NAMING THE PICTURE THEA

THERE seems to be considerable interest taken in the name which Chesterville's new picture theatre will bear. This week a lady of Matilda has suggested the name "Seamore," adding that this name might suggest that the new theatre would be better than others as you might see more for your money. A Dunbar suggestion is "The Elite," suggested by a lady from that district. Two names from Chesterville ladies are "Maple Leaf" and "Pep-in," while another Chesterville suggestion is "Grand Union," possibly having in mind the deep interest that is being taken in the new Community Hall by the whole district hereabouts.

St. Andrew's Junior Societies Guests of W.M.S. Members

C.G.I.T. Girls and Mission Band Met With Their Elders at Home of Mrs. C. T. McIntosh.

The Women's Missionary Society of St. Andrew's church entertained the C.G.I.T. group and the Mission Band on Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. C. McIntosh, the young people assisting with the programme.

The programme opened with the Apostles' Creed and the president in the chair. Psalm 19 was sung, Mrs. McIntosh took the first scripture reading from Deuteronomy, 29: 1-6, Miss Rae led in prayer. Hymn 721, "God Sees the Little Sparrow Fall," was sung for the children. Romans, 1 was taken for the second scripture reading, read alternately. The minutes were read and approved. Roll call was answered with the Lord's Prayer, each member taking two words. Miss Phyllis Morrell gave a recitation.

A duet, "When He Cometh," was given by Misses Ruth Moore and Melba Perkins, followed by two readings by Helen Scott and Marion Cameron. A chorus was sung by the Band, "Tell Me the Story of Jesus," Mrs. Jay Bailey read a story for the children, "Wise Men and the Star." A violin solo by Mss Clara Heiren was very much enjoyed. Mrs. Harladine read a poem, "Remembrance." A recitation, "Somebody's Son," was given by Dorothy Liscombe, followed by a duet by Misses Ethel Smirle and Gwellda McGillvray, "If I Could Tell of All the Glory," which was well rendered. Another chorus by the Band and a paper from the Missionary Hospital Nurse, Miss Murray, was read by Mrs. J. A. Munro, describing many interesting visits to the Hospital. This was followed by a piano solo by Miss Melba Perkins which called forth splendid applause.

Business was in order and the treasurers and secretaries reported and plans were made for the Thankoffer-service and annual meeting. Miss Heiren gave another violin solo and the closing hymn was 718, "We Praise Thee, O God." Impromptu speeches were given by visitors and W.M.S. members and the closing prayer was by Miss Jamieson. AND INFORMATION FOR THE BUSY FARMER

nished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture

second estimate of all the prin- grain crops of Canada in 1935 ued by the Dominion Bureau of tatistics is lower than that of September last. The wheat estimate is reduced from 290,541,000 bushels to 273,971,000 bushels and is now below the 1934 production of 275,849,000

Feed to Fatten Geese.

The best feed on which to fatten geese is corn. If you have no corn available use buckwheat, oats and barley, mixed. There is nothing that will put flesh on geese at this season of the year like whole corn. Do not feed your geese mashes. Whole corn with a small amount of greed feed such as cabbages will answer the purpose best.

Manitoulin Turkey Show.

Manitoulin Island is known as a district producing turkeys of the best quality. Possibly no other community produces so many Christmas dinners. Much of this success is due to the activities of the All Manitoulin Turkey Show. For ten consecutive years this fair has been conducted by the Manitoulin Co-Operative Turkey Growers' Association in co-operation with the Dominion poultry services and the Ontario Department of Agriculture. Each year has seen an improvement in both numbers and quality. The 1935 show was held in the community hall at Mindemoya. The 175 birds on display taxed to capacity the space and composed the most outstanding breeding stock of the Island.

Rations for Dairy Cows.

Two important factors must be considered in formulating rations for dairy cows. The supply of feed on hand, or available at a cost in keeping with the value of the product to be produced, and the selection of feeds that will supply the necessary food nutrients in a palatable form, plus sufficient variety and bulk.

Data secured at the Dominion Experimental Farm show that the cheapest supply of feed is secured from our own farms. In other words, home-grown feeds are the most economical.

It is generally recognized that on the majority of farms sufficient protein cannot be produced to supply the dairy cows with the necessary requirements. By producing clover or alfalfa hay, however, along with roots or ensilage and the common cereal crops, it has been demonstrated during the past three years that the only feed purchases necessary are small amounts of high protein supplements. One supplement that is produced in Eastern Canada is fish meal.

With any ration made up of feeds grown in Eastern Canada, a mineral supplement such as ground limestone and bone char is necessary. When fish meal is fed, this is not so essential, but it is excellent insurance in any case.

Hay and Straw Crops.

South-Western Ontario: Some 6,000 tons of timothy hay are reported north and east of Goderich to Toronto and 6,500 tons of timothy grass mixed hay in the north and west areas. 6,800 tons of alfalfa are reported north and east of Goderich to Toronto and 18,000 tons in the Owen Sound-Meaford area and in scattered localities. In addition, 1,200 tons of clover hay are reported from scattered places in the district. These supplies of good hay for the market may be much increased should there come a greater demand. In addition there are large surpluses of discoloured hay caused by adverse weather in the haying season.

North-Western Ontario: A large surplus of timothy and timothy-clover mixed hay in Ontario west of Fort William is reported.

Eastern and Northern Ontario: Ontario from Peterborough east and including the Ottawa Valley has a surplus of market hay in almost every county. Counties bordering on the St. Lawrence river report a surplus of about 7,500 tons of timothy and timothy mixed hay, much of which is No. 3 grade on account of rains during the harvesting season. A large quantity of timothy hay is reported in the lower Ottawa Valley, which includes a substantial carry over from the 1934 crop. Northern Ontario reports a surplus supply of about 23,000 tons of timothy and timothy clover mixtures.

Harrow Laying Contest.

