved, escorts the stage from Lannasa. Baron, who joins the group at Lannasa, accompanies them on the 70-mile trip to Santa Bonita. Halfway there they are stopped by Apaches, apparently bent on mischief.

CHAPTER III

Jim Randall surveyed his position with challenging eyes. It wasn't pleasant. His force was bottled up in a small clearing. The terrain was rough. Trees and brush and rocks formed dense walls which could have concealed a thousand Apaches.

He didn't like it. His mind was uneasy. He had the officer's fear of leading his command into a trap.

Jim watched the Apache warrior pause at the water's edge and signal with his lance. He gave a start when he saw the second Indian ride from cover. There was something about this warrior that marked him. He sat on his droopy pinto pony with a definite dignity, a fine figure of a man. His wace was dark and impassive and intelligent.

Scarlett at his side muttered in awe, "Natchi!"

Jim felt a quiver of excitement run over his muscles. Natchi! Natchi himself! Leader of a marauding band that had cut a bloody, fiery trail through southern Arizona and New Mexico and down into northern Mexico. Head of a raider band which had eluded the army with the ease of a phantom cavalcade.

The two warriors rode out into midstream and halted before the whitemen, Natchi was in his prime; his body lithe and muscular. He was naked to breech-clout and moccasins and cartridge bandolier across his chest. A head-band held back his jet-black hair. His face looked cast in bronze, an impassive mask. It was one of character, the character of treachery and savagery.

Mel Scarlett talked guttural Apache, using sign language, too. Natchi answered, his voice throaty and gripping.

The scout interpreted. "He says you, the man with the blue eyes, arrested his son Bunato. You hid him away in the white man's fort."

"Tell him," Jim said. "Bunato stole white man's horses and must be punished."

It was while Scarlett interpreted that the third warrior appeared and silently joined them. The Apache chief talked long, and before he had finished the fourth Indian rode from cover and entered the stream. When Natchi's voice stopped, Scarlett said:

"He wants to know how his son will be punished, Lieutenant." Then, his voice uneasy: "I don't like this, sir. They're up to something. Four against us now, and here comes another. Looks like a trap. Did you notice those rifles?"

Jim Randall nodded. "All sharps. And brand-new. Plenty of cartridges too. It's trouble all right."

The fifth warrior had appeared and was easing toward them. The two white men betrayed no sign that they noticed the ruse. But the situation was danger-filled. Jim said:

"Ask him if he sees that soldier kneeling behind that fallen tree."

The answer came quickly. Scarlett interpreted. "He says he does, Lieutenant."

"Good. Tell him that soldier is a sharpshooter. Tell him he has his rifle trained on the space between the eyes of Natchi. Tell him if one more warrior comes to the stream, the soldier will shoot."

Natchi's face remained expressionless as he heard the interpretation. He studied the officer's face with smoldering eyes. Then he made a sign. His warriors turned their horses and rode from the water, then on into the screening brush. Natchi remained alone.

Scarlett said, "He says the man with the blue eyes is a fox."

"Tell him Natchi is a wolf. Tell him his son must go to prison until the second winter ends. Tell him it is bad medicine for an Apache buck to steal white men's horses."

Natchi's face grew hard and cruel as Scarlett spoke, and his voice was bitter when he answered.

The scout interpreted. "He says the white man's law is not for the Apache. And that the man with blue eyes should know that the wolf is stronger than the fox."

"Ask him where he got those rifles."

Scarlett obeyed. Then said, "He won't tell, sir. But he says he has many such rifles—more than you have."

"Tell him my soldiers shoot straight and fast," Jim said.

TABLE TALKS

by Jane Andrews.

From the time the first of your "garden truck" is ready to use right up until you've picked the very last string bean you have the makings of wonderful plank and platter dishes.

Such a dish is practically a whole meal—meat, vegetables and mashed potatoes—all cooked together on an oak plank or oven platter. Oven time is short and hot—375F or 400F usually; so it's best to choose meats that cook quickly, such as steaks, lamb chops, ham, weiners or fish.

