Winchester, Oct. 4—The 54th annual convention of the teachers of Dundas County was held here today with sessions morning and evening. The meeting continues tomorrow. More than 100 teachers from all parts of the county gathered for the occasion.

Miss L. J. Burnside, president of the association, formally opened the convention and gave a talk on a trip to Washington and Florida. Business reports and other routine matters followed. A public meeting was held in the evening, with A. Sweet as chairman. An oratorical contest, in which the winners at the rural school fairs took part, was a feature. The winner tonight was Beldric Belanger, South Mountain. The other participants were Wilda Fader, Brinston, Ruth Nevrille, Osnabruck Centre; Robert Durant, Maple Ridge; Samuel Telford, Williamsburg.

Medals were presented to two public school pupils who gained distinction at the entrance examinations this year. The Forester medal was presented to Veilda Watkins, Iroquois, and the Campbell medal to David Bowles, Williamsburg. The evening closed with a social gathering.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross F. Beckstead celebrated their 17th wedding anniversary Thursday, Sept. 13th, at their home, West Main street, Aultsville, when about 75 friends and neighbors gathered to extend their congratulations and best wishes. Friends were present from Lisbon, N.Y., Massena, N.Y., Brockville, Chesterville, Elma, Grantley and Aultsville. During the evening the youngest daughter, Maxine, received the rite of baptism by Rev. G. W. Dustin, B.D., gowned in pale pink crepe-de-chine with white silk veil, the little bride looked sweet and winsome and stood, with her parents and grandmother, under an arch of green and red during the ceremony. Dinner was served at 8.30 and ample justice was done to the delicious and bountiful viands provided.

Mr. and Mrs. Beckstead were the recipients of many and useful gifts befitting the occasion, also checks. Rev. Mr. Dustin and Mr. R. Beckstead favored the party who all drank to very appropriate toasts. A three-piece orchestra provided music during the evening. The party broke up in the wee sma' hours wishing the bride and groom many happy anniversaries.

EXPRESS REGRET AT THEIR DEPARTURE

Chesterville and district are regretting the departure from their midst of Dr. W. A. Brown, who, with his family, is moving this week to Kingston, to continue in his profession. For many years Dr. Brown, together with his father, the late Dr. Miles Brown, has ministered to the many wants of the village and surrounding communities, building up a large practice and establishing a life-long friendship with a host of people. Quite recently he disposed of his home and practice to Dr. A. B. Clayton, who has been one of the physicians of Chesterville for nearly five years. With Dr. Brown go his wife, who has been a prominent and active worker in the United Church; Edith, who is attending High School, while their son, William, is at present in his third year in Queens University.

On Thursday evening the ladies of the United Church held a farewell gathering in the Sunday School Hall in honor of Mrs. Brown and Edith. The chair was ably filled by Mrs. (Rev.) R. E. Newman, and a very fine program given, consisting of a vocal solo by Mrs. W. N. Fulton, Instrumental duet by the Misses Jean Fulton and Betty Bolster, a reading by Miss Frances Fulton, and an instrumental solo by Miss Edith Brown.

The presentation to Mrs. Brown of a beautiful reading lamp and silver entree dish was made by Mrs. Charles Graham, the address being read by Mrs. Thomas Houlehan. Miss Edith Brown was then presented with a beautiful leather travelling bag by the Misses Helen Hamilton and Louisa Wilson, on behalf of her Sunday School Class. Mrs. Brown and Edith both responded with words of appreciation, after which refreshments were served.

MRS. ROBERT GREER

Early on Monday morning, Oct. 1st, and quite unexpectedly, there passed away at her home here, Mrs. Robert Greer. Mrs. Greer, who before her marriage was Miss Hagar A. Hanson of Matilda, was in her 72nd year, and had been a semi-invalid for the past four years. Most of her married life was spent at Winchester Springs, where she took a large and helpful part in the community life, especially in the Presbyterian Church, where she led the service of praise for many years.

Some few years ago the family moved to Morrisburg, where they have since resided.

Mrs. Greer's passing is mourned by a large circle of friends and not the least by her surviving husband, daughter, Mrs. Fred H. Meikle and grand-daughter Jean.

The largely-attended funeral services, which were held on Wednesday afternoon from her late residence, were conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. Burkholder, assisted by Rev. Elwood Lawson and Rev. Wm. Merrilees, of Iroquois. Taking as his text Heb. 13:14 "For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come", Mr. Burkholder, after speaking of "The Goal of Life", referred to the bright disposition of the deceased, the many friends she made and kept, and her assurance of immortality.

Interment was made in Mount Pleasant cemetery. The pall-bearers were Fred H. Broder, Dr. G. Gorrell, Ed. Foster, Dr. Wm. Meikle, Robt. Merkley, Walter Thom, J. H. Meikle and M. J. Casselman.

The floral tributes were many and beautiful, attesting to the affection and esteem in which Mrs. Greer was held.

WIN HONORS AT FAIR

School Section No. 14, of Augusta, west of Spencerville, took high honors at the school fair held in North Augusta when they secured first prize for parade and Miss Hilda Whitehorn won the Silver Cup given by T. Eaton of Toronto for the pupil having the largest number of points in the whole fair. In the public speaking contest, Miss Alda McLean, daughter of Mr. Wesley McLean won first prize in her group followed by Mr. Eustis Perry. This was a great victory for the school. The teacher, Miss Frances Tuttle, of Iroquois, is to be congratulated in her work at the school with her pupils.

ALLISON—BLACKWELL

The marriage of Allison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Blackwell of Montreal, and granddaughter of the late Col. Chas. Whitcomb and Mrs. Whitcomb of Waterloo, Que., to Mr. Jesse Graham Allison B.S.c., son of Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Allison of Westmount, took place at six o'clock Saturday evening at "Crestmount," the residence of the bride's grandmother in Waterloo, Que. The Rev. H. Allenby, assisted by Rev. J. W. P. McFarlane and Rev. Norman Peterson, performed the ceremony. "Crestmount" was the home where the bride's grandmother and mother were married and she had been baptized.

Among the guests were Mrs. Geo. Michel of Hollywood, Cal.; Mrs. E. F. Johnston of Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Allison of Morrisburg, and Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Graham of Chesterville.

DAN BARRY'S DAUGHTER

BY MAX BRAND

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Finding the lifeless bodies of his two partners at their gold-mining camp, Harry Gloster flees southward, knowing that he will be accused of the crime. On the way Gloster saves the life of a stranger, Lee Haines, from the murderous hands of a scoundrel by the name of Joe Macarthur.

Gloster is jailed after getting into a figt with several men over a girl. Lee Haines and Joan Barry, daughter of a famous rider of the old plains, assist Gloster to escape. Haines is shot down. Joan, several nights later, disappears on the back of the "Captain," Haines huge stallion. Gloster retraces his steps to Joan's cabin and is confronted by Buck Daniels, Joan's guardian; they finally call a truce, however. Now Joe Macarthur comes to the mountain camp of a bandit gang with a scheme to rob the Wickson Bank. "Fatty," the lookout, is escorting Macarthur to the gang headquarters.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

The gorge narrowed as they went, but now opened into a strange hollow chopped out of the head of the mountain.

What Macarthur saw last in the hollow was a cabin among the trees, built at random of squared logs and unsquared, of piled rocks and rocks laid in courses. It was a mysterious hodgepodge such as might have been thrown together by a madman with a giant's strength.

The interior was as strange as the exterior. There was no chimney except an irregular hole which had been broken through the roof. There was no stove, no oven. Instead, a circle of fire-blackened stones of many sizes surrounded the smoking coals.

As to furniture, there was little in the house save the saddles and bridles which hung from pegs along the wall or had been thrown aside carelessly in the corner.

Around a table, on other stones, sat four solemn men. Their faces and characters were so unusual that one might have skimmed all the villainy in the wild west without finding a more dangerous quartet, and justice should be done to each in turn.

Foremost in avoirdupois was Babe Cooney, a swarthy skinned man so smoothly shaven, always, that in some lights his face seemed to have the texture and lustre of youth. He was not more than thirty, perhaps, at the most, but the double battering of years and a hard life had reduced him. The lines around his mouth and eyes would have done credit to his elder by twenty years. And there was a cynical lifelessness in his eyes such as usually does not come until later middle age, at the earliest—not a scorn of the world and the people he found in it, so much as profound weariness with what he had met.

