PROVINCIAL ELECTION CALLED FOR OCTOBER 30

Following the announcement Monday evening by Premier Ferguson of the date of the Provincial election as October 30th with the nominations on October 19, a lengthy manifesto was issued by the Ferguson government.

Chief among the promises of the pronouncement is a reduction in motor car license fees of more than $2,000,000 annually. The new license charges are announced as follows: cars 25 h.p. and under, $5; cars from 25 h.p. up to and including 35 h.p., $10; cars over 35 h.p., $20.

Agriculture, first among the industries of the province, assumes the importance due its position in the manifesto. A better and more prosperous agriculture, in New Ontario and Old, is the central plank of this political platform.

Many are the promised improvements held out to the farmer. The first is more roads—a vast extension by greater expenditures, of the secondary or township and county roads of the province. Cheaper hydro power next is offered. At the next session of the legislature, the manifesto states, statutes will be effected to reduce the hydro service charge from its present average rate of $4.55 per 100-acre farm to $2.50. Further, the cost of the power installation equipment will be lent by the government to the farm on loans running up to a period of 10 years.

Rural education facilities are discussed. Parents in rural districts will be given the opportunity of providing better education for their children under a scheme by which such schools as teach up to fifth form work will receive more generous grants from the government. Thus, on a basis wherein the parent has the option, the premier is introducing his plan of bringing the first two years of high school into the public schools.

An intensive agricultural research will be pursued by the research board, the manifesto announces. This work will involve study of soil conditions, improved production and marketing methods, and the eradication of weeds and diseases in plants and animals.

Overseas marketing opportunities now centered largely on fruit, will be extended to other products, it is announced, if success attends the plan, announced some months ago, of having a fruit marketing expert stationed in London, England. Similar agencies will be extended to other products, the manifesto states.

Declaring the present demands indicate an exhaustion of present developed electric energy in Ontario by 1932, the pronouncement asserts that the government intends, while awaiting the development of the St. Lawrence, to develop an additional reserve of about 600,000 horse-power. The immediate developments will be the Carleton and Chats Falls in the Ottawa valley, which have a total estimated development of 275,000 horse-power.

"We venture to suggest," the manifesto reads, "to those who are not yet satisfied with the liquor control act, that the present law should have a fair trial. The encouragement through educational methods of self control, temperance and sobriety is the only lasting solution of the problem."

MRS. MARY JANE SULLIVAN

The funeral of the late Mary Jane Sullivan was held at Dunbar on Sunday afternoon, September 8th. The deceased was well-known in the vicinity of Elma and Dunbar. She was born in Hoasic, October 15th, 1847. At the age of 24 years she was married to Peter Sullivan, at which time she took up residence with her husband at Elma. Her husband passed away 31 years ago and during the period of her widowhood the deceased lived with her daughter, Mrs. Alfred Barkley, at Dunbar.

For the past couple of months she was a patient sufferer, confined to her bed. Death occurred on Saturday morning, September 7th. A service was conducted at the daughter's home at Dunbar, by the Rev. C. R. Cronmiller, followed by interment at Williamsburg cemetery.

She leaves to mourn her loss two daughters, Mrs. Alfred Barkley Dunbar and Mrs. Alex Whitteker, of Gouverneur, N.Y.; two sisters and one brother also survive: Mrs. Sarah Brownell of Raymondville, N.Y.; Mrs. Joseph Robinson and Mr. Herman Casselman, of Norwood; also six grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

FOUND DEAD IN BED

(Massena Observer)

Mrs. Julia Bush, of Utica, was found dead in her bed Tuesday morning, September 10th, at the R. W. E. Alden home, St. Lawrence River cross road, where she had been spending the past two months visiting her sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Alden and Miss Ellen Farlinger. Mrs. Bush had been feeling exceedingly well for the two days preceding her death, and had retired Monday evening in apparently good health. When the family went to summon her to breakfast Tuesday morning they found her dead, and a doctor was called and said that she had been dead for several hours.

Lately Mrs. Bush had made her home with her son, Mr. Lawrence Bush, in Utica, N.Y.

Mrs. Bush was born June 23, 1856 in Charlottentown Township, Ont., a daughter of Jacob and Rachael Bush Farlinger. When she was 23 years old she married Simon Bush, of Williamsburg, Ont., and several years later they moved to the United States. The husband died March 5, 1927, at Raymondville.

GUAY—MERKLEY

The home of Mrs. Abram Merkley Iroquois, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Saturday evening, last at 8.30 o'clock, when her daughter, Dorothy Helen, became the bride of Hubert G. Guay, son of Julius and the late Mrs. Guay, of Ogdensburg, N.Y., formerly of Morrisburg. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Wm. Merrilees, pastor of Knox Presbyterian Church, Iroquois.

The bride looked charming in a smartly tailored suit of reseda green and blonde silk crepe, with hat, hose and slippers to match, and carried a bouquet of pink and white gladioli. She was attended by her sister, Miss Bessie Merkley, who was becomingly attired in a green satin dress and carried a bouquet of gladioli and asters. The groom was supported by James O. Malley, Iroquois.

Following the ceremony lunch was served to about forty friends and relatives. The young couple were the recipients of many beautiful and useful gifts. They will reside in Ogdensburg, N.Y.

ONTARIO PLOWMEN'S ASSOCIATION

The Ontario Plowmen's Association was organized nearly a score of years ago and has made continuous progress each year. It is the largest organization of its kind in the world, with a rapidly growing membership, and has branches in nearly every section of this Province. The Plowing Match and Farm Machinery Demonstration extends over four days, annually. All types of farm machinery are seen in operation—threshing, hay pressing, seed cleaning, wood cutting, etc., and the working of all the various machines used on Canadian farms and in Canadian homes will be on exhibition. Household appliances of every kind run by Hydro-Electric Power will be shown. Multiple Horse Hitches will be explained each afternoon. Another feature will be the Inter-County Competition on Friday October 18. The Ontario Farmer, Toronto, has generously donated a large trophy and 3 miniature silver cups for the team having the largest total score in this contest. The Ontario Plowmen's Association is giving substantial cash prizes for individual work in this class.

The object of the Association is to advance the interests of agriculture:

(a) By encouraging its members to give greater attention to thorough cultivation of the soil.

(b) By establishing branch Associations throughout the Province.

(c) By disseminating useful information with regard to the fertilization and cultivation of the soil.

(d) By interesting farmer's sons to become expert tillers of the soil, thereby largely increasing the yield and quality of the field crops of Ontario.

(e) By encouraging annual Provincial, County and Township Plowing Matches.

(f) By awarding premiums at such competitions.

(g) By the holding of Farm Machinery Demonstrations in connection with the Provincial Plowing Match.

(h) And by such other means as may be desirable.

Among the many annual farmers' gatherings there is none of greater educational value than the International Plowing Match and Farm Machinery Demonstration. It is confidently expected that 50,000 people will be interested spectators at this great event. The classes arranged each year are such as best meet the conditions in the locality in which the Match is held, and the plows and tractors used by the contestants are those considered most practical for use on the farm. This is to be expected, as the Board of Directors is made up of practical, successful farmers, who have accurate knowledge of conditions which prevail in the various sections. A regulation which meets with the approval of all is one that makes a plowman who wins a first prize in a class move up to a higher one each succeeding year. Particular attention is paid to and encouragement given to boys, and they have their own classes in which to compete. Through the generosity of one of the Directors, every boy under 14 years of age who completes his allotment in the time specified, will receive a special cash prize. Between 60 and 70 branches of the Association hold Local Matches each year. Men ponder at the great expansion of this organization, and the wonder is that the Officers and Directors are able to handle such tremendous crowds to the satisfaction of all concerned. Short Courses are held each year under the supervision of Officials of the Ontario Department of Agriculture for instructing plowboys in the vicinity of the place at which the International Plowing Match is being held, and those intending to compete are given some training beforehand. The midway, the fakir and the wheels-of-fortune men are absolutely barred from carrying on their gambling devices at this huge educational Demonstration. Ample accommodation is arranged for rooms and board, both in hotels and private homes. Special railway rates have been secured. The Ontario Plowmen's Association extend a cordial invitation to all to come to the Government Farms near the City of Kingston on October 15, 16, 17 and 18.

