Here & There

by Kay Kay

The first hail of the year hit us Thursday last and gave us something to think about. Our first thought was to the pile of storm windows in our basement which will require touching up with paint, cleaning and the arduous(?) task of finding out which one fits where.

Next year, by gosh, they'll be marked!

Winter's coming also brings to mind the fact that we'll need new winter overcoats, the red flannels will have to be dug out of the mothballs—but don't get the idea we're the only ones who have to go through this!

Last week we mentioned there was a need for better illumination of the entrances to the plaza and by darned if Council didn't beat us to it, on this one. They had already made agreement with Hydro to have it done!

We tip the hat, gentlemen!

Our community has a few problems facing it; most of little consequence but still are big enough to require a solution. One is better control of youthful drivers practising "drag-racing" and generally seeking trouble with their indiscriminate disregard for their own and others' safety on the plaza parking lot.

Three young drivers were having themselves what they felt was fun, Sunday evening. Lining up abreast they anxiously waited for one to make a move—then all would race off together. Stopping quickly, the driver who got to the fore, then would brake quickly and the driver following would have to do likewise and pull out of line. Should an innocent driver come around the corner of the plaza and meet three head-on—who knows the result!

What charge may be laid we do not know—but action must be taken to curb this sort of foolishness before there is a serious accident.

A poem follows for specific reading (we suggest the three we saw Sunday night) for those who desire to take chances:

If Everyone . . .
If everyone who drives a car
Could be a month in bed,
With broken bones and stitched up wounds,
Or fractures of the head,
And there endure the agonies
That many people do,
They'd never need preach safety
Any more to me or you.
If everyone could stand beside
The bed of some close friend,
And hear the doctor say "No hope!"

Before the final end,
And see him there unconscious
Never knowing what took place,
The laws and rules of traffic
I am sure we'd soon embrace.
If everyone could meet the wife
And children left behind,
And step into the darkened room
Where once the sunlight shined,
And look upon the vacant chair
Where daddy used to sit,
I am sure that reckless drivers
Would be forced to think a bit.
If everyone who takes the wheel
Would say a little prayer,
And keep in mind those in the car
Depending on his care,
And make a vow and pledge himself
To never take a chance,
The Great Crusade for Safety
then,
Would suddenly advance.

While safety is the theme of the column this week, we think automatically of hunting time and the numerous accidents—seemingly inevitable. Here is another poem, old though it may be, has something for every person who enjoys the sport of hunting. Read it carefully and take it seriously, no matter how light-hearted you may feel when reading it.

You may be next!
This was first printed in 1909 in the Philadelphia Ledger and more recently in the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, Kemptville district report.

Be Sure When You Pull That Trigger
A hunter popped a partridge on a hill,
It made a great to-do and then was still.
It seems (when later on his bag
he spied),
It was the guide!

One shot a squirrel in a nearby
wood—
A pretty shot, off-hand, from where he stood,
It wore, they said, a shooting
hat of brown,
And lived in town!
And one dispatched a rabbit for his haul
That later proved to measure six feet tall;
And lest you think I'm handing
you a myth,
Its name was Smith!
Another nimrod slew the champion fox
He glimpsed him lurking among the rocks
One rapid shot—it never spoke or moved,
The inquest proved!
A cautious man espied a gleam of brown;
Was it a deer, or Jones, a friend from town?
And while he pondered on the river's brim
Jones potted him!

Miss Patsy Ault

The football team was defeated by a score of 27-0 by South Mountain in the first game of the season last Friday.

Three of South Mountain's four touchdowns were scored on errors and the South Mountain squad also kicked three converts for a total of 27 points.

We hope the boys are in better condition for the game in Cardinal on Friday.

The schedule for the remainder of the season follows:

- Oct. 4—Iroquois at Cardinal
- Oct. 4—Kemptville at South Mountain
- Oct. 9—Cardinal at South Mountain
- Oct. 10—Kemptville at Iroquois
- Oct. 18—Kemptville at Cardinal
- Oct. 18—Iroquois at South Mountain
- Oct. 25—Iroquois at Kemptville
- Oct. 25—South Mountain at Cardinal
- Nov. 1—Cardinal at Iroquois
- Nov. 1—South Mountain at Kemptville

A good crowd attended the sock and sweater dance, which was held in the school auditorium on Friday night.

The school visited Morrisburg Wednesday afternoon to take part in the annual track and field meet between the two schools.

A full report will be given in next week's column.

A collection for the Blind on Monday amounted to $12.97.

The flu bug hit Iroquois High this week and on Tuesday there were 50 absent.

Ottawa Girl Guest Speaker Iroquois W.I.

"Rural Life in the British Isles" was the topic given in an illustrated address by Miss Eleanor Lillico, of Hawthorne Rd., Ottawa, to members of the Iroquois Women's Institute at their September meeting in the new public school.

Miss Lillico was one of four young people chosen to represent 4-H Clubs and Junior Farmers from Ontario to tour the British Isles in an exchange program set up by the Provincial Government, last year. She spoke very highly of the reception tendered them by the British people everywhere they went.

Mrs. Ernest Norton introduced the guest speaker, who was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Robert Lillico, who brought greetings from the Hawthorne Women's Institute of which both she and Eleanor are members.

Mrs. Harriet Gilder, president, presided, and welcomed members of Johnstown and Cardinal Institutes who were guests of the Iroquois W.I.

During the business period it was decided to hold the usual campaign for the C.N.I.B. with Mrs. D. E. Roberts as general convenor.

Iroquois Women's Institute accepted the invitation to attend the 56th anniversary of the Williamsburg Branch.

Mrs. Lloyd Davis was appointed to the Ottawa Area Convention to be held October 9 and 10, as a delegate from the Iroquois W.I.

A picture of the Centennial celebration will be purchased for the Tweedsmuir Book.

Members from Johnstown and Cardinal Institutes expressed their thanks and appreciation for the enjoyable evening.

Refreshments were served by the committee in charge and a social hour was spent.

Kemptville district will open October 26th to November 9th, inclusive.

Bag limit—three cock birds per day; possession limit—nine cock birds.

Brinston Couple Surprised Celebrate 55th Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Robinson, Brinston, were taken by surprise Tuesday evening, September 24th, when their family gathered to help them celebrate their 55th wedding anniversary.

A beautiful decorated three-tier anniversary cake centred the living room table which was tastefully decorated with yellow and white streamers and white bells.

Mr. and Mrs. Robinson were the recipients of a number of useful gifts, including a gift from Reeve J. Orval Sealey who called to extend congratulations and best wishes on the happy occasion. The couple also received a number of cards and telephone calls of congratulations from friends and neighbors.

The evening was spent playing cards, after which a buffet lunch was served. Those of the family who were present were Mr. and Mrs. Roy Robinson, of Iroquois; Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Robinson, Prescott; Mr. and Mrs. Elgin Morrison and sons, of Ottawa. Other guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morrison, Ottawa; Mr. Joseph Crites and Miss Marian Carkner, Iroquois.

All joined in wishing the happy couple many more years of happily wedded life.

Arthur Harkness Was Active In Home Area

The death of Arthur Harkness occurred suddenly at his residence in Matilda Township on September 26th. Mr. Harkness had been in poor health for some time but his death came as a shock to his family and relatives.

He took an active interest for many years in the St. Lawrence Valley Fruit Growers' Association and was a past president of that organization. Also, he had several years' service as a trustee in local schools, on the Board of Stewards of Dundela United Church and as a trustee of the Cemetery Board.

Mr. Harkness was born in Matilda Township in 1881, a son of the late Peter E. Harkness and his wife Margaret Shaver.

Surviving are his wife, the former Olive Rose Hamilton, one daughter, Mrs. E. Farquhar (Farine), Morrisburg, and one son Harold at home. Two brothers, Alec of Ville LaSalle, Que., Charles E. of Matilda Township and one sister, Mrs. George Johnston (Annie) of Hanesville.

Also three grandchildren and seven great grandchildren.

The funeral service was held at his late residence, conducted by the Rev. A. D. MacLellan of Knox Presbyterian Church, Iroquois.

Interment was in the United Church Cemetery at Dundela.