Such was Babe Cooney. If he had been carved in two, each half would have been as large as his left-hand neighbor at the table. This was 'Sliver" Martin. The Sliver was so named because the word was most appropriate. All of his body was shrunken skin and bone. There was purple of cold under his cheek bones. His eyelids were puffy and red, and all the flesh around his mouth was sunken.

To the left of Sliver appeared Lew Cambridge. Lew made a strange appearance with an abnormally small head and a large body. The face had one large feature, which was the enormous nose, overshadowing all else, the childish mouth, the dwarfed and slanted forehead. In the expanse of those wide shoulders the head seemed like that of an infant.

The fourth and last member of the group was quite different from the other three. He was such a man, in appearance, as one finds about a university, seated in study rooms, delving into post graduate courses, heaping up degrees for no other purpose and constantly gathering materials for constantly unwritten books.

He had a towering and nobly formed forehead, beneath which his bloodshot eyes blinked behind strong glasses. His cheeks were thin and pale to match the deep furrows of thought that creased his forehead. The weight of his head was poorly supported by a scrawny neck and a hollow chest. When he spoke his voice was low and monotonous and his diction pure.

This was the group which had gathered about the table. They were playing poker. And ragged as were their clothes and poor as was the room in which they sat, their stakes consisted of stacks of gold pieces, fives and ten and broad faced twenties. The ante was five dollars. The bets on the smallest hands were apt to run into a few hundreds. Moreover, they one and all handled the yellow coin as if it were so much dirt.

They were betting now before the draw, Lew Cambridge forcing up the draw on the strength of three jacks, and Babe Cooney, still more confident because of a straight, and when the stack of gold in the centre of the table had grown high, and when the other two had been forced out of the hand, Cooney suddenly stood up, agape, and pointed through the door. The beautiful straight fluttered from his hand and strewed the floor. The others crowded about him.

"It's Joe Macarthur come back to us—now hell will be popping again!" cried Dud Rainey.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE DOVE IN THE HAWK'S EYE

What the black, sharp feyes of Macarthur say first, as he passed through the door of the cabin, was the yellow gleam of the gold which was scattered upon the table. But he did not give it a second glance.

"Hes come up with a 'plant' on the Wickson Bank!" Fatty called out cheerfully, entering behind Macarthur. "I guess were glad to see him, boys?"

"The Wickson Bank!" shouted Lew. Cambridge, and smote Cooney heavily upon the shoulder.

But the other three showed no enthusiasm.

"Its all worked out," said Macarthur. "I got an inside man on the job. He's cheap and safe. And that's what we want. All I need is some men that can be depended on. And I figured it was worth while to give you all a split to show that my heart was in the right place."

The gloom of three of the men had spread to the other two. Fatty and Lew were waiting to see in what direction the wind would blow It was Dud Rainey who spoke, first arranging his blasses so that he could fix his mild eyes more directly upon Macarthur.

"Joe," he said, "the upshot of this is that you want to be back with us?"

"Of course. What threw me out before was that I had trouble with Haines. Him and me never did get on. You know that. He always hated me. Hated me from the first minute he laid eyes on me."

"He had reasons," answered Rainey.

Big Macarthur flushed.

"Reasons?" he echoed gloomily.

"What did he say when he told you that you had to leave?"

"Are you going to remember that against me, Dud?"

"Haines was a square man," said Dud. "He had a heart as big as a mountain. I remember what he said in front of all of us. He said that you'd made trouble from the first day you came in with us. He said you were a killer, Macarthur. And he named the men you'd killed. I agreed with Haines then and I agree with him still. I don't think you're the right sort of man to have in with us, Joe."

The anger of Macarthur turned his face purple. But he bit his lip and then managed to smile at a great cost of effort.

"In the old days Haines and you may have been right," he said. "But things have changed since them. In the old days, if a gent had said to me what you've just said now, I'd of had my gun out and working. But I'm changed, Dud. Have you heard of any killings being chalked up against my account lately?"

"You were always a smooth, quiet worker," answered Rainey.

"What's plain to me," said Sliver Martin, "is that there's a difference here. Some of the boys want Joe back. Some don't. We'll throw a coin to decide. Is that square?"

They agreed that it was eminently just. And Sliver, producing a broad silver dollar from his pocket, spun it in the air as high as the roof. There it hung an instant at the top of its rise, a glittering point of light, then swooped. It did not strike the floor at once, however. With the oily ease of long practice, Macarthur slipped his weapon from its holster and fired. The dollar disappeared, clanged against the farther wall, and dropped heavily. One side of it was torn away.

There was a general uproar, not of anger, but of admiration.

"By gad, Joe!" cried Fatty Guiness, "you have been practicing!"

"Boys,' said Macarthur, keeping back a smile of pride with an effort, "this here thing means too much to me. I cant leave it to chance. I ask you again: will you take me in?"

Perhaps Dud had been swept off his feet, like the others, by this timely exhibition of skill, or perhaps he had noted the change in the faces of his friends. At any rate, he now stepped to Macarthur and offered his hand. It was accepted at once.

"Joe," said Rainey, "you know that I always say what I think. I said it in the first place. I suppose the rest of the boys will think that if you come back into the gang I'd better get out if I care to keep a whole skin. But they're wrong. I've taken the privilege of changing my mind. We need men with an eye and a hand as fast as yours. Besides, you learned when Haines was with us, poor devil, that you couldn't bully the gang, and I don't think that you'll ever try it again. I'm with you, for one!"

After that, there was not a dissentient voice, and when the clamor ended, Rainey spoke again.

Popular Calf Bag Favored

Calf is having a pronounced vogue as a medium for the hand bag. Pearly calf, having a fine pebbly surface, is made up into both envelope and pouch types. Two tones of color are often combined, the main part of the bag of beige calf with brown for trimming, or a combination of dark and lighter blue.

Patou's soft collapsible envelope resembling a messenger's portfolio, is made of very fine calf, and Vionnet makes an envelope of calf with a tortoise shell buckle.

Heroes of Storm and Spray

Thrills of the British Pilots Dangerous Trade

Our sea pilots are a little-known body of men, but their work is vital to the trade and prosperity of the country.

More ships enter and leave the ports harbors and river mouth of Great Britain than of any other country in the world; and a greater volume of merchandise of all kinds arrives at and leaves our shores than any others. Many of our harbor entrances are intricate and complicated; the estuary of the Thames, the greatest port in the world, is extremely difficult to navigate.

Pilots are picked seamen who make a life study of local conditions at each port, and who take complete charge of any ship entering or leaving, great or small. British or foreign.

KEY MEN OF THE COAST

When the present Prime Minister was President of the Board of Trade in the Coalition Government, an M.P. took a deputation of pilots to see him and discuss with him, in his position as the Minister primarily responsible, certain difficulties they were experiencing.

Mr. Baldwin was walking up and down the Terrace of the House of Commons. The pilots, from half-a-dozen different ports, were ready waiting when the M.P. approached the future Prime Minister and said, "I have a number of pilots to whom I would like you to give an interview."

"What?" said Mr. Baldwin. "Pirates? I didn't know any existed."

"No," said the M.P., "Pilots. Men who pilot ships in and out of our harbors."

"Oh," said Mr. Baldwin, "pilots. Of course I will see them immediately."

These men are in key positions. Ships become larger and faster, but the tides, the ocean currents, the shoals, the rocks, the fogs, the mists, the storms, and the darkness remain. If the pilots were to go on strike, the whole commerce of the country would be held up. But that they have never done, and never will do.

Their position is so important that it is specially regulated by Act of Parliament. Their remuneration is fixed by local Boards, composed of ship owners, pilots themselves, and the harbor authorities; and in the London district by Trinity House. If they are dissatisfied they can appeal, in the last resort, to the Board of Trade. Ships, British or foreign, approaching our shores with cargoes, rarely know the port at which they will unload. This depends on the markets and other conditions, and they often have to wait until they reach the first signal station on the coast to be told where they are to go.

NEVER OFF DUTY.

The captain may be sent to a port to which he has never been before and for which he may not even have the charts. But as he approaches it, flying the special pilot flag, which shows he means to enter and needs a pilot, he presently sees tossing about off the coast a small steam or sailing cutter. The pilot cutter lowers a rowing boat manned by two or three apprentices as the ship draws near, and in the boat is an oilskin-clad figure who climbs up the lowered sea ladder.

He is the pilot; and once he has stepped on deck he is in complete charge of the ship, and absolutely responsible for her movements and safety.

