HENRY'S Shorthand School
Ottawa, Ont.

No School in Canada offers a better training, or ensures a more successful future. Henry's leads all others, and ranks among employers as "THE SCHOOL OF HIGHER EFFICIENCY"—a fact borne out by more than 600 pupils who have, since January, 1913, left other Ottawa schools to come to it.

Therefore, it is not surprising that business men, in advertising for stenographers, should specially say, "Graduates of Henry's School preferred."

Child Hurt in Auto Accident

The little son of Mr. Jack Price received cuts on the face from shattered glass which required the attention of a doctor and several stitches to close, while accompanying his father in a Ford sedan which was in collision with a Buick driven by Hiss Helen Hamilton at the corner of Hummel and Main streets Saturday evening about six o'clock. Neither car was badly damaged.

Coat Sweaters Presented To Junior Hockeyists

Saturday last at a reorganization meeting of the Junior Hockey club for next season all the members of last year's team were presented with handsome coat sweaters as gifts from admirers among the citizens of Chesterville of the gallant and successful fight they waged last year in winning the league championship, under severe handicap. The president of the club, Mr. David Allison, in making the presentation on behalf of the supporters, complimented the boys on the fine sportsmanship they had shown throughout the season as well as on the winning hockey they had played. He said he was very proud to be connected with such a fine bunch of manly young fellows and predicted greater success for them next season.

Mr. Jack McAvoy, captain of the team replied in a very gracious manner, thanking the president and supporters for their interest in them and for the handsome sweaters. Prospects looked good for next season and it would be the endeavour of the players to give their best at all times.

President—D. Allison
Vice Pres.—Thos. Flynn.
Sec.-Treas.—Arnold Lynch
Coach—Ralph Hummel
Asst. Coach—Alf. Jarvis
Manager—B. C. Pankratz
League Reps.—Eric Casselman and P. Boyd.

Bowling Greens Open

The greens of the Chesterville Bowling Club are now in condition for use by the members of the club in anticipation of the annual open tournament which will be held on Tuesday, Jue 3rd, King's Birthday. The Chesterville club's tournament has always proved one of the most successful in Eastern Ontario, being the first of the season it is looked upon as the real official opening and attracts entries from practically all the clubs of the district.

Last season the local club enjoyed a most successful year and it is expected to have a large membership this year. Any one in town or vicinity who would like to become a member will be heartily welcomed at the greens, and if never having bowled will be given every assistance to enjoy the sport. There are always many bowls not in use which makes it unnecessary for beginners to purchase bowls until they may become enthused with the game and desire to own their own.

Miss Beatrice Merkley, supervisor of the Bell Telephone Company, Cornwall, for the past two years, is home on sick leave.

Valuable Cows Killed

Ten valuable milch cows from the herd of Mr. Jas. Robinson, Riverside, were instantly killed on Tuesday of last week when the eastbound local C. N. R. train, travelling about thirty minutes late, ran into the herd as they were crossing the tracks. The loss, estimated at $1,000 is the most seriou from this source to farmers in many years.

Hubert Dixon Rescues Little Lad From River

Yesterday afternoon the prompt action of Hubert Dixon, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Dixon, probably averted the drowning of Hubert Stata in the Nation river in town. Several youngsters were playing with boards at the edge of the river near the dump and while Hubert Stata was standing on a couple of boards nailed together they were shoved out into the current with the little lad helpless on them. The crying of the Stata child attracted the attention of Hubert Dixon who, appreciating the danger the boy was in as he passed over the dam without mishap and was quickly approaching the rapids below the bridge, stripped his outer clothing and plunged into the cold waters in his underwear, swam to the boy and brought him safely to shore. Hubert Dixon is a member of Chesterville First Troop of Boy Scouts.

Miss Jamieson Honored

A special service was held in St. Andrew's Church on Sunday evening, May 18th, when Mrs. Jas. Riddell, of Spencerville, President of Brockville Presbyterial, and Mr. Fulford were in charge of the service.

The front of the church was banked with wild flowers, apple blossoms, and potted plants, also the windows and every available place. The interior was most attractive and spring-like.

Besides Mrs. Riddell there were other Presbyterial officers present: Mrs. Johnston, Sectional President; Mrs. Coulthart, Welcome and Welfare Secretary; Mrs. Robinson, Finance Secretary; Miss Carlyle, Home Helpers Sec.; and Miss Jamieson, is also the Life Membership Secretary.

Mr. Fulford took the first part of the service after which Miss Jamieson was invited to the platform where Mrs. Johnston was waiting to read an address which was overflowing with love and adoration from her nephew and nieces. May 18th being Miss Jamieson's birthday, they were presenting her with a Life Membership certificate of the Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Coulthart, of Morewood, presented the certificate and Mr. Fulford pronounced the dedicatory prayer. The certificate was presented by Harold Jamieson, Toronto; Bessie Shaver, London; Flora Jamieson, Toronto; Winnifred Shaver, Montreal; Ruby and Pearl Jamieson, Saskatchewan; Ruth Jamieson, Montreal, and Joyce Jamieson, Saskatchewan.

Miss Jamieson said she loved these children. She was proud of them and thanked them. She had always tried to give them her best and the birthday gift of this certificate proved their appreciation.

Mrs. Riddell, before commencing address most profusely complimented Miss Jamieson in her opening remarks. Mrs. Riddell's address was an inspiration to all who had availed themelves of the privilege of coming out to hear her. It was most instructive and educational and helpful to one in the everyday trials and duties. To live with Christ on the mountain top is easy, but to serve Him in the valley we must take up our cross and follow Him.

Mrs. Riddell, as President of the Presbyterial, enjoys the love and confidence of all the auxiliaries. Officers and members of Winchester, Morewood, Winchester Springs, and Dunbar auxiliaries were present to help commemorate the presentation of the Life Certificate to the President of the Chesterville auxiliary.

The favorite hyms of the president of St. Andrews were rendered by the choir and Mission Band.

Mr. Fulford moved a vote of thanks to all visiting auxiliaries, Presbyterial President and officers and all others who helped to make the evening such a success. This profitable service was brought to a close by Mr. Fulford pronouncing the benediction.

Chesterville United W.M.S.

The regular meeting of the W.M.S. was held in the S. S. Hall with the president, Miss Merkley, presiding. The meeting was opened with a hymn followed with prayer by Miss Merkley. Strangers' Secretary reported twenty-three social calls, fourteen sick calls and treats sent to three.

Mrs. Tate, the delegate to Morrisburg, gave a very fine report.