Pall bearers were Allen Waddell, Garnet Johnston, Sam Johnston, Milton Barkley, Richard Ace and Fielding Smyth.

Many beautiful floral tributes, cards and letters of sympathy were received by the family.

St. John's W.A. Met Last Week

The regular meeting of St. John's Baptist W.A. was held at the home of Mrs. James Smith with 11 members present. The president opened the meeting with missionary prayers. The roll was called and minutes of the June meeting read and approved. The board report was read; also some correspondence and Mrs. Smith reported all pledge money had been received.

Mrs. Fisher reported 75 calendars for 1958 have been received. Mrs. R. MacLeod reported changes in the bale requirement for the Prince Albert School. No further business Mrs. Playfair closed the meeting with prayer and Mrs. Smith served a delicious lunch, followed by a social hour.

Brinston United Church Observing 86th Anniversary on Sunday

The congregation of Brinston United Church will observe the 86th anniversary of the founding of their church on Sunday and Monday, October 6th and 7th, by special services on Sunday and a luncheon dinner and lecture and musical program Monday evening.

The committee, with the assistance of Rev. C. A. Adey, are very pleased to announce that they have been successful in obtaining Rev. Nettie J. I. Wilson, B.A., B.D., associate minister of St. James' United Church, Montreal, to make a visit to this community for the Sunday morning service at 11 o'clock and the lecture on Monday evening. Mr. Wilson is one of the brilliant young ministers of the United Church, and to hear her sermon and lecture is a rare opportunity.

The guest minister for the Sunday evening service at 8 o'clock will be Rev. W. B. Corkum, of Kemptville, a very dynamic and forceful speaker, making his first visit to the Brinston Church.

The choir is preparing special music for the occasion.

Philosopher Goes In For Sole Searching

When Dr. Stanley Raines of the University of London, England, embarked on a "sole searching" 340-mile walk to discover how tough shoe leather is, he found most of the wear and tear was suffered by his feet. However, the doctor of philosophy can still smile as he finishes his marathon jaunt from Newcastle-Upon-Tyne to London. He was chosen for the walk from 400 candidates after his two-minute talk on the "Joys of Walking."

Body Pressed Into Earth By Vehicle Construction 'Spotter' Found Dead Council Correcting Village's Ills

Refuse thrown around the shopping plaza has been causing some embarrassment as well as an unsightly eyesore to merchants, village council and residents who are taking an increasing amount of pride in their community. Council have acted to help remedy the situation by purchasing garbage disposal containers which will be placed at intervals around the parking lot, painted and possibly chained to the poles supporting the canopy.

The co-operation of the public is requested in helping to keep the parking lot and walkway under the canopy clean.

Broken bottles, a hazard to car tires, also might be tossed in these containers.

B. J. Saver, a councillor, told The Post that Council had taken action several weeks ago to see that the entrances to the shopping plaza from No. 2 Highway, were properly marked.

A special meeting, he said, had been called with Ontario Hydro, "some time ago" and agreement reached as to what should be done. Monday morning, Ontario Hydro crews started installing posts, painted with luminous paint at the highway entrances.

Another subject broached by Council at that time, Mr. Saver, said, was the installation of sidewalks at the eastern and southern entrances to the plaza for pedestrian safety. At the present time pedestrians must reach the plaza sidewalk from Dundas Street by crossing this street, then crossing the parking space at the rear of the stores. At the eastern side of the plaza, a sidewalk has been laid from Elizabeth Drive to the parking lot.

One of the subjects brought before Council at recent meetings, but not yet acted upon, is the setting up of a by-law to cover stop streets, speed limits, etc., on village streets. Mr. Saver gave assurance that the matter would be receiving the immediate attention of Council.

Careless Drivers Beware!

The evidence of an increasing amount of careless driving during the evenings around the plaza parking lot, Mr. Saver also said, prompts him to feel that the village constable should be given sufficient powers to curtail these activities, if these powers were not already at his disposal. This too, would be among items on the agenda of Council at their earliest convenience.

What About Industry?

When asked if any approaches had been made firms wishing to locate in the Seaway Valley, Mr. Saver pointed out that Iroquois Council were not yet in a position to deal directly with an industry until the lands was made available by Ontario Hydro to local such industry. He said, however, that a map of the industrial land to be available, had been forwarded to Council from Hydro but would not hazard a guess as to when it might be sold, either to industry or possibly to the village so that negotiations could get underway with any prospective industry.

Newlyweds Given Shower At Hanesville

Mr. and Mrs. Murray Baldwin, Hanesville, were feted by friends, neighbors and relatives at a miscellaneous shower held in their honor Friday evening, September 13th. The shower was held in the hall at Hanesville and was attended by a large number of well wishers.

George Lewis, an behalf of the assembled group, extended the community's best wishes in an address, below, with Murray replying on behalf of himself and his bride, inviting everyone to visit them in their new home at Hanesville.

The evening was spent with music, singing and reading. All joined in wishing the young couple many years of happiness.

Dear Dorla and Murray: We have gathered here tonight to express to you our sincere congratulations on your recent marriage, and our best wishes for your happiness in the years to come.

To the bride we extend a warm welcome and hope we can help to make your married life one of happiness and contentment here.

To you, Murray, we would like to say, your friendly ways and good neighborliness, have won you many friends and we are pleased that you and your wife will make your home in this community.

In setting up your new home-life, we would urge you to let your church have a worthwhile share of your time. There is no better foundation for a happy family life and it's a fine place for a new bride to meet and make friends.

We ask you to accept these gifts, and as the days go by, may they be reminders of the good wishes bestowed upon you tonight.

Signed on behalf of your friends.

H. A. Brontmeyer Suffers Heart Attack, Dies

Henry Angus Brontmeyer, an esteemed resident of Iroquois for the past 17 years, passed away suddenly on Saturday evening, September 28th, of a heart seizure. He was in his 66th year.

Deceased, a son of the late Michael Brontmeyer and Sarah Jane Thorpe, was born just west of Iroquois. At an early age he moved with his parents to Matilda Township where he grew to manhood and received his education in the rural public schools and the Iroquois High School.

For some years he followed farming. He was an employee of the Bell Telephone Co. for four years. He served overseas in the First World War. For 20 years he was employed as lockman on the Iroquois Canal, having had to retire about 10 years ago on account of ill health. In religion he was United.

The late Mr. Brontmeyer was possessed of a pleasing disposition and had many warm friends who greatly regret his demise. He was a great family man and dearly loved children. He was keenly interested in all kinds of sports and was an ardent hunter.

He was a member of the Cardinal Branch of the Canadian Legion, who, augmented by members of the Morrisburg and Iroquois Legion branches, conducted their service at the Fitzsimmons' Funeral Home on Monday evening.

In 1920 he married Mary Hoy, of Prescott, who survives, along with two sons, Donald and William, at home. One son and one daughter died in infancy. He is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. Herbert Hanson, Iroquois, and Mrs. Murray Barkley, Lisbon, N.Y., and four grandchildren.

The funeral was held at Fitzsimmons' Funeral Home, Tuesday afternoon, the service being conducted by Rev. C. A. Adey, of Brinston.

Interment was made in Brinston Cemetery.

The large attendance at the funeral and the many beautiful floral tributes showed the esteem in which deceased was held.

R. S. McCaslin, Highly Respected Passed Away

At his home Sunday morning, September 22nd, the death occurred of Roscoe Stacey McCaslin. The deceased was a well-known and highly respected resident, a true friend of young and old, who will be greatly missed in his own and surrounding district.

The late Mr. McCaslin was born May 3rd, 1893, a son of the late Alan McCaslin and his wife, Eliza Stacey. On October 11th, 1916, he married Mary E. Thompson, who, with one son, John A. McCaslin, are left to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and father. Other survivors include two brothers, Vernon and Rae and one sister, Lillian, Mrs. Howard Hogooboo, Brockville and several nieces and nephews.

The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon from the Fitzsimmons' Funeral Home, Iroquois. Rev. A. D. MacLellan, D.D., conducted an impressive and comforting service to a capacity gathering of relatives and friends.

