Rev. Father Keaney Presented With Address and Purse

Last Sunday the members of St. Mary's parish presented an address of welcome and a substantial purse to Rev. Father Keaney on the occasion of his return from the Eucharistic Congress in Dublin.

Father Keaney, in accepting, expressed his pleasure and gratitude not so much for the generous gift as for the spirit which was behind it. He had not forgotten his many friends and parishioners whilst he was away from them; but, although he had felt it a great privilege to be present at the wonderful ceremonies of the Eucharistic Congress and to revisit the scenes of his youth, still he was glad to be back again amongst his own people in Chesterville.

The address of welcome, beautifully illuminated, was read by Mr. James Clement and the presentation was made by Mr. Frank McCloskey.

Murray Droppo Buried Under Masonic Direction

The remains of Murray Droppo, son of Mr. Sim Droppo, who died suddenly in Regina, Sask., while attending horse races Wednesday of last week arrived in Chesterville Sunday afternoon and were met at the station and escorted to the family home by members of the Masonic order, of which the deceased was a member. Monday afternoon the funeral took place in Chesterville United Church with Rev. A. H. Sproule in charge, assisted by Rev. R. E. Newman. Messrs. O. L. King and A. E. Bolster rendered very beautifully a duet appropriate to the occasion. Interment was made in Maple Ridge cemetery where the service was taken by members of the Masonic order. The pall bearers were Messrs. Haldane Durant, Geo. Riddell, Eric Casselman, H. R. Johnston, A J. Forward and.....

The numerous and beautiful floral tributes included:

Wreath, from the Family; Basket of Roses, from Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Hooks, Oneonta; Sprays from Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Merkley and family, Lowville, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Droppo and Earle, of Moose Jaw, Sask.; The Alumnae Association, Cornwall General Hospital; Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Sandford and Eileen, Regina, Sask. Wreaths from—Railway Mail Clerks, Regina, Sask.; Railway Mail Clerks, Moose Jaw, Sask: 46th Battalion, Masonic Lodge, Moose Jaw, Sask. Cut Flowers—Mr. and Mrs. Roland Droppo, Finch; Mr. and Mrs. James Link, Morrisburg; Mr. and Mrs. Russell Link, Morrisburg.

The late Murray Droppo was in his fortieth year and was well-known in this district where he passed his boyhood days and after graduating from the High School and securing a teacher's certificate taught for two years in rural schools. He went overseas during the Great War where he served four years. Going to Saskatchewan in 1921 he taught for a short time and then secured a position as train mail clerk at Moose Jaw in which position he had continued up to the time of his death. His death was quite unexpected as it is understood that he had not been previously ill. It is reported that at the races which he attended he had placed a wager and in the excitement of finding himself the holder of a winning ticket his heart failed and he passed away without warning. Surviving him are his father, one brother, Bob, of Klock, Ont.; four sisters, Mrs. A. C. Hooks, Oneonta, N. Y.; Mrs. Stanley Droppo and Mrs. A. Jarvis, of Chesterville, and Miss Cora, of Cornwall.

Separate School Supporters Will Have Tax Bills Reduced

At a special meeting of the village council last Friday evening steps were taken to rectify the error which did not take into account the taxes payable by supporters of the Separate School who are residents of the Township of Winchester, thereby unduly increasing the amount assessed against the supporters resident within the village which is equivalent to 3.5 mills. Instructions have been issued to the collector to deduct the required amount from the bills after having been supplied with the total amount of each assessment by the village clerk.

Mrs. Armstrong was highly respected in Chesterville and vicinity where she has spent the greater part of a long and useful life. Evidence of the sympathy of the community was manifested in the profusion of beautiful floral tributes.

The pall bearers were Messrs. O. D. Casselman, C. T. Fulton, George Hunt and William Crump. Interment was made in Maple Ridge Cemetery.

Showman--McMahon

The chapel of Victoria College, Toronto, was the scene of a quiet wedding when, at noon on Saturday last, Eva Hope, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson McMahon, of Hanover, became the bride of Wallace Huston Showman, M. A., son of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Showman, of Alliance, Alta. Rev. R. E. Newman, of Chesterville, a friend of the bride and groom, conducted the ceremony in the presence of a small gathering of relatives and friends. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an attractive gown of pale apricot chantilly lace, with hat and shoes to match, and shoulder corsage of Talisman rosebuds. After the ceremony the bride's mother received the guests at a wedding luncheon, served in the Royal York Hotel. The young couple then left on a boat trip to Quebec and points East, where they will spend a few weeks. The bride travelled in a smart English woollen suit in cardinal shade, with small hand-made hat and other accessories in cardinal and black. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Showman will reside in Toronto, where Mr. Showman will be engaged in work at the university.

Fulton Bros.' Store Entered By Burglars Sunday A. M.

Early Sunday morning Fulton Bros.' store was forcibly entered by burglars who effected an entrance through a window to the room in which window glass is stored and cut, from there while seeking an entrance to the main part of the store two or three doors were broken open causing more or less damage. After gaining entrance to the main floor they were content with very little plunder or failed to find what they were seeking. Leaving the store an hour or more after midnight Saturday Mr. J. Howard Fulton entered it again about seven Sunday morning when on his way to his summer home at Brockville and discovered that the place had been burglarized. Information has been given by a resident who happened to be on the street around four o'clock Sunday morning identifying the thieves as two local men. It is said on hearing an unusual noise at such an early hour he quietly investigated and saw two men he knew leave the premises who are suspected of the burglary.

Believe It or Not

Believe it or not, there is a man staying in Montreal who can answer any verse or part of a verse quoted from the Bible with the verse preceding or succeeding it. Furthermore, this man can tell you the number of the quoted verse and the chapter and book in which it occurs.

It was ability to do this that won for the Rev. Mark Voyles, evangelist and minister of the Baptist Church at Little Rock, Arkansas, a trip through the province of Quebec at the expense of the Provincial Tourist Bureau of the Department of Roads of the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Voyles, however, did not actually win the prize. The victory was achieved by his companion, Colonel L. S. Powers from Hawesville, Kentucky, and thereby hangs a tale. Some six or eight months ago, Bob Ripley, cartoonist and originator of the famous "Believe it or not" series, organized one of his many contests in order to add further cases to his catalogue of stranger than fiction.

It was understood from Col Powers that the Provincial Tourist Bureau offered the third prize in the shape of a free trip to all points of interest in Quebec. The colonel knew Mr. Voyles ever since they were both in short pants and he also knew of the evangelist's extraordinary knowledge of the Bible. So he sent in the details with the result that he won the coveted third prize. Not only that, but the hospitality of the province was also extended to the cause of winning the prize. namely Mr. Voyles.

. After The Gazette had heard the above story from the two gentlemen in their room at the Windsor Hotel where they were comfortably esconced after their arrival from New York, naturally he wanted to make a test himself. So with Mr. Voyles' permission he quoted "God is a Spirit." The answer came back as quick as lightning, "fourth chapter of St. John, such-and-such a verse." Then the astonishing evangelist proceeded to quote not only the preceding and succeeding verses but also the entire chapter containing the well-known story of the Woman of Samaria.

This is Mr. Voyles' first trip outside of the United States. Col. Powers, however, has been around quite a bit. He often used to come to Montreal when he travelled in the cooperage trade, his last visit being in 1906. Asked if he thought the city had changed, he said "Yes and improved out of all recognition." What struck him most were the improved roads and the magnificent bridges. He had memories of ferries and muddy roads which existed thirty years ago.