Sunday School Lesson

September 22. Lesson XII—Malachi Foretells a New Day—Malachi 3: 1-12. Golden Text—Behold, I send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me.—Malachi 3: 1.

ANALYSIS

- I. THE PROPHET REBUKES THE EVILS OF HIS TIME, Chs. 1-2: 17 and 3: 7-18.
- II. HE PREDICTS A COMING DAY OF JUDGMENT, Chs. 3: 1-6 and 4: 1-6.

INTRODUCTION—The prophecy of Malachi seems to belong to the same period as Ezra and Nehemiah, that is, about the middle of the fifth century B.C. An ancient Jewish translation from the Hebrew into Aramaic (the Targum) identifies the prophet with Ezra. The name Malachi is probably assumed from the first verse of ch. 3 and means "My Messenger." The social conditions and the prevalent evils which the book describes are presupposed as closely similar to those with which Ezra and Nehemiah had to do. There was scepticism with regard to Jehovah's relation to Israel. The services of the sanctuary were being treated with contempt. The priests were corrupt and ignorant. There were many divorces of Jewish wives, whose place was taken by women of another race and another religion. The payment of tithes and offerings was neglected. Other gross evils are mentioned, and there was a growing disposition to question the teachings of religion. The prophet deals frankly and boldly with the evils which he sees and declares the speedy coming of the day of God's judgment.

- I. THE PROPHET REBUKES THE EVILS OF HIS TIME, Chs. 1: 1-2: 17 and 3: 7-18.

The term "burden" is frequently applied to the prophetic message (see Isa. 13: 1; 14: 28; 15: 1; 17: 1, etc.). Malachi presents his argument in the form of question and answer. Evidently the people have been suffering adversity and some are sceptical regarding the covenant bond by which, as the prophets have taught, the Lord was united to Israel. The prophet answers by contrasting the evil case of Esau (that is Edom) with the certain recovery of Israel. The time will come when they will see the Lord's greatness made manifest, not alone in Israel but beyond Israel's borders as well (1: 5).

In simple but impressive language the prophet shows up the unworthy conduct of the priests who brought God's altar and sanctuary into contempt. Nowhere in Scripture is the folly and meanness of irreverent worship more clearly shown.

To accept the person (1: 8, 9) is to receive with favor. The exhortation in 1: 9 is probably to be taken ironically. Will God be gracious to show favor to those from whose hand come such unworthy offerings? It were better far to shut the doors of the sanctuary (see Revised Version). The prophet contrasts the pure worship of God, though perhaps under another name, everywhere found among the Gentiles, which puts to shame the insincerity of his own professed worshippers. In 1: 12, we must read "is," not "shall be, great," and is offered, etc. (See Revised Version).

Two reproofs are administered in ch. 2, first to the priests and second to those who practice divorce. God had chosen the priests of the house of Levi to render a high service to the people, to whom they were to be ministers of life and peace. Theirs was to be the reverent approach to God (2: 5), and theirs to teach the law of truth, to walk with God in peace and equity, and to turn men from iniquity. The ideal priestly ministry is presented in these verses (2: 5-7), an ideal of which they fell far short.

Malachi reproves in strong language those who were guilty of a great social wrong. Native Jewish wives were divorced, and in some cases foreign women taken in their place. Of this passage (2: 10-16) Driver writes, "The practice of divorce is declared to be an offence against the love and faithfulness which as children of one Father they all owe to one another, an unnatural cruelty towards those who have been long bound to them by the ties of affection, and a challenge to the divine judgment."

In ch. 3: 7-12 Malachi denounces those who neglect to pay their tithes and due offerings as guilty of robbing God, and promises rich blessing to follow payment of the whole tithe. In 3: 13-18 (compare 2: 17) he answers certain questions which disturbed the faith of his hearers. God prospers the evil, they said, and we have found no profit in serving him. His answer is in the promise of the speedy coming of the Lord (2: 17 and 3: 1), and in the statement that a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. No better answer surely could have been given. The God of judgment will set all things right. The deeds and words of the righteous will not be forgotten. They shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day (3: 17-18).

- II. HE PREDICTS A COMING DAY OF JUDGMENT, Chs. 3: 1-6 and 4: 1-6.

The Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come (ch. 3: 1). This was the prophet's answer to those who said that justice was not done in this world, and that God took delight in evil doers, and who asked sceptically, Where is the God of judgment? (ch. 2: 17). The words "my messengers" are in Hebrew the one word, "Malachi." It is possible that the prophet thinks of himself as God's messenger warning men of his coming in judgment. But in ch. 5: 5 the forerunner is called Elijah and our Lord regarded this prediction as fulfilled in the preaching of John the Baptist. Some prophet teacher or preacher is evidently expected who will bear this significant title. The messenger of the covenant seems to be here another name for the Lord. It may be that Malachi thinks of a representative figure, man or angel, in whom the Lord will appear and through whom he will judge the world. If so there is here a very close and real provision of the Lord Jesus Christ (compare Matt. 3: 11-12).

GIRLISH BERTHA COLLAR.

Keeping cool and comfy these warm summer days is quite simple if one has the proper togs. Mother made this cute dress of pink batiste in one hour. Style No. 598 comes in sizes for wee maids of 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. In the 4-year size 1½ yards of 35-inch material with 6½ yard of trimming is sufficient. Yellow organdie with brown bias organdie trimming is very effective. Red and white printed lawn, green and white dotted dimity, white swiss with blue dots, orchid and white checked gingham with white organdie collar and nile green chambray with white pique are adorable suggestions. For parties select pink taffeta, maize crepe de chine or pale blue georgette crepe. Pattern price 20c in stamps or coin (coin is preferred). Wrap coin carefully.

A New Way To Study Art

200 Portable Theatres Take Drama to French Provinces

Paris.—There are 200 portable theatres in France, and 6,000 players present in them the standard dramatic works of the country.

People of the city know little or nothing of them, but those who roam the provinces often enjoy good acting in presentable settings at a small price in these wandering playhouses that play a week or a month in the small towns in the populous country districts.

Thespis, whose name has come down through twenty-five centuries as the father of the drama, is credited with being the originator of the movable theatre. He was a playwright and poet whose works have been lost, but there are references in old works to his carts or chariots in which he was assumed to have carried about the actors and the properties for his performances.

The portable theatre of to-day often is quite pretentious and frequently competes in the larger towns with the established playhouse visited by road companies.

Deleamarre, president of the association of these traveling showmen, has a theatre 100 feet long, well equipped and with 20 sets of scenery. It plays usually one-month stands, as the cost of "jumps" from one town to another is about $1,200.

On these stages, out in the provinces, many stars have had their training. The repertoire includes modern Parisian successes, when the royalties are not too high. Most of the productions, however, are those that have become public property. The portable theatres, nevertheless, last year paid $16,000 in royalties to the Society of Authors.

British Labor Favors Union With Capital

Ben Tillet Supports Policy of Collaboration With Employers

Belfast.—At the opening of the Trade Union Congress here Ben Tillet in his opening address from the chair gave a powerful lead to the delegates on the important subject of rationalization and the attitude which the unions should adopt toward this drastic form of industrial reconstruction carried out within the framework of capitalist enterprise. The British Labor policy, both on its industrial and political sides, has been undergoing a process of modification and re-orientation since the general strike of 1926.