CANADIAN TITLIST AT U.S. TRAP SCHOOL

Receive First Hail Here Last Thursday

Hail! Winter's coming to be sure. Don't take us wrong in reading that first sentence but last Thursday morning at exactly 10:55 a.m., Iroquois received a sprinkle of cold white hail—not much, but enough to let us know that Fall is here and Winter not far off.

Annual Poppy Campaign Under Legion Sponsorship

Branch 370, Canadian Legion, announced this week that the annual poppy campaign is now underway. This year's campaign chairman is Alex Showell, a staunch branch supporter, who asks those who have not already been contacted about purchasing a wreath for Remembrance Day that catalogues are on display at the postoffice, The Iroquois Post and at Keith Beaupre's, and that orders are to be telephoned to Robert McDonald, branch president, OL 2-4332.

CWL Meeting Most Interesting To Membership

Mrs. Lawrence Montpetit was hostess to the St. Cecilia Subdivision CWL when, as president, she chaired the regular September meeting. Prayers were offered by Rev. Father W. L. Terrien, spiritual director, at the opening and close of the business session. Reports were read and approved, including an account of the recent Archdiocesan Executive Council meeting held at Kingston which was given by the representative, Mrs. Montpetit.

Plans were discussed for the placing of the remembrance wreath at the cenotaph, for the holding of a bake-sale and for the approaching regional meeting at Cardinal. Mrs. Joseph Roberts' invitation was accepted to hold the October regular meeting at her residence on the third Thursday of the month. A happy social hour, with refreshments, followed the formal session.

On Sunday, the Feast of St. Michael, Archangel, members of eight subdivisions were invited to attend the regional meeting held this year, in Cardinal, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Harold Sayeau, President of the Cardinal Subdivision. Rev. Fr. H. R. Wiley gave Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament in the Sacred Heart Church, after which Fr. Wiley opened the business session with prayer in the Benson Public School. The principal address was given by the new Archdiocesan President, Mrs. B. E. Burley of Belleville, who conveyed the highlights of the recent Provincial Convention, Pembroke. Other officers and conveners who spoke came from Bloomfield, Kingston, Morrisburg, Brockville, Prescott, Iroquois and Cardinal. Mrs. A. Fitzgerald, of Brockville, Past President of the Archdiocesan Council and newly appointed Provincial Convener of Spiritual-Lay Retreats and Catholic Action, expressed appreciation on behalf of the sixty-two members for the useful session and the hospitality of Cardinal. Refreshments and a social hour closed the afternoon.

The pallbearers were Colin Casselman, Frank Sisty, John Primrose, George Barkley, Roy Tousaw and Charles Shaver. Interment was in Point Iroquois cemetery.

Link With Past Severed With Death W. N. Werts

Another link with the past was severed on Wednesday, September 25th, with the death at his home in Iroquois of William Werts, who was 93rd year.

The son of the late Gordon Werts and Hulda Nash, he was born in 1864 at their farm home overlooking the St. Lawrence River and he spent his entire life in Matilda Township. Their farm was part of a Crown Grant to his grandparents in 1815 and remained in the family name for 96 years.

He often recalled incidents of the building of the Iroquois-Cardinal canal, of the manpower—teams of horses—scrapers and stoneboats used to complete the work.

In 1894 he married Margaret Bailey and until her death in 1930, they lived on the farm and later in the Village of Iroquois, where he operated one of the district's first tourist cabins.

Of the three children, two survive: Mary (Mrs. Cameron), of Kitchener, and Gordon, Windsor; Susie (Mrs. Louden) passed away in 1931.

Mr. Werts was a life member of the Masonic Order and from his youth a member of the Methodist and United Church. When a small boy he attended, with his father, the dedication of the United Church so recently demolished and he was able to be present at the farewell service in this church on Easter Sunday. He also assisted in the ceremony of turning the sod for the new United Church now under construction on Elizabeth Drive.

In 1942 he married (Mrs.) Eleanor Morrison, formerly of Hulseburg, who survives him. Surviving also are six grandchildren and 15 great-grandchildren.

The funeral was held at the W. E. Fitzsimmons' Funeral Home, Friday, September 27th, at 2 p.m. Rev. Thos. Knowles, an old friend and former pastor, conducted the quiet service in the absence of Rev. Gordon F. Dangerfield.

Miss Margaret Kaine, assisted by Miss Hugh Thompson at the piano, sang very sweetly "Beyond the Sunset".

Interment in Point Iroquois United Church cemetery.

Attending the funeral were relatives and friends from Iroquois, Morrisburg, Ottawa, Inkerman, Toronto and Hulseburg.

A man of kindly nature and cheerful disposition, Mr. Werts won for himself friendship and esteem during four generations.

The Village of Iroquois was seven years old when he was born. Now, due to the Seaway and Power projects, the old community has almost disappeared and he has passed away. "Not his, the golden pen's or lips' persuasion—But the sense of right—And truth's directness, meeting each occasion Straight as a line of light."

HANESVILLE

Mrs. N. Campbell returned to her home after spending holidays with her sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Fetherly.

We are sorry to report quite a large number of residents sick with the flu and we wish them all a speedy recovery.

Mr. R. W. Hanes had the misfortune to be kicked by a cow and had a knee injured badly. We hope for better news by next issue.

On Friday evening, September 13, a miscellaneous shower was held in the hall in honor of the recent marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Baldwin. See story on page one.

Pleasure Cruise Smashed Graft Racket

When a member of his secretarial staff came to remind him that it was time to set out for the Capitol, President of the United States Grover Cleveland, the strong man of the White House, appeared not to have heard.

It was as though he had fallen into a trance.

"Mr. President, sir," the young man repeated, "it's time for you to go to the Capitol. Congress is by now already assembled."

Only then did Grover Cleveland shake off his deep preoccupation. Slowly, and with uncharacteristic lack of energy, he got up. It was August and hot. He asked for ice water, drank it, and walked slowly from the room.

Before him lay the ordeal of Congress in which many influential leaders in his own, the Democratic Party, were arrayed to give battle against their leader.

At that time, 1884, political corruption was rife throughout the United States. Before his election as President, Grover Cleveland had served as district attorney and, later, as Mayor of Buffalo, New York State. He had made many enemies in both capacities, for, wherever he uncovered it, he attacked graft.

Now the issue before Congress was the Pendleton Bill. Like a number of other bills already passed, this measure was designed to endow a large number of men with claims on their political party with life pensions.

When the bill came before Congress, President Cleveland described it as an attempt to swindle the United States Treasury.

Now he was about to face the storm. But the impending battle with Congress had no part as a cause of the President's strange and gloomy mood.

It had been nothing much at first, that persistent ache of the jaw. But it had become worse.

When President Cleveland consulted his medical advisers he was somewhat perturbed when a number of the leading medical men in the country were called in for consultation.

"The aching jaw, it was now revealed to him, was a symptom of a very serious condition.

"Have I cancer?" he asked.

"It will be necessary, to save your life to remove your jaw," they told him.

For Grover Cleveland the smashing of the corrupt pensions bill was a matter of paramount importance. Already threatened by disloyalty in his own party, he well knew that any hint of sickness would be seized upon with heartless unscrupulousness for political purposes.

His political enemies would put it about that he was unfit to carry out the duties of President; physically incapable of bearing the great weight of that office's terrific responsibilities.

So now, driving toward the Capitol, for the first round in the battle, the President was pondering his problems and searching for some solution of it.

A great statesman—and Grover Cleveland was that—must also be a great strategist. Returning to the White House, he surprised his staff by announcing that he proposed to take a holiday.

"Mr. President! At a time like this?" one man protested.

But the very announcement suggested self-confidence and directed the attention of the country away from any question of presidential illness.

Having let the announcement of his forthcoming holiday be made public, President Cleveland sent for his personal surgeon, and said: "Could you remove my jaw without scarring my face? Could you operate so that nobody could detect the mutilation?"

Yes, he was assured, that could be done.

"But I would still have no jaw on that side!" he protested.

"We'll fix you up with a silver jaw," he was assured. "You will appear just as you appeared before."

It's not an easy thing for a king or president to keep secret such news as this.

The President could not be operated on at the White House without the whole staff getting to know about it—and from them the whole country.

He could not enter a hospital for the same reason. Sooner or later the news would leak out.