The Western Ontario laying contest at Harrow which began on October 3rd, a month earlier than the other contests throughout the Dominion has got off with a good start. There are 12 pens of Barred Rocks, five of White Plymouth Rocks and five of White Leghorns in the contest. In the first four weeks these 220 birds laid 2,023 eggs large enough to counting, making 1712.6 points. Sixty-three eggs were under 20 ounces per dozen in the fourth week and were not counted. The first week there were 152 such eggs, the second week, 115; the third, 95. So the improvement in size and weight is noticeable. Number of eggs also is improving; first week, 330 were laid; second week 480; third week, 563; fourth week 650. The average percentage has, of course, increased accordingly. The leading pen at the close of the fourth week were Barred Rocks, owned by Hugh C. Elliott of Galt, Ont., a well-known contestant who held second place in the contest which closed at the end of September. His pen scored 211 points with 218 eggs at the end of the four-week period.

December Survey of Live Stock and Poultry.

The Department, with the assistance of the rural schools, distributes blank Schedules to farmers twice each year, in June and December, for the purpose of preparing estimates of the numbers of live stock on farms and the acreage of field crops. Great importance is attached to the successful completion of the survey, as only in this way can reliable estimates of the numbers of hogs, cattle, sheep and other live stock be prepared.

School pupils are asked to distribute these schedules and return them to the teacher. Although a very large number of farmers fill in the cards regularly each year there are some who hesitate to do so. In some years as many as 80,000 cards have been filled in and returned for Ontario. There is good reason for every farmer to fill out a Survey Card as the chief purpose of the Department of Agriculture in carrying out this work is to secure statistical data for the use of farmers themselves. As soon as the work of tabulating is completed, the Statistics Branch of the Department of Agriculture releases the figures simultaneonusly to all newspapers, farm journals and radio stations.

Some persons are of the opinion the information is used for taxation purposes. This is strictly not so. Each report is considered absolutely confidential and the information is used only by the Statistics Branch for compiling agriculutral statitics by township or county division.

Ottawa M.L.A. is Charged Following Highway Death

Arthur Ellis Was Driver of Auto as Cheesemaker is Killed on Highway at Gananoque.

Gananoque.—Joseph McAlanon, 69 years old, proprietor of a cheese factory at Seeley's Bay, near here, was struck by a motor car and killed on the highway in front of his factory Sunday. A charge of criminal negligence was laid against Arthur Ellis, M.L.A. for Ottawa South, said by the police to have been the driver of the auto. Bail was arranged at $2,000.

Provincial Constable W. M. Durnford, who investigated the accident,, also preferred a charge against Mr. Ellis of driving a motor car with defective brakes.

Police said McAlanon was returning from the south side of the highway after having bought a bottle of oil from a service station when he was struck. The car, police stated, travelled 200 feet after striking McAlanon.

S. A. V. Martin, Mr. Ellis' law partner, was in the car with him. Senator Cole of Ottawa, and Rupert Broadfoot, K.C., of Ottawa, Mr. Ellis' legal representatives, visited the scene of the accident late in the day and then conferred with their client at his hotel here.

McAlanon was one of the oldest cheese manufacturers in Leeds County. He had been in the business almost 50 years.

Quartette Found Guilty on Charges of Perjury

Former Smiths Falls Fire Chief and Companion Fine $100 Plus Day in Jail.—Women Suspended.

Perth.—John Miller, suspended fire chief of Smiths Falls, and Milburn Baker of the same town were fined $100 each Monday and sentenced to one day in jail for perjury in connection with evidence they gave at an inquest into the death of William Muldoon, locomotive engineer.

Baker's wife and Mrs. Florence Gleeson, charged jointly with the men received suspended sentences of one year each. The sentences were imposed by Judge F. W. Wilson.

Baker and Miller were given option of spending three months determinate and three months indeterminate in jail if they failed to pay the fine and were required to post bonds of $1,000 each to keep the peace for one year or spend similar periods in jail.

Th women were required to post similar bonds to keep the peace for two years and to promise abstention from alcohol for one year.

All four were charged with perjuring themselves at the first inquest, September 3rd, when they said they had found Muldoon dead in his automobile. At a resumed session of the inquest the jury found the engineer had been slain. A new inquest was ordered, however, by Attorney-General Roebuck of Ontario after an autopsy had led authorities to believe the man died from heart disease. The jury at the second inquest supported this view.

Alcoholic Breath Only May Be Brought From U.S.

Application of $100 Worth Duty Free Would Be Contrary to Laws of All Nine Provinces.

Although American tourists returning to the United States can compose their $100 free entry entirely of liquor if they so desire, Canadians returning from the United States will be permitted nothing more than an alcoholic breath.

Officials of the Department of National Revenue are endeavouring to draw up a schedule of regulations which will follow the United States concessions as closely as possible, but will not include liquor. They will be complete before January 1st.

Check-up by customs officials shows that, even if the department was willing, permission to Canadians to bring liquor back as tourist cargo would at once bring conflict with the liquor acts of all nine provinces and would contravene the Prohibition of Exports Act of the Dominion.

May Limit Cigarettes.

So liquor is off the record as duty-free purchase. What will happen to cigarettes is still under consideration. The Department of National Revenue is reluctant to yield the revenue that would be lost and it has the sturdy support of Canadian tobacco companies who foresee inroads on sales. What is probable is that a limited number of cigarettes will be permitted.

Along the boundary Canadian merchants are worried about groceries and other provisions. The United States regulations permit these articles to enter free as tourist purchases, but Canadian merchants bordering along United States points declare that in a single trip south a couple could bring back more than a year's supply of staples and they shudder at the possibility.

Customs officials, of course, in spite of the freedom of entry, might make it very unprofitable for tourists by opening up canned and packaged goods to be sure they contained what was declared.

TOY REPAIRING ON THE WAY.

Many toys are now in the hands of the Boy Scouts following the Toy Shop dance of Tuesday evening and the appeal to the Public and Separate Schools of last week. Not quite as many toys have been gathered this year but this is perhaps made up by the quality which is somewhat improved over previous years. The cash receipts at the dance also fell off considerably but there is probably sufficient to pay the expenses of the shop.