Sometimes the sea is too rough for the small rowing boat to come alongside. Then a rope is thrown, the pilot makes it fast round his waist, jumps overboard, and is hauled up the side of the steamer, dripping wet, on to the deck. Shaking the water from him like a big dog, he will go on the bridge at once and navigate the ship into dock; for time is money and there must be no delay.

Ships leaving for sea have to be piloted out just the same; and sometimes the weather is so bad that the pilot cannot be transferred to the cutter, or the cutter may even be driven into shelter. Then the pilot must wait until the ship touches the first port, where he is put ashore and takes his chance of a passage home.

On the bridge the pilot gives orders to the helmsman, regulates the speed of the ship, and takes her right up to the docks and inside to her berth.

The worst task a pilot can have is to take over a big steamer in ballast; which means that she is light, and in a strong wind is blown about like a bladder on the water.

If the pilot makes a mistakes, is involved in a collision or, through an error of judgment, touches a hidden rock, he may have his certificate taken away and be ruined. It is obvious from the foregoing that the pilots must be men of particular attainments, great skill, and knowing every inch of their localities, the tides and the intricacies of our coasts.

Sometimes the pilot has to pick up a ship in the Thames and take her all the way through the English Channel, leaving her again off some West-country port. The Channel pilots are a special section of the service and are the highest paid of British pilots. Their earnings go up to as high as £1,000 to £1,300 a year, but this is exceptional. The highest paid pilots in the world are those on the river Hoogli, navigating ships up to Calcutta. The Hoogli is a very dangerous river, full of shifting shoals, the climate is bad, and the dangers from fever great. These men earn up to £2,000 a year.

The earnings of the pilots of British ports vary greatly. At Liverpool, the second port of Great Britain and one of the greatest shipping centres in the world, there are 135 pilots and thirty-five apprentices. The first class pilots, who navigate the largest ships, earn, on an average, £800 a year, the second class £600 a year, and the third class £550 a year. At Bristol the thirty-one pilots average about £600 a year each; eighty-six pilots at Cardiff about £300. The Manchester pilots, who take ships all the way up the canal to Cottonopolis, make about £700 a year. In the Humber, where navigation is particularly difficult, the pilots only average about £360 a year each.

The pilots in the cutters work in rotation while waiting for ships. They cannot refuse to pilot a vessel and take all in turn. There may come along a foreign fishing trawler for which the fee earned is only £3, or she may be a 20,000-ton steamer, the biggest to enter the Humber, for which the fee for taking her some twenty-seven miles up the river and berthing in the docks is £23. A ship in ballast, although the most difficult to navigate, pays only half-fees. A 600-ton coaster fully loaded pays only £3 10s.

The pilot is never off duty. If a licensed pilot is walking along the street and the captain of a vessel wants to go to sea and has forgotten to engage a pilot he can stop him in the street and the pilot is bound to take the vessel out.

There are two methods of entry into the Pilot Service. The pilot must prepare himself for service at a particular port or locality, as it is a life study to qualify himself and obtain the necessary local knowledge. He must be a British subject by birth. He enters as an apprentice at the age of 15, after a medical and educational examination, and serves for six years, each year having to pass an examination in seamanship and pilotage.

SCHOONER TO BATTLESHIP

During the last two years he takes lessons in navigation. At the age of 21 he must go to sea in a sailing ship as an A.B. before the mast for a year. Owing to the comparatively small number of sailing ships in these days, this usually means service in a coaster. Then he must serve for six months as A.B. before the mast in a "foreign-going" ship, that is, one trading abroad. After that he can take an officer's certificate and must go to sea as a junior officer until a vacancy occurs in his particular pilotage service. This may mean a wait of four or five years more.

On a vacancy occurring, he has to pass a stiff medical and local examination and then, perhaps at the age of 27 or 30, he becomes a third-class pilot qualiled to take charge of the smaller ships. After two years he becomes a second-class pilot; and after a further two years, if approved by the Pilotage Committee, a first class pilot, qualified to navigate any ship afloat—steam, sail, or motor-driven—from a sailing schooner to a battleship.

The other method is that of direct entry as the master of a ship who has traded regularly to the particular port for four years, and then after passing the necessary examination.

All pilots are medically examined every twelve months and their licenses renewed or refused.

Hungary to Give Civilians Gas Masks for War Use

Budapest.—Hungary's entire civilian population is to be provided with gas masks. Former Premier Stephen Friedrich, who addressed Parliament on the dangers threatening Hungary as a marching ground for foreign armies, asked the war appropriations committee to set aside $1,000,000 in the War Office estimates for the purchase of these defensive shields.

Stressing the decisive part which gas and chemicals will play in future wars, former Premier Friedrich, who is now a member of Parliament, said: "I believe in war, because mankind has no law which can check it. For hundreds of years Hungary has been devastated by wars, and the country's destiny places it among the warring nations of Europe Sooner or later we shall be dragged into a war, and we must not leave our people unprotected."

MOST people know this absolute antidote for pain, but are you careful to say Bayer when you buy it? And do you always give a glance to see Bayer on the box—and the word genuine printed in red? It isn't the genuine Aspirin without it! A drug-store always has Bayer, with the proven directions tucked in every box:

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) indicating Bayer Manufacture. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assure the public against imitations, the Tablets will be stamped with their "Bayer Cross" trade mark.

Will Honor Premier

Work of Canada's Political Leader to be Appreciated in His Return from Europe

Rt. Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, will be the guest of honor of the Ottawa Branch of the League of Nations Society in Canada on his return from Europe. Commenting editorially upon the Premier's acceptance of the invitation, the Ottawa Citizen commends the initiative of the society, and continues: "There is little doubt that it will be a very successful public welcome since the League of Nations Society is entirely non-partisan, including members of almost every shade of political opinion. The dinner will doubtless be endorsed by Conservatives and independents, as well as by Liberals.

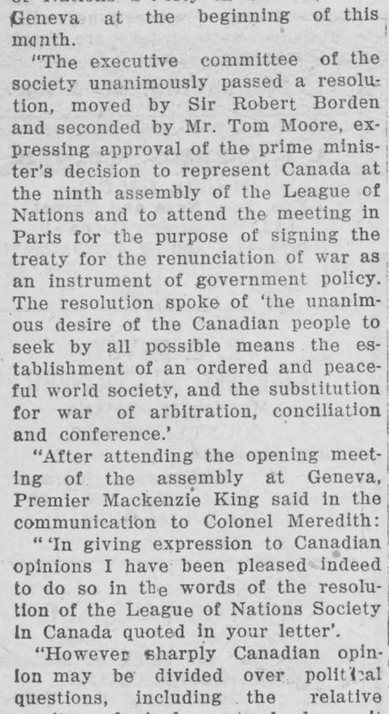

"The prime minister took the view himself that he went to Geneva as the spokesman of the people of Canada This is to be seen in a letter which he wrote to Colonel C P. Mededith, general secretary of the League of Nations S ciety in Canada, from Geneva at the beginning of this month.

"The executive committee of the society unanimously passed a resolution, moved by Sir Robert Borden and seconded by Mr. Tom Moore, expressing approval of the prime minister's decision to represent Canada at the ninth assembly of the League of Nations and to attend the meeting in Paris for the purpose of signing the treaty for the renunciation of war as an instrument of government policy. The resolution spoke of 'the unanimous desire of the Canadian people to seek by all possible means the establishment of an ordered and peaceful world society, and the substitution for war of arbitration, conciliation and conference.'

"After attending the opening meeting of the assembly at Geneva, Premier Mackenzie King said in the communication to Colonel Meredith:

"'In giving expression to Canadian opinions I have been pleased indeed to do so in the words of the resolution of the League of Nations Society in Canada quoted in your letter'.

"However sharply Canadian opinion may be divided over political questions, including the relative merits of rival party leaders, it should be possible to join in cordially welcoming Mr. Mackenzie King as prime minister of Canada when he returns from Geneva, and of hearing an interesting account of the great work for peace in which Canada is participating."

"Combines" in the West

Manitoba Free Press: After two or three years of cautious experiment, what seems like a first-class revolution in western harvesting methods appears to be taking place this year. This is in the greatly increased use of "combines" in the grain fields of the prairie provinces. In Saskatchewan alone, it is estimated that 5,000 of these machines will be used this season, compared with less than six hundred in the 1927 crop year Everywhere implement dealers report that their trouble is not in making sales but in supplying orders already received.