A devotional leaflet, "His Witness," was given by Mrs. I. Cross.

The first part of the study chapter was taken by Mrs. C. Graham, and the second part by Miss Merkley.

There were twenty-six members present. The meeting closed in

Wrist Accidentally Broken

Saturday afternoon as Mrs. Wesley Cross was walking from her home to the village along the railway she stepped from near the rails to allow an approaching train to pass and when resuming her walk tripped and fell heavily on the rail, sustaining a fracture of one of her wrists. She was assisted to Mrs. John Munro's and afterwards to Dr. Casselman's office where the fracture was reduced.

July 28th Likely Date For Federal Election

A rush for dissolution is now evident in Parliament and, as the result of a conference between the Prime Minister and Hon. R. B. Bennett, Leader of the Opposition, it is understood that the end of this sixteenth Parliament will come on Thursday night, May 29.

If that is accomplished, it is learned, polling day in the federal election contest will be July 28, but should some unexpected obstacle be presented to dissolution, next week, the election day will be August 11. August 4 is a Civic holiday in most of the centres of Canada so that balloting could not take place on that date. The rapidity with which tariff items were passed in the House indicates a general determination on the part of the members to speed the end. Many of the members are going to their homes and only re-election will bring them back to the Capital, so that there is likely to be some difficulty in keeping enough there to make certain a quorum at all times next week when morning sittings will probably be held.

After the final disposal of the tariff items there remain about sixty per cent of the main estimates and all of the supplementary estimates to be considered. A few items in each of these will be selected and the remainder passed with little, if any, discussion. Campaign preparations are being hurried by all parties and in another ten days or two weeks the contest will commence in earnest.

News and Information For the Busy Farmer

Furnished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

An Enormous Loss.

A prominent authority has estimated that twenty-six million dollars is the price paid by farmers and poultry raisers for loss through disease in poultry flocks in Canada in the past year. Most of this loss is caused by internal parasites and much of this is preventable. A good deal of it can be avoided by keeping the young chicks away from the adult birds and on absolutely clean soil.

Campaign Against Weeds.

The provincial authorities are leaving no stone unturned in their campaign against weeds. Many of the highways have the usual prolific crops along the sides of the road. Some of the farms throughout the country have crops of weeds which will soon be ripening and spreading their seeds to the four winds. Delinquents in this respect will be given an opportunity to explain the reason for their contempt of the law as soon as the weed inspector makes his rounds.

Still Time to Plant. 4

There is still plenty of time to get in corn or roots and both crops are essential for feeding all kinds of live stock, taking the place of green grass in the ration long after the season for grass is over. Corn is planted any time after danger of frost is passed Mangels should be put in fairly early so that the seed will have the early moisture. Turnips are not planted before the second week in June and may go in until about July 10. If planted too early they are liable to become tough and less palatable feed than those which make most of their growth in early fall.

Low Producer a Liability.

The dairyman, and for that matter the owner of any class of live stock, has enough to contend with without putting up with a bunch of low producers. The burden of the low producer is felt most in time of feed scarcity and low price of dairy products. She is a liability, but yet it is rather difficult for the dairyman to make up his mind to send her to the block and take his loss. This question of keeping records of milk, cost of feed, and getting rid of poor cows has been discussed times without number, and yet many low producers continue to occupy a stall and consume as much feed as its stablemate which the records prove has returned a substantial profit over the cost of feed and labor.

Buckwheat Very Useful.

In speaking about weed control it is a good plan to put in rape or buckwheat, two crops that can go in right up to the middle of July. The first named makes a splendid sheep pasture while the latter .of course. is unexcelled as a producer of feed grain. Both can also be plowed under for enriching the soil. Buckwheat is one of the most popular crops to sow in the orchard about the first of July, controlling the weeds, and surplus moisture and furnishing splendid feed and a run for poultry and hogs.

Warm Weather Helpful.

Continued warm bright weather during the first two weeks of May did much to improve the appearance of alfalfa, clover and fall wheat, and new seeding recovered to some extent, according to reports coming in from all parts of the province. There were many crops plowed under this spring, but many farmers reported that new seeding which they had intended to plow under, made wonderful recovery during early May. Many sections reported that the land has never worked better than during the present month of seeding.

Commercial Fertilizer.

More and more fertilizer is being used in Ontario because our land has been depleted of plant foods and also because farmers are gradually learning more about the use of fertilizers. Considerable thought must be given the subject of fertilizers before the best results can be obtained. Good drainage, good tillage, good seed and good cultural methods are all necessary before fertilizers can be expected to make profitable returns. Properly used, commercial fertilizers will usually give splendid results, lower the cost of production and increase farm returns.

One Bushel Per Acre.

Speaking in Saskatchewan recently, Hon. John Bracken, Premier of Manitoba, declared that an increase of one bushel per acre, which could easily be obtained if only the most casual attention were paid to seed, would add Saskatchewan's grain crop, roughly speaking, about thirty million dollars. This does not apply to Saskatchewan alone, where perhaps more attention must be paid to the sowing of clean seed, but also to Ontario. Think of what that thirty millions of dollars would mean to Ontario's farm products this year!

Fruit Needs Moisture.

An adequate supply of moisture in the orchard is of great importance in the growing of a good crop of fruit. If the soil is low in moisture in the early part of the season, the fruit is not likely to set well. If there is a shortage of moisture during the summer and autumn the fruit will not size up well and if the soil is dry when winter sets in, the danger from root-killing is much greater, hence the importance of conserving moisture when there is any likelihood of there being a shortage. What is known as the sod-mulch system if orchard management is an excellent conserver of moisture. Grass is spread over the soil under the trees, preventing the growth of weeds and grass and saving the moisture.

Help the Alfalfa.

Ontario's alfalfa fields have experienced some hard knocks during the past twelve months. Last summer's drought permitted only sparse growth, and alternate freezing and thawing early this spring cause some serious heaving of the plants especially on the heavier oils. But hard luck has never permanently discouraged an intellectual Ontario farmer. Actual tests conducted under the direction of the O. A. C. College show how weakened fields can be helped. Six alfalfa growers in Western Ontario topdressed their alfalfa fields last summer with fertilizers high in potash and phospate and secured gains of 1360 lbs. to 8940 lbs. of green crop per acre. Of course soil must be well drained if it is to grow good alfalfa year after year and generally it should be limed (one ton to the acre) once in four years so as to keep conditions favorable for alfalf growth.