The Girl Guides of the newly-formed Chesterville Company are this year taking over the job of rejuvenating the dolls Some of the poor things are in pretty bad shape but when the hustling Guides finish with them the dolls will not know each other. We wish every success to the re-organized Guide Company which is under the leadership of Captain Mrs. Geo. G. Merkley. It looks as if every girl in town of Guide age has enrolled, five patrols of eight having been formed.

The Repair Shop is to take up part of the Scout meeting to-night and each Scout is asked to bring along any tools he can such as a hammer, pliers, screw driver, saw, etc.

RECRUITS ON PROBATION.

During the last few weeks there have been no less than 11 recruits to the Troop. These boys are now on their month of probation, one being ready for his tests this evening, and should they prove themselves worthy by their conduct and efficiency, they will be admitted by the Court of Honour and Invested; then they will be registered as Boy Scouts. At last week's meeting we had 30 out and the games and instruction were thoroughly enjoyed Each of the new boys has been allotted to a Scout for the learning of his Tenderfoot tests. This is one of the qualifications for a First Class Scout: to bring in a recruit and teach him his Tenderfoot.

There is still room for two or three more boys in the Troop before we are up to the limit, so if any youngsters want to become Boy Scouts they will have to hurry up. The minimum age is 12 years and the cost is practically nothing; no more than the average boy can save out of his odd pennies. If you want to join up, ask one of the Scouts to bring you up to the meeting.

A National Boy Scouts Association of China has been formed under the auspices of the Chinese Government.

The latest world Scout census reports show 2,472.014 Scouts and leaders in 37 countries. (The British Empire counted as one.)

* * * *

It is significant that "dictator" nations are the only countries which have dropped Scouting — Germany, Italy, Russia and Albania.

GERMANY AND BOY SCOUTS.

Before the coming of Hitler and Nazism to Germany there were several German Scout associations, but none recognized by the Boy Scouts International Bureau as representative of the whole of Germany. Five organizations had come into a loose federation when the whole movement was banned by the Nazi Government. At present the only youth movement permitted is the Hitler Jugend, the junior branch of the Nazi party.

* * * *

ITALY AND THE BOY SCOUTS.

Prior to the Facist regime, there were 40,000 Boy Scouts in Italy. As part of his plan to secure national unity, Mussolini demanded but one youth movement, the Balilla, the junior branch of the Facisti. Following discussions, the Pope acquiesced and reluctantly closed down the Italian Scout Association. Mussolini, however, is not antagonistic toward the Scout movement in other countries. Scout visitors to Italy have been received in friendly fashion and without any attempt at propaganda.

RUSSIAN BOY SCOUTS.

Shortly prior to the Russian revolution, Czar Nicholas had the textbook by Lord Baden-Powel, "Scouting for Boys," translated at his own expense into Russian to encourage the growth of Scouting in that country. The Soviet Government suppressed the movement ruthlessy. A few Scout troops tried to carry on in secret, but were gradually stamped out. The only Russian youth movement now permitted is the "Young Pioneers," membership in which is practically compulsory, and which is anti-religious, and teaches class warfare. There are a number of Russian Scout groups in other countries, composed of sons of Russian refugees.

HUGE CARIBOU HERD.

CHURCHILL, Man.—A caribou herd a half-mile wide and extending for 26 miles, rarely seen in the northland now-a-days, made good hunting for trappers here. The animals, estimated at 50,000 seldom come so far south from their Arctic home.

JOE'S HARD LUCK.

Here's a Story That is Hard to Equal for Misfortune.

IN ST. JOSEPH, Mo., jailed on a charge of theft, Joe Taylor was handed a letter from home:

"Dear Joe: Someone stole the door off your house. The cow has been poisoned and the plaster in two rooms upstairs has fallen down. A man came and said you promised him he could have 12 baskets of peaches. I gave them to him. Did you promise him? Some people are living in your other house and won't pay rent and won't get out. Someone stole the top off the stove and broke two windows. Your cross-cut saw is gone and so is that gallon of sorghum. I'd have written sooner to tell you they stole your last four chickens, but I could not find a stamp. The moths are in the clothes and two blankets. Both children have mumps. Harry says he will sign your bond if the weather fairs up."

Great Explorer: "We were slowly starving to death, but we cut up our boots and made soup of them."

Fellow Boarder (at boarding house) "S-sh-sh-sh. Not so loud. The land lady might hear you."

A DIETING HINT.

A Scot, who was somewhat shocked in discovering that his fellow workman carried his wife's false teeth in his pocket, enquired the reason, and Sandy calmly replied: "I hae a suspicion that she eats between meals."

COVERING UP SEVEN DAYS.

Probably Many a Wife Has Been Fooled With the Lodge Story.

ONE of the best stories of pardonable deception comes out of the township of Tyendinaga. A certain farmer of that township was strong on two things—lodge and drink. He drove his car into Napanee and when the police found him he was uproariously intoxicated. There was nothing for the court to do but to send this man to jail for seven days.

The farmer was well-known to the magistrate and court officials and he asked that he might use the telephone. The farmer called up his residence told his wife that an important lodge meeting had been called hurriedly in Toronto and that he had to go and wouldn't be back for a week. Then he turned and walked to the jail with his guards.

And from that day to this, that Tyendinaga housewife probably does not know that her husband spent the week in jail instead of being at a lodge meeting in Toronto.

Agriculture Due for a Boom

THE CANADIAN FARMER, who has had several poor years, due to low prices for his products, not to mention drought in some sections, is about to come into his own, if the Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, is a true prophet. Mr. Marshall made his prophecy at the annual dinner of the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair at Toronto, when he addressed representative farmers and stock raisers from all parts of Canada and the United States. One-third of the wealth of Canada, he stated, is in the hands of the agricultural interests of the country, the men and women of which have had their hard times of late. They have borne up under the discouraging factors. But a new day is dawning for them, the Minister declared. The country is coming into its own as one of the greatest agricultural lands on earth. To-day there are signs of the beginning of a period of prosperity for the farmer, which may conceivably last for five or ten years. Every province is bound to share in the progress, for each one is signally noted for the development of some branch of agriculture.