Col. Powers considers that he has won the unofficial first prize for the best "Believe it or not" of all. This was the idea of a Kentucky colonel travelling with a Baptist minister in a wet country. He can also cite the winners of all the important racing events for the past ten years or more.

Asked for further details of the contest, he said that the first prize had been won by a man in New York State. This man lost his suitcase in a shipwreck off the east coast of France. In the suitcase was his hairbrush with his initials on it. At a later period he was bathing in the sea near Brooklyn when he felt something strange under his feet. On picking up the object he discovered it to be the hair brush he lost in the wreck on the other side of the Atlantic. When his story was authenticated he got a monoplane. The second prize an automobile, went to a man from Pennsylvania, who wrote 1,680 legible letters, equal to eight typed pages, on a grain of rice. The third, of course, went to Col. Powers and Mr. Voyles. The fourth was won by a sheriff from Texas who beat a bandit to the draw by shooting a bullet into the barrel of the outlaw's revolver. A total of 1,500,000 answers were received from contestants..

EASY TO TELL POISON IVY

Resembles Virginia Creeper But Leaves in Clusters of Three Instead of Five

AN ever present danger to the vacationist in any part of Canada is poison Ivy. It is very similar in General appearance to the Virginia creeper but is easily identified by the fact that its leaves are in clusters of three very similar in appearance to the leaves of the strawberry plant, while the leaves of the Virginia creeper are in clusters of five. On poison ivy vines may also been seen clusters of small white flowers and later in the season a round white fruit about the size of a pea. The poison element in the ivy comes from a resin which rises in the sap. In treating poison ivy avoid dusting with dry powders such as boracic acid or baking powder, usually applied to blister sores; avoid rubbing and localize the infection by painting iodine around the edges of the sores. An effective treatment is to daub the affected parts with a three per cent solution of potassium permanganate. This leaves a brown stain which disappears after a time but may be removed slowly by the use of soap and water.—Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

'Yes, darling, but don't you see the bill is for my new raincoat?"

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

Weekly Crop Report

The quality of the 1932 wheat crop is fair and yields are good, averaging 30 to 40 bushels per acre. Threshing has been general in most localities. Haying operations drag on and many unharvested hay fields are evident in Central and Western Ontario. Barley and rye crops are satisfactory, with oats rather uneven. Corn is backward, while roots promise an average crop. The tobacco crop is estimated at 90 per cent of the average. Pasturage has been well maintained by an abundance of moisture. Weed cutting on the roadsides has been general.

Marketing Immature Fruit Causes Lower Consumption

While certain growers persist in placing immature fruit on the market we cannot expect home consumption of Ontario grown fruit to reach its full development. This is the contention of C. E. Brought, Ontario Marketing Board.

"The anxiety of these growers to ze the first on the market with their products," said Mr. Broughton, "is, no doubt, prompted by a desire to obtain top price. It should be remembered however that immaturity means low quality, and low quality is detrimental to the progress of all classes of growers, including those who have never been guilty of attempting to market immature fruit.

"By marketing fruit which has not reached the proper stage of maturity, the grower is creating dissatisfied customers, and these customers will become prejudiced against homegrown products, thus causing a restricted market."

To Improve Bacon

Hon .Thomas L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, has announced that new regulations have been adopted by the Province and Dominion jointly to improve the standards of bacon production. Under these provisions what is known as an advanced register of sows is to be established. Pigs from a first little will have to make 200 pounds of pork in 200 days, will be slaughtered and their carcasses judged by the Dominion graders and scored for value as bacon. In the event that they are scored as "extra good bacon," the sow will be placed on the proposed advanced register with proper ear-marking or tagging, and the farmer owning her will be bonused to the extent of $15, to which the Province and Dominion will contribute equally. Any boar that is secured from this advanced register of sows will be looked over by judges at the age of six months, and if showing right conformation, will earn for its owner the amount of $15 from the Governments.

Ontario Rutabaga Shippers Request Federal Inspection

At a recent meeting of the Ontario Rutabaga Shippers' Association held at the Agricultural College, Guelph, a resolution was adopted asking the Federal Department of Agriculture to make effective the inspection of all turnips for domestic and export shipment, according to G. R. Paterson, Ontario Marketing Board. It was felt by shippers that this was one method of establishing uniformity of pack, and quality.

Ontario has an extensive market for rutabagas in the United States, but this valuable outlet has been partially blocked, due to the fact that the Maritime growers have adopted the practice of inspection through warehouses.

In addition to this movement toward inspection, the shippers' association is giving some thought to central grading and packing.

Community Beautification

At a recent meeting of societies of Dictrict No. 2 of the Ontario Horticultural Association at the Central Experiment Farm, Ottawa, reports received showed in a fine way the high degree of efficiency which has been attained in carrying out the principal object and purpose of the Association in respect to community beautification. The report of the district director, J. B. Spencer, B.S.A., shows that effective work has been done in this respect by the following societies in the district:

Arnprior, North Gower, Billings Bridge, Pembroke, Gananoque, Kars, Almonte, Brockville, Fitzroy Township, Spencerville and Huntley Township.

The work accomplished by these societies emphasizes in a fine way the value of individual units giving effective support to the "More Beautiful Canada" campaign sponsored by the Canadian Horticultural Council.

Lambs Die Needlessly

"Many young lambs die needlessly," declares Dr. Lionel Stevenson, provincial zoologist, in an appeal to farmers to stop the tragic loss of so many lambs before they are ten days old. In a little booklet issued by the Provincial Live Stock Branch, he states three main causes of death: Joint Ills of Lambs, White Scours of Lambs, and Necribacillosis of Lambs. Dr. Stevenson outlines the cause, the symptoms and the proper treatment of these three diseases. In conclusion he declares: 'It pays to maintain a high degree of sanitation, when the loss of one lamb represents a sum of money equal to the additional labour required to maintain hygienic conditions. Dead lambs have no value. Keep them alive that they may grow into money. Clean up to-day."

Ontario Potato Outlook

While the season of 1931-32 was an excellent one for the production of both early and late potatoes, the future presents quite a different aspect, according to J. T. Cassin, of the Ontario Marketing Board.

Federal Government estimates indicate that potato acreage in Ontario this season will show a decrease of approximately seven per cent over that of the 1931 season. These estimates set the 1931 acreage in Ontario at 169,604 as against a probable acreage of 158,000 this years. Figures for the Dominion of Canada show a like decrease of 7 per cent, being 583,926 acres in 1931 as compared with 543,700 acres for 1932.

Mr .Cassin also stated that, according to his calculations, the amount of fertilizer used in the production of potatoes this vear will amount to only about half of that used last year. "While we have had very favourable conditions to date," he continued, "the crop outlook at this time does not present the same promise of yield as did that of the same period in 1931."

In conclusion, Mr. Cassin said, "It is too early to predict the extent of the 1932 crop but, in view of present conditions, it would appear that potatoes are being offered in quantities larger than the market can readily absorb. This condition, of course, has brought about the inevitable result of sacrifice prices."

New Market For Barley

To Ontario farmers Hon. Thomas L. Kennedy passes the information that the National Breweries Ltd., of Montreal, have authorized the purchase by the Canadian Malting Company of 1,000,000 bushels of high-grade, Ontario-grown barley, suitable for malting, at a minimum of 55 cents per bushel basis, track Montreal. The Minister warns that this barley must be sound, clean and reasonably free from other grains and weighing 48 pounds to the bushel. This is the equivalent of grain known as "Three Extra' and should be easily obtained by the average Ontario farmer. Several Ontario counties have long regarded barley as a fine cash crop and it is hoped that this announcement will give them new confidence and will stimulate production.