The planks are 10 by 14 inch ovals, an inch thick, and you can buy them in department or hardware stores. But if you have a nice block of oak around your place, your husband or son can smooth it with steel wool and make your plank for you. Ask him to make a scooped-out place at one end with three grooves leading to it to drain meat drippings.

Before using a plank for the first time be sure and brush it with oil or melted, unsalted shortening, and warm in a slow oven—the same as you'd pre-heat a new frying pan or waffle iron. After that, the only care it needs is washing and drying.

Here's one combination that I think you'll like. Arrange lamb chops on the plank, and oil the wood around them. (Plank should always be completely covered with food, or well oiled, to prevent charring.) Put in a 375F oven for 10 minutes, to brown the chops on one side.

Meanwhile, cook asparagus in a small amount of boiling water, and pressure-cook potatoes for mashing. (If you haven't a pressure cooker, you'll want to start the potatoes boiling well ahead of putting the meat in the oven, of course).

Now turn the chops; border them with asparagus and mashed potatoes. Return the plank to the oven for 15 minutes. Now put the whole thing on the table and serve, with any sort of sauce or relish you fancy. There are those who claim that it's all imagination to say that "planking" lends a flavor all its own—but I don't think, after you've tried it, that you'll agree with that.

Here's a cake that can be eaten just "as is," or cut in squares and served with whipped cream. The recipe came to me from a woman out west who's famous for the table she sets. She calls it:

MAHOGANY CAKE

1 cup thick, sour cream
2 cups sugar
4 eggs
2½ cups flour
2 level teaspoons soda
1 heaping teaspoon baking powder
½ cup cocoa dissolved in 1 cup boiling water
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon salt

Method. Beat eggs. Add sugar and cream. Next the flour, baking powder and salt, sifted together. Mix well. Next add dissolved cocoa, which has been cooled, and lastly the soda, which has been dissolved in vanilla. Bake in a moderate oven for about an hour. This can be cut in squares and served with whipped cream.

Does the cooky jar show signs of getting empty again? Foolish question, if there happens to be "young-'uns" around the place. I think they'll go in a big way for what another noted cook calls:

DOUBLE DATERS

1¾ cups brown sugar
1 cup shortening
¾ cup sour milk
1 level teaspoon soda
2 cups oatmeal (ground)
2 cups flour

Filling

1 cup dates
1 cup sugar
1 cup water

Boil filling until thick; cool

Mix cooky ingredients in order given (creaming sugar and shortening). Roll, then cut in rounds or any desired shape. Spread filling on half of cookies, then place another cooky on top of each and pinch edges together. Bake in a moderately hot oven.

Which will have to be all for just now, but I'll be back again next week.

The two survivors of a shipwreck, a seaman and a stockbroker, had clambered on to a raft.

"If a ship doesn't sight us soon," said the seaman, "we'll starve."

"Don't talk nonsense!" snapped the stockbroker. 'I've got plenty of money."

NEW and USEFUL TOO--

DRAPERY FIXTURE. Six-way drapery fixture makes small windows look larger, wider and higher and can be adjusted to suit each problem. Non-rusting, off-white enamel finish is sprayed on and baked for permanence. Steel rod can be changed in size from 16¾ in. to 24 in., thus adding two feet to width of window. Projection from window can be adjusted from 2½ in. to 5¾ in. allowing drapes to hang straight despite venetian blinds or radiators.

STEAM IRON. Steam iron attachment which converts electric iron into a steam iron is said to eliminate all possibility of explosions. Steam is formed on the "flash-boiler" principle by water dripping into the steam chamber a little at a time, instead of boiling a quantity of water to produce steam. Water tank never gets hot. can be refilled any time during ironing, and uses any tap water available.

CHARCOAL GRILL. Complete outdoor grill is scientifically designed for cooking and boiling over lump charcoal or charcoal briquets. Is built of grey cast iron with ten-bar malleable iron flush top grill. Is finished in aluminum paint. Unit measures 19⅜ in. wide, 17⅛ in. deep and 13¼ in. high. Has two hinged grills—lower one close to the coals for fast cooking and —upper one for boiling. Weighs 84 lbs. Comes in seven simple parts with all necessary bolts and nuts and each part is easily identified for assembling.