It is no idle boast that the Ontario Minister makes in the latter respect, for the products of Canadian farms have time and again taken a lead at international contests, and seed and live stock, including poultry, are being purchased abroad for sowing and breeding purposes respectively. For example, in recent months horses and dairy cattle have been shipped to England and Scotland for breeding purposes. This is a decided compliment to the Canadian farm. Apples from British Columbia a few weeks ago also took first honours at a great fruit show in Wales; and Nova Scotia apples have long been favourites on the British market. Canadian cheese likewise commands a ready sale in Britain at all times and the exports of butter are heavy. These are but a few of the recognized products of this country that are always in demand, and Canadian wheat, of course, is acknowledged to be the best in the world. The growers and breeders have been doing their part all through the hard years, and it will be but a fitting reward for their efforts if there is an expansion in sales. Hon. Mr. Marshall is convinced that a new day is dawning and that it will be a long one. It is comforting assurance that he gives.

Noted Marathoner Dies at Cornwall on Tuesday

Ernest W. Caine of Cornwall Was in 46th Year. — Competed Against Renowned Tom Longboat.

Once considered as one of Canada's greatest marathon runners, Ernest William Caine died in Cornwall on Tuesday at the age of 45. Some years ago he competed in scores of marathons and reached his peak when he ran in an exhibition race against the unbeatable Indian star, Tom Longboat. He was also a lacrosse player of considerable note.

Mr. Caine was slightly injured on November 18th, when his bicycle collided with an automobile. He was taken to a Cornwall hospital but was discharged the same day. He returned to the hospital on Wednesday and died Tuesday. He had not been in good health for some time. Mr. Caine was a native of Toronto, but had lived here 35 years. He was in partnership with a brother, Edward C. Caine in an ice distributing business.

30,000-Foot Leap Planned By Daring Young Woman

Alice Gibson, 26-year-old Parachute Jumper, Hopes to Leave Airplane in the Stratoshpere.

New York.—The idea of whiling away the time during a nearly 30,000-foot leap from an airplane may have no general appeal, but that is what Alice Gibson, 26-year-old parachute jumper, intends to do. She will attempt shortly to jump from the stratosphere in an endeavour to break the world's record, and told a reporter who interviewed her at the Vanderbilt Hotel that she would take a sandwich with her to occupy the first few moments after she pulls the rip-cord of her parachute.

Her sandwich-eating will have to be done in a hurry, as she has other things to occupy her during her descent to earth. She will have to do some quick thinking while she leaps, for the Army, the Navy and New York University want her to answer a set of 25 questions concerning her mental and physical reactions.

Just at the moment Miss Gibson is feeling grateful for the bad weather which has postponed her trip. It had not occurred to her that at a height of 30,000 feet the strings of her parachute might freeze and consequently refuse to work. She was ready to make the leap last week and, annoyed at the delay, went to Washington to fill in the time. There Capt. A. W. Stevens, of the Aviation department, advised her that she had better look before she leapt, and get something better than strings to pull open her parachute. Now she has an arrangement of springs to do this and the inside of the parachute will be sprinkled with a powder in the interests of prompt opening.

Miss Gibson started jumping at the age of 15. When she grew up she tried to keep her feet on the ground and studied nursing. But she soon gave that up because it was not exciting enough.

She will carry an oxygen tank of new design, also an altimeter and a stop-watch.

The leap will take place above Times Square some time between now and Christmas. She expects to drift a considerable distance, and will be provided with life-preservers in case she lands in the sea. The coastguard cutters will watch for her. Clyde Pangborn will take her up in his Burneli plane.

NINE RULES FOR DRIVING.

Fredericton Daily Gleaner.

A MOTORIST who has driven an automobile for 34 years and has never had an accident, submits what he describes as "simple rules, which, if followed all the time, will, in my opinion, prevent 90 per cent of the road accidents." They are simple rules. Most drivers know them, but not all drivers apply them. They may be summarized as follows:

Always drive on the right hand side of the road.

Go slow on curves.

When going up hill on high, cut off and float over the crest ready for a quick stop.

Never cut out of line to pass a car unless you are sure of ample room.

Never pass on a hill or a curve.

Slow down for side roads and cross roads.

Never turn your head while driving.

Let the other passengers enjoy the landscape.

Slow down as it gets dark and keep below 30 miles an hour after dark.

"Your fiance is a charming man; he has a certain something."

"Yes, but I would rather he had something certain."

A coloured man was arrested after government agents had discovered a still on his premises and was brought before a United States commissioner.

"What do you plead?" asked the commissioner.

"I pleads guilty and waives the hearin'," the culprit said.

"What do you mean, 'waive the hearing?'" asked the commissioner.

"I means I don't want to hear no mo' 'bout it."

Necessary to Park Carefully When Visiting in Montreal

Out-of Town Visitor Finds New-Born Baby in Back Seat of Car After Spending Time With Friends.

Ulric Jette, of Crabtree Mills, Que., who arrived in Montreal on Tuesday night, was officially welcomed by an unexpected passenger that he found sleeping in the rear seat of his car which he parked in the north end of the city at 11.45 p.m. that night. The passenger—a new-born baby boy in good health—was wrapped in warm clothes and smiled when Jette picked him up.

Taking the "passenger" to the St Dominique street police station, Ulric Jette reported to Sergeant Boisjoly that he parked his car opposite 6661 deChateaubriand avenue while he visited some friends. When he returned to his car he saw the bundled baby in the rear seat. Police examined the child's clothing and found a note which read: "This baby was born in a poor room. Please take good care of it. It was signed "Ida."

The child, which was the second to be found in an automobile in the same district during the past week, was handed to the police matron.

COLD AIR.

