Four Wheelin' Down and Dirty for work or play

by Nelson Zandbergen
Chieftain Staff Reporter

All terrain vehicles have come a long way since Roger Moore drove a three-wheeler in a James Bond flick of the 1970s.

The ubiquitous three-wheeler was banned in the mid-80s after a rash of injuries and fatalities were attributed to the trikes, leaving a hole in the marketplace that has since been filled by its knobby four-wheeled cousin, a safer and more popular machine than ever.

The market has become lucrative enough that Canada's own Bombardier added an ATV line-up to the Sea-doos and famous Ski-doos coming out of its Quebec plant two years ago.

"They're real irreplaceable on a farm," says Peggy Tetreault of Grenville Snowmobile and Garden Equipment in Maynard. The family business has carried Bombardier products since 1972 and leapt at the chance to get into the ATV market with the brand.

A variety of aftermarket implements are available for the four-wheelers, including plows and mowers.

Tetreault also notes the enduring popularity of the machines with hunters and outdoor enthusiasts. In fact, sufficient numbers of non-farmers now own four-wheelers that there is building pressure to create a system of public trails as the snowmobile organizations have done.

Progress has so far been limited to northern Ontario and north of Highway 7, her son Andy says. Locally, the ATV club in Johnstown is reported to have a good set of trails on land owned by the Ontario government.

And there's the difficulty: only a patchwork of government land — unopened road allowances and the like — is available for off-roading during the growing season. Snowmobile clubs have created an impressive network of trails by signing agreements with farmers to cross their property when it's unused in the winter; those same farmers are unlikely to want four-wheelers zipping through their fields of soybeans in the middle of June.

The issue is further complicated by the fact that four-wheelers are prohibited from using snowmobile trails during the winter.

But if you've got the space, there certainly is an impressive array of hardware to choose from.

Andy shows off Bombardier's Traxter model, with its unique 'step-thru' seat — a utilitarian feature that makes getting on and off less of a motorcyclist's stretch and more lawn tractor-like.

He starts the machine with the touch of a button and cycles through through a couple gears by rocking his thumb on a yellow switch on the left handlebar. "It's an automatic shuttle shift," he says. And it's got reverse too, of course.

Half a litre of liquid-cooled engine displacement rumbles a calm four-stroke tune, totally enclosed in an engine compartment located beneath the seat. Hot exhaust and crankcase blisters on tender legs have been rendered a thing of the past.

It's a refined machine. "You could steer it with two fingers," Andy says, noting the progressive locking traction system that keeps the front end nice and docile.

For the rip-roaring of heart, there is the DS650 — DS standing for 'Desert Storm.' And a radical, hopped up machine it is, with tall suspension giving it more than a passing nod to a dune buggy. Andy expects to take delivery on the DS650 shortly, introduced this year to take aim at the sport ATV market. Bombardier also has plans for a 250cc entry model four-wheeler.

Be prepared to pay about $8,900 for a Traxter, or $9,900 for its racer sibling, the DS650.

New Watercraft Regulations take affect

by Sandra Lee Johnston
Chieftain Staff Reporter

There has been an explosion in the past few years in the popularity of personal watercraft. Designed to be ridden on and not in these are highly manoeuvrable vehicles. Their small size allows them to jump waves, turn quickly and travel at speeds in excess of 50 MPH...all factors which have led to a number of highly publicized fatal accidents. As a result, some owners are having difficulty finding insurance for their crafts. As their popularity increases, so too do the incidences of theft and liability claims. Of course too, there are those few who give PWCs a bad rap and everyone who has one accepts the blame. Some insurance companies are re-examining their policies around personal watercraft and industry changes could include such things as an increase in the premiums, in the deductible and or changes to acceptability rules specifically for this type of craft. Many companies simply add such watercraft to existing homeowner policies while others sell it as a separate policy.

No matter the name: Jet Skis, Sea Doos, Wet Bikes, Wave Riders, Tiger Sharks they are all considered personal watercraft. They are fun, but they are NOT toys. Too often it is over confidence or plain inexperience at fault when problems occur. Unpleasantly reminiscent of snowmobiling's wild first go-round thirty years ago...and with the big four of motorized recreational vehicles pumping out PWC for the international market, there is no doubt PWC are here to stay! We all need to get used to them, whether we own one or not.

Like any other new recreational form or variation, PWCs have gone through growing pains. Largely out of operator ignorance or inexperience, they've often been a nuisance to traditional and established waterway users. But, as the industry matures and PWC riders develop acceptable patterns of long term operation, the yahoo factor is rapidly disappearing. PWC touring is in its formative stages as more owners seek adventure through exploration and sight-seeing, the same as any other pleasure boater. As the new edge wears off, Personal Water Crafting is settling into a habit of responsibility that bodes well for its future and that of other waterway occupants.

With summer officially here, and the heat stifling, enthusiasts are taking to the water with their boats and Personal Watercrafts.

Personal Watercrafts (PWCs) are quickly becoming the most popular vehicles on waterways throughout the province of Ontario.

