OBITUARY

JUDGE JOHNSTON

On Friday of last week, at his residence in Vankleek Hill, the death occurred of His Honor Judge Adam Johnston, junior judge of the counties of Prescott and Russell. Although he had suffered from heart trouble for the last year, his condition only became serious within the past month.

A Liberal in politics, Judge Johnston was known throughout the country as one of the cleverest of its lawyers, and was prominent generally as a public man of learning. His death will be a great loss.

Deceased was born in Williamsburg in 1854. He was educated in Morrisburg Collegiate Institute and later Toronto University, from which he received his degree of B. A. in 1877, LL.B. in 1881, and his final degree in law in 1882. While at the university he was awarded a gold medal for classics, the Prince of Wales' medal for general proficiency, and a silver medal for languages.

Judge Johnston was for several years principal of the Gananoque Collegiate Institute, and for many years was town solicitor in Morrisburg, where he practiced law. At the general elections in 1887, 1891, 1896 and 1900 he contested the County of Dundas as a Liberal He married some years ago, the widow of Dr. Colquhoun, of Howick, Ontario, and in 1904 was appointed to the judgeship, in which capacity he acted until his death.

In religion, Judge Johnston was a Presbyterian. He is survived by his widow, two sons, David and John; two brothers, William, city solicitor, Toronto, and Dr. Johnston, of Iroquois, and two step sons, Allen and George Colquhoun, of Ottawa.

The remains arrived at the G.T. R. station here on Monday and were conveyed to the Williamsburg Presbyterian Church, where impressive services were conducted by Rev. Hugh Cameron, assisted by Rev. D. A. Ferguson. Interment at Williamsburg cemetery.

The pall bearers were I. Hilliard, K.C., M.P.P., J. S. Jamieson, D. C. Bush, W. H. McGannon, A. F. Merkley and Dr. McLaughlin.

Among prominent men who attended the funeral from Cornwall were Judge O'Reilly, Judge Liddle, and Mr. George A. Styles.

Sir Charles Tupper Dead

Ottawa, Oct. 30.—A cablegram from Sir George Perley to Sir Robert Borden announced the death of Sir Charles Tupper in England.

Sir Charles Tupper was born at Amherst, Nova Scotia, on July 2, 1821. He was educated for the medical profession and graduated from Acadia University, afterwards completing a course in Edinburgh University. He early entered political life and was fourteen consecutive times elected to the Dominion Parliament for his native county, Cumberland, Nova Scotia, representing the constituency for thirty one years. He was premier of the Province of Nova Scotia at the time of Confederation of which he was one of the Fathers, and declined a seat in the first Dominion Cabinet. He was sworn in as a member of the Privy Council in 1870 and was its president in 1870 and 1872. The portfolio of Minister of Inland Revenue came in him in 1872 and he held it until 1873, when he became Minister of Public Works in 1878 and continued in that office until 1879, when he assumed the post of Minister of Railways and Canals, which he held until 1884.

His next post of duty was as High Commissioner for Canada in England, which he occupied from 1883 till 1887, when he returned to Canada to assume the responsibilities of Minister of Finance, which occupied his attention for the next year. He was then re-appointed High Commissioner and continued in that position until 1896, when he again returned to Canada, this time to assume the Premiership. After the election of 1896, he was leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons until 1901, when he was succeeded by Sir Robert Borden.

Sir Charles Tupper was created first Baronet in 1888, G.C.M.G., in 1886, K.C.M.G., in 1879, C. B. in 1867, was a D.C.L. and an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge, Edinburg, and Acadia Universities.

After his retirement he lived in Vancouver for some years, going from there to England where he died.

A "SLICK" PAIR

On Monday, Nov. 1st., a pair of "Would-be holidayers" probably more "slick" than innocent, strolled along the G.T.R. tracks into Aultsville, where they were halted by the Militia at that point, and upon being questioned it was found that there was sufficient reason to apprehend the suspicious characters, and they were consequently brought before Col. A. G. F. Macdonald and Customs Officer Drew, of this place, for preliminary hearing, which revealed that the men were of German descent and carried cards of identification from their employers in Montreal. Upon being questioned they said they were from Montreal, and had left that place but recently and were on their way to Toronto for a holiday, intending to return to Montreal where they were supposed to report every two weeks. After hearing the story, the officers came to the conclusion that the evidence warranted their arrest and ordered that they be returned to Montreal under escort of Capt. Glascow, where they will be given a further hearing.

About the Household

Dainty Dishes.

Lemon Jelly.—Make the jelly by using the juice of 2 lemons and the rind of 1 grated, 3 eggs, butter size of an egg, and 1 cup of white sugar, thicken over the fire, but do not let it boil. This is nice for tarts, which should be made of puff paste.

Yorkshire Pudding.—One pint of sweet milk, 2 eggs, 5 tablespoons of flour; salt to taste. Mix eggs, flour and salt with a little milk until smooth, then add the rest of the milk gradually. Pour the mixture into a well-buttered dripping pan and bake 15 minutes in a tolerably hot oven. This is nice served with roast beef or poultry.

Cabbage Slaw.—Take a small head of cabbage, wash well, cut very fine with a slaw cutter or a knife of any kind. Take two small onions, peel and cut fine, mix with the cabbage, then season with salt, pepper, and vinegar to taste. Now take an extra dish and mix three good-sized tablespoons of thick cream with one tablespoon of sugar and mix with the slaw. This is delicious, especially if kept cold till serving time.

Bread Sauce for Game.—Cook half pint of soft, stale bread-crumbs, a pint of milk, one good-sized onion chopped very fine, a saltspoonful of ground mace, a saltspoon of paprika and a level teaspoon of salt for five minutes in a double boiler; stir constantly. The mixture must be perfectly smooth. Add a rounding tablespoon of butter; stir until melted; then add four tablespoons of thick cream and use at once for game or roasted guinea fowl.

A Substitute for Whipped Cream.—Sometimes one wishes to serve a dish that calls for whipped cream when neither the cream nor the time for whipping it are available. An excellent substitute is made by beating the white of an egg to a stiff froth, adding a ripe banana cut into very thin slices and beating until the banana is only a pulp evenly distributed through the egg. The result is a creamy delicacy that can be used in any recipe that calls for whipped cream.

Turkish Rolls.—Pound one cup blanched almonds to a paste, put into a double boiler with one pint of milk, a pinch of saffron and a tablespoon of sugar, a scant teaspoon salt and a tablespoon rounded of butter. Heat to scalding, remove from fire and when lukewarm add one-half cake yeast dissolved in a little water. Add sifted flour to make a soft dough and knead ten minutes. Put into a warmed earthenware bowl and cover until light; make into very small, long rolls, place an inch apart in greased pans to rise, then brush with beaten white of an egg and sprinkle with finely minced almonds. Bake in a quick oven.

Pot Roast.—The genuine pot roast is brown and rich and juicy, being cooked wholly in its own gravy and without any added water. A four to six pound is a nice size to cook properly. Select a piece with enough fat on it to furnish richness. Also add a small piece of beef suet. Heat an iron kettle until it is hot enough to sear the meat at once, then drop the suet and the meat into the kettle and turn over from side to side until the whole is seared so that the juices will not escape. Do not let the roast burn, turn often enough to prevent that but let it roast to a deep brown. Add no water for the meat will cook thoroughly in its own gravy. Do not have too hot a fire. Three to three and one-half hours of slow cooking should do the meat to a turn. If it is desired to serve browned potatoes with the roast, remove the meat when cooked, add water to the gravy and drop the potatoes (either Irish or sweet) into the gravy and let them cook as usual. Season both meat and potatoes to suit the taste.

Household Hints.

Coarse salt is an excellent cleanser of irons.

Cheaper cuts of meat always require more cooking.

Good milk, eggs and butter are necessities, not luxuries.

Salt in cold water will remove blood stains from linen.

A tiny pinch of salt added to eggs makes them froth more quickly.

A lump of sugar dropped into milk will prevent its turning sour, it is said.

Glass or china can be safely packed if damp straw or hay is used for packing material.

A large glass bottle makes a good receptacle for buttons. By shaking the bottle you can see whether you have the button desired without taking all out.

Sugar forms about 70 per cent. of honey; it is derived from natural sugars by inversion, and is more easily digested in this form than cane sugar.

Before washing lace curtains run a narrow strip of muslin or tape along each outer edge. This will keep them perfectly straight, and will keep them from stretching at the edge.

Tar may be removed from any washing dress by spreading butter on the tar. This should be left for an hour or two to soak well in, and should afterwards be washed in the ordinary way, when all trace of tar will be gone.

Cane chairs that have become slack can be tightened by rubbing them with salt and water. Turn them upside down and put them in the sun and air to dry. They will be found to have tightened up like new articles.

When the butcher has cut the roast too heavy, ask him to cut off thin slices for steaks. Have the pan very hot, put in a piece of suet to make the pan greasy and fry steak quickly. The meat has a very good flavor.

The best and simplest way to test silk is to cut off a small piece and burn it. If it burns out quickly, leaving a clear, crisp, grey ash, the silk is pure; but if it smoulders and leaves a heavy, reddish-brown ash, the material has been treated with chemicals and will not wear well.

To destroy the smell of paint place pails of cold water—which should be changed daily—in the rooms that are being painted. It lessens the annoying smell considerably. If you live in the country and can get hay put a handful of hay into the water, as this also helps to absorb the smell.

Quite a number of people find porridge made in the ordinary way most unpalatable, but here is a hint that will make the mixture one of the most sought after breakfast dishes. Put the water into your pan. Add a beaten egg and mix well in before sprinkling the oatmeal. Then boil and salt as usual.

Macaroni in Variety.

Macaroni with White Sauce. — Break the macaroni in one inch pieces, three-fourths of a cup, wash, roll and cook in salted water, then drain. For the sauce, melt four tablespoons of butter in a sauce pan. When it begins to fry add four tablespoons of flour and stir until well blended. Then stir in gradually while beating two cups of scalded milk, bring to the boiling point, add salt, the macaroni and let simmer for a minute before serving.