In his address Mr. Tillet threw his influence in support of the policy of definite collaboration with employers to carry through rationalization and the achievement of the highest attainable efficiency in production, always providing that reasonable guarantees were given that the interests of the workers would be safeguarded and a fair proportion of benefits made to raise the standard of life.

He said that he saw in the Melchett-Turner conferences and the subsequent discussions with the two national employers' organizations on the possibility of continued official co-operation, not merely a present culmination of this progress toward a higher status, but the prelude to a still greater influence on national industrial policy.

He declared that the mistakes of governments, banks, employers and trade unions and of the Trade Union Congress itself were all responsible to some extent for the unprecedented industrial difficulties since the war. Therefore, the trade union policy must have a new direction based on wider responsibilities.

He strongly advocated the establishment of a state economic council and a wide extension by the State in aid of economic, industrial and scientific research to help the restoration of depressed industries.

A resolution was passed asking for an amendment of the unemployment insurance acts to remove objectionable provisions and to make the notification of vacancies compulsory to employers, also expressing a warning at the growing number of unemployed denied insurance benefit, and calling for a guarantee of maintenance when work is unobtainable. — Christian Science Monitor.

Romance of Theatre Girl

Fame Brought by a Clear-Cut Chin

London.—A pretty programme-seller dressed in Quaker costume caught the eye of a famous painter's wife at the Fortune Theatre, London, one night—and another of those little romances numerous in the world of art began.

The programme-seller was Miss Betty Iresa, who lives with her parents at Kensington, and the artist's wife was Mrs. Collier, whose husband is Mr. John Collier, R.A.

"It was my clear-cut chin that did it," said Miss Iresa.

Carrying Her Tray

"Mrs. Collier told me who she was and said that Mr. Collier had been trying to find a certain type of face—my type. There were plenty of pretty girls, she said, but not with the type of face he wanted."

Miss Iresa is a tall, golden-haired girl, with blue eyes. She is 20.

"I had a letter from Mr. Collier," she continued, "and soon afterwards went to his studio and began my sittings dressed in my Quaker costume and carrying the tray of programmes and empty chocolate boxes."

"There are two pictures—one of my head and shoulders, which I believe is to be exhibited at the Grafton Galleries, and the other a full-length picture, is to be shown at some other gallery."

"Mr. Collier is going to paint me again in the autumn, and wants me to meet Sir John Lavery and Mr. Philip De Laszlo."

THE SILENT TIDE

The noisy, restless waves are failures, but the great silent tide is a success. The explanation is not hard to find. The former are products of earth forces and surface impulses and emotions—the fickle winds and storms, the earthquake and the tornado, the configuration of coast lines; but the latter draws its power from above. Many of us soon learn by experience that our little, spasmodic efforts are failures; they break to pieces, shatter themselves on the rocks of human weakness and human limitation. Many of our earthly plans and purposes accomplish nothing. Yet, in spite of such untoward failures, we may have the satisfying consciousness that our characters and our lives are improving every day, if we are wise enough to draw power for them from above.

DEFEAT

There is just one thing better than winning, and that is taking defeat like a man.—Ralph Connor.

London's Costers

By D. Kermode Parr

There are good fruit shops in London, but the true Londoner prefers to buy his food from a "barrow." From Putney to Poplar and from Hampstead Heath to Clapham Common, every few blocks you find a street lined all along one side with these stalls on wheels. You can buy a toothbrush or a sheet of music or a leg of lamb from a barrow, but the great majority of them deal in fruit and vegetables. The fruit is just as good as in the stores, the prices are lower and offer the coster salesman a comedian.

"Whoa! Watcher doin' nah? Don't push the blinkin' stall over. Buy! Buy! This is the place to buy sun-kissed oranges, moon-kissed apples and star-kissed bananas! Every bloom-in' bit o' fruit on this 'ere stall 'as bin kissed by somethin' or somebody! Buy! Buy!! Buy!!!

So one cockney vender reported by the Rev. W. H. Lax, of East London Mission; and the style is the same in every street market. Don't visit them if you are sensitive to familiarity. Any lady is "My Dear!" or as often as not "Me duck!" and even if she is obviously under thirty may expect to be addressed by middle-aged costers as "Ma!"

The stallkeeper wastes no money on appearances; he looks shabby enough when you meet him at night trundling away his whole stock-in-trade to be parked in some dirty shed. But he often makes a good thing of his trade. I have seen an old woman who sold only common vegetables busy filling in an income tax return in the intervals of wrapping up lettuce.

It's as well for the customer to be wide awake, too. One who found she had received an excess shilling in her change walked back to the stall to return it. "Gimme them tomatoes back a minute, me duck!" requested the coster as he pocketed the shilling. The lady stared, but he was already opening the bag. "There's a rotten tomato at the bottom!" was his explanation. "It's goin' to be fair trade between you and me in the future, see!"

Sometimes there is an acute psychology of salesmanship to guard against. "Is them plums good? Good? Blimey, they're the opportunity of a lifetime. Tell yer wot it is, ma, yer can't believe it at such a low price. I'm fair tired o' shoutin' them plums at a shilling. 'Ere, Bill (to his assistant). Take that shilling ticket off them plums and put on two shillings a pound!"

Bill obeyed. An hour later the stall was cleared of its stock of plums!

Long Silent

Our poet had been long silent. He had sung In his golden youth, of the moon and the stars, And the whispering winds, and the light that clung In the heavens after evening put up her bars.

Now, after an aching interval, he came With a new song from the old heart in his breast; And over our world there burst a beautiful flame— His last song his sweetest song, and his best.

But not of Death was his music, nor of tears. He sang of youth and April and the days of his prime. For only the old can know the glory of young years, And only the old can sing of Once-on-a-time.

—Charles Hanson Towne, in The Atlantic Monthly.

Motorist (insolently): "Yes, sir, I can do sixty miles any time."
Magistrate (quietly): "Well, this time I want you to do sixty days."

Kindly gentleman—Dear, dear, lithe boy! Can't you get along without fighting? Why don't you arbitrate your difficulties? Boy—I did. This is the arbitrator I'm fighting.

MUTT AND JEFF—

Dreaded anaemia can be banished!

IN middle life, when vitality is not as great as it once was, and the blood stream is naturally thinned and de-vitalized, anaemia easily lays hold on the system. At first, just a tired feeling, it quickly results in bodily weakness that ordinary tonics cannot avail.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills then become a wonderful aid. They supply the necessary oxygen to the blood, increase the blood count and renew waning vigor.

"I was seized with anaemia," writes Mrs. Charles Lambert of Port Hope, Ont., "and was in a very bad state. As a girl I had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for a run-down condition and decided to take them once more. Again the result was marvellous. In a little while I was fully well again."

You cannot begin too early to check anaemia. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold at your druggist's or by mail, postpaid, 50 cents, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

When Death Means Prosperity

Vancouver Sun (Lib.): Wheat-growers are jubilant. The price of wheat is soaring; many farmers who had a very dark outlook are now expecting a prosperous harvest. And why? Because the wheat crop is below normal. Bad weather conditions have cut down the expected yield. Hence price are going up. Industry strives for the greatest possible production. Agriculture is compelled to point the other way. A time of plenty is apt to be a time of hardship. A time of dearth is apt to mean prosperity. Right there is a "farm problem" worthy of a good deal of attention.