Before taking your first spin there are a number of safety tips which you should be aware of and take note of so your fun time on the water is also a safe time.

Legislation:

Since the Coast Guard considers your personal watercraft a Class A, Motorboat, operators and owners must follow the same rules and regulations of the water as boaters. Prior to jetting off on your PWC, you must adhere to the laws for boat numbering, registration and titling. All PWC must have a Certificate of Number issued which is similar to a car's license plate and a Hull Identification Number, much like a car's serial number. Applications for these numbers are available from your boat dealer and boating officials.

As of April 1, 1999, there are new boating regulations for Personal Watercraft users. Personal Watercraft operators must be at least 16 years of age and all boaters are encouraged to take the new Operator Proficiency Test. To find out more information about these new regulations, visit the Canadian Coast Guard website at www.ccg-gcc.gc.ca or call 1-800-267-6687.

Whether a PWC or a boat it is vital to ensure a safe time on the water. Wear your life jacket. Many boaters do not but it is vital for PWC operators. Never drink and drive. (It takes 1/3 the amount of alcohol to impair a boater on the water as it takes to impair a driver on the highway...and the motion and vibration, the sun and wind in a boat accelerates alcohol impairment. Boaters and PWC operators have far less operational time and experience than automobile drivers and so are less able to handle diminished competence.

Boating while intoxicated is a crime, to be fined not less than $300 for the first offence and then a jail term of not less than 14 days for a second.

How PWCs work:

The mechanics of a PWC are very different from those of a boat and understanding the mechanics will not only improve your performance, but will help you drive safely. PWCs are propelled through the water by the action of a jet pump that is driven by the engine. Certain safety precautions must always be observed...

* Keep hands and feet, as well as clothing and hair away from the pump intake.

* Never operate your Personal Watercraft in very shallow water, since any material such as sand, can be sucked up from the bottom and may not only damage the pump, but may be expelled out the back of the pump and cause injury.

Your responsibility:

Unlike boats, a key element of PWCs is that they are designed to allow you to fall off and reboard. Yet, it is the owner's responsibility to ensure that anyone operating their watercraft has been instructed in both safety awareness and boat operation. Make sure that beginners understand the tether cord engine shut-off mechanism, deep water starting and re-boarding procedures while still on land.

Did you know?

It is estimated that 80% of victims in fatal boating accidents will NOT have worn their life jackets...30% will be passengers in overloaded boats and up to 50% will be riding with someone who is drinking alcohol.

Be Aware:

* Don't overload with people or equipment.

* Get a weather forecast before going out.
* Keep an eye to the weather when you are out, squalls come up fast.
* Keep a sharp look out for other boats, swimmers, divers, personal water craft and water skiers.
* Take a boat safety course.
* Limit your trip in the water to the number of hours you can stay without becoming bored or restless.
* Take along plenty of food and water.
* Powerboats and PWCs avoid sailboats (under sail) and craft propelled by oars or paddles. (they are less manoeuvrable).
* Avoid large, deep draft vessels in narrow channels, they cannot manoeuvre easily or quickly.

Check list:

* Are your boat and motor serviced regularly and maintained?
* Check you fuel supply.

Safety equipment:

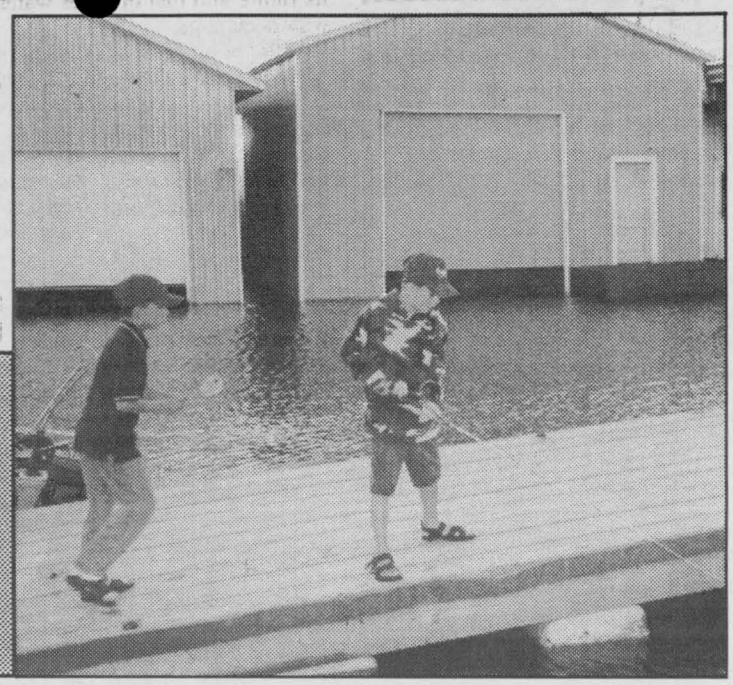

* Approved (By Transport Canada) PFDs for each person, or life jackets.
* Two oars with rowlocks or paddles.
* A hand-held bailer or manual pump.
* A sound signalling device.
* An approved fire extinguisher (If boat has an in-board motor, fixed fuel tank or heating/cooking equipment).
* Mounted light for night use that comply with "Collision Regulations."