Gets Offer From Americans

Brockville.—Jack Murray, captain and goal keeper of the Brockville Magedomas, intermediate hockey champions of Eastern Ontario last season, has received an offer to join the professional ranks by way of the New Yorw Americans, but has so far reached no definite decision. Murray has been playing hockey since fourteen years of age and has guarded the Brockville nets for thirteen winters.

"Try one of these cigars. They are the finest things out."

"Thanks. How are they when they're lighted."

The Home Town Paper Is Your Paper

Even the most casual observer cannot but have noted the changes that have taken place in the make-up of newspapers, and the attempts that are being made by metropolitan newspapers to make a place for themselves in the small towns and cities.

This is natural, for the reading public of the large city dailies must be widespread if it hopes to fulfil the demands of its patrons and the ambitions of its foreign owner. Possibly the home of the owner of the city daily may be in the place of publication, but it may be hundreds, or thousands, of miles away. He may or may not have personal interests in the city where his paper is located. And therein lies the difference between the city daily and the local paper. The fact that the big city daily finds it necessary to go far afield prevents it ever becoming a local paper, and it is in the local field where the home newspaper predominates and where it finds its true usefulness.

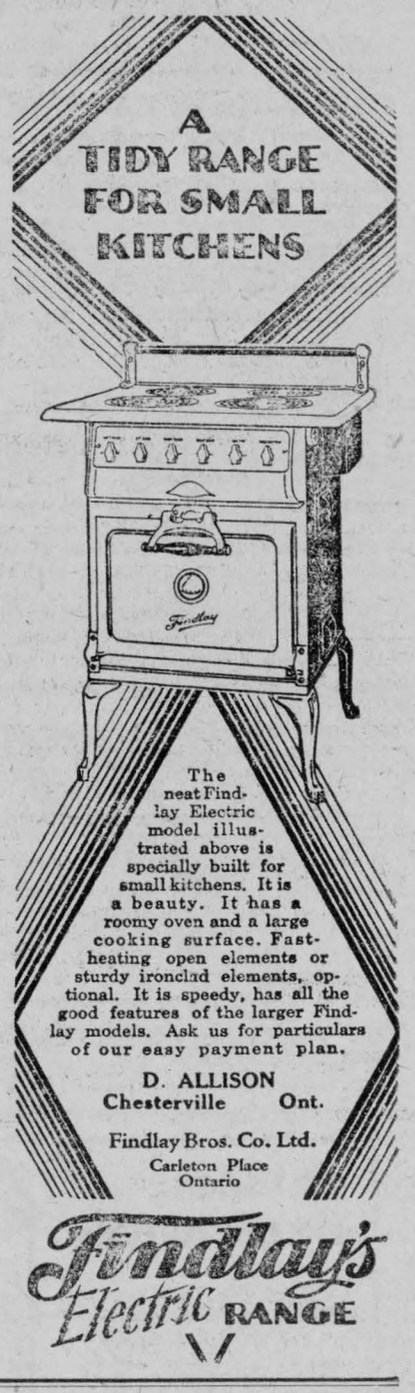

For, after all, it is the home news which is most important to most of us. We have the greatest interest in the community in which we live, and in the people who are our neighbors and friends. And it is the local newspaper which records the happenings of the folks at home, and in addition fosters the civic pride and progressive spirit of the community.

We frequently hear it said that the old time independent spirit of the newspaper is gone, that its editorial policy is now subservient to the business office. Yet this is not true. There is more unselfish idealism in the average local newspaper than in any other buiness enterprise. It frequently speaks out in the way which it believes will be for the good of the nation and the community, regardless of what the consequences may be from a business standpoint. This is more than the average business will do or can do.

Of course the local newspaper is now on a firm business basis. This is why it is improving from year to year, why it is giving its readers a constantly better newspaper, and why it is increasing its influence for the good in the community. But the local newspaper is still the principal booster for the community, and it does its boosting often without any hope of material reward.—From the Port Arthur News-Chronicle.

Cornwall Boys Missing

Search for Wesley Neron and Harold Dailey, 12-year-old Cornwall boys, who have been missing from their homes for eight days, is continuing, but had been unsuccessful up to two o'clock yesterday afternoon. The boys left their homes ostensibly for school, on May 12 and have not been seen since. Police throughout Eastern Ontario have been advised to be on the lookout for the missing lads.

Arrest at Carp Of High School Teacher

Nelson Hooper, high school teacher at Carp, living at 189 McGillvary st., Ottawa, was arrested by Chief of Police Charles P. McCarthy, Saturday, charged with assaulting Miss Kate Wilson, crippled telephone operator at Carp on March 30. Mr. Hooper, following his arrest appeared before Magistrate William Joynt and is now out on $2,000 bail. His case comes up in the County Magistrate's Police Court, next Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock.

That robbery was not the motive of the masked visitant who assaulted Miss Wilson is now clearly established. On the night in quetion she was about to close the exchange at ten o'clock when the man since alleged to be Hooper entered by the front door, a mask over his face. He said something to Miss Wilson, according to the police, upon which she fainted, creating some disturbance in the office. The intruder then fled. When Miss Wilson regained consciousness, she telephoned the village constable, Allan Garvin.

Answering the call from the exchange office, Mr. Garvin, accompanied by three other men, rushed to the scene, but the masked man had vanished through the rear door.

Since the time of the alleged assault Chief McCarthy and his staff have been incessantly working on the case and their investigations culminated Saturday in the arrest of Mr. Hooper, who vehemently protests his innocence.

May Get a Glimpse Here

Ottawa.—Arrangements for the reception at St. Hubert, Montreal, when the R-100 arrives from rBitain, were reviewed by Hon. J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence, and other officers of his department during a visit to Montreal over the week end. It is the desire of the minister to make this reception really a national one insofar as the limitations of time and space will permit. The Federal and Provincial Governments will be officially represented.

"It is expected that R-100 will make three short flights in Canada, one over Ottawa, one over Toronto and the Niagara district, and a third over Quebec and the eastern townships. The passenger accomodation on such flights is very limited, probably not more than 20 for each flight, and all that can bed one is to provide for representatives of the press, of official bodies and of those specially interested in the development of aviation."

Baffling Murder Mystery For Montreal Police

Inspector Dorais, of the Quebec Provincial Police stated Monday afternoon that he and his men are faced with what he termed a "baffling murder case" through the discovery of the body of a man on Saturday morning on a small unoccupied island on the St. Lawrence River, between the towns of Boucherville and Varennes. The body, which was cut into pieces and wrapped up in seventeen bundles, was minus the head, and the victim's identity so far remains a mystery.