How then, was the terrible secret to be kept? It was the President who found the solution. "I shall take a cruise on the presidential yacht," he announced.

This was a very fine vessel, the Onondaga, and in due course she put to sea, ostensibly on a pleasure cruise. Only at the last minute did the surgeons slip unannounced aboard. And only after she had sailed was the stateroom rapidly converted into an operating theatre.

When, some weeks later, the President returned, it was matter of public comment how well he looked with his fresh sea tan.

But those near him noticed a certain difference, though they had no clue as to the real cause.

It was noted then and later that, when he spoke in public, his speech had become somewhat changed. The fine voice, which had done so much to build up for him a great law practice in his earlier days, was now softly muffled.

The silver jaw worked. There was no facial scar. But speech came with a certain difficulty now.

And so, for fourteen years, this amazingly courageous man lived on, and during that long stretch he served not once, but twice as President of the United States.

It was not until after his death, which occurred a few months after he completed his second term as President, that the secret of his long sustained fortitude became known.

And there also came to light a second secret.

Throughout the long years during which he carried the great burden of the State upon his broad shoulders the President had never known a single day free from pain.

For though the silver jaw put back the hour of fate, the terrible disease which made its removal essential at last claimed its gallant victim.

It is significant of the amazing power of the human will that it was only when he felt that his task was completed, and graft was on the way out in his country's public life, that death ensued.

Cigarettes Help To Hang Man

On Christmas Eve, 1942, a Fal-mouth tobaccoist named Bateman was found murdered behind his counter with terrible head and face injuries. On the counter was an unloaded revolver which had been reported stolen from a shop in the previous February. A man, Gordon Trenoweth, known to the police as given to acts of violence, was strongly suspected.

The police promptly visited his home, where he lived with his parents and sister. Stains apparently of blood, were noticed on his shirt-sleeve and on a packet found in another room, so he was taken to the police station for further questioning, and there told that a man had been found in a shop with head injuries, but not the name of the shop or the victim.

Yet when two packets of cigarettes, found in his possession, were laid on the table in front of him, he said: "I bought those cigarettes at Pearce's. I was not in that man's shop. I always buy my cigarettes at Pearce's."

The police were now convinced that they had the murderer, but had practically no evidence for a jury. How they eventually got that evidence, Richard Harrison, in "The C.I.D. and the F.B.I." calls "an outstanding example of close and quick cooperation between police and laboratory—the best, I think, I have ever encountered."

Comparing British and U.S. methods, Harrison points out that, although laboratories for the scientific investigation of crime in England exist almost exclusively for police use, they are owned, staffed and equipped by the Home Office, a police officer acting as liaison between his force and the technical staff. The Federal Bureau of Investigation laboratory in Washington, on the other hand, is run by the police and there's not a scientist in our own forensic labs, who wouldn't envy the most modern and efficient F.B.I. facilities, which include even electron microscopes.

Nevertheless, the south-western laboratory at Bristol, which was called in to help in the Bateman murder, achieved wonders. The five main groups of human blood can be determined even when the stains are dry and old, but when they are fresh it can be divided into sub-groups.

Both Bateman's and Trenoweth's blood belonged to the main A group, and if the police hadn't acted promptly, the stains on Trenoweth's clothing would have been valueless. He could have claimed that they came from his own blood. But the scientists were able to prove that they belonged to the same sub-group as Bateman's and could not have come from Trenoweth.

The revolver had been kept well-oiled, and adhering to the oily parts were colored fibres of coarse wool and cotton. Similar fibres were found in one of Trenoweth's pockets, and under the microscope the fibres of a piece of old carpet found in the attic of his home proved identical. He had evidently hidden the revolver by rolling it inside the carpet.

The police discovered that Trenoweth had been in Truro on the evening of the murder, treating friends and acquaintances freely, spending much more money than he claimed to have possessed—and $425 was missing from the shop.

All this evidence was sufficient to secure a conviction and the murderer was duly convicted and hanged.

Harrison notes that while Scotland Yard is no show place and only the specially privileged penetrate beyond the entrance hall, the F.B.I. Headquarters welcomes visitors. Guides show parties round, and there are elaborate show-cases of exhibits relating to the fight against crime. Special pains are taken to

With the coming of cooler weather, there's more enthusiasm about baking, and hot breads are ever welcome. This attractive coffee cake is made with pancake mix, thus saving the measuring of several ingredients.

MAPLE COFFEE RING

2½ cups pancake mix
½ cup sugar
½ teaspoon nutmeg
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ cup chopped nuts
½ cup raisins
1½ cups milk
¼ cup melted shortening
1 egg, beaten
1 teaspoon maple flavoring

Heat oven to moderate (375° F.). Place pancake mix, sugar, nutmeg, cinnamon, nutmeats, and raisins in bowl. Add remaining ingredients; stir until just combined. Pour into greased 1½-quart ring mold. Bake in preheated oven about 30 minutes. Remove from mold; drizzle with thin confectioners' sugar frosting.

Sour cream is popular with many cooks. This salmon salad, using that ingredient, has a subtle taste that you'll like.

SALMON SURPRISE SALAD

2 (1 pound) cans salmon
1 cup chopped celery
2 apples, peeled and sliced
1 tablespoon butter
½ cup sour cream
2 tablespoons prepared mustard
1 tablespoon vinegar
2 teaspoons horseradish
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 hard-cooked egg, finely chopped
Salad greens

Drain salmon and flake; add celery. For dressing saute apples in butter until soft; sieve. Add remaining ingredients except egg and greens and beat until smooth. Pour over salmon mixture and toss well. Serve on crisp greens and sprinkle top with finely chopped egg. Serves 6.

In the following salad, golden chunks of pineapple and a chain of shiny green bits of pepper join hands with rosy cubes of cooked ham. Put the zip of spicy mustard and horseradish in the salad that holds them together.

TANGY PINEAPPLE-HAM SALAD

2 cups (No. 2 can) pineapple chunks
1½ cups cooked, diced ham
¼ cup chopped green pepper
¼ cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons sweet pickle relish
1 tablespoon horseradish
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
Salad greens

Drain pineapple. Mound ham in centre of salad bowl. Arrange a ring of pineapple chunks around outside of ham. Place a ring of chopped, green pepper in between ham and pineapple. Chill. Combine remaining ingredients and toss salad just before serving. Serve in lettuce cups. Serves 4.

The Queen And The Prince Seen Through American Eyes

By TOM A. CULLEN
NEA Staff Correspondent

LONDON — (NEA) — It is as ambassadors of youth, of the New Elizabethan Age, that Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip are coming to America in October.

Theirs is the young idea that gives the living lie to the notion that Britain is washed-up, a second-rate power dying of old age.

"Our people, if they are aged, are the youngest aged people that have ever been seen," Sir Harold Caccia, British ambassador in Washington, told a Chicago audience recently. "This may be our second youth, but it certainly is not our second childhood."

Elizabeth, too, is experiencing a second bloom. Americans will no longer recognize in her the uncertain, girlishly nervous, slightly pathetic figure, who, as Princess Elizabeth, visited the United States with her husband in 1951.

She can still be gay and care-free upon occasion, but she has matured, acquired dignity, shown unexpected depth. In a word, she has become regal.

As a wife, she is obviously very much in love with her handsome husband, whom she has made a Prince of the Realm. As a mother, she is blessed with two lovely children, in whom she takes just pride. As Queen, she reflects the inner satisfaction of this happy home.

Her American hosts will note how often Elizabeth turns to Philip whenever there is an important decision to be made.

"Isn't Philip the limit?" How often these words spring to the Queen's lips as she tries to follow him in his wilder flights. Sometimes they are said with pride, sometimes ruefully, almost with despair.

Yes, Philip really is the limit, as his American hosts will discover. His job while in the United States will be to sell Britain, and this he will tackle with almost fiendish zest.

Watch him as he corners an uneasy scientist at a Washington cocktail party. With the space of 15 minutes he can be expected to remind the poor American scientist that Britain discovered the atomic nucleus, penicillin, vitamins and silicones, among other things.

Nor will the U.S. admirals and Air Force generals come off any better. Philip is not afraid to remind the airborne generals that many of the planes they fly are powered by Rolls-Royce engines designed in Britain, or to remind the U.S. Navy that the angled deck, mirror landing devices and steam catapults used on American aircraft carriers were developed from British inventions.