IT was in the middle of the last century that the fear of vapours arising from marshes and bad drains reached its height. At that time, noxious vapours seemed to offer the most reasonable explanation for the otherwise inexplicable epidemics of diphtheria, typhoid fever and malaria and other diseases.

Later, came a real dread of night air, as the vapours and gases seemed to be even more deadly at night than in the daytime. And we are not yet rid of this false idea if one may judge from the way some windows are kept closed at night.

People still remain indoors for fear of catching cold or becoming chilled. The chill which often marks the onset of a cold is not due to cold air or to exposure of the body; the chilly feeling which precedes the fever has nothing to do with going out of doors.

Weak people used to be told to stay in at night and to sit in crowds so that, by breathing in the breath exhaled by strong persons they might gain some of the strength of these individuals.

To-day, we recognize the value of fresh air. We know that there is no danger in sewer gas or night air. Night air is just as good as day air. Vapours from marshes are to be avoided only if they bring those mosquitoes which spread malaria and yellow fever.

Fresh air, particularly out-of-door air, is good for us. It dilutes the droplets of infection (secretions from the mouth and nose), which are coughed into it by those with colds and other communicable diseases. When we live crowded together, there is much greater opportunity for the passage of disease from one person to another by droplet infection.

Cool air is stimulating; it increases the metabolism of the body and so more food is used up. Those who want to reduce should exercise in the cool open air. Cool air also stimulates the flow of blood in the membranes lining the nose and other parts of the respiratory tract touched by the air inhaled. This promotes a flow of the secretions with their protective values.

To sit in warm stagnant air is to bank down the fires of life, and will likely lead to a loss of appetite, to poor digestion and faulty elimination. It is generally true that better health is enjoyed by those who spend part of each day in some open-air activity, even if this is only walking out of doors, as long as the body is not chilled by exposure to cold. You need never be afraid of cold air. Wear just enough clothing to be comfortable at what you are doing, in or out of doors whatever the temperature may be at the time. Each one has to decide his clothing needs for himself.

An irate woman said to the grocer: "Those eggs you sent up to my house last week weren't very nice."

"I'm sorry, madam," said the grocer. "In fact, I'm surprised. Those eggs were graded."

"Graded," said the customer, contemptuously. "Well, mine were degraded."

Mix sugar, salt and cornstarch. Add boiling water slowly. Cook until there is no taste of raw starch. Remove from heat, add butter and vanilla.

? ? THE ? ? QUESTION BOX

Question—Almost every time I make a custard sauce it curdles, although I stir it almost all the time. Can you tell me what I can do to prevent the curdling?

M.R.B., Grantley.

Answer—Stirring a custard will help to prevent curdling, but there are a number of other things you can do also. First of all, be certain the milk you use is fresh and sweet. Secondly, do not cook over too hot a fire, and, of course, always use a double boiler for making custard sauce. Have the lower part about one-third full of water and do not let this water boil too vigourously. Never have the water touching the top part of the boiler as this will raise the temperature of the sauce and cause it to curdle more readily.

If, in spite of all precautions, your sauce does curdle, remove it at once from the heat. Place your pan in a dish of cold water and beat the sauce vigourously with a dover beater. In this way the sauce is made smooth again. Continue cooking at a lower temperature.

I hope I have answered your question and do not hesitate to write me of your cooking troubles. I assure you everyone who cooks has plenty of them.

—HELEN LACEY.

"Henry, dear," remarked the invalid's wife, "I'll have to run away for an hour or so. I've got the material for a new dress for the dressmaker."

"But," complained the patient, "do you think it right to be thinking of dress while I'm so ill?"

"Henry, it will be all right, whatever happens; it's a black dress!"

The doctor was dismissing his maid and told her: "I'm sorry, Jane—but I can only truthfully say in your reference that you are not at all fond of work!"

"Well, sir," Jane requested, hopefully, "do yer think yer could find a Latin name for it?"

Pensive Girl (dreamily): "I wonder where those clouds are going?"

Her Brutal Brother: "They are going to thunder!"

The Fighting Pinto

ONE of the old residents of Santa Barbara is a retired mining man; his name does not matter. He tells the following story of a fracas that he had when riding with treasure in the early days of California.

When I rode into Santa Barbara one day there was a fellow we called Jack Dunbar having some fun with a horse. Or rather Jack's horse was having some fun with one of Jack's friends. The horse was a fine, rangy pinto; he was as black as a raven and had white spots on him the size of your hat. Jack would lope the pinto down the street, and Jack's friend, a big "vaguero" by the name of Tony Cota would jump out in front of him and spread-eagle his arms. Pinto would lay back his ears, bare his teeth and charge after Tony. He acted just like a rat-catching dog. Jack would give Pinto his head, and everybody would laugh and whoop as they watched Tony spring for the nearest open doorway.

I decided to have that horse. I needed him in my business. I was superintendent at the La Osa mine at that time, and every fortnight I had to ride to Santa Barbara with a bar of bullion. The bandits were bad in those days, and riding with treasure was risky.

After the boys had got through with their fooling I went over to the hitching rack. "What's the matter with that pinto anyway?" I said to Jack.

"He's a trained horse," was the reply.

"He's got a bad head and a mean eye," I said.

"That horse?" scoffed Jack indignantly. "Why, he's a pet! He's a lady's horse. He's a trained horse, I tell you. Old Ramon Ortiga up on the Santa Ynez River broke him to fight that way. He kept him for his daughter to ride, savvy? Pinto was her horse and dog both."

"How did Ramon train him?" I asked.

"When Pinto was a colt," said Jack. "Ramon noticed that he would chase chickens, goats, dogs or anything else that would run from him out of the corral. Then Ramon's boy got to teasing him and pretty soon Pinto got so he would chase boys. There was an Indian on the ranch that was afraid of horses—couldn't go near a horse without getting kicked or bit; it seemed horses just naturally hate him. When Ramon broke Pinto he got that Indian to jump out in the trail in front, make a bluff at grabbing at the bit and then run like a whitehead when Pinto nipped at him. As soon as Pinto got the idea—and it didn't take him long—he would run that Indian ragged."