ANNE HIRST

Your Family Counselor

When a girl falls in love with a married man, she is a pathetic creature indeed. She swallows every statement he makes about his wife. She pictures him as the martyr in a marriage where he is always "misunderstood." She feels complimented that he chooses her for his confidante, and draws her own conclusions — usually, it must be said, to the detriment of the wife who sits patiently at home.

One wife tells her side of the story::

"Your advice to 'WAITING, Anne Hirst, was excellent. But as the wife she might have been writing about, I'd like to say this:

"I really feel sorry for the girl. That she is in love with my (?) husband, I don't doubt. But what she doesn't know is that she is not the first one he has professed to love. Every time he has become infatuated with a girl, he has talked of a divorce. Rather than make a scene, I brush it off with, 'Go ahead, if you want to. 'But he has never gone ahead, and probably never will.

"Does this girl think that after nearly seven years together, we have nothing but disagreements? It is true we have our troubles. But there have been many, many wonderful days of joy and happiness which cannot be overlooked.

"We have no children it is true. But she has known us only a year, or she wouldn't have said it was because I didn't want them. I have lost two children. God only knows how it hurt.

"Girls who fall in love with married men only ask for heartbreak. They don't seem to realize that, if these men really loved them, they would wait till they were free before telling of their love-not subject them to anxious waiting that may only hamper the girl's chances of finding someone who could offer more than, 'maybe if I get a divorce.'

"This is the other side of the story—which this girl could have found out if she had been the 'good friend' she claimed to be.

"I sincerely hope this will help any girl who lets herself fall in love with a married man, and is left 'waiting'.

These words should surely make any girl in such a situation stop andwonder.

Aside from the ignominy of dating a man who has a wife, she should question what sort of man is this who tells her only one side of his story. Who never confesses his other light o' loves, but allows her to believe she is the only one in the world who ever appealed to him. Who has not the slightest intention of divorcing the patient wife who forgives and forgives and takes him back again and again, with a new hope rising everytime in her heart.

How foolish are these emotional creatures—and how evil the men ho tempt them!

To "The Wife:" Whether the man involved is your husband or some other wronged woman's, your revelation should warn every girl who thinks a married man is in love with her

She is, as you say, only asking for heartbreak—Thank you warmly for your letter.

"What would his wife have to say to me?" That should be the problem of every girl who dates a married man. Anne Hirst's long observations of such sad affairs can be useful. Write her at Box 1, 123 New Toronto, Ont.

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

by Gwendoline P. Clarke

There was something different about that heat wave we endured last week from any we had had before. Did you notice it? Unless you were outside quite a bit you probably wouldn't. I mean there was no shade. No possibility of standing under a tree for a minute to get away from the scorching sun because on the trees there were no leaves, and so — no shade. Of course, as I write, things have changed — a few days can make a lot of difference. Now, the trees and shrubs are once again spreading their welcome, protective foliage. How wonderful it is to have trees! You know, an Ontario heat wave without shade makes me think of the Western prairie. Hot, blistering sun — and for miles and miles, not a tree in sight. So often out West I used to long for a tree — just one tree — where one could sit for a few minutes enjoying the shade and the cooling sound of wind rustling the leaves.

Well, we may not have appreciated that spell of unseasonable heat but Mother Nature seemed to like it. The newly sown spring grain came up before it was hardly in the ground; bare cherry trees almost blossomed overnight; welcome rhubarb made its appearance and was ready just as we had finished the last of our winter fruit supply. We also managed to get our garden in and I am hoping it, too, will share in the quick growing season.

Our garden could have gone in sooner but I had to wait until our men were through seeding. Oh yes, I could have done it myself, except that any time I tackle the job alone I never get the rows straight — even though I measure distances between rows very carefully and have a string line to guide me—maybe it is because the rows are so long. Anyway, to avoid justified criticism afterwards, I wait for Partner to help me with the job. Now when the garden comes up I won't hear scathing comments such as — "Crooked as a snake-rail fence . . . how can you hope to scuffle rows like that . . . if I couldn't put in a garden straighter than that I'd eat my shirt!"