It is with the American captains of industry that Philip will feel most at home. The button-holed businessman will be reminded that Britain leads the world in the export of generators, boilers, textile machinery and radioactive isotopes, shares the lead with the United States in the development of nuclear power plants.

This is the new face of Britain. It is the fact of youth, as mirrored in the profiles of its Queen and of her prince-consort.

How long will it last? What happens when the bloom of youth begins to fade?

The greatest danger to the monarchy today, in the opinion of most observers, lies in the uncritical adulation of the British masses.

Most Britons scoffed when some of the noble peers threatened to shoot, or to horsewhip Lord Altrincham (who eventually got a slap in the face) because he had dared to criticize the Queen. Nevertheless, there is danger of the monarchy turning into a soap opera.

The uncritical adulation is seen in the British Broadcasting Company's tendency to play "God Save the Queen" upon any and all occasions.

It is seen in the crowds that press their faces through the railings of Buckingham Palace, whether or not the Queen is in residence there, as though expecting that a miracle will shortly take place.

The royal family's greatest need at the present time, according to their well-wishers, is for an efficient public relations set-up in place of the snobbish courtiers who now function as such.

An experienced public relations officer would know how to present the royal family with dignity, at the same time making fullest use of mass communications. In this respect, he could learn lessons from President Eisenhower and his press secretaries.

This lies behind Lord Altrincham's suggestion that the Queen should be surrounded by advisers from as many different backgrounds as possible. "A truly classless and Commonwealth court," Altrincham declares, "could... bear eloquent witness to the transformed nature of the monarchy."

The Queen and her advisers will have to make up their minds soon. Time is still clearly on the Queen's side, but the sands are running out.

Heating Houses Without Fuel

How would you like to heat your house without fuel? And without chimneys, flues, and various other bulky equipment?

The electric heat pump will do it, or at least it is doing it for thousands of families throughout the United States.

Heat pump installations in that country have reached a total of approximately 10,000. But this year, heat pump sales are expected to more than equal the figure for all previous years. And by the end of 1959, the industry anticipates a minimum of 100,000 heat pumps in operation.

But what is a heat pump? Essentially, it's a device for extracting heat from one place and discharging it into another. It doesn't care where it gets the heat. But the pump has the amazing faculty of pulling heat out of the soil, out of water, and even out of the air when the thermometer registers zero.

Heat is everywhere. If it weren't, water would freeze solid from top to bottom. And in winter, there is plenty of heat in the outside air. Heat also lies deep in the ground. From these sources of "free" heat, the electric heat pump gets its fuel and pulls it into the house.

The heat pump could be termed a conventional air conditioner with a built-in arrangement for reversing the direction of the flow of heat, so that the machine serves at different times as an air cooler and air heater. The major cost of the heat pump, of course, is the price of electricity, which in some localities is higher than other types of heating.

But major economies lie in the savings in construction and home equipment costs, as well as in maintenance — which is negligible with heat pumps.

A heat pump system is operated entirely as electricity and contains exactly the same equipment you would find in your home refrigerator—a motor, compressor, evaporator, and condenser. Just as this equipment removes heat from your refrigerator, a heat pump removes heat from water, soil, or air and brings this heat into the home or commercial building writes W. Clifford Harvey in The Christian Science Monitor.

In the summer, the heat pump takes the heat from inside the building and discharges it outside. And in the winter a heat pump system turns itself around and takes heat from outside the space and discharges it into the room to be warmed. Heat pumps are about the same size as the standard warm air furnace. They operate all year long, automatically.

The principle of the heat pump was first announced more than 100 years ago, but until 25 years ago, the heat pump remained essentially of laboratory interest. Today, there are 15 firms in the U.S.A. making units for use in homes and small commercial buildings. The least expensive is about $1,000.

While the initial cost of the heat pump is somewhat greater than that of a standard heating unit, it compares favorably with a year-round, heating-air conditioning system, in addition to permitting several important cost-saving building techniques.

Heat pumps use no combustible materials and thus eliminate the need for chimneys, flues, and fuel lines. Screens are not needed, for homes conditioned by the heat pump need never have their windows opened.

Heat pumps generally require less floor space than conventional heating-cooling systems. Some models can be installed in "unused" areas such as in attics, crawl spaces, in the bottom of a closet, or suspended from the basement ceiling.

Many regulations which exist with flame-type heating and cooling units are eliminated with the heat pump.

Dave Garroway Extolled Merits Ontario Fruits

Dave Garroway's morning T.V. show "To-day" emanating from the fountain at the Canadian National Exhibition on Thursday, September 5th, did not miss showing Ontario grown fruits and vegetables and singing their praises to some 16,000,000 viewers.

The Fruit Branch, Ontario Department of Agriculture, realizing the potential impact of such a program, quickly agreed to set up two floats, one of fruit and one of vegetables, when given the opportunity by Jack Perdue, Agricultural Manager of the C.N.E.

Ken Hunter, Lew Howe, and George Benson of the Fruit Branch worked through the night to have the displays on wheels and ready for the showing. Doug Williams, Associate Director of the Branch, visited the early morning show, gained the ear of lovely Helen O'Connell, co-star of "To-day", and made a few suggestions as to the dialogue which might be used in connection with the produce.

As a result, Miss O'Connell and the casual Dave Garroway, each eating Niagara grown plums and enjoying them, stood in front of the attractively arranged fruits and vegetables and for two minutes millions of Americans from coast to coast were able to appreciate that Ontario can grow fruits and vegetables second to none.

A young man had just got back from Hollywood. He had been dazzled by the film colony.

"Everything is done on a tremendous scale," he enthused to his friends. "I attended dinner at a producer's home one evening and, instead of using finger bowls at the end of the meal, all the guests took shower baths!"

FAIRY TALE—This is a "lived happily ever after" story from Nice, France. The dog was separated from her pups at birth. The kitten apparently was abandoned by its mother. So their common woe was enough to make them forget the traditional cat-dog hatred. Looks like "all's well that ends well."

BY THE YARD—Shades of Jack and the beanstalk. This giant plant may never reach the sky, but its giant green beans can practically be picked by the yard rather than by the pan. Little Debra Algood, 3, measures out enough for a meal in the garden of Joe Lewalski. Some of the beans have grown to a length of 2½ feet.

THE FARM FRONT by John Russell

Across the vast alkaline flats of the Chott el Djerid, from the strange underground dwellings near Fom Tatahouine, Erg, and from the date groves of Homer's Land of the Lotus-Eaters the men and women of Tunisia have watched gigantic black clouds come whirling and crackling out of the Algerian desert to the west.

And today this newly independent land is fighting one of the bitterest battles in its nearly 30 centuries of recorded history.

This struggle whose outcome will determine the food supply for several million individuals, is against a rose-hued insect only three inches long. For, despite its size, this insect—the red locust—is one of the most voracious eaters of which we have knowledge.

And so severe is this onslaught that six countries, several of whom are in bitter political opposition to each other, have temporarily suspended their disagreements to prevent a widespread natural disaster.

Locusts first made their appearance in Tunisia this year, several weeks ago when, by the uncountable billions, they were borne in vast clouds to this land by hot winds from the west and at once began devouring everything in sight. Trees, plants, grains, shrubs — even the unappetizing cactus — were stripped or even consumed before the eyes of farmers and villagers.

Since locusts know nothing about national boundaries and fly where the wind takes them, there was every probability that Libya and Morocco would soon be drowned in a sea of locusts. Entomologists here began to worry lest a shift in wind currents would even bring this pest to Europe's southern Mediterranean littoral.

The full extent of the locust plague can be seen from the fact that, two years ago, when an infestation occurred which was regarded then as the worst in history, the cost of combating its spread was $1,000,000 and took 1,700 tons of HCH powder. Thus far, the cost has been

$2,000,000 and it has taken 3,500 tons. According to Mustapha Filali, Tunisia's young Minister of Agriculture, the red locusts have destroyed 50,000 date, olive and almond trees and wiped out 40 per cent of the date harvest, writes Arnold Beichman in The Christian Science Monitor.