The Young Plan

New York World: The Young plan is realistic if one overlooks the unrealistic of French policy which are its premise. But the British, as we now can see, are striking at the unrealistic premises. They are insisting on an end of French diplomatic privilege in European affairs, and in this insistence they have set their feet on a path which, though difficult, dangerous and inconvenient, leads to a final liquidation of the war.

Eighteen Day Trail Ride

The remote Columbia Ice Fields, north of Lake Louise, was the objective this year of the major Trail Ride of the season. These fields are claimed to be the largest body of ice south of the Arctic circle, covering 250 square miles in area whose waters flow into three oceans. Only experienced trail riders are permitted to take this strenuous trip for which they must possess at least the silver button emblematic of 100 miles of trail riding. The Sealing Saga Of Newfoundland

Told By Capt. Robt. A. Bartlett in the National Graphic Gives Many A Thrill

LOST IN A STORM

On March 7, the port of St. John's, Newfoundland, is black with men. On that day the sealing fleet sails for the annual hunt. Eight ships, with 2000 picked men, steam down the harbor. Whistles scream, steam down the harbor. Cannon fire salutes. I have been with the sealing fleet 19 times, and on almost as many Arctic expeditions with Peary and others. Sealing is certainly more dangerous than Arctic exploring.

The best sealing trip I ever made was in the Bonaventure, my first steel vessel. The details of it can go for the other sealing trips, too. We started out against a 60-mile wind, taking waves clean over the bridge. In no time the ship was one solid block of ice.

Next day we reached calm water under the weather edge of the ice. For a while we made good progress through leads in the ice, but finally were jammed. We had to resort to all the old tricks—putting out men to break trenches in the ice with axes and dynamite, backing, and charging with our armored prow. And so at last we got through to ice where lay a great patch of seals. Imagine yourself in Central Park surrounded by thousands of sheep and new-born lambs. This is what it looked like.

I put four crews—231 men—on the ice. They began killing and panning the seals, knocking them on the heads with a gaff, removing the pups or pelts, and hauling them to markers. Markers are colored flags, like golf flags, stuck in the ice at each pile of pups, so that the ship can come to pick them up.

The crews killed some 8000 seals that first afternoon—all young ones, because the "white-coats" are the sealer's first choice. For three full days the work went on from daylight to dark. On the fourth day a furious gale sprang up, with blinding snow and freezing weather, and only by the greatest labor did we salvage 25,000 of the pelts scattered on the ice pans. But that was the biggest catch, except one last year, ever brought in from the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Sealing is a hard life. Men on board a sealer are jammed like sardines. Going out, every available bit of space is filled with coal, ice-fighting equipment, sealers' chests and gear. If we get a quick "pick-up," many of the men are "burned out" by a big cargo of skins, which takes up their bunk space, and they've got to double up in already crowded quarters. There is some relief in the watches, when one man is out and another can use his berth.

A sealing ship carries provisions for two months and a half—potatoes, codfish, flour, meat, tea, and molasses to sweeten the tea, turnips and beans. Could some of the old sealing crews take a look at these provisions, they'd think the business was ruined by luxurious living. They had nothing but hard biscuit and tea, pork and duff, with little grease in the duff. No soft bread whatever.

On ship we have what we call Solomon Goss's birthday. He has a birthday three times a week. On these days for the noon meal we get duff. For duff, flour (a barrel to a batch) is stirred with water, currants, and molasses. With a blade like a canoe paddle, the cook mixes it into a paste and adds fat from boiled pork as shortening. The dough is then packed into small canvas bags and boiled for two or three hours. Pork is boiled alongside the duff, and when duff and pork are ready the cook rolls the roll and hands it out.

On Sunday morning the crew gets "brose"—boiled bread and codfish with pork gravy spread over it. Butter, fresh beef, salt fish, potatoes, and turnips are whacked out to the men at different times and they prepare meals for themselves except on Solomon Goss's birthdays. When we get among young seals we boil or fry the seal meat. With onions and butter, I like it better than porterhouse steak and in the North it prevents scurvy.

Each man leaving the ship has on his back a "nunny" bag, in which he carries an orange or two to quench his thirst, some raw oatmeal mixed with sugar, a few hard biscuits, and a piece of seal or pork. This is his grub for a day on the ice.

A sealer must be quick and careful in his work. Every hole in a skin costs a man ten cents. A skillful worker can skin a seal in a minute, and a man who can kill, skin, and pan—that is, haul the pelts to a marker—120 in a day is a good hand.

One of the hardships of sealing is ice or snow blindness. Although all men carry goggles, and are lectured and threatened with punishment if they don't wear them, they are often careless. They raise their glasses, perhaps, to wipe the sweat out of their eyes and forget to pull them down again. Then, before they realize their danger, they are blind. I don't know of any worse sensation. It is like having sand thrown in the eyeballs. Water runs out of the eyes. With a good dose of it, men have almost become insane.

Then, again, there is the danger of falling into the water when a long distance from the ship. Here is a sealer who has slipped into the water. He has "gone down till his cap floated" and he is soaking wet. His "buddy" has fished him out with a gaff. A gale of wind is blowing—freezing weather and no shelter. But he has to get those wet clothes off or have them freeze on him as stiff as the pillar of Lot's wife. The two seek the biggest pinnacle of ice, and in the lee of it the wet man strips off his clothes. His buddy lends him all the clothes he can spare, while they wring out the wet ones. Then he must haul the clothes back on—an awful task.

The chance of losing his men on the ice in a fog or blizzard is a work that always besets a captain. It must be remembered that this work goes on at the worst time of year, when gales of wind and snow are the usual thing. Every morning a skipper must decide whether to put his men on the ice or not, and the decision is often fraught with anxiety. In 1914 the steamship Newfoundland put its men ashore just before a terrific blizzard. When the weather cleared next day, 77 men had been lost, frozen while they attempted to get back to the ship. On another trip the Greenland lost 48 men during a storm. Often, too, in a storm, the ship itself gets "nipped" in the ice and is sunk. Of 57 famous sealing steamers, 29 have been lost.

What do the men get out of all this hard work? The vessel may make a quick pick-up and be through in a few days; again, vessels have been out two months and returned without a seal. The only guarantee a sealer gets is food and a "crop note," an advance of $9. One-third of the net earnings is divided among the crew. Shares have run as high as $238, but the average is about $60.

When the skins reach St. John's, the valuable fat is scraped from them and reduced to a fluid state. Later this oil is used in the American soap industry. The skins themselves are tanned and used for various leather goods. The skins of this kind of seal are not used as furs.

The next time you enter a leather-goods store to buy a pinseal pocket-book, hold the article in your hands and think of this story. Think of the seals tossing on the ice pans of the Newfoundland coast in hurricane weather. Think of the hardy men who risk their lives walking on the ocean to take the pelts. Think of the strong Newfoundland vessels that bring them home to supply the world with pinseal novelties and purses for its valuables.

Lights on Horse-drawn Vehicles

Le Canada (Lib.): There can be no doubt that if every farmer agreed to carry a light of some kind or other attached to the rear of his art when he was on the main road, it would contribute to a greater degree of safety with evening traffic. It would be of particular assistance in certain cases of cars meeting when the headlights of an automobile coming in the opposite direction prevent, even when they are dimmed, one seeing the car which is directly in front of one's own car, and it is seen often enough too late.

IS THERE A BABY IN YOUR HOME?

Is there a baby or young children in your home? If there is you should not be without a box of Baby's Own Tablets. Childhood ailments come quickly and meat should always be at hand to promptly fight them. Baby's Own Tablets are the ideal home remedy. They regulate the bowels; sweeten the stomach; banish constipation and indigestion; break up colds and simple "evers"—in fact they relieve all the minor ills of little ones. Concerning them Mrs. Moise Cabotte, Kamik, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are the best remedy in the world for little ones. My baby suffered terribly from indigestion and vomiting, but the Tablets soon set her right and now she is in perfect health." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"An aviator's wife approves air pockets because one can go through them at night without a light."