So you see what I mean . . . Of course I also prefer straight rows in a garden but when I get hold of a hoe to scoop out the seed rows it seems to go every which-way. I wonder what would happen if I had to plough a straight furrow!

Incidentally, our Honey was a great help in putting in garden. As soon as a nice, cool, moist furrow was scooped out Honey would flatten herself out in the middle of it. And then, no sooner was she chased out of it than I would turn round and find her running off with a packet of seeds. Reproved again she would look at us sideways as much as to say — "Well, what can a fellow do?" Probably at that moment Black Joe would appear and then chasing the cat would solve Honey's problems for the time being.

On the whole putting in garden is a nice job . . . one has only to look up to see a clear-cut view of "the mountain" — the sandpits at the brickyards breaking and intensifying the dense green of the hills and fields. How we should miss it if the earth should suddenly open and swallow our "mountain" — or, to give it what I believe is its true geographical description — the Niagara Escarpment. And then, in the garden, we have the song of the birds. We have so many birds around here — nothing very rare perhaps — but because many of our belong to a common species does not make their joyous singing any less pleasant to listen to. Blackbirds and orioles vie with each other in song, with the cheery bob-o-link and song sparrow joining in. Yes, our birds provide us with a music festival of the air.

One day as I listened to a bird singing, I recalled a poem of Wordsworth's that I loved as a child although it used to make me feel I wanted to hide some place and cry — it has such a lilting sadness. If any farm readers get a little fed up with farm life at times, look through any collection of poems and you will probably find the one I have reference to — "The Reverie of Poor Susan". Read it, and imagine yourself as Susan, walking through Wood Street, on your way to work, as she probably was — and think what it would mean to hear "in the silence of morning the song of the bird".

Well, I seem to have run out of space — and I had quite a lot to say about birds — and cats, but maybe I'll get around to it next week. For the present I'll leave this question with you — can we keep both cats and birds? I say yes — but only if you love them both. 'Bye for now . . . more next week — I hope!

Standing Guard—Gerard "Smithy" Menuhin, 9-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Yehudi Menuhin, seems to enjoy the task of watching his famous violinist-father's priceless Stradivarius and Guarnerius violins, in the canvas case, while his parents clear through customs at New York's LaGuardia Field. The family arrived from London en route to its Alma, Calif., home. Smithy, who was born in Scotland, has made three transatlantic crossings.

Sally Annes Get a New Look—Women of the Salvation Army won't be wearing those quaint, blue bonnets, right much longer. The Army recently adopted a trim, navy blue felt hat, left. The stiff old-fashioned chapeau was made with a high arch in back to fit the "bun" of hair women wore at the nape of the neck. Up-to-date-looking Sally Annes agree it's definitely passe now.

Why Don't They Tell The Folks?

One fundamental principle both of good business and of good public relations is to keep your customers or public informed in advance of any change in policies or charges which may affect them.

Here's what happened to one savings bank depositor, says a writer in The Financial Post.

Mystified by a 25-cent charge in his bank book for each of the last two months, this depositor asked the bank to explain it last week. The accountant informed him that all the Canadian banks had agreed to a new arrangement for the service charges which became effective on Jan. 1, 1949. In his case the charge was because he went one cheque over the free limit allowed in each month. Had he known he could have avoided this charge. He still has not received any notification nor seen any sign announcing the change.

No one will deny that the banks should be able to make a reasonable charge for their services. But surely if they change the "rules"—i.e. the basis for the charges—they should notify their customers at the time and post the new schedule prominently in the bank offices. That is only good business practice. It would avoid that distasteful feeling that "They tried to slip one over."

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. How long before the appointed date of a wedding should the invitations be mailed?

A. From two to three weeks in advance.

Q. When leaving, is it better for a dinner guest to thank his hostess for having him to dinner or tell her how much he enjoyed the evening?