"A price of 55 cents basis, track Montreal, would mean f.o.b. prices approximately as follows: Main line, Chatham and surrounding points, 40 cents; off lines or side lines or radial lines in the same territory, 37 cents; Central Ontario points, say from London to the Lake Simcoe district, 42 cents; east of that and on to Montreal, 46 cents These would represent the approximate f.o.b. prices paid to shippers and in the case of barley, the farmer would, in many cases, be the shipper. These prices would apply only to carlot shipments. This offer is considerably better than present-day prices on the Montreal market."

Cedar Grove

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Handon and Miss Frances, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Thorne, Mr. W. Drake, all of Cornwall, called on Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Dafoe Sunday evening.

Recent visitors and callers in the Grove, were: Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Dunbar, of Grantley, with Mr. and Mrs. Jack Dunbar; Mrs. Frank Donnelly, Croil's Island, and Mr. and Mrs. Percy Donelly, Second Concession, with Mr. and Mrs. Mason Beckstead; Mrs. Reuben Gallinger and daughter Fern, of Aultsville, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McConnell and family, of Massena, , Mrs. Merton Collins, of Osnabruck Centre, with Mr. and Mrs. Frank McConnell; Mr. and Mrs. Roy Handron, Mr. and Mrs. C. Thorne and Mr. W. Drake, of Cornwall, with Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Dafoe; Mr. Mac Hollister, Second Concession, Mr. Charlie Edwards, East Williamsburg, with Mr. Frank Dafoe.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dafoe and family spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Flett at Iroquois.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Dafoe and family and Mr. Robert Dafoe were the guests on Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. J. O'Shaughnessy at Aultsville.

A minister had a negro servant. One Sunday, when he was preaching, he happened to look toward the pew where the negro was seated, and could hardly contain himself as he saw the fellow who could neither read nor write ,scribbling industriously.

After the service he said to the man:

"Tom, what were you doing in church?"

"Taking notes, massa; all de gemmens take notes."

"Bring your notes here and let me see them."

Tom brought his notes, which looked more like Chinese than English.

"Why, Tom, this is all nonsense."

"I thought so, massa, all the time you was preaching it," rejoined Tom.

THE FARMER BUYS . . . THE FARMER SELLS

CLEVER was he who first coined the word "dough" for money, for it is much "kneaded," very plastic, and rises over night; but the joke has been carried too far when "dough" no longer means dough. The producer produces the dough, others get a slice and others a "loaf." Measure in terms of other commodities, agriculture exceeds all others in magnitude, gratitude and fortitude.

If the farmer left potatoes in payment for a washing machine, the merchant and his family could not eat them in 50 years. On the present scale of value, a radio and a gramophone weigh as much as three Clyde horses. It would take a hen a hundred years to pay for a tonsil operation. It would take a sheep 84 years to produce enough wool to pay to clothe itself. "Baa! Baa!" said the black sheep, "I have lots of wool but eight pounds at eight cents won't buy a wool tail!" And if the cow wore shoes she would have to be skinned alive twenty times to pay for two pairs. If barley were put in nail kegs and rolled down hill, it would be worth 32 times as much at the bottom, for it would be pearly barley worth eight cents a pound. Puffed wheat is worth 68 cents a pound—one cent for wheat, 67 for the puff; and the man who discovered the puff is now a millionaire.

If the farmer paid for railway tickets with live poultry the railway would have to trail half a dozen poultry cars behind the passenger cars to take the fare. If hens had to pay for their own meals they would have to lay eggs for a month for one breakfast of breakfast cereal. The golfer nonchalantly slices a gold ball into the rough and forthwith replaces another on the tee. For a lesser loss he could smash into 75 eggs and not worry where they went. If the farmer paid the barber in eggs for a haircut the barber would have eggs for 50 shampoos at 50c and make $25 on the haircut.

Farming is a fundamental industry but the majority are now wishing it was more fun and less demental. Farming seems to be the only occupation that can run profitably at a loss. Nine-tenths of the farmer's time is concerned with production and one-tenth unconcerned, and yet, in marketing or finishing the product there is 10 times the profit. But what is a farmer to do? If he tries to leave the bank will sue him for breach of promise! if he hires a lawyer to defend the case, he will have to farm another five years to pay the lawyer. Shakespeare said: "There is something wrong in the state of Denmark." and Denmark, as you know, has always been a good farming country. What would Shakespeare have said to-day?

"What are you going to do about it?" you say. It is a long road that has no turning, and it will be a sorry day when the farmer is forced to turn away from the store and the city to live as his grandfather lived, on the fruits of his own labours.

CRAZY MOTOR SPEEDERS

Winnipeg Tribune

JUDGING by the number of convictions in recent weeks, the Ontario authorities are in earnest in their determination to make the highways of that province safe for the average motorist.

There is rarely any intelligent reason for driving a car beyond a reasonable speed. Occasionally, in an emergency, fast driving may be justified. For the most part it is merely craziness.

One of the most frequent causes of fast driving is the desire merely to pass someone on the way to nowhere in particular. Which gives point to the Chinese observer's description of Western civilization as "motion without motive." The speed maniac might just as well be driving around an enclosed motor speedway as on the public highways. Perhaps something of the kind may eventually be provided for those infected with the speed virus.

Times Change

"Can you beat it?"

"What now?"

"They sold me this stuff on the 'pay-as-you-can' plan, and now they insist I pay when I can't."

Easy Task

Stranger: "I've come out here to make an honest living."

Native: "Well, there's not much competition."

Willing to Aid

During the holiday traffic rush, two speed cops, noting a young woman who was driving dangerously, shot ahead of her and drew up their car broadside, so that the culprit had to stop.

"Excuse me, young lady," said one of the officers, sarcastically, "do you know anything about driving a car?"

"Of course," said the bright young thing, "what's your trouble?"

Fast Work

The meek little man was walking home from the funeral of his big, masterful wife. Suddenly a roofing tile fell and struck him on the head. "Gosh," he said, "Sarah has arrived in heaven already."

ELECTRIC FARMING

New York Times

DESPITE the financial plight of the farmer, the Department of Agriculture reports that last year he spent more money than ever before in wiring his buildings and buying electric labour-saving machinery. He paid the power companies $46,187,000 for electricity. To-day 1,000,000 farmers —about 10 per cent of the total—are electrified.

Dry as statistics are, they conjure up in this case a picture not of the ploughman who homeward plods his weary way to greet a wife ready to drop with fatigue, but of an alert couple who have time to listen to the radio and see the latest film in town. Brooms and washboards give way to vacuum cleaners and washing machines and smoky kerosene lamps to an electric blaze. Water is pumped by the hundreds of gallons for the stock by the mere pressure of a button and feed is ground in a trice. Instead of blows of the axe the buzzing of an electric saw is heard in the woodshed. Heaving on a rope to fill grain bins and haylofts is left to a motor. Hens work overtime at laying in electrically illuminated coops. Chickens hatched from electrically incubated eggs drink electrically heated water and seek shelter not under motherly wings but under a less erratic brooder. Whether or not the sun shines, hay and alfalfa are dried electrically when they are ripe for cutting. Even the soil is sometimes heated electrically.

This transformation from muscle to motor is a matter of less than ten years. No one dreamed that electricity had so many farm uses. And now we are witnessing nothing less than a planned revolution which may be compared with that brought about by the introduction of the reaper and which is bound to have far-reaching social and economic effects.