To get an idea of what billions and billions of locusts means, it was recalled that during a minor plague last year, locust-eating inhabitants of a village in southern Tunisia sacked and dried three thousand tons, estimated to be 740,000,000 insects. And this in one small area alone.

Mr. Filali blames the war in Algeria for the locust plague which has threatened a country where every bit of food counts. Locust control is a year-round job and control measures can never be eased for a moment. But the struggle in neighboring Algeria between the French and Algerians has made it impossible to wipe out the locusts in their breeding stages.

The Tunisian Government is undertaking the development of an antilocus research center at Sidi Buzid where it already runs an entomological laboratory and agricultural schools.

In the meantime, throughout the western and southwestern regions of Tunisia bordering on Algeria, a round-the-clock war against insects goes on. From Le Kef south through Thala Gafsa to Tozeur and Sbeitla and Tebessa, Piper Cub planes with spray equipment and land spray equipment on trucks are coating the land with powdery insecticide.

For weeks it seemed as if nothing could stop the invasion from Algeria as billions and billions of the insects kept flying in, driven by a wind from the west. But there is hope now that the pest will be eliminated before the wheat and other crops turn green, since locusts eat and kill only what is green.

Black Cat Trips Cat Burglar

Some people should never turn to crime, for they are just naturally jinxed from the start — would-be crooks like the one who recently broke into the home of a wealthy Johannesburg gold-mining magnate.

The burglar had cased the house carefully and had assured himself that this was really a push-over. He even went so far as to spend a shilling on a piece of raw meat for the dog.

Then while he was busy in the drawing-room, a budgerigar began to chatter furiously from under the black cloth covering its cage.

He ignored the budgie and continued his efforts to open the small wall safe which he believed contained plenty of cash and jewels.

He was still hard at it when the light in the room was snapped on and the householder stood there in dressing-gown and holding a revolver.

In prison to-day, the burglar is doubtless ruminating over the budgie. For it was the little bird's chattering — unusual in the middle of the night — that brought the householder down to find out what had disturbed his pet.

Robert C. Elkin, an elderly New Yorker, parked his new car in busy Fulton Street in Brooklyn while he hurried into a bank. Two men who were loitering near by moved casually over to the car and glanced in. Elkin had left the keys!

While one stood by and then climbed casually in behind the steering wheel, the other slipped into a restaurant, held it up, grabbed what cash he could and made a dash for the car.

To all intents and purposes the theft of the car and the hold-up was like taking money from a blind man's hat. But as the busy thieves sped from the scene, the car lurched drunkenly in a wild curve. As the driver tried to brake he became more and more confused, and he finally piled up against a lamp standard where obliging police assisted the two dazed thieves out.

Mr. Elkins arrived minutes later to stare disconsolately at his battered new car.

"I couldn't see where I was going!" the bandit moaned.

"I'm not surprised," retorted the short-sighted car owner. "My windscreen's made of special glass, ground to my own prescription so that I don't need spectacles when I drive!"

In Paris police quickly found the man who had broken into a house and stolen some articles. He had dropped his prison discharge form on the floor while burgling the place!

In Sydney, police were just as quickly on the trail of a petty thief who broke into a house and stole two watches. The next morning he walked into a pawnshop and tried to "pop" them. He was arrested on the spot. The pawnbroker owned the house which was burgled. The watches were his and his wife's!

Bad luck? Don't talk to one forger about it. In 1935 he forged a cheque in New York and walked into a bank with it only to be arrested right there, for by one of those freak chances the man whose signature he had forged was standing right behind him as he presented the cheque!

He got two years and was deported to his native England. Here he cashed three dud cheques and a few days later walked into a shop to cash the third. Talking to the shopkeeper at that moment was one of the men who had cashed one of the other duds for him. For that he got twelve months.

Out of prison again, he decided to give Canada a try and to get his fare swindled a number of dealers in Sussex and Kent. He slipped off to Southampton and obtained work as a ship's steward. On the day when the ship was due to sail he went up on deck for one last look at Blighty — and found himself staring into the face of one of the shopkeepers, who had cashed one of his bad cheques for him.

He got three years this time. What happened to him during the war is not known, but in 1947 in Cape Town he once again appeared before a judge, this time on a cat burglary charge.

At his trial even the judge had to smile at the manner in which the little man was caught. Then he slapped him into prison for four years.

He had broken into a rich home and was helping himself quite liberally when he began to make his exit and tripped over something which kicked up such a row that the householder came charging down firing a shotgun. The housebreaker decided to give himself up rather than face another blast from the gun. What had trapped him with its squawking? A black cat dozing near the door.

SOME GIZMO — A one-man helicopter, dubbed the "Gizmo", is tested. Powered by a simple two-cycle outboard motor, the all-frame 'copter weighs slightly more than 200 pounds. It can hover, fly in formation, turn sharply and scoot forward at speeds up to 70 m.p.h. The Gizmo is designed to serve as either a courier-liaison or tactical vehicle, permitting its use by ground forces during assaults behind enemy lines.

MANITOBA'S CURE FOR DANGEROUS DRIVING

When a Winnipeg driver has six points against him, he's invited to go back to "school". When the total mounts to eight points, he is ordered to do so, writes Marjorie Earl in an interesting article in this week's Star Weekly, describing how Manitoba is fighting the high-way accident rate. The "black marks" are awarded when a driver is involved in a minor accident.

One or two points are scored against him, depending on whether or not he is at fault. For a minor conviction without accident, he is penalized one point. For a major accident with conviction he can get as many as 10 points.

Mr. R. B. Baillie, Manitoba's commissioner of motor vehicles and the head of the unique high-way safety program, has results which prove the wisdom of the new system and the idea is discussed in detail in the interesting Star Weekly feature.

(Held Over)

The Presbyterian Women's Missionary Society held their meeting Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. George Montgomery with Mrs. Riddell presiding. Meeting opened with the singing of hymn "Hast Thou Not Known". Scripture passages Luke 7, verses 1 to 16 and Deuteronomy 31, verses and 7, were read by Mrs. Herbert Byers and Mrs. Presley Montgomery.

Thoughts for meditation were read by Mrs. Roy Holmes, followed with prayer from the Glad Tidings. Hymn "Faith of Our Fathers" was sung. Offering was received by Johnny Mulviwky and dedicated by Mrs. George Montgomery. Welcome and welfare report was received.

Mrs. Byers gave a few high-lights from the training school for leaders held at Belleville. Mrs. George Montgomery introduced the new study book on Japan and the first chapter was given in dialogue form by Mrs. George Montgomery, Mrs. Jas. Riddell and Mrs. Roy Holmes. Meeting closed with prayer and benediction by Mrs. Riddell. The hostess then served dainty refreshments and a social hour was spent.

ANNE HIRST

Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst, I had heard the ugly stories about mother-in-law, but being orphaned early I discounted them all. I always pictured having a home and people around that belonged to me. . . . My husband and I met and married while he was in service, and when he was discharged we moved back here to stay with his mother till we found a place to live. I was pregnant, and thought it would be grand to have our baby born in her house."

"I couldn't have been more wrong! She has turned out to be a real matriarch. I do know how to cook and keep house, but she insists I do everything her way and if I make one little mistake she says, 'Too bad you had no home to learn in. I can't understand why my boy married you!'"

"It is so humiliating I don't know how long I can stand it. She makes me feel like such a fool! My dreams have turned out to be nightmares, and I am so confused and hurt I can't be myself and I spend too much time in my bedroom crying. What can I do?"

"In other ways she is really nice, and she is crazy about the baby. . . ."

DESPERATE

"I do understand your disillusion, but if you could know what many other daughters-in-law go through you would consider yourself a lot more lucky. Your wonderful story holds two bright spots — your mother-in-law loves the baby, and you won't have to spend the rest of your life with her. Think of these, take a new grip on your courage and try to understand this older woman who demands so much. She has kept house for a generation, her ways are her own, and she is not going to change. You may not do the work the way she does (and this she thinks is stupid) but if you will forget you're a bright youngster and humble your pride in a Yes-ma'm spirit,

* you will make your life more pleasant.