Baked Macaroni with Cheese.—Boil the macaroni in hot water as directed. (It should first be broken in inch lengths.) Put a layer of the macaroni in the bottom of baking dish, then a layer of grated cheese, add pepper and salt, repeat with another layer of crackers and cheese. Put bits of butter over the top, add enough milk to nearly cover the food and bake in the oven until a rich brown. Serve with crackers or toast.

Macaroni Cutlets.—Cook a half cup of macaroni broken in small pieces, drain and make a sauce as follows: Melt two and a half tablespoons of butter and add one-third cup of flour. Stir until well mixed. Pour this gradually into a cup of hot milk. Add one-fourth cup of grated cheese, and season with salt and pepper. Cool and shape in the form of cutlets, roll in bread or cracker crumbs, dip in beaten egg then in the crumbs again and fry in plenty of hot fat to brown nicely.

THE ORIENTAL FATALIST.

An Incident in a Caravan Journey to Bokhara.

We were standing round a small fire,—wrote Arminius Vambery, the Hungarian linguist and traveller, in his account of a caravan journey to Bokhara,—when we were startled by two reports from firearms and the loud yelling of some person who was badly hurt. The whole caravan was alarmed, and we all ran to the rear, where we found one of our companions with a shattered arm.

The cause of the affray was this: Several horsemen who were conveying the annual taxes from Shiraz to Teheran had come up with two Jewish shopkeepers, whom they first insulted and then started to assault, when a Persian of our company interfered. One of the horsemen became so enraged that he lifted his rifle and shot at the Jews. He afterwards declared that he had intended to frighten one of the Jews by shooting through his cap, but he missed his aim and hit the Persian's arm.

The incident so exasperated the whole caravan that our men pursued the culprit and brought him back securely tied. The poor wretch was given such a beating that he was unable to walk, and was placed with his victim on one of the caravan mules. Left to themselves, the would-be murderer and his victim became quite friendly. They tied up each other's wounds, consoled one another, and went so far in their newborn friendship as to kiss each other; for according to the Eastern way of thinking, neither of them was to be held responsible for what had happened. Fate had willed it.

She Knew Better.

Wifey (during storm)—Gracious! That was an awful clap of thunder; it frightened me terribly."

Hubby—Nonsense, my dear. Thunder can't hurt you.

Wifey—Indeed! Didn't you ever hear of people being thunderstruck?

Hard to be Good.

Ted—Why are you in such a hurry to get married?

Ned—Before she'd accept me, I had to promise to stop drinking and smoking.

An Unrehearsed Effect

"How long have you been in this firm?"

"Forty-four years next month, sir. I was sixteen when old Mr. Malcolm took me on as office boy."

Mr. Richard Burton sat in his office chair polishing his nails. It was the second day of his rule there. For the sum of several thousand pounds he had acquired the very substantial old family business of Malcolm, Baker, & Co., Solicitors, of Lincoln's Inn Fields, and he was in process of setting his new property in order.

His notepaper still bore the legend Malcolm, Baker, & Co., but old Mr. Malcolm, who had been the founder of the firm, and Mr. Baker, his successor, had long since been dead, and Co. had retired, with a very substantial bank balance, to a country estate.

"You are too old," he said shartly. "Thirty years too old. I want young men, young blood. Copying clerks are no use to me. If you could work a typewriter—but there, you can't, so there is no purpose to be served in talking about it."

The old clerk, in the faded black alpaca coat, with the quill pen behind his ear, stared at him.

"I beg your pardon, sir. I don't think I heard what you said."

Mr. Burton looked up impatiently.

"I sha'n't require your services any longer. I have got no use for you here, and, of course, I have got to consider the business."

Business was business with Mr. Richard Burton. His was no namby-pamby philosophy of life. He forgave an injury, if no immediate means of repaying it was possible, but he never forgave. "Do, or you will be done," was his motto.

What he demanded of life was cold, calculating efficiency — that would help him to make money. He was wont to say, with a grim smile of pride, that he left his heart outside his office door when he opened it of a morning, and only used his head during those crowded hours of professional exertion. The statement suggested that he gave free play to more humane sentiments beyond the region of Lincoln's Inn Fields, but his life supplied not one tittle of evidence in support of this hypothesis.

"After forty years' loyal service!" the old clerk stammered.

Mr. Burton closed his penknife with a click, and dropped it into the pocket of his white waistcoat.

"You were paid for your loyalty, I suppose But I don't want a sentimental lecture. You are no use to me, so you have got to go!"

Charles Newcome clutched at his old-fashioned collar with one white, transparent hand as if he was suffocating for want of breath.

"Neither Mr. Malcolm nor Mr. Baker would have treated me like this," he mumbled. "They were gentlemen."

Mr. Burton's hand went out to the electric bell on his desk, and his cashier—one of the new clerks—presented himself instantly.

"Pay this man the week's money which he hasn't earned, and turn him off!" he said shortly.

Charles Newcome turned clowly on his heel, and followed the cashier into the outer office. Like a man in a dream he received the few shillings which were due to him, and, still with the same feeling of unreality, he closed his old familiar desk, packed his apalca coat in a little brown bag, took his hat from the peg, and with his umbrella under his arm, walked out into the square.

It was only when he was on the pavement and looked at the office that he realized what had happened.

The long chain of custom that linked him with the time when he was a boy of sixteen to that moment when he was sixty, was broken for ever. No more would he tread those familiar stairs that led up to the offices of Malcolm, Baker, and Co. The doors were closed against him, and what had been the main episode of his life had been cut abruptly short.

The afternoon light was waning as he tottered out of the square. What was he to do? Where was he to go? How could he, a man of his age, find other employment?

He was a bachelor, old and friendless, for he had lived almost wholly with and for his work. His one relative—a sister ten years younger than himself—had died a widow. He had been very fond of her only daughter, Mary, but he had been unable to help her himself, and she had disappeared years ago under the care of her father's relations.

The landlady of his lodgings might be sorry for him, but as for helping him, that was out of the question. And what was he to do?

He walked aimlessly down Kingsway, staring vacantly into shop windows for ten minutes together, his poor old brain dazed and stunned. He was trying to think, trying to frame some plan of action; but his mind, accustomed to tread one beaten path, refused now to deviate from its familiar track.

He had wandered heedlessly into the Strand, and suddenly somebody bumped against him, sending him back against the window of a shop.

"Beg your pardon, Mr. Milestones," said a cheery voice, "but you shouldn't start playing blind-man's buff in the middle of London!"

Mr. Newcome found himself staring stupidly at a smiling vision in furs.

"I'm sorry, madam, but you are mistaken," he stammered. "I'm not Mr. Milestones; my name is Newcome!"

He saw a pair of dancing eyes and a flashing gleam of white teeth between red, divinely-curved lips, and then to his amazement this gorgeous creature started forward and caught his arm.

"Newcome!" she exclaimed. "Surely I can't be mistaken; it must be Uncle Charley! Why, I remember you perfectly now. You haven't chanked a bit—exactly the same kind, dear old I'm-looking-for-something-but-I-shall-never-find-it face that I used to know as a kiddie."

"Mary!" he gasped. "You don't mean to say that you are Mary?"

She laughed, but there was something more than laughter in the sound. She was smiling sweetly, but there was a mist in her dark eyes.

"You must come and see the show, Uncle Charley," she said. "I've got to hustle now, or I'll be late. And afterwards you shall have supper with me."

Charles Newcome presently found himself sitting in the stalls of a treatre with no clear conception of how he got there. There were a lot of superbly dressed people—gentlemen in evening-dress, almost as splendid as old Mr. Malcolm, who represented for him the highest standard of taste and luxury.

Then the curtain went up, the band played, and he became conscious of a sudden roar of applause in the house, and there, to his utter astonishment, in the middle of the stage stood Mary—his little niece Mary !

He leant forward in his seat in open-mouthed wonder. And gradually the wonder gave place to pride. How the people cheered; they would hardly let the play go on, so often did they encore her. How sweetly she sang What lovely dresses she wore! How beautiful she looked!

And more than once he found her looking at him, nodding at him, winking at him with that wonderful wink of hers, and his cheeks flushed with pride.

At last the play was out; an official came to fetch him from the stalls. He waited some moments in a mysterious eerie place in the wings, and then finally Mary appeared.

"Now, you dear old thing, we'll go and have supper, and you shall tell me what you thought of the play," she said, squeezing his arm.

The supper took place in what Charles Newcome at first thought must be Buckingham Palace. He had never in his life seen so much gilt, so many liveried servants with powdered heads, or so many dazzling lights. And Mary walked through this amazing place like a queen, holding his arm, quite at home, apparently.

At the door of a private room a magnificent flunkey, carrying a costly bouquet of roses, stopped them, and said something to Mary which the old man could not hear.

"Oh, bother him!" she said. "Tell him to run away and play! I've got a much nicer companion for supper tonight!"

Then, after supper, Mary leant across the table towards him.

"Now, Uncle Charley, tell me all about yourself. What have you been doing all these years?"

Soon the old man found himself pouring out into Mary's ears the whole story of his griefs.

"Ner you mind, you dear old thing!" Mary answered. "It's time you rested. You shall come and live with me and look after me, and never do another stroke of work in your life. But, I say, I should like to know who this particular beast was who turned you off like that."

"Mr. Richard Burton," he answered.

"What!" she exclaimed, with a start. "Mr. Richard Burton, of Merioneth Place, Hyde Park?"

He nodded.

"Right!" she cried, springing to her feet. "Well, you sit tight, Uncle Charley, and you'll see some fun. Here, you, come here!"

She addressed the last remark to the liveried flunkey who had just entered the room.

"You can go and tell that gentleman that I'll see him after all. Bring him here. I've got a little surprise for him!"