Experiments in the use of the combine in Western Canada began in 1922, which means that the advantages claimed for them cannot yet be considered as fully proved. Enough data, however, appears to have been collected to suggest that, under certain conditions, which are not extremely difficult to obtain, very great economies in harvesting costs can be achieved.

Interesting Indian Relics Found Near Midland

Farmer Unearths Reminders Indian and French Occupation of Our Province Which Cover a Wide Range of Occupations

Implements of Peace and War

Valuable and interesting relics of Indian tribes have been unearthed recently by Archibald Edwards, while ploughing on his farm on the Penetang Post Road, five miles south of the town of Midland.

Mr. Edwards was born on the farm immediately behind and discoveries he made here as a boy show that it was also the site of an Indian village and of one of their potteries. One sandy field always been of no use for cultivation, as it was burnt by the fires in which the Indians baked their earthenware vessels. Many steel tomahawks bearing the mark of the government of France were found. They had been traded for furs and other valuables. Old coins bearing various dates of bygone centuries and one of 1213 A.D. were found in or around the Edwards house, which in early days was a tavern.

Fine Stone Hatchet

The recent find includes the head of an Indian tomahawk carved from a kind of ironstone, rounded at one end and flattened at the other. In the centre at each side is a small groove. The handle was formed by splitting a sturdy stick for a short distance and binding the stone head between the forks with thongs.

Another article was a perfect specimment of an Inidian bone sewing needle and portions of two other needle of more substantial make. The needle is about eight inches long and tapers from the point which is exceedingly sharp to about half an inch at the top. This was used for sewing clothing and wigwams made of strips of skin sewn with leather thongs. The heavy needles were for sewing heavier material.

Two interesting pipe bowls were found, one a very clever carving of a fox's head, from a very hard stone. This piece represents the era in which the American aborigines had attained the height of their artistic achievements. One pipe, smaller, was made of a sandy material, baked in a fire. It is extremely crude in shape and design and perhaps was the work of a boy making his first pipe.

Large Tooth

One other object that excited much interest was a tooth about three inches in length. The root is two and one-half inches long. This has been identified at the Royal Ontario Museum as the lower incisor tooth of a bear, possibly of a species now extinct.

Other objects found by Mr. Edwards were two fragments of pottery decorated in conventional Indian style with dots, scratches and circles.

These discoveries call to mind fantastic and other theories on Indian origin, art and habits which engaged Europe and North America near the end of the last century and the opening of the present century.

Oldest and most widely known theory is that the American aborigines were descendants of the Lost Tribes of Israel. It was originated by the late Lord Kingsborough, one of the foremost students of mankind, after a prolonged study. He based his claim upon the similarity he found in many customs and words of the Redman with those of the Israelites. One of the most outstanding arguments he brought forward was that Indian priests wore breast plates of beads and circles of swan's feathers around their necks and had used these articles of dress for centuries before the white man discovered them. Lord Kingsborough claimed that these were the survivals of the breast plates and mitres worn by the prieses of the Israelites.

He also found that at harvest time the Indians held a great religious feast, including a dance around a fire and the shouting of the two words Haleu-Maleu-Halelulal and Yo-He-Wah. These were interpreted to mean Halleluiah and Jehovah. The latter bearing a close relationship to the original Hebrew word, Ye Jah, which meant Jehovah.

Indian Welshmen

A second theory supported by many was advanced in 1634 by Sir Thomas Herbert in his book, "Travels." It was revived at the opening of the 19th century and was one of the most popular. This ancient sailor thought the American aborigines were descscendants of a colony of Welshmen planted on American sail in 1110, by Madoc, son of a Welsh prince, Owen Gwyneth.

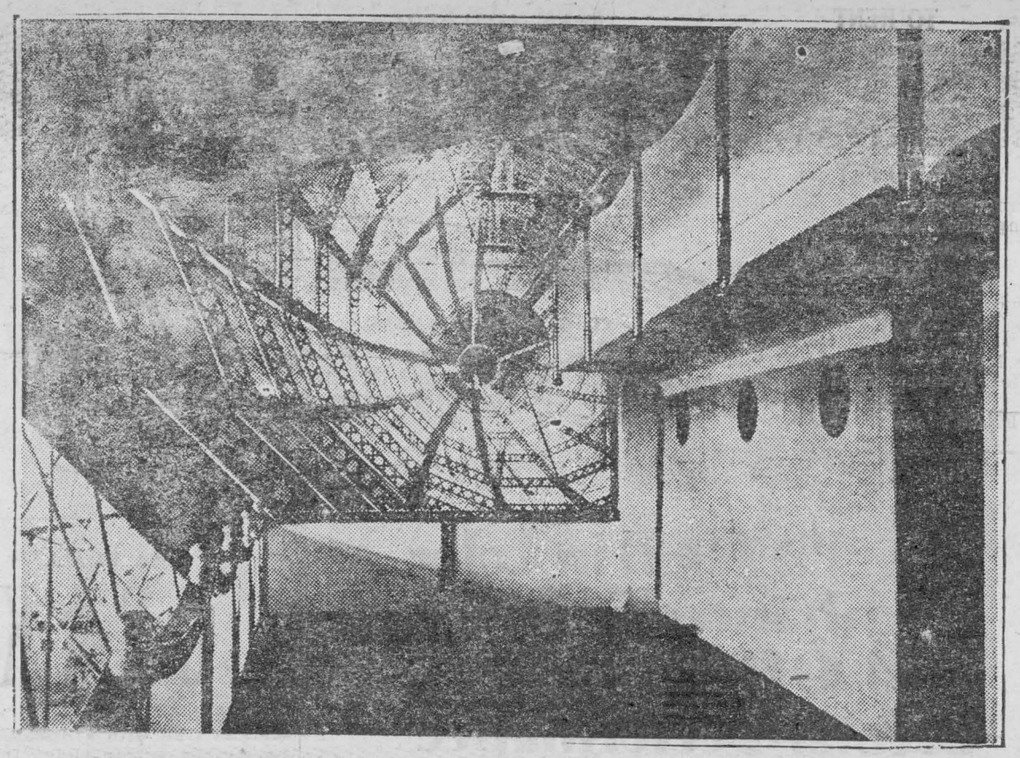

Sir Thomas pointed out that many Indian words were exactly the same in pronunciation and meaning as many Welsh words.

Modern Theory

It is now claimed that at one time a great Miocene bridge connected the North American continent with Asia. Across this came various tribes from the old world. Subsequently, this bridge disappeared. The whole theory seems to be supported by the discovery of Father Grelion, a Jesuit missionary, of a Huron woman of Tartary. Her story was that she had been traded from tribe to tribe north until she crossed the bridge into Asia.

The "People of the Plains" developed painting to the highest degree of the Indian world. These tribes were mostly those of the Algonquin and Athabascan nations and for the most part their art was confined to painting their wigwams. The designs were intricate to a degree and the rhythm and coloring were of an exceptional character.

Play Causes Fuss

Rostand's New Play Napoleon IV Causes Offence to England Critics

Paris.—Maurice Rostand's new play, "Napoleon IV.," has raised such a storm of international criticism that the author has begun to modify lines blaming England and Queen Victoria for the death of the only son of Napoleon III.

French papers were so bitterly critical of the play that English authorities are reported to be satisfied that protests from them are not needed.

Rostand's version that the Prince was killed in a Zulu ambush when British officers purposely ran away because of a plot which is blamed on Queen Victoria herself, is ridiculed by critics. They consider it an insult to England.

Rostand, however, maintains that a dramatist has a right to utilize history, even legendary accounts, as they were known at the time of the play's action.

No diplomatic action is foreseen, particularly as Rostand is changing several lines and is considering censoring a passage referring to Queen Victoria as responsible for having plotted the death of the Prince in order to wipe out the last of Napoleon's line.

One alteration was the change of a phrase referring to the death plot from "that is the English manner" to "that is the common way."

Montreal is now credited with being the world's largest grain port. During the last crop year ended July 31, 1928, 195,2447,914 bushels of grain were shipped from Montreal. The nearest rival as a grain port to Montreal is New York, which shipped 109, 551,000 bushels in the crop year 1927-28.

Clemenceau Busy On War History

Marshals Foch and Joffre also Writing Accounts of Struggle

AUTHORS "WRONG"

Published Stories of Marne Battle Nothing But Fiction

Paris—The histories of the Great War and the unprinted degends of the conflict are "all wrong" and the principal French actors in the four years' drama of the western front are writing their versions of events for posterity.