Water Skiing:

Water skiing rules have been expanded to include other towing activities like barefoot skiing, tubing and surfboarding. A "spotter" on board is always necessary, as well as spare seating for the numebr being towed. No towing is allowed from one hour after sunset to sunrise. One additional PFD on board for each person being towed and tickets are issued on the spot!!

Hearts and Flowers Garden Tour

by Sandra Lee Johnston
Chieftain Staff Reporter

Who could have imagined that the weather would be so very sweltering hot? None the less the Dundas Chapter of the Heart and Stroke Foundation of Ontario hosted a garden tour to raise funds and also to encourage everyone to get out and enjoy the summer weather.

This has become a popular fund-raiser in the past few years. In fact so much so that the Dundas Chapter felt they needed to go a bit farther a field to entice people to purchase a ticket and check out the gardens.

Balloons were a signal that we were upon another garden and after the first one, we could hardly wait to see the rest. The sun and the humidity did play havoc with our enthusiasm, but the few gardens we did manage to check out were spectacular, and we have been more than a few tours lately.

Shirley Coons welcomed us to her garden and as we parked on the paved drive bordered by begonias, the cabbage in the front beds greeted us as well. The three white outdoor lamps seem just perfect among he colourful cabbages that will sparkle as fall approaches and they burst into bloom.

Her spacious backyard provides a perfect setting for those wedding pictures, as clumps of carefully trimmed evergreens create a natural perimeter. The variable colours of green throughout are great, as shrubs blend in with the fruit trees and cedars. A new fence creates a warm and friendly garden space, the apple trees and the Schubert Cherry decked in crimson has turned from its green to red beautifully. A high-bush cranberry and a broad-leaf Hosta are present as well. There is colour sprinkled throughout the garden area as Iris, Gabriel's Trumpets, Portulaca, Echinacea and Bal-Bomb provide a variety of colours and scents. The roses are special of course too. The peonies are done flowering but their deep green leaves add to the overall appeal of this garden.

Then it was off to Scott and Lorelei Erratt's garden. Stepping through the trellis it takes a few minutes to get adjusted to the scene. Purchasing a rather dilapidated farm house and surrounding land on the bank of the mighty Nation River...who could imagine that today this couple would have created such a haven from the outside world? It almost takes your breath away it is so marvellous! Utilizing the natural flow of the landscape they have ponds, a grape arbour and water fountain, and little nooks and crannies that were so inviting, it was easy to see yourself taking a break from the hustle and bustle and becoming engrossed in a good book in several places throughout the area. As music comes from under shrubs and beside stone fish spouting water, you are carried to the next plateau... The sound of falling water is so soothing, and the use of evergreens mixed with colourful plants is so terrific. The green space even flows as you move from one level to the next, you are surrounded by nature and as you check out the goldfish, the beautiful water lily blooms and the creative manner in which the water moves from higher to lower levels, you are at once at peace. Secluded areas complete with chairs and tables are just right for visiting or being alone with ones' thoughts. The cook stove provides a fire pit that is wonderful, up on the hill, it takes no effort to picture a family gathering in the moonlight with the fire blazing and ghost stories keeping eyes wide with anticipation. (and so like Scouter Scott to come up with such an innovative idea!!) The Grapes are hanging tough (Loads of them!) and will be harvested later, the Vegetable garden is looking good, (not a weed in sight!) the Rose garden is in bloom and the house stands like a sentinel overlooking the entire area and the masses of colourful petunias add that certain something to the picture perfect setting. The Impatience under the white birch shows the attention to detail that Erratts have put into their creation. It is evident that this is indeed a labour of love for these folks. Scott works 12-hour shifts and so explains he has spare time on his days off to work in the gardens, and as we visit and he smiles broadly, it is a sure sign that he enjoys working his green thumb magic. Truly a masterpiece, thanks for sharing it with everyone, Scott and Lorelei, you have a delightful spot...keep up the good work!

From Organic gardening (Debbie and Ed DeCooman) to a garden that displayed how to utilize a small space to best advantage (Nancy MacMillan) there were so many ideas to grab. The trick is always to stop and take in the entire garden at a swooping glance and then move in for a closer scrutiny, choosing specific areas to delve into. From a backyard filled with flowers and veggies (Rita Barrett), literal explosions of colour; to the creek bordered in flowers and backed by stately maple trees where a solace from the suns' rays and a wondrous spot for some cool relaxation was maintained (Bruce and Kim Henbest) it was so peaceful you wanted to remain there a long time.

There was a garden space that suited every taste, colour coice and each delighted the senses so incredibly. The creativity is amazing and the growing ability of local gardeners astonishing. A terrific hobby and a great way to gain exercise and energy for all ages, gardening knows no bounds; use your imagination, and create a space that is "you"...taking in these tours certainly gives food for thought. Taking some of the ideas and modelling them to suit your space will give you a garden to be proud of where your family can truly enjoy nature, not only in the summer but all through the seasons.