She sat down again, picking up the bouquet of red roses as she did so, her eyes on the door. Presently it opened, and a man in evening-dress entered the room with a smirk of satisfaction. Mr. Newcome looked up; then the spoon that he held dropped from his hand. The man was Mr. Richard Burton.

"Hello! How do you do?" Mary said. "I thought I'd just like to see you. You know my uncle, I think."

Mr. Burton turned, and the old clerk and his late employer stared blankly at one another.

"Mr. Newcome! Really, I'd no idea he was your uncle, Miss Burnelle. Most interesting!"

"Thought it would surprise you," Mary said brightly. "And I've got something else that will make you fizz a bit. See these flowers you sent me?"

He looked at them, smiling, waiting to receive his reward of thanks. Mary picked up the bouquet, and, rising with easy grace, walked up to him, and struck him across the face.

"That's just to show you what I think of your flowers and you!" she cried. "You turned that poor old man out of his job, did you? You hadn't any more use for him, hadn't you? That he was faithful and loyal didn't matter. He was just an old, worn-out machine, and you scrapped him, you cold-hearted brute!"

She punctuated her remarks with blows. Mr. Richard Burton backed towards the door, his face scratched and bleeding where the wire that held together the bouquet had torn the skin.

"You cad!" Mary went on. "There, take your flowers, and never let me see your face again!"

She flung the ruins of the bouquet after him as he fled through the door. Then, turning, she ran to her uncle, and put her arms round his neck. Her cheek was close to his, and he felt that tears were pouring from her eyes.

"I'm only crying because I feel so happy with myself," she said. "That's the best unrehearsed part I have ever played. And I won't let anyone be cruel to you ever again, Uncle Charley—no, never, you dear old thing!"—London Answers.

HISTORY OF GREAT STRUGGLE.

Photographing the War on the Fighting Line.

One of the French soldiers killed at the taking of Metzeral, in Alsace, belonged to a branch of the army service, organized 10 months of war, called the "photographic section," which is now officially photographing the war. Its role is artistic, historical and educational. Although the staff is military, it also is serving the Foreign Office and the Department of Public Instruction.

General Joffre, Messieurs Millerand, Minister of War; Delcasse, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Sarraul, Minister of Public Instruction, aided by the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the Chamber of Deputies and the Foreign Office, collaborated in its organization. The operators are all mobilized men, and, as at Metzeral, are on the fighting line taking pictures, which, with orders, reports, plans and other documents, will hereafter constitute the historical section of the General Staff.

For the fine arts section and the educational department it is intended thus to make a complete collection of photographs of destroyed or damaged public monuments of great artistic value, and in general to furnish a sort of illustrated annex to the history of the war for the instruction of future generations.

These official photographers during the seven days' bombardment of Metzeral took 3000 negatives.

A sales department has been organized to put on the market copies of all the photographs that the censor authorizes to be duplicated.

IS THIS KAISER'S NUMBER?

Surprising Combination of Revelation and Arithmetic.

The following ingenious attempt to prove that the Kaiser is the "beast" mentioned in Rev. 13, is taken from an old country paper:

"Take the letters of the Kaiser's name and arrange them one under the other; then to the right of each letter put down the number of each letter as it stands in the alphabet; after that put the figure six; carry these figures into another column, and add the total together, thus:

K	11	6	116
A	1	6	16
I	9	6	96
S	19	6	196
E	5	6	56
R	18	6	186
			666

Then refer to the 13th chapter of Revelations, 4th, 5th and 18th verses. The answer will be surprising, and, it is hoped, prophetic.

The verses referred to run as follows:

"And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? Who is able to make war with him?

"And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.

"Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred, three score and six."

His Debauch.

"Emmett Whillikens just nacher'ly prized up heck while his wife was away, didn't he?"

"Gosh! I should say so!" replied a prominent citizen of Petunia. "Why, he had a gang of fellers at his house 'most every night till 9.30, drinkin' elderberry wine , playing dominoes and listenin' to dance tunes on the phonograph!"

Exactly.

LOOKING OLD TOO SOON

The Condition of Too Many Women and Too Many Girls.

Too many women and too many girls look old long before they should. Their faces become pale and drawn; wrinkles appear and their eyes lack brightness. Can this be wondered at when they so frequently have headaches, backaches and a general feeling of wretchedness and weakness? In most cases it is the blood that is to blame. From one cause or another the blood has become thin and watery, and it is a fact that anaemia (bloodlessness) more than any other cause, gives women this prematurely aged appearance. It is important that the blood supply of girls and women be regularly replenished—important not only on the score of looks, but to restore robust health, which is of greater value. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood and restore the system shattered by overwork or worry. These pills give a glow of health to pale faces and make tired, weary women and girls feel bright and happy. With Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at hand there is no need for any woman or any girl to look ill or feel ill. Mrs. J. McDonald, jr., Hay, Ont., says: "I honestly believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life. Some years ago I had anaemia, and as I did not realize the seriousness of the trouble I soon became a complete wreck. I got so weak I could hardly walk. I neither ate nor slept well, and could not go upstairs without stopping to rest. At times I had an almost unbearable pain in my back and would have to remain in bed. I suffered almost constantly from a dull headache, and when sweeping if I would stoop to pick up anything I would get so dizzy that I would have to catch hold of something to keep from falling. At times my heart would beat so fast that I would have a smothering sensation. My eyes were sunken and my hands and limbs would be swollen in the mornings. I tried several kinds of medicine without benefit and my friends thought I would not recover. Then I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before long could see and feel that they were helping me. I gladly continued the use of the pills until I was completely cured and I cannot say enough in their praise, and I strongly recommend them to all run-down girls and women."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any dealer in medicines or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ANOTHER EFFECT OF WAR.

Berlin's Birth Rate is Decreasing Rapidly.

Both in the number of births and the marriages in Berlin, Germany; the effect of the war is slowly but surely being indicated. The former, during July of this year, dropped off by 25 per cent., and the latter in August showed an even more marked decrease.

The number of births in the entire city for July was but 2415, as against 3224 in July, 1914. This falling off has gradually been increasing, as far as percentage is concerned. Though figures for August are not yet available, it is believed that an even greater decrease will be found.

The big residential suburb of Wilmersdorf, one of the largest in Berlin, gives a line on the ever-decreasing marriages in the city. In all of August, 1915, only 62 weddings took place in Wilmersdorf, as against 264 one year ago. Many of the latter, it is true, were so-called "war weddings," marriages performed ahead of schedule time in order that the men could go to war, but in 1913, a normal year, 78 weddings took place.

FLAME PROJECTOR CAPTURED.

German Device Propels Stream of Liquid Fire.

One of the liquid flame projectors, by means of which the Germans took on July 30 the positions at Hooge, from which they were driven on August 9, has been captured. It resembles a metal pack in shape and is carried on the back. The inflammable liquid, some kind of coal tar preparation, is kept under pressure in the tank, and its flow is regulated by means of a tap and a pressure gauge on a length of tubing.

In the nozzle of the tube is a wick, which, when the flame projector is ready for use, is ignited by some chemical producing a fierce flame which ignites the liquid as it passes out in a stream. Thus the liquid issues from the nozzle in a broad stream of flame.

CHILDHOOD AILMENTS

Ailments such as constipation, colic, colds, vomiting, etc., seize children of all ages, and the mother should be on her guard against these troubles by keeping a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house. If any of these troubles come on suddenly the tablets will cure them, or if the little one is given an occasional dose of the tablets he will escape these troubles. The tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Kind words never die, but the unkind live quite long enough.

BATTLE IN FLANDERS.

Guns Heard Roaring In Southern England.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, writing in the current issue of Colliers', tells how the roar of the guns in Flanders is heard at his home. The author lives near the summit of Crowborough Beacon, in northern Sussex, England. He writes:

"I am down at 8 and walk among the flowers before breakfast. Hark to that sound breaking in upon the peace of this sweet summer morning! It is very faint and very far, and yet with a deep throb in it which tells of infinite power. There it is again rising a little and then falling, like a thunderous surge upon a distant beach. There is no doubt at all about the sound. It is that of the guns in Flanders. It is 120 miles as the crow flies, and it might well have appeared incredible, but you have also to remember that we are 700 feet high and that there is a very steady easterly wind. Some miracle has put those air currents just right, and we do actually hear the guns of the great long-drawn battle. For a week now, ever since the wind has been in that quarter, we have heard it. All this section of Sussex is talking of it.

"It brings it all very close, and when we volunteers must muster of an evening for our drill it helps to give actuality to the eternal 'Upon the left form line of platoons!' or 'Wheel to the right by sections!' when we hear the far-off roar of the whirlpool which has drawn in so much, and may yet draw in ourselves if we should be thought worthy. One can spring to attention with a sharper snap when the guns of Flanders are pulsing in one's ears."

PRINCE OF WALES' ESCAPE.

Automobile Which He Had Just Left Wrecked by a Shell.

An officer attached to the British staff says that the Prince of Wales had a miraculous escape from death during the battle of Loos.

Strictly accurate details are that the Prince was speeding towards the Front in an automobile. He ordered the driver to pull up at the foot of a knoll which the Prince mounted and watched the progress of the fighting through his binoculars.

While he was standing on the hill a big shell fell on the automobile, utterly destroying the car and blowing the driver to pieces.

Reproached with running into danger, which the heir to the throne must avoid, the Prince replied "Well, I have plenty of brothers."

COST OF LIVING DOUBLED.

Half an Hour After a Meal One Is Hungry Again in Austria.

Three young women, named Hirst, have arrived at Skelmanthorpe, near Huddersfield, England, from Reichenberg, Austria, where still remain their father and mother, one sister, and two brothers. Their father, a plush finisher, emigrated from Huddersfield fifteen years ago.

Their reason for returning to England is that they were unable to obtain work except in the ammunition factories. The cost of living, they say, has gone up 100 per cent., and their father was unable to suport the whole family. No obstacle was placed in their way when they requested to be allowed to return to England, and the United States Consul advanced them the necessary money.

They were detained ten days at Vienna while inquiries were being made and passports secured. The Austrian capital appeared as before the war, but the dancing halls were closed.