A. Tell her how much he has enjoyed the evening.

Q. Should the host and hostess always provide new decks of cards for a bridge party?

A. Yes, always, and for a poker party, too. To throw out a soiled dilapidated deck of cards would be about the same as if the host were unshaven and wearing a soiled, wrinkled shirt.

Nerve Wracking

The fellow was in very bad shape. His nerves were really shot. He went to a doctor and the doctor told him he was a nervous wreck.

"How on earth did you ever get into this condition?" the doctor asked.

"Well," said the man, "it's like this. I work for an orange packing company. I stand at the end of a ramp down which the oranges come. Each big orange I have to put on a pile of oranges that are for export. Medium-sized oranges I put aside for domestic use. And the smaller oranges are allocated to the orange-juice companies. And there I stand all day—decisions, decisions, decisions!"

The SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By Rev. R. Barclay Warren

Jesus Sentenced to Death
John 19: 1-16

Golden Text: "Christ . . . when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not. I Peter 2:21, 23.

The Jewish religious leaders had decided that Jesus was worthy of death because he blasphemed in saying that he was the Son of God. But being a subject people, they were unable to carry out the death sentence. So they led Jesus to Pilate, the Roman emperor. Pilate examined Jesus and announced, "I find in Him no fault at all." But the infuriated leaders would not accept such a verdict. Pilate sought to evade the issue by sending Jesus to King Herod of Galilee who was in the city that day. But Jesus was returned. Then he sought to placate the wrath of the accusers by scourging Jesus, determining them to release him. But that failed. According to custom, he offered to release a prisoner. Whom would he release—Jesus, or Barabbas, a murderer? To his dismay, they chose Barabbas. Pilate was troubled. His wife warned him, 'Have nothing to do with this just person, for I have suffered many things this night in a dream because of him." He presented Jesus before them as a harmless man, crowned with thorns. But they would not relent.

In desperation they threatened. "If thou let this man go, thou are not Ceasar's friend." Pilate understood. If he did not yield to their demands, they would report him to Ceasar. His record would not stand the scrutiny of the firm emperor. He had mingled the blood of Galileans with their sacrifice. He must choose between Jesus and what appeared to be his self-interest, between right and selfishness. He chose the latter. Washing his hands in professed innocency, he delivered Jesus to be crucified. Gentile and Jew had collaborated in sentencing to death God's well-beloved Son.

Tradition says that the Jews on a later occasion complained of Pilate's conduct. On his way to Rome to answer for his deeds, he committed suicide.

Some have sought to excuse Pilate on the ground that he was a tool of Providence to carry out God's plan. But Pilate was a free moral agent. His sin was not necessary for our salvation. The glaring fact is that there are Pilates all about us: men and women and youth who are placing self before Jesus Christ. Jesus said, "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his left for my sake shall find it." Matt. 16:25.

by A SIXBIT CRITIC

John Lardner, as you probably know, is a son of the one-and-only, the late and still lamented Ring W. Lardner. He greatly resembles his old man in personal appearance. Sometimes he writes very much like him as well. (And in our book there is no higher praise to be heaved at a writer on sports.)

In a recent issue of NEWSWEEK, John has a very witty column in which he tells how the late Joe Jacobs has achieved immortality by having his name and sayings—two of them— included in the latest edition of the classic "Bartlett's Familiar Quotations."

Joe Jacobs, in case you fail to remember, was a noted manager of fighters, better known in ring circles as "Yussel the Muscle", who was around and about back in the days when pickings in the box-fight racket were a lot jucier than they are at present—or than they are likely to be for some time, in our opinion.

"Yussel", of course, is just a Yiddish nickname which any boy named "Joseph" might wear. But Jacobs gained the tag of "the Muscle" through his own unaided achievements, and it bespoke his matchless skill in the gentle art of "muscling in" and grabbing himself a piece of any fighter who looked to be on his way to fame and fortune, principally the latter.

Some of Jacobs' methods in the muscling process would hardly have won him high honors in the Boy Scouts, or even Honorable Mention in a Church Sewing Circle. Still, he generally got his man, and always got the dough, and went down to his grave famous as one of the sharpest operators where "every man for theirself" is the first rule of conduct.