One outstanding characteristic in the struggle is living in a little fisherman's hut in Vendee. He prefers not to be molested and spends most of his time walking in the garden or locked in his study scratching away with his pen. Only his valet lives in the hut. Surrounded by his books and his memories, "The Father of Victory" is touching up his account of the war and Georges Clemenceau probably will leave the greatest record for future generations.

In another retreat—this time in Brittany—Marshal Foch is poring over scraps of writing paper, his war maps and notes. In time, he will start writing and from the rugged coast near Morlaix will come the impressions and the revelations of the Allied commander.

Marshal Joffre has just concluded his life story which was written at his pretty country home above the Seine at Louveciennes. Embittered by ten years of criticism and angered by the efforts of many war authors to shift the responsibility for the war, to his shoulders, Joffre may publish parts of his memoirs.

Errors Printed

"So many errors have been printed in histories of the war," he said. "The published stories of the first Battle of the Marne are nothing less than fiction, and many other phases of the war have been erroneously recorded by historians.

"I wrote the story of my part in the war as carefully as I could, destroying untruths with truths and using facts to replace fiction. I have documents to prove everything I asserted I hesitate to publish my memoirs because there is no use in starting a controversy. But I may be obliged to publish chapters, now and again, just to put historians right."

Gallieni, hero of the Ourcq, who sent the Paris taxicab fleet out to stem the enemy tide on the heights of Meaux, died before his memoirs were well started. He could have told much about the feat of turning a retreating army in its tracks to whip an overconfident foe.

Pact Against War Lists 51 Nations

Three Nations Adhere and 33 Announce Intention—Mexico is Latest

Washington.—A total of 51 nations have now adhered to the Pact of Paris renouncing war or else have signified their intention to adhere, Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, has announced, following the receipt of a note from Mexico expressing its intention to sign the treaty.

Since the membership of the League of Nations totals only 54 members, this means that most of the important nations of the world have now announced themselves in favor of the anti-war treaty. In addition three important nations not members of the League—Russia, Turkey, and the United States—have adhered or signified their intention to adhere.

The most important nations which have not fallen into line behind the treaty to renounce war are Argentina, Brazil and Chile. In addition, Colombia, Ecuador, Afighanistan, Persia, Norway and Paraguay have failed to communicate, either for or against the treaty.

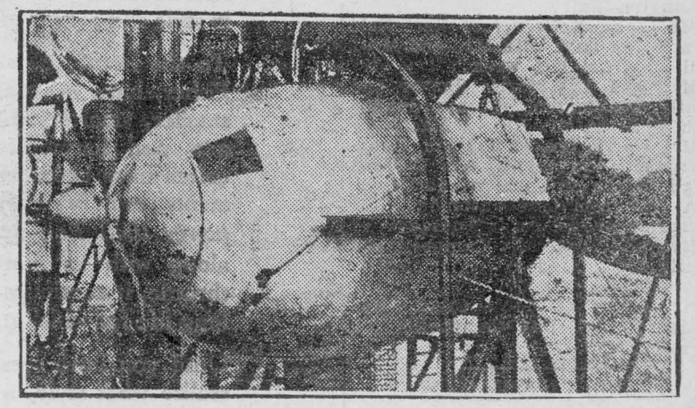

Mr. Kellogg understands that a copy of the Russian adherence is already in the diplomatic mail pouch of the French Embassy, and should be received here shortly.

The details of the means by which each nation shall join in the pact have now been completed. An adhering nation can either send a plenipotentiary to the State Department to sign a note of adhesion or it may send such a note direct. These notes are to be filed with the treaty in the archives of the State Department.

At the same time, certified copies of the original treaty, with all its signatures, will be sent to all of the adhering countries.

The most recent countries signifying their intention to join in the treaty are Spain, China and Mexico. Only three countries besides the original 15 signatories have actually adhered, namely Peru, Liberia and Rumania.

Prosperity Predicted

Quebec Soleil (Lib.): When farming prospers, it is like the motor which starts and keeps revolving all the wheels of the country's economic machine. It is for this reason that the predictions of prosperity which are now being made appear to have the greatest chances of realization, because the forecasts are based on a solid foundation, namely the return of better conditions for the agricultural community.

Britain to Raise Emigration Issue

Presence of Canadian Premier in London to Be Utilized to Discuss Plans

London.—W. L. Mackenzie King, the Canadian Prime Minister, who has been attending the League Council meeting at Geneva, is expected here about Oct. 3 on a fortnight's visit, and is to be entertained by the Canada Club on Oct. 10.

The opportunity of Mr. King's presence is likely to be taken by the British Government to discuss plans for unemployment workers desirous of proceeding to Canada, but nothing is known in informed circles regarding the stories in circulation to the effect that definite proposals will be placed before him for mass emigration to the overseas dominion through the agency of a nonparty commission under Lord Inovat which was authorized to raise £60,000,000 to finance such a movement.

Speaking at Merthyr, George Lansbury, one of the Left Wing Labor leaders, advocated another proposal, under which the British Government, instead of endeavoring to place the British unemployed overseas, should raise £ 100,000 to provide for them at home upon the land.

French and English

Winnipeg Liberte (Ind.): (Bilingual schools have been instituted in New Brunswick.) During the last ten years a Canadian mentality has been born and is being developed among our English-Canadian compatriots. During the last three years we have seen in all the English provinces, where French-Canadians are resident in any numbers, sincere and honest attempts to bring about a rapprochement between the two races, and in every province, except one, serious efforts to settle the bilingual problem. It is a lesson and a couse for hope. We rejoice in the progress which is being made by the real bonne entente. We hope that some day, in Manitoba, we shall see the same manifestations of good will as our brothers the Acadians have so recently experienced.

The chief fault of man is that he has so many small ones.—Richter.

"I never knew it was so easy"

It was a red-letter day in old Mrs. Jones' life — the day she made her first Long Distance call. But she simply had to speak to her son before he went abroad!

The operator was sympathetic and helpful. She asked Mrs. Jones her telephone number, name, the city and the telephone number of the party she wished to reach. Mrs. Jones didn't know the number, so the operator looked it up for her.

After the pleasant experience was over, Mrs. Jones exclaimed, "I never knew it was so easy! Why didn't I do it before?"

There is nothing complicated about it. Just say, "Long Distance."

Sunday School Lesson

October 7.—Lesson I—Paul in Ephesus, Acts 19: 8-10, 18-20; Ephesians 4: 11-16. Golden Text—We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.—Ephesians 2: 10.

ANALYSIS

I. The Successful Preacher, 8-10.

II. The Fruit of His Preaching, 18-20.

III. The Universal Church, Eph. 4: 11-16.

Introduction—Ephesus was a city of great importance and drew a large number of pilgrims from all parts of the world to worship at the shrine of Artemus, whose great temple was one of the marvels of the world. Paul had tried on a previous journey to visit that city, but was prevented by the Spirit. In the following year it became an important centre of Christian influence. Today this part of Ephesus has no trade. Its site is merely a collection of ruins. It is probable that the first Christian leader to carry on work was Appollos, a learned and eloquent native of Alexandria. He laid the foundation on which Paul proceeded to build.

I. The Successful Preacher, 8-10.

V. 8. Evidently there was a large Jewish population, and Paul, as was his custom, went into the synagogue. These Jews were more liberal in their view, because he was allowed to continue his preaching for a longer period than he had done elsewhere. For three months he continued to set forth the message of the gospel of the kingdom of God. This is a term which is not often found in Acts or the writings of Paul, and it occurs mostly in the first three gospels. The kingdom of God is God's rule in this world, which Jesus had come to set up among men. Paul generally speaks of the living Christ or of the church; but here he is presented as eagerly discussing with his hearers the nature of this kingdom.

V. 9. The unbelieving Jews at last follow the example of those at Thessalonica, and try to throw obstacles in the way of Paul's mission. They follow the methods of the persecutors, and speak evil of this new doctrine, likely by spreading reports of the character and habits of Paul and his followers. The result was that Paul decides to go out and form a distinct church, separated from the synagogue. The hall which he used was probably connected with one of the several gymnasia of Ephesus, which were the centres for the social life of the people, where they gathered for recreation and to hear the lectures by distinguished speakers. Possibly Tyrannus was one of these lecturers who had been interested in Paul and who placed the hall at his disposal for part of the time. In the mornings Paul would work at his trade of tent-making, probably along with Aquilla and Priscilla, and then in the afternoon or evening he would meet the crowds who gathered to hear what was going on.