Detectives Jargaille and Lasnier, of the Quebec Provincial Police, who are charged with the case, learned that the first package was picked up by A. Marcil, of 27 Ste. Anne street, Pointe-aux-Trembles, who upon opening the mysterious bundle, found that it contained a human leg. Marcil reported his find to Chief Meunier, of the Montreal East police department, who in turn turned the matter over to the Provincial Police.

Accompanied by the detectives, Marcil went back to the spot, where he had found the first package and after a search of the vicinity the detectives found sixteen other bundles scattered in all directions. These also contained parts of a human body.

The packages were taken to Dr. Wilfrid Derome, medico-legal expert, who, after examination and assembling the various pieces, came to the conclusion that the body was that of a man. Dr. Derome, accompanied by detectives, then went to the island where the find was made and a search for the head of the victim was commenced, but without success.

According to information obtained to date, it appears that the victim was shot and that his body was then dismembered in pieces of no more than 15 inches long, a saw being used for this task. The body has been almost reconstituted and one hand, which was complete was used to take fingerprints so as to establish identity of the victim if possible. It seems that the crime must have been committed since May 1 and that the body was wrapped up during the second week of the month or the beginning of the third. The body, in packages, was then taken to the island by motorboat and scattered on the shore of the island, very near the water within a radius of twenty feet. Waves, occasioned by the passage of ocean-going ships, would then have reached the packages and brought them down to the river where they were found, floating in a few inches of water. It was learned that several persons had gone to the island recently to pick up kindling wood, but the finding of the packages did not happen until Saturday.

On account of a high wind prevailing on Saturday the police officers had a hard time getting to the island and they had to go back several times before bringing all the packages to the morgue. Inspection of the ground where the body was found was made after the packages had been taken to the morgue, and it is probable that the police will again go to the island to try to locate the missing parts.

Inspector Dorais stated that the crime was probably committed in Montreal or in the vicinity.

Acting-Inspector Foucault, of the Montreal detective department and his homicide squad were asked to cooperate with the Provincial Police in solving the mystery.

Former Prescott Mayor Dead

The fueral took place in Ogdensburg yesterday of Isaac P. Wiser, aged 61, former mayor of Prescott, and for many years active in the business life of that community as president of the J. P. Wiser and Sons, Limited Distillery, who died in Washington after a brief illness while en route to his summer home among the Thousand Islands near Rockport, Ont. He was a son of the late J. P. Wiser, M. P., and was interested in various aquatic and sporting organizations in the Thousands Islands area.

Oil Worth Fortune Dissipates

Oklahoma City.—Wild Sigmon well, newest runaway gusher of the South City oil field, tossed its 100-foot plume of oil, gas and sand skyward defying crews that have laboured continuously for the past three days to curb its flow.

The runaway oil well is now flowing at a volume larger than its unruly neighbour, the famous Mary Sudik well which flowed unchecked for eleven days.

Last minute efforts to cap the giant geyser failed and crews prepared to place a larger and heavier cap over the head of the well by to-morrow.

Operations in the field, coated with grease, sand, and oil, have have been brought to a standstill. Hundreds of workers are aiding crews of the the Prairie-Slick-Phillips Company in combatting the well. Many are employed as pickets to keep visitors from approaching the danger zone.

Most of the oil that has been tossed skyward hasb een dissipated, as emergency earthen dykes have caught little. The flow is estimated in the neighbourhood of 25,000 barrels—worth approximately $1.25 a barrel at the field.

Two Ottawa Firemen Killed At Ottawa Fire

A fire captain and one of his men lost their lives when an explosion in a blazing ice-house in the west end of the capital blew out the front wall and pinned them to the ground early Monday afternoon.

Capt. Robert E. Pratt, veteran chief of No. 2 fire hall, died of injuries soon after reaching the civic hospital. He was being rushed to the operating table when he succumbed.

William Oulette, a horseman, died two hours later in the same institution. Half a dozen other fire fighters sustained minor hurts through being struck with fragments of the shattered wall.

The blaze had been brought under control and some of the fire companies were preparing to leave the scene when the blast occurred. Its cause has not been determined. Capt. Pratt and Oulette were perched on ladders, about 25 feet from the ground, the one playing water through a window onto the charred piles and the other viewing damage, when the wall gave way.

The late Capt. Pratt had seen a quarter of a century of service with the Ottawa fire department. He is survived by his wife and three sons.

Natural Mistake.

"Shall we dance, dear?" asked the husband, rising from his chair.

The Man and the Job

Why are so many young men and other persons out of employment at the present time? Are they simply indolent and regardless of the future, or are they indolent, yet with a determination to do some great thing only, and are waiting for that great thing to turn up? If the latter, they must be looking at the end instead of the beginning. They should not forget the fact that only a very few, even with a whole life of industry and economical perseverance, really accomplish any great thing. As no person comes to offer the indolent their expectations they stand and wait, and will continue to do so. The remedy, however, is in taking the first job one finds—the job will not find the individual. No matter how insignificant that job may be it will be better than continued idleness, and when you are seen doing something for yourself, by those whose opinions are worth consideration, they will soon offer you more and better jobs; until finally you will find that which agrees with your taste or your inclination for a life business. Good situations are never offered to the idle; only the industrious and persevering fellows are given the opportunity. Then when you have found a good situation or job, prove yourself honest, industrious, perservering, and faithful, and you need not fear your final success.

Keeping Accounts

Although many farmers seem to have a sort of horror of accounts, and are inclined to say: "I don't know anything about bookkeeping" or "It takes too long," still the best of farmers have always kept some sort of record of their farm operations and transactions and the practice is becoming more and more necessary as farming becomes more of a competitive business. Recent investigations by the Department of Economics of the O. A. C. show that a much larger proportion of farms are keeping accounts than is generally believed Every farmer should take the opportunity at once to secure a copy of a simple and concise book called the "Ontario Farm Account Book," specially prepared for use by the average farmer and available at 25 cents a copy by writing to the Ontario Department of Agriculture. The book provides space for entries in practically every department of farming and should be of inestimable benefit to the farmer in enabling him to keep an accurate account of his receipts and expenditures.

Varieties of Lettuce

No garden is complete without lettuce which is the basis of most salads and yet too often one depends upon a tiny row at one end of the bed which, in a few weeks, turns bitter and there is nothing to replace it. But this is not necessary. One can select two or three varieties of the leaf sort, and if planted at intervals of a week from the first day that gardening opens until well on in May or June a steady month's supply is secured. Then it is advisable to include one or two varieties of the head type. Following this, one can depend on cos lettuce, which is a heat resistant sort and will stay crisp practically all summer. The latter is much narrower than the ordinary head sort. It is self-blanching and will stay fresh and crisp for several days if sprinkled with water and stored in the refrigerator or cool cellar. All lettuce delights in rich, loamy soil, plenty of cultivation, water when necessary, nitrogen fertilizers.