The St. Lawrence Waterway

Vancouver Province (Ind. Cons.): The question of electric power is an important one. Canada will get more power out of the development than the United States, but this is because she has a great many more miles of river than her neighbor. On the international section, the power will be divided equally between the two countries. To the power on the Canadian section our American friends haven't the slightest trace of a claim. Canada will develop it herself and have it for herself. If the present sentiment prevails, she will not export a single kilowatt of it.

Empire Solidarity

Hamilton Spectator (Ind. Cons.): There has been a great deal of talk about the possibilities of making the British commonwealth a self-contained trade unit, and grandiose proposals of more or less practical feasibility have been made; but the talk period appears to be happily passing now into the stage of concrete action. The energetic manner in which the British administration is exploring the opportunities and the steps it is taking to bring about definite action cannot fail to produce good results.

Canada's Increase

Saskatoon Star (Lib.): The natural increase and the balance of immigration over emigration now combine to produce an annual gain of 1.3 per cent. The doubling period at this rate is more than half a century as it was before 1900. That is to say, it will be 1980 before Canada has a population of 20,000,000 unless the rate of growth is accelerated. It probably will be. The opening of the Hudson Bay route, the exploitation of the minerals of the north, and the growth of trade with the Orient are have that effect.

Rotherhithe and Its Memories

The genius loci of Rotherhithe, like that of every other part of the fascinating congeries of amphibian communities, called collectively, Thames-side, is a possession peculiar to itself. It is a thing impossible to define with any exactitude, made up as it is of so many and such various components, appealing to each and all of the senses in turn; of sights, and sounds, and smells, pleasing and unpleasing alike—of chance-see names on street corners, or over warehouses, or on the fronts of waterside inns—of scraps of old history and old association—of the crying of gulls and the wash and gurgle of the tide under the wharves, and the comings and goings of ships along the centuries. And yet—vague and elusive and indescribable as it is—there is in it, none the less for that, something entirely individual and unmistakable; so that if any one familiar with the region in general were to be suddenly dropped down in a particular corner of it he had never seen before, he would probably be able to say and at once unerringly: "This is surely Rotherhithe!"

It is not, perhaps, so historical a locality as Blackwell, or even as its own near neighbor, Deptford—although, as shall presently be seen, it has associations in this sort by no means to be despised. It is not ecally like Wapping, nor leathery like Bermondsey. . . Its predominant smell . . . so to speak—is that of lumber. . . You may walk its streets all day and seldom see a black face, or a yellow, or a brown. Its romance is the world-old romance of sea-faring, and commerce, and toil. It is an honest place, a workaday place, and—for all its superficial covering of London grime—a cheerful place. . .

There are pleasant glimpses to be caught of the river and its busy traffic, or funnels of many colors and the flags of many nations, of bustling tugs, of the brown sails of barges—even, once in a way, of a square-rigger, a fair lady of old time. . . There is a sudden vignette, perhaps, of a swan sailing, incredibly white, amazingly aloof, among the crowded shipping. There are old, rickety, leaning riverside inns whose names are the names of battles long ago, or of East Indian names whose timbers have long been dust. There are tarry odours from dark caverns where barges have been built for generations—now, alas! given over to the construction of the dumb barges and lighters which are slowly but surely displacing the picturesque brown sails of tradition. There are ancient watermen's shops, all but deserted, yet where you may still, now and then, get a boat to put you over the water as in days gone by.—C. Fox Smith, in "Ancient Mariners."

"LINE'S BUSY"
... time wasted

ANYONE trying to call this telephone will be told by the operator: "Line's Busy". But the line is not busy. It is really idle. Someone at the other end of the office is wanted and the telephone waits there, until he arrives.

The idle telephone, with its receiver off the hook, is a common cause of "Line's Busy", and a common cause of uncompleted calls which are wasting two million minutes every day in Ontario and Quebec. Other causes of unnecessary "Line's Busy" are inadequate office equipment, long conversations during peak hours, trying to repeat too soon after the "busy" report, and asking another to get your party for you.

Many offices may not need more telephones, but they do need to have their present telephones more conveniently located. You may be losing calls because your line is thus "Busy" but really idle. And you may be losing business.

We want you to have the best possible telephone service and we are making every effort to provide it. We are ready at any time to survey your telephone equipment and submit a report.

*New telephone plant and service improvements will mean an outlay, for 1929 alone, of more than $27,000,000.

A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE

This age-old adage applies just as well to the eyes as to other things.

It is a peculiar fact, that in spite of the splendid facilities now available for the scientific examination and care of the human eye, many people disregard the Optometrist's existence until they have eye-strain to such a degree as to make them uncomfortable.

Many people who dread the thought of wearing glasses would never have to wear them, except perhaps for reading, if they would consult a competent Optometrist in time.

The best time to have your eyes examined is before you feel your eyesight failing, not after. It is dangerous to gamble with your eyesight.

Eyes should be examined at least every two years, and under some conditions, more often. Phone for an appointment.

THE "CANARY" MURDER CASE

by S. S. VAN DINE AUTHOR OF THE BENSON MURDER CASE

THE STORC THUS FAR:

Vance's theory is that two unknown persons were in Margaret Odell's apartment that fatal evening: one hiding in a clothes closet, the other the man who strangled her. In no way can the police account for the presence of anyone in the apartment. The door to the alley was bolted on the inside and the man who had gone out with the "Canary" the night before had been the only one to be seen with her, and circumstances completely eliminated him. There is another man who called while she was out, but one of the phone operators testifies that he had been unable to get in the apartment.

CHAPTER XIII

An ugly light came into Heath's eyes.

"We've got ways," he said through his teeth; "of getting damn interesting conversation outa people who haven't no great reputation for repartee."

Vance sighed. "How the hell Hundred needs you, my Sergeant?"

Markham looked at his watch.

"I've got pressing work at the office," he said, "and all this talk isn't getting us anywhere." He put his hand on Heath's shoulder. "I leave you to go ahead. This afternoon I'll have these people brought down to my office for another questioning—maybe I can jog their memories a bit. . . . You've got some line of investigation planned?"

"The usual routine," replied Heath drearily. "I'll go through Odell's papers, and I'll have three or four of my men check up on her."

"You'd better get after the Yellow Taxicab company right away," Markham suggested. "Find out, if you can, who the man was who left her at half past eleven last night, and where he went."

"Do you imagine for one moment," asked Vance, "that if this man knew anything about the murder he would have stopped in the hall and asked the operator to call a taxi for him?"

"Oh, I don't look for much in that direction," Markham's tone was almost listless. "But the girl may have said something to him that'll give us a lead."

Vance shook his head facetiously. "O welcome pure-eyed Faith, white-banded Hope, thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings!"

Markham was in no mood for chaffing. He turned to Heath and spoke with forced cheerfulness.

"Call me up later this afternoon. I may get some new evidence out of the outfit we've just interviewed. . . . And," he added, "be sure to put a man on guard here. I want this apartment kept just as it is until we see a little more light."

"I'll attend to that," Heath assured him.

Markham and Vance and I went out and entered the car. A few minutes later we were winding rapidly across town through Central Park.

"Recall our recent conversation about footprints in the snow?" asked Vance, as we emerged into Fifth Ave. and headed south.

Markham nodded abstractedly.