V. 10. Paul remains at this task for two years, with the result that the entire district around was evangilezed. Paul had many helpers whom he sent out on missionary work. It is doubtless that this was the way in which the seven churches of Asia, of which we read in Revelation, chapters 2 and 3, were founded. The success of this effort was so great that it began to tell upon the offerings that came to the pagan emple. Gradually the pilgrims to the shrine of Artemus diminished, so that the outburst which ultimately drove Paul from the city, was caused by the interference of the gospel with the vested interests of the priests.

II. The Fruits of His Preaching, 18-20.

V. 18. Where Christ was preaching there always followed an awakening of the moral life. Jesus had taught that repentance was a needful accompaniment of the kingdom of God. Here we notice how the new converts were impressed with the need of turning from their old evil ways. The converts came forward to confess in public their former sins, filled with awe, possibly by the incident told in the previous verses.

V. 19. But more significant than confession is the actual amendment of life. They abandon their old practices, and gather together the objects connected with their old superstitious worship. Magicians and astrologers abounded in Ephesus. There was a brisk trade in the sale of books of divination, charms and many forms of spells. These superstitions, as always, had a disastrous effect upon the character, and darkened the minds of those who practiced such rites. The bonfire which followed reminds one of the bonfire of vanities resulting from the preaching of Savonarola at Florence. It was a most dramatic spectacle, and was like a public recantation. The estimated value of these books was about ten thousand dollars.

V. 20. This act of repentance is represented as a sign of the mighty power of the gospel, and Luke tells us that the Word of God prevailed. This is the close of another csetion of his work, and after this he prepares us for the journey of Paul to Jerusalem.

III. The Universal Church, Eph. 4: 11-16.

V. 11. This letter was written to the Ephesians from the prison-house at Rome, several years after Paul had left the city. It is filled with the noblest teaching on the person of Christ, which is filled with all the fullness of God. But Paul is also anxious to set forth his belief on the wonderful nature of the church, which he regards as the 'Body of Christ." The various leaders of this church are all the direct gifts of Christ, who is responsible for the progress of his kingdom.

V. 12. The divine gifts of the ministry are meant to fit all true believers for active service in the church.

V. 13. As all the different parts of the church work together, each doing what is assigned to him, there will ultimately be gained a condition where all will be like Christ.

V. 14. Christ will lead all his followers and will give stability to the members so that no false doctrine or evil practice will arise.

Vs. 15, 16. Thus will all grow up into Christ who is the head, and who will direct by his wisdom and power all those who are united with him.

Their bright gold
Until the road-sides,
Brave in sudden wealth,
Shake off their dusty drabness.

An Angler's Bad Dream

After the manner of Mr. William Beebe's reported exploits in southern waters a parody article in the current issue of "Vanity Fair" describes an eventful fishing experience.

"Supper over, I decided to try a little casting, and rigged up my rod, while the doctor—who is not a very ardent angler, although he enjoys eating a fish as well as the next one—went in for a cold plunge. My first strike was a beautiful example of that rare deep-sea denizen, the Invertus Collapsus, or sub-ocena turkey, which to my knoweldge has never before been brought into captivity. As soon as this extraordinary fish swallow the hook, he immediately puts the tip of his tail in his mouth and pulls himself inside out like a glove, in which position he extracts the barb with ease. He then swims backward rapidly to turn himself outside in again, and flits away silently among the water-hyacinths, lightly touching his fin to his nose.

"In order to land this wily creature, I took out a small pocket-mirror, and advanced it carefully to a point within a few inches of the fish's head. Presently, glancing up, he looked at his reflection in the glass and saw for the first time how silly a fish really looks, whereupon he laughed himself to death and the doctor and I had him next morning for breakfast."

Don't Say It Unless You Sign It

Gossip, meaning sly, on-the-quiet comments about people and things, is one of the nuisances of our business and social life. Gossip is almost always more harmful in its effect than in its intent, and is likewise always unnecessary.

"If you won't sign a thing, don't say it," is a remark attributed to "Bill Jones," who may or may not exist. Before we talk about persons or things about which we have little or no occasion to talk, it would be well to ask ourselves if we would sign these statements. We might remember further that people would usually rather quote us on these statements, in passing them out on their own responsibility. We never knew when or how such things will end. The safe and sane course is not to gossip.—Labor Leader.

SAD CASES

Blind Beggar: I can't see how I'm to make a living in this town any longer.

Deaf Beggar: And I haven't heard of any way of doing it either.

"It's got so these days," complained a young man, "that you can hardly get married unless you can show the girl two licenses." "Two licenses?" exclaimed the friend. "Yes—marriage and automobile."

Ontario Corn Causes Comment

When one reads from an authoritative source of cornstalks that grow to a height of fifteen feet, one is almost ready to believe that the nursery tale of "Jack and the Beanstalk" ought to be a bit inflated in order to bring it up to date. A farmer in Ontario is said to have displayed stalks of this height when he learned that a New or grower was modestly expressing some pride over his own growth of twelve feet and six inches, an altitude for corn that might even arouse a little feeling among such well-known climbers as the members of the pole bean family.

Iowa and some of the other corn-producing states have not been heard from, but if they each report stalks proportionately taller, it will not be long before one reads of stalks twenty-five or thirty feet in height, and the calling out of hook and ladder companies to harvest the crop. Of the Ontario stalks it is recorded that the ears begin to appear eight feet from the base, a distance which would seem to indicate a need of at least step-ladders in the harvesting. The corn-stalk evidently does not intend to be totally outstripped in skyscraping activities, and may yet attain proportions that will make it the envy of the rest of the vegetable kingdom, including its room mate in the succotash tin—the well-known lima bean. To paraphrase an old ditty: "Little drops of water, little grains of corn, make the mightt cornstalk, our country to adorn." — Editorial in Christian Science Monitor.

Sea Call

My old love for the water has come back again—
I had forgotten its surging, so long, so long away;
Sapphire-blue in the sunlight and green-grey in the rain.
And the same waves cresting, and the same sharp spray;
There was left a wave in my heart when I went to the inland towns,
Something that moved and murmured in the days when I forgot;
Vivid flowers of the gardens or thick long grass of the downs—
What were the sweets of the summer days, where the calling waves were not?

My old love for the water has come back once more.
—Margaret Widdemer, in "Cross Currents."

Tourists

Sherbrooke Tribune (Lib.): Not so long ago, when the Province of Quebec was the only province in Canada to permit the sale of liquor, malicious tongues took pleasure in saying that it was for the sake of getting a drink that Americans used to flock into Quebec. What are these slanders worth to-day when Ontario and the other provinces, formerly prohibitionist, now allow the sale of alcoholic liquor?

"What do you think of these drawings? Tell me frankly." "I cannot tell you frankly because you are bigger than I am."

Captain Cook's Sea Chest in London Sale

Battered and Scarred, and Studded With Brass Nails, It is Still Sound

Birmingham, Eng.—Probably no sea chest in the world has a more illustrious history than one which has just left the home of Mrs. G. F. Playforth in Birmingham for a London salesroom, for it has a well authenticated story which traces it back to Captain Cook, who used it on most of his voyages of discovery.

It was a strange series of events that brought the old chest into the possession of his Birmingham family, which has no seafaring traditions. It begins with the gift of the chest by Captain Cook to his friend Captain Bilcliffe, or Usselby, Lincolnshire. This, it is believed, was in or near 1775, after Cook's voyages to the Antipodes had firmly established his fame as navigator and explorer. Captain Bilcliffe was a soldier and he eventually gave the chest to Sir W. H. Elliott, whose father, Captain John Elliott, is said to have accompanied Cook on some of his voyages.

Years later the chest passed into the possession of William Alcock, of Usselby Hall, whose widow married John Stafford, another Lincolnshire gentleman. It was John Stafford's second wife who gave the chest to her sister, Mrs. Playforth, in whose possession it has since remained. Her decision to sell it means a new chapter in the life of the old chest, which although much battered and travel-stained, is still sound and well preserved by its covering of leather studded with brass-headed nails.

It was in this chest, no doubt, that Captain Cook kept, in addition to his personal belongings, the records of observations by which he contributed to much that was of value to navigation, geography, and astronomy.