A patient in an insane asylum imagined himself dead, and nothing could drive this delusion out of his brain. One day his physician had a happy thought, and said to him:

"Did you ever see a dead man bleed?"

"No," he replied.

"Do you believe that a dead man can bleed?"

"No."

"Well, if you will permit me, I will try an experiment with you and see if you bleed or not."

The patient gave his consent, the doctor whipped out his scalpel and drew a little blood. "There," he said, "you see that you bleed; that proves that you are not dead."

"Not at all," the patient instantly replied, "that only proves that dead men can bleed."

Happiness In Work

Orillia News-Letter.—An honest man is entitled to happiness in his work. It is the one sure sign that he has found his true vocation. He greets his work each day with a singing heart and loves his business. Love is the greatest thing in the world, and love for one's business is as natural as love for one's family. Indeed, love is the greater part of success in life. There can be no joy without it.

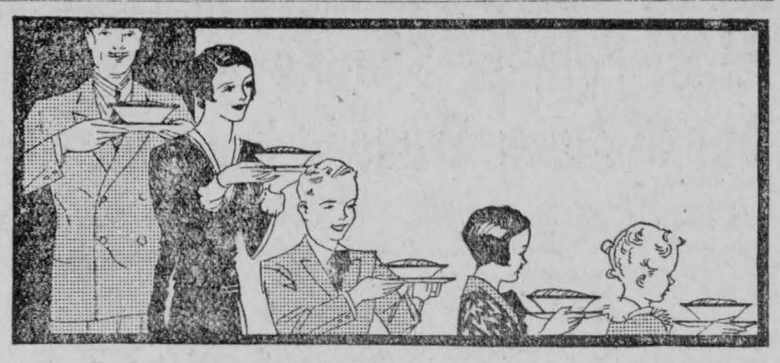

The morning tells an intelligent man many things. Generally, it rules his day. If it starts wrong with him the day is spoiled. A dislike, on the part of a healthy man, for beginning the work of the day, is usually an indication he is not in the right place. If enthusiasm does not come in the morning to the business man he may be sure that something is radically wrong, whether with his habits, his health or his occupation.

When one wakes up in the morning with regret that he must get up and go to work, he may well understand that a vital necessity of success and happiness is not his, and that it is high time for him to make a change in something—in his diet, his conduct or his vocation—for he certainly is not on the straight road to prosperity and achievement.

Where there is love there is a fair chance of success because love creates eagerness to do and work and think for the thing loved in order that it may prosper. Those in a job only for the pay envelope, get only that out of their work. The pleasure they derive from the money is short lived and is seldom renewed by salary increases. Employers do not reward with higher pay those who work only for the love of money.

Talking Shop.

Little Johnny arrived home late one afternoon with his new clothes full of holes. "Johnny!" screamed his mother, "what ever's happened? You have ruined your new suit." The boy looked very sheepish, but he did not reply. "What have you been doing?" asked his mother. "Playing at grocer's shops with Ronny and Bertie," said the child. "But how did you come to get your suit full of holes?" she questioned. "Well," explained Johnny, "we all had to be something in the shop." "What has that to do with it?" interrupted the angry parent. "I was the Swiss cheese," Johnny replied meekly.

A BETTER, BRIGHTER BREAKFAST

The better the breakfast, the brighter the day. Don't fog the brain and clog the body by eating a heavy, indigestible breakfast. Brighten the day by eating Shredded Wheat with milk and go to work with buoyant step and mental alertness. Shredded Wheat with milk makes a complete well-balanced meal containing everything the human body needs for growth and strength. Try it with berries and cream. It's a rare treat.

Some Pertinent Views

Edmonton Journal.—Will Rogers, in the New York Times, advances the following reasons to explain why the Americans are "sitting on top of the world": "For every automobile we furnish an accident. For every radio we put on two murders. We have three robberies to every bath-tub installed. We build two golf clubs to every church. Our bootleggers have manicures and our farmers have mortgages. Our courts our full, our jails are full, our politicians are full. If we can't house a prisoner, we burn him up."

Planting Trees To Utilize Waste Land

The forestry branch of the Ontario department of lands and forests has one hundred and ten men at work north of Thessalon planting white, Scotch and jack pine trees on a tract of land that is locally known as the "Dessert." This plateau was formerly occupied by a forest, but twenty-five years ago it was denuded of trees by lumbermen. Since then it has been several times the scene of fires that have destroyed young trees and vegetation. The plateau thus became a sandy waste, and from that fact it derived its local name. Two years ago the Ontario forestry department began the work of reforesting this land. In the past two years it has planted on 1,500 acres on the plateau 1,500,000 young trees that it secured from the provincial forest stations at St. Williams, Midhurst and Orono. This year the department will plant 2,000,000 more trees on 2,000 acres of the land.

In doing this work the department is acting in accordance with advice that has been given to farmers and to municipalities and that it has assisted many farmers and a number of counties and other muncipalities to carry out. The department has urged farmers to plant trees on waste land on their properties and has offered to supply the farmers with certain quantities of young trees for planting. It has undertaken to supply trees and co-operate with certain ipublic bodies in the planting of forest demonstration plots. It has also encouraged counties to acquire waste tracts of waste land within their boundaries for the establishment of county forests and has been prepared to supply trees, plant them and take charge of the new forests for a period of years.

In the territory north of Thessalon the department is putting land that formerly was forested and that is now unsuited for agriculture, to use. It is incurring some expense, but it will have, when the trees now being planted come to maturity, timber that will be of value. Whether the return from the timber will be sufficient to make the operation a profitable one from a financial standpoint, the heads of the department probably could judge. On the other hand, the operation may produce valuable results other than financial returns. The trees that are being planted will prevent the sand on the land that is being reforested from drifting to adjacent land. The planting of trees and the management of the plantation, carried on in conjunction with the department's studies of tree growth in northern Ontario, may also assist the Government of Ontario in its effort to devise methods of perpetuating timber supplies in the province.

A girl was asked what she thought of married life.

"Oh, there's not much difference," she replied. "I used to wait up half the night for Tom to go, and now I wait up half the night for him to come home."

A Suit For Trespass

"A spell ago," Deacon Hyne hazarded vaguely and looked at Caleb Peaslee for confirmation, "I thought I heard somethin' about Lafe Peters' bringin' suit again the Widder Somes for trespass. You know anything about it, Kellup?"