Regarding the food in Austria the young women stated in an interview that the bread, obtained on the ticket system as in Germany, is made chiefly from maize flour, so that it resembles yellow sponge cake. "Half an hour after a meal one is hungry again." In Austria people are told that food in England is at famine prices, that England desires peace, and that the British public is terrorized by Zeppelins.

Much was made in Austria at Christmas of the east coast bombardment, and the Misses Hirst were amazed to learn that Scarborough is much as usual. It was freely said that England had scarcely any army at all, and the idea of raising new armies was much ridiculed. Lord Kitchener, it was stated, was making himself the laughing stock of Europe with his army of criminals, convicts, and tramps, men who had not done any work for years because no one would employ them.

So much concerned were the Misses Hirst about the new British army that when they reached Paris they ran up to the first man they saw in khaki to have a good look at him. "He was not a tramp," said one of the young women, "but a Colonial who was much amused when told of the reason for the curious eyes we turned upon him."

England was everywhere in Austria blamed for the war, and gold rings were to be had bearing the inscription "Gott strafe England."

BRITAIN'S MAIN OBJECTS.

Recruiting, War Loan Subscriptions, and "Thrift."

How many million of dollars the British Government has spent in advertising during the first year of the war no expert accountant has yet had the facilities to estimate. It is a safe statement to make, however, that no nation ever spent one-tenth as much on printers' ink in the same period.

Kitchener's army has been raised chiefly by advertising. Full-page, half-page and smaller advertisements in the papers are almost daily occurrences. The bill-boards have been covered with the greatest variety of posters any advertiser ever had painted. A collection of these would reveal every play of ingenius appeal advertising experts are capable of inventing. The signs on trams, buses, and private motor cars increase rather than decrease as the war continues. There are appeals for recruits in prose and verse, in cartoon and suggestive picturing—all dressed as attractively as colored inks and trained advertising men can make them.

The recent big war loan, the largest in the history of governmental borrowings, was the occasion of another tremendous advertising campaign. Even the big advertisers who have contracts for the outside pages of the dailies were pushed into the inside, so John Bull could ask Britons to pour their savings into the nation's tills. If the public had not become accustomed to Great Britain as a big advertiser because of the proportions of the army recruiting crusade, the dimensions of this campaign of advertising for money would have seemed startling, for in itself it was altogether without precedent among nations befire this war.

Now there are signs of a third big advertising movement by Great Britain in its "thrift campaign." Already the posters are urging people to eat less meat, to eat more vegetables, to insist that each loaf of bread weigh two pounds, to report any dealer trying to sell a smaller loaf, and giving similar advice as to economical housekeeping.

MOTHER'S "NOTIONS"

Good for Young People to Follow.

"My little grandson often comes up to show me how large the muscles of his arms are.

"He was a delicate child, but has developed into a strong, healthy boy, and Postum has been the principal factor.

"I was induced to give him the Postum because of my own experience with it.

"I am sixty years old, and have been a victim of nervous dyspepsia for many years. Have tried all sorts of medicines and had treatment from many physicians, but no permanent relief came.

"I used to read the Postum advertisements in our paper. At first I gave but little attention to them, but finally something in one of the advertisements made me conclude to try Postum.

"I was very particular to have it prepared strictly according to directions, and used good, rich cream. It was very nice indeed, and about bedtime I said to the members of the family that I believed I felt better. One of them laughed and said, 'That's another of mother's notions,' but the notion has not left me yet.

"I continued to improve right along after leaving off tea and coffee and taking Postum, and now after three years' use I feel so well that I am almost young again. I know Postum was the cause of the change in my health and I cannot say too much in its favor. I wish I could persuade all nervous people to use it."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

Painful Swellings Reduced Muscular Strains Ended

Such Troubles Now Quickly Rubbed Away by Powerful Remedy.

If you have any muscles that are strained and weak, that are frequently subject to rheumatic pains; if you have any painful swellings that refuse to go away—get busy with Nerviline. This is the very sort of trouble that Nerviline is noted for curing quickly. "I have proved Nerviline simply a wonder in reducing a hard, painful swelling. It followed an injury I received in my left leg and caused me great pain and discomfort. The muscles were strained and sore, and no other remedy gave the ease and comfort I got from rubbing on Nerviline. There is a soothing, pain-relieving power about Nerviline that touched the root of my trouble. Nerviline reduced the swelling, it destroyed the pain, it brought my limb back to perfect condition." The experience of Mr. Bowen, whose home is in Middlesex, is not unusual. Thousands are proving every day that muscular pains of every kind, chronic rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia and sciatica will yield to Nerviline when nothing else can possibly cure. Nerviline is an old-time family pain remedy, used nearly forty years with great success. The large family size bottle costs 50c., trial size 25c. at all dealers.

SMACKED THE KAISER'S FACE.

British School Children Write Essays on the War.

The interest of children in the war at different ages was the subject of a paper in the psychological section of the British Association recently by Dr. C. Kimmins, of Southwark, who said in order to obtain information as to the special interests of children at different ages in regard to the war essays were written by all the children in 10 senior departments, five boys and five girls, of elementary schools, says the London Chronicle. No preparation was allowed, and no notice given. The children were told to write as much as they could about the war in 15 minutes. In all 3081 papers were written, 1,511 boys, 1,570 girls. A little girl, aged 11, wrote:

The origin of the war was this: That when the German Emperor was at Windsor he insulted Queen Victoria, and so King Edward smacked him round the face. The German Emperor said: 'I'll be avenged,' and hence the war."

A boy of 12 wrote: "The advantage of the war is that the men have learned to knit"; and another boy wrote: "The main disadvantage of war is that girls must remain old maids because there will not be any men left."

Missed Something.

Mrs. McGreevy was a dinner guest one evening where a noted explorer was the attraction. Being of a somewhat languid turn of mind, she paid more attention to her dinner than to the conversation. After dinner was over she turned to one of the guests and asked:

"What was that tiresome old explorer talking about?"

"Progressive Patagonia," was the reply.

"Really?" asked Mrs. McGreevy with sudden interest. "And how do you play it?"

How to Tell Train's Speed.

Count the clicks of the wheels on one rail (because joints alternate) for twenty seconds, and the result will be the miles per hour the train is running. There are 176 thirty-foot rails in 5,280 feet. The train, say, is travelling at forty-five miles per hour, or 2.25 rails in one second, which, multiplied by twenty, equals forty-five rails in twenty seconds, or forty-five miles per hour.

"Them was nice folks you waited on, Mamie, ain't they?"

"No, no, dear! Appearances is deceitful. They didn't have no charge account. Paid cash for everything."

THE AFTERMATH OF BLOOD.

Red Poppy Crop on Battlefields of France.

There is a brisk discussion in France between the scientific people and the sentimental, tradition-loving peasants. It has been noticed that all the battlefields of northern France where blood was shed last year are a-wave with red poppies, which grow everywhere and border all the roads. The peasants see in it the aftermath of the blood shed in the fights of last autumn.

Scientific men point out that it is merely the natural result of the fields being thrown out of cultivation. But at least the peasants have tradition on their side. The dreadful battle of Landen in 1693, when the victorious French and the defeated allies left on the field between them some twenty thousand dead, produced a similar phenomenon.

Lord Perth, writing to his sister in the following summer, described the appearance of the field in words which gave Macaulay an opportunity for a characteristic flight. "During many months the ground was strewn with skulls and bones of horses and men. . . . The next summer the soil, fertilized by twenty thousand corpses, broke forth into millions of poppies. The traveller who on the road from Sant Tron to Tirlemont saw that vast sheet of scarlet spreading from Landen to Neerwinden could hardly help fancying that the figurative prediction of the Hebrew prophet was literally accomplished and that the earth was disclosing her blood and refusing to cover the slain."

How to Awake Fresh as a Daisy Constipation Gone!

No other remedy acts the same. Works while you sleep, smooth, silent, effective. Cures the worst headache or constipation. This is what happens when you use Dr. Hamilton's Pills. For wind or pain in the Stomach nothing works better. No bad taste left behind, no furred tongue, no more dizzy spells or bilious fits after taking Hamilton's Pills. All the old costiveness, frightful dreams and nervous disorders disappear as a ship in the night. The appetite is sharpened up, takes on a keen edge. You enjoy your meals, relish and digest them. Strength and buoyant spirits return. You feel good, you look like your old self again with bright eyes and rosy cheeks. The best guarantee of good health and old age that man and woman can have is the regular use of this family Pill. Suited to all ages, you should get a few 25c. boxes from the drug store and keep them handy. Remember the name,—Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut—no substitute so good as the genuine.

As Good as New.

One day a man exhibited a handsome umbrella.

"It's wonderful how I make things last," he exclaimed. "Look at this umbrella, now. I bought it eleven years ago. Since then I have recovered it twice. I had new ribs put in in 1910, and last month I exchanged for a new one in a restaurant. And here it is—as good as new."

IT'S A GOD-SEND TO HUMANITY

is what a leading physician says of Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal. Properly cooked into porridge according to directions on package, without stirring after first making, it is a delight to humanity. Use a double boiler or set boiler in basin of boiling water and use one cup meal to two cups water. Cook for half an hour. It's very nutritious, prevents indigestion and relieves constipation or "money back." Ask your doctor. At grocers', 10 and 25 cents.

Was Some Horse.

A man charged with stealing a horse applied for legal aid at the Old Bailey, London, England. The Recorder said the defence was that the man did not steal the horse; it followed him. "It walked by my side," said the man. The Recorder said he was afraid counsel could not persuade a jury that such a story was true. He refused legal aid, and told the man that he could "try the story" himself.

A small boy rambled into a grocery, followed by the usual dog, and stepped up to where the proprietor was busy wrapping something on the counter.

"Hello, Mr. Jones!" said the boy, glancing toward the cake box. "Give us a peck of pertaters, please."