"What if a fellow wouldn't run?"

"He'd get his head busted or his arm chewed off," declared Jack emphatically. "Because that animal will fight like a human being with his teeth and forefeet. But at the same time he's easy to handle. Ramon's daughter rode him till she married and moved down to Mexico City."

Jack made me pay a hundred dollars for that horse. In those days that was a terrific price; I told Jack at the time that he was a highbinder. But Pinto was worth the money. I found it out a couple of months later.

I used to leave the mine in the evening as soon as it got dark and aim to ride the fifty miles to Santa Barbara through the mountains before daylight the next morning. Up to the time I bought Pinto there had been a couple of attempts to hold me up, but so far I hadn't got hurt or lost any bullion. I could "fan" a six-shooter with any of them in those days, and I would jump my horse straight at anything that made a stir in the brush. My idea was to bluff them out and to rattle their aim. But I figured that I might get the worst of it some day, in which case Pinto, being "horse and dog both," as Jack had said, might prove valuable.

I had made several trips on Pinto He was likely to make a dive at anyone, especially a person carrying a gun. I learned that the old Mexican horse-breaker had had his Indian assistant tease Pinto with a club and also with gun and revolver fire, using blank cartridges.

One dark night in January, MacDonald, the mine owner, started me out on another trip with treasure. It was raining, as it had been for several days. That was just the kind of night the boss always chose, but for once I remonstrated.

"Good weather, boy!" old MacDonald exclaimed. "Fine weather! Every bandit in this part of the world is within ten feet of a saloon stove."

"Do you hear that creek?" said I. The creek was booming, and I should have to cross it a dozen times.

"That's right, boy," agreed MacDonald. "And by to-morrow night all the creeks will be so bad that nobody can cross 'em. Sure! You're dead right, boy!"

That was MacDonald's way; he could argue with you and make you think you were agreeing with him.

I made the first twenty-five miles without too much trouble. The crossings were pretty bad, but Pinto was an excellent water horse. It was still raining, but I had on a good slicker and the best hat that money could buy, so I was warm and dry. Five miles above Pete's Place I thought I heard the click of hoofs on the road ahead of me. I didn't like that, because down in Chimney Canyon five miles below Pete's Place there had been two attempts to hold me up.

Pete's Place was a shack alongside the road where Pete Gonzalez sold a few canned goods and a lot of bad whiskey. Sometimes they called it Pete's Place, and sometimes Pete's Deadfall. Pete had lost a ranch half the size of Rhode Island,—one of those old Spanish grants,—playing poker with sure-thing Yankee gamblers. So Pete didn't like the Americanos very well. He had married a young Spanish girl from one of the old Santa Barbara families and was said to treat her badly.

That night when I passed Pete's Place all was dark and quiet. Usually there was a card game going on that would last till daylight. Three months before when Pete's place was dark while I was passing some one had taken a shot at me from the bush down in Chimney Canyon.

I was on the qui vive as I rode on. "All these hold-up men," I said to myself, "know that Mac sends me through on the darkest, meanest nights. So whenever there's an extra bad night they all come out along the road and lay for me." It was still raining, but to the north the clouds were breaking away. I hoped there wouldn't be any moon for a while. I didn't care how dark it was until I got through Chimney Canyon.

I was going down a grade that was cut out along an adobe hill when suddenly I thought I heard something on the road out ahead. I reined Pinto in and listened. Above the roar of the creek and the drumming of the rain I coud hear a rapid sqush, sqush, sqush — something walking fast, almost running, in the mud. I didn't have much stomach for trouble that night; but it was my policy to make the other fellow think he was scared and I wasn't. So I jerked my six-shooter and spurred ahead.

Pinto made a great splash charging down that gumbo hill. Suddenly looming up just ahead I could make out some one running. Then whoever it was fell headlong, and I heard a wild, scared scream, the scream of a woman. I brought Pinto up in three hops.

"Hello!" I called. "What's the matter out there?"

"Oh! Pete! Pete! I thought it was Pete!" I recognized the voice; it was Senora Gonzalez's. She spoke good English.

"What are you doing out here, Senora?" I asked.

She was panting so that she could hardly talk. "Oh," she said, "I'm afraid of Pete."

"Well, you needn't be," said I.

I swung down from Pinto, helped her out of the mud and got her story. She had endured it for days and days, listening to the rain on the roof, dreading what Pete would do to her. He was good to her when he wasn't drinking. but that wasn't much of the time. Then when for the first time in weeks Pete left her in the house alone she started back to Santa Barbara. Twice before she had tried to go to her mother's home, but each time Pete had brought her back. She was afraid of the night and the storm and the creeks, but still more afraid to stay at Pete's Place with Pete.

"When did he leave the house?" I asked.

"I don't know. I woke up and found him gone. He had turned all the horses out of the corral, so I started out on foot!"

Here was a pretty kettle of fish! I felt sure that Pete and no telling how many more were "laying for me" down in the canyon. I had Pete's wife on my hands and also MacDonald's bullion, worth two thousand dollars. Mac had about as much sentiment as a turtle, and I knew he would blow up at the bare idea of my losing one minute over Mrs. Pete Gonzalez's family troubles. However, in spite of that and similar weak-kneed. human cogitations I urged the senora to let me take her back to a ranch ten miles above Pete's Place. But she wouldn't listen to the proposal. She was going home. She was shivering and soaking wet. So there was nothing else for it; I persuaded her to put my slicker on; then I helped her up into my saddle and started for Santa Barbara, leading Pinto. I led him down grade about two miles. There was a flat down there with clumps of brush and oak trees on it.

I was as wet as a rat by that time and was expecting to be jumped by bandits any minute. When I heard a horse fluttering its nose out ahead I thought it was the bandits sure, but it turned out to be a dozen range horses standing in the lee of a bunch of brush with their tails to the driving rain. "Here's a chance to get another mount," I thought.