"As I remember," mused Vance, "in the hypothetical case you presented there were not only footprints but a dozen or more witnesses—including a youthful prodigy—who saw a figure of some kind cross the hibernal landscape. . . . Here you are in a most beastly bother because of the disheartening fact that there are neither footprints in the snow nor witnesses who saw a fleeing figure. In short, you are bereft of both direct and circumstantial evidence. . . . Sad, sad."

He wagged his head dolefully. "You know, Markham, it appears to me that the testimony in this case constitutes conclusive legal proof that no one could have been with the deceased at the hour of her passing, and that, ergo, she is presumably alive. The strangled body of the lady, I take it, simply an irrelevant circumstance from the standpoint of legal procedure. I know that you learned lawyers won't admit a murder without a body; but how, in sweet Heaven's name, do you get around a corpus delicti without a murder?"

"You're talking nonsense," Markham rebuked him, with a show of anger.

"Oh, quite," agreed Vance. "And yet, it's a distressing thing for a lawyer not to have footprints of some kind, isn't it, old dear? It leaves one so up in the air."

Suddenly Markham swung round. "You, of course, don't need footprints, or any other kind of material clues," he flung at Vance tauntingly. "You have powers of divination such as breakfast," he decided, "I'll permit you to buy me some eggs Benedictine."

A few minutes later we entered the almost empty grill of the Stuyvesant Club, and took a table near one of the windows looking southward over the rooftops of Madison Square.

Shortly after we had given our order a uniformed attendant entered and, bowing deferentially at the district attorneys elbow, held out an unaddressed communication sealed in one of the club's envelopes. Markham read it with an expression of growing curiosity, and as he studied the signature a look of mild surprise came into his eyes. At length he looked up and nodded to the waiting attendant. Then, excusing himself, he left us abruptly. It was fully twenty minutes before he returned.

"Funny thing," he said. "That note was from the man who took the Odell woman to dinner and the theatre last night. . . . A small world," he mused. "He's staying here at the club—he's a non-resident member and makes it his headquarters when he's in town."

"You know him?" Vance put the question disinterestedly.

"I've met him several times—chap named Spotswoode." Markham seemed perplexed. "He's a man of family, lives in a country house on Long Island, and is regarded generally as a highly respectable member of society—one of the last persons I'd suspect of being mixed up with the Odell girl. But, according to his own confession, he played around a good deal with her during his visits to New York—'sowing a few belated wild oats,' as he expressed it—and last night took her to Francelle's for dinner and to the Winter Garden afterwards."

"Not my idea of an intellectual, or even edifyin', evening," commented Vance. "And he selected a deuced unlucky day for it. . . . I say, imagine opening the morning paper and learning that your petite dame of the preceding evening had been strangled! Disconcertin' what?"

"He's certainly disconcerted," said Markham. "The early afternoon papers were out about an hour ago, and he'd been phoning my office every ten minutes, when I suddenly walked in here. He's afraid his connection with are denied ordinary mortals. If I remember correctly, you informed me, somewhat grandiloquently, that, knowing the nature and conditions of a crime, you could lead me infallibly to the culprit, whether he left footprints or not. You recall the boast? . . . Well, here's a crime, and the perpetrator left no footprints coming or going. Be so good as to end my suspense by confiding in me who killed the Odell girl."

Vance's serenity was not ruffled by Markham's ill-mannered challenge. He sat smoking lazily for several minutes then he leaned over and flicked his cigaret ash out of the window.

"Pon my word, Markham," he joined evenly, "m half inclined to look into this silly murder. I think I'll wait though, and see whom the non-plussed Heath turns up with his inquiries."

Markham grunted scoffingly, and sank back on the cushions.

"Your generosity wrings me," he said.

(Tuesday, Sept. 11; afternoon)

On our way down town that morning we were delayed for a considerable time in the traffic congestion just north of Madison Square, and Markham anxiously looked at his watch.

"It's past noon," he said. "I think I'll stop at the club and have a bite of lunch. . . . I presume that eating at this early hour would be too rebellious for so exquisite a hothouse flower as you."

Vance considered the invitation. "Since you deprived me of my

the girl will leak out and disgrace him."

"And won't it?"

"I hardly see the necessity. No one knows who her escort was last evening; and since he obviously had nothing to do with the crime, what's to be gained by dragging him into it? He told me the whole story, and offered to stay in the city as long as I wanted him to."

"I infer, from the cloud of disappointment that enveloped you when you returned just now that his story held nothing hopeful for you in the way of clues."

"No," Markham admitted. "The girl apparently never spoke to him of her intimate affairs; and he couldn't give me a single helpful suggestion. His account of what happened last night agreed perfectly with Jessup's. He called for the girl at seven, brought her home at about eleven, stayed with her half an hour or so, and then left her."

"When he heard her call for help he was frightened, but on being assured by her there was nothing wrong, he concluded she had dozed off into a nightmare, and thought no more about it."

"He drove direct to the club here, arriving about ten minutes to twelve. Judge Redfern, who saw him descend from the taxi, insisted on his coming upstairs and playing poker with some men who were waiting in the judge's rooms for him. They played until three o'clock this morning."

Gran Berry's Doughnuts

Put into your sifter three cups bread flour, add to that two rounding teaspoons cream of tartar, one rounding teaspoon soda, one of salt, one-quarter teaspoon of nutmeg, same of ginger and cinnamon. Sift all into your mixing dishes. Now add one cup of sugar, the beaten yolks of two eggs (you may let a little of the whites go in) and one cup of milk. After this is beaten and stirred together add flour to make stiff enough to roll. Don't have them too soft. Roll about one-half inch in thickness, and please don't omit to shake the spider while they are rising. This makes them ever so much lighter. If sour milk is used, put in one teaspoon of cream of tartar and one of soda. You can use the whites of the eggs in many ways and if you don't wish to use them on the same day put them in a cool place, covered and they will keep a few days. I most always make a light cake or a Washington pie, using the whites, with one cup of sugar, one cup of milk, two cups of flour, two even teaspoons of cream of tartar, one even teaspoon of soda, any flavoring you like, and last, beat in a piece of butter the size of a large egg, melted.

Apple Sauce With Lemon

Peel four large green (cooking apples not too sour); cut up and put into pan with the smallest amount of water possible, over and cook. When cooked well take off and add, beating in about five good tablespoons of sugar. This depends on how sweet you care for it. Slice lemon thin, cut slices in halves and put on sauce (after you have put into serving dish and let cool). It is both decorative and tasty.

Creole Tomatoes

Four large tomatoes, 1 small onion, 2 chopped green peppers, 4 tablespoons butter or bacon drippings, 3 tablespoons flour, 1 cup milk.

Cut the tomatoes in halves and place in baking dish, cut side up, sprinkle with chopped onion and peppers, season with salt and pepper and a little of the butter or drippings on each tomato. Pour ½ pint water into pan and bake in quick oven until tomatoes are tender. Make a gravy of the remaining drippings, flour and milk, cook until thick. Place tomatoes on toast, and pour sauce around them. If gravy is too thick it can be thinned with the water in pan.

Navy is Essential Churchill States

Equality in Minor Craft Would Mean British Inferiority

WINNIPEG SPEAKER

Britain Growing in Wealth, Health and Power, He Says

Winnipeg.—Speaking here recently, Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, former Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the Baldwin Government, declared that most people were under the impression that Great Britain was down and out, and had seen her best days, but this was opposite to the true state of affairs.

"Britain," he asserted, "is steadily growing in wealth, health, power and education. There never was a time of such prosperity."

Referring to the "dole," Mr. Churchill quoted Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas' description of it as "The most perfect scheme for the support of the unemployed in any state or country." The speaker said the men drawing this money were the same men who paid the premiums into the "dole" fund in brighter times. Summing up the pessimistic reports of the unemployment situation, Mr. Churchill said: "There is nothing which would lead anyone to believe that these reports are true. The miners are the symbol of the power of our race, man-power and endurance."