"All right," returned the groceryman, proceeding to measure out the tubers, "and while I am getting them just look at them and think. Did it ever occur to you that they contain water, sugar, and starch?"

"No," answered the boy. "I never heard anything about your pertaters, but everybody says there's peas and beans in your coffee and sand in your sugar."

Since the war began the individual earnings of the London drivers of taxi-cabs have decreased twenty per cent.

How The Community Hired Man Does His Work

His Mission is to Co-operate, Not to Preach—His Services are Freely Given to Every Farmer How They May Be Secured.

(By Justus Miller, in Canadian Countryman.)

"Not long ago a history of the District Representative movement was given in these pages, and the nature of the work briefly explained. It was shown at that time how the representative attempted to take the idea of a demonstration on every farm to every farmer who wished to take advantage of it and how his efforts were limited by the size of its territory.

It was stated, also, that that wasn't the whole story, nor even the most important part of it so far as the individual was concerned. For the farmer, after all, is not so interested in what may be done or should be done, as in what actually IS done for him. Some have suspected that the representative has been given the position owing to political influence, and some have wondered if, after all, any young man can come into a county and can give advice that will really be worth a farmer's time to listen to. The object of this concluding article of our series upon representative work is to point that not advice, but work, is featured, and how a farmer may operate most successfully with the new hired men who have been placed in the country to serve the community in such ways as are possible.

Now, at the outset, let it be made plain that politics have nothing to do with the appointment of the representatives. Each one must be a graduate of the Agricultural College, and must have had practical experience upon the farm. Each year the men required to fill vacancies or new offices are selected from the force in the field or from the graduating class, always with an eye to their executive ability and their practical experience as well as to their standing as students. Ability is always the determining factor. No question is made regarding their political tendencies at the time of their appointment or later. If at any time political influence is brought to bear upon them it is due to forces at work in their territories, and not to instructions from headquarters, nor to their own inclinations. This is a point that should be remembered always when working with the representative. It will render his co-operation more effective and will lead to a better mutual understanding all around.

The Board of Agriculture—

The first thing necessary, naturally, is for the representative to establish an office and to become acquainted with his clients. To aid him an Advisory Agricultural Committee, sometimes called a Board of Agriculture, is formed, consisting of prominent men in the county fully in sympathy with agriculture, the majority being practical farmers,

Different methods are employed to become acquainted. In the office an index system is usually kept, a card being made out for each farmer with his address, lot and concession, and such other information as is available. Thus much time is saved in visiting farms, as each one can be located quickly. Outside, at meetings, sales, etc., the representative attempts to become as widely acquainted as possible. Indeed, in one county it is stated that the representative in charge knows every man by his first name, and is similarly saluted by him.

"A few stories of work actually undertaken will show what has been accomplished. We shall leave our readers to form an opinion of its value themselves.

"When the Farmers Helped—

"In an eastern county the newly appointed representative was advised to give practical demonstrations in orchard management. The district offered splendid opportunities to the apple grower, but for the most part the men were running mixed farms, and hence hadn't given much attention to profitable production, skilful grading and co-operative selling as the situation seemed to demand.

"First of all the advice and co-operation of all the successful apple growers were sought. Then four orchards, located in different townships and situated along well travelled roads, were secured. These had been neglected for many years, and were not producing profitable crops. The best cultural methods were followed, and the representative supervised the grading, packing and selling of apples. The work was carried on for three years. The average expenses for pruning, spraying, fertilization, cultivation, etc., averaged $67.52 an acre, while the net profits averaged $129.12 an acre. At different times practical demonstrations were held in the orchard when the work was discussed with the farmers interested in apple growing.

"But this was not all. A need was felt for still more direct work upon the farms. So each spring the representative and an expert provided by the Fruit Branch made a tour through the county with a spraying outfit. For a couple of weeks they drove from farm to farm spraying and pruning trees and holding orchard meetings at which were discussed orchard management in all its phases and the control of insects and fungus diseases. Neither of these men posed as an agricultural Moses in any sense of the word. He simply worked among the farmers as any one of the latter might have worked had he studied the subject and had the time. They exchanged ideas and formed friendships.

"During the winter a special series of fruit institute meetings was held in co-operation with the Superintendent of Institutes at which fruit growers and farmers were invited to attend. The reports of the demonstration orchards were read, figures being given in every case, and outside speakers were secured to discuss practical subjects. Following these, box-packing demonstrations were given, all being invited to take part under the supervision of an expert packer. The value of this work is obvious.

"To overcome the obstacles that existed in the way to profitable marketing a co-operative society was organized. It is now concluding its fourth year of operations. Over and above the prices that would have been secured by old methods the members—averaging forty—made a net profit of $10,939.80 in the first three years. They have now built a fruit storage house and are more enthusiastic than ever.

"This success was not due wholly to the representative, nor did he claim credit for it. He did his part but the underlying factor was the spirit of the men who co-operated with him. They felt a need, accepted the lessons taught by the practical demonstrations, and applied the results to their farm operations and business transactions.

never seem to think that they need an occasional cleansing inside as well as outside. Yet neglect of this internal bathing shows itself in spotty, and sallow complexions—as well as in dreadful headaches and biliousness. RETROGRADE

Editor, The Leader,—Would you please allow me space to ask a few questions as touching on what is the work of a Christian Church. I was stopped on the street one day by a Gentleman of the town. He wanted to know what I thought of the entertainments being held in basement of churches. After learning his views, I stated it was no more than you could expect. That the Churches of today were simply a place of entertainment, and the nearest like a theatre the better. There is this difference—a first-class theatre would cost from fifty cents to four dollars and no one that has travelled would think of going to a ten-cent theatre as is held in the basement of churches. Would some one that is well up on Scripture tell the writer where, and when, Christ had time for such foolishness. To say the least, it is very ill fitting to the times we are experiencing now, but there is but one answer for it. People seek and conjure their bent of nature. It is not spiritual or of Christ. How would it compare with the Disciples at the Day of Penticost when the Christian Church was established?

"It seems to me the war has had but little effect on the Churches yet, if we are to take Morrisburg as a sample of all Ontario. We had a good citizen leave Morrisburg and buy his home in another town just on this very point of taking in our church irreligious performances. Why not cut this theatre performance out and use the Church for what it was built for—the salvation of men.

"When Christ was on earth he drew the crowds to hear him by presenting the truth of the bible. That is what we want taught today. There has never been a more opportune time in Canada for the outpouring of God's spirit than the present and we could have it if all Ministers would live up to their ordaining vows.

"I will give one. Will you be diligent in prayer and in reading of the Holy Scriptures and in such studies as help to the knowledge of the same, laying aside the study of the world and the flesh.

"How would it be to act and live more as we pray. A word to the wise is sufficient.

"Thanking you again for space.

"LAYMAN."

Gin Pills FOR THE KIDNEYS

What They Cured

Here's the remarkable experience of a Nova Scotian:—

"I was once a terrible sufferer with kidney and bladder troubles, and at times I would lose the use of my legs, and could not go away from home without some one with me. I was treated by different doctors for 3 years, and only got temporary relief. My son advised me to take Gin Pills, and after taking the first 2 or 3 doses I got relief. I continued to take them until I got completely cured. I owe my life to Gin Pills.

Yours very truly,
P. M. KEMPTON,

HER DREAMS CAME TRUE

Life Unbearable from Indigestion Health Restored by "Fruit-a-tives"

MELLE. C. GAUDREAU

Rochon P.Q., Jan. 14th, 1915.

"I suffered for many years with terrible Indigestion and Constipation. I became thin and miserable. I had frequent dizzy spells and became so run down that I never thought I would get well again.

A neighbor advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did so and to the surprise of my doctor, I began to improve and he advised me to go on with 'Fruit-a-tives'. I continued this medicine and all my Indigestion and Constipation was relieved. I consider that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives' and I want to say to those who suffer from Indigestion, Constipation or Headaches, try 'Fruit-a-tives'. Give this lovely fruit medicine a fair chance and you will get well the same as I did".

CHAPTER XI.

The remainder of that ride was glorified, and it ended all too soon. Mentally I anathemized Struber and the engagement that was dragging me to him so sorely against my will. But there was no help for it now.

We paused long enough at a Spring Street jeweller's for me to see one of the witnesses I had in mind, and it being only a few steps to the Citrus Exchange Bank, I dismissed the taxi.

Struber was waiting for me in front of the bank. He observed Miss Fox's presence with some surprise, and tossed a remnant of frowsy cigar into the gutter. I vouchsafed no explanation, merely remarking, "One of my witnesses;" which, I could see, caused Miss Fox to wonder in turn, for neither had I confided to her anything concerning our errand.

"We might as well go inside and see Mr. Hall," I added, naming the bank's president. "I am expecting someone else along presently; we'll have to wait a while."

"H'm—Mr. Hall," Struber mused, wrinkling his twisted nose. He glanced again at Miss Fox, then winked solemnly at me. "When it comes to picking witnesses," he commented, "you're sure some picker."

Mr. Hall stared inquiringly at the detective, whom he seemed to know; but nevertheless he greeted us affably and conducted us inside the railing surrounding his private desk.

Before I could offer a word to account for our intrusion, the gentleman for whom I was waiting arrived. He was a Mr. Johannes Aartsen, diamond buyer for the jewellers where I had called on the way, an authority on all sorts of precious stones, and regarded as one of the foremost diamond experts in the United States. He was a short, stout, elderly Hollander, with a scrub of grizzled mustache and wearing glasses whose lenses minified his eyes to half their true size. After introductions were made I addressed the banker.

"Now then, Mr. Hall, I want first to get a package from my safe-deposit box, then if it is convenient I would like for all of us to retire to the directors' room. I shall not detain you long; but the reason for summoning this gathering involves a matter of considerable consequence, one that I would like to keep as private as possible. I desire each of you to bear witness to a statement I shall make, and to something I have to show you."

There were no objections to my proposal; in fact, all were pretty curious by this time; and while Mr. Hall led the others toward the rear, I made haste to secure the diamond and rejoin them in the directors' room.