The first of Yussel's many notable sayings to be included in Mr. Bartlet's collection is his "We was robbed," a remark he was wont to emit almost unfailingly any time a referee's decision went against one of his battlers.

Still, in spite of John Lardner—and Bartlett—thinking it worthy of preservation, we personally have never rated it as higher than possibly Grade B Plus. Long before Joe Jacobs was around it was a widespread custom of fight managers to use the plural instead of singular when speaking to one of their hired help; in fact, "Go in and battle him kid, he can't hurt US" ante-dated Yussel by many years.

But the second specimen of Joe's dicta which Bartlett has included really deserves to be embalmed in the records; and Lardner tells how he, personally, was present when it dripped from the Jacobs' lips. Joe, like many of his ilk, was a renowned opponent of early rising and open-air exercise. Although he wasn't the author of the famous epigram, "Any guy who gets up before three P.M. is a night-watchman" he might well have been.

However, one October day, some miscreant persuaded Jacobs to journey out to the Detroit Ball Park to see a World Series game. The afternoon was on the chilly side—in fact it was so cold that the fans stayed away in droves. For some four innings the shivering Jacobs sat in the windy Press Box where he was an invited guest. Then somebody asked him what he thought of the Great American pastime.

Yussel's reply was short, pithy and to the point. Unclenching his store teeth from the cigar they were chatteringly attempting to clench, Joe said, bitterly, "I shoulda stood in bed." Then, looking neither to the right or the left, he took his departure and headed, presumably, for the warm quilts.

So now Joe's "I shoulda stood in bed" is in Bartlett—and our thanks to John Lardner for telling us they are there, and reminding us of the circumstances which prompted its utterance.

As you have probably noticed, we have been somewhat dilatory in predicting the outcome of the King's Plate in detail. There is a reason for this. We hope that our pickings will reach some of you too late to take action on, to your later regret.

* * *

Still, duty is duty, so here goes. And to make up for our tardiness we are going to give you a choice, not only of horses, but of selectors. First, here are the views of a friend who has been picking them and playing them, man and boy, for nigh on forty years; and with such notable success that he still works hard at his trade every day.

* * *

He is no piker. He picks you not only the winner, but the place and show horses as well. He sees them coming in: 1, BUNTY LINE; 2, EPIC; 3, SPEEDY IRISH. He has so much faith in all three that he's going to play them that way, and we only hope he doesn't wear tight shoes as it's a long walk home.

* * *

As for ourself, we look for GEM THIEF to take it all; and we'd be prepared to wager all our wealth we're right, the only trouble being that they don't have wickets that take anything under two-dollar bets.

How To Get A Good Credit Rating

For some time the Globe and Mail has been reprinting items which appeared in the Toronto Globe just 100 years ago. From the issue of May 12, 1849, comes this item, which should be of interest to many, especially those in the printing and publishing business.

A New Fact Disclosed

We were not aware until recently that the books of newspaper publishers are consulted, to quite a large extent, by people in business to ascertain the pecuniary standing of persons. Debts for newspapers come due once a year; and persons who pay up regularly are regarded as prompt men, and worthy of confidence. To ascertain whether a man is good, they find out what paper he takes and contrive in some way to peer into the account. A shrewd observer of human nature said in a newspaper office lately: "Give me a printer's book, after all, to tell whether a man's good. They're a complete thermometer, sir, a credit thermometer. We always know a man to be bad if he doesn't pay the printer."

To which we can only add that, while the advice given is indubitably sound, many printers wonder why, even after the lapse of a century, so many fail to accept it.

WHAT GOES ON IN THE WORLD

by Norman Blair

GREAT BRITAIN

In certain Conservative circles pressure is said to be exerted toward "whitewashing" Franco's Spain by resemption of normal diplomatic relations between London and Madrid. American military authorities have been pointing out the advantages of having Spain as a partner in the Atlantic defence system, and some Conservative leaders are taking the same view.