When Bobby went to visit his grandmother he was much interested in whatever went on in the kitchen. One day she said to him: "I'm going to make you a nice little pie in a saucer, all for yourself. Don't you think I'm pretty good to take so much trouble?"

Bobby pondered. "Grandma," he said at length, "mother told me not to be a bother, but if it's goin' to be any trouble you can just as well make my pie reg'lar size."

Hundreds From Far and Near Gather for Annual Picnic

The third annual gathering of the Swerdfeger family was held at the farm home of Allen E. Swerdfeger, about a half-mile east of Morewood, on Monday, August 1st, with about 375 friends and relatives in attendance. They began to arrive early in the morning and came from various parts of Ontario and the United States.

Dinner was served at noon on the spacious lawn under the shade of the big trees, and what a dinner it was! The day was spent in sports, in quiet conversation, in the reunion of many who had not seen each other for years.

About 2.30 in the afternoon a splendid group picture of the family was taken by the Photographic Stores Ltd., Ottawa. Then the sports began and were participated in by young and old alike. These were followed by a splendid programme with Ernest Swerdfager, of Ottawa, acting as chairman. The programme consisted of a short addresss by the Rev. W. A. Mehlenbacher, of Morrisburg; music by the Smith Family of Osgoode; a trio by Mrs. Allen E. Swerdfeger, and a duet by Mrs. Millie McLaughlin and Mrs. Howell. Once Was Circus; Exhibition Now Is Big Annual Event

This Year Finds More Interest Than Ever in Ottawa Exhibition Opening Aug. 22. Low Rates Are Announced By Railways. Empire Features.

In the days of yesteryear, young and old looked forward to the annual visit of the circus.. Now it is the Ottawa exhibition, the big annual event of the Capital, and this year finds more interest than ever. The exhibition will open on Monday morning, August 22nd, and will continue for six full days and nights.

This year the railways have announced lower rates than have been given for years ,single fare being applicable to a large area for certain days and fare and a quarter for all Ontario and Quebec for other days. In addition the highways appeal to motor owners and inquiries received by the secretary indicate that there will be quite an influx this year not only from rural and urban Canada but from a wide area of the United States.

For the first time in Canada, except over the radio, the United States Marine Band will be heard each day of the exhibition. Under the leadership of Taylor Branson the band will come at its full strength, 75 musicians. The visit was made possible only through the Dominion and United States Governments. In addition to its official standing, the United States Marine Band comes with the highest reputation of playing the best in music.

Formation flying by Siskin 'planes from the Royal Canadian Air Force, the Winter Garden Revue, with a Broadway cast of stars; unusually strong vaudeville, horse races, spectacular fireworks, a new and bigger midway, government, live stock and industrial displays and a hundred and one other factors undobutedly will not only maintain the high standard set in former years but should establish new records.

The Imperial Economic Conference is adding interest to the exhibition and many are planning to visit the exhibition and to see the distinguished delegates at the same time. Then too it has resulted in a number of Empire exhibits, from Gambia in West Africa, Ceylon, Fiji Islands and New Zealand. The Dominion and Provincial Governments also will make displays that will be educative and highly interesting.

"Why do you weep over the sorrows of people in whom you have no interest when you go to the theatre?" asked the man.

"I don't know," replied the woman. "Why do you cheer wildly when a man with whom you are not acquainted slides into second base?"

DEPOSITORS CONTROL SAVINGS IN BANKS

IN APRIL savings deposits in Canadian banks amounted to $1,392,000,000. Tell that to the next croaker who says Canada is "dead busted," its people impoverished and its future a blank.

In some quarters it seems to be regarded as a reflection on the Government, the banks, the monetary system, or somebody or something, that Canadians have been able and have been allowed to earn and save this huge amount of money.

Specifically that is held to be an offence against the man who has not been able to earn and save, or against the man who chose to spend when he earned and now finds that he is not numbered among the fortunate ones who have bank balances standing to their credit.

"Circulate this money" is the recipe offered for restoring prosperity and making everybody happy, the inference being that it is the duty of the Government or the banks to attend to the distributing, with cheerful disregard to who owns the money or what would be the consequences of any such attempt to scatter it without the consent of the owners.

These savings deposits do not belong to the Government nor to the banks, nor to the public. They belong to the thousands of individual citizens who earned the money, saved it by doing without things they wanted, and stored it away against a day of adversity. They and they alone have the right and the power to put it into circulation.

Weir Calls Conference Of Agricultural Experts

Will Seek Co-Ordination of Federal and Provincial Services

A conference of officials representing all government agricultural services in Canada has been announced for the week of August 29th in Toronto by the Honourable Robert Weir Dominion Minister of Agriculture.

'We have been working for some time," said Mr. Weir, "to bring about a closer co-ordination of federal and provincial agricultural services. The Dominion Department of Agriculture has co-operated with several of the provinces in setting up joint committees composed of the men responsible for the direction of research and extension work in some of our various colleges and departments. The success of the committees in preventing unnecessary duplication and overlapping of services has led me to the conclusion that it would be in the best interests of economy and efficiency to establish a national committee of technical men to advise the Ministers of Agriculture on the best methods of co-ordinating the various federal and provincial activities in research, experimentation, control, extension and marketing. New problems are constantly arising which require the combined efforts of several departments and institutions to solve, and it is on these problems that the advice of men well acquainted with the existing equipment and personnel of the various services is desired. The formation of a national committee will not require the appointment of any new officials, but will simply utilize the knowledge and experience of many valuable men well known throughout Canada for their services to Canadian agriculture. The Dominion government is naturally in a position to take the load in this movement, and recognizing the value of the agricultural services rendered by all federal and provincial departments and institutions, desires to see the efficiency of those services not only maintained under the present stress, but increased to meet the problems of the immediate future."

It is understood from the announcement made by Mr. Weir that the Conference in Toronto will be attended by the Provincial Ministers of Agriculture with their Deputy Ministers, the Presidents of the various agricultural colleges in Canada, representatives of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, and representatives of the National Research Council and the Canadian Society of Technical Agriculturists. The latter organization, composed of the technical workers manning the various agricultural services throughout the Dominion, is supporting the Minister strongly in this move for closer co-ordination. The agenda for the Toronto conference calls for definite action on problems of co-ordination of agricultural services relating to many important lines of research and extension in production and marketing. It is understood that certain export problems will receive particular attention as this meeting will follow immediately the closing of the Imperial Economic Conference.

OVERCROWDED PROFESSIONS

Exeter, Ont., Times-Advocate

WHEN the doctors are telling us that there are enough medical men already to attend to the sick and nurses are assuring us that their profession is already overcrowded, and conferences and presbyteries and bishops are at their wits' end to secure places for ministers, parents will be well advised to think twice before they set their children apart for professional careers. The simple fact is that only those specially fitted by talent, by aptitude and by manner need look for anything like success in the professions. That is as certain as death. Young people are not expected to see this. It is nonsense for their elders to overlook a condition that is perfectly obvious to everyone who stops to think.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

By Etta Bitta Pye

THREE VERY FINE FISH DISHES

IN THESE DAYS when we hear so many beguiling fish stories from the many waterways where our friends are holidaying, we are bound to develop something of an appetite for fish—whether the fresh caught kind or not, and moreover, whether we believe all the tall tales or not!

We are going to pass on three very fine fish dishes that should bring their meed of comfort to the home-held fish lovers. The fish in question can be had at practically any time of year and in any place—and are the least costly, perhaps of all the fish on our market, at average times. So we give these dishes with a little cheer for the budget, too.