"I know all about it," replied Caleb briefly and fell again to shaping the axe handle that he was fashioning.

"Well,' continued the deacon, "when is he goin' to do it and what for?"

Caleb sighted carefully along the bit of wood, searching for lumps. "He ain't goin' to do it at all."

The deacon pounded impatiently with his cane upon the floor. "Are you goin' to tell me of your own accord," he demanded testily, "or have I to dig it out of you one word at a time, same's I'm doin' now?"

Caleb sighed and laid down his spoke-shave. "Sometimes," he began reprovingly, "I've took it from your actions that you thought I talked too much. But ne' mind," he said hastily as the deacon started to open his mouth, "we'll let it go that you don't think so. I was only foolin' anyway."

"I s'pose it all started," he conjectured, "from one time when the widder had a cow Lafe wanted to buy and she wouldn't take ten dollars less'n the cow was worth, hard as Lafe tried to make her. He'd lotted on buyin' the cow cheap and sellin' it to Ward Higgins for a consi'able big price, and when the widder wouldn't take his price and the next day sold it to Ward herself Lafe didn't like it at all.

"From that time on he's took occasion to make little flings at the widder—how stingy she was and how she wore the same clothes year in and out and all such little things as that. But everybody knows Lafe, so nobody paid much heed to him.

"But here a couple of weeks ago he chanced to see the widder crossin' the lower edge of his field, and it come over him here was a chance to make trouble for her. He went down and looked, and there was a little path worn in the grass—or in what would be grass if there was any grass there But there was a path worn there such as it was, and it was enough for a man to hang suit on; and Lafe was jest triflin' enough to go to a lawyer. So the first thing the widder knew of it was when she got the papers summonin' her to answer.

Bein' a small suit for nom'nal damages, Squire Metcalfe was comp'tent to hear both sides, and he told the widder fur's he could see she needn't employ counsel; she could tell her case herself and he'd see she got fair play. He was provoked at Lafe for bringin' a spite case anyway, and he told the widder to have her witnesses there. So she did, and I happened to be one of 'em—she wanted me to help prove that folks had crossed the end of that field time out of mind, and she'd only follered custom.

"However," said Mr. Peaslee. "it turned out I had a better plea than that. When it came my turn to tell my story I took occasion to confer with the judge to one side for five minutes, and when I got through he went back to his chair and cleared his throat and shuffled his papers; then he says:

"'While the suggestion of the court may seem a little irregular, the court believes the ends of justice may best be served by an adjournment to the locality where the alleged trespass occurred—and to one other locality to be specified later. It is the desire of the court that all parties to the suit do now adjourn as suggested; and the court will go along also."

"Well, nobody seemed to know for a minute what to say—Lafe in p'ticular. But Squire Metcalf don't commonly want anything 'thout a good reason for it, so one by one all hands filed out of the room and struck down towards Lafe's field.

"When we got there and took a look at the field as the judge wanted us to, there wa'n't, if you leave out Lafe himself, two minds about the whole matter. Anybody could see that the widder couldn't damage the field ten cents' worth.

"Well, then the squire turns to me and says:

"'Now, Mr. Peaslee, will you be good enough to indicate the other locality to which I referred in the court room?'

"And on that I took the lead and fetched 'em all down to the edge of my swale and brought 'em to a halt where the ground made a little shelf over the bog, and where there was a deep rut made where somebody'd once hauled a stoneboat across it; and under the shelf was a heap of stones, enough to build a set of buildin's. The judge gave it a careful look, and then he says:

"'For a minute or two informally I'm going to hold court here, and I wish to ask the witness Peaslee a few questions. First I want to ask where these stones came from.'

"I told him they came off'n Lafe Peters' farm.

"'Had he your consent to put them there?' the judge wanted to know, and I told him Lafe hadn't, he'd never even asked for it.

"'Did he put them all here?' the judge asked me next, and I says: 'No; some of 'em his father dumped here, and some was dumped by others before Lafe or his father owned the place.'

"And then the judge says: 'They were put here then because it had been a long custom?' And when I said that that was the way of it, he said we'd all go back to the court room again.

"When we got inside and the judge sed-down in his chair, he took a minute to think, and then he says: 'In this matter in hand it is within the power of the court to impose a nom'nal fine, if it is the wish of the plaintiff that the court do so, but before that the court wishes to make a few remarks. The fine imposed in any case can only amount to a few cents, for damages to more than that is not evident. The court would estimate such damages and put the fine at the full amount in this case if any damages are so assessed. But,' says he slow and distinct and eyein' Lafe mighty snug, 'having done so in this case, the court could hardly avoid a sim'lar course in another case possessin' like features. The court, to use this as an illustration while it is fresh in the minds of all parties, could hardly in the case of trespassin' by dumpin' stones because of long-established custom do less than decree the removal of the stones or impose a fine sufficient to defray the cost of such removal. I am using this hypothetical case only as an illustration, you will all understand.' And then he stopped and looked down at the papers on the desk for a good minute before he says: 'Does the plaintiff ask that the fine be imposed?'

"And when he didn't git an answer he looked up—and the only people in the room was the widder and me. Lafe had slid out the door quiet and took what witnesses he had along with him. The squire took a good look around to be sure we were all alone, and then he winked at me plain as day!"

White Mice on Escapade

Orillia, Ont., May 19.—Mice bit dogs and chased cats when they landed at the Orillia station late last night, station porters declare. A consignment of white mice of a special breed arrived for Prof. Stephen Leacock, of McGill University, and escaped in every direction from their travelling box. A hectic ten minutes ensued for the railway men before the frisky mice were safely stowed away and carried to the professor's Brewery Bay residence.

Was Killed By Bull

Barrie, Ont.—Dewart Willoughby, 22 years old, was trampled to death Tuesday by an enraged bull on his father's farm near Angus, when he sought to capture the animal which had broken loose from the stable and got into a nearby field.

Upon reaching the field with a lead pole, the youth endeavoured to snap it on the ring in the bull's nose. The animal, however, charged him but he grabbed the ring with his fingers and hung on, being dragged and trodden for a distance of 75 yards before his father, working in a nearby field, came to the lad's assistance.

The youth lived long enough to tell his father how the accident occurred, and telling his father that he was going to die, bade him good-bye. He died a few minutes ater.

Food for the North

Border Cities Star.—Of great importance to hundreds of residents of Canada's northern lands is the action of the Dominion Government in importing 3,000 head of reindeer into the country. These animals, valuable to the Eskimos as food, are being driven across the "top of the world" to the district where they will be available to the aborigines of the Arctic.