When I laid the crumpled ball of yellow tissue-paper upon the polished table top, of those present Mr. Aartsen alone, I fancied, guessed the nature of its contents. As Mr. Hall closed and made fast the door, and we seated ourselves in five of the directors' chairs, I caught a gleam of comprehension behind the Dutchman's thick-lensed glasses. He said nothing, however.

"A week ago to-day, the seventeenth," I began, "a small parcel came to me through the mail, delivered at my office on the first afternoon delivery, by the postman on his regular round. I was not expecting any such parcel. There was nothing either inside or outside of it to afford me the least hint or clue pointing to the sender's identity, or why such an object should have been entrusted to me. There was nothing, in short, to account for it; there is nothing within my knowledge at this moment upon which I can build a theory as to why it should have been sent at all; and though I have been hoping that the past week would produce some enlightenment, right now I am as much in the dark respecting the sender's identity, or his motive, as I was at the moment of receiving the parcel. I can not declare with assurance that the sensational burglary of my office, with its attendant fatality, is to be ascribed to my possession of what this small pocket contains; at best I can only surmise."

By this time all eyes were focussed upon the ball of paper. Miss Fox's eyes were shining and I could glimpse her white, even teeth between her slightly parted lips. She caught my regard, and smiled.

Only Struber and Aartsen remained unmoved. Mr. Hall made no pretence of concealing his impatience, and he now asked:

"Is it something of great value?"

"Mr. Aartsen shall determine that," I replied; "after which I trust you shall approve the wisdom of my course in thus trespassing upon the time of you gentlemen.

"A responsibility has been thrust upon me, the nature of which makes me feel that I am warranted in asking someone to share it. I shall be in a better position to meet whatever complications may arise in the future, should there be any question of ownership; and if a proposal that I shall presently make meets with your approval the trust can be more effectively safeguarded against possible fraudulent claims."

Then I repeated, for I wanted to emphasize the fact:

"Once more let me assure you, one and all, that I haven't the faintest idea who sent me this, or why it should have been sent to me at all.

"I may add, however, that perhaps Mr. Struber has some such idea. There are reasons for suspecting that the matter is in line with certain investigations he is pursuing, but which I am not at liberty to go into."

I took up the package, and slipping off the criss-crossed rubber band began to unfold the numerous layers of thin paper. The operation was followed with varying degrees of suspense; but when the enormous diamond was at last disclosed in all its brilliant splendor a slow intaking of breath was distinctly audible among the little group, and next instant it was as if each spectator were hypnotized.

Aartsen broke the enchantment. He growled an unintelligible Dutch oath and snatched up the gem from the table.

For a moment his hands trembled with excitement; but he quickly controlled himself. Then turning it slowly over and over, and subjecting each separate facet to a long, intent scrutiny, he examined the diamond leisurely. As it revolved in his fingers it gleamed and glittered and shot rainbow flashes, like a fragment of concentrated sunlight breaking up into its primary colors, the colors blending and changing, running together and separating again and forming every conceivable hue, all with a swiftness that dazzled and confused.

Struber offered the first comment.

"Phoney?" he asked in a matter-of-fact tone.

Aartsen glared at him and snorted his disgust, not deigning a reply. But Struber was in nowise abashed. He added:

"Must be the real thing, then."

Nobody heeded the detective now, however. Aartsen was once more staring at the diamond, weighing it in his hand, cupping the other hand around it and rocking it to and fro while he inspected it from every possible angle.

"By Jove!" he said at last, scowling at me. "And you mean to say this game to you through the mail?"

I had already produced the brown paper wrapping, to which still adhered the stamps and the portion of my business card that had served as the address. Struber was examining this as closely as Aartsen had the diamond.

"Yes," I told him. "And I neglected to state that it was not even registered. The cancelling mark, you can see for yourselves, is too smeared to give us any information. Were it not for the fact that the border trimmed from my card—the label on the wrapping—had been found in the city, it would be impossible to determine where the parcel was mailed."

"Incredible!" exclaimed Mr. Hall, whose every business instinct patently was outraged. "You say there has been no letter of advice?"

"No sir," I assured him; "nothing whatever."

Once more I addressed myself to the expert: "There seems to be no question of the gem's genuineness, Mr. Aartsen; perhaps you can give us an estimate of its probable value. I don't ask you to be exact; simply a rough appraisal will suffice, enough to impress upon us the importance of this matter."

Before I had finished the Dutchman was uttering queer guttural noises and waving a hand in angry protest.

"Value!" he growled, puffing through his wiry mustache. "Tell me, how can anybody value a peautiful diamond like this in dollars and cents! It is foolishness—nonsense. If I say one hundred thousand dollars—a hundred and fifty thousand—maybe the first gustomer offer you two hundred thousand—maybe more, before somebody else ged it. It is of little gonsequence. Not many men can buy a diamond like this."

His next words fairly lifted us out of our chairs. Even Struber jerked up his head in amazement and bent upon the speaker a look that was breathless in its intentness.

"What is of gonsequence—I know this diamond. Eighteen—twenty years ago—I have the regord somewhere—it was cut under my supervision in Amsterdam."

We stared at him, dumfounded. Presently I found voice to cry:

"Man, how can you be so positive?"

Aartsen shrugged his shoulders.

"It is my pisiness to know—to be positif. I could identify all the world's famous diamonds, if you pring them to me one at a time; I know them all, just like you know your law books."

He contemplated the brilliant fondly as he pursued:

"But this diamond, it is different. Its history is hidden from the world. It has no name. Nopody knows where it game from. From the day is last touched the felt-wheel until now nopody—I mean people like myself who keep track of such things—nopody knows where it has been. It disappeared. It is a mystery."

Whether or not Aartsen was otherwise mistaken about the gem, he certainly spoke only the truth when he characterized it a mystery. But there was no valid reason for doubting his assertion, however it might strain one's incredulity to accept the statement that he was able to identify the stone as one he himself had cut a score or so of years previously.

Looking back upon the scene later, it occurred to me that Aartsen had far more cause to be overwhelmed with astonishment than had any of the rest of us. That he should have this particular diamond of all others shown him so unexpectedly, amid surroundings and conditions so impossible to anticipate in imagination, constituted such an experience as seldom comes to any man in a lifetime. Yet he bore himself with more restraint than I did.

"Can you tell us," I asked at length, "the circumstances under which it was entrusted to you for cutting."

"Something, yes," he confessed. "One doesn't forget a thing like that. Maybe one lapidary in a thousand will get to cut a diamond like this diamond; hundreds work all their lives and see such diamonds only in collections; they are not blentiful, like fleas on a dog, Mr. Ferris.

"Besides, something has been in the bapers of late that set me to going back into the past—back to when I was a very young man in Amsterdam, envied by my confreres because I was accounted the most skilled workman in the employ of Jakob and Everard Opzoomer; which is the same as saying my workmanship was approved by the foremost lapidaries in the world.

"By and by I remembered. Everard Opzoomer himself game to my room late one wild, stormy night, and woke me up. 'Ged up and dress and gome with me,' he said. Nothing like that had efer happened before. I asked no guestions; I obeyed.

"We walked silent through the roaring wind and the dark, sloppy streets until we game to his house. He led the way to a room at the rear, a room I had nefer before seen; and though it was past midnight, there sat his brother Jakob and two foreign-looking young men—English, I thought, though I knew little enough English then. One stared at me fiercely and said nothing; the other, a big, good-natured fellow, laughed much and joked with Jakob who knew some English.

"These two young men brought this diamond, uncut. I remember how my jaw dropped when the fierce-eyed, silent young fellow shook it out of a funny-looking little ivory box onto a velvet pad; for I had nefer seen such a diamond.

"I was given instructions to weigh and measure and cut the stone so as to get the most perfect finished gem possible. It took many weeks, that job. And one or the other of the two young fellows was always present, watching, until it was returned to them.

"It was so. Turn and turn about, they kept guard over their wonderful diamond. And when I was through the big, jolly fellow gave me five gold ten-florin pieces for myself. They paid Jakob Opzoomer, took their precious diamond from him, and went away to wherefer it was they game from—nopody efer heard where it was.

"That is all I efer knew—egcept the name of the fierce-eyed fellow, who wasn't fierce by nature. It was that name in the newsbapers that set me to remembering, till by and by it all game back.

"Whatefer begame of them or their diamond I nefer heard, either. I often wondered. I know I nefer before or since did more careful work—"

Struber sharply interrupted. The instant it became apparent that it was a name recently seen in the newspapers that had refreshed Aartsen's memory, the detective had become alert, watching for a chance to break in. Now he could contain himself no longer.

"What was the fella's name?" he demanded impetuously.

It was clear that the Dutchman did not approve of Struber, but he recognized his authority to ask questions, albeit with a show of spleen.

"The same as that scoundrel's you bolice couldn't catch," he said, thumping the table—Willets!"

JOFFRE'S PEOPLE AGGRIEVED.

Native Village Thinks Commander Has Deserted Them.

Rivesaltes, France, the town that gave birth to the Commander-in-Chief of the French armies, is pouting. The blinds of Joffre's house have been closed more than a year and the patient woodpecker has had to pierce them in so many places they look as if a a machine-gun had been operating there. The villagers no longer point the place out to visitors. All because Joffre has not taken the time to go home to receive the address of felicitations of his neighbors and the present bought for him by popular subscriptions. The General-in-Chief is for the moment blacklisted and will have to exercise some of his finest strategy after the war to lift the penalty of his neglect.

The ill-humor of Rivesaltes is aggravated by a total lack of "sous" and a big deficit in wine. The absence of small change is attributed to the German raid on all forms of copper, and this, too, falls on Joffre, who ought to have been able to prevent it. For the shortage of the vintage of 1915 there is the more logical reason of mildew.