I took my reata, sneaked up and made a cast at a white horse. I got him and took a turn around a scrub oak. He was a mighty lively mustang; he couldn't have made a worse fuss if he had been harpooned. I thought I had roped a bronc horse or an outlaw, because a Mexican broke horse seldom runs on a rope when he is lassoed. But Mrs. Gonzalez said she thought it was one of Pete's horses. If so, it was a reined horse, but he might buck a little, for he had not been ridden for months. I told the senora I should have to put my saddle on the white, as I didn't want to risk being thrown.

I made a hackamore for the mustang out of my reata. Finally after splashing around in the mud for nearly half an hour I managed to get my saddle on him.

I took one of my saddle blankets, cinched it on to Pinto with my tie rope and helped the senora to mount him. As I handed her the reins I asked, "How fast can you ride with this kind of a rig?"

"Ask the horse how fast he can run," replied Pete's wife. She had the reputation of being a fine rider.

"The reason I ask is that I want to get out of Chimney Canyon before the moon rises. I'm expecting a holdup, and I want to make it fast through the thickets. Better let me take you back up to Baker's Ranch hadn't you?"

"No! No! No!" cried the senora "I am going home!',

Being kind of weak-minded when it comes to arguing with ladies, I decided to let the senora have her way. So we started out. It had quit raining, and the wind had whipped round to the north. I knew how one of those California northers can wipe the clouds out of a sky, so I was expecting moonlight in Chimney Canyon unless I got there mighty soon.

When we had ridden five miles we came to the last and worst crossing; but once we got across the creek the road would take us up out of Chimney Canyon. By that time the north wind had whipped the storm from the skies, and it was bright moonlight. The creek was booming. Above the roar you could hear the small boulders knocking and grinding as they were washed along downstream. That crossing looked mighty bad to me, but what worried me worse was the chance of an attack. I was just as sure of a holdup that morning as I was of an appetite for breakfast—if I lived to eat it.

Without pausing a moment on the bank of the creek I headed straight on in. But here the white mustang failed me He was afraid of the water. Every time he got in up to his knees he would whirl back in spite of me. "I guess I'll have to ride ahead on Pinto," I said to the senora. "The white probably won't buck with you after he's been ridden a few miles. Keep his nose close to Pinto's tail, and I think he'll follow all right."

When it came to changing mounts I had some violent qualms about separating from the bullion, which was in a canvas sack tied securely to the horn of my saddle. But I couldn't fasten the sack on a barebacked horse, and I didn't want to take the saddle away from the senora, because the white mustang was still acting snorty, besides being afraid of the water. It was a pretty kettle of fish, as Mac was so fond of saying; but what else could I do?"

I climbed on Pinto, wedged my knees underneath the rope surcingle and gave him his head. Pinto plunged fearlessly into the stream. When we were halfway across I saw that he was getting in too deep. But I could not turn around without being washed over. The senora's white was following close behind He was a much heavier animal than Pinto and was now acting as steady as a clock.

I was anxious enough over Pinto's progress, but all the same I was keeping a sharp lookout on the thickets. Suddenly I saw a movement in the dense chaparral on the opposite shore; a clump of greasewood was quivering as if someone had bumped against it. I instantly whipped out my revolver and plunked a shot in there. In immediate response two revolvers began spitting fire at me.

The senora, thinking they were shooting at her, began screaming wildly. I heard some one in the brush yell excitedly in Spanish, "Look out! Don't hit the woman" It was Pete Gonzalez; I knew his voice.

I realized now that when I had spied the brush move the bandits were changing their position so that they could shoot without hitting the senora and that her being directly behind me was all that had saved me from being shot down.

Immediately upon firing into the brush I had flung myself down alongside Pinto's neck, but even as I made the move one bullet knocked my hat off, and another burned the fleshy covering of my ribs. I was raising my revolver to return the bandit's fire when Pinto began to scramble frantically for a foothold. Then—souse! Down we went into the cold water. Either Pinto had stepped on a rolling stone, or else my quick movements had helped to force him over. I can't swim, so I grabbed the surcingle and hung on for better or for worse.

It seemed as if I were soused and bumped round in that creek for a long time, though it couldn't have been more than a few minutes. Then of a sudden I felt my head being jammed into the foliage of a tree. Pinto had lodged against a fallen live oak that had caught on a snag in midstream. I was still a-straddle of him and had a death grip on the surcingle. As I sat there blinking the water out of my eyes Pinto made a lunge forward. He was heading on across the stream. He managed to keep his feet somehow.

I saw now that I was only about twentyfive yards below the crossing. The senora's white mustang had passed through the worst of the crossing and was ploughing steadily on toward shore. The bright moonlight showed the poor lady sitting in the saddle rigidly like a statue, too terrified apparently to make the least movement.

The bandits were not in sight, but the whipping of the chaparral tops told me that they were forcing their way through the thicket toward the road. A little later as Pinto was wading into a flooded thicket that fringed the creek bed Pete Gonzalez, closely followed by another Mexican, whom I recognized as José Morales, emerged from the brush. Both had big nickel-plated revolvers. They made a brave show in the bright moonlight but I knew that those guns seldom shot very straight.

The senora was just making the shore, and Pete sprang forward and grabbed her mount by the hackamore. I coudn't hear what the senora said, but I saw that she was terribly frightened.

I thought Pete hadn't seen me, but the next thing I knew he was swinging the muzzle of that big nickel-plate gun in my direction. I ducked my head down out of sight among the water moodies. Bang went Pete's gun and I heard the bullet skittering along through the twigs above me.

Up to that moment, being wet and cold, I had been feeling anything but warlike. But that move of Pete's, trying to shoot me when he already had Mac's gold, made me mad through and through. Still leaning low, I jumped Pinto straight toward him.