Finnan Haddie, Scalloped
(Serves 8.)

2 pounds finnan haddie
1 tablespoon butter, fat or oil
1 tablespoon flour
4 hard-cooked eggs
2 tablespoons melted butter
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon chopped chives
¾ cup milk
½ cup dried bread crumbs.

Wash fish, cover with boiling water and let simmer for ten minutes. Drain. Make sauce of fat, flour, salt, pepper and milk; add chives. Skin fish and flake it. Butter baking-dish, put in layer of fish, then one of sauce and one of chopped eggs. Continue in this way until all is used; sprinkle with the dry bread crumbs, mixed with melted butter and bake in hot oven (425 degrees Fahrenheit) for 25 minutes.

New England Codfish Dinner
(Serves 6.)

1 pound salt codfish
¼ pound salt pork.
12 raw beets
2 hard-cooked eggs
2 pounds new potatoes
2 cups small onions
2 cups medium thick white sauce

Put codfish on in cold water and bring slowly to boiling point but do no boil. If sufficient salt is extracted, flake with fork. If it is still too salty, repeat by again placing in cold water. Cut pork in narrow thin slices and crisp in oven or frying pan. Cook the vegetables separately. Place fish in dish and cover with white sauce. Sprinkle chopped hard-cooked eggs over top Garnish platter with pork and vegetables.

Cod, Parker House Style

3 pounds cod, split and boned
3 tablespoons butter, fat or oil
1 tablespon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon chopped onion
1 tablespoon chopped sweet pepper
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
¼ cup fine cracker crumbs
Juice of 1 lemon

Lay small fresh cod, which has been split and boned, on buttered pan and brush over with 2 tablespoons of fat or melted butter. Then sprinkle with salt, pepper, chopped onion, sweet pepper, lemon juice and parsley. Last cover with cracker crumbs and one tablespoon of butter in bits and bake in hot oven (400 degrees Fahrenheit) for 25 minutes.

NEW USES FOR SALT

HAVE you tried a salt bath? We all know that sea bathing is an invigourating experience, but those who dwell far inland feel that such luxuries are not for them. Now they are discovering that by putting salt in the water they can have a real salt bath at home and enjoy all the refreshing delights they crave. Salt water has a very stimulating effect on the nerves and tissues of the skin, and is especially good for children who need building up. Salt is an essential in so many ways and our readers know that the family doctor constantly recommends salt as the ideal gargle and mouth wash, when used in a solution of one teaspoon of salt to one pint of water. Not only is it a cheap and efficient toilet requisite, but salt is one of the great Canadian products. Underlying some of the salt works of Western Ontario there is a supply of salt that will last the world for about 90,000 years, so this is one natural resource which we do not need to hoard.

MR. PEASLEE ON UNNECESSARY SELF-SACRIFICE

BY THE OPEN DOOR of Caleb Peaslee's corncrib Deacon Hyne came to a standstill and looked in without speaking. His whole figure seemed to move in a nimbus of gloom, and Caleb felt a spasm of sympathy.

"Rheumatiz plaguin' ye, Lysander?" he inquired.

Mr. Hyne shook his head dolefully. "Wuss'n that," he replied. "It ain't aches and pains that's botherin' me. I'm jest tryin' to do somethin' unselfish, and it's hurtin' me wuss'n haulin' a tooth."

Mr. Peaslee's look of concern gave way to a grin, and Mr. Hyne strove to smile with him, wryly.

"I'd been lottin' on gettin' me a new hoss hoe this spring," the deacon explained, "and I can spare jest 'bout 'nough money to buy it with. And now I've got reason to believe my wife wants to go off with that passel of women to some kind of a c'nvention or other at Bangor, and that'll take jest 'bout the money I'ved saved for the hoss hoe. I've been tryin' for two days now to give up to her cheerfully, and I guess I've made out—I hope so, anyway."

Mr. Peaslee looked up with a curious expression in his eyes. "Did your wife tell you she wanted to go?" he demanded.

Mr. Hyne shook his head dejectedly. "She ain't yipped a word 'bout it to me, so far," he admitted. "But most all the women in the village plan to go, so I don't see no comfort there."

Caleb scrutinized an ear of corn carefully and his mouth turned up a little at the corners. "My wife ain't goin'—I heard her say so," he observed at last. "More'n that, I happen to know—" He broke off abruptly and his smile widened. "I guess I've got a little story to tell you, if you want to hear it," he finished.

Mr. Hyne gave a patient sigh. "I s'pose I've got to listen, if you're sot on tellin' it," he conceded glumly.

"Well, I've got reason for wantin' you should listen,' 'asserted Caleb. "Years ago, when my wife and me was fust married, somethin' come up jest 'bout like what you've been goin' through for the last few days, and it teached me somethin' that I ain't forgot.

"This special junket was somethin' that I wanted to go to jest as bad as she did, I felt pretty sure, but I never let on to her that I did. Instead of that I kep' tellin' her what a good time she'd have, and picturin' it all out.

"Them days, when we was just startin' in, money wa'n't very plenty, and we both knew that if one of us went, tother one'd have to stay at home. So I didn't give her much chance to plead with me to go in her place, but I packed her off and stayed at home and nussed my disapp'intment. So she went off alone, lookin' pretty sober.

"I ain't goin' into p'ticulars of what my thoughts was that day, of her off havin' a good time instead of me—I ain't never felt any gre't pride in 'em, ever. I'll jest say that I pitied myself c'onsid'able, and let it go at that.

"Come night, she got back home, and I went out to help her out of the wagon,—she'd rode back with one of the neighbours,—and when she struck the ground I see right off that somethin' was wrong. She looked tired and sick 'nough to be put to bed and have the doctor—'s a matter of fact, she had to have him 'fore she got through with it. And I helped her into the house, and in less'n a minute I found out what a fool I'd been!

"Come to get at the rights of it, she hadn't wanted to go at all, but I'd made such a touse over her goin' that she thought my heart was set on it, and she'd swallered her wishes and gone. She hadn't had a happy minute for the day, or one when she wouldn't rather been to home, a dozen times over. And she'd jest tired herself sick.

"There I'd been and gone and sp'ilt the day for both of us, on 'count of not havin' a little clearin'-up talk in the beginnin'! But it teached me somethin', and you better believe it never happened again, nor nothin' like it. Nowadays I know fust if there's anything to worry 'bout, 'fore I do any sacrificin'.

"Comin' back to what I started to say in the fust place," Caleb went on placidly, "I happen to hear your wife and mine talkin' 'bout the convention, and they both agreed that they couldn't be drug there by wild hosses. So I guess your two days' worry is as good as wasted, and you can buy your hoss hoe soon's you're a mind to, fur's that goes."

"Honest?" demanded Mr. Hyne, brightening wonderfully.

"Honest!" Mr. Peaslee reassured him.

Nurse: "Do you know what happens to little girls who tell lies?"

Betty: "Ho! You can't scare me. I've already told three fibs in my lifetime!"

"Oh, Mummy, that man's bald!"

"Hush, dear, or he will hear you!"

"But he knows it already, doesn't he?"

"Would you marry a man for his money?"

"Not exactly. But I'd want my husband to have a lovely disposition, and if he didn't have money he'd very likely be worried and ill-natured."

"HORSEY MEN"

HAVE you ever calculated how much respect you can buy with a sudden half-crown?