* Her autocratic attitude makes you most unhappy, but you must believe she does not mean to hurt your feelings. * She thinks she is teaching you the things you ought to know; so accept her corrections, quietly and politely, and let her see you are doing your best to please her.

* For your husband's sake, I know you will try; he must see you are not happy, and that probably distresses him. * Remember that so long as you have his affection, this darling baby, and the prospect of a home of your own, you can take a deep breath and relax. * Instead of resenting her domination, win her good will by seeming grateful for her guidance. Practice humility (and your common sense) and by the time you leave she and you will be good friends.

A LOSING GAME

"Dear Anne Hirst: I met a boy nearly a year ago who was going into service, and though we had only the one date I simply cannot get him off my mind. When he was home on leave he didn't even call me, and though I've written him several times he never answers!"

"I am really desperate. I know nobody else will ever move me as he did. Can you help me win him? I am nearly 16."

BETTINA

* I know it is hard to believe that one's love for a boy is hopeless; one cannot accept going on without him, for he has become our dream of happiness. Yet sooner or later this happens to nearly every girl. * Finally, we have to admit that he is just not interested in us, and suddenly we realize that if we keep on pursuing him he will only think us cheap, and laugh behind our back.

* Be a good loser. * You will stop mourning him if you date the boys at home, and I expect you have turned down several who have asked to take you out. Don't refuse again. You won't believe it today, but if you start dating them and seem to enjoy it, the day will come when that will be true — and then you will wonder why you spent so many empty evenings wishing for a lad who doesn't know you're alive.

If you suffer in-law troubles, remember that common sense, humility and courtesy combine to overcome them. Anne Hirst can help, and her sympathy and guidance are yours for the asking. Write her at Box 1, 123 Eighteenth St., New Toronto, Ont.

SHOCKED—Esther Williams was almost literally "on top of the world" when this picture was snapped in Rome to start filming "Raw Wind in Eden."

Making Bread In The Flour Barrel

The other day my favorite wife turned out a batch of home-grown bread. During the winter, when a kitchen fire serves more than one purpose, she does this every week, but during the summer she tapers off, so it was a pleasant surprise when I came in from the field and encountered my old-time smelle. It was moments later that some city friends dropped in unannounced and indicated they were amenable to supper.

Naturally they ate up all my bread.

They seemed to feel that home-grown bread was our regular and steady diet; something strictly rural. "Oh, I want the heel tap!" they all shouted at once, so we cut all the ends off all the loaves to begin with. This made me think of the old fellow who was consoling his wife by reciting all the privations he took on just to keep her happy. "And I always ate the heel piece so you wouldn't have to," he said. And she sighed and replied, "Yes, and I always wanted it." This amused our guests, and they laughed about it, but they ate all the heel pieces just the same.

Then the subject of baking bread came up, and somewhere along the line I mentioned a flour barrel. Only those whose history goes back a way will have a flour barrel today, and to keep it working you buy flour in bags and dump it in. It has been long years since a barrel of flour was rolled into our home.

But what I was getting at was the old State of Maine method of mixing the bread dough in the top of the flour barrel, a bit of lore which I found my supper guests were disbelieving — as if I'd been telling about the trout that whistled Yankee Doodle, or the fellow who went about with a swarm of bees in his top hat.

Such is the climate which prevails. So, too, will citizens learn that the Northwest Passage is being discovered. Sow-thest, and exhibit small wonder. These are hard times for one who admires vraisemblance and truth. The whistling trout is hardest of all.

But I hope somewhere in this general mix-up of populations there still remains a memory to corroborate my account.

Here's how it was: The cook would take all the moist ingredients of a batch of bread, and would mix them together in a big bowl. Not just any old bowl; for bowls also had their differences. It would be a big bowl, of a mustard or molasses brown with a grey stripe or two, and it would be so large that you held it by looping an arm about the perimeter and clutching it safely to your side. It was a stoneware bowl, and got handed down.

There were no electric mixers, so you used a big spoon or a fork, and sometimes you had a whisker made of wire which would belabor things wonderfully. Of course, some things got whisked better than others, and on bread you just went as far as you should. Then, when you got the wet things ready, yeast all blended in, you hauled out the flour barrel, which was hung on a swivel under the shelf, and you just dumped the contents of the bowl on top of the flour in the barrel.

If the cooking was being done for a crowd—such as threshers or a lumber camp crew—you'd have quite a bowlful, because you'd be shooting at 15 or 20 loaves. But if you were just making three or four loaves and a batch of biscuits for home consumption this method worked just as well. I have looked through a number of good cookbooks to see if any of them recommend this method of mixing bread, and none of them does.

Having dumped the bowl, you then mixed the dough, and the trick was to get a gob that would be thick enough to lift out, but not thicker than would make good bread. The kind of cock who knew how to do this was the kind that knew when to yank the dough out.

You'd see the cook reaching into the flour barrel and making his or her arms go, and then all at once would come the dough to be slapped onto the table, and the deed was done. The flour remaining in the barrel was unaffected. Then you proceeded as in multiplication, rising and kneading and shaping and baking.

But, of course, you had to have a barrel. You had to have those attitudes which went with a barrel. You didn't think about weight control or slim pickins. You worked purposefully. —By John Gould in The Christian Science Monitor.

Having the knob of a chest of drawers pull loose in one's hand is a great annoyance. Probably the screw has worn a hole too large to grip the wood. An easy remedy is to fill the hole with plastic wood, let it harden for a few hours, then screw the knob in place. Plastic wood handles like putty and hardens into wood.

NOT FOR SALE—Mrs. William Hamilton proudly points to the quilt it took her 23 years to make. On exhibit at the Wyoming State Fair, the quilt contains 13,500 pieces in 27 different colours and depicts a garden scene. Mrs. Hamilton has insured the cotton quilt for $1,000 but wouldn't take $5,000 for it. "It's not for sale. I'm going to hand it down to posterity," she says.

Surprise! We have mushrooms growing on our front lawn! The first lot we regarded with grave suspicion—were they or were they not, true mushrooms? We looked them over very carefully, remembering all we knew or had read about mushrooms versus toad-stools. We decided these were the edible variety I picked them, cooked them, and dished them up for supper with fried bacon. Partner looked at his plate and at the first mouthful exclaimed — "Well, here goes — but I'm glad there's a doctor on the street!" Since then we have had several batches. Now we are giving them away — to the doctor's wife, no less. She seems to know her mushrooms. It seems funny, so far as we are aware, ours is the only lot that has spawned mushrooms. And at the farm we had them on our front lawn too. Anyway, we are still alive to tell the tale. However, it isn't a risk I would suggest anyone taking without first hand knowledge of the difference between toadstools and mushrooms — and certainly I wouldn't be the one to advise you on which is what.

Well, it looks as if the daily round is following its usual pattern. From most kitchens comes the smell of pickles, preserves, jams and jellies. And in the orchards apples, pear and plums hang ripe for the picking. Rosy red apples make a pretty picture as they hang from the bending boughs; crabapples looking like colourful miniatures of Snows and Wealthies, every few crabs a potential jar of jelly to serve with a succulent roast of beef. Come to think of it, if "an apple a day keeps the doctor away" there should be enough apples around to put all the doctors out of business. But alas, sometimes that theory works in reverse. Apples must be picked and every year there are a few broken bones as a result. A rotten branch gives way; a ladder is carelessly placed or someone loses his or her balance . . . and so a doctor is called instead of being kept away. Be careful, folks, better be safe than sorry.

My, where has the summer gone to? Here we are, into fall already . . . evenings closing in, dawn coming later and later. Exhibition over, children back to school, fall fairs in the offing, gardens getting somewhat ragged and goldenrod blooming everywhere. And how it's blooming! Unworked farm fields, old-fashioned acres and vacant lots, all are a golden glow with this pretty but troublesome weed. One would never imagine a weed inspector existed anywhere in the province. And yet we know there are such inspectors — I believe there is one appointed for almost every rural municipality. He keeps a watchful eye on farmers' fields. If any field has an overabundance of wild carrot, chicory or any other noxious weed, the inspector has the authority to order that field to be cut. If the farmer fails to comply then he is in for a lot of trouble and expense. It is argued the rules and regulations governing weed control are to his interest. Well and good. But how can cutting his field benefit a farmer if the land next to him has been sold to a real estate speculator and allowed to become over-run with more weeds than you'd find on an average farm in twenty years? It just doesn't make sense. If weeds are allowed to go unchecked on vacant land then municipalities might just as well dispense with weed inspectors altogether and save the taxpayers that much money. An alternative is to make weed control compulsory—for speculators as well as legitimate farmers. Undoubtedly that would be the better way—and would certainly be hailed with joy by the unhappy victims of hay fever.