Importation of the reindeer comes at a time when the Eskimos are in peril of starvation. The normal game supply has been depleted through their intensive hunting for food, and it has been necessary to augment it. The solution lies in the reindeer, an animal which is valuable both for food and as a beast of burden. The government is acting wisely and well in prayer by Mrs. Houlehan.

HUNT, THE WAFFLE MAN

Stag Hunt, sohpomore, was unhappy. He had eight dollars and didn't owe a cent that he had to pay within the next three weeks. What should he do with so much money? Alas, he didn't know; he wished he did.

Stag had been unhappy before during his life at old Bittersweet College but never for the same reason. Eight dollars! Why, the sum was equivalent to bales and bales of marks—in case he should ever want to go to Germany. The only trouble would be to get there. The money was part of his profits as "official college tailor" during the past few weeks; with his own electric iron he had earned it by smoothing out wrinkles in troubled trousers. Of course he ought to put it aside for a new hat or a new pair of shoes, but how uninteresting that would be!

Stag lay back on the cushions of the window seat and nursed his sorrow. Eight dollars and no use for it! It was true he might buy something to eat with it, but why do that when Clam Baker, his roommate, was always getting things from home? Or he might buy books, but in that case some one would be sure to mistake him for a student, and that would be awful! Or he might buy a ring for Hortense Clair, "the only girl"; he had seen a pretty one at the village only that afternoon. It was of old silver, had a large skull and crossbones and two little red stones for eyes—really a pretty thing, just the sort of ring to appeal to a nice girl. But, unfortunately, Hortense had been born in April her birthstone was diamonds, not rubies. Besides, the ring cost only seventy-five cents.

So Stag just sat there and felt unhappy. Such is the sinister power of wealth.

He picked up a magazine and began idly to glance over the advertisements. Suddenly he straightened. There on the right-hand page was the picture of an electric waffle iron. "Absolutely the very best waffle iron in the world," was the modest caption. "Try the Wah Full Iron, eight dollars."

Stag gasped. It was like Fate. His mouth began to water. Think of being able to cook your own waffles, all you could eat! How the bunch in Rosewood Hall would envy him! Then Stag had an idea that pleased him still more. Why not buy the iron, cook waffles for the fellows and charge five cents apiece for them. Well, why not?

Stag could think of no reason. The idea seemed quite as good to him as the idea that had prompted him to buy his electric flatiron, which would soon be responsible for his owning a WahFull Iron. Before long the waffle iron too would more than pay for itself, and he should be able to buy something else. It was a great scheme, making one thing pay for another.

Stag let his imagination run, and before many minutes he pictured himself as captain and owner of a steam yacht carrying rich passengers on pleasure bent through the South Seas. He would be a well-to-do young man by that time, and when the reporters would come aboard at New York and ask him—as of course they invariably would—how he had made his money he would reply: "Well, boys, when I was a sophomore at Bittersweet I bought an electric flatiron to help pay my way—" Then would follow the waffle iron and so on and so on to the steam yacht.

Filled with his great scheme, Stag hurried to the village. When he returned he carried the Wah Full Iron under his arm. Generous by nature, he had decided to let Clam be a partner in the plan; that is, if Clam had enough money to buy flour and butter and powdered sugar.

"Hello, Stag, you runt," Clam greeted him as he entered the room. "What you got there, a chafing dish?"

"No," said Stag, excitedly, "it's a waffle iron. Listen, Clam, I've got a great scheme! Possibly you'd like to come in on it."

"No I don't think so," Clam replied, with the delightful frankness of a roommate.

"Wait till you've heard," said Stag. Then, beginning with the electric flatiron, he went on step by step to the steam yacht. He dwelt for some time on the fun he and Clam would have together in the South Seas.

When he had finished Clam grinned at him. "Stag," he said, "with a head like yours I don't see why we have to go to Africa for our ivory!"

"What do you mean?" demanded Stag indignantly. "Doesn't it follow step by step, just like logic?"

"Oh, it's all right on paper, but it won't work out. Something is bound to spoil it."

"What, for example?"

"Oh, I can't just say at the moment, but something."

"You won't come in on it, then?" asked Stag sorrowfully.

"Nothing doing, Stag!"

"All right, lend me a dollar, Clam."

Clam hesitated, but at last drew forth a dollar, and with it Stag went out and bought butter, flour and powdered sugar. On his return he printed a sign and tacked it below the "Hunt the Tailor" sign that was already on the outside of his door: the new sign read: "Hunt, the Waffle Man."

"Huh," said Clam, "it's all right. I suppose, but if you ever go into the fish business, Stag, I'm going to room with somebody else!"

"I don't know what I'll go into next," said Stag thoughtfully.

After reading upon how to make waffles he went through the dormitory and spread the news that at ten o'clock that evening waffles would be served in his room.

"Waffles!" cried Skinny Beane.

"Waffles!" echoed Happy Day and Red Lane.

"Waffles!" repeated Stag.

"Who's going to make 'em?" demanded Red.

"I'm the waffle man," said Stag. "Be on hand and tell everybody else. They're free, you know."

Nevertheless by ten o'clock Stag's room was crowded with fellows all eager to see whether Hunt, the tailor, could press waffles as well as he could press trousers.

Stag was already at work. The waffle iron was heating on his ironing board On the right was an immense pitcher full of batter as smooth as silk. He tested the iron. Then s-s-s-s sounded the batter as he poured it on. He closed the iron and while the steam was hissing forth round the edges addressed the hungry multitude:

"Fellows, this is just a little advertising scheme of mine to introduce Hunt's Wah Fulls. To-night they're free. To-morrow—"

"We die!" added Red.

Everybody laughed except Stag. "To-morrow," he continued gravely, "they'll be five cents apiece. I'll be at your service, fellows, whenever you feel hungry for waffles. Ah!"

He lifted the cover, took a crisp waffle out and sprinkled it with powdered sugar. Then he broke it into four pieces and passed them to those who were nearest.

"Mm. You said it!"

Another waffle came hot from the iron, divided into four parts, and vanished.

"Stag, you're some little waffler!" cried Red. "Hurry up with more! These are d-e-e-licious!"

Stag grinned as he poured the batter. Things were going just right. He could already see himself in the South Seas and couldn't resist a swift glance of triumph at Clam, who was standing deep in thought in one corner of the room.

A third waffle soon went the way of all food, and Stag started a fourth.