A railway porter will give you quite a lot, an hotel porter will unbend slightly, and under its influence even a taxi- cab driver, if the fare is about seven and sixpence, will appear fairly human. But if you want your money's worth, go briskly into Aldridge's or Tattersall's on the day of a horse sale, walk up to a man who wears a white jacket and holds a whip, give him half a crown and say at the same time: "Selling any hunters to-day?" You know at once that you have made a hit. As an American would say, he reacts immediately. In one swift eye-sweep he has made a mental note of you; he knows the kind of a horse he thinks you ride, the way you ride it, and so on. He looks knowing, a quality shared by all men even remotely connected with the sale of horseflesh, and, slightly closing one eye, he whispers:

"Come with me, sir!"

* * *

You are in a stable facing the posteriors of many horses. The hunters, the aristocrats of the sale, are boxed together in a corner, but there are big hefty carthorses and sturdy hacks of every kind. You look down the catalogue: "Bay mare, has been ridden side-saddle and astride." What lovely girl rode her side-saddle and astride, you wonder, called her "Nelly," and came to the stable every morning with a lump of sugar?

'Look out, sir!" says your admirer, as he taps Nelly's hocks lightly with his whip, causing her to swerve round and show you a dilated pupil and a suspiciously poised near-side hoof. "Now, sir, that's your 'oss, that is!"

You don't deceive him. You don't explain you are doing this for fun, to while away a weary hour, to banish ennui. On he goes, a natural-born auctioneer. She's your weight, she is, and she has a lovely mouth, she has, and he wouldn't be surprised if she was a marvellous jumper, he wouldn't. . . .

For one half-crown and a minimum amount of attention you can spend hours with this man prodding flanks, feeling hocks, and running your hand over withers, but the best thing to do is to run down the horses, call them "rough stuff" and go off into the yard where they are having a sale.

Now horse fancying has created a unique type of man familiar to you in the country, but never seen in London except at these sales. When you regard them en masse the effect is remarkable. You feel that if a coach-and-four suddenly drove in they could all take seats and drive out looking like one of Cruikshank's illustrations in Dickens. People would say: "What are they advertising?"

They are horse-faced, thin, bow-legged, and some of them actually suck straws—most difficult things to find in London these days if you contract the habit. They wear little fawn coats with pearl buttons and tight little gaiters well up on the top of their boots; and they walk with a roll.

You have seen a wicked man in a night club on the movies look at the heroine. He screws up his eyes and looks straight at her ankles, and then slowly insults her with his eyes as his gaze ascends. These horsey men look at horses just like that: their eyes glance contemptuously at hoofs, linger sneeringly on fetlocks, wander disparagingly over other parts of the anatomy then they say: "Wind sucker," or "Roarer," or "Eats her bedding," and light a cigar.

* * *

Into the ring is led a chestnut mare. She is a lovely thing, and you can tell by the way she trembles and tosses her head that she is not having a good time. She does not understand. There are many things she does understand. She understands the man into whose waistcoat it is so good to place her moist muzzle, she understands the slightest move of him in the saddle, and she loves to obey when, feeling the faintest pressure of his knees, she breaks into a canter over soft grass, and falls again into a trot, to find his hand patting her sleek neck.

Why isn't he here? He has never let others take control of her before! In a moment, no doubt, he will come and drive all these men off; and then they will go out together to their own place as they have always done. She looks round. Whinnies.. But her man is not there.

Then the auctioneer, a little fellow in a silk hat, explains that this chestnut mare, sound in wind and limb and eye, is being sold to save her summer keep. The horse fanciers come a step nearer, they whisper, they begin to bid. . . .

Bang! The hammer descends. The little chestnut mare starts suddenly as if she knew that she had got a new master.

* * *

They lead her out under the wide arch of the livery stable, and in the proud tossing of her head and her backward looks you seem to read: "Where is that man of mine ,and why —why doesn't he come?"

Next week: "From Bow to Ealing."

Blake: "We ought to ask the Bishop to lay the corner-stone of our new building.

Drake: "Yes, we'll save money if we can get him to do it instead of the bricklayers.

KATE GRENFIELD, PROBATIONIST

IT is not too much to say that Kate Grenfield was supremely happy. She had reasons to be. Though only a probationer at the Norfolk City Hospital, she had been appointed to night duty with the personal friend of Dr. Endicott, chief of the medical staff.

Kate had waited impatiently for her nineteenth birthday when she could enter the hospital and exchange the humdrum experiences of the old life for the unknown mysteries of the new.

During her eleven weeks' stay at the hospital the unknown mysteries had promptly resolved themselves into duties quite as commonplace in their way as those of which she had become so tired at home. She had had to make beds and then make them over again. She had had to scrub a basin four or five times, although after the first scrubbing she had considered the utensil to be perfectly clean. Over and over she had been reproved for carelessly banging a door or tripping over a piece of furniture when she was merely trying to finish a task in the allotted time.

Yet in spite of chapped hands, swollen feet and aching back, in spite of frequent corrections and scant praise, Kate never wavered in her determination to become a real nurse, if only the hospital authorities would keep her.

And now a great honour had come to her. Out of twenty-five probationers, she had been selected for night duty on a case in the influenza wing of the hospital. That in itself was honour enough. But when Mr. Stanton, the personal friend of Dr. Endicott, she fought off a desire to snatch the cap off the head of Miss Price, the staid superintendent of nurses, hurl it down the hall, then prance after it the whole length of the corridor.

"Yes, Miss Price. "I will do my best," she replied calmly.

Miss Price noticed the girl's heightened colour and perceived her suppressed exultation.

"Miss Grenfield," she said in her incisive, abrupt tone, "this is your chance—your chance to prove that the time spent in trying to correct some of your heedless ways has not been spent in vain."

"But I have tried—I have tried so hard,' faltered Kate. Her desire for cap snatching and prancing was gone in a flash.

"Yes, I know," Miss Price interposed, "but in this hospital work it is not trying hard that counts, but trying successfully."

Kate was silent.

"With so many nurses in France," Miss Price went on, "and with the hospital filing up with influenza patients, you probationers must be trusted to do some work."

"But I want you to trust me. I'll follow directions exactly as you give them," Kate promised; her blue eyes looked seriously into those of the superintendent of nurses.

The stern lines in Miss Price's face relaxed a little. "Very well," she said. "Take your hours off now and get as much sleep as you can. You will go on duty at seven o'clock to-night."

Kate went at once to her room and tried to sleep, but the harder she tried the more wide-awake she felt. Finally she sat up and drew her writing pad into her lap.

"Perhaps if I write a note home," she thought, "it will quiet my mind a bit."

So she began to write a few lines to her mother, telling her the great good fortune that had befallen her.

"All the girls like to work with Dr. Endicott," her pen ran on. "Not that he is easy on the nurses—not a bit of it; but he is so fair to them, so straightforward with everyone. You can imagine how anxious I am that everything should go right on my first private case. Now I must try to go to sleep again; so good-bye, and dearest love from your daughter,

Kate lay down this time; her mind's eye travelled over a new set of pictures. She saw the little white house beside the Norfolk River, with her mother sewing by the sunny western window, and the twins scampering in from school. How peaceful it all seemed! Then she fell sound asleep, with one arm thrown up over her unruly mass of brown hair.

"Time to get up, Kate!" called her roommate, Margaret Wheaton, bursting into the room three hours later.

Kate sat up, blinking in a bewilderer way.

"Do wake up, Kate!" cried Margaret, giving her a little shake. "I have a lot of news for you. Miss Price has put Mr. Stanton into the sun room at the end of the corridor. His temperature went so high that he was delirious and disturbed the others in the ward. He kept shouting every little while for some one to help him kill a bunch of Germans. Did you know, Kate, that he was shell shocked last year?"