There is less song and laughter in all the towns of the south, for the Midi has found something in the war that it is bound to take seriously. All Perpignan salutes gravely when the Belgian band, recruited from the refugees of Flanders, marches by playing the "Brabanconne," but the boisterous cheers of other days are absent. Every day the Place de la Loge is crowded in front of the bulletin board of the Sporting Club, where is posted the latest news from the champion football players of France, with friends anxious to see what name has been added to the already long list of those who had fallen on the field of battle.

Toulouse is quite as grave as Perpignan, though more busy making powder, cartridges and bombs.

Toulouse is interesting also for the mystery that surrounds one of the old brick mansions where Bachelier carved coats of arms in 1535. With fixed bayonets, night and day, the Territorials defend the entrance to this house. The rumor was current in the early fall last year that the Bank of France had transferred its gold reserves there. When the bank returned to Paris, however, the Territorials continued their guard. Their mission is still a mystery to the public in general, but the initiated assert confidentially that Leonard de Vinci's "Monna Lisa," removed from the Louvre when danger threatened Paris, is in safekeeping there in an inviolable steel case.

Cats for Food in Hungary.

The Paris Figaro quotes the Budapest correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung as follows: "The official extent of land devoted to the cultiva- organ of the central Hungarian slaughter houses, states that in the Biharkenszteser district, where all the Italian residents of Hungary are interned, a great number of cats are killed and dressed daily. The demand has been such that the price of cats rose to a prohibitive figure, hence the local authorities stepped in and fixed the maximum price at three crowns the kilo." (About 25 cents a pound).

The Safety-First Critic.

"Brown is a very careful critic, isn't he?"

"In what way?"

"He always manages to take the sting out of his unfavorable comment."

"For instance?"

"His bride made him a shortcake the other day, and when she asked him how he liked it he replied: 'It isn't as good as your mother used to make.'"

PRACTICAL FARMING

The Brood Mare on the Farm.

When the active working season on the farm will have a little let-up, the farmer can have a moment to spare to ascertain of what value his brood mares have been.

He will remember, in the first place that they have each given birth this season and have raised to weaning age a nice promising colt that bids fair to develop into a good saleable horse later on.

These youngsters are increasing in value and as they are yearlings now will help to make their living next season as two year olds. The brood mares have also done much farm and road work.

Probably I make a mistake in crediting each mare with a colt every year; so it is safer to say that counting for accidents a mare should average two colts every three years.

It would be rather a hard matter to say just what product she will give her owner each year of her working and breeding life. So much depends on her quality and especially upon her capacity as a sure breeder and likewise as a good mother.

Mares, like cows, differ greatly in their flow of milk and many times a medium-sized animal with heavy milk-flow capacity will raise a bigger and better colt than a much larger animal whose milk flow is insufficient.

The practical horse breeder and the farmer of experience is well aware of these facts and one will often be surprised to see farmers keep breeding mares that to the uninitiated appear to be indifferent specimens.

Say that a farmer has bought a mare in January for $150. She is five years old and he breeds her in March. The stud fee is $25, but the money is not due unless the mare proves to be in foal.

The colt has cost $25 at birth and at weaning time, four months later, he should be worth, if a good individual and a good grade, say $40.

By next spring he should be worth $75 and at two years old should bring $100 to $125. Now he can be put to work.

From then until he is four years old he should earn his feed—say $75 a year—and give a profit of $25 per year, although $50 would be nearer the mark.

At four years of age he should be worth $200, judging from the way well-bred, well-broken and well-kept horses are now selling.

We will say that a breeder is lucky enough to have raised a pair of four-years-olds, sound, good lookers, hearty, with snap and style, weighing from 1,200 to 1,400 pounds each, for the pair $400 can easily be had in any of the big markets.

These are not fanciful figures, but are based upon actual experience of every-day farmers of breeding, raising and selling colts.

Every farmer should, if possible, keep one or more good brood mares; not broken winded, worn out, city hacks, but sound, well-shaped, well-bred animals that possess individual merit, and whose progeny will sell readily when the dealer comes along.

Any breeder of experience knows well that almost as much depends on the brood-mare as on the stallion in the raising of any breed of good horses.

Many colts take their conformation from their mother, especially from their shoulders back. For instance, if a mare has wide, ragged hips, her colts are most liable to inherit this tendency. Many colts also inherit their dispositions from their dams.

Brood-mares should be sound, of quiet disposition, strongly built, and they should be well cared for.

It is a severe loss to the farmer who pays $25 stud fee, loses two or three months' work of his mare, and then loses a colt at birth or afterward, and all from neglect of some sort.

The mare can be worked up to a week or two before the colt is dropped. In fact, she is better off for the regular exercise, but she should be handled by a careful man, who will not excite her, and she should have a roomy box stall for her sleeping quarters.

Although many may disagree with me, I am firmly convinced from nearly 30 years' experience on breeding farms, that it is a risky business purchasing aged mares, who have spent the best years of their life doing work in the cities, and trying to make brood mares of them.

Even if they are only eight or ten years old, it is an expensive experiment. The reason is obvious.

In the first place when a mare has arrived at that age, and has never had a colt, her chances of getting in foal are lessened each year.

Furthermore, it is safe to say that a reasonable proportion of these mares have slunked their colts, and for this reason they have been sent from the farms and sold in the cities, where they can do excellent work.

In choosing brood-mares, always buy young ones, say from three to five years old, then you should be able to count on all of them getting in foal or certainly nearly every one, when, if you pick up a lot of second hand mares, of uncertain age, your percentage of colts will be extremely uncertain.

One good, sound young mare, bought from some reliable farmer or breeder, is worth more for breeding purposes than half a dozen so-called bargains picked up in the city.—C.M.S.

Willis—The last time I was here you were puzzled over a peculiar mark which you found on the wall. Did you solve it?

Gillis—Yes. It is evidently the place where the rain coming in from the roof meets the water leaking up from the cellar.

Indemnity for One Crime.

An indemnity of $60,000 has been paid by the German Government, through its ambassador in Madrid, for the seven Spaniards shot at Liege in August, 1914, says the Paris Figaro's correspondent at Hendaye, on the Spanish frontier.

Her Achievement.

"Now you've achieved something!" he exclaimed enthusiastically. "These are exactly like the cakes mother used to make. How did you do it?"

"I'll give you the recipe," replied the wife coldly. "I used margarine instead of butter, eggs a week old, I put alum in the flour, and added plenty of water to the milk."

An Eye to Business.

The Insolvent—Tell me, is it a crime to be poor?

The Lawyer—Not in this state, sir. The charge for my opinion on the subject is five dollars. Pay my clerk and go out quietly.

200,000 CANADIAN SOLDIERS NOW AT FRONT OR IN TRAINING

Nearly Twenty New Battalions Have Been Added to the Expeditionary Force in the Last Month

A despatch from Ottawa says: There are now 200,000 Canadian soldiers under arms, either at the front, in England, or Canada. To the 10,000 which it was announced had enlisted up to the end of September nearly twenty new battalions have been added during the past month, while the foundations of others are being laid to raise and train men in the smaller local centres.

The new units recently recruited are as follows:—Two pioneer regiments, one in Western Canada and one in Eastern Canada. One regiment of mounted rifles from Niagara district; one battalion from Toronto; one from Grey County; two from Simcoe County; one from Ontario County; one or possibly two from Elgin and Kent Counties; one from Essex County; one from the Rainy River and Fort William districts; two new battalions from Manitoba; two from Saskatchewan; one from Alberta; one from New Brunswick, and one at Victoria, with another to be raised on the British Columbia mainland.

BLOWING PATH TOWARD LILLE

French Troops Destroy the German Entrenchments in the Arras District.

A despatch from Paris says: The French have made a valuable gain south-east of Neuville-St. Vaast, on the road between Arras and Lille. The attack was preceded by the explosion of heavily-charged mines, which tore up the enemy trenches at this point and destroyed their barbed wire entanglements. The instant after the mines were detonated the French troops rushed forward and occupied the craters made by the explosions, strengthening the new positions. The German guns to the rear at once began a heavy bombardment, under cover of which the Germans reorganized and made repeated counter-attacks in an effort to regain the positions, but the French held the advantage.

The Germans made another gas attack east of Rheims. The French troops, protecting themselves against the gas-clouds, poured in a heavy infantry fire, which was supported by a curtain of fire from the French artillery, and the German attempt was cut short.

An earlier German attack in the Champagne made at night at La Courtine was stopped by the French rifle and machine gun fire.

An official communication from Field Marshal Sir John French, the British Commander - in - Chief in France, says:

"Since my last communication, the situation on our front has remained unchanged. There have been mining activities on both sides, but without important results.

"The enemy's artillery has been active east of Ypres and south of the La Bassee Canal. Our reply to this shelling has been very effective.

"Our airmen brought down two German aeroplanes yesterday, one falling inside our own lines, and the other close behind the enemy's front trenches."

HELPS TO AVENGE THE CAVELL MURDER

A despatch from Ottawa says: A New York man in a letter to Sir Sam Hughes declares that the Cavell murder should be avenged by every Briton in the world. The writer states that though he cannot go to the front, he is willing to pay for a substitute, and offers to place $100 per month in the Minister's hands for this purpose so long as the war continues. He asks that the Minister make use of the money "in a way that will damage the Huns."

FOUR GERMAN YACHTS CONDEMNED AS PRIZES

A despatch from London says: The racing yacht Germania, which on two occasions won Emperor William's Cup at Cowes, was condemned in the Prize Court as a prize of war. The Germania, which was captured at Cowes at the outbreak of the war, was the property of Lieut. Dr. Gustav von Bohlen und Halbach, head of the Krupp works. The other German yachts captured at Cowes—The Lasca II., Stella Maris, and Paula III.—also were condemned.

GERMAN MASSES ARE HELD BACK

Made Five Distinct Onslaughts On the French Positions in Tahure Sector.

A despatch from Paris says: A German assault on the Tahure sector, begun with violence Saturday, continued with five more distinct attacks on the French positions, preceded by extremely heavy artillery fire and the use of gas shells. In the first of these five attempts the Germans succeeded in reaching the summit of the Butte de Tahure. At other points and in the remaining four attacks they were repulsed, with heavy losses, and everywhere were forced to return to the trenches they had occupied before their attack.