England Endorses Free Collar Plan

Laundry Service, Originating in Scotland, Keeps Patron Always Supplied

Washington—When a collar wears out, the laundry supplies a new one free of charge in England. The collar replacement service which started in Glasgow and has been extended to England, has been very successful.

Would such a system appeal here? Launderers say no, because collars have not been standardized to the point where a man would be willing to have a new collar supplied for an old one just because it was the right size and shape. The average man, they say, likes a certain brand and would resent it if the laundry substituted one of another manufacture, even if it had the same appearance and fit.

The way the British plan works is for a man to have a supply of new collars which he agrees to send, a dozen at a time when soiled, in a stiff container furnished by the laundry, pledging himself to use no other laundry service. The customer pays the postage to the laundry, which pays the return postage and charges 2s. a dozen for service. When the customer notices that a collar has seen its best days he writer "Replace" on it and gets a new one from the laundry free.

Once Mecca of Eminent Victorians, Glasgow Athenaeum Ceases to Exist

Glasgow—The Glasgow Athenaeum is no longer to be numbered among the important social and cultural institutions of the west of Scotland. Not very long ago one of its greatest developments, the Athenaeum School of Music, was superseded by the recently-formed Scottish Academy of Music, and now it has been announced that the last of its activities which bears the old name, the club and library departments, have ceased to function. The Athenaeum has therefore ceased to exist as a name, but not as an influence.

The Glasgow Athenaeum was derived over 80 years ago from the Glasgow Educational Association, whose subscribers paid 1s. a week and rose early in the morning to study philosophy, chemistry, logic and political economy.

The first premises were rented from a concert promoter and were opened on Oct. 13, 1847. The membership was then over 2000, and it is interesting to note that the inaugural soiree in the same year was presided over by Charles Dickens, who had taken an important part in the success of the Manchester Athenaeum.

The present building with its site in St. George's Place was secured £10,000, and was opened in 1888, extensions being made in 1892.

In 1890 the School of Music, which was the first of its kind in Scotland, was established,and at the time of its passing was the only school in the country under the management of a public board of directors. In 1901 the original commercial classes were reorganized into the Glasgow and West of Scotland Commercial College.

It is interesting to note that among the many distinguished Victorians who visited Glasgow under Athenaeum auspices were Emerson, Thackeray, Dean Ramsay, Anthony Trollope, John Morley and George Augustus Sala.

Learning Golf

A fallacy in learning to play golf is in trying to hit the ball from the beginning says Bernard Darwin in the October issue of "Vanity Fair." He tells a story of how one should rightly learn to play the royal game.

"I used to have a friend who was intensely interested in the theory of golf and—which is a very different matter—was quite a good golfer. He once told me the story of his one pupil, the perfect beginner. This pupil was little and young and strong; he had never attempted to hit a golf ball in all his life and he put himself unreservedly in my friend's hands. What an opportunity was this for one who loved theories and had in him that latent germ of the pedagogue which lurks in so many of us. Some two or three times a week the pupil was taken to a golf course by the master, like a sheep to the slaughter, and diligently swung and swung his club. A ball he was not even allowed to look oa and he was bound by a solemn oath and covenant not so much as to swing a poker on the tongs until the next lesson came round. He was loyal and obedient and came gradually to possess a fine, true, round swing.

"The weeks had turned into months. Still the pupil swung at nothing with perfect docility and at last came the tremendous day when he was to be allowed to swing at a ball. The master teed the ball with anxious fingers, told the pupil as far as possible to disregard it and swing as he had been taught. Then he awaited the result in trembling hope. The pupil swung easily, smoothly and truly and away sped the ball—as fine a drive as ever was hit."

Trade Unionism

Saturday Review (London): The strength of trade unionism is not in class loyalty but in trade loyalty, and the times are such as to make real workmen realize that without combination their trade is in danger. A prosperous industrial class cannot be made out of unprosperous industry.

FINANCIAL NEWS

City Dairy Named as Party to Important New Affiliations

The Financial News Bureau understands that new affiliations in the dairy industry in Canada are in the making, and that if, as and when the news breaks it will be important from a stock market standpoint.

One company named in merger proceedings is City Dairy Company and the other the Canadian interests of Borden Company which is one of the largest operators in dairy products in the United States and has lately increased in ramifications in the Dominion. If the amalgamation is consummated, the Canadian interests of Borden Co. will come under the wing of City Dairy Company. It is understood that two other large dairies operating in Canada maybe involved.

Rumor has linked up Farmers Dairy and City Dairy, but the Financial News Bureau is informed that other plans are involved for this successful organization and that it may form the principal unit in another affiliation.

The advance that has taken place in City Dairy shares, without any official explanation, probably is due to the fact that negotiations have not reached a stage where a definite announcement can be made.

County of Middlesex Rejects all Tenders

All tenders for the debentures of the County of Middlesex have been rejected. Bids were called up till Wednesday, 19th, on an issue of $132,748, 5% 15-year debentures, and Thursday it was announced that tenders were unsatisfactory and were therefore turned down. The offering will doubtless be repeated at a later date when more favorable conditions prevail in the bond market.

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhoea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful,, or restless. Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

Two New Compressors Installed by International Nickel

Latest Sudbury advices are to the effect that 450 men are now employed on construction work at International Nickel's Frood property. All steel work has been done on the new headframe. Two 3,000 cubic feet air compressors have been installed in the newly completed air-compressor house, which has capacity for three more similar machines.

MINING BRIEFS

A despatch from the north states that Barry Hollinger is in $40 ore on the 1,250-foot level. When last heard from the drift was said to be in about 6 feet. Rumors were heard on the street to the effect that there was a rich strike made on Barry, and this report, while unofficial, contains the only details available.

The entire sudbury camp is said to be aroused over the results obtained in Sudbury Basin's No. 23 drill hole. A report from the camp states that they have cut 50 feet of high grade ore, running 20 per cent. zinc, 5 per cent. lead and 4½ per cent. copper. The results are said to equal those obtained in the No. 65 hole of the Treadwell Yukon.

Work underground at the Pawnoe Kirkland on the 750-foot level is reaching an interesting stage. It is expected that the crosscut will reach the new vein found on surface and which showed a width of over 6 feet, with good values, within the next few days. Recently a fault was encountered underground and the crosscut is now all in a mineralized syenite porphyry section which looks very promising. As soon as the crosscut has reached the new vein, lateral work will be started on this, as well as another vein found in the crosscut further south.

On the south side of the property considerable work has been done on a wide mineralized zone which shows in a contact between sediments and feldspar porphyry. Diamond drilling will commence immediately and it is expected that some important results will be secured here as the zone shows a width of over 20 feet.

The amalgamation of Evangeline Gold Mines and the Calumet Copper Mines has been approved by the government of Nova Scotia and the new company is now known as the Evangeline Gold and Copper Mines, Ltd.

It was recently reported that the property of the Lorrette Mines, Ltd., operating in the Harricanaw area was temporarily inactive. It is now understood that the company has bought the property of the Union Mines and has transferred its attention here. The shaft is being continued from the 100-foot level, where 700 feet of drifting was done on a vein, to greater depths. It is said that four new ore shoots were located running from 12 to 40 feet and carrying free gold.

Results obtained through the diamond drilling campaign on the Bennett Pacaud Mines property have been moderately encouraging and as soon as hole No. 6 has been completed it is planned to diamond drill the eastern section of the property where a gold showing was uncovered some time ago.

Wainwell Oils are unable to operate their newly acquired producer until September 24th, when it is expected an injunction against them will be lifted. The company recently purchased the Interior Oil well and almost immediately brought it into production. Interior shareholders now sue their management and obtained the injunction to prevent production until the 24th.

Argentine Iron Vessels Built Before Monitor

Barracas, Argentina.—Iron vessels were being built in a local shipyard even before the battle of the Merrimac and Monitor on March 5, 1862, old documents here reveal.

A Scotsman here started building river craft from iron several years before the outbreak of the Civil War in the United States, and when the famous battle at Hampton Roads was reported to the outside world this pioneer, Thomas Harkness, offered to build a monitor like that of Ericsson for the Argentine government.

His specialty at that time, however, was iron lighters for the transport of cattle. One of these, christened Salud Senora, was 66 feet long, 22 feet wide and 5 feet deep, with a carrying capacity of 180 head of live cattle.