"No," Kate answered as she hastily dressed. "Do you think Miss Price will trust me to take care of him now that his temperature is so high—and way off there in the sun room?"

"Of course she will. I saw the directions she wrote for you on the bedside chart. You are not to leave Mr. Stanton alone one second She underscored those words in two different places."

"But why should I leave the poor man alone? Did she think I'd choose this time to go to the movies?"

Margaret laughed. "You're such a dear, Kate! Every one of us admits Miss Price was right in picking you first for private duty, even if you have knocked over everything in the hospital that wasn't nailed down."

Quietly Kate walked across the yard, under the dripping trees, to the rear entrance of the hospital. The place always fascinated her in the evening. She loved to see the brightly lighted entrance, with its outlying offices, the long corridors stretching away into mysterious shadows. The little desks with their shaded lamps, placed at regular intervals along the walls of the corridors, were points of contact between the different branches of this marvellous system of patients, nurses, and doctors. By force of contrast, the outward quiet of the place emphasized the inward teeming life of the hospital at night.

"I waited a minute to speak to you," said Dr. Endicott, so close to her ear that she jumped. Dr. Endicott seemed not to notice the start but led the way to the sun room, where, muttering a jargon of unintelligible words, his friend and patient lay.

"I have just given him his quieting medicine," said the doctor. "You will see by the chart that it must be repeated at midnight. He seems quiet enough now, but don't leave him alone. If you want anything, ring the bell and the ward nurse will bring it to you. Good night."

With a kindly nod and smile Dr. Endicott was gone, and Kate was left alone with her charge.

The early hours of the night passed quickly enough for her as she did the countless little things that would relieve her patient. She noticed that his incessant muttering became quieter for a few minutes after she had slipped a cool, fresh pillow under his head, or changed the ice compress on his throbbing temples. Like a child, he would watch her approach with a spoonful of cracked ice and open his mouth obediently as if he had not the previous second urged her to dig that German out from under the bed.

"Strange how helpless the strongest people are when they are sick!" mused Kate as she rang the bell for the ward nurse to bring her a little more cracked ice.

The ward nurse brought the ice and then, with a glance at the chart, stopped a minute to look at Mr. Stanton, who had stopped his muttering and seemed almost asleep.

"Good! His temperature is coming down, isn't it?" she said. "Don't ring the bell, if you can help it, Miss Grenfield, for the next fifteen or twenty minutes. We have had to send two nurses off the floor to help in an emergency upstairs, and now I am going to help move that kidney case; it will take three or four of us to move him on the drawsheet."

Kate absently nodded assent. She dropped into the chair a moment to write her notes on the bedside chart. Her glance fell on her watch. Midnight! Time for the second powder. She had not thought that it was so late. She started to dissolve the powder in a little water, then noticed that there was no water in the room. She rang the bell. No answer. With a start she remembered that the ward nurse had told her not to ring for a few minutes.

Kate went to the door to see whether by chance a nurse were passing through the corridor, but no one was in sight. She glanced at the bed. Mr. Stanton was quqietly sleeping. His chest rose and fell in peaceful rhythm.

Kate hesitated a moment. She had been told not to leave the patient alone. On the other hand, she had been told to give him a powder at midnight. What should she do? She took a second look at the sleeping patient and darted into the hall. Down its length she sped and out to the little service room, where she quickly filled her glass with water. In her hurry her hand struck on the edge of a shelf, and the glass fell with a crash into the bowl beneath.

"What an unbelieveable racket for one small glass to make!" she groaned as she tried to gather up the pieces.

She was slow at it, for they were wet and slippery, but at last she started back with a fresh glass of water. She had left the door of the sun room open, so that as she approached she could look directly into the room.

There was no head on the pillow. With a rush she was in the room, automatically closing the door with her heel.

Mr. Stanton sat astride the low window sill; one foot was swinging in the rain outside, the other was resting on the floor of the room. His face was fiery red, his eyes were blazing.

"They threw a hand grenade at me!" he whispered hoarsely. "Did you hear it smash the windows outside?"

"I heard breaking glass," Kate replied, setting down the glass of water and moving toward him quietly, but with shaking knees.

"Better be getting out of here, eh?" he said.

'Yes, but wait just a minute. Wait for me."

Just then some one upstairs let a door bang. With a look of terror Mr. Stanton swung his other foot over the sill.

One spring, and Kate caught him round the waist and drew him, kicking and shouting, back into the room. "You're a German spy!" he muttered and grappled with her.

Round the room they whirled. Kate tried to force him near the bell, so that she could ring for help; but, as if he had divined her thought, he kept crowding away from that side of the room. Should she scream for help? The door was closed, and to make the nurses hear she must frighten all the patients in the ward, some of whom were desperately ill.

No, there was nothing to do except to rely on her own strength. She was panting now. So was the patient, but Kate knew that her own strength was ebbing faster than his.

Suddenly she felt the frenzied grasp on her arm relax slightly. The man swayed unsteadily; with a quick shove, Kate pushed him toward the bed, and at the same instant she shot out her right foot and tripped him. He fell with a thud on the bed. Kate had used every last ounce of strength in her muscular young back to keep him from the floor. After the strain of that last tug the girl collapsed into the chair by the bedside, faint and dizzy.

To her surprise Mr. Stanton ceased to struggle. Kate staggered to her feet and began to rearrange the bedclothes over him. Quickly she felt for his pulse. It was rapid, but gave no sign that his condition was serious. Even as she watched him anxiously, he turned on his pillow as if to go to sleep again. Amazed, she hurriedly prepared the powder.

After taking the powder the patient slept for four hours. When he woke he seemed rational and apparently remembered nothing unusual that had happened during the night.

When Kate joined the probationers for breakfast, she was greeted with a chorus of questions:

"Did you get along all right?"

"Did Miss Price say anything to you this morning?"

"Why don't you tell us about it?"

Kate looked round at the eager faces. "Do leave me alone!" she exclaimed. "I never knew girls could ask such insane questions."

Her friends looked at her in amazed indignation, but Margaret Wheaton put in quickly, "Kate is too tired to talk," and everyone settled down to a quiet breakfast.

Alone in her room, Kate reviewed the events of the night. It was a pretty black record. First, she had disobeyed an order, both spoken and written, that she should not leave her patient alone. Second, she had carelessly dropped a glass, and the crash had roused her patient and frightened him into delirium again. Last, it was owing rather to good luck than to good care that at the end of her first night on private duty she had a live patient and not a dead one. With her mind's eye she saw again the reports she had written on the chart:

"Restless and muttering early part of night.

Quietly sleeping from 2–6 A.M.

Rational, with normal temperature, at 7. A.M."

"I don't care!" she muttered, sitting up "Whose business is it, anyway, what went on in the night, so long as my patient is all right this morning?"

"Tell the whole truth and take the consequences," urged the voice within her.

"I can't. If I tell the whole truth, I shall be sent home in disgrace," argued Kate.

"All right, then, don't tell, and have it to remember all your life that you deceived the people who trusted you."

"Stop your noise! I'm going to sleep," retorted Kate.

Day after day of the last week of Kate's probationship slipped away, and yet she said no word to anyone on the subject that filled her thoughts. Wretched and miserable, she went about her duties. On the last morning of the week she was sent to Miss Price's room with the requisition slips. Miss Price was writing busily and took no notice of the little pile of slips that the girl laid on the desk.