The water was running about six inches deep down through the scattering growth of water-moodies, and Pinto made a great splashing and flurry of bushes as he went lunging upstream. I knew that the bandits could get only an occasional glimpse of me as I charged toward them; and hoping that they would get excited and empty their revolvers at me before I got into the moonlight, I began to yell like a crazy Comanche Indian Sure enough both bandits began banging away, firing almost at random in my direction. Pete must have emptied one revolver before he saw me at all; then glimpsing me as I splashed across a small open space, he opened with the other. Pete's partner, although I didn't know it then, turned and ran as soon as he had emptied his first six-shooter.

I had dropped the revolver that I was holding when Pinto had lost his footing on the crossing. Now as I charged toward Pete I drew my second revolver out of its holster. But I immediately found that the lock was jammed. It had been washed so full of fine sand that I couldn't even cock it. I was struggling desperately with the thing, hoping every instant to get it cleared, when Pinto dashed out into the open. Directly ahead of me and less than thirty feet away was Pete Gonzalez. He was standing in the roadway holding his wife's horse with one hand and in the other a smoking revolver. He was trying to blaze away at me, but his gun, being empty, wouldn't blaze. All of a sudden he realized that he was pulling the trigger for nothing, and he slammed the revolver down on the ground and jerked forth a long knife.

That knife of Pete's, flashing silver-like in the moonlight, looked mighty long and sharp to me The truth is I always was deathly afraid of being cut, and the sight of that glittering blade scared the wits completely out of me. I tried to draw rein on Pinto, but he was stiff-necked. I saw then that his teeth were bared and his mouth wide open. He had the look of a horse that bites. In that moment Jack Dunbar's phrase flashed across my mind, "He's horse and dog both."

All that happened in the few seconds that Pinto was closing the gap between us and Pete. My eyes were glued to that knife of Pete's. I could have slipped off Pinto, but was too scared even to think of it. But when we were almost on top of him, Pete made a move that steadied me—a quick, balancing side swing with his knife and an appraising glance at Pinto's throat. I knew that one slash of that sharp edge would sever Pinto's windpipe; and determination blazed up in me like a flash of lightning. "He shall not cut my horse!" I said.

In that instant I knew just what to do. I still held the useless revolver. As Pinto lunged at Pete I reversed it, so I could grip it by the barrel. For just a fraction of a second I waited giving Pinto his head. Pete was standing there, all set to side-step Pinto's charge and give him a swift slash in passing. when I hurled my gun. I aimed it straight at Pete's face. Pete saw it coming and dodged, but the next moment Pinto pinned him.

I hope never to hear a living creature cry out as Pete did when Pinto's teeth crunched down on his shoulder. Then instantly, dodging back and rearing, Pinto struck out with his forefeet. Pete dropped like a log. I want to quit, but I jerked him back. instantly reined Pinto in. He didn't Jack Dunbar was right; Pinto was dog and horse both.

When it was over, Pete was lying there like a dead man. The other bandit was nowhere in sight. Thinking that he might take a shot at me from the brush, I called out in Spanish, "Don't shoot; you'll hit Pete!" But Morales was not seen again in that part of the country.

I put Pete on Pinto and packed him to a ranch about a mile away. The senora, looking down from the grade above, saw what I was doing and came back and helped me. She nursed Pete for six months. On account of the senora, who pleaded for her husband, I didn't prefer charges against him.

That experience did something for Pete. He got hold of himself. When he recovered he and the senora went to Los Angeles and started a restaurant. They stayed with it and did well. So it was a lucky thing for Pete that the mount I rode was horse and dog both.

'SALADA' TEA

WOMEN OF FORTY . . . AND OVER.

By Janet Jameson.

TO every woman who has been busy around a home until she has passed her fortieth birthday there comes a day when her duties grow less and for the first time in her life she has spare hours. She has never been a member of any clubs; there was always too much to do, and if a kind friend takes her to one, she feels rather a misfit. She isn't up on current events, and she doesn't know who's who in musical circles. Miserably she wishes she had stayed at home.

Then there is the great soul who has spent years nursing an invalid. Release comes, but it does not bring happiness to the sweet-faced, middle-aged woman. Her hands are empty, her days dreary. In a darkened room she sits and weeps for the yoke she bore so long.

My fortieth birthday came and went without causing me a pang. I was busy with my family and content with life. One day the youngest, with the callousness of youth, informed me that the "kids" would be much more comfortable if I would go out somewhere on the nights he had them in. With a feeling of hurt bewilderment I realized that my family had outgrown their urgent need of me. I was being shelved with the other forty-and-overs.

It happened on the street car. I sat down beside an elderly woman, whose chin was quivering ominously. I feared she might not have a ticket, and the conductor did look cross. I asked if I could help, but she shook her head. Then, evidently feeling the need of a confidant, she told me the trouble. She lived with her son and his wife; the girl was the acme of modern efficiency; "she doesn't want me muddling about her kitchen." What a tragedy! And yet the story had its use. I had a little extra money. My new friend is a good knitter (which I am not). Result! Four pairs of mittens for little hands that otherwise might be cold this winter, and two forty-and-overs taken off the shelf.

"Who Will Drive This Car Away For $50.00?"

read a sign in a window of a used-car dealer. A man stopped at the window, read the sign, and after some thought entered the store.

"I will take a chance," he offered. "Where's the money?"

Boxer: "Isn't it a long walk from the dressing room to the ring?"

Opponent: "Yes, but you won't have to walk back."

It was an ideal day for golf. The members had turned up in large numbers at the club. Thompson had turned up among them. "Hallo! I thought you said you wouldn't be able to turn up to-day?" said one of his friends.

"It was a near thing, my boy," he replied. "I tossed up to see whether I should take the wife out or come here, and, believe me, it took five spins before it would come right."

A MOTORIST'S SUGGESTION.

Bright Colours in Clothing Would Safeguard Scholars at Dusk.

A Chesterville motorist suggested in our hearing this week that it would add much to the safety of driving on country roads between the hours of four and five o'clock these dark days, when children are returning from country schools to their homes, if each wore some bright coloured article of clothing, to bring them out distinctly from the dull surroundings at this time of year. At the hours mentioned the headlights of cars do not give their most efficient service and the little folks are sometimes hard to see.