"Stag," said Finny Finlayson, "you have ruined your tailor trade! From now on my pants go unpressed. Whenever I have any spare cash I'm coming up here and let you feed me waffles."

"So am I!" cried a dozen others.

Only Clam was silent—as clams should be of course. He was trying to think just what it was that would spoil his roommate's little scheme for sailing the South Seas via the waffle route.

"Here's another," said Stag, and away it went.

Till long past midnight Stag stood in front of his ironing board and pressed waffles. Then one by one the fellows went reluctantly to their rooms, still hungry and enthusiastic about waffles.

The next evening Stag began business, and by the end of the week before Christmas the waffle iron had paid for itself and he had a profit of twenty-five cents. How those boys did like waffles! Why, according to Clam, they had even written home about them!

"Clam," said Stag triumphantly as his roommate was packing his things to go home for the holidays, "what do you think of my little scheme now? Too bad you didn't come in on it."

"It won't work out," said Clam.

"Why not? I'm already a quarter to the good, and after the holidays I'll make a lot more. You see, while the fellows are home they'll get used to good food and when they come back they'll have to have waffles. That's the way I see it."

"It won't work out," repeated Clam.

"But why not?" Stag insisted.

"I don't know, but it won't.

Stag remained at Bittersweet over the holidays and planned what he should do with his profits from the waffle iron. Possibly he might get a second-hand car and run it as a jitney between the college and the village. He wasn't sure.

Meanwhile he made waffles for himself and smacked his lips over them. No wonder the fellows were ready and eager for them! They were delicious, even if he as shouldn't said so.

The holidays passed, and the fellows returned at the last minute. Stag expected a big business that first night; he kept his iron hot and had his batter mixed and ready to pour.

But no one came. Clam was out somewhere, and Stag sat alone and wondered. Perhaps the bunch were tired, though he had never before known them to be too tired to eat.

At last Clam came in. "Stag," he said, "bad news for you."

"What have I flunked in now?" asked Stag gloomily.

"Oh, it isn't that. You know, Stag, there are forty-four fellows here in Rosewood."

"Yes, what of it?"

"Well, I've just been through the dorm, and thirty-two of them returned from home with waffle irons!"

"Thunder!" exclaimed Stag.

"Stag," continued Clam evenly, "now I know what I couldn't think of before. I mean the thing that would keep your scheme from working out. You didn't reckon on competition; I couldn't think of the word."

Stag was silent. He was sure that somewhere in his economics book he had read: "Competition is the life of trade." Well, if he ever met the fellow who wrote it, he'd tell him that competition had been the death of his!

At last Stag brightened. He would not admit defeat, not to Clam at any rate. Well, anyway my scheme has a chance" he declared, "I made a quarter, didn't I?"

"Yes" said Clam, "and when you have made three more of 'em you can pay me back that dollar you borrowed!"

One Good Recipe Makes A Cook Famous

fruit pies is so short that housewives should make the most of it while it lasts. Strawberries, blueberries, raspberries, blackberries and others—what luscious pie fillings they provide—what flaky, juicy golden pies they make. Try this one for a change:

CUSTARD FRUIT PIE

Line a pie plate with pastry having a fluted rim. Prick well and bake in a hot oven of 500 degrees F., for 10 minutes. Meanwhile beat three eggs and add ½ cupful sugar ⅛ teaspoon salt and 2 cupfuls of milk, or 1 cupful of evaporated milk and 1 cupful of water. Turn into the baked pastry shell and bake in a slow oven of 350 degress for thirty minutes, or until a silver knife inserted in the centre of the pie comes out clean. Remove and cool the pie. Then arrange two cupfuls of halved sweetened strawberries or raspberries over the custard and top with 1 cupful of cream whipped and flavored with ½ teaspoonful of vanilla extract.

Chicago. — A fourteen-months-old baby probably mortally wounded its mother, Mrs. Margaret C. Mitchell, 26, with a pistol that belonged to her father, a retired police sergeant. The baby found the weapon and crawled under a bed. The mother followed to recover the weapon which was discharged as she reached to take it from the baby's grasp.. The shot struck Mrs. Mitchell just below the heart.

"I'se berry sorry, Deacon Johnsing, to see you comin' outa dat bootlegger's house."

SPITTING

In a very interesting report of a study made on Tuberculosis covering a section of England, we find that the report closes with the following: "There is one reform, and that by no means unimportant, which need not cost anything. If the filthy habit of spitting in public places could be ended by pressure of public opinion, a considerable source of infection would disappear."

That a report which deals with the relationship to tuberculosis to housing, employment and malnutrition should close with such a definite statement as regards the dangers of spitting shows just how serious the matter is in the opinion of the writer

Spitting is largely a habit. Not so many years ago, every man spat when he smoked. Why did he? Just because he had seen others do it and, therefore, it seemed to him to be associated with the smoke. The cuspidor was part of the house furnishings. This has all changed, however; the smoker no longer spits, and the cuspidor in the home is becoming rare.

There are men and boys who seem to spit in order to have something to do. They stand on the corner and talk and spit. This is simply a bad habit.

There is no disagreement as to the habit's being an objectionable and a filthy one. There is, however, judging from what we see everyday a lack of understanding that the habit is a very dangerous one, affecting other people.

When we consider that about one per cent of the population are suffering from active tuberculosis, we understand that if spitting is a common habit, there are bound to be many spitters who have tuberculosis.

Spitting is mostly a habit. In the sanatoria for tuberculosis, very little coughing is heard, because the patients are taught that most of their coughing is unnecessary, that it is simply a habit, and that it can be suppressed. In the same way, those persons who, on account of some condition, do collect phlegm in the throat and so desire to spit, can greatly lessen the frequency of the act, and when they must spit, can make use of their handkerchiefs.

Public opinion has a great deal to do with habits. We do not eat from our knives, because this simply is not done—it is contrary to public opinion. Public opinion, by frowning on the habitual spitter, can very quickly bring to an end this filthy habit which is a menace to all of us, and which plays a real part in the spread of tuberculosis.

Staying the Course

"On with the dance—with intervals for refreshments," was the order of the evening, and the young man who seldom went to dances was having a thoroughly good time. At length he took his partner down to the supper-room. She seemed to have an extraordinary effect upon the waiter, who appeared incapable of taking his eyes off her. At last the young man could stand it no longer. "Look here, my man'" he said. "What makes you stare so rudely at this lady?" The waiter seemed to gulp something down in his throat before replying. "It ain't rudeness, sir. It's genuine admiration. This is the fifth time she has been down to supper."

A Compliment.

She: You've been drinking whisky.
Amateur Distiller: Thank you.