Kate gazed steadily at the smooth coil of hair on the back of Miss Price's head. It seemed to her the only fixed point in the room; so she continued to gaze at it, while she heard some one saying in a queer thin voice, "I disobeyed orders the night I took care of Mr. Stanton. I left him alone a minute He nearly got out of the window. I ragged him back, and we had a tussle. I didn't tell because I thought you would send me home."

At Kate's first word Miss Price had stopped writing, but she did not look up. Was she too horrified even to look at her? Kate wondered. At that instant Dr. Endicott entered.

'Tell Dr. Endicott what you have just told me," said Miss Price and left them together.

"I left Mr. Stanton alone that night," Kate began again; but everything in the room seemed moving so rapidly that she caught at the back of a chair to steady herself.

"Sit down," said Dr. Endicott not unkindly. "I know all about what you did the night you were on duty. Mr. Stanton told me the next morning; but I told him not to speak of it to anyone else till you made your report of it."

"You knew all about it?" gasped Kate.

"Yes. Mr. Stanton remembered everything perfectly. That often happens when a delirious person becomes rational again. Why didn't you make full report in the morning?"

"I was afraid you would send me home," Kate answered. Dr. Endicott was silent so long that Kate felt that she must scream. She dropped her face into her hands.

"You nurses all seem to think that we are watching for a good excuse to send you home," he said at last. "On the contrary, we are very anxious to keep you. Nothing happened that night for which we should think of expelling you, except that you did not make a full report of it." Kate lifted her head in astonishment.

"You were told not to leave the patient alone," continued Mr. Endicott. "You were also told to give medicine at midnight. You did not use good judgment in deciding which order should take precedence. But an error of judgment is not criminal. To counterbalance that, you showed remarkable coolness and presence of mind in an emergency. Mr. Stanton feels that you saved his life."

"Saved his life! I nearly killed him."

"He doesn't feel that way. But at any rate the incident in itself was not just cause for refusing your promotion. The quality that is indispensable in a nurse is a certain staunchness of moral fibre. A nurse must be trustworthy. Miss Price and I hated to lose such all-round good material for a nurse as we found in you, but if you had failed to make full report of what happened that night we should have sent you home.

"Take this slip to Miss Price," he said abruptly, going out of the room.

Kate glanced at the slip that he had dropped into her lap, and read:

"Kate Grenfield, recommended for promotion into regular training. Dr. Endicott."

EXPECTANT MOTHERS

PREGNANCY is a normal process through which the average healthy woman should be able to pass without any special danger. It is, however, a condition which throws an unusual strain upon the body and it is necessary that the body should be prepared for this additional strain.

Every expectant mother should receive pre-natal care. Pre-natal care means that early in pregnancy the expectant mother goes to her doctor. The doctor makes the necessary examinations to ascertain the condition of the woman. Throughout her whole pregnancy the woman remains under the regular supervision of her doctor.

There are many good reasons for pre-natal care. Some women are suffering from abnormal conditions which make pregnancy unsafe for them. They may not be aware of the fact that they have a contracted pelvis, or that their heart or kidneys are not normal. The early discovery of such conditions allows the doctor to plan for the special care which such cases require.

During pregnancy abnormal conditions develop in some cases. These conditions do not as a rule come on suddenly. In general they begin with some slight change which can be detected at that time by proper medical examinations, and, if treated, the more serious developments are prevented.

Pre-natal care is essentially preventive in its nature. It provides the supervision which is the only practical means whereby expectant mothers may be safeguraded from the conditions which sometimes arise as a menace to health and life. No one can say in what woman they will develop, so it is necessary to watch over all expectant mothers through pre-natal care for all.

Not only is it desirable to make pregnancy safe, but it should be made as comfortable as possible. When the conditions of the mother is known the doctor can direct her mode of living so that her health will be maintained and comfort secured at the same time.

It will be pointed out to the expectant mother that her teeth should be put in good condition. There is no reason why dental care should not be received during pregnancy, despite popular ideas to the contrary.

It is important to eat the right kind of food at all times, and it is even more important than usual for the expectant mother to do so. The food she uses not only nourishes her own body, but provides the materials required to build the body of her baby.

Pre-natal care safeguards both the mother and the baby.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

WOMEN POPULARIZE GOATS

IN DISCUSSING some of the recent agricultural shows in England, some of the authorities speak of the remarkable rise in public favour of the poor man's cow, otherwise the goat. Credit for this, they say, has been largely due to the women stockmen, who, having seen the nutritive and economical potentialities of this somewhat despised little creature, have set about developing them. The increase in milk yield is said to be even more spectacular than the increase of milk flow in cattle, and while, not so long ago, the goat capable of giving a gallon of milk was looked on as a prodigy, her admirers say, the flow will soon be speeded up to three gallons. One of the desirable things about the goat is that she is free from the tubercle bacillus, the deadly germ that has sent so many prize herds to untimely slaughter. But the thought that rises in the mind as we hear of plans to make the goat work overtime in milk production will such super-production weaken her resistance, as it has undoubtedly weakened the disease resistance of the cow? Scientists may be able to assure us that the goat will be immune under all conditions. If so, with an increased milk flow and her inexpensive dietary, she should prove a boon.

A Wise Woman

Her car had broken down on the road opposite a field where a farmer was ploughing with a four-horse team. The farmer came over and offered to pull the car to the nearest garage with his team.

"I appreciate your kind offer," said the lady in distress to the farmer, "but, unforunately, you would need 12 more horses. You see, my car has a 16-horsepower motor."

"Have you noticed any signs of better business?"

"Yes, the people who couldn't pay their bills are starting to promise."

How Did It Happen?

Before the present business depression, the following story was considered a joke—now it might almost be a comparison. It would be hard to find a business man who is not in the same quandary as the man who operated a saw-mill in Arkansas and finally decided to hire an accountant to explain things to him. When the accountant arrived in the sketchy little town where the saw-mill operated, he was met by the owner. "Wall, stranger," said the old-timer, "it's this way. My father-in-law died a few years ago and left me the mill; my three boys run it, so it don't cost me nothin' for wages; I steal all the timber, so that's free; my brother-in-law is division freight agent on the railroad and he sneaks all the lumber out for me so that costs me nothin'. So what I want to know is, how did I run behind six hundred dollars last year?"

Presentation at Elma

At the regular meeting of the Ladies' Aid of Elma United Church on Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Arletta Ault, after the transaction of the regular business, advantage was taken of the occasion by the ladies to honour one of their number, when Mrs. Arletta Ault was presented with an address accompanied by a handsome boudoir lamp prior to her departure from the community where she has been a willing and appreciated work in the Society and community. Very Good Attendance C.W.L. Meeting at Finch

A largely attended meeting of the Finch sub-division of the Catholic Women's League was held at the home of Mrs. John Ruddy, Finch, on Wednesday evening, August 3rd. The business part of the meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. J. T. Campbell. Mrs. Campbell gave a very interesting and instructive report of the Annual National Convention of the C. W. L. at Toronto at which she was a delegate from the Diocese of Alexandria. Mrs. Alex. Foley rendered a vocal solo. Piano selections were given by Misses Margaret O. Donohue and Helen Ruddy, after which lunch was served, the hostess being assisted by Mrs. Campbell and Miss Marv Hunt. Attendance prizes were won by Miss Melia Beehler and Benny Curran.

A weary-looking fellow who had opened all the doors looking for work happened to see a huge police advertisement headed:

"Murderer Wanted."

"Well," he said, scratching his head, "it's better'n nothing, anyhow. I'm going in and ask for the job!"