Well, we had all the family here last night. At such times we are glad we didn't settle for a small house — when all the grandchildren are here the house we have isn't a bit too big. They like plenty of room to roam around. Eddie looked as if he had been through the wars. Plaster on his chin, a scratched cheek and a bruised and swollen eye — from three separate accidents, all of a minor nature. Ross was displaying his first tooth but was far too sleepy to care. Dave was feeling very grown-up — on the eve of his first day at nursery school.

Yes, we were altogether in our new home but in thought we were back at Ginger Farm. Bob had brought along some excellent film to run off on his projector. The farm scenes brought on a feeling of nostalgia — children and dogs playing around together, Tippy — dear, faithful Tippy in one picture; Rusty and Robbie in another. Pictures of the house and farm buildings and the back lane with its snake-rail fence. We followed the pictures closely — remembering, just remembering — and realizing as never before what we had given up, knowing that hard cash can never compensate for what has been irretrievably lost. However we have our memories — many, many happy memories. With them we must now be content.

Q. When attaching a card to a wedding gift, is it necessary to write the bride's name on the envelope?

A. Although it is not necessary, it is all right to do so.

Q. My dog recently jumped on a woman guest's lap and caused her to spill tea over her dress. Should I have her dress cleaned for her?

A. Most certainly you should.

Gamble for Drug Firms

By JERRY BENNETT
NEA Staff Correspondent

Washington — Drug industry executives hope to know by next spring whether or not they should have paid more attention to their sales experts before taking a multi-million dollar gamble on the new Asiatic Flu vaccine.

Already the six vaccine making firms have bet an estimated 20 to 30 million dollars in their drive to have 85 million shots ready by Jan. 1.

They made this expensive wager against the opinion of their marketing research staffs who predicted the new vaccine would never sell, a drug industry spokesman reveals. These experts based their opinion on sales records which showed flu vaccine was not a popular item on the drug market.

At that time little was widely known about the strong chances of Asiatic Flu completely sweeping the country. The spokesman says that the command decision to risk millions of dollars is the hardest task the industry has faced so far in the round-the-clock vaccine mass production program.

Public Health Service warnings that an epidemic was almost a certainty were largely responsible for the great financial decision. The menace to health coupled with PHS beliefs that Asiatic Flu would receive enough publicity to make people want the vaccine set the production wheels in motion, the drug company official explains.

He says returns from wholesalers show large quantities of the vaccine are being bought at present. He explains, though, that this is no guarantee that the firms will make a profit.

Any unused doses can be returned for credit. Manufacturers could be forced to take back large shipments of the medicine if the epidemic doesn't strike or doesn't cover as much of the country as is expected.

One expert observed definitely believes the drug companies will go in the red on the vaccine production program. The industry spokesman says: "Chances are that people will be sufficiently interested in protecting themselves so that the drug manufacturers will make money in the long run." But he adds that it is still a toss-up whether the final tabulation will show a profit or loss.

Scientists, technicians and office managers have had to leave financial worries to the top executives. Since the all-out production drive started early this summer, they've been too busy to be bothered with money matters. In less than two months they have turned out more than three million doses for distribution. They have increased production to the extent that they now expect to top their old Feb. 1 goal of 60 million shots by 25 million more. And they think they can make this extra supply a month early.

Until the crash program rolled into operation, the manufacturers had only been geared to produce about two million shots a year of the old-type flu vaccine. To meet the new Asian vaccine quota, more workers had to be hired or switched from other duties to vaccine work.

It is estimated that the number of people involved in Asian vaccine production numbers in the thousands.

In addition, companies had to carry on extensive remodeling programs to provide more space for the mushrooming operation. And production of antibiotics had to be stepped up to provide sufficient protection against pneumonia which easily strikes flu victims.

"I haven't been feeling at all well," said Hobson to a colleague.

"But you're looking splendid," said the other man.

"I know. But it takes all my strength to keep up appearances."

Traveling Salesman: "I miss my wife's cooking."
Second Salesman: "So do I — every time I can."

Metcalfe Church Scene Local Girl's Wedding

A very pretty wedding took place at Metcalfe United Church on September 14th, when Thelma Ann Bell, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Karl Bell, Dixon's Corners, became the bride of Lloyd James Madden, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Madden, Hallville. Rev. J. E. Davies officiated.

The petite blonde bride was given in marriage by her cousin, Sherman Hoy Metcalfe, and looked charming in her waltz-length gown of nylon tulle over satin with fitted chantilly lace bodice and bolero with lily point sleeves. Her veil was shoulder-length with nylon lace tiara, trimmed with seed pearls and sequins. She carried a bouquet of red roses.

Her matron of honor, Mrs. William Metcalfe, was dressed in a waltz-length gown of rust chrysolette with matching hat and gloves and carried a nosegay of yellow and white carnations.

The junior bridesmaid, Miss Carolyn Hoy, the bride's cousin, wore a yellow nylon dress with white floral flocking with matching flower halo and gloves and carried a nosegay of yellow and white carnations.

Following the ceremony, the immediate friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jeale where a sumptuous luncheon was served. The table was beautifully decorated and centred with a three-tier wedding cake. Mr. and Mrs. Madden left on a trip to points West. They will reside at their new home in the Kemptville district.

KEMPTVILLE SCHOOL PREPARING FOR RECORD ENROLMENT

This summer has been a busy one at the Kemptville Agricultural School. Enrolment for the junior year in agriculture is the highest since the immediate post-war period when veterans of World War II used their gratuities to acquire a more scientific knowledge of agriculture.

Accommodation was stretched to full capacity at that time and this year the residence will be taxed to the utmost to make room for both junior and senior boys. Registration day is October 15th, and it is expected that over 100 students, boys and girls, will come prepared to settle down in residence for another year.

Carpenters and painters are busily engaged in renovating and repairing the classrooms and residence and partitioning the basement to make available additional rooms.

While this work is being carried out, bricklayers and masons of the Public Works Department are completing an up-to-date modern equipped poultry building in another part of the campus. This new building which is two stories high, 54' by 84', will contain an incubation room, a processing plant and refrigerator room. Located on the second floor will be a large lecture room and laboratory.

Fashions

Any girl in search of the unusual evening outfit would do well to consider this one. It is a most unusual combination of tartan plaid and nylon lace and the result is one of charm and fashion interest. The snug little jacket is cut on classic lines. Under it is a camisole top of the plaid. A self cummerbund and a very feminine skirt of nylon lace complete a very pretty picture.

Try Brake Downward Trend Hog Prices

In a neffort to brake the present downward trend in hog prices, the Ontario Hog Producers Co-operative is speeding up its hog directional program, Charles McInnis, president of the Co-operative announced last week-end.

Mr. McInnis said that at a meeting of the directors of the Hog Marketing Board and the Co-operative held this week, new orders have been passed extending the hog directional program into five more counties bringing the total number of counties under orders to 12.

The five new counties to be brought under the directional program are Wentworth, Lambton, Kent, Essex and Elgin. The directional orders become effective for these counties on October 14 and require that all transporters must deliver hogs originating from these counties only at the Co-operative's assembly points.

Mr. McInnis said that the Hog Marketing Board hopes that once the hog directional program has been extended to all parts of Ontario, the current downward trend of Ontario hog prices following the movement of Chicago and Western Canada prices might be braked.

"Once the marketing agency has full control of all Ontario hogs", he said, "the Board is determined to prevent sharp price drops in anticipation of small surplus markets. The marketing agency is firmly of the opinion that when all hogs in Ontario are on open markets, the marketing agency will be able to prevent these severe price slumps which usually are unjustified and certainly are unfair to the producer."

Angus Brontmeyer, Iroquois, had passed away suddenly while attending a wrestling match Saturday night at Brockville.