REMAINED INTACT.

In opening, Mr. Churchill referred to himself as a traveller seeking knowledge, leisure and change. In the course of that search he spoke of having visited Winnipeg nearly 30 years ago. "What changes those years have seen," he continued. "In no similar period have war and science so affected mankind. The structures of empires have been swept away in Russia, Germany, Austria and Turkey, but we have come through intact, united and stronger than ever."

Mr. Churchill declared that the greatest interest of Great Britain was in the maintenance of peace. "We need it," he asserted. "Peace is our object and our aim." He quoted President Hoover's statement that "not in 50 years has the outlook for world peace been so bright."

Mr. Balfour had said that peace would continue in all civilized countries. The speaker spoke of subversive propaganda. "By the most artful means we would be coaxed into giving up our rights. Alarmist propaganda would frighten British statesmen, and even the people, into abandoning their rights."

NAVY ESSENTIAL

The British Navy, he declared, was essential and vital to the security of the Empire. "When our navy was supreme, did it abuse our power?" he inquired. (Cries of No.) By the agreement of 1921 the British and American battle fleets were made equal, Britain retaining her superiority in minor craft, an exception made necessary by the dissimilar positions of the nations, the United States compact in its vastness and self-sustaining, while three-quarters of the food consumed in Britain was dependent upon the maintenance of uninterrupted commerce on the seas.

"Equality," said Mr. Churchill, "in the minor craft would consequently mean British inferiority. That I should deeply regret. Yet I can see nothing which should prevent peace and goodwill between the two nations despite the disparity in minor naval craft."

He next dealt with Egypt, describing how that country had developed and prospered under British influence as contrasted to the condition of anarchy and barbarism which existed before British garrisons were established there. He predicted that when these garrisons were withdrawn to the Suez banks there would be a slow return of the country to the rack and ruin from which it had been rescued.

SINGAPORE BASE.

Speaking of Australia's dependence upon the Suez Canal as a link with the Empire, he said Singapore was simply a base designed to safeguard contact with Australia and New Zealand. Singapore was not a threat or menace to any nation, "least of all to our ally Japan." The British Empire would cease to be a reality if there were no physical navy to bind Australia and New Zealand to the other parts of the Empire. "By means of Singapore we return to them the protection that they gave us in the war. That is the only argument for Singapore."

DANGER OF "REDS."

Mr. Churchill spoke vigorously of the "new danger of Communism." "We must act with courage and repeat the old invocation: 'Briton, hold your own!'"

Communists, said Mr. Churchill, are not merely the representatives of a doctrine, but a planned campaign of destruction of existing institutions.

Mr. Churchill then dwelt with Dominion status. "United, we can meet all things and, therefore, why not hold together?" The Imperial Conference of 1926 swept away all obstacles in our minds. "All the self-governing Dominions have equal status; with one another and with the Mother Country. A self-governing Dominion of the Empire enjoys fuller freedom than one of the American states. We are held together firmly only by a spontaneous and voluntary allegiance. It is your crown and our Empire, even as it is ours. Guard it and cherish it as it has guarded and cherished you."

Continuing, he said: "Other nations may look on our Empire and say: 'It will not last.' But, it has lasted you. It has passed through those fires built to encompass its destruction. The ties of Empire are duty, sentiment and tradition. The ordinary citizen helps forward the cause of Empire. It is the golden circle of the Crown that links us to the power which the British Empire has founded for the joy, peace and glory of mankind."

CHARMED BY LAKE.

Kenora, Ont.—Fascinated like the leader of Britain's Labor Government, by the beauties of the Lake of the Woods, Rt. Hon. W. S. Churchill, former Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Baldwin Government, arrived in Kenora recently for a brief visit, and in his own characteristic Churchill way, "wanted to buy an island and right away."

Arriving by special train, Mr. Churchill and his party were taken for a most enjoyable trip on the Lake of the Woods, and like Premier Ramsay MacDonald, he was at once captivated by the beauties of the lake, and became most enthusiastic. Mr. MacDonald may or may not have established a precedent in praising the Lake of the Woods, but Mr. Churchill was, if possible, more enthusiastic, and his desire to "purchase an island" was most emphatic and most sincere.

After visiting the summer home of James Richardson, the party viewed various beauty spots on the lake, returning to the summer home of Hon. and Mrs. Robert Rogers.

They returned by special train to Winnipeg at 2:30 p.m. Kenora citizens are hoping that at some none too far distant date they will be able to welcome the distinguished statesman again to Kenora, not only as a visitor, but as a summer resident.

British Win Air Race at 328-Mile Pace

Retain Schneider Cup as Waghorn Flies 217.49 Miles in 39½ Minutes; Italy Second at 248 M.P.H.

Ryde Peirhead, Isle of Wight.—Flying six miles a minute at times to attain the world's record speed of an average of 328.663 miles an hour for the 217.33-mile course, Waghorn, the "baby" of Great Britain's high speed seaplane team, retained for his country the coveted Schneider trophy.

The first starter in the contest for the blue ribbon of aviation, he completed the seven circuits of the course marked out between England and the Isle of Wight in 39 minutes 42.45 seconds in the Supermarine Rolls-Royce S-6, the Blue Rocket. In doing so and in making the new average record for the course he surpassed the previous average record of Flight Lieutenant S. N. Webster, of Great Britain, made in 1927, by 47.14 miles an hour. Waghorn competed against two other English navy fliers and three Italians.

Flying officer R. R. Atcherley, another British aviator, in a plane like Waghorn's, gained another record for his country by flying two laps at an average speed of 332.23 miles an hour, the fastest speed ever officially credited to man.

Atcherley completed the course at 325.45 miles an hour but was subsequently disqualified by the judges for not rounding the pylon off Bembridge, Isle of Wight.

Second Place to Italy

Italy captured second place with the Macchi-Fiat M. 52, piloted by Quartermaster Tomaso dal Molin, with an average speed of 284.20 miles an hour.

Third place was won for Great Britain by Flight Lieutenant d'Arcy Greig, with an average of 282.11 miles an hour. His Supermarine-Napier S-5, and dal Molin's plane, had been flown at Venice in the 1927 contest.

Italy's wonder Macchi seaplane did not do so well, as both Lieutenants Remo Cadrigher and Giovanni Monti were forced down just after completing the first lap.

Radio in Canada May Be Changed By Board Report

Royal Commission Named to Study Conditions Expected to Make Drastic Changes

Considering Three Plans Government Control of Stations Believed Favored

Montreal.—Within a short time it is expected that the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into radio broadcasting will submit its report to the Federal government, which, after consideration, will prepare for the coming session of Parliament what legislation is necessary to carry out the recommendations/ acceptable to the government.

That some rather drastic reform in the Canadian radio situation will be recommended by the commission is a view widely held, particularly by those with an intimate knowledge of radio broadcasting conditions in the Dominion.

It is generally assumed that some form of government control and operation will be recommended, and that some such move will meet with favor from the government. Such a system, if and when adopted, would involve a severe reduction in the number of existing stations, and would also involve a considerable increase in the power of the stations retained.

Up to the end of last month there were altogether seventy-eight broadcasting stations in Canada. Of these, only a few are high powered and serving an area of any considerable extent. A large number of them are very small, with only a local and extremely limited appeal. These, it is held, are of little service to any community, large or small, and in the interests of better programs and of useful service should, and probably will, be taken over by the government, some to be merged into larger stations and others to be scrapped.