The assault which won the Butte de Tahure covered altogether a front of five miles, running from the woods at the side of Hill 195, past the Butte de Tahure, and the village of Tahure, to and including the earthworks known as La Courtine. After a bombardment of extreme violence the German infantry, made up largely of units recently sent from the Russian front, attacked all along the line. The French fire cut through their ranks and threw them back, except at the one point named. Before the village of Tahure the Germans suffered especially heavy losses, leaving a large number of dead before their trenches.

The German artillery opened again on the same series of positions, using large-calibre shells filled with suffocating gases. Beginning with an attack on the eastern section of La Courtine, the enemy followed up the offensive at intervals with assaults on the village of Tahure, the region to the south of the village and the crests to the north-east. The French artillery and rifle fire beat them back to their trenches in each case.

PRICES OF RAW FURS.

That Paid the Trapper Will Be Higher Than Last Year.

A despatch from Toronto says: The outlook for raw furs during the coming season is exceedingly good considering all conditions, and the indications are that the prices paid the trapper will in practically all cases be higher than last year.

The results of the October Lampson London sales as cabled are as follows: The following furs sold at the percentages indicated higher than last March:—Raccoon, 73 per cent.; muskrat, 40 per cent.; skunk, 60 per cent.; mink, 20 per cent.; marten, 10 per cent.; silver fox, 15 per cent.; red fox, 40 per cent.; cross fox, 50 per cent.; beaver, 27½ per cent.; otter, 10 per cent.; lynx, 30 per cent.; wolf, 50 per cent.; while bear and white weasel brought the same price as last March.

Not only has a very satisfactory business been done by the retailers in the sale of fur sets and fur garments during the past few weeks, but the use of furs of all kinds for trimming of ladies' garments has used up a large number of odds and ends of skins, all of which combines to make the outlook for a very prosperous season, which is exceedingly satisfactory to all interested in the fur trade.

German Atrocities Museum in Petrograd

A despatch from Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd says: "The German atrocities museum has been opened here. It contains a large number of photographs of mutilated soldiers whose wounds are alleged to have been caused by explosive bullets, and also tables of statistics of five thousand cases of atrocities investigated by the special commission of inquiry into German atrocities, by which the museum was established."

Four More German Steamers Sunk in Baltic

A despatch from London says: British submarines have sunk four more German steamers in the Baltic it is announced in an official statement received from Petrograd. The Norwegian steamer Selma, 987 tons, has been sunk, presumably by a German submarine. Only two of the crew of 21 have been picked up. The tank steamer H. C. Henry, of British registry, but owned in Seattle, Wash., has been sunk in the Mediterranean. No lives were lost.

The Week's Developments in the War.

The major interest in the war during the last week has been in the developments in the Balkans. The Austro-German troops have made some progress in their invasion, although the Serbians have offered a heroic resistance, and the enemy's advance has been hampered by the nature of the country. On the northern part of their front the Bulgarian army has met with some success, and has joined hands with the Austro-German forces. Further south, however, the French and British troops landed at Saloniki, have joined the Serbians and have driven the Bulgarians to their own frontier at the same time, with the result that Strumnitza is being menaced by the forces of the Entente.

British and French war-ships have bombarded the Bulgarian coast from the Aegean Sea, and Turkish troops are reported to have been rushed to reinforce the Bulgarians on the coast, in anticipation of an attempt to land by the Allies.

Russia is negotiating with Rumania for permission to send troops through that country against Bulgaria, while Russian war-ships have bombarded Varna, one of the two principal Bulgarian ports on the Black Sea.

On the Western front, there has been comparatively little change, both sides claiming some local successes.

The Russians are now on the offensive on most of the great Eastern battle-front, but conditions there show little change.

With the obvious aim of relieving the pressure on Serbia, the Italian troops have taken the offensive on their front, and despite the difficulties of the country, have won important positions.

Other developments are indicated on the chart.

TWO DOZEN CAPTURED CANNON DISPLAYED AT HORSE GUARDS

Guns Which Germans Used in Defence of Loos Viewed by Thousands of London Citizens

A despatch from London says: With their silent muzzles pointing towards St. James' Park, the first trophies of the great offensive in France have been ranged on the Horse Guards parade. Twenty-one German field guns and three trench mortars formed a war exhibit of the highest interest to Londoners. Not since Crimea and the Indian Mutiny have guns captured from an enemy crunched the gravel of the Horse Guards parade and publicly ranged as labelled exhibits.

With the exception of three pieces captured at Le Cateau, August 26, 1914, the whole of the guns took part in the Battle of Loos September 25 last. The mud and stain of the battlefield is upon them.

The trophies were hauled into position by the gunners of the Royal Horse Artillery, and beneath the muzzle of each gun was driven a little notice board informing the public of the name of the regiment or division which captured it and where it was captured. Four armed sentries guarded the trophies and a sentry box was placed at each of the four corners of the wired enclosures. The presence of these captured guns from Loos made an appeal to the imagination of thousands of people who swarmed around the enclosure.

In one year a horse or a cow will eat nine times its own weight.

FOR FIRST TIME IS FAVORABLE

Balkan Situation Is Hopeful Fron the Allies' Point of View.

A despatch from London says: From the allies' point of view, the Balkan situation looks more favorable than at any time since the invasion of Serbia began, or, as one military observer said frankly:

"It looks for the first time favorable." The cause of this is a sudden marked change in Roumania's attitude in favor of the allies, a change which has occasioned Berlin practically to despair of the hope that this Balkan State would maintain its neutrality.

Bucharest despatches make no secret of the fact that Roumania is lending a willing ear to the Entente offer to grant all her claims, including Bessarabia.

A despatch to the Daily Telegraph from Bucharest says that at an audience granted Minister of the Interior Jonescu and M. Filipesco, leader of the Conservative party, King Ferdinand declared that he was not opposed to the realization of the aspirations of the Roumanian people, and that in this matter he placed himself in the hands of Parliament and the Government.

A half million well-equipped Russian soldiers are reported to be in readiness, waiting for Roumania to say the word, then to march through that country to relieve the Serbians. Roumania herself, by accepting the allies' offer, is expected, by the terms of the pact, to send her own army over the frontier, falling in the rear of the Teuton and Bulgarian forces advancing toward the heart of Serbia from the bend of the Danube.

Already the German general staff is said to be figuring with this danger. The news is confirmed that part of the army of Gen. von Lisingen, fighting in South-western Russia, has been sent to the Roumanian border line.

HALF A BILLION IN WAR ORDERS

Munitions Agents Announce More Business for Canadian Plants.

A despatch from Ottawa says: British orders aggregating five hundred millions of dollars have come or are coming to Canada, according to a statement made by Mr. D. A. Thomas, representative of the British Minister of Munitions.

Mr. Thomas has left for New York on his way back to England, having accomplished his mission to the United States and Canada. He expects to return before Christmas. His work in Canada is now in the hands of Mr. Lionel Hichens, who arrived recently to represent Mr. Lloyd-George, and who will have charge of the reconstitution of the Shell Committee, or, as Mr. Thomas describes it, the Canadian Munitions Committee. The main feature of the reorganization of the committee will be the retirement of those members who are interested in the manufacture of munitions.

Mr. Thomas issued a lengthy statement in which he reviewed the work of the Shell Committee and himself, touching upon most of the questions with which rumor has been busy for the past two or three months. Gen. Bertram, chairman of the Shell Committee, had no comment to make on the statement issued by Mr. Thomas. "Everything," he said, "is in the statement."

MUCH HAVOC ON BULGAR PORTS FROM GUNS OF ALLIED FLEETS

Sofia Now Admits That One-quarter of Dedeaghatch Was Razed by the Shells

A despatch from Sofit says: Although the bombardment of Varna by the Russian fleet lasted only ten minutes, the bodies of 22 civilians already have been found, while over a hundred persons were injured, many of them severely, according to reports received here.

The Russian fleet was sighted at eight o'clock in the morning rapidly approaching the city, and opened fire while still at a great distance. It approached to within a little over three miles, but withdrew before the Bulgarian batteries could make their fire effective.

According to officials here, the Russians never searched out the Bulgarian batteries, but merely shelled the city, especially the harbor sections, where Greeks form the majority of the population. The people are greatly excited over the bombardments of Bulgarian cities on the Aegean and Black Seas.

The damage done by the bombardment of Aegean Sea towns and villages by the allied fleet recently was greater than at first reported. One-fourth of the entire city of Dedeaghatch was razed by the shells of the warships.

Shell Burst 100 Yards From Italian King

A despatch from Turin says: Signor Barzilai, the Irredentist Minister, who just returned from the war zone, states that Austrian shrapnel burst only one hundred yards away from an observatory where he was watching the battle on the Isonzo in the company of King Victor.

The Postoffice Department at Ottawa has placed under the ban two more United States papers. The Narodi List, a Croatian daily paper published in New York, and The Irish Voice, a Chicago weekly. Both papers are debarred the use of the mails, and any person found having them in his possession is liable to a fine of $5,000 or five years' imprisonment.

Hallowe'en Social

The members of St. James' Church Choir are to be congratulated on the splendid success of the social they gave in St. James' Hall last Thursday night.

Although the weather was unfavorable and the rain was falling at the time the people were assembling, the hall was crowded long before the hour for the entertainment to begin. The hall was beautifully decorated with streamers and lights of various colors. The walls were ornamented with black cats, owls, bats, witches and ghosts, giving the whole a wierd Hallow'en appearance.

A short program was presented consisting of piano duets, songs, readings, tableaux vivants, dialogue and ghost drill. Master Geo. Baker's recitation; Malcolm Weegar's song and the four little girls' "Pumpkin Pie" song were well received and heartily applauded.

The Pumpkin pies, doughnuts, and coffee were thoroughly enjoyed by all. The proceeds netted $62.