Ontario Cavern Termed Rival of Mammoth Cave

Veteran Prospector Discovers Natural Wonder and Skeletons of Two Traders

Toronto, Ont.—Tucked in the wilds of Algoma a cavern has been discovered that may rival Kentucky's Mammoth Cave. T. B. Fraser, veteran prospector, made this discovery and at the same time unearthed tragedy of the early trading days.

Within 20 yards of the entrance to the great cavern he found the skeletons of two fur traders, lost, it is believed, fully a century ago. Along the walls were their muskets and other trading effects.

Exploration Planned

Fraser is now preparing to lead an expedition back to the scene of his discoveries, which, it is hoped, may throw light on Algoma's pioneer history. It is just 300 years since Etienne Brule, the first white man to traverse Ontario and northern Michigan, saw the great St. Mary's rapids, but in the two centuries following practically nothing is known of the district's inhabitants.

Fraser claims great things for his cavern and the hidden lake on which it is located. He traced the vaulted passages of his cavern back fully a mile before huge bats, added to the discovery of the skeleton, removed the urge for further exploration. Gleaming crystals of brilliant colors flashed back the light of his torch, he says, and made a gorgeous spectacle.

Death of Traders a Mystery

How the fur traders perished by the lake remains a mystery. Fraser thinks starvation ended their wanderings. There was evidence, he said, that they had lived for some time in the cavern. Shelves had been cut in the stone by their abode and time had failed to remove all the remnants of their habitation within the rock.

The region in its animal life more or less resembles a zoo, according to the prospector's description. He saw huge turtles, he claims, caught giant speckled trout and found lizards at least three feet long.

HAD NO APPETITE WEAK AND DIZZY

This New Brunswick Woman Restored by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mrs. James Belyea, Brown's Flat, N.B., says:—"I am writing to tell you the great good I had through the timely use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My health had failed and I was troubled with great weakness. I had no appetite and frequently had dizzy spells. The least exertion would make my heart palpitate violently and I felt tired at all times. I had doctored a great deal without getting much relief, and was feeling greatly discouraged when I finally decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The happy results following the use of this medicine can be summed up by saying that I am again perfectly well, able to do my housework and enjoy life once more. I feel it a duty to recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all weak people."

If you have any, or all, of the symptoms above noted, do not delay, begin treatment at once with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You will be surprised to note the improvement in your condition after a few weeks. You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. If you will send your name and address a little booklet, "Building Up the Blood," will be sent free.

Lyon Hopes to Become Air Center of Europe

Lyon—The world's finest flying field is planned by the city of Lyon.

"This should be the air travel junction point of Europe," says Louis Pradel, president of the chamber of commerce, which has a fifty-year contract with the government to operate the airdrome.

To get ready for the passenger and freight liners that are expected to ply the air lanes, the present Bron air field, three miles from the city, is to be greatly enlarged and flanked with buildings and hangars to handle a traffic that is only anticipated. The chamber of commerce, after spending $200,000 on the terminal, expects to lose money for a few years.

A commission of experts traveled Europe hunting for ideas, finding much of value in Germany and Holland. The members believe their plan will be a model for the future, "at least for Europe."

Club Pro.: "Have you played much golf?" Novice: "Well, a fairish bit, of course." Club Pro.: "H'm. Let's see how you shape. Take your stance." "Novice: "Which club is that?"

"How is my form?" "More suitable for the beach, Miss, than golf."

Biggest Hydro-Airplane Ready for Trial Flight

Travemunde—The biggest hydro-airplane ever made in Germany has arrived at Trovemunde from the Rohrbach works and will soon have its trial flights, preparatory to being put into operation on the Lubeck-Travemunde-Copenhagen-Oslo route.

The plane, a Rohrbach-Rona, is more than twenty-six feet high, and eightyfive feet long, and measures more than 124½ feet from wing-tip to wing-tip. Three motors furnish 2,000 horsepower, and the radius action will be about 2,500 miles. A great Dornier Superwal (super-whale) already in service on this route, has four 450-horsepower Bristol-Jupiter motors

Baby's Own Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative which regulate the stomach and bowels; banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple fever and make teething easy. Viking Ships of To-Day

Pliny the elder tells us that in the reign of Nero the Romans voyaged as far north as the Baltic, and Tacitus goes on to describe what lies beyond —that they knew, at any rate, the southern portion of the Scandinavian peninsula. . . .

There are yet other proofs from a far earlier age in the rock-carvings or ruins called "helleristninger," dating away back to an age not less remote than 500 years B.C.

These carvings represent ships, some of them being quaint representations of sea-fights, the boats being somewhat similar in appearance to those used by the Vikings of the ninth and tenth centuries of our era. Rude as these rock-carvings are, they give us some idea of the kind of vessels employed in that very remote age; they represent long rowboats with very high carved prows or sternposts, and are steered not by a rudder behind, but by an oar at the side, and from this practice is derived our word "starboard" or "steerboard," being the right-hand side of the vessel.

The Vikings used also a square sail, which could be hoisted when required. This they learnt indirectly from the Romans.

The traveller among the fjords of Norway may, to this day, see those heavy boats with high prows and square sails, which have an indescribable air of antiquity about their build, contrasting quaintly with more modern-built craft of coasting vessels and fishing-smacks. . . .

These old-fashioned boats are a link between us and the remotest past of Scandinavia, of the early period of the rock carvings, and of the romantic period of the Vikings. . . .

Every peasant and cotter has his own boat or boats, and these may be seen everywhere along the fjord, either in use on the water, or pulled up on the strand, and, where there is found a convenient landing-place, log-built boathouses are erected.—A. Heaton Cooper, in "The Norwegian Fjords.

OWL LAFFS BY O.W.L. (ON WITH LAUGHTER)

"May I take your picture," said the photographer to the telephone operator who was out horseback-riding.

"Yes," said the voice with the smile, while she tried to wheel her steed into line. "But hold the line a minute while I adjust the plug."

HIS FOND IMPRESSION

While man has seven ages,
A woman has but two,
Her real one, what her friends think,
And what she claimed to be.
—Boston Transcirpt.

Man may have seven ages,
But yet he thinks with joy
That at each of these stages
He looks just like a boy.

Bold Suitor: "Dearest, I love you! What is more. I'm going to marry you.

Movie Actress (registering ennui): "You and who else?"

Our corn-surplus problem has been solved. Face powder can be made from corn.

"Why on earth couldn't you jump out of the way of that tractor?"

"I'd just come out of a movie where they were showing some of those slow-motion pictures."

A flapper who was out boat-riding the other evening said the young chap who handled the boat didn't have nerve enough to even hug the shore.

Health may be purchased
But not from a shelf;
The price is prevention—
Take care of yourself.

Restaurants should be prohibited from serving spinach save on a doctor's prescription.

Figures don't lie, but oh you figurers!

"Look here, Smith," said the boss, "you and Jones both started diggin' at the same time, an' he's now got a bigger pile of dirt than you have."

"He's diggin' a bigger hole," said Smith.

It is said a woman can do most everything with a man except do without him.

Reading in the news dispatches that the milliners in convention have decreed that "a woman must have a hat for every occasion," Old Bill Beezer triumphantly exclaimed: "My wife has had that kind of a hat for the last three years, and it's a good hat yet."

"Are you a special friend of the groom's?" inquired an usher, who had come out of town to help at his friend's church wedding not long ago, of a cold and dignified lady who entered the church with an air of authority to sit in a front pew.

"Certainly not," replied the lady with steady eyes, "I am the bride's mother."

She reminds me of a girl on a magazine cover because I only see her once a month.

"Is he really dishonest?"

"Why, if he'd been born with a silver spoon in his mouth, it would have had somebody else's initials on it."

"Jimmy, I wish you'd learn better table manners; you're a regular little pig at the table."

Deep silence on Jimmy's part. So father, in order to impress him more, added, "I say, Jimmy, do you know what a pig is?"

"Yes, sir," replied Jimmy meekly, "it's a hog's little boy."

The man who does not worry very, probably has some creditors who do.

The man who works like a horse usually has a stable business.

"Late figures prove that dancers economize on clothes."

Old Lady: Why are you so worried my little man? Youngster: 'Cos I can't have a 'oliday. Old Lady Why? Youngster: 'Cost I don't go to school yet..

Mutt: "Everything comes to him who waits." Jeff: "That's how I got a fine for parking my car to-day!"

The thrill that comes once in a lifetime: A child's first day at school.