The commission had before it three possible plans to be considered in the drafting of a report, namely, establishment of one or more groups of stations operated by private enterprise in receipt of a government subsidy; establishment and operation of stations by a government-owned and financed company, and the establishment and operation by provincial governments.

Whatever course is recommended, and it is believed the second is the most probable, many difficulties are presented. One is the fact that one province, Manitoba, now has a system controlled and operated by the Provincial government, with stations at Winnipeg and Regina. Another is the large number of small private enterprises now in existence, and whose vested interest has to be carefully considered when providing for complete Federal government operation. Some of them may be used as feeders to the larger stations.

The commission, it is known, is deeply impressed with the wide and insistent public demand for better programs, particularly of Canadian and British origin. Not only will aggressive measures be adopted for the improvement, through subsidy and other means, of purely Canadian programs, but some provisions will also be made for British programs. While some of these are now being picked up on the short wave lengths of certain Canadian stations and then relayed to their listeners, an even more systematic effort to provide with all possible regularity British programs is almost certain to be made. Stress will be laid, too, upon providing programs of an educational character, such as are provided in the European countries, and for exchange of Canadian stuff as between widely separated provinces, such as British Columbia and Nova Scotia or New Brunswick.

While there are now nearly eighty broadcasting stations in Canada, there would have been many more but for the careful scrutiny of the Department of Marine, which sought to assure the greatest service to the largest number of people. As many as one hundred applications for further licenses have been held up by the department, some of them pending the results of the Royal Commission's inquiry.

World War Shows the Way

France Rebuilds Fortresses to Guard Eastern Frontier

Paris.—France is steadily rebuilding that iron belt of fortresses along her eastern frontier which she regards as indispensable to her safety, it was revealed in an interview here with Paul Painlevé, Minister of War.

Lessons of the World War have been drawn upon in the new fortifications, with the result that deep caves, capable of protecting large bodies of troops from the heaviest shells, form an important feature of the new system.

Verdun remains the key point of frontier defense, the Minister of War said, with a long line of smaller fortresses supplementing that defense, each related in a strategic plan to the others, and with vantage points ready for the artillery in the rear.

Painlevé does not support the theory that a line of timber land is a valuable defense in modern war, insisting that the concealment it would afford the enemy would equal the advantages it would give the defenders.

He concluded his interview with an appeal for the defense of French children as the best defense of the country.

"Preaching about more children will not raise the birth rate," he said. "We must concentrate all our efforts to reduce infant mortality to a minimum."

Winnipeg, Manitoba.—J. M. McKay, general agricultural agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway here, announces the intention of the company to again offer four cups to the Boys' and Girls' Swine Clubs located along the railway's lines in each of the four western provinces. In addition the winning teams in each province will be taken to Toronto, to the Royal Winter Fair, as guests of the railway.

Combines Cut Costs Saskatchewan Harvest While

Smaller Will be More Economically Harvested with Modern Machinery

Regina, Sask.—Saskatchewan is going cheerfully about its harvest operations.

The crop is short. In bushelage it may not be much more than half the big crop that ripened in 1928.

But harvesting methods are cheaper, and there is a better price for all contract grades, as well as feed.

Significant facts are stressed while harvest operations are at their peak.

One thing is that old methods of harvesting have definitely passed from the picture.

Combines have come into general usage and intelligent farmers are buying modern machinery and saving harvest costs this year.

For nearly two decades, Regina has been the greatest distributing point for farm machinery in the British Empire.

Value of farm machinery distributed runs to $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 each year.

Distribution of combines this year is in keeping with the fast pace set during the past two years.

Another significant fact is the superiority of summer fallow over stubble in grain yield.

J. J. Heenan, Grand Coulee, has just won Regina's Board of Trade prize for fine wheat stands.

He farms a section in a country which is far from running water.

His patch of Marquis wheat is expected to yield well over 30 bushels to the acre.

Other Grand Coulee farmers were among the leaders in the Regina competition.

Wheat grown on summer fallow land won the big prizes in the Regina district.

It is apparent that in districts where stubble land this year will probably yield not more than 10 or 12 bushels to the acre, summer fallow crop will be higher than 30 bushels.

The West cannot expect a 500,000,000 bushel crop every year.

Hail, frost, rust and drought must be taken with years of bumper crops.

But progressive farmers are finding that modern methods of sowing and harvesting grain are best.

Air Ministry and Builders Reply to Criticism of Inferiority

COMPARISON ABSURD

Dimensions and Capacity of Vessels Shown by Figures

London.—Officials of the Air Ministry, and the firm concerned with the construction of the airship R-100, have had their attention drawn to a report, hinting at an official admission that the R-101 and the R-100 are inferior to the Graf Zeppelin.

They say that, in the first case, it is absurd to attempt to compare a craft, built for a different purpose and of vastly greater size and capacity, which is not to be tested for some time to come, with the Graf Zeppelin.

They express a complete disbelief that anyone in authority would be so unwise as to express any opinion on the matter, and say that they themselves have no knowledge of anything approaching an official verdict having even been considered.

Immense Difference

There is an immense difference between the new British airships and the Zeppelin, which is shown by the following figures: Length in feet of the R-101, 732; R-100, 709; Graf Zeppelin, 772; (diameter in the same order): 131 feet, 133 feet, 100 feet. The maximum of all three, eighty miles per hour. Cruising speed 70, 71.5 and 63 miles. Range, with normal payload, 3,000 miles, 3,500 miles and 6,250. Normal lay load of British ships is 100 passengers and mails while Graf Zeppelin carries 20 passengers and 15 tons of freight.

Total displacement 151 tons, 156 tons and 107 tons, total horsepower 3,250, 4,200 and 26,650. British ships have 5,000,000 cubic feet capacity which is several times that of the Zeppelin. These figures indicate the absurdity of any comparison and this is emphasized by the fact that no one can possibly know, until after their trials, what the British Airships' actual performance will be. However, in estimated speeds, size and carrying capacity the British ships exceed the Zeppelin. As far as range is concerned, it is quite possible with favoring winds, they may far surpass the range officially set as their limit.

Undoubtedly engine development during construction of the British ships was not as far advanced as was expected. Presumably this is the basis for the alleged disappointment.

Vatican to Close Bathing Beach

Scant Clad Dancers Shock Church Powers So They Buy Beach to do Away With Sun Baths and Too Few Clothes

Rome.—Young couples who have been indulging in a convenient habit dancing in bathing costumes at the fashionable seaside resort, Fregene, 20 miles from Rome, are being subjected to strong criticism, because the girls' costumes are too scant.

The Osservatore Romano, the papal organ, is starting a campaign against what is called "women's altogether extravagant behavior on the seaside," and it appears now that the Vatican is determined to buy the whole Fregene estate, which consists of three miles of sandy beach and huge pine woodland.

It will be turned into a special seaside resort for ecclesiastics, Catholic schools and all moral people who bathe only for bathing's sake. Only costumes buttoned up to the throat and showing as little as possible of the skin will be allowed. There will be a ban on dancing, sun baths, lying half naked on the sand, and spooning under the moon.

Fregene was to be the Italian Neuville and had already grown into a most fashionable place, with lovely cottages amidst pine trees, restaurants, and a long range of cabins on the beach, but it will now become the dullest place on earth.

Fire which broke out in the Foundry in the early morning Thursday, completely destroyed the oldest and one of the leading industries of the Village of Morrisburg, known as the Morash Foundry Co. The alarm was sounded about one a.m., but when discovered, the fire had gained considerable headway, and it was apparent by the time the fire brigade arrived at the scene, that to save the building or any of its contents was impossible. The firemen therefore devoted their efforts and were successful in saving the surrounding buildings. The loss is partly covered by insurance, and it is understood that the Company will put up a new building on the same street.