But such an idea is stirring up considerable dissent among the laborites, who consider it little short of a crime that Franco Spain should be pardoned without being in any way reformed, or that the nation which has suppressed all trade unions and crammed its jails with political prisoners should be considered as a possible ally with the west.

"Britain and America protest when countries in Eastern Europe disregard the code of civil liberty," thundered The New Statesman and Nation editorially. "What semblance of moral and social integrity would remain to the Atlantic Pact if it included Fascist Spain?"

But where Spain is concerned there are other considerations which weigh with the British Government, in addition to American military views. For instance, reports have been circulated in London that one of Spain's top generals has offered the United States its choicc of any air base it wants in Spain, with practically no strings attached.

But would Spain be of any real value as in ally, in case of future war? That is to say, of more value than as a neutral. The Spanish army is large but badly equipped. The transport system is chaotic, all railways having gone without major repairs since the civil war. And all the millions the United States would have to pour into that country in order to bring it to anything like real effectiveness might better be spent, in the opinion of many, in strengthening Britain and France's defences.

But the basic question goes much deeper than this. To the great mass of labor and liberal opinion in western Europe, Spain is a major touchstone of the West's real purposes, as one writer puts it. Therefore, are the nations of the Council of Europe, whose charter eulogizes "individual freedom, political liberty, and the rule of law," going to admit as a partner into their midst a still unrepentant ally of Hitler and Mussolini?

On the answer to that question a very great deal might depend—more than most people think.

ISRAEL

Although flushed with victory, at least temporary, over their Arab enemies, and regarding their admission as a nation among nations, thoughtful citizens of Israel are worrying over the threat of communism.

The economic position of the new nation is by no means strong. Although, so far, there are only a few thousands unemployed, first demonstrations of people demanding work and failing to find it have occurred at Hakirya and other places, and signs of possible future trouble are plain to be seen.

The pressure of mass immigration on cumulative wartime shortages is sending the cost of living index constantly higher. Nearly 60,000 immigrants are living in camps. All ships that can be accommodated at Haifa, Tel Aviv and Jaffa are being unloaded; but few of these go away fully loaded.

This is because the year's citrus crops have been disappointingly small. The export of potash from the Dead Sea has not been resumed. And the cracking towers and storage tanks of the Haifa oil industry stand silent and idle.

To close the export-import gap Israel counts on two major sources of aid—the tourist industry, and huge voluntary contributions from world Jewry. When asked if he thought American Jews would continue indefinitely to subsidize Israel, one banker replied, "They must, and they will." Israel prefers not to think what would happen in case of a United States depression, a waning of Zionist enthuisasm, or an international crisis which would cut off Zionist funds.

But we may be sure that some of the deep thinkers among the Internationalist Communists are thinking of such things very deeply. Thinking—and just waiting for the Day!

GERMANY

The peace of Europe, according to British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, depends on the solution of the German problem; and for the first time in four years Germans, of both the East and the West, feel that they are strong enough to influence that decision.

The Council of Foreign Ministers is now meeting in Paris, and the sessions are pervaded by a sense of the importance of German national aspirations and political tides.

Rightly or wrongly, many millions of Germans are convinced that their country is ready to get into the saddle and resume its place in the grand parade. For the moment they do not appear to be looking any farther than toward the reunion of East and West Germany, and the consequent emergence of a united nation which would be one of the first poewrs of Europe, and which could have a decisive effect on the outcome of the struggle against Communism.

A united anti-Communist Germany of some 65 million people could tip the scales of the cold war in favor of the Atlantic nations. That same country, drawn into the Russian empire,, would place the Soviet frontier west of the Rhine and put the Western nations on the political and military offensive. And—like it or not—whether a united Germany can be induced to "face West" permanently, is the primary problem facing Bevin and his American and French associates at the Paris meeting.

It seems to most of us what might almost be termed a "screwball" situation that we should be, in a sense, catering to the nation which twice within a quarter century set the whole world in flames. But then, it makes just about as much sense as a lot that happens in this seemingly cockeyed world.

It's an event, first, because it shows the increased use of Canadian bank services . . .
